Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, favour me with a Word on the ſame Side, for my Lords the Biſhops. Your Lordſhip ſees now how neceſſary the Trouble we gave you before, in making our Objections againſt the reading of the Information was, and what the Drift and Aim of the King's Counſel was, in the deſiring the Information to be read firſt; for now it is read, What is it that they deſire of your Lordſhip? They deſire that my Lord Archbiſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops, being in Cuſtody, and brought here in Cuſtody, they may be now ſo charged with this Information, as to plead preſently. This, my Lord, we oppoſe, and with humble Submiſſion we ought to have Time to imparle, and a Copy of the Information, that we may conſider what we have to plead to it; for however we come here into Court, whether legally or not legally, yet ought we in the one and in the other Caſe, to have Time to conſider of our Defence. And, my Lord, till of latter Time this Practice, which the King's Counſel now calls the Courſe of the Court, was never uſed, nor was any Man required to plead immediately; and, my Lord, if the Practice of the Court has not been antiently ſo (as I do believe they will ſcarce ſhew it to be antienter than a few Years laſt paſt) then with humble Submiſſion, though the Courſe of the Court have been ſo for ſome little Time paſt, yet it is not in the Power of the Court (as we humbly conceive) to make a Courſe in Prejudice of all the Privileges that the King's Subjects are by the antient Rules of Law entitled to; they cannot make a new Law in prejudice of any Right or Privilege which the Subject hath, and call it the Courſe of the Court. Now that this which we deſire for my Lords the Biſhops, is the Right and Privilege of the Subject, is moſt manifeſt; for there might be many Defences that a Man may have to make to an Accuſation of this Nature, which it is impoſſible for him to know at the firſt hearing of an Information read, and yet which would be neceſſary for him to make uſe of, or at leaſt it would be impoſſible for him to make uſe of in ſuch a Manner as the Law doth allow of and require. It may be the Pleas which he has to plead may be ſuch as that he has not Time to put into Form; there may be Matters upon the hearing the Information read, that it would be neceſſary for him to give Anſwer to, which he knew not of before, and therefore may neither have Materials ready, nor be capable of putting them (if he had them ready) into ſuch Form as the Law requires. They tell you on the other Side, that if a Man be brought into Court by legal Proceſs, he may be charged with any Information whatſoever; that they are not tied to the Fact alledged in the Commitment, but finding the Party under a legal Impriſonment, they can exhibit an Information againſt him for any other Offence. Then, my Lord, would I fain know, which way any Man alive can be prepared to make his juſt and legal Defence, for he knows not his Accuſation; for though he think it may be for that for which he was committed, yet it may prove otherwiſe, and then he can be no way provided with Materials for his Defence, but he muſt loſe all Advantages which the Law gives him for his Defence. My Lord, if this be the Courſe of latter Times, yet you will not take that to be ſuch a Law as is binding to all future Times; and we are ſure the King's Counſel cannot ſhew that this was the antient Practice, for that was quite otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, you were not here, I ſuppoſe, when this Queſtion came in Debate in this Court lately, in the Caſe of a very great Perſon: 'Twas urged very earneſtly and very learnedly by one that ſtands by you. We upon that Debate aſked Sir Samuel Aſtry, what the Courſe of the Court was? and he told us, that the Courſe of the Court (of his own Knowledge for all the Time that he had ſat as Clerk of the Crown in this Court) was, that when any one was brought in Cuſtody, or upon a Recognizance, they were to plead preſently.

Mr. Finch. Sir Samuel Aſtry has not been here ſo very long, as to make the Practice of his Time the Courſe of the Court.

L. C. J. But I will tell you what he ſaid further, if you will hear me: He ſaid, he had enquired of Mr. Waterhouſe, whom we all know to have been an old Clerk in the Crown-Office, and he told him, that that had been the Practice all his Time.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, I hope the Courſe of the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall ſhall not depend upon the Certificate of ſuch a one as Mr. Waterhouſe, who is a Man, we all know, ſuperannuated, and very defective in his Memory.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Certainly what they deſire for the Defendants is very reaſonable, for I take the Point to be only this; whether a Man may be compelled, being in Cuſtody, to plead to an Information preſently.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Pray, Brother Powel, ſpare me a Word in this Matter. Mr. Finch, I ſuppoſe you labour for what the Court will not deny you, that you may have Time to plead according to the Courſe of the Court. We are not making Courſes for particular Facts, that by my Conſent we will never do; but if you ſay ſuch a Thing is not the Courſe of the Court, and the King's Counſel affirm it is, how ſhall this be determined? And from whom can we take our Information to determine what is the Courſe? I am ſure there is none of us that are here now, can pretend to tell what the antient Courſe was; for my Part, I declare it, I cannot; and I know no Reaſon there ſhould be any Novelty introduced into the Court upon any Ground or Reaſon whatſoever, nor will I conſent to any while I ſit here: Therefore I deſire to know what is the antient Courſe, and how we ſhall come to the Knowledge of that Courſe, if not by the Certificate of thoſe who have been antient Officers of the Court?

L. C. J. Nay, that is certain, the Court will bring in nothing new in any ſuch Caſe as this.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. If that hath not been the antient Courſe without Exception, I am againſt it; I know no Reaſon my Lords the Biſhops ſhould have any thing new put upon them: On the other Side, they muſt not expect to have the antient Courſe of the Court declined in their Caſe.

Mr. Pollexfen.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little in this Matter: 'Tis not my Deſire that any Law ſhould be alter'd for any particular Caſe, and the Courſe of the Court I know is the Law of the Court; but I humbly crave leave to ſay, That I take the antient Courſe of the Court to be quite otherwiſe than what the King's Counſel would have it. There may be particular Things done now and then, perhaps in particular Caſes, and upon particular Occaſions, which will not make what is ſo done to be the Courſe of the Court, nor be a binding Rule to you. Now, as to this Matter of Time or no Time, to plead to an Information, I remember the Time very well, when I and ſome others that ſtood at the Bar, and wondred when we ſaw this Practice coming in, and thought it a very hard and miſchievous Thing; for, in Truth, the ſeveral Plots that have been, and the Heats of Men about thoſe Things, have brought in this Courſe: For certain I am, and I dare affirm, there never was any ſuch Courſe here before, neither upon Warrant from the Chief Juſtice, nor upon Recognizance, or any other Proceſs, was a Man compelled to plead inſtantly, without having a Capias in the regular Form, after a Contempt for not appearing upon Summons. Truly, my Lord, we had no Intereſt in the Matter one way or other, to make us ſcruple it any otherwiſe than as we were concerned that the Law and Juſtice of the Nation ſhould have its true and antient Current. And this I can aſſure your Lordſhips, that here was both my Lord Chief Juſtice Saunders, and Mr. Serjeant Holt, and myſelf, who taking Notice when this was firſt offered at, to make a Man plead immediately, without giving him Time to conſider what he ſhould plead, could not but ſay among ourſelves, that it was an unreaſonable Thing; and we were inclined to ſpeak to the Court to inform them of the Conſequence of it, which needs muſt be very miſchievous. Sir Samuel Aſtry, we know, came to be Clerk of the Crown in my Lord Scroggs's Time. We know 'tis uſual and cuſtomary for the Court to aſk what is the Courſe of the Court in doubtful Caſes, and to receive the Information from the Officers of the Court on both Sides. If it be on the Plea-ſide, from Mr. Aſton; if on the Crown-ſide, from Sir Samuel Aſtry, concerning Things of Practice; but I did never think that what they reported was final and concluſive to the Court: But to make this Matter clear, I humbly pray, that you would pleaſe to give Order for the Search of old Precedents, how the old Practice really hath been: Every thing that has been done in hot Times, is not to be made a ſtanding Rule. If there do any ſuch thing appear to have been done and practiſed antiently, truly, my Lord, I will ſubmit, and ſay I am under a mighty Miſtake; but if this which is now urged for the Courſe of the Court, is nothing but what the Zeal of the Times, and Heat of Perſecutions hath introduced, ſurely that is not fit to be a conſtant Rule for the Court to go by; for every one knows, that the Zeal of one Time may bring in that by Surprize upon one Man, which when things are cool, at another time will appear to be plain Injuſtice. We have indeed ſeen ſtrange Things of this kind done before, but I hope to God they are now at an End, and we ſhall never ſee any ſuch thing done hereafter; and as for this particular Point, I think it is a wonderful Thing in the Conſequence of it, if the Law ſhould be as they would have it. Here is a long Information juſt read over to a Man (but whether long or ſhort, as to the main Point, 'tis the ſame) and you ſay the Courſe of the Court is, he muſt plead to it immediately. Surely Matters of Crime that require Puniſhment to be inflicted on Men, are of as much Conſequence and Concern, as any Civil Matter whatſoever; and Men are to have their Rights in thoſe Matters preſerved, as well as in other Matters, which is all I preſs: For ſuppoſe a Man has a ſpecial Matter to plead, as particularly ſuppoſe it be the King's Pardon, I cannot give this in Evidence upon a Trial after not guilty pleaded, then I ought to plead it; but what if I have it not ready? 'Tis not telling the Court of it, without ſhewing of it, that will do; and it may be a Man that is taken up, and brought hither in Cuſtody, cannot have it ready to ſhew; but yet then by this Rule a Man ſhall loſe the Benefit of his Plea, by being compelled to anſwer immediately: But they ſay, the Court will do right, I ſuppoſe they will; and my Lords the Biſhops in this Caſe I believe do not diſtruſt but that the Court will do right; but I never thought the Law was brought to that Paſs, that ſuch things as theſe were left wholly in the Diſcretion of the Court. Certainly Imparlances, Time to plead, and juſt Preparations for a Man's Defence are things that the Law has ſettled, and not left in the Diſcretion of the Court; and truly to me it ſeems all one utterly to take away a Man's Defence, as to hinder him of the Means to prepare for it. My Lord, here is an Information before you againſt theſe noble Lords, it is a Matter of great Moment, and though I hope in God there is no great Cauſe for it, yet however, ſince ſuch Perſons are concerned, and 'tis a Matter of ſuch great Weight, I hope you will give us ſuch an Imparlance, as if we had this Day appeared upon the ordinary Proceſs, which is an Imparlance until the next Term.

L. C. J. There is a Difference between this and that other Caſe: If my Lords the Biſhops had appeared upon the Summons, they would have had an Imparlance of Courſe; but when they are brought up hither in Cuſtody, that mightily alters the Caſe. But that we may not be too haſty in a thing of this Nature, let the Clerk of the Court be conſulted with, that we may know what the true Courſe is.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray Sir Samuel Aſtry may be examined a little about it.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Mr. Pollexfen, I believe the Court is unanimous in their Reſolutions of making nothing new in this Caſe; but pray give me leave to tell you, this is not the firſt Time that this Queſtion has come to be agitated in this Court ſince I came hither. Now from whence can the Court take their Meaſures to be rightly informed what the Practice of the Court is, but from the Information of the Officers of the Court? who by their conſtant Employment, are moſt capable of knowing what the Courſe is. Now if you come to offer any thing that may be Matter of Doubt to the Court, concerning the Practice of the Court, you having known that this thing was controverted before (for ſo it has been) ſhould have provided yourſelf with ſomething that muſt be a reaſonable Motive for us to doubt; for this has not been only once, but often moved, and our Officers have been conſulted with concerning this Queſtion, which took its Riſe from ſuch Objections as you have made now. Now for you to tell us, That you deſire that we would look into Precedents, dents, is, methinks, pretty odd. If you had brought us any Precedents, it had been ſomething: And withal I muſt tell you, that you muſt not reckon the Favour of the Court, in any particular Caſe, to be the ſtanding Rules for the Practice and Courſe of the Court; but inſtead of bringing Precedents, you only offer your own Thoughts, and thoſe would create no Doubt in us but what has been before ſatisfied upon Examination of the Officers of the Court.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, Sir, will you give me leave to anſwer one Word.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly I have not obſerved that ever this Point was ſtarted ſo as to beget a Queſtion ſince I came hither, but only in the Caſes of the Quo Warranto's; and truly in that Caſe I thought it hard they ſhould be denied Time to plead, eſpecially the Conſequence being ſo fatal.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, Brother, it has been ſeveral Times.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly, my Lord, I have not obſerved it, nor do I remember it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I have always taken the Diſtinction, as to theſe Matters, to be this ——

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But, my Lord, if the antient Courſe of the Court hath been to grant an Imparlance, and a Copy of the Information before they plead, I ſee no Reaſon why my Lords the Biſhops ſhould not have the Benefit of that antient Courſe: For if a Man that is ſued at Law for a two-penny Treſpaſs, ſhall have that Advantage as to receive a Declaration, and have Time to plead what he can to it, why ſhould not my Lords the Biſhops, in a Matter of ſo great a Weight, have the ſame Advantage too? But indeed, if the Courſe of the Court had been antiently otherwiſe, I can ſay nothing to it; for the Courſe of the Court is certainly the Law of the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother Powell, you ſay well, if they did produce any one Precedent to give us Occaſion to doubt in the Matter.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, will you give me leave ——

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, Sir Robert Sawyer, will you never have done?

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, they are ſo zealous and eager in this Caſe, that they won't permit either the Court, or any body elſe to ſpeak a Word but themſelves.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Good Mr. Sollicitor, give us leave to anſwer the Objection that the Court hath made to us; we would ſatisfy your Lordſhip where the Diſtinction really lieth, where there has been an Opportunity for the Party to come in, as by Summons or Subpœna, or the like, and he has ſlipped that Opportunity, and ſo the King is delayed. In that Caſe they always uſed to put the Party upon Pleading preſently, when he was taken up upon a Capias, and brought in Cuſtody; but when there was never any Subpœna taken out (as the Caſe is here) ſo that the Party never had an Opportunity to come in and render himſelf, and appear to anſwer it according to the due Courſe of Law, an Imparlance was never yet denied, nor Time to plead; and that is the Caſe here.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant has given you the true Diſtinction, where Proceſs has gone out to ſummon any one to appear to an Information, and he hath failed to appear according to the Summons, and the Proſecutor for the King takes out a Capias; if he be brought in upon that Capias, the antient Courſe has been ſo as they ſay: But for that other Matter, where a Man comes in upon a Commitment at the firſt Inſtance, and an Information is put in juſt as this is, the ſame Morning, and not before; if they can ſhew any one Precedent of this Kind fifteen Years ago, I would be contented to yield that they are in the right; but I am ſure they are not able to do it. In Sir Matthew Hale's Time when this was moved, it was refuſed; and he was clear of another Opinion.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope now, my Lord, we ſhall be heard a little for the King; and I cannot forbear obſerving in the firſt Place, ſomewhat that theſe Gentlemen have offered at, who are now inveighing againſt the Heat of the Times, when a great Part of that Heat we know who were the Inflamers of; but what is all this to the Purpoſe? The Queſtion is barely this, Whether when a Man is brought into Cuſtody into this Court, and charged with an Information, he ſhall not by the Courſe of the Court be compelled to plead preſently?

Sir Robert Sawyer. To Indictments for Treaſon and Felony he ſhall be compelled to plead preſently, but not to an Information for Miſdemeanors.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. It ſeems to me very hard he ſhould.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, there are many Things that ſeem hard in Law, but yet when all is done, the Judges cannot alter the Law. 'Tis a hard Caſe that a Man that is tried for his Life for Treaſon or Felony, cannot have a Copy of his Indictment, cannot have Counſel, cannot have his Witneſſes ſworn; but this has been long practiſed, and the Uſage is grown to a Law, and from Time to Time it hath been ſo taken for Law; it cannot be altered without a new Law made; as it hath been heretofore, ſo it muſt be now, till a greater Authority alter it; and ſo, as to the Caſe here at preſent, if it were a new Caſe, and it was the firſt Inſtance I muſt confeſs, I think I ſhould not preſs it; but if this be the conſtant Practice of the Court, and if theſe Gentlemen that now oppoſe it, ſome of them miniſterially, ſome of them judicially, have themſelves eſtabliſhed this Practice, they have no Reaſon to wonder that we follow them in it. We do not blame them for what they do now; for Men when they are of Counſel may be permitted to argue for their Client contrary to their former Opinions; but if theſe Things, by their Procurement, have been done thus before, ſurely without Offence we may pray the like may be done now. 'Tis our Duty, on Behalf of the King, to deſire that he may have Right done him, as well as they on Behalf of my Lords the Biſhops; and for the Uſage, to cite Precedents were endleſs, eſpecially of late Times, and theſe Gentlemen know them all very well, for they were ſome of them Parties to them themſelves, and we can do no more, nor need, than to put them in mind of their own Doings; whether it was ſo before their Time or not, it concerns them to make out and retract their own Errors; but in our Obſervation, if ever this was preſſed, or inſiſted upon on the King's Behalf, this Courſe has always been purſued.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. For a Precedent, my Lord, there is the Caſe of my Lord Hollis, where there was given Time after Time.

Mr. Soll.

Mr. Soll. Gen. That was only Time to argue the Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, have you ever known it conteſted, and upon Debate ſo ruled, in an Information for a Miſdemeanor, as this Caſe is?

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you pleaſe to aſk Sir Samuel Aſtry, he will inform you how the Courſe has been.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

Sir Samuel Aſtry. My Lord, when I came into this Place, there was an antient Gentleman that had been long a Clerk in the Office.

L. C. J. How many Years is it ſince you came into this Office?

Sir Samuel Aſtry. About a Dozen Years, I think, my Lord; and he ſat in this Place where Mr. Harcourt does now. He was always accounted a loyal, honeſt, and intelligent Man, that is Mr. Waterhouſe, who is now alive; and when I came into my Office, I took my Inſtructions in a great Meaſure from him, and aſked him what the Courſe of the Court was, in ſuch Caſes which I myſelf did not underſtand; for though I had been an Attorney twenty Years, yet it was on the other Side, the Civil Side; and though I knew ſome Things of my own Knowledge, yet I did not ſo well know the whole Practice of the Court; and particularly I aſked him, what was the Courſe of the Court in this Caſe that is now in Queſtion, and he told me, that in all his Time and Experience, if a Man appears upon a Recognizance, or was a Perſon in Cuſtody, or appeared in propria perſona, as a Perſon privileged, he ought to plead at the firſt Inſtance; and according to that Practice, when Sir Robert Sawyer was Attorney-General, it was the conſtant Practice, and I am ſure he knows it is no new Thing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But upon what Information, Sir Samuel Aſtry, were they Informations upon Miſdemeanors?

Sir Samuel Aſtry. Yes, ſeveral.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But was there no Proceſs taken out firſt to call the Party in?

Sir Samuel Aſtry. Yes, where Proceſs was never taken out.

Mr. Att. Gen. For how long Time is that you ſpeak of your own Knowledge, Sir Samuel?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. About a Dozen Years.

Mr. S. Pemberton. It was never done till very lately, but after the Party was in Contempt for not appearing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I would aſk you, Sir Samuel Aſtry, one Queſtion: Was the uſual Proceſs of Subpœna firſt taken out? For Mr. Serjeant Pemberton ſays it was; do you find any Warrant for ſuch a Difference as that?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Do you find any ſuch Caſe as this is?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Nay, pray Mr. Serjeant, give us your Favour, and let us aſk our Queſtions according to your own Doctrine. How do you find the Practice to have been as to that Diſtinction they have made?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Sir, I would be very loth to enlarge the Precedents of the Crown-Office further than the Truth is; I tell you whence I took my Inſtructions, from Mr. Waterhouſe, who was an antient Clerk in the Office; he has been in that Office ſixty Years, and the Inſtructions I took from him, were, that this was the Practice all his Time, and it has been aſſerted all my Time. It has been often conteſted, I confeſs, and Mr. Pollexfen has always oppoſed it, and moved againſt it, but it has been always ruled againſt him: I know it was againſt his Judgment, but the Court always over-ruled it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Sir Samuel Aſtry, can you give any one Precedent before you came into this Office?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Sir, I can go no farther than this that I have told you, what Information I received from him.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What is all this but a Certificate from Mr. Waterhouſe?

L. C. J. We can be informed no otherways than by Certificate from the old Clerks of the Office.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Alas, he is a Child, and not fit to do any thing.

Mr. Pollexfen. We all know Mr. Waterhouſe very well, he is a very weak Man, and always was ſo, and there is no depending upon any thing that he ſays.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you hear us a little for the King.

The Biſhop of Peterborough whiſpering with Sir Robert Sawyer, Mr. Sollicitor ſaid to him, My Lord, you had better look another way, and look towards the Court, for there your Buſineſs lies.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Sollicitor, what ſay you?

Mr. Soll Gen. My Lord, it appears plainly, that the King is in Poſſeſſion of this Privilege, and has been ſo for theſe Dozen Years; for ſo long the Juſtice of the Kingdom towards all the Subjects, hath run in all the Inſtances of it in this Channel; and though it hath been conteſted as often as Mr. Pollexfen has been of Counſel for the Defendant, in ſuch Caſes it has always been ruled againſt him. He indeed has made his continual Claims (Sir Samuel Aſtry ſays) he has raiſed the Duſt, and made a Hue and Cry, but it has always gone againſt him: And I would aſk the reſt of you Gentlemen that are of Counſel for my Lords the Biſhops (for ſome, or one of you, I am ſure, has been concerned in every Information that has been exhibited in this Court for theſe nine or ten Years laſt paſt, I would aſk you) whether in any Information that you have been concerned in, if the Party being brought in by Proceſs, inſiſted to have Time and an Imparlance, it was ever granted him? I know you will not ſay it ever was; why then ſhould there be more done in this Caſe, than has been done in all other Caſes theſe ten Years? 'Tis not ſufficient to make Declarations againſt the Unreaſonableneſs of the Practice, for it is but what you have done yourſelves, and inſiſted upon for Law; and all thoſe Men that upon Informations have been compelled to plead, have had Injury done them; or elſe theſe Lords will have no Injury by the Court's taking the ſame Courſe. It is true, my Lords the Biſhops are Peers, and here are ſeven of them, and ſeven Lords go a great Way; they make a Committee, I think, in the Houſe of Peers, and a mighty Matter is made of it, that this is the Caſe of ſo many Lords! But will you alter the Courſe of the Court, becauſe ſeven of my Lords the Biſhops are concerned in it, and they make a mighty Stir about the Reaſonableneſs of the Thing? How can it be believed that the Law will not give a Man Time to make his Defence? They agree themſelves, that if it were in the Caſe of Life and Death, they muſt plead preſently; and doth not the ſame Reaſon hold? And may not an Argument be drawn à fortiori, in the Caſe of a Miſdemeanor? If I am not to have Time when I plead for my Life, there is leſs Reaſon I ſhould have Time to anſwer a Treſpaſs: But, my Lord, 'tis not Reaſon that weighs in the Caſe, 'tis the Courſe of the Court, which is the Law of the Court that we are contending for: And what is there in the Caſe that ſhould require ſo much Time for my Lords the Biſhops to plead to it? It is charged in the Information, that theſe noble Prelates did make a Libel which was produced by them, and publiſhed in the King's Preſence; they can eaſily tell whether they have done this, or not done it. What can they plead but the general Iſſue? They talk of ſpecial Matter to be pleaded, but can they ſhew any more that they can ſay, than what any poor ordinary Countryman, if he were here to plead to an Information, could ſay? That is, whether he was guilty or not guilty. Theſe Lords can tell whether it be true, that they did publiſh the Paper laid in the Information, and then your Lordſhip will tell them what will be the Conſequences of that Publication in Point of Law. We ſay all this was done at Weſtminſter; there the Scene is laid, and it is not an Information for an old ſtale Thing done a great while ago, but a Thing that was done Yeſterday, and a Thing notorious enough, their conteſting with the King about his Declaration of Indulgence. And as to what Mr Finch has ſaid, that this is a Novel Invention, and a Trick to rob a Man of his juſt Defence; ſure he forgets who it is that taught us the Trick. If it be a Trick, we have learnt it from thoſe that trick'd before us; and what is it that theſe Lords do deſire? They would have an Imparlance till Michaelmas Term: Does, or can your Lordſhip think they aſk that which is reaſonable? To have ſix Months Time to plead not guilty to an Information for a Libel, and when ſo many Men have been denied it formerly upon the Inſtigation of thoſe very Gentlemen that now preſs ſo very hard to have it granted, ſure they muſt expect to be denied it too; and all this while theſe Lords lie under this Accuſation, which is not ſo trivial a Matter as ſome would make it. I believe my Lords the Biſhops have a Deſire to be cleared, I ſuppoſe it is only their Counſel that deſire to delay it, upon what Ground I know not; I believe they themſelves would be glad to remove the Imputation, which would be beſt done by a Trial, and the ſooner the better: If they have a Mind to juſtify themſelves, that is the readieſt Courſe for it, and they may do it preſently, by pleading Not Guilty. My Lord, I know I am in a great Auditory, and Abundance of your Lordſhip's Time has been taken up already; I preſs it therefore for the Sake of the King, and for the Sake of my Lords the Biſhops, we ſhall elſe have all hang in ſuſpence, and hang in the Air for ſix Months longer; therefore let the Matter be put upon a fair Iſſue, ſo as it may come to a ſpeedy Determination. I am ſure if theſe Lords be innocent to Day, they will be innocent to Morrow, and if it were my own Caſe, I would deſire to have it tried as ſpeedily as I could, and therefore I pray they may plead immediately.

and

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, what do you ſay to the Difference that was taken between a Perſon that was brought in Cuſtody at the firſt Inſtance, where there is no Contempt to the Proceſs of the Court, and one that comes here by Capias, upon Default of appearing at the Summons?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, if I apprehend them aright, they give us more than we did aſk, for Mr. Sollicitor has laid it down as a Rule, that if a Man is taken upon a Capias in a mean Proceſs, he ſhall have no Imparlance.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, you are greatly miſtaken, Sir, and I pray don't lay down Rules for me.

Mr. Finch. If I am Sir, I beg your Pardon, but this I am ſure of, if a Venire Fac goes out, which is in the Nature of a Subpœna, and the Party appear to it, that being the firſt Time he could come into Court, you cannot force him to plead to an Information, but he has an Imparlance of Courſe.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Methinks it ſeems very reaſonable, that this forcing a Man to plead preſently ſhould be only a Puniſhment for a Contempt of the Court, and pray, were my Lords the Biſhops in Contempt to the Court when they came here to Day? Certainly they were not, for no Man is in Contempt, but he that being ſerved with Proceſs, diſobeys that Proceſs; and if my Lords the Biſhops had been ſerved with a Subpœna and had not appeared, then there would have gone out a Capias to bring them in, and then they would have come in upon a Contempt, and then they would have come within the Rule.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you have a Mind to it, you may aſk Sir Samuel Aſtry again.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they come in upon Bail, they ought to plead preſently.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Mr. Finch, I'll tell you what ſticks with me, truly you could not but be aware that this would be required of you; for this very thing was in Debate laſt Term, and you know what Rules the Officer ſaid was the Courſe of the Court, why did you not therefore come prepared with ſome Precedents, to ſhew us what the Courſe of the Court is?

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, at this rate, we ſhall keep your Lordſhip here all this Afternoon, if theſe Gentlemen will not be ſatisfied with the Rule of the Court; and for an Anſwer to what Mr. Juſtice Powell ſays, if any Riot be committed in the Country, and the Parties are bound by Recognizance to appear here, that is no Proceſs of this Court, and ſo conſequently there can be no Contempt, and yet they muſt plead preſently.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. There is a particular Reaſon for that, becauſe they are bound by Recognizance, Sir Samuel Aſtry and others ſay, that if they come in by Recognizance they muſt plead preſently.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But for the Thing itſelf (that the People that hear us may not imagine that this Court puts a Hardſhip upon my Lords the Biſhops, more than is done in other Caſes) it is beſt to keep the ſame Rule as in all other Caſes; for when all is done, when Juſtice goes with an equal Current, without any regard to one Perſon or other, then every body is ſafe, and all Perſons concerned do their Duty: So in this Caſe, here be no Precedents produced wherein it has been otherwiſe; then can no Perſon complain but that Things go in this Caſe as they do in all other Caſes; perhaps ſuch a Caſe (as to the Fact of it) never happened before; but for the Law of it, that is plain, and the ſame is in all other Caſes; for that there may be an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops, as well as other People, if they make Libels, ſure it is no doubt at all; and if an Information lies againſt them for it, they are under the ſame Rules as others are: But theſe Gentlemen talk of being ſurprized, and that this is the firſt Time they have heard of this Information, but have we told any News in this Information? Was not all that is contained in it, notoriouſly enough known before? Was not the King's firſt Declaration very well known? Was not his ſecond Declaration very well known? Was not his Order of Council for reading of the Declaration very well known? Is not your own Petition a Thing very well known to yourſelves and all the World? Then theſe being the particular Facts of which this Information is made up, and we only ſay you did this Fact, and we aſk you, did you do it, or did you not? Can there be any great Surprize in this? My Lord, I cannot ſee any thing that alters this from the common Caſe, but only their being Peers; and ſince this Queſtion has been heretofore under Conteſt, theſe Gentlemen have had Time enough to have prepared Precedents, to differ this from the common Rule, if they could; but ſince they cannot, we deſire they may have the ſame Rule that is in all other Caſes, and then to be ſure all will go right.

L. C. J. Sir Samuel Aſtry, pray will you tell us, whether ever the Court uſed to grant an Imparlance where a Perſon comes in in Cuſtody? Or did you ever know, when a Perſon comes in upon a Commitment, Time was given him to plead?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Have you ever known it diſputed and denied?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. My Lord, I have known that 'tis in the Diſcretion of the Court to grant what Time they pleaſe.

L. C. J. Is it the Courſe of the Court to give an Imparlance?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. No, 'tis the Favour of the Court, and if the Defendants have at any Time ſhewed a reaſonable Cauſe, that they have a ſpecial Matter to plead, or any other Cauſe allowed by the Court, the Court has ſometimes indulged them ſo far as to give them Time.

L. C. J. But how is the ordinary Courſe, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Ay, for as I ſaid before, Things done in particular Caſes in Favour are not Precedents.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. I have told your Lordſhip the Courſe is this, that any Perſon that appears upon a Recognizance, or is taken up by your Lordſhip's Warrant, or by a Warrant from a Juſtice of Peace, or any other way in Cuſtody, or any Officer of the Court that is a privileged Perſon, and that muſt appear in propria perſona, muſt plead preſently, if the Court upon particular Reaſons do not give him Time; and this I received Information of, as the Practice of the Court, from Mr. Waterhouſe, who had been a Clerk in the Office ſixty Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He ſaid ſo before, but theſe Gen- Gentlemen will will never be contented, unleſs they have a new Law made for them.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I would not unneceſſarily trouble your Lordſhip; but truly this is a Caſe of great Concern. And firſt of all, I think we ſhall all agree, that what has been uſed for ten or twelve Years paſt will not make the Courſe of the Court, and next I perceive they do not bring any one Inſtance for any Proceeding of this Sort above ten or twelve Years old. But then ſay they on the other Side, why do not you bring Precedents that it has gone otherwiſe heretofore? My Lord, that cannot be done, for it is a Negative on our Side, that this which they deſire is not the Courſe of the Court: But then, as it is impoſſible to prove a Negative, ſo the Proofs ſhould come on the other Side, that this has been done: They ought to ſhew it, if there has been any ſuch thing as a ſtanding Rule, or elſe it ſhall be preſumed an Innovation, as being contrary to all Reaſon. But, my Lord, becauſe they put it upon us, there is this Proof on our Side, as much as a Negative can afford. In thoſe Proceedings that were in the great Caſe of the Habeas Corpus, there was an Information againſt Elliot and others; they had Time given them to plead over and over, ſo that there is one Precedent: And as many of theſe Caſes in former Times as can be found, will ſhew that this was always the Courſe. But pray, ſay they, produce us one Inſtance, that ever there was a Man that came in upon a Recognizance, that had Time to plead. Truly, my Lord, I cannot juſt now tell whether any ſuch Inſtance can be produced, but I verily believe there may be a great many; but I turn it upon them, and that with great Reaſon. With Submiſſion to your Lordſhip ſhew me any Man, if you can, above a Dozen Years ago, that had not Time allowed him to plead. Ay but, ſay they, Mr. Waterhouſe, an antient Clerk of the Crown-Office, that has been there theſe ſixty Years, hath certified that this hath been the Practice of all his Time. My Lord, we that have been converſant in the Buſineſs of this Court, did all very well know Mr. Waterhouſe when he was here, and ſat in Court in the Place of Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Sir. Sam. Aſtry. No, Sir, it was in Mr. Harcourt's Place.

Mr Pollexfen. Well, he executed a Place here, and 'tis no Matter whether he were Maſter of the Office or no; but I think we all knew him very well, he was a Man as lame in his Buſineſs as could be; for there are ſome Men that will never do Buſineſs well, let them be never ſo long at it; and he was as weak in the Practice of the Court, and every thing elſe, as 'tis poſſible for one that has been bred in an Office can be; and at this Time he is grown ſo decrepit and ſuperannuated, that you may as well depend upon the Certificate of an old Woman, as any thing that he ſhall ſay in ſuch a Matter as this: He is now almoſt fourſcore Years of Age, and has loſt that little Memory and Underſtanding he had; but if his Certificate muſt be depended upon, becauſe of his ſtanding in the Office, pray, my Lord let him come hither, and do you aſk him what he has to ſay in this Matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Ay, that is very well indeed.

Mr. Pollexfen. Good Mr. Sollicitor ſpare us, certainly there needs not ſuch great Haſte in this Matter, we are upon a Buſineſs of very great Weight and Concernment; for you are now making a Law for the whole Kingdom, in Point of Practice, in Caſes of this Nature. We do ſay indeed, that by the Reaſon of the Heat and Zeal of theſe laſt ten Years, ſuch a Uſage has been introduced, but Sir Samuel Aſtry tells you, it was oppoſed, and I hope that neither I, nor the Thing will be the worſe thought of, becauſe I oppoſed what I thought an unreaſonable and new Invention. My Lord, I know in the Caſe of the City of London, we had Time to plead a whole Vacation after an Imparlance, and were not at all hurried on, as the King's Counſel would do in this Caſe. My Lord, if they can produce any antient Precedent for it, I will ſay no more; but there is no Caſe in Print in any of our Books that ever I read, or can remember, that countenances ſuch an Opinion. A Man by this Means may loſe his juſt Defence, and he has no Remedy, nor will it ever be in his Power to retrieve it, for he may be brought on a ſudden into Court upon a Warrant, and when he is here, he ſhall be charged with an Information, and preſently he muſt plead not guilty, becauſe he has not Time to prepare a Plea of any other Nature, let him have never ſo much other ſpecial Matter or Occaſion for it. If you pleaſe to let this Matter be examined what the Precedents are, and of what Age thoſe Precedents are, then perhaps your Lordſhip will get ſome Satisfaction; but otherwiſe, if the bare Certificate of the Maſter of the Office is to be a Guide to the Court what is Law, and what is not, we ſhall be in a very uncertain Condition, eſpecially when the Matter carries in the very Face of it, a great deal of Unreaſonableneſs and Injuſtice. They on the other Side will argue, that is not more unreaſonable than the Practice in the Caſe of Treaſon and Felony, where Perſons are compelled to plead inſtantly. But under Favour, my Lord, there is no Compariſon between this Caſe and that, though I know it was always thought a Hardſhip and Defect in our Law, that a Perſon ſhould be denied Time to plead in Caſe of Life and Death, except he can ſhew ſome ſpecial Matter of Law that he has to plead, and then he has always Time allowed him to put it into Form; and I could never think there was any Reaſon to be given for it, but becauſe the common Defences of Felons would be little Shifts and Arts, which would deſtroy Proceedings, and make them tedious, and that would be an Encouragement to People to commit Felony; and beſides there is a Truſt which the Law repoſes in the Court in capital Caſes, to take Care that theſe Men ſhould not ſuffer upon any little Tricks in Law; but if you come below Treaſon and Felony, the Law puts no ſuch Hardſhip upon the Defendant, nor repoſes ſuch a ſpecial Truſt in the Court; but a Man may plead any thing he has to plead; and can any Man plead before he ſees what he is to plead to? And ſhall the Law allow him Counſel to prepare his Plea, and not allow him Time to conſult with that Counſel about it? Theſe are Things, my Lord, that truly to me ſeem unreaſonable: But as to the Practice and Courſe of the Court, I pray your Lordſhip to give Order, that the Precedents may be ſearched, that you may know what the antient Practice was.

Mr. Finch. Whether you will grant an Imparlance now or no, yet I hope, however, you will think fit to give my Lords the Biſhops Time to plead.

L. C. J. But Mr. Finch, we have had a Certificate from Sir Samuel Aſtry, which truly weighs a great deal with me; he tells you the Practice has been ſo ever ſince he came here, and that Mr. Waterhouſe told him, that it had been ſo all his Time, which is ſixty Years.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, there are Perſons here that will upon their Oaths declare, That Mr. Waterhouſe has often told them the Practice was otherwiſe, even in his Time, and afterwards a long Time before this new Way of Proceeding came in.

Mr. Ince. My Lord, If I might have Liberty to ſpeak, I can ſay Mr. Waterhouſe has told me ——

L. C. J. Pray be quiet Mr. Ince.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. But pray Mr. Pollexfen give me leave to mind you how the Evidence ſtands againſt you; the Objections are, that this has been a Practice but for twelve Years laſt paſt: If that be true, I think it goes a great Way, for the Practice of twelve Years is Precedent enough, Primâ Facie, that ſuch is the Practice; for how ſhall we come to the Knowledge of the Practice, but from our Officer Sir Samuel Aſtry, who has been here examined? And he tells you, that upon his coming into the Office, when it could not be ſo doubtful as now, it ſeems, it is, he took Inſtructions from Mr. Waterhouſe: I allow you 'tis but his Certificate, but that muſt go a great Way with the Court.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Such a Practice as this has been always very rare in Informations for Miſdemeanors; and they bring you nothing of any Precedent older than Sir Samuel Aſtry's Time.

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to vary the Queſtion; I do not now make it a Queſtion, whether your Lordſhips ſhould grant my Lords the Biſhops an Imparlance, but whether you would think fit to look into the Courſe of the Court before that Time that Sir Samuel Aſtry ſpeaks of, and take Time to conſider and ſearch into Precedents.

Mr. Juſt Allybone. Do you, Mr. Finch, give us any one Reaſon or Precedent that may make us doubt, whether this be the Courſe of the Court or no? And you could not but be aware of this before, and therefore ſhould have come prepared to make out your Objection.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Pollexfen and the reſt of the Practiſers in my Lord Hale's Time will tell you, that the Courſe was otherwiſe in his Time. Sir Samuel Aſtry indeed tells you, it has been ſo ſince his Time; but this was one of the Points, it ſeems, that he was ignorant of, which made him enquire of Mr. Waterhouſe, ſo doubtful was his Practice.

Sir Samuel Aſtry. I was an Attender upon this Court before I came into this Office, but it was in another Place, on the other Side of the Court; and therefore was not concerned ſo much to know what was the Courſe on this Side, till I came into this Office.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen differ among themſelves, one would have an Imparlance, the other only Time to plead; I believe truly they cannot tell what they would have, I pray the Rules of the Court may be kept to.

Sir Samuel Aſtry. Here are two Clerks that ſit by me, that have been a long Time in the Office, Mr. Harcourt, my Secondary, and the Clerk of the Rules; I pray they may be aſked their Knowledge of this Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly theſe Gentlemen think they have a Privilege above all other People, that they muſt not be ſubject to the ſame Rules as others are! We on our Parts have taken all the Methods that we could to make this Matter manifeſt, and what is it that theſe Gentlemen now propoſe? They pray you to take Time to conſider, but have they uſed the right Means of creating a Jealouſy or Suſpicion in the Court, that the Courſe is otherwiſe? They can give no Inſtance of it, and all they ſay is, 'tis a Negative, that this is not the Courſe of the Court, but the Imparlance that they beg is in the Affirmative, ſurely that they can find Proof of, if it be ſo. As for my Lord Hollis's Caſe, that is with us, and not againſt us; let Mr. Pollexfen ſhew that ever any one of the Men that were brought into Court in Cuſtody, either had Time to plead, or an Imparlance.

L. C. J. Sir Samuel Aſtry ſays he has given you his Opinion, and here are two others Clerks of the Office that he refers himſelf to, are you willing that they ſhould be aſked?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Yes, my Lord, with all our Hearts.

L. C. J. Mr. Harcourt, how long have you been a Clerk in the Crown-Office?

Mr. Harcourt. About ſeventeen or eighteen Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you known the Practice of the Court in this Matter, and what is it?

Mr. Harcourt. I cannot charge myſelf ſo with Particulars from the Time of my coming into the Office, but for theſe ten or twelve Years paſt (I remember) it has been as the King's Counſel preſſed, and as Sir Samuel Aſtry has declared.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Sillyard, how long have you known the Crown-Office?

Mr. Sillyard. I have been a Clerk here about thirty Years.

L. C. J. Well, and how has the Practice been all your Time?

Mr. Sillyard. I have not ſat here as Clerk of the Rules but a little while, but ſince I have ſat here, I have always obſerved it to be the Practice, that one that comes in Cuſtody ſhould plead immediately; it was a Thing heretofore that did not ſo often happen as it hath done here of late, therefore I cannot ſo well ſpeak to it; but it hath fallen out frequently within ſome Years laſt paſt, and that hath been the conſtant Courſe.

Sir Samuel Aſtry. When you firſt came to be Attorney-General, Sir Robert Sawyer, I am ſure it was ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let me aſk you, Mr. Sillyard, you ſay you have known the Office thirty Years; when you firſt came to the Office, were Informations as frequent as they are now, and have been of late?

Mr. Soll. Gen. It was ſo in the Caſe of Mr. Hampden, when you were Attorney-General, Sir Robert Sawer, he was forced to plead immediately to an Indictment, for a Crime that perhaps you will ſay was near upon Treaſon.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, truly, it wanted but one Witneſs, that was all.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But yet the Indictment was only for a Miſdemeanor, and there we ſtruggled and debated the Matter, but were forced to give it over, becauſe the Courſe of the Court was againſt us, ſo it has been by the unqueſtionable Teſtimony of Sir Samuel Aſtry for theſe twelve Years laſt paſt; and in thoſe twelve Years we have had many Changes, perhaps there may have been twelve Chief Judges, and they have all affirmed it, and if I then make it out, that in all theſe Judges Times that are within our Remembrance, it has gone thus, then there are enough Precedents in the Matter.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But, my Lord, I deſire to know, whether that were the antient Courſe, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Soll. Gen. They that make the Objection ought to prove it; but I will name Sir Robert Sawyer another Caſe, and that is the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, which was the Caſe of a Libel too, he was forced to plead immediately, and it coſt him 10,000 l. Fine.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen, have you done on either Side?

Mr. S. Pemberton. If your Lordſhip will pleaſe to give us Time till to-morrow Morning, we will come hither by Rule of Court, and bring you ſome Certificates and Affidavits, or elſe ſome Precedents that we hope will ſatisfy your Lordſhip in this Matter.

L. C. J. No, Brother, we cannot do that; the Queſtion is what the Courſe of the Court is, we have an Account of that from Sir Samuel Aſtry, for twelve Years of his own Knowledge, and from Mr. Waterhouſe by him for ſixty Years; but for Mr. Waterhouſe they except againſt him, and ſay he was a Perſon that was always lazy and did not ſo well underſtand his Buſineſs, and now is ſuperannuated, that is ſaid, but is but gratis dictum, perhaps it may be ſo, perhaps not; and they have offered to examine Mr. Ince about ſome Opinion that he has had from this Mr. Waterhouſe; it may be he may have aſked him ſome Queſtion that may lead to it, and he may have given him ſome ſlight Anſwer, but then here are theſe two Perſons, Mr. Harcourt, and Mr Sillyard, and the one has been a Clerk theſe ſixteen or ſeventeen Years, and the other has known the Office thirty Years, though there were not heretofore ſo many Informations of this Nature and Kind as now of late, but ſtill they ſay, that a Perſon that comes in upon a Commitment, or a Recognizance, ſhall never have any Imparlance.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Can they give any one Inſtance that has any the leaſt Shadow to the contrary?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if we had Time, we hope we ſhould be able to ſatisfy you in this Matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You have had time enough to prepare yourſelves for this Queſtion, if you had thought you could do any good in it.

L. C. J. Would the Courſe of the Court be otherwiſe to-morrow than it is to Day, we have taken all the Care we can to be ſatisfied in this Matter, and we will take Care that the Lords the Biſhops ſhall have all Juſtice done them, nay they ſhall have all the Favour by my Conſent that can be ſhewn them, without doing wrong to my Maſter the King; but truly I cannot depart from the Courſe of the Court in this Matter, if the King's Counſel preſs it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we muſt pray your Judgment in it, and your Direction, that they may plead,

L. C. J. Truly I think they muſt plead to the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Samuel Aſtry, pray aſk my Lords whether they be Guilty or Not Guilty.

Then his Grace the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſtood up, and offered a Paper to the Court.

L. Archbiſh. of Cant. My Lord, I tender here a ſhort Plea (a very ſhort one) on Behalf of myſelf and my Brethren the other Defendants; and I humbly deſire the Court will admit of this Plea.

L. C. J. If it pleaſe your Grace, it ſhould have been in Parchment.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What is that my Lord offers to the Court?

L. C. J. We will ſee what it is preſently, Mr. Sollicitor.

Biſh.

Biſh. of Peterb. I pray, my Lord, that the Plea may be read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But not received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we deſire to know what it is firſt.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, if they will plead, the Court ſure is obliged to receive it.

L. C. J. If it is a Plea, your Grace will ſtand by it.

L. Archbiſh. of Cant. We will all ſtand by it, my Lord; it is ſubſcribed by our Counſel, and we pray it may be admitted by the Court.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I hope the Court will not deny to receive a ſpecial Plea, if we offer one.

L. C. J. Brother, let us hear what it is.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read it if you pleaſe, but not receive it.

Clerk reads the Plea; which in Engliſh is thus:

The BISHOPS PLEA.

AND the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, being preſent here in Court in their own Perſons, pray Oyer of the Information aforeſaid; and it is read to them, which being read and heard by them the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops, the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops ſay, that they are Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, and each of them is one of the Peers of this Kingdom of England, and a Lord of the Parliament, and that they being (as before is manifeſt) Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, ought not to be compelled to anſwer inſtantly for the Miſdemeanor aforeſaid, mentioned in the ſaid Information exhibited here againſt them in this Court; but they ought to be required to appear by due Proceſs in Law iſſuing out of this Court here upon the Information aforeſaid, and upon their Appearance to have a Copy of the ſaid Information exhibited againſt them, and reaſonable Time to imparle thereupon, and to adviſe with Counſel learned in the Law, concerning their Defence in that Behalf, before they be compelled to anſwer the ſaid Information: Whereupon, for that the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops were impriſoned, and by Writ of our Lord the King, of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, are now brought here in Cuſtody, without any Proceſs upon the Information aforeſaid iſſued againſt them, and without having any Copy of the ſaid Information, or any Time given them to imparle, or be adviſed, they pray Judgment, and the Privilege of Peers of this Kingdom, in this Caſe to be allowed them; and that they the ſaid Archbiſhop, and Biſhops, may not be compelled inſtantly to anſwer the Information aforeſaid, &c.

ROBERT SAWYER.
HEN. FINCH.
HEN. POLLEXFEN.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, this, in an ordinary Perſon's Caſe, would perhaps be thought not fair Dealing, or that which (it being in the Caſe of theſe Reverend Prelates) I ſhall not now name; to make all this Debate and Stir in a Point of this Nature; to take the Judgment of the Court after three or four Hours arguing, and when the Opinion of the Court has been delivered, then to put in a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court——

Sir Rob. Sawyer. It is no ſuch Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is ſo in Effect; but certainly it is ſuch an Irregularity, and ſuch an unfair way of proceeding as would not be endured in an ordinary Caſe; and I hope you will give ſo little Countenance to it, as to reject it, and make them plead according to the uſual Courſe and Way of Proceedings. Certainly a Plea of this Nature, after ſo long an Argument, would be reckoned nothing but a Trick.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We hope the Court and you are not of one Mind, Mr. Attorney, in this Matter; we deſire the Court to receive the Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. With Submiſſion, the Court is not bound to receive Pleas that are put in purely for Delay, as this is; for the Judgment of the Court has been already given in the very Matter of this Plea; and for rejecting a Plea, it is done every Day; if a Man puts in a meer trifling dilatory Plea, the Court may reject it. Does this Plea contain any thing in it, but what has been argued and debated pro & con, and ſettled by the Court already? If they will put in any Plea in Chief they may, but ſuch a Plea as this, I hope ſhall not have ſo much Countenance as to be received by the Court.

Mr. Pollexfen. Do you demur to it? if you pleaſe, Mr. Attorney, we will join in Demurrer with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, there will be no need of that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Surely the Court will never give ſo much Countenance to it, as to receive it.

Mr. Finch. If you will pleaſe either to reply or demur, Mr. Sollicitor, we are here to maintain the Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you were here, you would ſay the ſame thing that we do. My Lord, this Plea is, That my Lords the Biſhops are not bound to plead inſtantly; ſo that 'tis not a Queſtion, Whether they ought to anſwer, or not to anſwer, but whether they ought to anſwer immediately, and what do they ſay more? They would have an Imparlance, and Time to conſult with their Counſel what they ſhall plead, which is all but one and the ſame Thing; and what is the Reaſon they give for this? They induce it thus, Theſe Noble Perſons are Peers of the Realm, and ſo ought not to be compelled to plead immediately: This, if I miſtake not, is the Sum of their Plea. Now, pray my Lord, what ſort of Plea is this? It is not a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, though it do in a ſort decline the Juſtice of the Court: Is it a Plea in Abatement? No, it is not; for it is only to gain Time: And do they now offer any thing more for themſelves, than what was ſaid by their Counſel before? only, that we are Peers of the Realm, and that ſuch is the Privilege of Peers, that they ought to have an Imparlance, and Time to plead, and that they ought not to anſwer preſently. My Lord, this Matter hath been long agitated in the Court already; your Lordſhip, and the Court, have given your Judgments, and we know your Lordſhip, and the Court, will not admit of Tricks to delay the King's Cauſes. We all know the Term is a ſhort Term; and what I ſaid in the Beginning upon this Matter, I ſay again, it is the Intereſt, and for the Honour of my Lords the Biſhops (if they underſtand their own Intereſt, and value their Honour) to have this Cauſe tried as ſoon as may be; but this Trifling and Tricking is only for Delay: For what Iſſue can be taken upon this Plea? Certainly none. And if we ſhould demur, what will be the End of that, but only to get Time to ſlip over the Term? If there were any thing worth the conſidering in this Plea, and that had not been already debated and ſettled, then it might concern us to give ſome Anſwer to it; but we have ſpent three Hours, by my Watch, in the Diſpute, and the Matter having been over-ruled already, it is Time to have an End of it. Sure the Court will never be ſo treated by theſe Perſons that are of Counſel for my Lords the Biſhops, for it cannot be thought that my Lords the Biſhops do it of themſelves; and whether the Court will be ſo ſerved, we ſubmit to your Lordſhip. Certainly you will not receive ſuch a Plea as this, eſpecially it being in Paper, you will never countenance ſuch a Practice ſo far as to give theſe Lords Time to trifle with the Court. If any ſuch thing as a Plea be tender'd to the Court, it ought to be in Parchment; and if they would have an Imparlance, there ought to have been an Entry of a Petit Licentiam interloquendi upon the Roll, but not ſuch a Plea as this; for this in effect is no more than deſiring an Imparlance, which if it be granted of courſe, upon ſuch a Prayer entred upon the Roll, you take it of courſe; but if it be not of courſe, you cannot come in by way of Plea, it muſt be by Suggeſtion upon the Roll, and a Conceditur entred. If this be admitted as a Precedent, every Man hereafter that comes in upon any Information, will take Advantage of it, and plead ſuch a Plea as this; and if you grant an Imparlance in this Caſe upon this Plea, you muſt grant an Imparlance in every Caſe. Certainly the Law is not to be altered, the Methods of Proceedings ought to be the ſame in every Caſe. And I hope you will not make a particular Rule in the Caſe of my Lords the Biſhops, without a ſpecial Reaſon for it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We put in this Plea, my Lord, and are ready to abide by it; and we ſay, that according to the Courſe of the Court, it ought to be received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, but good Mr. Serjeant, 'tis in the Diſcretion of the Court whether they will receive it or not; for the Matter has been in Debate already, and has received a Determination; the Court has over-ruled them in this very Point already, and there is no more in this Plea than was in the Argument before, and therefore it ought to be rejected as a frivolous Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here is a Plea offered in Writing, and in Paper; the Court ſees what it is, and I hope you will give no Countenance to it.

Mr. Pollexfen. I do hope, my Lord, you will not judge this is a frivolous Plea; I think our Caſe is ſuch, that you will not do that; if you think fit you may over-rule it, but I hope you will not refuſe it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Court will certainly reject a frivolous Plea, and they may do it.

Mr. Pollexfen. But, Mr. Sollicitor, I hope the Court will conſider of it, whether it be a frivolous Plea or not. It is true, there has been a Debate about the Courſe of the Court, and there has been an Examination of the Clerk of the Office, and the Court has gone upon his Certificate; but yet ſtill perhaps it may remain in Doubt, and it being a Queſtion of ſuch a Conſequence as this, it may very well deſerve the Court's Conſideration. There never was a judicial Settlement of it that I know of yet; nor do I know any way of having it ſatisfactorily ſettled, but by the Judgment of the Court entred upon Record. Here we offer a Plea that contains the Matter in Debate, and this Plea will appear upon Record; and if upon Conſideration of the Plea your Lordſhip ſhall think fit to over-rule it, and be of Opinion againſt the Plea, then will you, by your Reſolution, in a judicial way, ſettle the Queſtion that has hitherto been in Controverſy.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I would aſk you whether the Counſel have dealt ingenuouſly with the Court or no in this Matter, after four Hours Debate, and the Opinion of the Court delivered, to come and ſum up all the Arguments in ſuch a Plea as this, and ſo put us upon debating it over again?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, certainly this has been done before, without Offence. After we had moved for a Thing which was denied upon Motion, it is no ſuch great Diſreſpect to the Court, with Submiſſion, to put the ſame Matter into a Plea, for the judicial Opinion of the Court.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That, without all Queſtion, has been done a great many times.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How many times have you been accuſed of playing Tricks, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Not ſo many as you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I don't aſk it as if I queſtioned it; for I aſſure you, I don't doubt it of your Part at all.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen don't fall out with one another at the Bar; we have had Time enough ſpent already.

Mr. Pollexfen. Truly, my Lord, I would not trick with the Court in any Caſe, nor on the other ſide would I be wanting to adviſe, and do for my Client what I am able, and lawfully may. We have laboured all we could to get Time for my Lords the Biſhops to imparle to this Information; and we have been the more earneſt in it, becauſe it concerns us, who attend this Bar, to take what Care we can that the Courſe of the Court may be obſerved; but as for this Matter, we ſuppoſe this Practice of the Court is not in Law a good Practice. Now what Way in the World has any Man to bring this ſo in queſtion, as to have a judicial Reſolution of the Court about it, but by ſuch a Plea? We take it, that it is uſual and legal for us to have an Imparlance, and a Man would imparle, but the Court upon Motion refuſed to give him an Imparlance. Is it not, think you, very fit for the Party to have this judicially entered upon Record? where all this Matter will appear, and the Party may be relieved by Writ of Error, if the Judgment of the Court ſhould be wrong; but truly I cannot ſee how the Court can refuſe the Plea; for if ſo be a Plea be pleaded, they have their Liberty to anſwer it on the other ſide by a Replication, or elſe to demur, and the Judgment of the Court may be had upon it one Way or other; but the Court will never go about to hinder any Man from pleading where here he may plead by Law. Here is a Plea put in, and the Court ſure will take no Notice what is the Matter of the Plea, till the other Party have either replied or demurred. The ſame thing may happen in any other Plea that is pleaded, and the Party will be without Remedy upon a Writ of Error, becauſe the Plea being rejected, there does nothing appear upon Record.

Truly

Truly for the Court to reject and refuse the Plea, would be as hard as the refusing of the Imparlance, and we know no Way we have to help our selves.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You might have entered your Suggestion for an Imparlance upon the Roll, and then it would have appeared upon Record, and if the Court had unjustly denied it you, you would have had the Benefit of that Suggestion elsewhere. Truly, my Lord, I think if any thing be tricking this is, for it is plainly ill pleading.

Mr. Finch. Then pray demur to it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, Sir, 'tis fencing with the Court, and that the Court won't suffer. It is only to delay; and if we should demur, then there must be Time for arguing; and what is the Question after all, but whether you would be of the same Opinion to Morrow, that you are to Day?

Sir Robert Sawyer. I would put Mr. Sollicitor in Mind of Fitz-Harris's Case, which he knows very well: He put in a Plea, and we for the King desired it might not be received; but the Court gave him Time to put it into Form, and I was fain to join in Demurrer presently, and so may these Gentlemen do if they please.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Yes, Sir Robert Sawyer, I do know the Case of Fitz-Harris very well; I was assigned of Counsel by the Court for him; we were four of us, and there was a Plea put in, but no such Plea as this. There was an Indictment of High-Treason against him, in which Case it is agreed on all Hands, that the Party must answer presently; but because he suggested here at the Bar, says he, I have Matter to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and shewed what it was. I was impeached before the Lords in Parliament for Treason, for the same Matter of which I am here accused. The Court did give him Time to put this into Form, and we were assigned his Counsel to draw it up for him, and accordingly we did put that Matter into a Plea, that we were here indicted for one and the same Treason for which we were impeached in Parliament, and that that Impeachment was still depending, and so we rested in the Judgment of the Court, whether we should be put to answer it here. This was a Plea that carried something of Weight in it, and not such a trifling one as this. It is true, Sir Robert Sawyer, who was then Attorney-General, did press the Court to over-rule it immediately; but it being a Matter of some Importance, the Court would not do that, but had it argued solemnly by Counsel on both Sides, and at last there was the Opinion of three Judges against one, that the Plea was no good Plea. But what is that to such a trifling Plea as this?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, favour me a few Words about that Case of Mr. Fitz-Harris. It is true, there was a Plea put in, and it is true also, that that which brought that Plea to be argued, was the Demurrer that was put in by Sir Robert Sawyer, who was so zealous and hasty in the Matter, that because the Court did not presently over-rule the Plea, as he desired, he immediately demurred, before the rest of the King's Counsel could offer at any thing about it; and thereupon it was put to the Judgment of the Court, and no doubt must be argued, and spoke to on both Sides; but where Pleas are really in Abuse of the Court, the Court never gives any Countenance to them: Nay, truly I have known another Course taken; I am unwilling to mention a Case that happened much about that Time too in this Court, because of that Regard I have to my Lords the Bishops, but Sir Robert Sawyer remembers it very well, I am sure: It was the Case of one Whitaker, who for a Thing like this, putting in a trifling Plea, not only had his Plea rejected, but something else was ordered. I could shew the Precedent, but that I am more tender than to press it in this Case, because there the Court order'd an Attachment to go against him; but I will put these Gentlemen in Mind of another Case, and that is the Case of a Peer too: It is the Case of my Lord Delamere, which they cannot but remember, it being in the highest Case, a Case of Treason. When my Lord Delamere was arraigned, and to be tried for High Treason, he put in a Plea before my Lord Chancellor, who was then High Steward, and Sir Robert Sawyer, who was then Attorney General, prayed the Lord Steward, and the Peers, to reject it, and the Court did reject it (as we hope the Court will do this) and would never so far delay Justice as to admit of a Plea that carried no Colour in it, and there was no Demurrer put into the Plea, but it was absolutely refused. My Lord, in this Case we have had the Judgment of the Court already, and therefore we must now desire that this Plea may be rejected.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we have now gone out of the Way far enough already; it is Time for us to return, and bring the Case into its due Methods. We pray your Lordship to reject this Plea.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, we are in your Judgment, whether you will receive this Plea or not.

L. C. J. You shall have my Judgment presently; but my Brothers are to speak first.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Mr. Pollexfen makes it a Question, whether this Plea may be rejected or not, or whether it ought to be received, and the Court give their Judgment upon it.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly I do not know whether the Court can reject this as a frivolous Plea.

L. C. J. Surely we may, and frequently do.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do it every Day; 'tis a frequent Motion: If a frivolous Plea be put in, before it be entred upon Record as a Plea, the Court may refuse it, if they see Cause.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Truly if it may be, this appears to me a frivolous Plea.

Mr. Just. Powell. I do not know how the Court can reject any Plea that the Party will put in, if he will stand by it, as they say they will here; and I cannot think this a frivolous Plea, it concerning the Privilege of Peers and Lords of Parliament.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Brother Powell, I would be as tender of the Privileges of Parliament, and speak with as much Respect of the Privileges of the Peerage, as any body else; but for the Matter of the Plea, truly it appears to me, that the Peers are named in it only for Fashion sake, and it is frivolous.

Mr. Justice Powell. The Matter of the Plea, except only their being said to be Peers and Lords of Parliament, was spoke to before, but it was only obiter, and by way of Motion; but now it may come before us for our Judicial Determination.

Mr. Just.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Pray let the Plea be read again. [Which was done.]

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. This Plea is no more but that which has been denied already upon ſolemn Debate; and if it be in the Power of the Court to reject any Plea, ſurely we ought to reject this. Indeed I know not what Power we have to reject a Plea; but if we have Power, this ought to be rejected.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I declare my Opinion; I am for receiving the Plea, and conſidering of it.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. I think as this Caſe is, this Plea ought not to be received, but rejected, becauſe 'tis no more than what has been denied already. I am not aſhamed to ſay, that I ſhould be very glad and ready to do all things that are conſiſtent with my Duty, to ſhew Reſpect to my Lords the Biſhops, ſome of whom are my particular Friends; but I am upon my Oath, and muſt go according to the Courſe of Law.

L. C. J. We have aſked, and informed our ſelves from the Bar, whether we may or can reject a Plea; and truly what they have ſaid, hath ſatisfied me that we may, if the Plea be frivolous; and this being a Plea that contains no more than what has been over-ruled already, after hearing what could be ſaid on both Sides, I think the Court is not bound to receive the Plea, but may reject it, and my Lords the Biſhops muſt plead over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may plead in chief.

Clerk. My Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, is your Grace guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Archbiſhop of Cant. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, is your Lordſhip guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſhop of St. Aſaph Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Ely, is your Lordſhip guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſhop of Ely. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter, is your Lordſhip guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſhop of Chicheſter. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, is your Lordſhip guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh. of Bath and Wells. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Peterborough, is your Lordſhip guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſhop of Peterborough. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Briſtol, is your Lordſhip guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh. of Briſtol. Not guilty?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Clerk may join Iſſue on the Behalf of the King, that ſo we may come to Trial; and we would have theſe Gentlemen take Notice, that we intend to try this Cauſe on this Day Fortnight; and we pray Liberty of the Court, that we may try it at Bar.

L. C. J. Are you not too haſty in that Motion, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhould indeed make it the Motion of another Day; but we do now tell them this ex abundanti, becauſe my Lords the Biſhops are now here, and will, I ſuppoſe, take Notice, that we do intend to move it another Day.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We now give them Notice, that we intend to move.

Sir Robert Sawyer. For that you need not trouble yourſelves; we are very deſirous it ſhould be tried at Bar, and that as ſoon as you pleaſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then you take Notice it will be tried this Day Fortnight.

L. C. J. Well, what ſhall we do with my Lords the Biſhops?

Mr. Att. Gen. They are Bailable, no queſtion of it, my Lord, if they pleaſe.

L. C. J. Then, my Lords, we are ready to bail you, if you pleaſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to take their own Recognizance.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Attorney? I think that may do well enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with all my Heart; we will do it.

L. C. J. In what Penalty ſhall we take it?

Mr. Att. Gen. One thouſand Pound I think, my Lord, his Grace, and five hundred Pounds a-piece the reſt.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What Neceſſity is there for ſo much?

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, Sir Robert Sawyer, to ſhew you that we do inſiſt upon nothing that ſhall look like Hardſhip, what my Lords have been pleaſed to offer, concerning taking their own Recognizance, we agree to, and what Sums the Court pleaſes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is all one to us; we leave it wholly to the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Only I have one thing more to beg of your Lordſhip, on the Behalf of my Lords the Biſhops, that you will pleaſe to order, that in the Return of the Jury there may be forty-eight returned.

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you what we will do; Sir Samuel Aſtry ſhall have the Freeholders Book, if you pleaſe, and ſhall return twenty-four.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Eight and forty has been always the Courſe, when the Jury is returned by Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Officer may return the Jury, according as is uſual in Caſes of this Nature.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you admit of a Trial at Bar, Gentlemen?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Yes, and try it when you will.

L. C. J. They ſay it ſhall be this Day Fortnight, and let there be a Jury according to the uſual Courſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We pray it may be in the Preſence of the Attorneys or Sollicitors on both Sides.

L. C. J. What is the uſual Courſe, Sir Samuel Aſtry? Do you uſe to return twenty-four, or forty-eight, and then ſtrike out twelve a-piece, which I perceive they deſire for the Defendants?

Sir Samuel Aſtry. My Lord, the Courſe is both ways, and then it may be as your Lordſhip and the Court will pleaſe to order it.

L. C. J. Then take forty-eight, that is the faireſt.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. We agree to it; we desire nothing but a fair Jury.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Nor we neither; try it when you will.

L. C. J. Take a Recognizance of his Grace my Lord of Canterbury in 200 l. and the rest of my Lords in 100 l. a-piece.

Mr. At. Gen. What your Lordship pleases for that, we submit to it.

Clerk. My Lord of Canterbury, your Grace acknowledges to owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King the Sum of 200 l. upon Condition that your Grace shall appear in this Court on this Day Fortnight, and so from Day to Day, till you shall be discharged by the Court, and not to depart without Leave of the Court. Is your Grace contented?

Archbish. of Canterbury. I do acknowledge it.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, you acknowledge to owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King the Sum of 100 l. upon Condition that your Lordship shall appear in this Court on this Day Fortnight, and so from Day to Day, until you shall be discharged by the Court, and not to depart without Leave of the Court. Is your Lordship contented?

Bish. of St. Asaph. I do acknowledge it.

[The like Recognizances were taken of all the rest of the Bishops, and then the Court arose.]

FRIDAY, June 29th, 1688.

Clerk. CRier, make Proclamation thrice.

Crier. O yes! O yes! O yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King streightly charges and commands every one to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Clerk of the Crown. Call the Defendants.

Crier. William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

Archbish. Here.

Crier. William Lord Bishop of St. Asaph.

Bish. of St. Asaph. Here.

[And so the rest of the Bishops were called, and answered severally.]

Clerk. Gardez votres Challenges.

Swear Sir Roger Langley.

Crier. Take the Book Sir Roger. You shall well and truly try this Issue between our Sovereign Lord the King and William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and others, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

The same Oath was administred to all the Jury, whose Names follow, viz.

Sir Roger Langley, Bar.	William Avery, Esq;
Sir William Hill, Knt.	Thomas Austin, Esq;
Roger Jennings, Esq;	Nicholas Grice, Esq;
Thomas Harriot, Esq;	Michael Arnold, Esq;
Jeoffery Nightingale, Esq;	Thomas Done, Esq;
William Withers, Esq;	Richard Shoreditch, Esq;

Clerk. You Gentlemen of the Jury who are sworn, hearken to the Record: Sir Thomas Powys, Knight, his Majesty's Attorney General, has exhibited an Information, which does set forth as followeth, ff. MEmorandum, That Sir Thomas Powys, Kt. Attorney General of our Lord the King, who for our said Lord the King in this Behalf prosecutes, came here in his own Person into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Friday next after the Morrow of the Holy Trinity in this Term; and on the Behalf of our said Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, That our said Lord the King, out of his signal Clemency, and gracious Intention towards the Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, on the 4th Day of April, in the third Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster in the County of Middlesex, did publish his Royal Declaration, entituled His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience, bearing Date the same Day and Year, sealed with the Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. prout in the first Declaration before recited.

And the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on Behalf of our said Lord the King, further giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, That afterwards, to wit, on the 27th Day of April, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, our said Lord the King, out of his like Clemency, and gracious Intention towards his Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, did publish his other Royal Declaration, entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration, bearing Date the same Day and Year last mentioned, sealed with his Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. Our Conduct has been such, &c. prout in the second Declaration before recited.

Which said Royal Declaration of our said Lord the King last mentioned, our said Lord the King afterwards, to wit, on the 30th Day of April, in the fourth Year of his Reign aforesaid, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did cause to be printed and published throughout all England; and for the more solemn Declaring, Notification, and Manifestation of his Royal Grace, Favour, and Bounty towards all his Liege People, specified in the Declaration last mentioned, afterwards, to wit, on the 4th Day of May, in the fourth Year of his Reign, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, our said Lord the King in due manner did order as followeth.

At the Court at Whitehall, 4th of May, 1688.

By the King's most Excellent Majesty, and the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council.

IT is this Day ordered by his Majesty in Council, That his Majesty's Gracious Declaration, bearing Date the twenty seventh of April last, be read at the usual Time of Divine Service, upon the twentieth and twenty-seventh of this Month, in all Churches and Chapels within the Cities of London and Westminster, and ten Miles thereabout; and upon the third and tenth of June next, in all other Churches and Chapels throughout this Kingdom. And it is hereby further Ordered, That the Right Reverend the Bishops cause the said Declaration to be sent and distributed throughout their several respective Dioceses, to be read accordingly.

W. BRIDGMAN.

And further, the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on behalf of our said Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, that after the making of the said Order, to wit, on the 18th Day of May, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, William Archbishop of Canterbury, of Lambeth in the County of Surry; William Bishop of St. Asaph, of St. Asaph in the County of Flint; Francis Bishop of Ely, of the Parish of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middleſex; John Biſhop of Chicheſter, of Chicheſter in the County of Suſſex; Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, of the City of Wells in the County of Somerſet; Thomas Biſhop of Peterborough, of the Pariſh of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middleſex; and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, of the City of Briſtol, did conſult and conſpire among themſelves to diminiſh the Regal Authority and Royal Prerogative, Power and Government of our ſaid Lord the King, in the Premiſes, and to infringe and elude the ſaid Order; and in Proſecution and Execution of the Conſpiracy aforeſaid, They the ſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, on the ſaid eighteenth Day of May, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, maliciouſly, ſeditiouſly, and ſcandalouſly, did frame, compoſe and write, and cauſed to be framed, compoſed and written, a certain falſe, feigned, malicious, pernicious and ſeditious Libel in Writing, concerning our ſaid Lord the King, and his Royal Declaration and Order aforeſaid, (under pretence of a Petition) and the ſame falſe, feigned, malicious, pernicious and ſeditious Libel, by them the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, with their own Hands reſpectively being ſubſcribed, on the Day and Year, and in the Place laſt mentioned, in the Preſence of our ſaid Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. did publiſh and cauſe to be publiſhed; in which ſaid falſe, feigned, malicious, pernicious and ſeditious Libel is contained, The humble Petition, &c. prout before in the Petition, to theſe Words [reaſonable Conſtruction] in manifeſt Contempt of our ſaid Lord the King, and of the Laws of this Kingdom, to the evil Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Whereupon the ſaid Attorney General of our ſaid Lord the King, on Behalf of our ſaid Lord the King, prays the Advice of the Court here in the Premiſes, and due Proceſs of Law to be made out againſt the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, in this Behalf, to anſwer our ſaid Lord the King in and concerning the Premiſes, &c.

T. Powis.
W. Williams.

To this Information the Defendants ha ve pleaded Not guilty, and for their Trial have put themſelves upon their Country, and his Majeſty's Attorney General likewiſe, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendants, or any of them, are guilty of the Matter contained in this Information that hath been read unto you, or not guilty. If you find them, or any of them guilty, you are to ſay ſo; and if you find them, or any of them, not guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and hear your Evidence. Crier, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O-yes! If any one will give Evidence on Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt the Defendants, of the Matters whereof they are impeached, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard.

Mr. Wright. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information exhibited by his Majeſty's Attorney General againſt the moſt Reverend my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſix other Honourable and Noble Biſhops in the Information mentioned: And the Information ſets forth, That the King, out of his Clemency and benign Intention towards his Subjects of this Kingdom, did put forth his Royal Declaration, bearing Date the fourth Day of April, in the third Year of his Reign, entituled, His Majeſty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conſcience; and that afterwards, the twenty-ſeventh of April, in the fourth Year of his Reign, he publiſhed another Declaration, both which have been read to you; and for the further Manifeſtation and Notification of his Grace in the ſaid Declaration, bearing Date the twenty-ſeventh of April laſt, his Majeſty did order, that the ſaid Declaration ſhould be read on the twentieth and twenty-ſeventh of May in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and ten Miles about; and on the third and tenth of June throughout the whole Kingdom: And that the Right Reverend the Biſhops ſhould ſend the ſaid Declaration to be diſtributed throughout their reſpective Dioceſes, to be read accordingly. But that the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops the eighteenth of May, in the ſaid fourth Year of his ſaid Majeſty's Reign, having conſpired and conſulted among themſelves to diminiſh the King's Power and Prerogative, did falſly, unlawfully, maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly, make, compoſe, and write a falſe, ſcandalous, malicious and ſeditious Libel, under pretence of a Petition; which Libel they did publiſh in the Preſence of the ſaid King; the Contents of which Libel you have likewiſe heard read. To this they have pleaded not guilty: You, Gentlemen, are Judges of the Fact; if we prove this Fact, you are to find them guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Information read by the Clerk, and it has been likewiſe opened to you at the Bar; but before we go to our Evidence, perhaps it may not be amiſs for us, that are of Counſel for the King, now in the Beginning of this Cauſe, to ſettle the Queſtion right before you, as well to tell you what my Lords the Biſhops are not proſecuted for, as what they are. Firſt, I am to tell you, and I believe you cannot your ſelves but obſerve, that my Lords are not proſecuted as Biſhops, nor much leſs are they proſecuted for any Point or Matter of Religion, but they are proſecuted as Subjects of this Kingdom, and only for a Temporal Crime, as thoſe that have injured and affronted the King to his very Face; for it is ſaid to be done in his own Preſence. In the next Place, they are not proſecuted for any Nonfeaſance, or not doing or omitting to do any thing, but as they are Actors, for cenſuring of his Majeſty and his Government, and for giving their Opinion in Matters wholly relating to Law and Government: And I cannot omit here to take Notice, that there is not any one thing that the Law is more jealous of, or does more carefully provide for the Prevention and Puniſhment of, than all Accuſations and Arraignments of the Government. No Man is allowed to accuſe even the moſt inferiour Magiſtrate of any Miſbehaviour in his Office, unleſs it be in a legal Courſe, though the Fact is true. No Man may ſay of a Juſtice of Peace to his Face, that he is unjuſt in his Office. No Man may tell a Judge, either by Word or Petition, you have given an unjuſt, or an ill Judgment, and I will not obey it; it is againſt the Rules and Law of the Kingdom, or the like. No Man may ſay of the great Men of the Nation, much leſs of the great Officers of the Kingdom, that they do act unreaſonably or unjuſtly, or the like; leaſt of all may any Man ſay any ſuch thing of the King; for theſe Matters tend to poſſeſs the People, that the Government is ill adminiſtred; and the Conſequence of that is, to ſet them upon deſiring a Reformation; and what that tends to, and will end in, we have all had a ſad and too dear brought Experience: The laſt Age will abundantly ſatisfy us, whither ſuch a Thing does tend. Men are to take their proper Remedies for Redreſs of any Grievances they lie under, and the Law has provided ſufficiently for that. Theſe things are ſo very well known to all Men of the Law, and indeed to all the People of England of any Underſtanding, that I need not, nor will not, ſtand any longer upon it, but come to the Matter that is now before you, Gentlemen, to be tried. The Fact that we have laid we muſt prove, rather to keep the Formality of a Trial, then to pretend to inform you, or tell you what you do not know: It is publickly notorious to the whole World; but becauſe we muſt go on in the regular Methods of Law, we ſhall prove the Facts in the Order they are laid in the Information. Firſt, we take Notice, that his Majeſty, of his great Clemency and Goodneſs to his People, and out of his Deſire that all his Subjects might live eaſily under him (of which I think never Prince gave greater or more plain Evidence of his Intentions that Way) the fourth of April, 1687, he did iſſue forth his Royal Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience. This Matter, without all Queſtion, was welcome to all his People that ſtood in need of it; and thoſe that did not could not but ſay, the Thing in the Nature of it was very juſt and gracious; but preſently it muſt be ſurmiſed, that the King was not in Earneſt, and would not, nor could not, make good his Promiſe: But to take away all Surmiſes, his Majeſty was pleaſed by his Declaration of the twenty-ſeventh of April laſt, not only to repeat his former Declaration, but likewiſe to renew his former Promiſes to his People, and to aſſure them that he ſtill was, and yet is, of the ſame Opinion that he had at firſt declared himſelf to be of; nay, we further ſhew you, that to the End that this thing might be known to all his People, even to the meaneſt Men, who, it may be, were not willing or able to buy the Declaration, and that the King himſelf might be under higher Obligations, if it were poſſible, than his own Word, he was deſirous it ſhould be repeated in the Churches, and read in that ſacred Place, that all his People might hear what he had promiſed, and given his own ſacred Word for; and he himſelf might be under the ſolemn Tie and Obligation to keep his Word, by remembring that his Promiſes had, by his own Command, been publiſhed in the Time of Divine Service, in the Houſe of God; and thereupon was the Order of Council made, that has been likewiſe read to you, which does direct, that it ſhould be read in all the Churches and Chapels in the Kingdom; and you have heard and we ſhall prove, what a Return his Majeſty has had for this Grace and Kindneſs of his: You'll find when they come to read that which they call a Petition, all their Thanks his Majeſty had for his Favour and Goodneſs to his People, 'tis only hard Words, and a heavy Accuſation, ſuch as a private Perſon would be little able to bear. I will not aggravate the Matter, but only ſay thus much, that his Majeſty, who was always a Prince of as great Clemency as ever this Kingdom had, and who was repreſented for all that, as a Prince of the greateſt Cruelty, before his Acceſſion to the Crown, by his Enemies, is now accuſed by his Friends for this Effect of his Mercy. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, his Majeſty reſented this ill Uſage ſo far, that he has ordered, and thought fit to have a publick Vindication of his Honour in this Matter, by this Trial; and we ſhall go on to our Proofs, and we do not doubt but you will do his Majeſty (as you do all other Perſons) Right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will go on to prove the Parts of this Information; and we will proceed according to the Method which Mr. Attorney has opened, and which is purſuant to the Order of the Facts laid in the Information. Give us the firſt Declaration under the Great Seal; the Declaration of the 4th of April, 1687.

[The Declaration was delivered into the Court.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the Date of it firſt.

Clerk reads. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 4th Day of April, 1678, and in the third Year of Our Reign.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the Title of it, Sir.

Clerk. It is entituled, His Majeſty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conſcience.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is it under Seal? Is the Great Seal to it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give it down to Sir Robert Sawyer, that he may ſee it; for I would have every thing as clear as poſſible.——Sir Robert Sawyer, will you have it read?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, we would ſave as much of the Time of the Court as may be.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray put in the ſecond Declaration of the 27th of April laſt.

Clerk reads. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 27th Day of April, 1688, in the fourth Year of Our Reign; and it is entituled, His Majeſty's Gracious Declaration.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that under the Great Seal too?

Clerk. Yes it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver that down likewiſe, that they may ſee it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We are ſatisfied, you need not read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then where is the Order of Council for the reading of it?

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir John Nicholas.——There he is.

[Sir John Nicholas ſworn.]

L. C. J. Come Mr. Attorney, what do you aſk Sir John Nicholas?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hand the Order to Sir John Nicholas.——Is that the Order of Council, Sir John?

Sir John Nicholas. The Book, Sir, is not in my Cuſtody.—— There is the Regiſter that keeps it, he has it here to produce.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Gantlett.

[Mr. Gantlett ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that the Council-Book?

Mr. Gantlett. Yes, this is the Council-Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then turn to the Order of the fourth of May, the King's Order of Council for the reading the Declaration.

Mr. Gantlett. There it is, Sir.

[The Book delivered into Court.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read it, I pray.

Clerk. reads. At the Court at White-hall, the fourth of May, 1688.——— and ſo reads the Order of Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have one Thing that is mentioned in the Information, that this Declaration was printed; if that be denied, we will call Henry Hills, his Majeſty's Printer, becauſe we would prove all our Information as it is laid.

L. C. J. You muſt do ſo, Mr. Sollicitor; you muſt prove the whole Declaration.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Crier, call Henry Hills.

[He was called, but did not preſently appear.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Bridgman.—— Though theſe Declarations prove themſelves, we have them here printed —— But ſwear Mr. Bridgman.

[Mr. Bridgman ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew Mr. Bridgman the two Declarations.

L. C. J. What do you aſk him?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We aſk you, Sir, if the two Declarations were printed.

Mr. Bridgman. What Declarations do you mean, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You know what Declarations I mean well enough; but we'll aſk you particularly. You know the Declaration that was made the 4th of April, in the third Year of the King,——— was it printed?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, it was printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that of the 27th of April in the fourth Year of the King, printed?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were both printed by the King's Order.

Mr. At. Gen. Then the next Thing in Courſe is the Biſhops Paper.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Bridgman, pray let me aſk you one Queſtion; Did you ever compare the Print with that under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. I did not compare them, Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does ſwear they were printed by the King's Order.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Good Mr. Sollicitor, give me Leave to aſk him a Queſtion.——— Can you ſwear then that they are the ſame?

Mr. Bridgman. I was not aſked that Queſtion, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come then Mr. Bridgman, I'll aſk you.———Do you believe they are the ſame?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that an Anſwer to my Queſtion?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We muſt aſk him Queſtions as well as you Sir Robert.———What ſay you, Do you believe it to be the ſame?

L. C. J. You hear Mr. Sollicitor's Queſtion, anſwer it Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it.

L. C. J. Well, that's enough.

Mr. At. Gen. If there were Occaſion, we have them here compared, and they are the ſame.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. With Submiſſion, my Lord, in all theſe Caſes, if they will prove any Fact that is laid in an Information, they muſt prove it by thoſe that know it of their own Knowledge.—— Do you know it to be the ſame?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's very well, Sir.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Ay, ſo it is, Mr. Sollicitor. It is a wonderful thing, my Lord, that we cannot be permitted to aſk a Queſtion ——— Do you know it to be the ſame, Mr. Bridgman, I aſk you again?

Mr. Bridgman. I have not compared them, I tell you, Sir Robert Sawyer.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Then that is no Proof.

L. C. J. Would you have a Man ſwear above his Belief? He tells you he believes it is the ſame.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that Proof of an Information?

L. C. J. Well, you'll have your Time to make your Objections by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Sir John Nicholas.

Sir John Nicholas. I am ſworn already.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſee you have a Paper in your Hand, Sir John Nicholas; Pray who had you that Paper from?

Sir John Nicholas. I will give you an Account of it as well as I can.

Mr. Pollexfen. Before they go to another thing, my Lord, we think they have failed in their Proof of their Information, about the Printing this Declaration.

Mr. At. Gen. Where is Mr. Hills?

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. They have laid, that it was printed by the King's Order; and it is ſuch a Matter, Mr. Sollicitor, as you may clear, if you will, ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is Mr. Hills; now I ſee him.

L. C. J. I was going to give Order, that you ſhould ſend to the Printing-houſe for him.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. They may put this Matter out of Doubt too, if they will, on the other Side; for I ſee they have a Copy in Print, and there's the Original; they may compare them if they pleaſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am very glad to hear ſuch a ſtrong Objection.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We could clear the Way for you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, you put Straws in our Way; we ſhall be able enough to clear it without your Help. Swear Mr. Hills, and young Mr. Graham here.

[Hills and Graham ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Graham, did you compare any of theſe printed Declarations with the Original?

Graham. Yes, I did compare ſome of them, and did make Amendments as I went along.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew one that you have compar'd with the Original.

Mr. At. Gen. Hills is here himſelf, we'll aſk him. Are you ſworn, Sir?

Crier. He is ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray were the King's Declarations for Liberty of Conſcience printed, both of them?

Hills. Ay, an't pleaſe you, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. You printed them, I think.

Hills. Yes, I did print them.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Hills, you ſay they were printed: Upon your Oath, after they were printed, did you examine them with the Original under Seal?

Hills. They were examined before they were printed.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Did you examine them?

Hills. I did not, here's one that did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who is that?

Hills. It is Mr. Williams here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear him.

[Williams ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you hear, Williams? Do you know that the King's Declarations for Liberty of Conſcience, two of them, one of the 4th of April, and the other of the 27th of April, were printed?

Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you examine them after they were printed, by the Copy they were printed from?

Williams. I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where had you the Copy? who had you it from?

Williams. I had it from Mr. Hills.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Williams, did you examine them with the Original under the Great Seal?

Williams. The firſt Declaration I did.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The ſecond Declaration is the main.

Williams. The ſecond was compos'd by the firſt.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why, is there no more in the ſecond Declaration than there was in the firſt?

Williams. Yes, there is, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Did you examine that with the Original under the Great Seal?

Williams. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can any one tell who did examine it under the Great Seal?

Mr. Finch. Pray what did you examine it by, Mr. Williams?

Williams. By a Copy that I receiv'd from Mr. Hills.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we will go on; and we deſire Sir John Nicholas to give an Account where he had that Paper that he has in his Hand.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, it does not appear that the Copy that was printed is the true Copy of the Declaration.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays he had it from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Finch. Pray, Mr. Hills, what did you examine that Copy by which you gave to Mr. Williams?

Hills. I had the Copy from Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Finch. Did you examine it with the Original under the Great Seal?

Hills. I did not examine it, I had it from Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Finch. What, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. It was the Original ſigned by the King.

Mr. Finch. But I aſk you, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. Not under the Great Seal it was not, it was the very Declaration the King ſigned.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But it ought to be compared with the Original, or it is no good Proof that it is the ſame.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, you underſtand Collation better ſure, you ſhould be aſham'd of ſuch a weak Objection as this.

Williams. We never bring our Proof to the Great Seal.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But if you will have it Proof at Law, you muſt have it compared with the Original.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think there is any great Streſs to be laid upon that? We only ſay it was printed.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But you have made it part of your Information, and therefore you muſt prove it.

L. C. J. I think there's Proof enough of that; there needs no ſuch Nicety.

Mr. Pollexfen. Well, my Lord, we muſt ſubmit, let them go on, we won't ſtand upon this.

Mr. At. Gen. Then pray let me go on. Where had you that Paper, Sir John Nicholas?

Sir John Nicholas. I had this Paper from the King's Hand.

L. C. J. Put it in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had you it from, do you ſay?

Sir John Nicholas. From the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what Time had you it from the King, Sir?

Sir John Nicholas. I had it twice from the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the firſt Time, Sir?

Sir John Nicholas. The firſt Time was in Council the 8th of this Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of it afterwards?

Sir John Nicholas. The King had it from me the 12th, and the 13th I had it from the King again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray deliver it this way into the Court: We will now go on, and prove the Biſhops Hands to it. This is the Paper upon which we bring this Information: Gentlemen, it is all the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbiſhop, and ſigned by him and the reſt of the Biſhops.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſuppoſe my Lords the Biſhops will not put us to prove it, they will own their Hands.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, their Counſel will put you to prove it; I perceive your beſt way is to aſk nothing of them.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will deſire nothing of them, we will go on to our Proofs. Call Sir Thomas Exton, Sir Richard Raynes, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Recorder, and Mr. William Middleton.

[Sir Thomas Exton appeared, and was ſworn.]

L. C. J. What do you aſk Sir Thomas Exton?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray convey that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton —— Sir Thomas, I would aſk you one Queſtion: Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury?

Sir Tho. Exton. I'll give your Lordſhip what Account I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, anſwer my Queſtion; Do you know his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. I never ſaw him write five Times in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I aſk you, upon your Oath, do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. I do believe this may be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe all the Body of it to be of his Hand-writing, or only part of it?

Sir

Sir Tho. Exton. I muſt believe it to be ſo, for I have ſeen ſome of his Hand-writing, and this is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you to the Name? Do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. Yes, Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any of the reſt of the Names that are upon that Paper?

Sir Tho. Exton. No, I do not.

L. C. J. Do you for the Defendants aſk Sir Thomas Exton any Queſtion?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Then call Sir Richard Raynes.

Sir Tho. Exton. My Lord, Sir Richard Raynes has been ſick this Month, and has not been at the Commons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have no need of him. Call Mr. Brooks.

[Mr. Brooks ſworn.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſhew Mr. Brooks that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Brooks, I aſk you this Queſtion, Do you know my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper; do you take that to be my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand?

Mr. Brooks, Yes, my Lord, I do believe it to be my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. What ſay you to the whole Body of the Paper?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe it to be his Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. What do you ſay to his Name there?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe this Name is his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. William Middleton.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Brooks don't go away, but look upon the Names of the Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and my Lord of Ely.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. I have ſeen my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing, and I do believe this is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord, I am not ſo well acquainted with my Lord of Ely's Writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But have you ſeen his Writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, I have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Writing do you think?

Mr. Brooks. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Truly I do believe it.

Sir George Treby. Did you ever ſee him write?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he has ſeen his Writing.

Sir George Treby. How do you know that it was his Hand-writing that you ſaw?

Mr. Brooks. Becauſe he own'd it.

L. C. J. How do you know it, do you ſay?

Mr. Brooks. I know it, I ſay, becauſe I have ſeen a Letter that he writ to another Perſon, which he afterwards own'd.

L. C. J. What did he own, Mr. Brooks?

Mr. Brooks. That he wrote a Letter to another Perſon, which I ſaw.

Sir George Treby. To whom, Sir?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Have you the Letter here Sir?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir, the Letter was writ to my Lord Biſhop of Oxford.

Sir George Treby. Can you tell what was in that Letter?

Mr. At. Gen. What is that to this Queſtion? You aſk him, how he knows his Hand-writing, and, ſays he, I did not ſee him write, but I have ſeen a Letter of his to the Lord Biſhop of Oxford.

L. C. J. And he does ſay, my Lord of Ely own'd it to be his Hand that is there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord, that's a Miſtake, he own'd a Letter that he had writ to the Biſhop of Oxford to be his Hand-writing, and by Compariſon of this with that, ſays he, I take this to be his Hand-writing.

Mr. Brooks. That is my Meaning, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſpeak out, and tell us what are the Reaſons that make you ſay you believe this to be the Biſhop of Ely's Writing.

Mr. Brooks. Becauſe it reſembles a Letter that I have by me of his Writing to the Biſhop of Oxford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you ſay he own'd that Letter to be his?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord Biſhop of Oxford did anſwer it, and I waited upon the Biſhop of Ely with the Anſwer, and he did own it.

Sir George Treby. How did he own it, Sir?

Mr. Brooks. I had ſome Communication with my Lord of Ely about the Subſtance of that Letter, and therefore I apprehended he own'd it.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. That's a ſtrange Inference, Mr. Sollicitor, to prove a Man's Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. We have more Evidence; but let this go as far as it can.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Certainly, my Lord, you will never ſuffer ſuch a Witneſs as this!

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I ſuppoſe they can prove it otherwiſe, or elſe this is not Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. So they had need, for it is a ſtrange Inference of Mr. Sollicitor, that this is a Proof of my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. The Biſhop of Oxon. was dead before any of this Matter came in Agitation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will bring other Proofs. —— Call Mr. Chetwood and Mr. Smith.

[Mr. Chetwood and Mr. Smith ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Chetwood, we would know of you if you know my Lord Biſhop of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never ſaw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's not an Anſwer to my Queſtion: Do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I do not certainly know it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you ſeen any of it?

Mr. Chetwood. I have ſeen my Lord of Ely's Writing, that has been ſaid to be his.

L. C. J. But ſurely you had better take a Witneſs that has ſeen him write.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I think 'tis hardly poſſible for a Man to prove his Hand, that has not ſeen him write.

L C. J. I think 'tis better Proof indeed, to bring ſome that has ſeen him write.

Mr. Chetwood. My Lord, 'tis a long Time ſince I ſaw my Lord of Ely's Writing.

L. C. J. Pray bring ſome other Proof, if you have it.

Biſh. of Peterborough. My Lord, we are here as Criminals before your Lordſhip, and we are proſecuted with great Zeal: I beg your Lordſhip that you will not be of Counſel againſt us, to direct them what Evidence they ſhall give.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. My Lord of Peterborough, I hope I have not behaved myſelf any otherwiſe hitherto than as becomes me: I was ſaying this (and I think I ſaid it for your Lordſhip's Advantage) that this was not ſufficient Proof; and I think, if your Lordſhip obſerved what I ſaid, it was for you, and not againſt you.

Biſh. of Peterborough. It was to direct them againſt us, how they ſhould give Evidence.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord of Peterborough, ſit down, you'll have no Wrong done you.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We that are of Counſel will take Care of that; and pray, my Lord, will you pleaſe to paſs it by?

L. C. J. We are not uſed to be ſo ſerv'd, and I will not be uſed ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to paſs that by; for what your Lordſhip ſaid was in Favour of my Lords the Biſhops, but I ſee they do not take it ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Chetwood, do you look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I do believe it is.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That's very well, when he ſays he never ſaw him write.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. What is the Reaſon of that Belief of his I would fain know?

Mr. Chetwood. I have formerly ſeen his Hand, I think it was his; but I never ſaw my Lord of Ely write his Hand.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then the Queſtion is, whether this be Evidence?

Mr. Finch. How do you know that that which you ſaw formerly was my Lord of Ely's Hand?

Mr. Chetwood. I have no ſuch Certainty as poſitively to ſwear that that was his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will go on to other Proofs, and if we want better Evidence at the End, we will argue with them.

Mr. Chetwood. I am not certain that what I ſaw was my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, becauſe I never ſaw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well to ſhew your good Affection.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Smith, I would aſk you this Queſtion, Do you know my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Smith. I have ſeen it often.

Mr. At. Gen. Look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely in that Paper; do you believe it to be my Lord's Hand-writing, or no?

Mr. Smith. I did not ſee him write it, Sir; I cannot tell whether it is or no.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee his Name?

Mr. Smith. Yes, but it was a great while ago, and here are but ſeven Letters, and I cannot judge by that: I was better acquainted with his Hand-writing heretofore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, anſwer me; Do you believe it to be his Writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, for I did not ſee him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But my Queſtion is, Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I ſay, I was better acquainted with it heretofore than I am now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray anſwer my Queſtion: Do you believe that to be my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why do you believe it?

Mr. Smith. I have no other Reaſon to believe it, but becauſe I have ſeen ſomething like it.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. How long ago is it ſince you ſaw him write?

Mr. Smith. I have not ſeen him write, ſo as to take Notice of it, for ſome Years: I could better judge of it when he writ his Name Turner, than now it is Ely, becauſe there was more Letters to judge by.

[Mr. Middleton ſworn.]

L. C. J. Here's Mr. Middleton? what do you call him for?

Mr. Sol. Gen. To prove many of their Hands.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſhew him that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt, Mr. Middleton, do you know my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I have ſeen his Grace's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. It is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I never ſaw it as I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you ſay to my Lord of Ely? His Name is next.

Mr. Middleton. It is like his Lordſhip's Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, that's all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cannot you tell whether you believe it, or not believe it?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever ſee him write? For I would clear this Matter beyond Exception.

Mr. Middleton. I have ſeen his Lordſhip write, but I never ſtood by him ſo near as to ſee him make his Letters.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, I believe it is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You did not guide his Hand I believe —— Do you know my Lord of Chicheſter's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. Sir, I am acquainted with none of their Hands but with my Lord of Canterbury's, and my Lord of Ely's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord of Peterborough's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I had my Lord of Peterborough's Writing two Years ago for ſome Money, but I cannot ſay this is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. I never took Notice of it ſo much as to ſay, I believe it to be like it; I never ſaw it but once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any other of the Names there? What ſay you to the Biſhop of Briſtol's Name?

Mr. Middleton. I ſaw once my Lord of Briſtol's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you to that Writing there?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his or no?

Mr. Middleton. Truly, that I cannot ſay, for I never ſaw it but once.

L. C. J. You never ſaw him write, did you?

Mr. Middleton. No, my Lord, I never did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will call Sir Thomas Pinfold, and Mr. Clavel —— Sir Thomas Pinfold is there, ſwear him.

[Sir Thomas Pinfold ſworn.]

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Thomas Pinfold, do you know my Lord Biſhop of Peterborough's Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Truly, not very well; I never ſaw but one Letter from him in my Life: Shew me his Hand, and I will tell you —— [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, Sir, what ſay you to it?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Then upon my Oath, I ſay, I cannot well tell upon my own Knowledge that it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you, do you believe it to be his Hand?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Sir, upon the Oath that I have taken I will anſwer you, that upon this Account, that I have heard there was a Paper delivered by my Lords the Biſhops to the King, and this Paper that you offer me, I ſuppoſe to be the ſame; upon that Score I do believe it, but upon any other Score I cannot tell what to ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath, Sir, do you believe it is his Hand-writing or no?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Sir, I have anſwered you already, that upon my own Knowledge I cannot ſay it is his Hand-writing; but becauſe I have heard of ſuch a Paper, I do believe it may be his.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee my Lord Biſhop write?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I have been in his Chamber ſeveral Times when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look upon what he writ.

L. C. J. Did you never ſee him write his Name?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I do not know that I ever ſaw him write his Name, but I have ſeen him writing, I ſay, and ſo my Lord Biſhop may have ſeen me writing, but I believe he does not know my Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have ſeen him write you ſay.

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I tell you, Mr. Sollicitor, I have been in his Chamber when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look over him.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Then you did never ſee any of that Writing?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I cannot ſay I did, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray did you never ſee any of his Writing but that Letter you ſpeak of?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, you muſt call other Witneſſes, for this does not prove any thing.

Mr. At. Gen. We will go on —— Swear Mr. Clavel.

[Mr. Clavel ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of Peterborough's Hand-writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I have ſeen it many Times.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know it when you ſee it?

Mr. Clavel. I believe I do, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper, and upon your Oath tell us, do you believe that Name to be his Writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I do believe it is, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray look upon the reſt of the Hands there, do you know any of the other Names?

Mr. Clavel. No, I do not.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ever ſeen any of their Writing?

Mr. Clavel. It is probable I may have ſeen ſome, but do not now remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think your are a Bookſeller, Mr. Clavel?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I am ſo, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ſuppoſe you have had ſome Dealings with them in the Way of your Trade. Did you never ſee any of their Writing?

Mr. Clavel. I have ſeen the Names of ſome of them, but it is ſo long ſince, that I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee my Lord of Peterborough write?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot tell whether I ever ſaw him write his Name or no; but I have had ſeveral Letters from my Lord of Peterborough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot ſay it is, I believe it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have had Letters from him you ſay?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, and it ſeems to be like his Hand.

Mr. Pollexfen. But you never ſaw him write his Hand you ſay?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot ſay I ever did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Theſe Letters that you have received from my Lord of Peterborough, did he own them? Do you think they were counterfeit, or of his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I ſuppoſe he has owned them, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But you muſt anſwer directly, Sir, Did he own them?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did thoſe Letters concern? Were they about Books, or what?

Mr. Clavel. They were ſometimes about one Buſineſs, ſometimes about another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the ſubject Matter of any of theſe Letters about Money, and was it paid you? Did you receive, or did you give any Account of it?

Mr. Clavel. They were about ſeveral Buſineſſes.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Clavel, you muſt give us as particular Account as you can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon thoſe Letters were the Things done that thoſe Letters required?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you do your Part?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now I would ask you, Do you believe that Name of my Lord Biſhop of Peterborough to be the Hand-writing of my Lord Biſhop?

Mr. Clavel. I believe it is.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Do you know that thoſe Letters that you ſay you received from my Lord, were of my Lord's own Hand-writing, Do you ſwear that?

Mr. Clavel. My Lord, I cannot ſwear that.

Mr. Finch. Do you know whether the Letters that you received, as you ſay, were written by my Lord himſelf, or by his Secretary?

Mr. Clavel. I have received Letters from him, and his Secretary too.

Sir George Treby. But were you preſent with him when he writ any Letters with his own Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not mean a Letter to yourſelf ſure, Sir George?

Sir George Treby. No, Sir, I ſay any Letters.

Mr. Clavel. I have beeen preſent with my Lord often, but I cannot ſay I have ſeen my Lord write.

L. C. J. He has here told you, he has had ſeveral Letters of my Lord's own Hand, and from his Secretary too.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. He has ſaid it, but you ſee he ſays he never ſaw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence againſt my Lord Archbiſhop, Lord Biſhop of Ely, St. Aſaph, Peterborough, and Briſtol.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Certainly, Mr. Sollicitor, you miſtake——But go on——

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence I ſay againſt them, Sir, but whether it be ſufficient Evidence, we ſhall argue by and by——Call Mr. Hooper and Mr. Chetwood again.

[Mr. Chetwood appeared.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Chetwood. I have ſeen it twice or thrice, but it is a conſiderable Time ſince I did ſee it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe that is his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never ſaw him write his Name in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon the Name, and tell us what you believe of it.

Mr. Chetwood. I believe it may, but I do not certainly know it to be his Hand; I rather believe it is my Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Hand, than I believe that other to be my Lord of Peterborough's.

Sir George Treby. Do you believe that to be my Lord of Peterborough's Hand or no?

Mr. Chetwood. I ſay, I rather believe that this is the Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Writing, than that which is above it or below it, to be their Writing; but truly I do not diſtinctly know my Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Hooper.

L. C. J. You are very lame in this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Witneſſes are unwilling, and we muſt find out the Truth as well as we can.

[Mr. Hooper did not appear.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. James and Mr. Powell.

[Mr. James appeared and was ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of Briſtol's Writing, Mr. James?

Mr. James. Yes, I believe I do, but I am not ſo certain, becauſe my Lord writes ſeveral Times ſeveral Hands.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew him the Paper: Is that my Lord of Briſtol's Hand?

Mr. James. I cannot ſay it is or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. It looks like his Hand, and that's all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray hearken, and anſwer to what I aſk you; you are prepared for one Queſtion it may be, and I ſhall aſk you another: Upon your Oath, do you believe it to be the Hand-writing of my Lord of Briſtol?

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I can only ſay it looks like it, that's all.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him write?

Mr. James. Yes, my Lord, I have ſeen his Hand-writing ſeveral Times, and it is like his Hand-writing, that is all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, remember you are upon your Oath, and anſwer my Queſtion.

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I know no more than that, Sir William Williams.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I aſk you, Sir, whether you believe it to be his Hand or not?

Mr. James. My Lord, it looks like his Hand, and it may be his Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. But you do think and believe one way or other: What do you believe?

Mr. James. It may be his Hand for what I know, and it may not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It may be your Hand.

Mr. James. No, Sir, it cannot be mine, I am ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. I believe it may be his Hand, or it may not be his Hand, that is all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Come, Sir, you muſt anſwer fairly, Do you believe it to be his Hand, or do you not?

Mr. James. Yes, I do believe it.

Mr. At. Gen. You are very hard to believe me-thinks.

Mr. James. No, I am not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well now, Mr. James; when you do well, we'll commend you.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Nathaniel Powell.

[Mr. Powell was ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let's know what's your Name?

Mr. Powell. My Name is Nathaniel Powell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter?

Mr. Powell. I have not ſeen the Paper, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Powell. Yes, I believe I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look upon that Name of his.

Mr. Powell. I did not ſee my Lord write that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who ſays you did? No body aſks that of you; how you anſwer! Pray Sir, remember your Oath, and anſwer ſeriouſly, Do you believe it to be his Writing or no?

Mr. Powell. I believe it is like my Lord's Hand-writing, but I never did ſee him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No body ſays you did.

Mr. Powell. Therefore I cannot ſwear poſitively it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do not aſk that neither.

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell whether it be his Hand or no.

L. C. J. Sir, you muſt anſwer the Queſtion directly and ſeriouſly: Do you believe it, or do you not believe it?

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell what to believe in the Caſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I aſk you another Queſtion, upon your Oath, do you believe it is not his Hand?

Mr. Powell. I cannot ſay that neither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Once again, I aſk you, upon your Oath, Do you believe it to be his Hand? I aſk you plainly, and let Mankind judge of you.

Mr. Powell. I tell you, Sir, I cannot tell what to believe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if theſe Things be endured, there will be an End of all Teſtimony, if Witneſſes do not anſwer fairly to the Queſtions that are aſked them.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly to me, for a Man to ſwear his Belief in ſuch a Matter, is an extraordinary Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is obliged to anſwer Queſtions when they are fairly put to him.

Mr. Pollexfen. I think that is a hard Queſtion, not to be anſwered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Make your Exceptions to the Evidence if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Firſt he ſays, he knows his Hand; then he ſays, he has ſeen him write; and then he ſays, he did not ſee him write this; but he ſhuffles, he won't anſwer whether he believes it or not.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Queſtion is, Whether Belief in any Caſe be Evidence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. If they have a Mind to a Bill of Exceptions upon that Point, let them ſeal their Bill, and we'll argue it with them when they will; in the mean Time we'll go on, and that which we now pray, my Lord, is, that this Paper may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. We have given ſufficient Evidence ſure to have it read, therefore we deſire it may be read.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, before this Paper be read, we hope you will let us be heard to it: We think that what they deſire (to have this Paper read) ought not to be: For what is all the Proof that they have given of this Paper? They have a Proof by Compariſon of Hands, which in a criminal Caſe ought not to be received: And beſides, my Lord, what is that Compariſon of Hands that they have offered? Some Perſons come here and ſay, they cannot tell whether it be their Hands, they believe it may or may not, for ought they know; how ſhall we convict any Man upon ſuch a Teſtimony as this? Can we have our Remedy againſt him for Perjury, for ſaying, he believes it to be our Hand? Therefore here is not any Evidence to charge us. For firſt, It is only a Compariſon of Hands; and ſecondly, That Compariſon is proved in ſuch an uncertain Manner: Some of them tell you, they do not know what to believe; another tells you, I believe it is rather ſuch a Lord's Hand, than the others are ſuch a Lord's Hand; I believe 'tis rather his Hand than that above it, or that below it. What Sort of Proof is all this? Therefore we pray it may not be read, till they prove it better.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a Word or two in this Matter for Evidence ſake; there is a great Deal of Reaſon we ſhould take Exceptions to the Evidence that has been given: For truly, I think I never heard ſuch a Sort of Evidence given before. It is a Caſe of as great Concernment as ever was in Weſtminſter-Hall; and for them to come to prove Hands only by thoſe that ſaw Letters, but never ſaw the Perſons write, this, I hope, will not amount to ſo much as a Compariſon of Hands. Your Lordſhip knows, that in every petty Cauſe, where it depends upon the Compariſon of Hands, they uſe to bring ſome of the Party's Hand-writing which may be ſworn to, to be the Party's own Hand, and then it is to be compared in Court with what is endeavoured to be proved, and upon comparing them together in Court, the Jury may look upon it, and ſee if it be right; and never was there any ſuch a Thing as this admitted in any poor petty Cauſe, that is but of the Value of forty Shillings. And therefore as to this Evidence, Firſt, We ſay Compariſon of Hands ought not to be given at all in the Caſes of Criminals; and I believe it was never heard of that it ſhould. In the next Place, if it be admitted to be Evidence, yet it is not ſuch an Evidence, as that by Compariſon of Hands the Jury can take Notice of it; for in ſuch Manner of Proofs by Compariſon of Hands, the Uſage is, that the Witneſs is firſt aſked, concerning the Writing he produces, Did you ſee this writ by the Defendant, whoſe Hand they would prove? If he anſwers yes, I did, then ſhould the Jury upon Compariſon of what the Witneſs ſwears to, with the Paper that is to be proved, judge whether thoſe Hands be ſo like as to induce them to believe that the ſame Perſon writ both; and not that the Witneſs ſhould ſay, I had a Letter from ſuch a Perſon, and that is like the Hand of that Letter, therefore I believe it to be his Hand: My Lord, I hope this ſhall never be admitted for Evidence in this Court.

L. C. J. I do take it, that the Witneſs himſelf is judge of the Compariſon; for if he does know the Party's Hand, and a Paper be offered him to prove the Party's Hand, he is to compare it in his own Mind.

Mr. S. Pemberton. It never was admitted to be ſo, that I know of, my Lord, or ever read of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may remember ſeveral Caſes about that, particularly Sidney's Caſe.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little as to that: It is a Point of very great Moment, whether in the Caſe of a Miſdemeanor, either in an Indictment or Information, it be good Evidence to offer Compariſon of Hands; and that this Court did adjudge quite contrary upon an Indictment of Forgery againſt my Lady Carr, appears in Syderfin's Reports: They went to prove her Letters written by her to Cox; the Court rejected it, and gave their Judgment here, that it was no Evidence; and that for this Reaſon, becauſe of the evil Conſequences of it: For, ſaid they, it is an eaſy Matter for any Man's Hand to be counterfeited; that they ſure will agree, for frequent daily Experience ſhews how eaſily that may be done: Is it not eaſy then to cut any Man down in the World, by proving it like his Hand? And proving that Likeneſs by comparing it with ſomething that he hath formerly ſeen? This ſtrikes mighty deep; the honeſteſt Man in the World, and the moſt innocent may be deſtroyed, and yet no Fault to be found in the Jury or in the Judges; if the Law were ſo, it would be an unreaſonable Law. Next, my Lord, for the Caſe of Sidney, that was a Caſe of Treaſon. Now in the Caſe of Treaſon there is always other Evidence brought; and this Evidence comes in but as a collateral Evidence, to ſtrengthen the other; but in this Caſe it is the ſingle Evidence, for ought that appears, for there is nothing more, for ought I can ſee, in the Caſe, but whether this were their Hands, and proved only by what another believes: Now ſhall any be condemned by another's Belief without Proof? Surely, my Lord, that was never Evidence yet to convict any one; ſo that their Proof fails in both Points; for firſt, it ought to be conſidered whether Compariſon of Hands be Evidence in a Caſe of Miſdemeanor; and next, if it be Evidence, whether you will take it, that the Belief of a Man that brings nothing to compare with it, or never ſaw the Party write, but has received Letters, and ſays, this is like it, and therefore he believes it to be his Hand, be good Evidence as a Compariſon of Hands.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, they are pleaſed to mention——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant, you have been heard already, and you are not to reply upon us; or if you would, we muſt be heard firſt.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would only ſpeak to that Caſe of Sidney: My Lord, that Caſe differs from this toto Cœlo, the Writing was found in his Poſ-Poſſeſſion, in his Study; there was the Proof that nailed him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſhall ſee how we'll apply it by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, favour me a Word in this Matter: That there is ſtronger and weaker Evidence no Man doubts; but that which theſe Gentlemen ſay, that in this Caſe there is no Evidence, muſt needs be a Miſtake. If they mean that it is not ſo ſtrong an Evidence as is poſſible to be given, I agree with them, it is not: For if we had brought three or four Men that had ſeen them write this very Paper, and put their Names to it, that had been a ſtronger Evidence than this that we have given; but whether we do not give ſuch a ſort of Evidence as may induce the Jury to believe that this is their Paper, and their Hands to it, we ſubmit. They ſay, this is ſuch a Method as never was taken; but I admire that that ſhould be ſaid by Men of their Experience and Knowledge in the Law; for is there any thing more uſual, or any other Courſe taken for the Proof of Hands, than for a Witneſs to ſay, He knows the Hand of the Party very well, for he has often ſeen his Hand-writing, or received Letters from him? And if you ſhew him the Thing that you would prove to be his Hand, and he ſays, I do believe this to be his Hand, for this Reaſon, becauſe I have had other Things of his Writing: Certainly, in the Experience of any Man that has practiſed, this is an Evidence that is given every Day, and allowed for Evidence. For the Caſe of Mr. Sidney, which your Lordſhip has heard mentioned, it is certainly very oppoſite to this Purpoſe; it is inſiſted upon and pretended, That that was Evidence, becauſe it was found in his Study: But without all doubt, that would not be the Reaſon: For may not a Book of another Man's writing be found in my Study? And he inſiſted upon it in his own Defence: But the Anſwer was, That it ſhould be left as the Queſtion, Whether the Jury would believe it upon the Evidence that was given, of its being his own Hand-writing: And ſo in this Caſe, though it be not ſo ſtrong Evidence as if we had brought thoſe that had ſeen them write it; yet Evidence it is, and whether it be ſufficient to ſatisfy the Jury, may be a Queſtion; but no Queſtion, it is good Evidence in Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is a wonderful Thing, they ſay, that ſuch Evidence ſhould be offered: But truly, my Lord, it is a much ſtranger Thing to hear Mr. Serjeant Pemberton ſay, it was never done before; and then to make that Remard to your Lordſhip upon the Caſe of Sidney, which I'll put to your Lordſhip and the Court as a Caſe, and let him contradict me if he can; and then we ſhall ſee how far it goes. Sidney was indicted for High-Treaſon; and the Treaſon inſiſted upon was, a Writing ſuppoſed to be his, it being found in his Study: The Queſtion was, Whether it was his Hand-writing or no? There was no poſitive Evidence that it was his Hand-writing; there was no Evidence produc'd, that prov'd it to be his Hand-writing; for there was no one that ſwore that they ſaw him write it; there was nothing proved but the Similitude of Hands. Ay, but ſays Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, it was found in his Study. Will Mr. Serjeant Pemberton be content, that all the Libels that are found in his Study, ſhall, for that Reaſon, be adjudged to be Libels, to be his Hand-writing, and he to be a Libeller for them? I think he will make a ſevere Declaration againſt that, and he would have very good Reaſon for it: Certainly that which was Evidence in one Man's Caſe, will be Evidence in another. God forbid there ſhould be any ſuch Diſtinction in Law; and therefore I conclude, that this is good Evidence.

Mr. S. Pemberton. The Court went upon this, That it was found in his Study, and compared with Letters and Bills of Exchange produced in Court, which were ſworn to be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I was by all the Time; for I was ordered to attend him in the Tower; and therefore I can tell what paſſed as well as any body. My Lord, they proved no more as to that Libel, but only by Compariſon of Hands; they had no other Proof in that Caſe, but by comparing the Hand-writing; and that was inſiſted upon to be a mighty fallible Thing: That which they would have for us to compare, Paper with Paper, it is true, would make the Proof ſomewhat ſtronger, if we could, in ſuch a Caſe as this, be able to produce ſuch Evidence: But I appeal to your Lordſhip, and ſhall leave it to the Jury, to conſider which is better Evidence; theſe Men, that have been produced, that have been converſant with theſe Lords, and acquainted with their Hand-writing, and who (as your Lordſhip ſees) are not willing Men to give Evidence, they avoid it as much as they can; and they ſwear it all to be the Hand-writing of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as they believe; which is as far as any Man can ſwear. One ſays the whole Body of the Paper is my Lord of Canterbury's Hand, and he knows it very well; ſo that we are not upon a ſingle Name, but a whole Paper that contains many Lines; and this is as much as can be proved by any one that did not ſee the Thing written. Then, my Lord, for the reſt of the Company, the Evidence is not ſo ſtrong againſt every one of them, as it is againſt my Lord Archbiſhop; but is ſtrong enough certainly to convict them of what we accuſe them of: And pray, my Lord, what was the Objection in Sidney's Caſe, but what has been mentioned here? That any Man's Hand might be counterfeited. I remember in that Caſe, there was one Mr. Wharton, a young Gentleman, then in the Court, that undertook to the Court, that he would counterfeit that Hand preſently; and he that was to ſwear the Compariſon, ſhould not know which was the one, and which was the other; which certainly was a ſtronger Caſe than this: And I ſee ſome of the Gentlemen that are now ſtanding at the Bar, who preſſed this Matter very hard againſt Mr. Sidney, and Mr. Sidney loſt his Life upon that Compariſon of Hands; though Mr. Wharton did teſtify how eaſy a Matter it was to have a Man's Hand counterfeited, and we all know was a Man of Value and Quality; ſo there is a Precedent for Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, that never heard of this Law before. They ſay the proving of Similitude of Hands is no Evidence, unleſs you prove the actual Writing; what a Condition then will England be in, when Witneſſes are dead? Is it not the moſt common Practice that can be, to produce Witneſſes to prove ſuch Men are dead, whoſe Names are ſet as Witneſſes to Deeds; and they ſwear, they believe it to be the Hand-writing of thoſe Witneſſes? Can there be any greater Evidence of ſuch a Caſe, unleſs it be the Confeſſion of the Party himſelf? My Lord, we are now only upon reading this Paper. We have been heard, and they have been heard; now we pray the Paper may be read.

Mr. Recorder. We pray it may be read.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. If your Lordſhip pleaſe——

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be replied upon, Mr. Serjeant.

L. C. J. You have ſpoke Brother Levinz, and you have ſpoke Brother Pemberton, and I would willingly hear you what you have to ſay; but we muſt not have vying and revying, for then we ſhall have no End.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I would offer your Lordſhip ſome new Matter, which has not been touched upon yet, why it is not to be read.

L. C. J. What's that, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. All the Proof that has been given, whatſoever it amounts to, has been only of its being written, but no Proof has been given of its being written in the County of Middleſex, where the Information is laid, and the Matter is local.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt read it, and then make your Objection.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, as to the Evidence that has been given, I would only put your Lordſhip in Mind of one Caſe; and that was the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton: And the great Evidence there, was the Proof of its being his Hand-writing; and that being proved, was ſufficient to convict him of a Libel; for they could not believe Sir Samuel Barnardiſton was guilty of making Libels, unleſs they were proved to be his Hand-writing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He owned them to be his Hand-writing.

L. C. J. If you do expect my Opinion in it, whether this be good Evidence, and whether this Paper be proved or no, I am ready to give it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I deſire to be heard before the Opinion of the Court be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If there be not Proof enough to induce the Jury to believe this is their Paper, yet ſure there is enough to read it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we have not been heard to this yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, is this fit to be ſuffered?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, I am always willing to hear Mr. Finch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I hope your Lordſhip, and the Court, are not to be complemented into an unuſual Thing.

Mr. S. Pemberton. It is not a Complement, but Right and Juſtice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly it is Right and Juſtice, that there ſhould be ſome Limits put to Mens ſpeaking, that we may know when to have an End.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Sollicitor does miſtake the Right my Lord, for we deſire to be heard to this Point, as not having ſpoke to it yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me make my Objection to your being heard: For I believe you and I have been chid ſeveral Times, for ſpeaking over and over the ſame Thing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This that we now offer, is not to the ſame Point that we have ſpoken to already.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are now ſpeaking to the reading of the Paper, and you have ſpoken to it already.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If the Court will pleaſe to hear us, we have that to offer againſt the reading of the Paper, which has not been offered yet.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer, I take it, it is in the Breaſt of the Court to hear when they will and as much as they will, and whom they will; for if three or four have been heard of a Side to ſpeak what they will, the Court may very well depend upon the Learning of thoſe three or four, that they ſay what can be ſaid upon the Point, and that's enough; but if ſix or ſeven deſire to be heard over and over to the ſame Thing, certainly the Court may ſtop at three or four, if they will.

Sir. Rob. Sawyer. This is a new Objection that none of us have been heard to yet.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I offer is not contrary to the Rules of Law, nor contrary to the Practice of the Court; nor was I going any way to invade that Privilege which Mr. Sollicitor claims of making Objections, and not receiving an Anſwer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What a fine Declamation you have now made! I never claimed any ſuch Right; but I oppoſe your being heard over and over to the ſame Thing.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let's come to ſome Iſſue in this Matter.

L. C. J. I will hear you; but I would not have you introduce it with a Reflection upon the King's Counſel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if you impoſe that upon him, you ſtop his Mouth; for ſome Men cannot ſpeak without Reflection.

L. C. J. On the other Side, pray, Mr. Sollicitor, give us leave to hear fairly what they have to ſay; for I perceive he cannot offer to ſpeak, but you preſently ſtop his Mouth.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I was going to ſay, is another Matter than any thing that has been yet offered: We ſay, that this Paper ought not to be read; for that they are obliged by Law to prove their Information; and conſequently, having laid a particular Place where the Thing was done, in the Information they ought to prove that this was done in that Place. The Evidence that they have given, is of my Lords the Biſhops writing this Paper; and they have laid it to be done in Middleſex: And this, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, is local; and they muſt prove it to be written in Middleſex, where they have laid it, or elſe they fail in their Proof. This is another Objection, which as yet hath not been ſpoken to. That if there be a Proof of their Hand-writing, yet there is no Proof where that Hand was written; and therefore they are not yet got ſo far, as to have it read againſt my Lords.

Mr. At. Gen. For that Point, my Lord, we ſay, This would have been as properly ſaid after the Paper had been read, when they come to make Objections againſt our Proof, by way of Defence: And, with Submiſſion, it had been more proper then, than it is now: For what are we now doing? My Lord, we are proving that ſuch a Paper was ſubſcribed by my Lords the Biſhops; and Sir John Nicholas gives you an Account, that he had it from his Majeſty at the Council; and that certainly is in the County of Middleſex; and it will concern you to prove that it was written elſewhere.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That's very well Mr. Attorney; ſure you do not think as you ſpeak!

Mr. At. Gen. Here is a paper compoſed and written by you, that Sir John Nicholas ſays he had from his Majeſty: How he came by it, I ſuppoſe you will tell us by and by. This is your Hand-writing, that I think we have proved ſufficiently; this is found in the County of Middleſex, and you come and tell us, that we muſt prove that it was written in the County of Middleſex; and it is taken to be written where it was found, unleſs you prove the contrary.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That's pretty Doctrine indeed, and very new.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, here's an Objection made too timely: We are now upon reading of this Paper; and the Queſtion is, Whether it ſhall be read, or not be read? Surely we have given Evidence enough to induce the Court to read it; and it is another Queſtion, that will come time enough afterwards, where it was written?

L. C. J. Truly, I do not think it was proper for you to ſtand upon the Place where it was written as yet.

Mr. S. Levinz. When we are upon an Information of a Fact in Middleſex, will you hear them give Evidence of a Fact in Yorkſhire?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be driven by theſe Gentlemen; we are to be directed by the Court.

L. C. J. I think truly it is yet too early to make this Objection.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Surely, my Lord, this is our Time to oppoſe the reading of it, as not proved.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, I think you have not ſufficiently proved this Paper to be ſubſcribed by my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not to read it, Sir?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. No, not to read it; it is too ſlender a Proof for ſuch a Caſe. I grant you, in Civil Actions a ſlender Proof is ſufficient to make out a Man's Hand, by a Letter to a Tradeſman, or a Correſpondent, or the like; but in Criminal Cauſes, ſuch as this, if ſuch a Proof be allowed, where is the Safety of your Life, or any Man's Life here?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We tell you a Caſe where it was allowed; and that is Mr. Sidney's Caſe; a Caſe of Treaſon, and printed by Authority: We tell you nothing but what was done t'other Day.

L. C. J. I tell you what I ſay to it: I think truly there is Proof enough to have it read, and I am not aſhamed, nor afraid to ſay it; for I know I ſpeak with the Law. Say what you will of Criminal Caſes, and the Danger of People's Lives, there were more Danger to the Government, if ſuch Proof were not allowed to be good.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I think there is no Danger to the Government at all, in requiring good Proof againſt Offenders.

L. C. J. Here's my Lord Archbiſhop and the Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and my Lord of Ely, their Hands are proved: It is proved to be my Lord Archbiſhop's Writing by Mr. Brookes, and he proves my Lord of Ely's Hand by Compariſon, and ſo my Lord of St. Aſaph's. Now, Brother Pemberton, there's an Anſwer to your Objection, it being proved that it is all my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand. Then they come and ſay, we'll prove the Hands of the others by Compariſon; and for that they bring you Witneſſes that ſay, they have received Letters from them, and ſeen their Hand-writing ſeveral times; and comparing what they have ſeen with this very Paper, ſays the Witneſs, I do believe it to be his Hand. Can there be a greater Evidence, or a fuller?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Admit it be a full Evidence againſt my Lord Archbiſhop, what's that to the reſt? There's no Evidence againſt them.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother Pemberton, as to the Objection you make of comparing of Hands, it is an Objection indeed, I do agree; but then conſider the Inconvenience which you and Mr. Pollexfen do ſo much inſiſt upon: If a Man ſhould be accuſed by Compariſon of Hands, where is he? He is in a lamentable Caſe; for his Hand may be ſo counterfeited, that he himſelf may not be able to diſtinguiſh it. But then you do not conſider where you are on the other Side: That may be an Objection in Matters of Fact, that will have very little Weight, if compared and ſet altogether: For, on the other ſide, where ſhall the Government be, if I will make Libels, and traduce the Government with Prudence and Diſcretion, and all the Secrecy imaginable? I'll write my Libel by my ſelf, prove it as you can; that's a fatal Blot to the Government; and therefore the Caſe is not the ſame, nor is your Doctrine to paſs for current here, becauſe every Caſe depends upon its own Fact. If I take upon me to ſwear I know your Hand, the Inducements are to my ſelf, how I came to know it, ſo as to ſwear it. Knowledge depends on Circumſtances: I ſwear that I know you, but yet I may be under a Miſtake; for I can have my Knowlege of you no other Way but from the Viſibility of you, and another Man may be ſo like you, that there is a Poſſibility of my being miſtaken; but certainly, that is Evidence, good Evidence. Now here are ſeveral Gentlemen that ſwear as to my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand-writing: I do agree, as to ſome of the others, that the Evidence is not ſo ſtrong; for what that Man ſaid, that he did believe it was rather ſuch a Lord's Hand, than that which went before, or that which came after, it is of no Weight at all, and ſo ſome of the others; but it is poſitively proved againſt my Lord Archbiſhop and one or two more; ſo that that's enough to induce the reading of this Writing.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Good my Lord, let me give my Opinion.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart, Brother.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. My Lord, I think as this Caſe is, there ought to be a more ſtrong Proof; for certainly the Proof ought to be ſtronger and more certain in criminal Matters, than in civil Matters: In civil Matters, we do go upon ſlight Proof, ſuch as the Compariſon of Hands, for proving a Deed, or a Witneſs's Name, and a very ſmall Proof will induce us to read it; but in criminal Matters we ought to be more ſtrict, and require poſitive and ſubſtantial Proof, that is fitting for us to have in ſuch a Caſe; and without better Proof, I think it ought not to be read.

L. C. J. You muſt go on to ſome other Proof, Mr. Sollicitor; for the Court is divided in their Opinions about this Proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we will come to the Confeſſions of my Lords the Biſhops; and I hope that will be believed by all Mankind.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we did forbear that Evidence, and would not have proceeded this Way, if we had had fair Play on the other Side.

Sir Ro-

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, give us Leave to defend our Clients all the Ways we can: I think we do nothing but what is fair; the Court you ſee is divided, therefore we did not without Reaſon inſiſt upon it.

L. C. J. You muſt go on as you can, for they will put you upon it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Blathwayt.

[Mr. Blathwayt ſworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray hand the Writing to him.

[The Writing ſhewn to him.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you ſeen that Writing formerly, Sir?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you hear my Lord Archbiſhop ſay about that Paper?

Mr. At. Gen. And the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt we'll aſk, as to my Lord Archbiſhop; Did he own it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I believe this to be the Paper that my Lord Archbiſhop did own to be ſubſcribed by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it owned by him?

Mr. Blathwayt. On the Council-day, the 8th of this Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was it owned? becauſe we would obviate that Objection of the County.

Mr. Blathwayt. It was at the Council-Table at Whitehall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you to the Biſhop of St. Aſaph? Did he own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, all my Lords the Biſhops did own it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Name them particularly. What ſay you of the Biſhop of Ely?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the ſame manner, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Biſhop of Chicheſter?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the ſame manner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Biſhop of Bath and Wells.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Biſhop of Peterborough?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And the Biſhop of Briſtol?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So, we have proved they all owned it.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Could not this have been done at firſt, and ſaved all this Trouble?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Have you done with Mr. Blathwayt, Mr. Attorney, that we may aſk him ſome Queſtions?

Mr. At. Gen. Aſk him what you will.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray Mr. Blathwayt, upon what Occaſion did they own it? You are ſworn to tell the whole Truth: Pray tell all your Knowledge, and the whole Confeſſion that they made.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I am called here by a Subpœna to anſwer on Behalf of the King; my Lord, I am ready to do my Duty, and I beg of your Lordſhip that you would pleaſe to tell me what is my Duty; for whatſoever I ſhall anſwer, I ſhall ſpeak the Truth in.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is nothing deſired, but that you would ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I am eaſily guided by your Lordſhip what I ought to anſwer to.

L. C. J. What is it you aſk him, Brother Pemberton?

Mr. S. Pemberton. We deſire Mr. Blathwayt to tell the whole Diſcourſe that paſſed at the Council, when he ſays my Lords the Biſhops own'd this Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's a very pretty Thing indeed!

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Blathwayt, you muſt anſwer them what they aſk you, unleſs it be an enſnaring Queſtion, and that the Court will take Care of.

Mr. Blathwayt. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to aſk me any Queſtion, I ſhall readily anſwer it.

L. C. J. You muſt anſwer them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We aſk you upon what Occaſion they came to own their Hands? What Diſcourſe was made to them, and what they anſwered?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's Directions.

L. C. J. Come tell it, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, the Occaſion was this: This Paper was read in Council, and I had the Honour to read it before the King; and it having been read before his Grace the Archbiſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops, they were aſked whether they did own that Paper, and, my Lord, they did own it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, was that the firſt Time that my Lords the Biſhops came in?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I was not aſked that Queſtion.

L. C. J. What would you have, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Robert Sawyer. We would have an Account what paſſed at the Council.

L. C. J. Would you have all the Diſcourſe betwixt the Council and my Lords the Biſhops?

Mr. S. Pemberton. All that relates to their Accuſation, my Lord; their whole Confeſſion, and what was ſaid to them.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you think, Mr. Serjeant, that when we call a Witneſs, you are at Liberty to examine him to every impertinent thing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we deſire they may only aſk reaſonable and proper Queſtions.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Mr. Sollicitor, he is ſworn to anſwer, and tell the whole Truth, and that's all we aſk of him.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Sir, I will aſk you a plain Queſtion upon your Oath; Did not my Lord Archbiſhop, and the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, at firſt refuſe to own it, or to anſwer whether it were their Hands or not?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is not a fair Queſtion Sir Robert Sawyer; 'tis a leading Queſtion.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then I ask you in ſhort, What did they refuſe? I am ſure that is a fair Queſtion; for God forbid that any ſhould hinder the King's Evidence from telling Truth.

Sir Robert Sawyer. And God forbid that half Evidence ſhould condemn any Man.

L. C. J. God forbid the Truth ſhould be concealed any way.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, Sir, when they were firſt asked, whether that was their Hands or not, what Anſwer did they give?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have begg'd the Favour of my Lords the Judges to tell me what I am to anſwer, and what Queſtions are proper for me to anſwer to.

L. C. J. You muſt anſwer any Queſtions that are not enſnaring Queſtions.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, you are upon your Oath to teſtify the Truth.

Mr. Blath-

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I am not acquainted with the Methods of Law; I desire my Lords the Judges would instruct me.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Answer to the Question that they ask you.

L. C. J. We observe what they ask you; we'll take Care that they ask you nothing but what they should.

Mr. Blathwayt. I desire the Question may be repeated.

Mr. S. Pemberton. When they were first asked if it were their Hands, what Answer did they give the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. His Grace the Archbishop and my Lords the Bishops, at first did not immediately answer whether the Paper were theirs or no.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What did they say?

Mr. Blathwayt. They said, they did humbly hope if they were put to answer, no Advantage should be taken against them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What did they say farther at that Time concerning his Majesty's Pleasure?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's a leading Question, Mr. Serjeant Pemberton; you cannot leave your Way of leading Witnesses.

Mr. S. Pemberton. It is a very strange thing; if we ask a Question that's general, that's excepted to; if we ask any Question in particular, then they find Fault with us, that it is a leading Question; so that we can never ask a Question that will please them. Pray Mr. Blathwayt, what did they say concerning the King's Pleasure, whether they would answer if the King commanded them?

Mr. S. Trinder. How can it be material what they said?

L. C. J. It is material that it should be asked, and that it should be answered.

Mr. S. Levinz. You are to tell the whole Truth, Sir. Pray tell us what did my Lords the Bishops say about submitting to the King's Pleasure?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that to the Purpose?

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Sollicitor, his Oath is to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, and therefore he must answer my Question.

Mr. S. Pemberton. You are mighty loth, Mr. Sollicitor, to let us hear the Truth: I would not willingly lead him in any thing; and I cannot see that this is any leading Question, unless his Oath be against Law, which says he is to tell the whole Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I do beg your Lordship's Favour of a Word in this Thing. It is certain, if they ask any thing that shall take off the Evidence that was first given, that it is not true, I cannot oppose it; but if they ask Questions only to enflame, and to possess People with foolish Notions and strange Conceits, that is not to the Fact that we are now trying ——

Sir Robert Sawyer. 'Tis only to have the Truth out that we do it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is no body here that will be enflamed, Mr. Attorney; I have asked a fair Question, the Court has ruled it so.

Mr. Blathwayt. I shall readily answer any Question that the Court thinks fit.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Sir, by the Oath you have taken you are to tell the whole Truth.

L. C. J. Is he to tell you all that was done at the Council-Board that Day?

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, my Lord, only what passed there about my Lords the Bishops Confession, the whole of that Matter.

Mr. Blathwayt. There has been so much said between the asking of the Question and this Time, that I desire it may be repeated, that I may know what to answer to.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I ask you in short, Sir, What did my Lords the Bishops say at the Time of their appearing in Council concerning the King's Pleasure, whether they should answer or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. The first Time my Lords the Bishops came into the Council, they were asked the Question whether they did own that Paper; they did immediately answer, They humbly hoped, as they stood there as Criminals, his Majesty would not take the Advantage against them, but however they would obey his Majesty's Command.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Were they commanded to withdraw?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes; thereupon they were commanded to withdraw, which they did.

Mr. S. Pemberton. When they came in again, what Questions were asked them?

Mr. Blathwayt. They came in several times, more than twice, I have reason to remark this, that they did so: Do you mean the second Time, Sir?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. The second Time they seemed unwilling to own the Paper.

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what did they do the third Time?

Mr. S. Pemberton. But first let us know what more was done the second Time.

Sir George Treby. How was that Unwillingness of theirs overcome?

Mr. S. Pemberton. When they express'd their Unwillingness, what did they say farther?

Mr. Blathwayt. If I remember right, they said as they did the first Time, they humbly hoped his Majesty would not take Advantage against them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then what did they say the third Time?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray were they asked whether they published it?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the publishing it, it was laid before them, and I think they were asked the Question, whether they published it?

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what Answer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. I remember his Grace, and my Lords the Bishops, did not own they had published it, but they denied it.

Sir George Treby. After they discovered their Unwillingness the second Time, what followed next?

Mr. Blathwayt. They did withdraw after the second Attendance.

Mr. S. Levinz. But what was said to them? Was that all that was said to them the second Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. I have said two Things already, that they were unwilling to answer, and that they denied the publishing.

L. C. J. This is a strange Usage of a Witness, to put him to tell every thing that was said.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would ask you this Question, Sir. When they came in the second Time, whether they did desire to know if it were his Majeſty's Command that they ſhould own it?

L. C. J. That I muſt not permit you to ask, Brother; that is to lead the Witneſs.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, he will not anſwer general Queſtions; I have asked him all along general Queſtions, and I cannot yet get an Anſwer from him to them.

Mr. Blathwayt. I am ready to anſwer any Queſtions that the Court thinks I ſhould anſwer; I am not backward to anſwer according to my Duty.

L. C. J. Let one of you ask a Queſtion at a time, and not chop in one upon another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In all the Trials that ever I have been in, in all the Caſes of Criminals, the King's Witneſſes uſed to be treated with Reſpect, and not to be fallen upon in this manner.

L. C. J. He ſhall be ſure to have all Reſpect paid him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is in Office under the King.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I do not think Mr. Blathwayt does believe I would ſhew him any Diſreſpect more than he would ſhew me.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg one Word, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, what do you ſay?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I ſay I do oppoſe the asking of this Queſtion; not but that every Man has a Right to croſs-examine a Witneſs, but if they ask ſuch a Queſtion, let them tell us what Uſe they would make of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney General, for that Matter ——

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I'll give Mr. Attorney an Anſwer.

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I was ſpeaking to Mr. Attorney, and pray hear me; I will not ask you what Uſe you'll make of the Queſtion you ask, but do you ask fair and regular Queſtions, and I'll take Care you ſhall have an Anſwer to them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I will deal plainly with the Court, and tell you what Uſe we intend to make of our Queſtion. If they anſwered under a Promiſe from his Majeſty, that it ſhould not be given in Evidence againſt them, I hope they ſhall not take Advantage of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ſay that is a very unmannerly Queſtion; but however it ſhall be anſwered.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Why ſo, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is to put ſomething upon the King, which I dare hardly name.

L. C. J. We do not know what Anſwer will be made to it yet, but it does look like an odd kind of Queſtion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Men will be ſo preſſing, I, for the King, deſire the Queſtion may be entred.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What do you mean, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know very well what I mean, Sir; I deſire the Queſtion may be recorded in Court.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Record what you will, I am not afraid of you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you afraid of the Law?

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, nor of you neither.

L. C. J. Pray be quiet, Gentlemen.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, anſwer whether there was any Promiſe made to my Lords the Biſhops from the King.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I take the Queſtion to be, whether the King was pleaſed to make my Lords the Biſhops any Promiſe of not taking Advantage of what Anſwer they made.

Mr. At. Gen. That is the Queſtion.

Mr. Blathwayt. As that Queſtion is ſtated, there was no ſuch made.

L. C. J. Look you, he tells you there was no ſuch Promiſe made. There is an Anſwer to your Queſtion, Brother.

Mr. S. Levinz. We made no ſuch Queſtion; but the Queſtion I would ask is this, ——

Mr. Sol. Gen. For the Satisfaction of the Court repeat what you ſaid juſt now, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. I take the Queſtion to be, whether the King made any Promiſe to my Lords the Biſhops, that no Advantage ſhould be taken of what they ſaid, and I ſay, the King made no ſuch Promiſe.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We did not ask you the Queſtion, but we only told you what Uſe we would have made of another Queſtion.

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Blathwayt, I ſee you can very well diſtinguiſh what Queſtions are to be anſwered. I ask you in ſhort, upon your Oath, when they were firſt called in, what was ſaid to them, and what was anſwered by them?

L. C. J. Here has been a great deal of Wrangling, but this is a fair Queſtion, and may reduce us to Order again. Tell us over again from the Beginning, what paſſed when my noble Lords the Biſhops came in the firſt, ſecond, and third Time, when they were examined about this Paper?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I ſhall comply with your Lordſhip's Directions. I apprehend I am to anſwer together concerning the firſt, ſecond, and third Comings of my Lords the Biſhops into the Council. The firſt Time, as I ſaid before, my Lords the Biſhops were unwilling to own the Paper, and did ſay, they humbly hoped his Majeſty would not take Advantage againſt them, but that they were ready to obey his Command. The ſecond Time they were called in they did repeat it again, that they hoped his Majeſty would not take Advantage againſt them: After that there was mention made of the Paper being publiſhed, I remember my Lords the Biſhops ſaid they had not publiſhed it ——

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that all?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have no Mind to hear all, I think.

L. C. J. How do you expect to be anſwered your Queſtions, if you interrupt them? Go on, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I ſaid laſt, that they having prayed the King that no Advantage might be taken againſt them for what they ſhould ſay, there was mention made of the Paper its being publiſhed, and my Lords the Biſhops did ſay they had not publiſhed it; and his Grace my Lord Archbiſhop ſaid it was written with his own Hand, and that he had not made Uſe of his Clerk.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that all you can remember that paſſed at that Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. This is the Subſtance of what I remember.

L. C. J. Was this the third Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. No, that was the ſecond Time, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. If there be not ſome Order in this Evidence, my Lord, we ſhall not be able to obſerve any thing upon it. —— Pray what was done afterwards?

Mr. Blath-

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellor, upon their coming in, did require them to anſwer, whether they did own that Paper or not; my Lords the Biſhops did own the Paper.

Mr. Pollexfen. Do you remember in what Words or Expreſſions, as near as you can, they did own it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a Practice to be endured?

Mr. Finch. Why, he may apprehend and take that to be an owning of it, which was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has not he ſworn the Manner of it, and almoſt the very Words?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We deſire nothing of him but that he will tell us what Words they ſaid when they owned it.

Mr. Blathwayt. It was the third Time that they came in that they owned it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Why, what did they ſay?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellor required them to anſwer, whether they owned the Paper or no.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What did they ſay then?

Mr. Blathwayt. As near as I can remember, his Grace and the Lords the Biſhops did own the Paper.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What Words did they own it in? Tell the Manner of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What's this to the Purpoſe?

Mr. Finch. Mr. Blathwayt, did you take Notes of what paſſed there?

Mr. Blathwayt. I anſwer, Sir, I did not take Notes, for I attended the King at his Elbow, and did not take Notes. Mr. Finch, you know the Manner of the Council in ſuch Caſes very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we aſk you for the King, becauſe they ſhall not enflame People by ſuch an Expreſſion, In what Words did they own it, if you can remember?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have declared my Memory as well as I can; whether the other Clerks come to be examined, if they can tell any more, let them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we will have no Diſcourſe to enflame the World: Did the King promiſe or declare that no Advantage ſhould be taken of their Confeſſion?

L. C. J. I would aſk him that Queſtion, What was the Manner that my Lord Chancellor expreſs'd himſelf in to them, when they came in the third Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. As ſoon as my Lord Chancellor had required them to declare whether they owned that Paper, as well as I remember, his Grace took the Paper in his Hand, and it was handed over, or ſhewed to my Lords the Biſhops, and they owned and declared ſo, juſt as if they ſhould lay it before the Court, juſt ſo. I do not recollect my ſelf of all the Circumſtances that paſſed; I only can tell you the Subſtance.

Holding it forth to the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not remember what they ſaid particularly.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Sollicitor, I know well enough what they mean by the Queſtion; I know they would fain poſſeſs the World with a Belief that there was ſuch a Promiſe made them, and yet they are proſecuted notwithſtanding that Promiſe: Therefore I do aſk you, Mr. Blathwayt, and for the King's Honour I muſt aſk it: Did the King make any Promiſe or Declaration, that no Advantage ſhould be taken, or Uſe made of it?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King did not any make Promiſe or Declaration that no Advantage ſhould be taken, or Uſe made of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He only put them upon it, whe-they did own it or not.

Mr. At. Gen. I aſk you upon your Oath, Did my Lord Archbiſhop own it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, he did, and ſaid he writ it with his own Hand, and would not let his Clerk write it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he own the whole to be his Hand-writing, or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, he did.

Mr. At. Gen. Did every one of the Biſhops own their Names ſubſcribed to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we pray now that it may be read.

L. C. J. I ſuppoſe now they will be content it ſhould be read.

Mr. Finch. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to favour me one Word, I think it cannot yet be read; and my Objection is this——

L. C. J. I thought you had made all your Objections before, as to the reading of it.

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, ſpare us. Here are two Parts of this Information; the one is for Conſulting and Conſpiring to diminiſh the King's Royal Perogative, and for that End they did make and write a ſeditious Libel: The other Part is, that they did publiſh this ſeditious Libel. We are hitherto upon the firſt Part, the Making and Writing of it. Both Parts are local; until they have proved the Making and Writing of it to have been in Middleſex, it is not Evidence upon this Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have it proved it written and publiſhed in Middleſex.

Mr. S. Pemberton. The Contrivance and Writing of a Libel is in itſelf penal, and they may be puniſhed for it, if they be found guilty. Now if they could give an undeniable Evidence concerning the publiſhing of it, that is nothing to this Point; but if they ſhould not give ſuch Evidence, or any Evidence at all of the Publication, yet if it be proved that it was written and contrived by them, they would be guilty for ſo much, if it be a Libel; and this we ſay is local, as well as all the reſt: And therefore we inſiſt upon it, that the Writing and Contriving muſt as well be proved to be in Middleſex, as the Publication, for all is local.

L. C. J. There is no Publiſhing yet proved.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is true, my Lord, here is nothing of a Publication yet, with your Lordſhip's Favour; for their Anſwer to his Majeſty in Councll was, that they did not publiſh it: All that is ſaid yet is, that they owned the Paper to be their Hands. My Lord, does the owning of that own that it was written in the County of Middleſex? or that it was contrived or made there? No ſurely, upon this Evidence the Place is clearly at large. My Lord, this might have been done in the County of Surry, or Somerſet, or any other County: Their Information is, that they did conſult and contrive to diminiſh the King's Prerogative at Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex, and there they did write, and cauſe to be written, this Libel, and there they did publiſh it. Suppoſe it ſhould be granted that it is proved that this is the Archbiſhop's Hand-writing, and theſe are their Names to it, is there any one Evidence that any thing of this was done in Middleſex? And, my Lord, that is the Thing they are to prove.

Mr. Sommers. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, all Matters of Crime are ſo local, that if it be not proved to be done in the County where it is laid, the Party accuſed is as innocent as if he never had done the Thing; and, with Submiſſion, it is the very Point of the Information, that it be proved they are guilty of the Fact in the Place where it is laid to be done.

L. C. J. This is the ſame Thing over and over again; but I am content to hear you, Mr. Sommers, at any Time: I have told you my Opinion about reading of the Paper already, if you'll have it again you may.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, good my Lord, ſpare us before it be read.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Mr. Pollexfen, you have not yet had the Directions of the Court for the reading of it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, when this Paper is read, which we pray it may be, we will anſwer their Objections, but at preſent we ſay they are out of Time.

Mr. Pollexfen. Good Lord, what a ſtrange thing is this! We object againſt the reading of it, and you'll anſwer us after it is read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, we have done enough to prove that this is a Paper owned by them in the County of Middleſex, and we pray it may be read.

L. C. J. Truly I am of the ſame Mind I was before, that it is too ſoon to make the Objection, and that the Paper ought to be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ſubmit to your Rule.

Mr. Pollexfen. If it be the Will of the Court, I have nothing to ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. My Lord, the Contrivance and Publication are both Matters of Fact, and upon Iſſue joined, the Jurors are Judges of the Fact, as it is laid in the Information; but how can they be Judges of a Matter of Fact done in another County? and it muſt be preſumed, in favour of Innocence, not to be done in this County, but in another, except they prove it.

Mr. At. Gen. We are not yet ripe for arguing that Point.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are ſpeaking only to the Court now for the reading of this Paper, and the Jury are not Judges of that, whether the Paper ought to be read or no; that is meerly a Matter of Law, and under the Direction of the Court; and therefore I pray, ſince it is now in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether that Paper ſhould be read, that you would pleaſe to order it to be read.

L. C. J. I can only give you my own Opinion, let my Brothers give theirs.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. There is no body againſt the reading of it, my Lord. I ſuppoſe my Brother Powell is not againſt its being read.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But they ſay the King's Counſel muſt make it out firſt, that the writing of it, and the conſpiring about it, was in the County of Middleſex, or there can be no Judgment, ſo much as to read it.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if the Objection be ſaved to us, we ſhall not ſo much oppoſe the reading it, only we would not be ſurprized in Point of Time.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Nay, if they conſent to the reading, we have no Reaſon to hinder it.

L. C. J. Brother, I believe they know well enough what they have to ſay for their Clients; let the Paper be read.

Clerk reads. The humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury ——

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Read the whole Petition; pray, my Lord, that the whole may be read. Read the Top firſt, Sir, to whom it was directed.

L. C. J. Read the whole.

Clerk reads.

To the KING's moſt Excellent MAJESTY.

The humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Biſhops of that Province, now preſent with him, in Behalf of themſelves and others of their abſent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their reſpective Dioceſes,

Humbly ſheweth,

THAT the great Averſeneſs they find in themſelves to the diſtributing and publiſhing in all their Churches your Majeſty's late Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, proceedeth neither from any want of Duty and Obedience to your Majeſty (our holy Mother, the Church of England, being both in her Principles and in her conſtant Practice unqueſtionably Loyal; and having, to her great Honour, been more than once publickly acknowledged to be ſo by your Gracious Majeſty) nor yet from any Want of due Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhall be thought fit, when that Matter ſhall be conſidered and ſettled in Parliament and Convocation; but amongſt many other Conſiderations, from this eſpecially, becauſe that Declaration is founded upon ſuch a Diſpenſing Power as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672, and in the Beginning of your Majeſty's Reign; and is a Matter of ſo great Moment and Conſequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience, ſo far make themſelves Parties to it, as the Diſtribution of it all over the Nation, and the ſolemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's Houſe, and in the Time of his Divine Service, muſt amount to, in common and reaſonable Conſtruction.

Your Petitioners therefore moſt humbly and earneſtly beſeech your Majeſty, that you will be graciouſly pleaſed not to inſiſt upon their Diſtributing and Reading your Majeſty's ſaid Declaration:

And your Petitioners (as in Duty bound) ſhall ever pray, &c.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall leave our Evidence here, and hear what they can object to it.

Mr. Finch. Have you no farther Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. We leave it here for the preſent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Gentlemen of the Jury deſire to ſee the Petition.

L. C. J. Shew it them.

[The Petition was ſhewn to the Jury.]

Mr.

Mr. Finch. But will you give no further Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. I tell you, we'll leave it here, till we ſee what you ſay to it.

Mr. Finch. There is nothing that we ſhould ſay any thing to.

Mr. At. Gen. Make your Advantage of it; if it be nothing, we can have nothing.

L. C. J. What ſay you for the Defendants, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, in ſhort, we ſay, that hitherto they have totally failed; for they have not proved any Fact done by us in Middleſex, nor have they proved any Publication at all.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. They have given no Evidence of any thing.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen, ſpeak one at once, and then we ſhall underſtand the better what we hear.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we ſay, they have given no Evidence of the Conſpiring, Writing, or Publiſhing in Middleſex: Nay, as to the Publication, there is none at all proved.

Mr. Finch. Here is no Proof of any Publication, nor of the Writing or Making in Middleſex; ſo that there is no Proof at all againſt my Lords the Biſhops.

L. C. J. You heard what Mr. Blathwayt ſaid; they owned it in Middleſex.

Mr. Finch. That is not a Publication ſure, or any Evidence where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Suppoſe, my Lord, that I own in Middleſex, that I robb'd a Man in Yorkſhire, will that make me guilty in Middleſex?

Mr. At. Gen. But if you had ſtole a Horſe in Yorkſhire, and had that Horſe in Middleſex, and owned it, I doubt it would go hard with you in Middleſex.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant thinks he has put a very home Compariſon; but we ſhall ſhew how little ſignificant it is by and by.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, in the firſt Place, we inſiſt upon it; here is no Proof in this Caſe at all, as to the doing of any Fact at all in the County of Middleſex: In the next Place, this Information and Petition do not agree; for they have brought an Information, and ſet forth, that my Lords the Biſhops, under pretence of a Petition, did make a Libel, and they have ſet forth no Petition at all; all the petitionary Part is omitted. If I will take part of a Man's Words, and not the Whole, and make a Libel of that Part, certainly that is very diſingenuous and injurious: For that Part that I omit may alter the Senſe of the whole. They here ought to ſet forth the Petition, with the Direction to the King, and the Prayer at the End, whereby it will appear what the whole is, and what was deſired by their Petition. But, my Lord, to make this Matter a little more clear, whatſoever they ſay of its being my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand, we ſhall prove that if it were ſo, it could not be done in Middleſex; for we ſhall prove that my Lord of Canterbury hath not been in Middleſex for three or four Months before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray let the Information be read, then you will ſee the Variance.

Mr. At. Gen. There is not the latter Part, we acknowledge, in the Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There may be, and is, a ſic continetur, and there is no Objection in that at all.

L. C. J. It is ſic continetur, and that's———

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The Truth of it is, this Information hath made a very deformed Thing of it, has left it neither Head nor Tail: They ſtile it a Petition, but it is without any Direction to any body, and without any Prayer for any thing; and without thoſe two it cannot be told what it is.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Sir Robert Sawyer, if I miſtake not, it is ſaid only under pretence of a Petition.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. There may be more in the Paper than in the Information; and if all were in, one Part might explain another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So there may be more; and I wonder to hear that Objection from Sir Robert Sawyer, who has exhibited ſo many Informations for Libels in Pieces taken out of Books.

Mr. Recorder. All that we alledge in the Information is contained in the Paper, and that's enough for our Purpoſe; we are not bound to recite the whole.

L. C. J. Indeed I think it is no material Objection at all.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Truly I think it is very material in this Caſe: Here's a Petition that is preferred to his Majeſty; take the whole Petition together, and, ſay they, it is a reaſonable Petition; chop off the Direction and the Prayer, and then here's nothing but the Body of a Petition, without Beginning or Ending; or if a Man will ſay any thing concerning the King, and do it by way of Petition to himſelf, that will alter the Caſe mightily from a Paper ſpread about, that ſhould contain only the Body of the Petition, and nothing elſe.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray read that Part of the Information.

Mr. Pollexfen. If ſo be there be an Information, and that Information charges a Man with a pretended Petition, and the Evidence comes and proves a Petition both Top and Bottom, that is not the Petition in the Information: for that lacking the proper Parts of a Petition, is called a pretended Petition, but that which is proved, is proved a real one.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. My Lord, there is nothing in this Objection, as this Record hath it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give us Leave to ſtate it on our Side, as they have done on theirs, and it will be the better underſtood upon the reading: I hope it is not come to that Paſs that they would have it. Sure theſe Gentlemen have not forgot altogether the Practice that has been ſo frequent in this Court: If there be an Information for a Libel, is there any thing more frequent, than only to recite the material Part? Sure they may ſay, in ſuch a Libel is contained ſo and ſo, without ſetting forth the whole Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many Trials have we had here, wherein there has been only a Clauſe taken out of a Book? as particularly, Baxter's Bible, and Johnſon's Book, and all by Virtue of a ſic continetur.

Mr. Finch. That comes not up to our Objection here.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Let us hear the Record read, and then we can judge of it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We pray, Sir, the Information may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. We are here upon all Occaſions chopp'd in upon, and I do not know how they come to take this Liberty; I am ſure other People had it not in former Times, when theſe Gentlemen ſtood where we do: As ſoon as ever we offer to ſpeak, preſently there are two or three upon us.

L. C. J. Let me hear them, Mr. Attorney, make their Objection, and let the Record be read, and that will anſwer that Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as for that other thing, they come and tell us, we have ſet forth a Petition; we ſay no ſuch thing; in the Information we ſay, you compoſed a certain Libel pretenſu Petitionis, in which are contained ſuch and ſuch Things; and now I pray let it be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little firſt: Take the Information as we have laid it, and I believe there are twenty Precedents that I could give you in an Inſtant of late Days Practice: So was the Information againſt Mr. Baxter; ſo was the Information againſt Mr. Johnſon; ſo was the Information againſt Dr. Eades; and ſo was the Information againſt Sir Samuel Barnardiſton. They are all in this Form, ſic continetur; ſo that as for that Matter, we are well enough. But here's another thing, ſay they, You do not ſet out the Petition; we ſay, it is a Libel, and it is not the Name we rely on, but there is ſuch a Libel; ſo we in our Information call it: If it be not a Libel, then are they very innocent; and whether it be or no, is now in Judgment before your Lordſhip; but if it be as we ſay, then it is not the ſpeaking ill Things in the Body of a Petition, and then giving it a good Title, and concluding it with a good Prayer at the End of it: 'Tis not, I ſay, any of theſe that will ſweeten this Crime, nor alter, nor alleviate it at all; if there be that which is ſeditious and libellous in the Body of it, call the Paper what you will, and ſmooth it with a Preamble, or a Concluſion, that will not make it any thing leſs a Libel; theſe Things are plain and manifeſt. We ſay there is ſuch a Thing done, a Libel made, pretenſu Petitionis, do you call it what you will; but we ſay, theſe, and theſe Things are a Libel upon the King and the Government: We have proved our Caſe, we have proved there was ſuch a Paper under their Hands; we have proved it was owned in Middleſex, and then we are in your Judgment, whether this be not Evidence ſufficient to convict the Defendants.

L. C. J. But they do make an Objection about the writing and contriving of it, that it is not proved to be in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, our Information does not go with a continued Clauſe, that they framed a Libel, ut ſequitur in hæc verba, but we only ſay, they made a Libel pretenſu Petitionis; and then we ſay, In quo quidem Libello continetur, ſo and ſo; we do not tie ourſelves up to a particular Recital of all that's in the Paper.

L. C. J. Read the Record.

Clerk. Reads.

Ipſi iidem Willielmus Archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſis (and the reſt) dicto decimo octavo die Maii, Anno Regni Dicti Domini Regis nunc quarto ſupradicto vi & armis, &c. apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto illicite malitioſe ſeditioſe & ſcandaloſe quoddam falſum fictum pernitioſum & ſeditioſum Libellum in ſcriptis de eodem Domino Rege & Regali Declaratione & Ordine prædictis pretenſu Petitionis fabricaverunt compoſuerunt & ſcripſerunt & fabricari componi & ſcribi cauſaverunt, & eundem falſum fictum malitioſum pernitioſum & ſeditioſum Libellum per ipſos prædictos Willielmum Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem (and the reſt) manibus ſuis propriis reſpectivè ſubſcriptum die anno & loco ultimo mentionatis in præſentia dicti Domini Regis nunc vi & armis, &c. publicaverunt & publicari cauſaverunt; in quo quidem falſo fictо malitioſo pernitioſo & ſeditioſo Libello continetur. The humble Petition of, &c.——

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is quite another thing; that which is produced from that which is in the Information, by this leaving out a Part; for here is the Prayer omitted, and the Direction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I think there is nothing in the Caſe, but this mighty Objection of the County; and, ſays Mr. Serjeant Levinz, if my Countryman confeſſes in this County, that he ſtole a Horſe in Yorkſhire, you ſhall not try him in London, but in Yorkſhire, becauſe, by his own Confeſſion, the Fact is in another County.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I did not put the Caſe ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But take the Fact of the Caſe as it is here: My Lord, the Biſhops come in Middleſex and own this Paper; my Lord Archbiſhop owns it to be his Writing, and the reſt of the Biſhops own their Hands: If they had done as Mr. Serjeant's Yorkſhire-man did, and ſaid, we own we did this, but it was in the County of York, then it would have been like the Caſe that theſe Gentlemen put; but here we are in a plain Caſe of another Nature: My Lord Archbiſhop comes here in Middleſex, and owns that he writ the Paper, the other Biſhops they ſigned it: Now it does lie certainly in their Knowledge where this was done, and they ſhould have declared then; but they have owned it as their Paper, and the ſigning and writing of it, which is enough for us.

Mr. Finch. I own this to be my Paper, therefore I writ it in the County of Middleſex: Is that a Conſequence? I am very glad they are no better at their Inferences.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They have owned the Thing in Middleſex that we inſiſt upon, and they have not owned it with any Qualifications: If they had ſaid, it was done in another County, then you muſt have taken it to be as they ſaid it; then if they do not diſtinguiſh the Place of the Fact, your Lordſhip can only take it to be where they owed it; it would be ſuppoſed to be done in that Place; for when they owned the Fact, it will be ſuppoſed, if they do not ſay where it was done, that it was done where they owned it, becauſe the King can't tell where it was done; but the Evidence comes out of their own Mouths, they may give Satisfaction where it was done, for they know it; and till that be done, the Suppoſition is againſt them, that it was done in the Place where they owned it; and that is a plain Caſe, whereſoever a Man is to ſpeak of his own Fact. Indeed, if I publiſh the Writing of another Perſon which is libellous, then there muſt be a particular Proof of the Place, becauſe it is not my own Fact; but if thoſe Lords publiſh a Libel that they make themſelves, it is their own Knowledge, and in their own Power to tell where it was done, becauſe it is their own Act and Deed. It is true, if my Lords had publiſhed a Paper that was contrived by ſome of their Counſel, it had been ſome Excuſe, and they muſt only have ſuffered for that Publication in the Place where it was done; but they are here for writing this they have owned in this County, and therefore it lies upon them to prove it done elſewhere. There is another Objection, my Lord, made, that here is no Evidence of a Publication. My Lord, I take it to be a Publication in itſelf: Is it poſſible for a Man to write a Libel? to ſet his Name? and part with it? and it coming to the Hands of the King, that this is not a Publication? It is not their

their ſaying, we did not publiſh it, that will excuſe them; for can there be a greater Publication in itſelf than this, when Men have ſet their Hands to it, and owned their Names? What makes the Fact in this Caſe? If a Deed be denied to be factum of ſuch a one, what is the Proof of it, but ſetting the Hand and Seal, and the Delivery? There is owning the Paper, and ſetting their Hands is a Publication in itſelf, and therefore they cannot make any ſuch Objection. My Lord, if there were Occaſion, we have Authorities enough to this Purpoſe, and we will give them Scope enough if they will argue this Matter; and if they have any Evidence, we deſire to hear what they can ſay to it.

Mr. At. Gen. As for this Matter of Fact, my Lord, if I take it right, they do not controvert the Publiſhing, but, ſay they, pray make it out, where it was written or compoſed. I confeſs, this would be a Buſineſs worth the while, for all Perſons that act in this Manner, and are concerned in making of Libels, to underſtand for their Advantage. No Man doubts in the Matter of Treaſon, but it is local: Then put the Caſe a Man is found in Middleſex with a treaſonable Paper in his Pocket; I do not make a Compariſon, as if this was ſuch a Paper, I hope I am not ſo underſtood; but I only put it as a Caſe, and that the Law is ſo, is beyond all Controverſy; then the Man is indicted here in Middleſex, for framing and compoſing ſuch a treaſonable Libel, and he comes to be tried, and, ſays he, pray prove where I made and compoſed it; for though you found it in my Pocket, in the County of Middleſex, yet I might do it in the County of York; and upon my Word, this had been a very good Defence for Mr. Sidney, who was indicted, convicted, and attainted, for making a treaſonable Paper which was found in his Study; might not he have put the ſame Objection? Might not Mr Sidney have ſaid (it was great Pity he did not underſtand it) pray prove where I did it, for I did it elſewhere than in this County——

Mr. Sol. Gen. He did ſay it, I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I would not hear any Anſwer given to this for it would make the King in a very woful Caſe: Here is a Paper that is found in the County of Middleſex, and this is there owned by you to be written and ſubſcribed by you; pray do you prove it, that it was written elſewhere.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we will do it, we will be governed by Mr. Attorney for once.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We will prove that my Lord Archbiſhop was not in Middleſex in ſeven Months before; and truly I think Mr. Attorney's Caſe of a Paper found about a Man, or in his Cuſtody, will not come up to our Caſe; for was this Paper found about us? ſurely that is not pretended.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Your Lordſhip ſees by the very Frame of the Petition, that this Petition, which they call a Libel, was made after the King's Order concerning reading this Declaration. Now we ſhall prove that my Lord Archbiſhop, whoſe Hand-writing they prove this to be, was not out from Lambeth-houſe in two Months before, nor till he was before the Council.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Which was long after that Time when it was made.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So that this cannot be written in the County of Middleſex.

Call Francis Nicholls.

[Mr. Nicholls was ſworn.]

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Do you remember the 18th of May laſt?

Mr. Nicholls. Yes, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray how was it with my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury at that Time, and before that, did he go abroad?

Mr. Nicholls. My Lord, I am very ſure that my Lord his Grace of Canterbury, whom I have ſerved in his Bed-chamber theſe ſeven Years, never ſtirred out of the Gate of Lambeth-houſe ſince Michaelmas laſt.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Till when, Mr. Nicholls?

Mr. Nicholls. Not till the Time he was ſummoned before the Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Now I hope we have given them a full Proof that it could not be in Middleſex.

Call Thomas Smith.

[Mr. Smith. was not examined.]

Mr. Finch. Truly, my Lord, I think that what we have proved, or what Proof we further offer of my Lord of Canterbury's not being in Middleſex for ſo long a Time, is ex abundanti, and we need it not; for with humble Submiſſion in Point of Law, it is incumbent upon them that are to prove the Charge in the Information, to prove where it was done; becauſe the Locality of it is Part of the Thing, they ought to prove it. In its Nature it is local, there is a Place aſſigned in the Information, and unleſs they prove it was done in the Place that they have laid, they have not proved the Charge in the Information. Now, my Lord, they have not made Proof of that, and for Proof of Publication, I think they have offered none to your Lordſhip; they never did call it ſo yet, and truly I never did hear or know that the owning of their Hands at the Council-Table was a Publication of a Libel: It is owning the Writing, but it is not an owning where the Writing was made; but where it was written, and where it was made, is of Neceſſity to be proved. Before the Charge upon a Record, in a Court of Juſtice, can be ſaid to be made out, it is a local Charge, and in Juſtice, the Locality muſt be proved, or the Information fails. My Lord, they have offered no Proof to it, and they have not yet gone to the ſecond Part of the Information; for as to the Publication of it, there is not a Tittle of Proof offered, but only the owning of their Hands upon their Examination at the Council, and no Man did ever think that the anſwering a Queſtion, and owning a Paper at the Council-Table, upon a Queſtion put by the King himſelf, was a Publication of a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. Pray, my Lord, hear me a Word to that: Though the Thing be never ſo local, yet there muſt be ſome Place where a Thing that was done, was done. Then if nothing elſe appears but what was done in Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, unleſs they ſhew the contrary, that muſt be the very Place where it was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is a great deal of Prevarication in this Matter, and I would obſerve to your Lordſhip how they do uſe the Court ill in it: Pray, my Lord, what is it we are upon? We are proving that theſe ſeven Lords, the Biſhops, ſigned this Paper; and I think we have proved it ſufficiently out of their own Mouths: But, ſay they, it was not ſigned in the County of Middleſex, but in the County of Surry. All this is but Imagination, and they would have the Court

Court to imagine it too: For how do they prove it? They would have your Lordſhip and the Jury believe, that it was ſigned elſewhere, becauſe my Lord Archbiſhop has not been out of his Houſe in ſome Months before: It is all but Inference, and Argument, and Imagination. But ſtill, Gentlemen, do you anſwer what I objected to you? Does it not lie in their Power to ſhew where it was ſigned? Here are ſix more, beſides the Archbiſhop, where was it ſigned by them? Here are ſix of the Biſhops, that it does not appear where they ſigned it; but they confeſs at Whitehall, in Middleſex, that they did ſet their Hands.——

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Ay, they did ſo, and what then?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, and ay too; if they did ſo, the Preſumption and common Intendment upon ſuch Evidence is, that it was done in the Place where it was owned; and the rather, for that Reaſon that I ſaid before, that it lies in their Knowledge; and therefore it is incumbent upon them to prove, that it was not in the County of Middleſex: So that this Objection I take rather to be an Invention of the Counſel than the Truth of the Fact, becauſe they that can make this out, do not. And as to what they ſay of my Lord Archbiſhop, that he has not been out of Doors for ſo long, who can prove ſuch a Thing? Certainly my Lord was able to come, for any thing that appears; he has been here twice, and he was able to come to the Council-Board: But when all is done, my Lord Archbiſhop is certainly able to put this Matter out of Doubt; for he may eaſily prove it, if the Fact be ſo; and that will ſatisfy the Court and every body, that it was ſigned by him at Lambeth, if he deſigns to deal ſincerely with your Lordſhip and the Court, and the Jury; but certainly it is not to be proved by a Circumſtance, ſuch a one as this is, but he ought to give your Lordſhip and the Jury Satisfaction about this Fact: He ought to ſay, 'Tis true, I did ſign it, but it was at Lambeth-Houſe; that indeed would be a down-right Stroke to us: But to go upon a Suppoſition, that becauſe my Lord Archbiſhop was not out of his Houſe for ſo long together, therefore they are all not guilty, is a very hard and foreign Inference. My Lord, there's another Matter that they inſiſt upon; and that is about the Publication; that is as plain as any thing can be, that here is a full Proof of a Publication; for if the Paper be Libellous, wherever that Paper is, that is a Publiſhing, wherever the Paper travels, how far ſoever it goes, it is a Publication of it by theſe Perſons that ſigned it. I believe no body thinks that this ſhould fly into the King's Hand, but ſomebody brought it to him; and certainly, my Lord, if your opinion ſhould be, that this Paper is Libellous, then wherever it is, it is a Publiſhing, which is our Offence; wherever it is found, it is a Publication; for there is the Miſtake of theſe Gentlemen, they fancy, that unleſs there was a Publick Delivery of this Paper abroad, nothing can be a Publication; but I rely upon it, they ſetting their Names to it, made it their Paper; and wherever it was afterwards found, that did follow the Paper wherever it went, and was a Publication of it, it was in their Power, being their own Contrivance; it was made and formed by themſelves, and no body will believe, when it was their own Hands that they put to it, that any body elſe could have any Power over it: For ought appears, no body elſe was at work about it, and when there were ſo many learned Prelates that had ſigned ſuch a Paper, no one can believe they would let it go out of their Hands, but by their Conſent and Direction: Is not this a Proof of the Publiſhing? Do they give your Lordſhips any Evidence that they had ſtifled this Paper? If they had ſo done, they had ſaid ſomething; but will any body believe that this Thing was done in vain? Can any body aſſign a Reaſon why ſo ſolemn a Thing as this ſhould be done to no End and Purpoſe? Why a Paper ſhould be framed that rails at the King's two Declarations? Why a Paper that gives Reaſons why they could not read it in their Churches, and ſigned with ſuch Solemnity by all theſe Noble Lords, we ſubmit this to you in point of Law; and the Law is plain in it, that if this Paper be Libellous, and it is found in the County of Middleſex, there is a Publication of that Libel. I ſhall mention to your Lordſhip that Caſe of Williams, which is reported in the ſecond Part of Roll's Reports; Mr. Finch made uſe of it in the Caſe of Sidney; it was the great Caſe relied upon, and that guided and governed that Caſe (as I apprehend) from the Verdict and Judgment that was given in it. This Caſe was 15 Jacobi. It ſeems Wiliams was a Barriſter of the Inner Temple, and it ſeems, being an high Catholick for Opinion and Judgment, he was expelled the Houſe; and he being ſo expelled (being a ſort of a Virtuoſo) wrote a Book called Baalam's Aſs; and therein he makes uſe of the Prophet Daniel, and he makes Application of it according to his own particular Fancy. He writes there, that this World was near at an End; and he ſaid, Thoſe ill Days were come that that Prophecy ſpoke of; and becauſe of the Impurity of Prince, and Prieſt, and People, and other Things that happened, thoſe were the worſt of Days, and therefore the laſt; and that certainly we had the worſt Prince that ever was in the World: When he wrote this Book, what does he do? He was a little more cloſe than my Lords the Biſhops, and pins it up, or ſeals it up, and it was brought to the King; and what is this more than the Caſe before your Lordſhip? They indeed ſay, I do this by way of Advice to the King; ſo ſaid he, I do this by way of Advice to the King, for God forbid that any of this ſhould happen to the King; and ſo what he does, was by way of Advice, and he prayed God to avert it from him. Here was as good a Prayer as there is in this Paper, and there was a good Deſign; he made uſe of the Prophet Daniel, and applied his Words. Well, what was done upon it? This was never publiſhed; for the Queſtion was before the Court, whether this ſealing of it up, and not delivering it to any other body were a Publication, the Court was of Opinion, that the very Writing of it was a Publication; they did not value the Delivery of it to the Prince, but it was proved he writ it, and that made it Treaſon. My Lord, we have Caſes enough in my Lord Hobart for this Matter; Sir Baptiſt Hicks's Caſe, and my Lady Hatton's Caſe; there was only a Letter ſealed up and delivered to the Party.

L. C. J. You need not trouble your ſelf about that, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If the Caſe then be thus, I take it, it will turn upon this Fact; they have given your Lordſhip no Proof where this Paper was Signed by them: Here are ſeven Perſons that had a Hand in it, and here is only one Perſon whom they they have inſiſted upon to be infirm, and kept his Houſe for a great while together. We ſay the Publiſhing follows the Libel wherever it goes; the Libel is in the County of Middleſex, they have confeſſed it in the County of Middleſex, and they did not diſtinguiſh when it was done. Then if they will not diſtinguiſh upon the Evidence, no Man ought to diſtinguiſh, but ought to preſume it was done in that Place where they owned it.

Mr. At. Gen. I did not apprehend we were got ſo far, that they oppoſed us in the Puplication.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, we did, for you have given no Evidence of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Surely, my Lord, for that we have given a ſufficient Evidence, and they have given ſome Proof of it, as to my Lord Archbiſhop; that becauſe he had not been from Lambeth, therefore he did not publiſh, nor could cauſe it to be publiſhed; for your Lordſhip ſees by this Information, they are not only to anſwer the Publicavit, but alſo the Publicari cauſavit; for do you doubt, Gentlemen, of the Law in this Caſe, that if I compoſe a Libel in Surry, for Example, and ſend a Perſon over into Middleſex, I am not guilty of the Publiſhing?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That is not your Caſe, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Finch. That were clear if it were ſo, but it is not ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Archbiſhop's Caſe ſignifies nothing, if we ſhew it was publiſhed in Middleſex, and you give no Evidence to the contrary but it might be there; and I am ſure as to the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, there is no Evidence at all given. Here is a Petition that we ſay is a Libel, they it may be will make that a Queſtion: This is delivered to the King's own Hand in the County of Middleſex, and there are as many Caſes as any one Man can name, that this amounts to a Publication by the Party; for if I ſend a Letter by the Poſt ſealed, that no body can ſee but the Party himſelf, and he that writ it, it is adjudged over and over again, it is a Libel.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. That you need not labour, Mr. Attorney, for that's the Caſe of Williams of Eſſex; but how do you apply it to the Caſe now before us?

Mr. At. Gen. That's an Anſwer to their Objection as to the Publication.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But what ſay you to the firſt Part, you have not proved that it was written in Middleſex.

Mr. At. Gen. There is the Caſe of Barrow and Lewellin in Hobart, and likewiſe the Caſe of Sir Baptiſt Hicks, which is reported both in Hobart and in Popham; and in Popham, towards the End of the Caſe, there is a remarkable Paſſage. Says that Caſe, If it ſhould not be puniſhable at the Suit of the King, there would be no Remedy; for the Party cannot bring an Action, becauſe he can be no Witneſs for himſelf, and it is only known betwixt them two; but a Witneſs for the King he may be, to prove his own Receipt of the Letter, and the Party's Hand.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. You need not labour that Point, I'll tell you, Mr. Attorney; for the Law is very clear in that Point, I think, if you bring it home to your Caſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Then here's the Caſe, in ſhort, my Lord; that my Lords the Biſhops have cauſed to be made and written this Petition, they are made Parties to it by ſetting their Names, and this is a continued Act: Whatſoever is written there is my Lord Archbiſhop's Writing, whereever it goes, as I'll put a Caſe that's very well known. If I take away Goods from a Man in the County of Cumberland, and I am found with them in the County of Middleſex, it is a continued Act, and makes all but one Felony, and I ſhall be tried here in Middleſex for it. If a Man write a Thing in one County, and it is ſent and diſperſed in another County, that ſtill continues to be his Fact, though it may be the firſt Part was not in the ſame County with the other: But ſuppoſe all this while that Part ſhould not affect my Lord of Canterbury, the cauſing it to be publiſhed does.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Do you think, Mr. Attorney, that writing in one County is ſuch a continued Act, that he may be ſaid to write it in another County?

Mr. At. Gen. Sir, I take it, where there is a complicated Crime of writing and publiſhing a Libel, and the beginning of it is in one County, and the carrying it on is in another, that is a continued Act, and may be tried in either County.

L. C. J. It is all one Act of Libelling, as they ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. In Caſes of Felony 'tis ſo; taking in one County, and being found with the Goods in another, it is Felony in either County.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But in that Caſe they are two Felonies; for it is Robbery in the one County, and but bare Felony in the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppoſe that my Lords the Biſhops ſigned this Paper in another County, and my Lord Archbiſhop conſents to have it ſent into Middleſex, is not this a Cauſing it to be puliſhed in another County?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Yes, it may be, if you prove his Conſent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſuppoſe further, which may very well conſiſt with my Lord Archbiſhop's Evidence of his not being out of Lambeth in ſo long Time, the reſt of the Biſhops might ſign it in Middleſex, or it may be in that Place; and then they carry it by my Lord's Conſent over hither into this County, is not this a Cauſing it to be publiſhed? The Delivery with his Conſent certainly is a Proof of that, for our Information goes two ways; for Making, Contriving, Writing and Publiſhing, that's one; and then for cauſing it to be Made, Contrived and Publiſhed, that's the other. And if I prove that he cauſed it to be publiſhed, he may be found guilty as to that Part, and not guilty as to the other; for the Information is not ſo entire, but that the King has his Choice. If the Archbiſhop had not ſigned it, or written it, but had cauſed it to be publiſhed, he may be found guilty of ſo much: But if he be guilty of any one of theſe things, it is enough; and if he be guilty of none of the other things laid in the Information, yet if he be guilty of cauſing it to be publiſhed, by his conſenting that the reſt of the Biſhops ſhould do it, that will be enough to maintain this Information. Then, my Lord, is there any Evidence brought againſt what we have proved, that he did not conſent?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But were was this Conſent of his given, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, good Sir, give me your Favour, I think I am in a plain Caſe.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So you are truly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, good Sir, you ought to make out the Locality, if you'll take Advantage of it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That's very well indeed, this is the firſt Time I ever heard that Doctrine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I cannot help that, but certainly the Law is plain: We have proved there was ſuch a Fact as this was done and they do not go about to prove that it was done elſewhere than where we have laid it; for if they did, their Witneſſes would be croſs-examined by us; and then we know what would become of them, then the Truth of the Matter would come out: Therefore I would make all this conſtare. The Archbiſhop might be at Lambeth, and yet guilty in Middleſex, by his Concurrence with what was done in Middleſex: And I ſay, my Lord, this is natural, upon the Evidence that has been given, becauſe when they were interrogated at the Council, and confeſſed the Paper to be theirs, they made no ſuch Explanation of their Confeſſion, of which they can make any Advantage in their Defence. Here has been nobody produced that proves any thing to be done out of Middleſex; ſo that ſtill if he's guilty of the Fact proved, he muſt be guilty in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. And it does not appear, in this Caſe, but that my Lord Archbiſhop might write the ſame Thing in Middleſex, though he was at Lambeth ſo long as the Witneſs ſpeaks of.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. How do you make out that, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Baldock. He might do it when he came over to the Council.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He muſt do it after it was preſented.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. Might he not be ſo long here on this Side the Water, as to make ſuch a ſhort Thing as this, before it was delivered? Half a Quarter of an Hour would have done it.

L. C. J. That's a Thing not to be preſumed, Brother, eſpecially ſince he is proved not to have been in Middleſex for ſo long together.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Serjeant is mightily miſtaken, for it is not pretended, that it was delivered at the Time when the Archbiſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops, were before the Council.

Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr. Recorder. Either the Making and Contriving, or the Publiſhing of this Libel will do upon this Information; for they ſhall be taken to be one continued complicated Act, and then the Party may be tried in either of the Counties, as the King will; as in the Caſe of Treaſon, it has been over and over again adjudged, that if a Man does one Act of Treaſon in one County, and afterwards goes into another County, and does another Act of Treaſon, the Jury of either of the Counties may enquire of the Fact done in the other. If they then ſhould take thoſe two as ſeveral Acts, they were ſeveral Offences, and they may be found guilty of the one and acquitted of the other; but if they are taken as one continued Act, they are but one Offence, and the Jury of either County may try it. If then, in this Caſe, the Jury of this County may take Notice of the Publication which was here, as certainly they may, if they will agree, as the Law certainly is, that the Writing of a Letter will be a ſufficient Publication, if the Matter be libellous. And there are Multitudes of Precedents for that; and that the bare ſetting of a Man's Hand has been adjudged to be a Publication: Then give me leave, my Lord, to bring it to a ſimilar Caſe: Suppoſe a Man write a ſcandalous Letter from London, to a Judge or Magiſtrate in Exeter, and ſends it by the Poſt, and the Letter is received from the Poſt at Exeter, and there opened; would any Man make a Queſtion whether the Gentleman that ſent the Letter may not be indicted and proſecuted for a Libel at Exeter, where the Libel was received?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. There's no Queſtion of that, Mr. Recorder; that comes not home to the Fact in our Caſe: Undoubtedly in the Caſe that you put, the Law is as you ſaid, but it is far different from this Caſe.

L. C. J. There's nobody oppoſes the Publication, but the framing of it where it was made.

Mr. Recorder. Suppoſing then the Party were at Exeter, and he were interrogated before the Magiſtrate, whether that were his Hand or no, and he ſhould own it to be his Hand, can any body doubt whether his owning that to be his Hand, would be a ſufficient Evidence to prove a Publication?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But is that any Evidence where it was written? Or if it be not proved that it was received at Exeter, would that be a Proof of a Publication at Exeter?

L. C. J. They do not deny the Publication.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We do deny that there was any Publication; and they have proved no Place where it was made.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are not for turning my Lords the Biſhops out of the Way of Proof that is uſual in ſuch Caſes; let them take it if they will, that this was contrived and made in Surry. But can they publiſh it in Middleſex, without committing an Offence? and that is it we ſtand upon: We are not for laying a greater Load upon my Lords the Biſhops than our Proof will anſwer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We thank you for your Complement, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a fair Way of interrupting us when we are ſpeaking? Durſt any one have ſerved you ſo when you were in the King's Service? We would make our Duty as eaſy as we can to my Lords the Biſhops, and it may be eaſier than other Men would have made it. But, my Lord, let it be a doubtful Caſe, that we cannot tell which County it was made and contrived in, if it were made and contrived in another County; yet when they brought it into Middleſex, there was a Publication in Middleſex; and if my Lord of Canterbury conſented to it, and if he cauſed it to be publiſhed, how can any body ever get him off from that cauſing of it to be publiſhed? Here is a Paper that muſt be ſuppoſed to be my Lord Archbiſhop's Paper: Now either the World muſt look upon it to be an Impoſture put upon my Lords the Biſhops, or a real Paper made by them. If it were an Impoſture and an Affront put upon the Biſhops, they ought to make it out for their own Vindication, and to prove themſelves innocent: If they do that, they do well, and they ought to have Satisfaction made them by thoſe that have ſo highly injured them; and the King cannot be better pleaſed, I am ſure, than to find them ſo: But if Men will look one way and act another, they muſt expect to be dealt with accordingly. Will any Man that has heard this Evidence, and ſees that

theſe

theſe Gentlemen will not go the right Way to work to prove their own Innocence, believe them to be not guilty? 'Tis plain they contrived it and ſigned it; for can any one imagine that they ſet their Hands to a paper that was not formed and contrived by themſelves? Then let it go, That this was done in another County, and we cannot puniſh the Writing of it in this County; yet ſtill they are guilty of cauſing it to be publiſhed in this County, and for that we may puniſh them here: We will be content with having that found that we have proved, which certainly is an Offence.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We oppoſe that, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You oppoſe it! I know you'll oppoſe common Senſe; we don't ſpeak to you, we ſpeak to the Court. We are content with what is plain, and do not deſire to inſiſt upon any ſtrained Conſtruction: We ſay this is natural Evidence for us; If this thing be a Libel, as we ſay it is, then the cauſing it to be publiſhed, is an Offence. The Publication we ſay was here in Middleſex, and of that there is a clear Evidence, becauſe it was found there, and came from the King's Hand, to whom it was directed, and it could not come to the King's Hand out of their Cuſtody, without their Conſent: This, we ſay, is a clear Evidence of cauſing it to be publiſhed, let the reſt go as it will, becauſe we will take the eaſieſt part of the Caſe, and not go upon Strains.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. The greateſt Queſtion is, I think, now come to the publiſhing ——

L. C. J. The Court is of Opinion, that its coming to the King is a publiſhing.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Ay, my Lord, if it be proved to be done by them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Before the Court deliver their Opinion, we deſire to heard.

L. C. J. Brother, you ſhall be heard in good Time, but let them make an End on the other Side, and when the King's Counſel have done, we'll hear you.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, upon the Queſtion of Publiſhing, it has been inſiſted upon, and the Court ſeems to be very much of the ſame Opinion, that the Writing of it is a publiſhing: That it is without Controverſy, if the Writing of it fell out to be in Middleſex, where the Information is laid; but that they would not have to be ſo by Argument, becauſe the Archbiſhop had kept in at Lambeth ſo long. But, ſuppoſe that it were ſo as they would have it; that is only as to the Archbiſhop, he being the Writer of it; but yet notwithſtanding that, the other ſix might ſubſcribe it in Middleſex, taking it, that there is ſuch a Face in their Argument as they would have it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We will lay no greater Load on the other ſix than we do upon my Lord Archbiſhop, and we ſay they are all guilty of the Publication in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. Pray, Sir, ſpare me. This paper was in the Archbiſhop's Cuſtody and Power, he taking of it himſelf; and regularly it could not have come out of his Cuſtody, in common Suppoſition, but it muſt come with his Conſent. It was afterwards in the power of the other ſix, they had it to ſubſcribe; whereas the Subſcription was non conſtat; they it may be can prove it themſelves, but I will only deduce this Argument; That if it after comes into Middleſex, it muſt be taken by Preſumption to be ſubſcribed by them there and publiſhed; it muſt be taken by Preſumption ſo to be.

L. C. J. No, Brother, we ought not to do any thing by Preſumption here.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. No, no, by no means, we muſt not go upon Preſumptions, but Proofs.

L. C. J. I will not preſume it to be made in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. But it is proved to be publiſhed in Middleſex.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, with Submiſſion, there is no Evidence of the Publication.

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Court is to judge of.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, what Inſtance of a Publication have they given?

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Court has heard the Evidence, we leave it there.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was it their owning and acknowledging it was their Hands, when the King aſked them the Queſtion at the Council-Table? Surely the King's Counſel won't pretend that was a Publication, when it was done at the King's Command! It was certainly the King that publiſhed it then, and not my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well ſaid.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Don't you remember that, when Mr. Blathwayt ſaid the King gave it to be read, and it was ſhewed to the Biſhops?

L. C. J. I remember what Evidence Mr. Blathwayt gave of the Paſſages at the Council-Board very well; and I know what Mr. Attorney did preſs about the King's promiſing to take no Advantage.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Attorney is on the other Side, he did not preſs it.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer I mean; I beg both your pardons, Gentlemen, I think I have done Injury to you both.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we ſay there is no Evidence at all, that ever this was ſent to the King by the Archbiſhop, or any of my Lords the Biſhops: And as for the Caſes that they have put, they might have put five hundred Caſes, and all nothing to the purpoſe.

Mr. Soll. Gen. So they might, and done juſt as others had done before them.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And ſo are theſe; for here is the Queſtion, We are in a Caſe where the Publication is that which makes it a Crime: Now I would have them, if they can, put me any ſuch Caſe, and then apply it to this. In Williams's Caſe, the Queſtion is quite otherwiſe, and ſo in any Caſe of Treaſon it muſt be: Wherever there is an Overt-Act proved, it is the treaſonable Intention, and the ill Mind of the Traitor, that is the Crime, and the Treaſon (the Overt-Act) is only to be the Evidence of it. In that Caſe of Williams, with Submiſſion, my Lord, the Publication was not at all neceſſary, but the very ſecreteſt Act that could be done by him (if it were an Act) is an Evidence of the Mind; and ſo the ſending of the Book to the King himſelf, though no Body elſe did ſee it, was an Evidence of the Crime of Treaſon, yet it could not be called a Publication. But in the other Caſe of Sir Baptiſt Hicks, which was in the Star-Chamber, about ſending a Letter of Challenge, it was plainly reſolved that it was no Publication of the Letter, and that was not the Ground of the Judgment given againſt him there, that it was the Publication of a Libel, but the very Fact was a particular Offence; for, ſaid the Court there, if you will ſend a Letter to a private Man, and that is a Letter that will provoke him to break the Peace, that is an Offence puniſhable in the Star-Chamber; but that is not the Reaſon which was alledged, becauſe no Action will lie for want of Proof, but quite the contrary; becauſe they may produce the Porter or Party that brought it, and prove it that it came from this Man's Hands; and I do not queſtion but that in the King's-Bench at this Day, if a Man will write a Letter privately to provoke another Man to fight, there will lie an Information, but not for a Libel; for there it will be neceſſary for to make an Offence, that there may be a Publication; for that is the very Form of the Crime, and upon that Ground were all thoſe Judgments againſt Libels in the Star-Chamber. My Lord, I agree to write a Letter to the King of another Perſon, or to make a Petition to the King concerning another Perſon, as of my Lord Chancellor, or the Judges, or the like, to complain to the King of them ſcandalouſly, with provoking and reviling Language, that is a Publication; and ſo if I write a Letter to one Man of another; if there be Scandal in a Letter, that is a Publication of a Libel; and that is the Difference that has been always taken, where it is eſſential to make it a Libel, that there be a Publication, ſuch a Publication muſt be proved, and the Delivery of a Letter to a Man that concerns himſelf, is no Publication; but in this Caſe they have not ſo much as proved that it was delivered to the King.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Leave, I take it, that they have given no manner of Evidence of a Publication; to ſay, the Writing and Subſcribing of their Names to a Paper, is a Publication of that Paper, is ſuch a Doctrine truly as I never heard before. Suppoſing this Paper had lain in my Study, ſubſcribed by me, but never went further; would this have been a Publication? They never ſaid any ſuch thing. As to Algernoon Sidney's Caſe, there was no Colour for it, that it ſhould be a Publication; but it was an Overt-Act of Treaſon to compoſe ſuch a Book. They have proved by our Confeſſion here, that we have ſubſcribed this Paper; they would take it now, that therefore it muſt be preſumed we ſent this to the King, and ſo ſurmiſe us into an Information for making and publiſhing a Libel, which we ſent to the King; but they do not prove it all. My Lord, there are a thouſand Ways that it might come into Middleſex, and perhaps come to the King's Hands too, without our Knowledge of Delivery; and ſure you will not preſume theſe noble Perſons without Evidence to be guilty of ſuch an Offence as this is ſuggeſted to be! So that, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, 'tis impoſſible for you to find this a Publication in Middleſex; and for the other Thing (the writing this Paper) they that would make it an Offence, muſt prove where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, The Anſwer that I ſhall give to what has been ſaid on the other Side, is very ſhort: The Caſes that have been cited are all Law, but not one Tittle to this Purpoſe. In Sir Baptiſt Hick's Caſe, and Williams's Caſe, it was proved they all ſent them to the Places whither they were directed; but is there a Tittle of Proof that theſe Biſhops ſent it here? In all thoſe Caſes they muſt ſend it either by a Porter or a Carrier, and they ſend it as their own Act, and when it comes there, by their ſending, that is ſufficient Proof of their Act in the Place whither it is ſent: And for Sidney's Caſe, there was Treaſon in the very Libel and Book that he made; and he was not indicted for Publiſhing, but for Treaſon, in the Place where it was found, becauſe it was found in his Poſſeſſion: But was this ever in my Lord Archbiſhop's Poſſeſſion in Middleſex, or the reſt of the Biſhops, and were they publiſhing of it? If it had, then it had been their Act clearly: But that is the Thing wherein they are defective, that they do not prove that my Lords the Biſhops ſent or brought it here; but upon the Queſtion aſked them by the King, they acknowledged it to be their Hands: So that, my Lord, there is no Proof of any Fact done here, but an Acknowledgment of a Fact done, no Body knows where, upon the King's Queſtion here in Middleſex: Is that any Proof of this Information?

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a Word on the ſame Side; let us ſee what the Evidence is. The Evidence is this, That the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Biſhops owned their Hands to it: This is the Effect of the Evidence, and all that is to prove the Forming and Making a Libel in Middleſex, and the Publication of that Libel. And what is therefore inferred from thence? Why, having proved that the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Biſhops owned their Hands; therefore, Firſt, the Biſhops made this Libel in Middleſex. Secondly, they brought it to the Council Table, and publiſhed it at the Council-Table, or elſe there is no proof at all: For here is nothing of Evidence given of any Fact, but becauſe they acknowledged it, therefore they made it, therefore they gave it to the King in Middleſex: This were good Evidence if they had had the Help of a Suppoſition to make it good; but they want that, nor muſt any ſuch thing be admitted; but I think they are ſuch groſs falſe Conſequences, that I doubt not you'll be of Opinion, here's no proof of a Publication in Middleſex, and then there is no proof at all againſt my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Pollexfen. I muſt confeſs, I hear them ſay, two Acts prove a Publication in this Caſe; the one is, the Writing of the Libel, and the Subſcribing. If ſo, then I think, upon the Evidence that has been given, the Court muſt needs be ſatisfied, that the Writing of it was in Surrey: The next is their owning their Hands; for there is no Act done that appears, or any Evidence againſt them of any Act done, from the Time of the Writing, to the Time that they were aſked, is this your Hand? Surely no Man would ever think this to be a Publication, where one is aſked by Authority, whether ſuch a paper be his Hand, and he acknowledges it in Anſwer to that Queſtion? To turn this to be a Crime, I think it can never be done, nor never was before. Then there is nothing in the Caſe, that they can hold to for Evidence, and proof againſt my Lords the Biſhops, but the Writing; and that is apparent to have been in Surry, or otherwiſe they muſt hold that the Anſwer to the King's Queſtion, this is my Hand, is a Publication. But truly, my Lord, I think neither of theſe will do: But, my Lord, to me this is a great Evidence in itſelf againſt the proof of a Publication, the Care and Warineſs that has been uſed, that there ſhould be nothing at all of this Matter known, from the Time that it was written, to the Time that they came to be examined and ſummoned to appear as Offenders. My Lord, the Nature of Libels is to publiſh and proclaim Scandal and Defamation, or elſe it loſes its End, and conſequently its Name. This, as it ſtands upon their Evidence, is a monſtrous Proof for my Lords the Biſhops, againſt the King's Counſel; for it ſeems, 'tis a very private Matter, ſo cautiouſly and warily carried, that there is not any Evidence of the Fact, but only the Names of the Perſons that writ it, till they come to be examined by the greateſt Authority, Is this your Hand? And then they own it ſo to be. How can this be taken to be a Publication? And it will be a Thing of wonderful Conſequence, if an Anſwer to a Queſtion put by Authority, ſhould amount to a Crime, as it would in this Caſe: That would be as if Authority that ſhould be employed to do Right, would be turned to do the greateſt Wrong; for it is the Duty of all Men to anſwer when examined by a lawful Authority, and it would never be offered at ſure in any other Caſe. If a Man comes before a Magiſtrate, and confeſſes any thing, that indeed is Evidence, but is not a Crime; for there is a great deal of Difference between Evidence and the Crime; but that this ſhould be both an Evidence and a Crime too, is, I think, a very ſtrange Conſtruction; and for the other Part (the Writing of it) I ſuppoſe the Court is ſatisfied that it was in another County.

Sir George Treby. I deſire your Lordſhip to ſpare me a Word, which I think has not been obſerved by the Counſel that have ſpoke before. The Queſtion that remains, is, Whether my Lords the Biſhops did publiſh this Paper? This is a Matter of Fact that lies upon the Proſecutors to prove. Now I think they are ſo far from having proved that the Biſhops did publiſh it, that, on the contrary, they have proved that their Lordſhips did not publiſh it. The Evidence they have offered for this Matter is a Confeſſion. This Confeſſion is teſtified by Mr. Blathwayt, and he ſays the Biſhops were aſked at the Council whether they did ſubſcribe and publiſh this Paper, and that their Anſwer was, that they did ſubſcribe, but not publiſh it.

Now a Confeſſion muſt be taken together, and muſt be admitted to be entirely true by them that produce it; they ſhall never be allowed to take out and uſe one Piece, and wave the reſt.

Why then by this Evidence of Confeſſion, taken as it ought, it appears that the Biſhops, though they did ſubſcribe, did not publiſh the Paper: So that, I ſay, the King's Counſel have hereby plainly proved, that the Biſhops did not publiſh this Paper, and yet this is the only Evidence upon which they would infer that they did publiſh it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, it does lie upon you, Gentlemen, to prove it was done elſewhere than in Middleſex.

Mr. Finch. Sure Mr. Attorney is in Jeſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I am in good Earneſt; all the Proof that we have given has been in Middleſex, and you can beſt tell whether you did it in Middleſex or no.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have done as to this Objection; for we ſay they have not proved their Caſe.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, you may obſerve (and I am ſure you do obſerve as well as any Body in all Caſes) but I ſay you may obſerve that they are off of every thing but cauſing it to be publiſhed; now that does lie upon the King's Counſel to prove, that my Lords the Biſhops did cauſe it to be publiſhed; for their owning their Hands does not amount to Publication.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we are upon this Point with them, whether here be any Evidence of a Publication at all.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Pray let us clear this firſt; for if there be no Publication, there can be no cauſing of it to be publiſhed.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you think fit, we ſhall go on, and reſerve this Point till afterwards.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They may make Objections, if they think fit.

L. C. J. So they may, and they ſay if theſe Objections are with us, we need go no farther.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But, my Lord, if they be not with us, we have a Reſerve to give a farther Anſwer to it, and to offer Evidence againſt the Evidence they have offered.

Mr. Soll. Gen. With all our Hearts, give in Evidence what you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray, my Lord, let us go on to anſwer this Objection.

L. C. J. Pray do, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I would firſt obſerve how far we have gone. That there was ſuch a Paper written is clear beyond all Queſtion, and written by my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and that it was ſigned by the reſt of the Biſhops, but not in the County of Middleſex, and that this Paper was publiſhed, is agreed on all Hands.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No, they do not agree to that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do I ſay it was publiſhed by them? But there was ſuch a Paper publiſhed.

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, we ſay it was never publiſhed at all.

L. C. J. Pray, Brother Pemberton, be quiet; if Mr. Attorney in opening does ſay any thing that he ought not to ſay, I will correct him, as I would do any Body that does not open Things right as they are proved; but pray don't you that are at the Bar interrupt one another, it is unbecoming Men of your Profeſſion to be chopping in and ſnapping at one another——————Go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſay, that the Paper is proved to be written and ſigned by my Lords the Biſhops; that I take for granted, and that the Paper ſo ſigned and written is now publiſhed to the World, is alſo evident; but the Queſtion is who it was done by, or who cauſed it to be done, we are reduced to that Queſtion. Now, firſt, it is agreed on all Hands, that if I ſend a Letter to a private Man containing ſcandalous Things in it, though there is no Proof more, but that it was ſent ſealed, and received by the Party: In that Caſe it was a Fault puniſhable in the Star-Chamber, as a Crime; but now that this was received by the King, and written by them, there is no room for Doubt; for you hear it was produced by the King at the Council Board, and they aſked upon it, if it were their Hands? That the King did receive it, there is no room for Queſtion, or that they did write it; but the Queſtion is, from whom the King had it? I am ſure they muſt ſhew that ſome Body elſe did it; and unleſs they do ſhew that, I hope there is no manner of Queſtion but it came from them, and they did it; though no Man living knew any thing of this Matter, but whom they thought fit to communicate it to; yet ſtill they putting the King upon the Neceſſity of ſhewing this Power, in order to his obtaining Satisfaction for it, or elſe he muſt remain under the Indignity without Reparation, it ought to be put upon them to clear the Fact; for if he does not produce it, then muſt the King put up the higheſt Injury and Affront that perhaps a Man can give the King to his Face, by delivering a Libel into his own Hands; and if he does produce it, then, ſay they, that is not our Publication, we prove it to be your Writing and Signing, and we prove it to come from the Hand of the King againſt whom it was compoſed; for we ſay it is a Libel againſt his Majeſty, his Government and Prerogative: If then all thoſe Caſes that have been cited be Law, then ſure there never was a ſtronger Caſe in the World than this; and I hope the Law goes a little farther in the Caſe of the King, than it does in the Caſe of a private Man. No Man muſt think by Policy to give private Wounds to the Government, and diſparage the Adminiſtration of it, and then, when he is called in Queſtion about it, ſays he, pray prove that I publiſhed it, or elſe you ſhall not puniſh me for it. We prove you framed it, and writ it, and ſigned it, and we prove it came to the King's Hand, of whom it was compoſed, muſt we produce two Witneſſes of the Delivery of it to the King? Surely there will be no need of any thing of that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we have reduced it now to a very narrow Queſtion; for, as Mr. Attorney has ſaid, my Lord, there is no Doubt but that my Lords the Biſhops are the Authors of this Paper; there is no Doubt but they ſigned it, and there is no Doubt but that their ſigning of it thought it were at Lambeth, as they ſay, is a Publiſhing of it: But however, this is plain and manifeſt, that this Paper was publiſhed, and that this was publiſhed in Middleſex, this is as plain too: Now then there is nothing left but this Queſtion, whether my Lords the Biſhops, who framed the Thing, who wrote the Thing, who ſigned the Thing, were not the Occaſion or Cauſe of its Publication, or privy or conſenting to it? My Lord, I will reduce it to a very plain Point; for we are upon a rational Queſtion, before a rational Court, and a rational Jury, whether theſe Lords did all of them in the County of Surry, conſent to the Publiſhing of this Paper in Middleſex? For it is publiſhed in Middleſex (that we ſee) and if they are guilty of that Part of the Information of cauſing it to be publiſhed, now what do they ſay to it? Say they, is agreed, that it is publiſhed in Middleſex, but it is not proved to be publiſhed by us.

L. C. J. No, they do not ſay ſo, they agree it was in Middleſex, but not publiſhed.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, they do agree it was in Middleſex, but not publiſhed to be ſure, nor by them.

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, I'll tell you what they ſtand upon; they ſay you ought to prove it to be delivered to the King by the Biſhops, or ſome Body employed by them; for upon that went the Reſolution that was in Williams's Caſe, that he ſent it to the King; but here is no Body that proves that is was delivered to the King in this Caſe, ſo that how it came to the King non conſtat.

Mr. Soll. Gen. There will be the Queſtion between us, whether this be not a Publication.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, Mr. Sollicitor, prove your Caſe before you argue it.

L. C. J. Firſt ſettle what the Caſe is before you argue it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I'll put you the Caſe. Here does appear in Middleſex a Paper that is a Libel in it ſelf, and this Libel is proved to be written and formed by theſe Perſons; this Libel coming into Middleſex, the Queſtion is, whether they are privy to it? I ſay, in point of Preſumption it muſt come from them.

L. C. J. I cannot ſuppoſe it; I cannot preſume any thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I ſpeak of that which is a common Preſumption, a natural Preſumption, what we commonly call a violent Preſumption, which is a legal Preſumption, and has always been allowed for Evidence. Now whether there be not ſuch a Preſumption, in our Caſe, as to induce your Lordſhip, and the Jury to believe that it cannot be otherwiſe; or at leaſt to put the Labour upon them, to ſhew how it came out of their Studies, and how it came to the King's Hands; for it is in their Power to ſhew the Truth of this Matter, how it was; if they do not, the Preſumption will lie upon them. That the Paper came to the King, that is plain enough, and its coming to the King's Hands, is a plain Proof of a Publication in Middleſex; and who ſhould bring it to the King, but theſe Gentlemen in whoſe Power it was? There is no Man undertakes to ſay, he loſt it, then what elſe is to be believed, but that it came from them? I ſpeak of common Suppoſition and Belief; they may very well ſhew it, if it were not ſo. All that we can ſay in it is, here is a Paper in Middleſex, this you agreed was once your Paper, and in your Power, pray ſhew what became of it, it lies upon you to clear this Doubt.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, there is but this Queſtion in the Caſe; the Queſtion is not, whether the owning it be a Publication, but whether here be any Evidence that they did deliver it to the King. Now if they did deliver it to the King, that will be agreed to me to be a Publication.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No doubt of it, if you can prove it.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, ſpare me: That they did it, you have this Evidence; firſt, that they were the Authors of this Paper by their own Confeſſion, that this was in the County of Middleſex, and that when they were aſked concerning it, they owned it to be their Hand-writing. Now whether you can in the leaſt queſtion after all this, their delivering of it to the King, or that it came to the King's Hands without their Knowledge or Conſent, is that which lies before your Lordſhip for your Judgment.

L. C. J. I will aſk my Brothers their Opinion; but I muſt deal truly with you, I think it is not Evidence againſt my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Truly I think you have failed in your Information; you have not proved any thing againſt my Lords the Biſhops in the County of Middleſex, and therefore the Jury muſt find them not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. I'll put you but one Caſe, my Lord: A Man has an Opportunity ſecretly to deliver a Libel into the King's Hands, when no Body is by, and ſo there can be no Proof of the Delivery.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. 'Tis a dangerous thing, Mr. Attorney, on the other ſide, to convict People of Crimes without Proof.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. But ſhall a Man be permitted thus to affront the King, and there be no way to puniſh it?

L. C. J. Yes, there will ſure, but it will be a very ſtrange Thing if we ſhould go and preſume that theſe Lords did it, when there is no ſort of Evidence of it; 'tis that which I do aſſure you I cannot do: We muſt proceed according to Evidence, and Forms and Methods of Law; they may think what they will of me, but I always declare my Mind according to my Conſcience.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. But as to that other Point, whether their owning of it be a Publication, has not been particularly ſpoke to.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Sollicitor, if there were enough to raiſe Doubt in the Court, ſo as to leave it to the Jury, I would ſum up the Evidence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we know it is with the Court, theſe Lords inſiſted upon it, that it was a great while in their Hands; but it ſeems as far as our Evidence has gone hitherto, their Confeſſion went no farther than that it was their Paper, and we muſt not extend their Confeſſion further than it was; but I think we ſhall offer a fair Evidence that they did deliver it in the County of Middleſex.

L. C. J. Indeed, indeed, you ought to have gone to this, Mr. Sollicitor, before the Court gave their Opinions.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray call Mr. Blathwayt again.

[Mr. Blathwayt called.]

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, unleſs you are ſure that Mr. Blathwayt is a Witneſs to the Publication, 'tis but ſpending the Court's Time to no Purpoſe to call him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We are ſure of nothing, my Lord, but we muſt make uſe of our Witneſſes, according to our Inſtructions in our Briefs.

[Then Mr. Blathwayt appeared.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt, you were ſworn before.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You were preſent when this Paper or Petition was delivered by the King, at the Council-Board.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, I was ſo, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing of the Biſhops acknowledging their Delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt, I would aſk you, was there any mention in Diſcourſe with my Lords the Biſhops, how that Paper came into the King's Hands? Was there any mention of what it was done for, upon the Account of Religion or how?

Mr. Blathwayt. I don't remember any thing of that Mr. Sollicitor, [at which there was a great Laughter.]

L. C. J. Pray let us have no Laughing, it is not decent; can't all this be done quietly without Noiſe? Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, let me aſk you, Do you remember there was any Diſcourſe how that Writing came into the King's Hands?

Mr. Blathwayt. I received it from the King's Hands, and I know it was preſented to him by my Lords the Biſhops.

L. C. J. How do you know it was preſented to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I heard the King ſay ſo ſeveral Times.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray mind my Queſtion, Sir, firſt I aſk you who produced the Paper at the Council-Table?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What ſaid the Biſhops when that Paper was ſhewed them?

Mr. Blathwayt. Then, as I remember, they were aſked, whether that was the Paper that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then what ſaid the Biſhops?

Mr. Blathwayt. They at firſt ſcrupled to anſwer, and they ſaid it might be made uſe of to their Prejudice if they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, conſider again; was that the Queſtion put to my Lords the Biſhops, whether that was the Paper that was preſented by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I do think, to the beſt of my Remembrance, that my Lord Chancellor did aſk them to that Purpoſe, I cannot ſpeak to the very Words.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And upon this, what Anſwer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lords the Biſhops ſcrupled to anſwer the firſt and ſecond Time, as I told you before, but they did own it was the Petition that they preſented to the King, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did the Archbiſhop do any thing to own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, both my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the reſt of the Biſhops did own all the ſame Thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was this done at Whitehall?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, at the Council-Table.

L. C. J. Pray recollect yourſelf, and conſider what you ſay, did they own that that was the Paper they delivered to the King?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to aſk a Queſtion to clear this Matter; was the Queſtion put to them, whether it was the Paper that they delivered, or whether it were their Hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not exactly recollect the Words.

L. C. J. But pray tell us, if you can, what the Queſtion was?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not remember the very Words, but I think if Mr. Serjeant Pemberton be pleaſed to repeat his Queſtion, I ſhall give him a ſatisfactory Anſwer, as well as I can.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Sir, that which I aſk you is this, Whether the Queſtion that was put to my Lords the Biſhops at that Time was, Whether this was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King, or whether thoſe were their Hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I did always think that it was a plain Caſe, that that was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King; and my Lords the Biſhops did never deny but that they gave it to the King, and I had it from the King's Hands.

L. C. J. But we muſt know from you (if you can tell us) what the Queſtion was that was put to my Lords the Biſhops; were they aſked, Whether thoſe were their Hands that were to that Paper, or was it, Whether they delivered that Paper to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the firſt Part, that they owned 'twas their Hands, that I am ſure of; but as to the other, I do not remember what the Words were.

[At which there was a great Shout.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwayt recollect yourſelf, you ſay the King produced it.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King aſked them any Queſtion upon the producing of it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellor aſked them, if thoſe were not their Hands to the Petition.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was there any other Matter in Diſcourſe, whether that was the Paper that was delivered by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I cannot ſo poſitively ſay what were the Words that my Lord Chancellor uſed.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Pray do not twiſt a Man ſo, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And you are not to untwiſt a Man neither, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King ſaid any thing of the Paper being delivered to him?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King has ſaid it ſeveral times; I believe I have heard him ſay it ten times at leaſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſay it at that Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. I cannot poſitively ſay that he did, Sir.

Mr. S. Pemberton. He cannot anſwer it; why will you preſs it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, here is the Clerk of the Council that was then in waiting, he took Minutes, and perhaps can remember more than I.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here they cry he cannot anſwer it, as if they could tell what he can anſwer better than himſelf. Pray, Mr. Bridgman, was there any Queſtion to this Purpoſe, either from my Lord Chancellor, or from the King, whether that was the Paper that was preſented by my Lords the Biſhops, or delivered to the King; for I ſee you are very nice as to Words, and you do very well; but was there not a Queſtion to that Purpoſe?

Mr. Bridgman. Sir, I do not remember; for I ſpeak to the beſt of my Remembrance in all this Matter. I ſay, I do not remember that that Queſtion was aſked in thoſe very Words, but I do remember ſomething was ſaid to that Purpoſe, but by whom I cannot particularly ſay.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. To what Purpoſe?

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is very ſtrange that they won't let the Witneſs ſpeak, but are continually interrupting him.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Sollicitor, no body interrupts him.

L. C. J. Why, do not I behave myſelf between you all as I ought to do? Pray Sir Robert Sawyer ſit down, you cannot be contented, when the Man does you no Harm.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray conſider, did my Lords the Biſhops ſay any thing, or was there any Diſcourſe concerning the Paper, whether it was delivered to the King or no?

Mr. Bridgman. Mr. Sollicitor, I have told you as near as I can what I do remember. I know not by whom it was ſaid, but that Queſtion, or to that Purpoſe, was aſked, whether that was the Petition they delivered; but I do not remember whether the Queſtion was directly aſked, or anſwered; there was ſomething about it, and ſeveral Paſſages there were; but whether ſpoken by my Lord Chancellor, or who, I cannot remember.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ſay there was that which ſufficiently denoted a Queſtion to that Purpoſe, and they ſaid nothing againſt it.

Mr. Bridgman. No, there was no Denial of it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I ſee you do not remember the Particular, nor do we deſire it of you.

Mr. Bridgman. They did not deny it, nor confeſs it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then, in your Apprehenſion, did they own that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. You muſt not aſk that, Mr. Sollicitor, it is not a fair Queſtion to aſk him what he apprehended.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He ſaid it before himſelf.

L. C. J. But his Apprehenſions are no Evidence, and it is a ſort of a leading Queſtion which we muſt not allow of.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then if your Lordſhip do not like it, I will not aſk it, but I will aſk him another Queſtion.

L. C. J. Ay, ten if you will, ſo they be fair ones.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was it upon the firſt or ſecond Time of their being examined?

Mr. Bridgman. I cannot tell, it was not the firſt Time, all of it, I believe; for at the firſt Time my Lords the Biſhops made ſome Scruple of anſwering or owning any thing; and whatſoever they owned, they ſaid, they hoped it ſhould not be made uſe of to their Prejudice. I remember no Reply that was made, nor any thing farther, only my Lord Chancellor ſaid, they were not to capitulate with their Prince; but they were required to anſwer the Queſtions that were aſked them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What were thoſe Queſtions?

Mr. Bridgman. I have told you already, as well as I can remember.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But did you take it upon the main that they owned the Delivery of that Paper to the King?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, you have been told you are to aſk no ſuch Queſtions.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Nor never was there ſuch wire-drawing of a Witneſs in this World before.

L. C. J. Pray ſit ſtill, Sir Robert Sawyer, you are not to teach us what we are to do; Mr. Sollicitor muſt aſk Queſtions that are proper for him, and not ſuch as theſe; but the Court muſt correct him, and not you.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Bridgman is very cautious, and he is to be commended for it; but we would get the Truth out of him if we could. Pray, Sir, if you can remember, recollect your ſelf, whether by any Queſtion to that Purpoſe, it was believed that they did own the Delivery of the Paper to the King.

Mr. Bridgman. I told you, Mr. Sollicitor, as to that at firſt, that I do not remember the very Words of the Queſtion; but I believe there was no body doubted that that was not the Paper.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ſpeak well in your way; but theſe Gentlemen are very unwilling you ſhould tell your Opinion.

L. C. J. His Opinion is no Evidence, therefore you muſt not aſk any ſuch Queſtions, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Bridgman. As ſoon as the Petition was delivered, within a few Hours after I ſaw it, the King ſhewed it to ſeveral People, and he ſaid, it was the Petition the Biſhops had delivered; he took it into his own Cuſtody, and afterwards commanded me to write a Copy of it, and there was no Copy made of it but that one; but notwithſtanding that, I do remember I did ſee a Copy of the Petition, within a Day

Day or two after it was preſented, about the Town.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray how many Days was this before the Diſcourſe in Council upon their Examination?

Mr. Bridgman. How many Days was what, Sir?

Mr. Soll. Gen. When the King gave the Paper to be copied.

Mr. Bridgman. It was upon the Sunday.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But you ſay, as you believe, it was in a few Hours after the Paper was delivered to the King, that you did ſee it?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But what makes him ſay, that this was delivered to the King, but only Hear-ſay?

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Sollicitor, will you produce that which is Evidence, and not ſpend our Time in that which is not.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I would make no more of it than it is.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. 'Tis a ſhameful thing to offer ſuch things in a Court of Juſtice.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. 'Tis a Practice that ought not to be endured.

L. C. J. Pray Brothers be quiet, or I'll turn him looſe upon you again, if you'll not be quiet: What is the Matter? Cannot you let us alone? We ſhall do every body right. Come, to ſhorten this Matter, I aſk you but this one Queſtion, and that may ſatisfy any one that has common Honeſty about him; Do you remember whether or no they were aſked, if that was the Petition that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I have anſwered that Queſtion as directly as I can; I do not poſitively remember that that was the Queſtion.

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor General, you muſt be ſatisfied when proper Queſtions are fairly anſwered, and therefore pray be quiet.

Mr. Att. Gen. However, we pray we may aſk the Clerks of the Council; it may be they may remember more— Sir John Nicholas, you were at the Council-Table that Day my Lords the Biſhops were examined about this Paper.

Sir John Nicholas. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you obſerve that the King produced the Petition?

Sir John Nicholas. No, indeed, I did not ſee it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any thing that paſſed there in Diſcourſe?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you obſerve any Queſtions that were aſked the Biſhops, either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Sir John Nicholas. I think my Lord Chancellor did aſk them, if that was their Hands to the Petition, and they owned it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you remember whether they owned, that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. I'll aſk you, Sir John Nicholas, Did my Lord Chancellor aſk them this Queſtion, Is this the Petition you delivered to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. I do not remember that.

[Then there was a great Shout.]

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here's wonderful great Rejoycing that Truth cannot prevail.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. No, Mr. Sollicitor, Truth does prevail.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You are all very glad that Truth is ſtifled, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. Pray, Sir John Nicholas, let me aſk you one Queſtion; Was there any Diſcourſe about delivering that Petition to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. Indeed I do not remember it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. There's Mr. Pepys, we'll examine him.

[Mr. Pepys ſworn.]

L. C. J. Come, I'll aſk the Queſtions; Were you at the Council-Board when my Lords the Biſhops were committed?

Mr. Pepys. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What were the Queſtions that were aſked, either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Pepys. My Lord, I would remember as well as I could; the very Words, and the very Words of the Queſtion, were, I think, My Lords, do you own this Paper? I do not remember any thing was ſpoken about the delivering; but I believe it was underſtood by every Body at the Table, that that was the Paper that they had delivered.

L. C. J. Well, have you done now? But to ſatisfy you, I'll aſk this Queſtion; Was this Queſtion aſked, My Lords, was this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Pepys. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, do you remember whether the King himſelf aſked the Queſtion?

Mr. Pepys. You mean, I ſuppoſe, Mr. Attorney, that theſe were the Words, or ſomething that imported their delivering it to the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Pepys. Truly I remember nothing of that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you obſerve any Diſcourſe concerning their Delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Pepys. Indeed, Mr. Sollicitor, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Muſgrave.

[Mr. Muſgrave ſworn.]

L. C. J. You hear the Queſtion, Sir, what ſay you to it.

Mr. Muſgrave. My Lord, I will give as ſhort an Account of it as I can: The firſt Time after his Majeſty had produced the Petition, and it was read at the Board, his Grace the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the other ſix Reverend Lords the Biſhops, were called in, and it was aſked of them, if they owned that, or if it was their Hands; my Lord Archbiſhop, in the Name of the reſt, did decline anſwering, upon the Account that they were there as Criminals, and were not obliged to ſay any thing to their own Prejudice, or that might hurt them hereafter; but if his Majeſty would command them, and if he would promiſe that no Advantage ſhould be made of whatſoever they confeſſed, then they would anſwer the Queſtion: His Majeſty made no Anſwer to that, but only ſaid he would do nothing but what was according to Law; whereupon the Biſhops were ordered to withdraw, and being called in a ſecond Time, the Petition was ſhewn to them, and they were aſked if they did own it, or if it was their Hands, and I think my Lord Archbiſhop did then ſay, we will rely upon your Majeſty, and ſome ſuch general thing was ſaid, and then they did all own that it was their Hands: I cannot ſay the Petition was read to them.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Blathwayt, as I remember, ſaid it was the third Time.

Mr. Muſgrave. It was the ſecond Time, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, was there any Queſtion to this Purpoſe? Is this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Muſgrave. I do not remember that ever any ſuch direct Queſtion was aſked.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. But, as my Brother Pemberton did very well before diſtinguiſh, there is a great deal of Difference between the owning the Subſcription of a Paper, and between the owning of that Paper. Mr. Pepys did ſay that they did own the Paper, and upon my Word that will look very much like a Pulication.

Mr. Muſgrave. I remember, my Lord, there was at the ſame Time a Queſtion aſked, becauſe ſeveral Copies had gone about the Town, whether they had publiſhed it; and my Lord Archbiſhop did ſay, he had been ſo cautious, that he had not admitted his own Secretary, but writ it all himſelf; and the reſt of the Biſhops did ſay, they did not publiſh it, nor ever gave any Copies of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I confeſs, now it is to be left to the Jury upon this Point, whether tho' there were not a poſitive Witneſs that was by when the thing was done, yet upon this Evidence the Jury can find any otherwiſe than that the thing was done; truly, I think, we muſt leave it as a ſtrong Caſe for the King: I could have wiſhed indeed, for the Satisfaction of every body, that the Proof would have come up to that; but we muſt make it as ſtrong for the King, upon the Evidence given, as it will bear. Now, my Lord, take all this whole Matter together, here is a Paper compoſed, framed, and written by ſeven learned Men, and this muſt be written by ſuch Perſons, ſure for ſome Purpoſe. It is directed as a Petition to the King, and this Petition did come to the Hands of the King (for the King produces it in Council) and my Lord Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Biſhops, owned their Hands to it. Then the Queſtion is, my Lord, whether or no there be any room for any body living to doubt in this Caſe that this was not delivered by my Lords the Biſhops to the King, though it be not a concluſive Evidence of a poſitive Fact; yet unleſs they ſhew ſomething on the other ſide, that may give way for a Suppoſition to the contrary, that it came out of their Hands by Surprize, or that any body elſe delivered it to the King, without their Knowledge or Conſent, here muſt needs be a very violent Preſumption that they did do it; and when nothing of that is ſaid on their ſide, can any Jury upon their Conſciences ſay, that it was not publiſhed by them? And it being found in Middleſex, though it might be written and compoſed in Surrey, yet ſurely we have given a convincing Evidence, that either they publiſhed it, or cauſed it to be publiſhed in Middleſex.

[Pray call Mr. Grayham.]

Crier. He is gone out of the Hall.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, there is in Law a Preſumption that is Evidence, though there be no poſitive Proof.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But not in an Information for a Libel.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This is a meer Queſtion of Fact; there is no Difficulty in the Law of it at all; for it is plain, if theſe Lords, or any of them, did conſent and agree to the publiſhing of this Paper in Middleſex, they are guilty of this Information; and whether they are guilty or not guilty, we do rely upon the Circumſtances proved, which are violent: Firſt, that they were the Men that contrived, and ſet their Hands to it, and ſo were the Authors of it, is undeniable; for they have owned it: Men of their Learning and Parts never did any ſuch thing in vain: And then that they were concerned in the publiſhing of it in Middleſex, we offer for Proof that which was ſaid by Mr. Pepys and Mr. Blathwayt, who, though they do not come directly and expreſsly to the formal Words of ſuch a Queſtion, yet they tell you, eſpecially Mr. Blathwayt, that they did apprehend it, and it was the Collection of all their Thoughts, and they took it for granted, as a Thing that every body was ſatisfied in, that they did deliver that Paper to the King. I muſt confeſs, and agree, there is no Proof of the Delivery of it by my Lords the Biſhops to the King; but we know very well, that it is no Wonder, when a Paper is Libellous, that Men ſhould uſe all the Skill they can to publiſh it with Impunity: And this is a Thing that was done after ſome Time of Premeditation and ſerious Conſultation; for it was ſome Days after the Order for reading the Declaration was publiſhed, that this was framed and delivered, and it concerned them to be wary (as it ſeems they have been) but take this altogether, my Lord, the Paper being found in the King's Hands, it is in theſe Perſons Power, and it lies upon them, to make it out plain, what became of this Paper, which once lay in their own Hands and Cuſtody: They can give an Account of it, they can give Light unto it. If they do not, I ſhall ſubmit to the Jury, whether this is not ſufficient Evidence to convict them; eſpecially when, being examined, they did not make that their Excuſe. They never ſaid, this Paper indeed we ſigned, but we did not intend to publiſh it, we intended to ſtifle it; that had been ſome Excuſe: But for them to ſay now, they did not preſent it to the King, I muſt ſubmit to the Jury, whether they will believe upon this Evidence, that theſe Lords the Biſhops did preſent it, or cauſe it to be preſented to the King; then they are guilty of this Matter: And I leave it to them, and their Conſciences, what they will think upon the whole.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe——

L. C. J. What, again? Well, go on Sir Bartholomew Shower, if we muſt have a Speech——

Mr. Recorder. Nay, my Lord, I would not treſpaſs upon your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops: I think I need not trouble my ſelf to open all of it, becauſe I ſee you are Men of Underſtanding, Men of great Diligence, and have taken Notes your ſelves, ſome of you; therefore I ſhall ſay only ſomething of the Proof that is required in ſuch a Caſe, and of the manner of the Proof that has been given in this Caſe, and then tell you my Opinion in Point of Law. Here is an Information brought by Mr. Attorney General, on Behalf of the King, againſt theſe Reverend Fathers of the Church, the Archbiſhop and the reſt; and it is for publiſhing a ſeditious Libel, under the Pretence of a Petition, in which are contained the Words that are ſeen. Gentlemen, the Information is long; it tells you, that the King, out of his Gracious Clemency to all his loving Subjects, and for other Conſiderations, had thought fit to publiſh a Declaration of Indulgence, that all his loving Subjects might have Liberty of Con-

Conſcience, upon the 4th of April, in the third Year of his Reign, and that this was ſet forth by the King; and that the King, of his farther Grace, about the 27th of April then next following——

Mr. Finch. I humbly beg your Lordſhip's Favour.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. I aſk your Pardon for breaking in upon you when you are directing the Jury. I know I ſhould not do it, but I hope you will not be angry with me for it.

L. C. J. If I thought you did any Service to your Client, I ſhould willingly hearken to you.

Mr. Finch. That which I humbly offer to your Lordſhip, is only to remember your Lordſhip where we were.

L. C. J. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Finch. I would only ſay this, my Lord, the Queſtion is, whether this be Evidence, or no?

L. C. J. I am ſorry Mr. Finch, you have that Opinion of me, as to think I ſhould not leave it fairly to the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I only ſpeak it, my Lord, becauſe if it be Evidence, we have other Matters to offer in Anſwer to that Evidence, and in our own Defence.

L. C. J. If you have more to offer, why did you conclude here, and let me begin to direct the Jury? But ſince you ſay you have other Matter to offer, we will hear it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Direction.

L. C. J. No, no, you do not; you ſay you have further Matter to offer.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we ſhall reſt it here.

L. C. J. No, no, I will hear Mr. Finch. Go on, my Lords the Biſhops ſhall not ſay of me, I would not hear their Counſel: I have been already told of being Counſel againſt them, and they ſhall never ſay that I would not hear their Counſel for them.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, we beſeech your Lordſhip go on with your Directions; for all that Mr. Finch ſaid, was only that this was not ſufficient Evidence.

L. C. J. No, Brother, he ſays you have a great deal more to offer, and I will not refuſe to hear him. The Court will think there was ſomething more than ordinary, therefore I will hear him; ſuch a learned Man as he ſhall not be refuſed to be heard by me, I'll aſſure you. Why don't you go on, Mr. Finch.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for interrupting you; but all that I was going to ſay would have amounted to no more than this, that there being no Evidence againſt us, we muſt of Courſe be acquitted.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. My Lord did intend to have ſaid as much as that, I dare ſay.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen of the Jury, we have had Interruption enough——

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I muſt beg your Pardon for interrupting you now; and I am very glad theſe Gentlemen have given us this Occaſion, becauſe we ſhall now be able to clear this Point. There is a Fatality in ſome Cauſes, my Lord, and ſo there is in this; we muſt beg your Patience for a very little while, for we have Notice that a Perſon of a very great Quality is coming, that will make it appear, that they made their Addreſſes to him, that they might deliver it to the King.

L. C. J. Well— you ſee what comes of the Interuption, Gentlemen, now we muſt ſtay——

[Then there was a Pauſe for near half an Hour.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, put the Caſe that a Man writes a Libel in one County, and it is found in another, is not he anſwerable, unleſs he can ſhew ſomething that may ſatisfy the Jury how it came there?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Ought he not to give an Account what became of it?

L. C. J. No: Look you, Mr. Attorney, you muſt look to your Information, and then you will find the Caſe that you put does not come up to it: It is for Writing, Compoſing, and Publiſhing, and cauſing to be Publiſhed, and all this is laid in Middleſex: Now you have proved none of all theſe Things to be done in the County.

Mr. Att. Gen. They did in Middleſex confeſs it was theirs.

L. C. J. Ay, but the owning their Hands is not a Publication in Middleſex, and ſo I ſhould have told the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for interrupting you.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, does it not put the Proof upon them, to prove how it came out of their Hands into the King's Hands?

L. C. J. No, the Proof lies on your Part.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, give us your Favour to diſmiſs us and the Jury.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, our Witneſſes will be here preſently.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure, my Lord, the Preſumption is on our Side.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. No, the Preſumption is againſt you; for my Lord Archbiſhop lived in Surrey, and it is proved was not out of Lambeth-Houſe ſince Michaelmas, till he came before the Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, good my Lord, we ſtand mightily uneaſy here, and ſo do the Jury, pray diſmiſs us.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, it is your own Fault.—

[Then there was another great Pauſe.]

L. C. J. Sir Bartholomew Shore, now we have Time to hear your Speech, if you will.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, there is no Body come, nor I believe will come.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Yes, he will come preſently; we have had a Meſſenger from him.

[Call Mr. Graham.]

Crier. He is gone, and ſaid he would come preſently.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, he will bring our Witneſſes with him——

[Then there was another Pauſe.]

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, this is very unuſual to ſtay thus for Evidence.

L. C. J. It is ſo; but I am ſure you ought not to have any Favour——Mr. Sollicitor, are you aſſured that you ſhall have this Witneſs that you ſpeak of?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Yes, my Lord, he will be here preſently.

L. C. J. We have ſtaid a great while already, and therefore it is fit that we ſhould have ſome Oath made that he is coming.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Crier tells you, that Mr. Graham did acquaint him, that he would return preſently.

L. C. J. Give him the Book.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Let your Left-Hand give your Right-Hand the Oath.

[The Crier ſworn.]

L. C. J. By the Oath that you have have taken, did Mr. Graham tell you, there was any further Witneſs coming in this Caſe?

Crier. Yes, my Lord, he did; he went out of the Hall, and returned when your Lordſhip was directing the Jury, and he aſked me what the Court were upon; and I told him you were directing the Jury, and then he ſaid, my Lord Sunderland was a coming, but he would go and prevent him; and afterwards he returned, and finding your Lordſhip did not go on to direct the Jury, he ſaid he would go again for my Lord Sunderland, whom he had ſent away, and he is now gone for him, and he ſaid he would bring him with him preſently.

L. C. J. Well then, we muſt ſtay till the Evidence for the King comes, for now there is Oath made that he is coming——

[And after a conſiderable Pauſe the Lord Preſident came.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we muſt pray that my Lord Preſident may be ſworn in this Caſe, on Behalf of the King.

[The Lord Preſident ſworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, I would aſk my Lord Preſident a Queſtion: Your Lordſhip remembers where we left this Cauſe; we have brought it to this Point, That this Petition came to the King's Hands: that it is a Petition written by my Lord Archbiſhop, and ſubſcribed by the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops; but there is a Difficulty made, whether this Petition thus prepared and written was by them delivered to the King, and whether my Lords the Biſhops were concerned in the doing of it, and were privy, or Parties to the Delivery. Now that which I would aſk your Lordſhip, my Lord Preſident, is, Whether they did make their Application to your Lordſhip to ſpeak to the King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did they make their Application to your Lordſhip upon any Account whatſoever?

Lord Preſident. My Lord, my Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and my Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter came to my Office, and told me, they came in the Names of my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and four others of their Brethren, and themſelves, with a Petition, which they deſired to deliver to his Majeſty, and they did come to me to know which was the beſt way of doing it, and whether the King would give them Leave to do it or not? They would have had me read their Petition, but I refuſed it, and ſaid, I thought it did not at all belong to me, but I would let the King know their Deſire, and bring them an Anſwer immediately, what his Pleaſure was in it; which I did. I acquainted the King, and he commanded me to let my Lords the Biſhops know, they might come when they pleaſed, and I went back and told them ſo; upon which they went and fetch'd the reſt of the Biſhops, and when they came, immediately they went into the Bed-Chamber, and into another Room, where the King was. This is that I know of the Matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. About what Time was this, pray my Lord?

Lord Preſident. I believe there could not be much Time between my coming from the King, and their fetching their Brethren, and going in to the King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They were with the King that Day?

Lord Preſident. Yes, they were.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was this before they appeared in Council?

Lord Preſident. Yes, it was ſeveral Days before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then I think now, my Lord, the Matter is very plain.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Did they acquaint your Lordſhip that their Buſineſs was to deliver a Petition to the King?

Lord Preſident. Yes, they did.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And they would have had my Lord read it, he ſays.

Mr. Att. Gen. And this was the ſame Day that they did go in to the King?

Lord Preſident. The very ſame Day, and I think the ſame Hour; for it could not be much longer.

L. C. J. Now it is upon you truly; it will be preſumed to be the ſame, unleſs that you prove that you delivered another——Pray, my Lord, did you look into the Petition?

Lord Preſident. No, I refuſed it; I thought it did not concern me.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Did you ſee them deliver it to the King, my Lord?

Lord Preſident. I was not in the Room when it was delivered.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. They did open their Petition to your Lordſhip, did they?

Lord Preſident. They offered me to read it, but I did refuſe.

L. C. J. Will you aſk my Lord Preſident any Queſtion, you that are for the Defendants?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then, my Lord, we muſt beg one Thing for the ſake of Jury, if your Lordſhip can turn your ſelf a little this Way, and deliver the Evidence you have given over again, that they may hear it.

Lord Preſident. My Lord, I will repeat it as near as I can; I think I ſhall not vary the Senſe. The Biſhops of St. Aſaph and Chicheſter came to my Office, I do not know juſt the Day when, but it was to let me know, that they came in the Names of the Archbiſhop, and four others of their Brethren——— Is it neceſſary I ſhould name them?

L. C. J. Do it, my Lord, if you can.

Lord Preſident. They were the Biſhops of Ely, Bath and Wells, Briſtol, and Peterborough: They came to let me know, in the Name of the Archbiſhop, thoſe four, and themſelves, that they had a Petition to deliver to the King, if he would give them Leave, and deſired to know of me which was the beſt way to do it. I told them I would know the King's Pleaſure, and bring them Word again: They offered me their Petition to read, but I did not think it fit for me to do it, and therefore I refuſed, and would not read it; but I went immediately to the King, and acquainted his Majeſty with it, and he commanded me to let them know they might come when they would, which I immediately did: They ſaid they would go and ſpeak with ſome of their Brethren that were not far off: In the mean time I gave Order that they ſhould be admitted when they came, and they did in a little Time return, and went firſt into the Bed-Chamber, and then into the Room where the King was.

Mr.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And this was before they came and appeared at the Council?

Lord Preſident. Yes, it was.

Mr. Pollexfen. Your Lordſhip did not read any thing of the Petition?

Lord Preſident. No, Sir, I did not, I refuſed it.

Mr. Pollexfen. Nor does your Lordſhip know what Petition was delivered to the King?

Lord Preſident. I did not know any thing of it from them then.

L. C. J. Now you may make your Obſervations upon this two Hours hence: Now we ſhall hear what Mr. Finch had further to offer, I ſuppoſe.

[Then my Lord Preſident went away.]

Mr. Soll. Gen. I think now it is very plain.

L. C. J. Truly, I muſt needs tell you, there was a great Preſumption before, but there is a greater now, and I think I ſhall leave it with ſome Effect to the Jury. I cannot ſee but here is enough to put the Proof upon you. They came to the Lord Preſident, and aſked him how they might deliver a Petition to the King: He told them he would go ſee what the King ſaid to it. They would have had him read their Petition, but he refuſed it: He comes and tells them the King ſaid they might come when they would: Then thoſe two that came to my Lord Preſident went and gathered up the other four (the Archbiſhop indeed was not there) but they ſix came, and my Lord Preſident gave Direction they ſhould be let in, and they did go into the Room where the King was. Now this, with the King's producing the Paper, and their owning it at the Council, is ſuch a Proof to me, as I think will be Evidence to the Jury of the Publication.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, my Lord, thus far they only can go; the Archbiſhop was not there, and ſo there is no Evidence againſt him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. As to the Writing, we have given Proof againſt him, for it is all his Hand.

Mr. Pollexfen. That ſtill is in another County, and there is nothing proved to be done by my Lord Archbiſhop in Middleſex; and next, for the other ſix Lords, my Lord Preſident does not ſay that this is the Petition that they ſaid they had to deliver to the King; nor did he ſee them deliver any thing to the King; but that is ſtill left doubtful, and under your Judgment, ſo that it ſtands upon Preſumption, not upon Proof, that this is the ſame, and left under Conſideration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will leave it fairly to the Jury upon this Fact.

Mr. Pollexfen. If ſo, then we deſire to be heard in our Defence.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Charge which Mr. Attorney has been pleaſed to make againſt my Lords the Biſhops, and that is this, That they did conſpire to diminiſh the Royal Authority, and Regal Prerogative, Power, and Government of the King, and to avoid the Order of Council; and in Proſecution of this, they did falſely, maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly make a Libel againſt the King, under Prerence of a Petition, and did publiſh the ſame in the King's Preſence.

This, Gentlemen, is a very heinous and heavy Charge; but you ſee how ſhort their Evidence is: The Evidence they bring forth is only, that my Lords the Biſhops preſented the Paper to the King in the moſt private and humble Manner they could: That which they have been ſo many Hours a proving, and which they cry up to be as ſtrong an Evidence as ever was given, proves it to be the fartheſt from Sedition in the doing of it that can be; and you ſee what it is, it was a Petition to be relieved againſt an Order of Council, which they conceive they were aggrieved by. They indeed do not deal fairly with the Court nor with us, in that they do not ſet it forth that it was a Petition.

L. C. J. That was over-ruled before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I do not inſiſt upon it now ſo much an Exception to the Information, as I do the Evidence. They ſet this forth to be a ſcandalous Matter, but it only contains their Reaſons, whereby they would ſatisfy his Majeſty why they cannot comply in a Concurrence with his Majeſty's Pleaſure; and therefore they humbly beſeech the King, and beg and requeſt him (as the Words of it are) that his Majeſty would be pleaſed not to inſiſt upon their diſtributing and reading of this Declaration: So the Petitioners, on Behalf of themſelves and the whole Clergy of England, beg of the King that he would pleaſe not to inſiſt upon it.

Gentlemen, you may obſerve it, that there is nothing in this Petition that contains any thing of Sedition in it; and it would be ſtrange this Petion ſhould be Felo de ſe, and by one Part of it deſtroy the other. It is laid indeed in the Information, that it was with Intent and Purpoſe to diminiſh the King's Royal Authority; but I appeal to your Lordſhip, the Court, and the Jury, whether there be any one Word in it, that any way touches the King's Prerogative, or any Tittle of Evidence that has been given to make good the Charge. It is an Excuſe barely for their Non-compliance with the King's Order, and a begging of the King with all Humility and Submiſſion, that he would be pleaſed not to inſiſt upon the reading of his Majeſty's Declaration upon theſe Grounds, becauſe the diſpenſing Power upon which it was founded, had been ſeveral times in Parliament declared to be againſt Law, and becauſe it was a Caſe of that Conſequence that they could not in Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience concur in it.

My Lord, Mr. Attorney has been pleaſed to charge in this Information, that this is a falſe, malicious, and ſeditious Libel: Both the Falſity of it, and that it was malicious and ſeditious, are all Matters of Fact, which, with Submiſſion, they have offered to the Jury no Proof of, and I make no Queſtion but eaſily to demonſtrate the quite contrary.

For, my Lord, I think it can be no Queſtion, but that any Subject that is commanded by the King to do a Thing which he conceives to be againſt Law, and againſt his Conſcience, may humbly apply himſelf to the King, and tell him the Reaſon why he does not that thing, he is commanded to do, why he cannot concur with his Majeſty in ſuch a Command.

My Lord, that which Mr. Attorney did inſiſt upon in the Beginning of this Day (and he pretended to cite ſome Caſes for it) was, that in this Caſe, my Lords the Biſhops were not ſued as Biſhops, nor proſecuted for their Religion. Truly, my Lord, I do not know what they are ſued for elſe: The Information is againſt them as Biſhops, it is for an Act they did as Biſhops, and no otherwiſe; and for an Act they did, and do conceive they lawfully might do with relation to their Eccleſiaſtical Polity, and the Government of their People as Biſhops.

The next Thing that Mr. Attorney offered was, That it was not for a Non-feaſance, but for a Feaſance. It is true, my Lord, it is for a Feaſance in making of the Petition, but it was to excuſe a Non-feaſance, the not reading according to the Order; and this ſure was lawful for all the Biſhops as Subjects to do; and I ſhall ſhew it was certainly the Duty of my Lords the Biſhops, or any Peer of this Realm, to do the ſame in a like Caſe. It was likewiſe ſaid, they were proſecuted here for affronting the Government, and intermeddling with Matters of State; but I beg your Lordſhip and the Jury to conſider, whether there is one Tittle of this mentioned in the Petition, or any Evidence given of it. The Petition does not meddle with any thing of any Matter of State, but refers to an Eccleſiaſtical Matter, to be executed by the Clergy, and to a Matter that has Relation to Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes; ſo that they were not Buſy-bodies, or ſuch as meddled in Matters that did not relate to them, but that which was properly within their Sphere and Juriſdiction.

But after all, there is no Evidence, nor any Sort of Evidence that is given by Mr. Attorney, that will maintain the leaſt Tittle of this Charge; and how he comes to leave it upon this Sort of Evidence I cannot tell; all that it amounts to is, That my Lords the Biſhops being grieved in this Manner, made this Petition to the King in the moſt private and reſpectful Manner; and for him to load it with ſuch horrid black Epithets, that it was done libellouſly, maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly, and to oppoſe the King and Government, 'tis very hard; 'tis a Caſe of a very extraordinary Nature, and I believe my Lords the Biſhops cannot but conceive a great deal of Trouble, that they ſhould lie under ſo heavy a Charge, and that Mr. Attorney ſhould draw ſo ſevere an Information againſt them, when he has ſo little Proof to make it out.

My Lord, by what we have to ſay to it, we hope we ſhall give your Lordſhip and the Jury Satisfaction, that we have done but our Duties, ſuppoſing here has been a ſufficient Evidence of the Fact given, which we leave to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

My Lord, we ſay in ſhort, That this Petition is no more than what any Man, if he be commanded to do any thing, might humbly do it, and not be guilty of any Crime: And, my Lord, as to the Matter of our Defence, it will conſiſt of theſe Heads:

Firſt, We ſhall conſider the Matter of this Petition.

Secondly, The Manner of the delivering it, according as they have given Evidence here; and,

Thirdly, The Perſons that have delivered this Petition. And we hope to make it appear, beyond all Queſtion, that the Matter contained in this Petition, is neither falſe nor contrary to Law, but agreeable to all the Laws of the Land in all Times. We ſhall likewiſe ſhew you (though that appear ſufficiently to you already) that the Manner of delivering it was ſo far from being ſeditious, that it was in the moſt ſecret and private Manner, and with the greateſt Humility and Duty imaginable. And then as to the Perſons, we will ſhew you that they are not ſuch as Mr. Attorney ſays, who meddle with Matters of State, that are out of their Sphere; but they are Perſons concerned, and concerned in Intereſt in the Caſe, to make this humble Application to the King. And when we have proved all this Matter, you will ſee how ſtrangely we are blackned with Titles and Epithets which we no ways deſerve, and of which, God be thanked, there is no Proof.

For, my Lord, for the Matter of the Petition, we ſhall conſider two Things.

The Firſt is, The Prayer, which is this; They humbly beg and deſire of the King, on Behalf of themſelves and the reſt of the Clergy, that he would not inſiſt upon the Reading and Publiſhing of this Declaration.

Surely, my Lord, there is nothing of Falſity in this, nor any thing that is contrary to Law, or unlawful for any Man that is preſſed to any thing, eſpecially by an Order of Council; and this is nothing but a Petition againſt an Order of Council; and if there be an Order that commands my Lords the Biſhops to do a Thing that ſeems grievous to them, ſurely they may beg of the King that he would not inſiſt upon it.

As for this Matter, they were ſo well ſatisfied about it, and ſo far from thinking that it was any Part of a Libel, that they left it out of the Information, and ſo have made a deformed and abſurd Story of it, without Head or Tail, a Petition directed to no body, and for nothing, it being without both Title and Prayer; ſo that this is plain, it was lawful to petition.

Then, my Lord, the next Thing is, the Reaſons which my Lords the Biſhops come to acquaint the King with; why, in Honour and Conſcience they cannot comply with, and give Obedience to this Order; and the Reaſons, my Lord, are two.

The firſt Reaſon that is aſſigned, is, the ſeveral Declarations that have been in Parliament (ſeveral of which are mentioned) that ſuch a Power to diſpenſe with the Law, is againſt Law, and that it could not be done but by an Act of Parliament; for that is the Meaning of the Word Illegal, that has no other Signification but unlawful; the ſame Word in Point of Signification with the Word Illicitè, which they have uſed in their Information, a Thing that cannot be done by Law; and this they are pleaſed to tell the King, not as declaring their own Judgments, but what has been declared in Parliament; though if they had done the former, they being Peers of the Realm, and Biſhops of the Church, are bound to underſtand the Laws, eſpecially when (as I ſhall come to ſhew you) they are made Guardians of theſe Laws; and if any thing go amiſs, and contrary to theſe Laws, they ought to inform the King of it.

My Lord, the next Thing is, Becauſe it is a Thing of ſo great Moment, and the Conſequence that will ariſe from their publiſhing of this Declaration, and that too, my Lord (for the latter I ſhall begin firſt with) there can be no Queſtion about, or any Pretence that this is libellous or falſe; for certainly it is a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence to the whole Nation that ever was, therefore it cannot be falſe or libellous to ſay ſo.

My Lord, I would not mention this, for I am loth to touch upon Things of this Nature, had not the Information itſelf made it the very Giſt of the Charge; for the Information (if there be any thing in it) ſays, that it was to diminiſh the King's Prerogative and Regal Power in publiſhing that Declaration.

in

Now, my Lord, what the Conſequence of this would be, and what my Lords the Biſhops meant by ſaying, it was a Cauſe of great Moment, will appear, by conſidering that which is the main Clauſe in the Declaration, at which my Lords the Biſhops ſcrupled, which is the main Stumbling-block to my Lords, and has been to many honeſt Men beſides, and that is this.

" We do likewiſe declare, It is our Royal Will " and Pleaſure, that from henceforth the Execution " of all and all manner of Penal Laws, in Matters " Eccleſiaſtical, for not coming to Church, or not " receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non- " conformity to the Religion eſtabliſhed; or for " or by reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in " any Manner whatſoever, be immediately ſuſ- " pended; and the further Execution of the ſaid " Penal Laws, and every of them, is hereby ſuſ- " pended."

Here the Lord Chief Juſtice ſpeaking aſide, ſaid,

L. C. J. I muſt not ſuffer this; they intend to diſpute the King's Power of ſuſpending Laws.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. My Lord, they muſt neceſſarily fall upon that Point; for if the King hath no ſuch Power (as clearly he hath not in my Judgment) the natural Conſequence will be, that this Petition is no Diminution of the King's Regal Power, and ſo not ſeditious or libellous.

L. C. J. Brother, I know you are full of that Doctrine; but however, my Lords the Biſhops ſhall have no Occaſion to ſay, that I deny to hear their Counſel. Brother, you ſhall have your Will for once, I will hear them, let them talk till they are weary.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I deſire no greater Liberty to be granted them, than what in Juſtice the Court ought to grant, that is, to hear them in Defence of their Clients.

Now, my Lord, this Clauſe either is of ſome legal Effect and Signification, or it is not. If Mr. Attorney, or the King's Counſel, do ſay it is of no Effect in Law, then there is no Harm done; then this Petition does no ways impeach the King's Prerogative, in ſaying, it has been declared in Parliament, according as the King's Counſel do agree the Law to be.

But, my Lord, if it have any Effect in Law, and theſe Laws are ſuſpended by Virtue of this Clauſe in the Declaration; then certainly, my Lord, it is of the moſt diſmal Conſequence that can be thought of, and it behoved my Lords, who are the Fathers of the Church, humbly to repreſent it to the King.

For, my Lord, by this Declaration, and particularly by that Clauſe in it, not only the Laws of our Reformation, but all the Laws for the Preſervation of the Chriſtian Religion in general are ſuſpended, and become of no Force; if there be ſuch an Effect in Law wrought by this Declaration as is pretended; that is, that the Obligation of Obedience to them ceaſeth, the Reaſon of it is plain, the Words cannot admit of ſuch a Quibble as to pretend, that the ſuſpending the Execution of the Law, is not a ſuſpending of the Law; for we all know the End of every Law, in its primary Intent, is Obedience to it; that of the Penalty comes in by the way of Puniſhment and Recompence for their Diſobedience.

Now, my Lord, if this Declaration does diſcharge the King's Subjects from their Obedience to, and the Obligation from thoſe Laws; then pray, my Lord, where are we? Then all the Laws of the Reformation are ſuſpended, and the Laws of Chriſtianity itſelf, by thoſe latter Words [or for or by reaſon of Religion in any Manner whatſoever] ſo that it is not confined to the Chriſtian Religion, but all other Religions are permitted under this Clauſe; and thus all our Laws for keeping the Sabbath, and which diſtinguiſh us from Heathens, will be ſuſpended too.

My Lord, this is ſuch an Inconvenience as, I think, I need name no more; and it is a very natural Conſequence from that Clauſe of the Declaration; it diſcharges at once all Miniſters and Clergymen from performing their Duty in reading the Service of the Church; it diſcharges their Hearers from attending upon that Service.

When a Law is ſuſpended, the Obligation thereof is taken away; and thoſe that before thought themſelves bound to obey, now conclude they are not ſo obliged; and what a Miſchief that will be to the Church, which is under the Care of my Lords the Biſhops, your Lordſhip will eaſily apprehend.

Theſe Things, my Lord, I only mention, to ſhew the great and evil Conſequences that apparently follow upon ſuch a Declaration, which made my Lords the Biſhops decline obeying the Order, and put them under a Neceſſity of applying thus to the King, to acquaint him with the Reaſons why they could not comply with his Commands to read this Declaration to the People, becauſe the Conſequences thereof were ſo great, it tending naturally to lead the People into ſo great an Error, as to believe thoſe Laws were not in Force, when in Truth and Reality they are ſtill in Force, and continue to oblige them.

And that being the ſecond Reaſon in this Petition, I come next to conſider it, to wit, that the Parliament had often declared this pretended Power to be Illegal; and for that we ſhall read the ſeveral Records in Parliament mentioned in their Petition, and produce ſeveral antient Records of former Parliaments that prove this point; and particularly in the Time of Richard the Second, concerning the Statute of Proviſors, where there were particular Diſpenſations for that Statute, the King was enabled to do it by Act of Parliament, and could not do it without.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, go to your Proofs, and reſerve your Arguments till afterwards.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I do but ſhortly mention theſe Things; ſo that, my Lord, as to the Matter of this Petition, we ſhall ſhew you, that it is true and agreeable to the Laws of the Land.

Then, my Lord, as to the Manner of delivering it, I need ſay no more, but that it is plain from their Evidence, that it was in the moſt private and humble Manner. And, as the Lord Preſident ſaid, Leave was aſked of the King for them to be admitted to preſent it: Leave was given, and accordingly they did it.

We come then, my Lord, to the third Thing, the Perſons, theſe noble Lords; and we ſhall ſhew they are not Buſy-bodies, but in this Matter have done their Duty, and meddled with their own Affairs. That, my Lord, will, appear,

Firſt, By the general Care that is repoſed in them by the Law of the Land: They are frequently in our Books called the King's Spiritual Judges; they are entruſted with the Care of Souls, and the Superintendency over all the Clergy is their principal Care.

But,

But, beſides this, my Lord, there is another ſpecial Care put upon them, by the expreſs Words of an Act of Parliament; for, over and above the general Care of the Church, by Virtue of their Offices as Biſhops, the Act of 1 Eliz. Cap. 2. makes them ſpecial Guardians of the Law of Uniformity, and of that other Law in his late Majeſty's Reign; where all the Clauſes of that Statute of 1 Eliz. are revived, and made applicable to the preſent State of the Church of England. Now in that Statute of 1 Eliz. there is this Clauſe.

And for the due Execution hereof, the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, do, in God's Name, earneſtly require and charge all the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, and other Ordinaries, that they do endeavour themſelves, to the Utmoſt of their Knowledges, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceſes and Charges, as they will anſwer before God, for ſuch Evils and Plagues wherewith Almighty God may juſtly puniſh his People, for neglecting this good and wholſome Law.

This is the Charge that lies upon the Biſhops, to take Care of the Execution of that Law; and I ſhall pray by and by, that it may be read to the Jury.

Mr. Soll. Gen. That is very well, indeed! To what purpoſe?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. So that, my Lord, by this Law it is plain, that my Lords the Biſhops, upon pain of bringing upon themſelves the Imprecation of this Act of Parliament, are obliged to ſee it executed; and then, my Lord, when any thing comes under their Knowledge, eſpecially if they are to be Actors in it, that hath ſuch a Tendency to deſtroy the very Foundation of the Church, as the Suſpenſion of all the Laws that related to the Church muſt do, it concerns them that have no other Remedy, to addreſs the King, by Petition, about it.

For that, Mr. Attorney, my Lord, has agreed, that if a proper Remedy be purſued in a proper Court, for a Grievance complained of, though there may be many hard Words that elſe would be ſcandalous, yet being in a regular Courſe, they are no Scandal: And it is ſaid in Lake's Caſe, in my Lord Hobart.

My Lord, we muſt appeal to the King, or we can appeal to no Body, to be relieved againſt an Order of Council with which we are aggrieved; and it is our Duty ſo to do, according to the Care that the Law hath placed in us.

Beſides, my Lord, the Biſhops were commanded by this Order to do an Act relating to their Eccleſiaſtical Function, to diſtribute it to be read by their Clergy: And how could they in Conſcience do it, when they thought Part of the Declaration was not according to Law?

Pray, my Lord, What has been the Reaſon of his Majeſty's conſulting of his Judges? And if his Majeſty, or any the great Officers, by his Command, are about to do any thing that is contrary to Law, was it ever yet an Offence to tell the King ſo? I always look'd upon it as the Duty of an Officer or Magiſtrate, to tell the King what is Law, and what is not Law.

In Cavendiſh's Caſe, in the Queen's Time, there was an Office granted of the Retorn of the Writs of Superſedeas in the Court of Common-Pleas; and he comes to the Court, and deſires to be put into the Poſſeſſion of the Office: The Court told him, They could do nothing in it, but he muſt bring his Aſſize. He applies to Queen, and ſhe ſends, under the Privy-Seal, a Command to ſequeſter the Profits, and to take Security to anſwer the Profits, as the Judgment of the Law ſhould go: But the Judges there return an Anſwer, That it was againſt Law, and they could not do it. Then there comes a ſecond Letter, reciting the former, and commanding their Obedience: The Judges returned for Anſwer, They were upon their Oaths, and were ſworn to keep the Laws, and would not do it.

My Lord, The like was done in the Time of my Lord Hobart: We have it reported in Anderſon, in a Caſe where a Prohibition had gone: There came a Meſſage from Court, that a Conſultation ſhould be granted; and that was a Matter wherein there were various Opinions, whether it was ex Neceſſitate, or Diſcretionary; but there they returned, That it was againſt Law, for any ſuch Meſſage to be ſent.

Now here, my Lord, is a Caſe full as ſtrong: My Lords the Biſhops were commanded to do an Act, which they conceived to be againſt Law, and they declined it, and tell the King the Reaſon; and they have done it in the moſt humble Manner that could be, by way of Petition. If they had done (as the Civil Law terms it) Reſcribere generally, that had been lawful; but here they have done it in a more reſpectful Manner, by an humble Petition. If they had ſaid the Law was otherwiſe, that ſure had been no Fault; but they do not ſo much as that, but they only ſay, it was ſo declared in Parliament; and they declare it with all Humility and Dutifulneſs. So that, my Lord, if we conſider the Perſons of the Defendants, they have not acted as Buſy bodies; and therefore, as this Caſe is, when we have given our Evidence, here will be an Anſwer to all the Implications of Law that are contained in this Information: For they would have this Petition work by Implication of Law, to make a Libel of it; but by what I have ſaid, it will appear, there was nothing of Sedition, nothing of Malice, nothing of Scandal in it; nothing of the Salt, and Vinegar, and Pepper, that they have put into the Caſe. We ſhall prove the Matters that I have opened for our Defence, and then, I dare ſay, your Lordſhip and the Jury will be of Opinion, we have done nothing but our Duty.

Mr. Finch. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, This Information ſets forth (as you may obſerve upon opening it) that the King having, by his Royal Prerogative, ſet forth his Declarations that we have read, and made an Order of Council for the reading the ſaid Declarations in the Churches, and that the Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſhould ſeverally ſend them into their Dioceſes, to be read; my Lords the Biſhops, that are the Defendants, did conſult and conſpire together to diminiſh the Kingly Authority, and Royal Prerogative of the King, and his Power and Government in his Regal Prerogative, in ſetting forth his Declaration; and that, in Proſecution of that Conſpiracy, they did contrive (as it was laid in the Information) a malicious, ſeditious, falſe, and feigned Libel, under Pretence of a Petition, and ſo ſet forth the Petition; and that they publiſhed the Petition in the Preſence of the King.

To this Charge in the Information, Not Guilty being pleaded, the Evidence that hath been given for the King, I know hath been obſerved by the Court and Jury, and I know will be taken into to Conſideration, how far it does come up to the Proof of the Delivery of this Petition by my Lords the Biſhops; for all that was ſaid till my Lord Preſident was pleaſed to come, was no Evidence of any Delivery at all; and my Lord Preſident's Evidence is, that they were going to deliver a Petition; but whether they did deliver it, or did it not, or what they did deliver, he does not know. This is all the Evidence that has been given for the King.

But ſuppoſing now, my Lord, that there were Room to preſume that they had delivered this Petition ſet forth in the Information, let us conſider what the Queſtion is between the King and my Lords the Biſhops: The Queſtion is, whether they are guilty of contriving to diminiſh the King's Regal Authority and Royal Prerogative, in his Power and Government, in ſetting forth this Declaration? Whether they are guilty of the making and preſenting a malicious, ſeditious, and ſcandalous Libel; and whether they have publiſhed it, as it is ſaid in the Information, in the King's Preſence?

So that the Queſtion is not now reduced to this, Whether this Paper, that is ſet forth in the Information, was delivered to the King by my Lords the Biſhops; but whether they have made a malicious and ſcandalous Libel, with an Intent to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative, and Kingly Authority? And then, if you Gentlemen ſhould think that there is Evidence given ſufficient to prove that my Lords the Biſhops have delivered to the King that Paper which is ſet forth in the Information; yet, unleſs they have delivered a falſe, malicious, ſeditious, and ſcandalous Libel; unleſs they have publiſhed it, to ſtir up Sedition in the Kingdom; and unleſs they have contrived this by Conſpiracy, to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative and Authority, and that Power that is ſaid to be in the King, my Lords the Biſhops are not guilty of this Accuſation.

There are in this Declaration ſeveral Clauſes, which, upon reading of the Information, I am ſure, cannot but have been obſerved by you, Gentlemen of the Jury; and one ſpecial Cauſe hath been by the Counſel already opened to you, and I ſhall not enlarge upon it.

My Lord, this Petition that is thus delivered to the King, if it be a Libel, a ſcandalous and ſeditious Libel (as the Information calls it) it muſt be ſo, either for the Matter of the Petition, or for the Perſons that delivered the Petition, or for the Manner of their preſenting and delivering it: But neither for the Matter, nor for the Perſons, nor for the Manner of preſenting it, is there any Endeavour to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative, nor to ſtir up Sedition, nor Reflection upon the King's Royal and Kingly Authority.

The Petition does humbly ſet forth to his Majeſty, that there having been ſuch a Declaration, and ſuch an Order of Council; they did humbly repreſent to his Majeſty, that they were not averſe to any thing commanded them in that Order, in reſpect to the juſt and due Obedience that they owed to the King, nor in reſpect of their Want of a due Tenderneſs to thoſe Perſons to whom the King had been pleaſed to ſhew his Tenderneſs; but the Declaration being founded upon a Power of Diſpenſing, which had been declared illegal in Parliament ſeveral Times, and particularly in the Years 1662, 72, and 85, they did humbly beſeech his Majeſty (they not being able to comply with his Command in that Matter) that he would not inſiſt upon it.

Now, my Lord, Where is the Contrivance to diminiſh the King's Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative?

This is a Declaration founded upon a Power of diſpenſing, which undertakes to ſuſpend all Laws Eccleſiaſtical whatſoever; for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or any other Non-conformity to the Religion eſtabliſhed, or for, or by reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in any Manner whatſoever; ordering that the Execution of all thoſe Laws be immediately ſuſpended, and they are thereby declared to be ſuſpended; as if the King had a Power to ſuſpend all the Laws relating to his eſtabliſhed Religion, and all the Laws that were made for the Security of our Reformation. Theſe are all ſuſpended by his Majeſty's Declaration (as it is ſaid) in the Information, by Virtue of his Royal Prerogative, and Power ſo to do.

Now, my Lord, I have always taken it, with Submiſſion, that a Power to abrogate Laws, is as much a Part of the Legiſlature, as a Power to make Laws: A Power to lay Laws aſleep, and to ſuſpend Laws, is equal to a Power of abrogating them; for they are no longer in being, as Laws, while they are ſo laid aſleep, or ſuſpended: And to abrogate all at once, or to do it Time after Time, is the ſame Thing; and both are equally Parts of the Legiſlature.

My Lord, In all the Education that I have had, in all the ſmall Knowledge of the Laws that I could attain to, I could never yet hear of, or learn, that the Conſtitution of the Government in England was otherwiſe than thus, That the whole Legiſlative Power is in the King, Lords, and Commons; the King and his two Houſes of Parliament. But then, if this Declaration be founded upon a Part of the Legiſlature, which muſt be by all Men acknowledged, not to reſide in the King alone, but in the King, Lords, and Commons, it cannot be a legal and true Power, or Prerogative.

This, my Lord, has been attempted, but in the laſt King's Time; it never was pretended till then; and in that firſt Attempt, it was ſo far from being acknowledged, that it was taken Notice of in Parliament, and declared againſt: So it was in the Years 1662, 1672.

In the Year —62, where there was but the leaſt Umbrage given of ſuch a diſpenſing Power; although the King had declared, in his Speech to the Parliament, that he wiſhed he had ſuch a Power, which his Declaration before ſeemed to aſſume; the Parliament was ſo jealous of this, that they immediately made their Application to his Majeſty, by an Addreſs againſt the Declaration; and they give Reaſons againſt it, in their Addreſs: One in particular was, That the King could not diſpenſe with thoſe Laws, without an Act of Parliament.

There was another Attempt in 1672, and then, after his Majeſty had, in his Speech mentioned his Declaration to them, the Parliament there again, particularly the Houſe of Commons, did humbly addreſs to his Majeſty; ſetting forth, that this could not be done by Law, without an Act of Parliament: And your Lordſhip, by and by, upon reading the Record, will be ſatisfied what was the Event of all this. His Majeſty himſelf was ſo far pleaſed to concur with them in that Opinion, tha he cancelled his Declaration, tore off the Seal, and cauſed

cauſed it to be made known to the Houſe of Lords, by the Lord Chancellor, who, by his Majeſty's Command, ſatisfied the Houſe of it, that his Majeſty had broken the Seal, and cancell'd the Declaration; with this further Declaration, which is enter'd in the Records of the Houſe, That it ſhould never be drawn into Example, or Conſequence.

My Lord, The Matter ſtanding thus, in reſpect to the King's Prerogative, and the Declarations that had been made in Parliament; conſider next, I beſeech you, how far my Lords the Biſhops were concerned in this Queſtion, humbly to make their Application to the King.

My Lords the Biſhops lying under a Command to publiſh this Declaration, it was their Duty, as Peers of the Realm, and Biſhops of the Church of England, humbly to apply themſelves to his Majeſty, to make known their Reaſons why they could not obey that Command; and they do it with all Submiſſion, and all Humility, repreſenting to his Majeſty what had been declared in Parliament; and it having been ſo declared, they could not comply with his Order, as apprehending that this Declaration was founded upon that which the Parliament declared to be illegal; and ſo his Majeſty's Command to publiſh this Declaration, would not warrant them ſo to do. This they did as Peers; and this they had a Right to do as Biſhops, humbly to adviſe the King.

For, ſuppoſe, my Lord (which is not to be ſuppoſed in every Caſe, nor do I ſuppoſe it in this: But ſuppoſe that there might be a King of England that ſhould be miſled. I do not ſuppoſe that to be the Caſe now, I ſay, but I know it hath been the Caſe formerly) that the King ſhould be environed with Counſellors that had given him evil Advice; it hath been objected as a Crime againſt ſuch evil Counſellors, that they would not permit and ſuffer the great Men of the Kingdom to offer the King their Advice. How often do we ſay in Weſtminſter-hall, that the King is deceived in his Grant: Their is ſcarce a Day in the Term, but it is ſaid in one Court or other; but it was never yet thought an Offence to ſay ſo: And what more is there in this Caſe?

My Lord, if the King was miſ-informed, or under a Miſapprehenſion of the Law, my Lords, as they are Peers, and as they are Biſhops, are concerned in it; and if they humbly apply themſelves to the King, and offer him their Advice, where is the Crime?

My Lord, theſe noble Lords, the Defendants, had more than an ordinary Call to this; for beſides the Duty of their Office, and the Care of the Church, that was incumbent on them as Biſhops, they were here to become Actors; for they were, by that Order of Council, commanded themſelves to publiſh it, and to diſtribute it to the ſeveral Miniſters in their ſeveral Dioceſes, with their Commands to read it: Therefore they had more than ordinary Reaſon to concern themſelves in the Matter.

Next, we are to conſider, my Lord, in what Manner this was done: They make their Application to the King, by an humble Petition, with all the Decency and Reſpect that could be ſhewn; aſking Leave, firſt, to approach his Perſon; and having Leave, they offered my Lord Preſident the Matter of their Petition, that nothing might ſeem hard, or diſ-reſpectful, or as if they intended any thing that was unfit to be avowed. When they had taken all this Care in their Approach, and begging Leave for it, they come ſecretly to the King in private, when he was all alone, and there they humbly preſent this Petition to his Majeſty. Now, how this can be called the Publication of a malicious and ſeditious Libel, when it was but the preſenting of a Petition to the King alone; and how it can be ſaid to be with an Intent to ſtir up Sedition in the People againſt his Majeſty, and to alienate the Hearts of his People from him, when it was in this private Manner delivered to him himſelf only, truly I cannot apprehend.

My Lord, I hope nothing of this can be thought an Offence: If the Jury ſhould think that there has been Evidence ſufficient given to prove that my Lords the Biſhops did deliver this Paper to the King, yet that is not enough to make them guilty of this Information, unleſs this Paper be likewiſe found to be in Diminution of the King's Royal Prerogative and Regal Authority in diſpenſing with, and ſuſpending of all Laws, without Act of Parliament: Unleſs it be found to be a Libel againſt the King, to tell him, that in Parliament it was ſo and ſo declared: And unleſs the preſenting this by Way of Petition (which is the Right of all People that apprehended themſelves aggrieved, to approach his Majeſty by Petition) be a libelling of the King: And unleſs this humble Petition, in this Manner preſented to the King in private, may be ſaid to be a malicious and ſeditious Libel, with an Intent to ſtir up the People to Sedition: Unleſs all this can be found, there is no Man living can ever find my Lords the Biſhops guilty upon this Information. Therefore, my Lord, we will go on, and make out this Matter that we have opened to your Lordſhip, if Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor think fit to argue the Points that we have opened.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a Word on the ſame Side. For the firſt Point, it is a Point of Law, whether the Matter contained in this Petition be a Libel. The King's Counſel pretend it is ſo, becauſe it ſays, the Declaration is founded upon a Power the Parliament has declared to be illegal. But we ſay, that whatſoever the King is pleaſed to ſay in any Declaration of his, it is not the King's ſaying of it that makes it to be Law. Now, we ſay, this Declaration under the Great Seal, is not agreeable to the Laws of the Land; and that for this Reaſon, becauſe it does, at one Blow, ſet aſide all the Law we have in England.

My Lord, if this be denied, we muſt a little debate this Matter; for they are almoſt all penal Laws; not only thoſe before the Reformation, but ſince; upon which the whole Government, both in Church and State, does in a great Meaſure depend.

Eſpecially, my Lord, in Matters of Religion, they are all penal Laws: For, by the Act of Uniformity, which my Lords the Biſhops are ſworn to obſerve, and adjured by an expreſs Clauſe in the Act, no Man is to preach unleſs he be Epiſcopally ordained; no Man is to preach without a Licence. If all this be ſet aſide, I confeſs then, it will go very far into the whole Eccleſiaſtical Government. If this be denied, we are ready to argue that too.

L. C. J. They are to do ſo ſtill.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am ſure the Conſequence is otherwiſe, if this Declaration ſignify any any thing. And if it be the Will of the King, my Lord, the Will of the King is what the Law is. If ſo be the King's Will be not conſonant to the Law, it is not obliging.

My Lord, The Caſes that we have had of Diſpenſations, are all ſo many ſtrong Authorities againſt a general, or particular Abrogation. My Lord, that is a Matter of Law, which if it fall out to be any way doubtful, it will be fit to have it debated and ſettled.

If they will ſay, that the Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical can be abrogated, or nulled, or made void pro tempore, or for Life, without the meeting of the King and People in Parliament, I muſt confeſs, they ſay a great thing, as it is a Point of great Concern; but I think that will not be ſaid: And all that has been ever ſaid in any Caſe, touching Diſpenſations, proves quite the contrary, and aſſerts what I affirm. For why ſhould any Man go about to argue, that the King may diſpenſe with this or that particular Law, if at once he can diſpenſe with all the Law, by an undoubted Prerogative? This is a Point of Law which we inſiſt upon, and are ready to argue with them; but we will go on with the reſt of thoſe Things that we have offered: And firſt, we will read the Act of Uniformity, made 1 Eliz. that Clauſe of it, where they are ſo ſtrictly charged to ſee the Execution of that Law.

This Act, my Lord, by the Act of Uniformity, made in the Beginning of the late King's Reign, is revived, with all the Clauſes in it relating to this Matter. If then this be a Duty incumbent upon them, and their Oaths require it of them; and if they find that the Pleaſure of the King, in his Declaration, is that which is not conſonant to this Law, what can they do?

Can any thing be more humble, or done with a more Chriſtian Mind, than by Way of Petition, to inform the King in the Matter? For I never thought it, nor hath it ever, ſure, been thought by any body elſe, to be a Crime to petition the King: For the King may be miſtaken in the Law, ſo our Books ſay; and we, every Day, in Weſtminſter-hall, argue againſt the King's Grants, and ſay, he is deceived in his Grants. It is the great Benefit and Liberty which the King gives to his Subjects, to argue the Legality or Illegality of his Grants.

My Lord, when all this is done, to make this to be a Libel, by putting in the Words Malicious, Seditious, Scandalous, and with an Intent to raiſe Sedition, would be pretty hard.——My Lord, we pray that Clauſe of the Statute may be read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What for?

Mr. Pollexfen. It is a general Law, and therefore the Court will take Notice of it; and we pray the Jury may hear it read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I agree it to be as Mr. Pollexfen has opened; and I agree it to be as Sir Robert Sawyer has opened it.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. My Lord, we ſhall put it upon a ſhort Point. My Lords the Biſhops are here accuſed of a Crime of a very heinous Nature as can be; they are here branded and ſtigmatized by this Information, as if they were ſeditious Libellers; when, my Lord, it will in Truth fall out, that they have done no more than their Duty; their Duty to God, their Duty to the King, and their Duty to the Church.

For in this Caſe, that which we humbly offer to your Lordſhip (and inſiſt upon it, as very plain) is this; That the Kings of England have no Power to ſuſpend, or diſpenſe with the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, that eſtabliſh Religion: That is it which we ſtand upon for our Defence. And we ſay, That ſuch a diſpenſing Power with Laws and Statutes, is a Thing that ſtrikes at the very Foundation of all the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of the King's Subjects whatſoever. If the King may ſuſpend the Laws of the Land which concern our Religion, I am ſure there is no other Law but he may ſuſpend: And if the King may ſuſpend all the Laws of the Kingdom, what a Condition are all the Subjects in, for their Lives, Liberties, and Properties? All at Mercy.

My Lord, the King's legal Prerogatives are as much for the Advantage of his Subjects as of himſelf; and no Man goes about to ſpeak againſt them: But, under Pretence of legal Prerogatives, to extend the Power of the King to ſupport a Prerogative that tends to the Deſtruction of all his Subjects, their Religion and Liberties; in that, I think, they do the King no Service, who go about to do it.

But now we ſay, with your Lordſhip's Favour, that theſe Laws are the great Bulwark of the Reformed Religion; they are, in Truth, that which fenceth the Religion and Church of England, and we have no other human Fence beſides. They were made upon a Foreſight of the Miſchief that had, and might come, by falſe Religions in this Kingdom; and they were intended to defend the Nation againſt them, and to keep them out; particularly, to keep out the Romiſh Religion, which is the very worſt of all Religions, from prevailing among us; and that is the very Deſign of the Act for the Teſts, which is entituled, An Act to prevent Dangers that may happen from Popiſh Recuſants.

My Lord, if this Declaration ſhould take Effect, what would be the End of it? All Religions are let in, let them be what they will; Ranters, Quakers, and the like; nay, even the Roman Catholick Religion, as they call it, which was intended, by theſe Acts of Parliament, and by the Act of Uniformity, and ſeveral other Acts, to be kept out of this Nation, as a Religion no Way tolerable, nor to be endured here.

If this Declaration takes Effect, that Religion will ſtand upon the ſame Terms with the Proteſtant Religion. Suſpend thoſe Laws, and that Romiſh Religion, that was intended to be prohibited, and ſo much Care was taken, and ſo many Statutes made to prohibit it, will come in; and all this Care, and all thoſe Statutes go for nothing. This one Declaration ſets them all out of Doors; and then that Religion ſtands upon equal Terms with the eſtabliſhed Religion.

My Lord, we ſay this farther, that my Lords the Biſhops have the Care of the Church, by their very Function and Offices; and are bound to take Care to keep out all thoſe falſe Religions that are prohibited, and deſigned to be kept out by the Law. My Lords the Biſhops finding this Declaration founded upon a meer pretended Power, that had been continually oppoſed and rejected in Parliament, could not comply with the King's Command to read it.

My Lord, Such a Power to diſpenſe with, or ſuſpend the Laws of a Nation, cannot with any Shadow of Reaſon be. It is not long ſince, that ſuch a Power was ever pretended to by any, but ſuch as have the Legiſlative too; for it is plain, that ſuch a Power muſt at leaſt be equal to the Power that made the Laws. To diſpenſe with a Law muſt argue a Power greater, or at leaſt as great as that which made the Law.

My Lord, it has been often ſaid in our Books, That where the King's Subjects are concerned in Intereſt, the King cannot ſuſpend, or diſpenſe with a particular Law. But, my Lord, how can the King's Subjects be more concerned in Intereſt, than when their Religion lies at Stake? It has been reſolved, upon the Statute of Simony, that where the Statute has diſabled the Party to take, there the King could not enable him againſt that Act of Parliament: And ſhall it be ſaid, that by his Diſpenſation he ſhall enable one to hold an Office who is diſabled by the Teſt-Act?

My Lord, we ſay, The Courſe of our Law allows no ſuch Diſpenſation as the Declaration pretends to: And he that is but meanly read in our Law, muſt needs underſtand this, That the Kings of England cannot ſuſpend our Laws; for that would be to ſet aſide the Law of the Kingdom: And then we might be clearly without any Laws, if the King ſhould pleaſe to ſuſpend them.

'Tis true, we ſay, the laſt King Charles was prevailed upon, by Miſ-information, to make a Diſpenſation ſomewhat of the Nature of this, though not ſo full an one; for that diſpenſed only with ſome few Ceremonies, and Things of that Nature: But the Houſe of Commons (this taking Air) in 1662, repreſent this to the King by a Petition. And what is it that they do repreſent? That he, by his Diſpenſation, has undertaken to do that which nothing but an Act of Parliament can do; that is, the diſpenſing with Penal Laws, which is only to be done by Act of Parliament. And thereupon it was thought fit, upon the King's Account, to bring in an Act for it in ſome Caſes.

My Lord, the King did then, in his Speech to the Parliament (which we uſe as a great Argument againſt this diſpenſing Power) ſay this, "That "conſidering the Circumſtances of the Nation, "he could wiſh with all his Heart, that he had "ſuch a Power to diſpenſe with ſome Laws, in "ſome Particulars." And thereupon there was a Bill, in order to an Act of Parliament, brought in, giving the King a Power to diſpenſe; but, my Lord, with a great many Qualifications: Which ſhews plainly, that it was taken by the Parliament, that he had no Power to diſpenſe with the Laws of himſelf.

My Lord, Afterwards in 1672, the King was prevailed upon again to grant another Diſpenſation ſomewhat larger——

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I would not interrupt you, but we have heard of this over and over again already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then, ſince your Lordſhip is ſatisfied of theſe Things, as I preſume you are, elſe I ſhould have gone on. I have done, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. But, my Lord, we ſhall go a little higher than that, and ſhew that it has been taken all along as the antient Law of England, that ſuch Diſpenſations ought to be by the King and the Parliament, and not by the King alone.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, if you will admit every one of the Counſel to ſpeech it before they give their Evidence, when ſhall we come to an End of this Cauſe? We ſhall be here till Midnight.

L. C. J. They have no Mind to have an End of the Cauſe, for they have kept it three Hours longer than they need to have done.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, this Caſe does require a great deal of Patience.

L. C. J. It does ſo, Brother; and the Court has had a great deal of Patience: But we muſt not ſit here only to hear Speeches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, after all their Speeches of two Hours long, let them read any thing if they have it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We will begin with the Record of Richard the Second—Call William Fiſher.

[William Fiſher, Clerk to Mr. Ince, ſworn.]

L. C. J. What do you aſk him?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Shew him that Copy of the Record.

[The Record was then ſhewn him.]

L. C. J. Where had you thoſe, Sir?

Mr. Fiſher. Among the Records in the Tower.

L. C. J. Are they true Copies?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you examine them by the Record?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then hand them in; put them in.

Clerk reads. Ex Rotulo Parliamenti de Anno Regni Regis Richardi Secundi 15. N. 1.——My Lord, it is written in French, and I ſhall make but a bad Reading of it.

Sir Samuel Aſtry. Where is the Man that examined it?—Do you underſtand French?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The Record is in another Hand than this; they may eaſily read it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who copied this Paper?

Mr. Fiſher. I did examine it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you examine it with?

Mr. Fiſher. I looked upon that Copy, and Mr. Halſtead read the Record.

L. C. J. Young Man, read out.

Fiſher reads. Vendredy Lende maine del Almes qu'eſtoit le primier jour——

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray tell us what it is you would have read?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I'll tell you what it is, Mr. Sollicitor: 'Tis the Diſpenſation with the Statute of Proviſors: And the Act of Parliament does give the King a Power to diſpenſe till ſuch a Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Don't you think the King's Prerogative is affirmed by many Acts of Parliament?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. If the King could diſpenſe without an Act of Parliament, what need was there for the making of it?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Serjeant, We are not to argue with you about that yet.

L. C. J. Read it in Engliſh, for the Jury to underſtand it.

Mr. Fiſher. My Lord, I cannot undertake to read it ſo readily in Engliſh.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Why don't you produce the Records that are mentioned in the Petition, thoſe in King Charles the Second's Time?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We will produce our Records in Order of Time, as they are.

Sir

Sir Samuel Aſtry. There is the Clerk of the Records of the Tower, Mr. Halſtead, will read it very well in French or Engliſh.

[Then Mr. Halſtead was ſworn to interpret the Record into Engliſh, according to the beſt of his Skill and Knowledge; but not reading very readily——a true Copy of the Record in Engliſh follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, in the 15th Year of King Richard the Second, Numero Primo.]

" FRiday, the Morrow of All-Souls, which was " the firſt Day of this Parliament, holden at " Weſtminſter, in the fifteenth Year of the Reign " of our Lord King Richard the Second, after " the Conqueſt, the Reverend Father in God the " Archbiſhop of York, Primate and Chancellor of " England, by the King's Commandment, being " preſent in Parliament, pronounced and declared " very nobly and wiſely, the Cauſe of the Summons of this Parliament, and ſaid, Firſt, That " the King would, that holy Church principally, " and afterwards the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, " and alſo the Cities and Boroughs ſhould have and " enjoy their Liberties and Franchiſes as well as " they had them, and enjoyed them, in the Time " of his noble Progenitors, Kings of England; " and alſo in his own Time. And afterwards " ſaid, The Summons of this Parliament was principally for three Occaſions. The firſt Occaſion " was, To ordain how the Peace and Quiet of " the Land, which have heretofore been greatly " blemiſhed and diſturbed, as well by Detraction " and Maintenance, as otherwiſe, might be better holden and kept, and the Laws better executed, and the King's Commands better obeyed. The ſecond Occaſion was, To ordain and " ſee how the Price of Wools, which is beyond " meaſure leſſened and impaired, might be better amended and enhanced. And alſo, That " in caſe the War ſhould begin again, at the End " of the preſent Truce, to wit, at the Aſſumption " of our Lady next coming, to ordain and ſee, " how and whereby the ſaid War may be maintained at the leaſt Charge of the People. And " the third Occaſion was, touching the Statutes " of Proviſors, To ordain and ſee how our holy " Father might have that which to him belongs, " and the King that which belongs to him, and " to his Crown; according unto that, Render unto Cæſar the Things that are Cæſar's, and unto " God the Things which are God's."

Then the other Record of Richard the Second was read as follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, the fifteenth Year of King Richard the Second, N. 8.

" Be it remembred, touching the Statute of " Proviſors, That the Commons, for the great " Confidence which they have in the Perſon of " our Lord the King, and in his moſt excellent " Knowledge, and in the great Tenderneſs which " he hath for his Crown, and the Rights thereof; and alſo, in the noble and high Diſcretions " of the Lords, have aſſented, in full Parliament, " that our ſaid Lord the King, by Advice and Aſſent of the ſaid Lords, may make ſuch Sufferance, " touching the ſaid Statute, as ſhall ſeem to him " reaſonable and profitable, until the next Parliament, ſo as the ſaid Statute be not repealed in no " Article thereof: And that all thoſe who have " any Benefices by Force of the ſaid Statute, before this preſent Parliament; and alſo, That all " thoſe to whom any Aid, Tranquillity, or Advantage is accrued, by Virtue of the ſaid Statute of the Benefices of holy Church (of which " they were heretofore in Poſſeſſion) as well by " Preſentation, or Collation of our Lord the King, " as of the Ordinaries, or Religious Perſons whatſoever, or by any other Manner or Way whatſoever, may freely have and enjoy them, and " peaceably continue their Poſſeſſion thereof, without being ouſted thereof, or any ways challenged, hindred, moleſted, diſquieted, or grieved " hereafter, by any Proviſors, or others, againſt " the Form and Effect of the Statute aforeſaid, by " reaſon of the ſaid Sufferance in any Time to " come. And moreover, That the ſaid Commons " may diſagree at the next Parliament to this Sufferance, and fully reſort to the ſaid Statute, if it " ſhall ſeem good to them to do it: With Proteſtation, That this Aſſent, which is a Novelty, " and has not been done before this Time, be not " drawn into Example or Conſequence for Time to " come. And they prayed our Lord the King, " that the Proteſtation might be entred of Record, in the Roll of the Parliament: And the " King granted, and commanded to do it.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now, my Lord, we will go on——— This was in Richard the Second's Time: And a Power is given by the Commons to the King, with the Aſſent of the Lords, to diſpenſe, but only to the next Parliament, with a Power reſerved to the Commons; and to diſagree to it, and retract that Conſent of theirs the next Parliament.

Sir George Treby. The Statute of Proviſors was, and is a Penal Law, and concerning Eccleſiaſtical Matters too; viz. The Collating and Preſenting to Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Benefices, and Dignities of the Church: And in this Record now read, the Parliament give the King a limited Power, and for the ſhort Time, to diſpenſe with that Statute. But, to obviate all Pretence of ſuch a Power's being inherent in the Crown as a Prerogative, they declare, (1.) That it was a Novelty; that is as much as to ſay, that the King had no ſuch Power before. (2.) That it ſhould not be drawn into Example; that is to ſay, that he ſhould have no ſuch Power for the future.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now we will go on to the Records mentioned in the Petition; thoſe in the laſt King's Time, in 1662, and 1672; and that in this King's Time, in 1685. ——— Where is the Journal of the Houſe of Lords?

[Mr. Walker ſworn.]

L. C. J. Is that the Book of the Houſe of Lords?

Mr. Walker. It is the Journal of the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. Is it kept by you?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is it kept?

Mr. Walker. In the uſual Place, here in Weſtminſter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What is that?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is the Journal of the Houſe of Lords———But, my Lord, there is one Thing that is mentioned in the laſt Record that was read, which is worth your Lordſhip's and the Jury's Obſervation; That it is declared a Novelty, and a Proteſtation, that it ſhould not be drawn into Precedent for the future.

L. C. J. That has been obſerved, Brother: Let us hear your Record read.

Clerk reads——— Die Mercurii 18. die Februarii, 1662.

" His Majeſty was preſent this Day, ſitting in " the Regal Crown and Robes, the Peers being " likewiſe in their Robes: The King gave Or- " der to the Gentleman Uſher of the Black-Rod, " to ſignify to the Houſe of Commons his Plea- " ſure, that they preſently come up, and attend " his Majeſty, with their Speaker; who being " preſent, his Majeſty made this Speech follow- " ing.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM very glad to meet you here again, ha- " ving thought the Time long ſince we part- " ed, and often wiſhed you had been together, to " help me in ſome Occaſions which have fallen " out: I need not repeat them unto you, you " have all had the Noiſe of them in your ſeveral " Countries; and, God be thanked, they were " but Noiſe, without any worſe Effects.

" To cure the Diſtempers, and compoſe the " differing Minds that are yet amongſt us, I ſet " forth my Declaration of the 26th of December. " In which you may ſee, I am willing to ſet " Bounds to the Hopes of ſome, and to the Fears " of others; of which when you ſhall have ex- " amined well the Grounds, I doubt not but I " ſhall have your Concurrence therein. The Truth " is, I am in my Nature an Enemy to all Seve- " rity for Religion and Conſcience, how miſta- " ken ſoever it be, when it extends to capital and " ſanguinary Puniſhments; which I am told, were " began in Popiſh Times. Therefore, when I ſay " this, I hope I ſhall not need to warn any here, " not to infer from thence, that I mean to favour " Popery. I muſt confeſs to you, there are many " of that Profeſſion, who, having ſerved my Fa- " ther, and myſelf very well, may fairly hope for " ſome Part in that Indulgence I would willing- " ly afford to others who diſſent from us. But let " me explain myſelf, leſt ſome miſtake me here- " in, as I heard they did in my Declaration. I " am far from meaning by this a Toleration, or " qualifying them thereby to hold any Offices or " Places of Truſt in the Government. Nay, " further, I deſire ſome Laws may be made, to " hinder the Growth and Progreſs of their Do- " ctrine.

" I hope you have all ſo good an Opinion of " my Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, as I need " not tell you, I will not yield to any therein, not " to the Biſhops themſelves, nor in my liking the " Uniformity of it, as it is now eſtabliſhed; which " being the Standard of our Religion, muſt be " kept pure and uncorrupted, free from all other " Mixtures. And yet, if the Diſſenters will de- " mean themſelves peaceably and modeſtly under the " Government, I could heartily wiſh I had ſuch a " Power of Indulgence to uſe upon Occaſion———

Sir George Treby. Pray, Sir, read that out diſtinctly.

Clerk reads.—" I could heartily wiſh I had ſuch " a Power of Indulgence to uſe upon Occaſion, " as might not needleſly force them out of the " Kingdom; or, ſtaying here, give them Cauſe " to conſpire againſt the Peace of it.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" It would look like Flattering in me, to tell " you in what Degree I am confident of your " Wiſdom and Affection in all Things that relate " to the Greatneſs and Proſperity of the King- " dom. If you conſider well what is beſt for us " all, I dare ſay we ſhall not diſagree. I have no " more to ſay to you at preſent, but, once again, " to bid you heartily welcome."

Mr. Finch. The next Thing we ſhall ſhew you is, that after the King had made this Speech, and wiſhed he had ſuch a Power of Indulgence to uſe upon Occaſion, there was a Bill in the Houſe of Lords brought in, to enable the King to diſpenſe with ſeveral Laws: We ſhall ſhew you the Journal, where it was read and committed; but further than that it went not.

L. C. J. What Uſe do you make of this, Mr. Finch.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You may eaſily apprehend the Uſe we ſhall make of it. (The King, in his Speech, ſays, He wiſhed he had ſuch a Power) the Houſe of Lords thought he had not; and therefore they order'd a Bill to be brought in, to enable him.——— Read the Journal of the Lords of the 13th of March, 1662.

Clerk reads. Die Veneris 13. die Martii, 1662.

" After ſome Debate, whether the Houſe ſhould " be put into a Grand Committee, for the further " Debate of the Bill concerning his Majeſty's " Power in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, it was put to " the Queſtion; viz.

" As many of your Lordſhips as would have this " Houſe adjourned, and put into a Committee to " conſider of the ſaid Bill, ſay, Content; others, " Not Content.

" Paſſed in the Affirmative.

" And then the Lord Chamberlain of the " Houſhold was directed to take the Chair, as " formerly; which he did accordingly.

" And after Debate, the Houſe was reſumed, " after the Grand Committee had appointed a " Sub-Committee, touching the ſaid Bill.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all in the Journal of the Houſe of Lords about this Matter.——— We will now ſhew you the Bill itſelf.

Clerk reads. " An Act concerning his Majeſty's Power in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

" WHereas divers of his Majeſty's Subjects, " through Error of Judgment, and miſ- " guided Conſciences (whereunto the Licentiouſ- " neſs of theſe late unhappy Times have much " contributed) do not conform themſelves to the " Order of divine Worſhip and Service eſtabliſh- " ed by Law; and though his Majeſty and both " Houſes of Parliament are fully ſatisfied, that " thoſe Scruples of Conſcience, from whence this " Nonconformity ariſeth, are ill grounded; and " that the Government of the Church, with the " Service thereof (as now eſtabliſhed) is the beſt " that is any where extant, and moſt effectual to " the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion: " Yet hoping that Clemency and Indulgence " may, in Time, wear out thoſe Prejudices, and " reduce the Diſſenters to the Unity of the " Church; and conſidering that this Indulgence, " how neceſſary ſoever, cannot be diſpenſed by " any certain Rule, but muſt vary, according to " the Circumſtances of Time, and the Temper " and Principles of thoſe to whom it is to be " granted; and his Majeſty being the beſt Judge " when, and to whom this Indulgence is to be " diſpenſed, or as may be moſt conſiſtent with " the publick Peace, and without juſt Cauſe of " Offence

Next, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew you what was done in the Year 1672.——Read the King's Speech the 5th of February, 1672.

[The Journals of the Lords Houſe were delivered in.]

Clerk reads. Die Mercurij, 5. Februarij, 1672.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM glad to ſee you here this Day. I would " have called you ſooner together, but that I " was willing to eaſe you and the Country, till there " were an abſolute Neceſſity.

" Since you were laſt here, I have been forced to " a moſt important, neceſſary, and expenſive War; " and I make no doubt but you will give me ſuit- " able and effectual Aſſiſtance to go through with " it. I refer you to my Declaration for the Cauſes, " and indeed the Neceſſity of this War, and ſhall " now only tell you, That I might have digeſted " the Indignities to my own Perſon, rather than " have brought it to this Extremity, if the Intereſt, " as well as the Honour of the whole Kingdom had " not been at Stake; and if I had omitted this Con- " juncture, perhaps I had not again ever met with " the like Advantage.

" You will find that the laſt Supply that you gave " me, did not anſwer Expectation for the Ends you " gave it, the Payments of my Debts; therefore I " muſt in the next Place recommend them again to " your ſpecial Care.

" Some few Days before I declared the War, I " put forth my Declaration for Indulgence to Diſ- " ſenters, and have hitherto found a good Effect of " it, by ſecuring my Peace at Home, when I had " War Abroad: There is one Part in it that has " been ſubject to Miſconſtructions, which is that " concerning the Papiſts, as if more Liberty was " granted to them than to other Recuſants, when " 'tis plain there is leſs; for the others have publick " Places allowed them, and I never intended that " they ſhould have any, but only have the Free- " dom of their Religion in their own Houſes, with- " out any Concourſe of others; and I could not " grant them leſs than this, when I had extended ſo " much more Grace to others, moſt of them having " been Loyal, and in the Service of me, and the King " my Father: And in the whole Courſe of this Indul- " gence I do not intend that it ſhall any way preju- " dice the Church, but I will ſupport its Rights, and " it in its full Power.

" Having ſaid this, I ſhall take it very ill to re- " ceive Contradiction in what I have done; and I " will deal plainly with you, I am reſolved to ſtick " to my Declaration.

" There is one Jealouſy more which is malici- " ouſly ſpread Abroad, and yet ſo weak and frivo- " lous, that I once thought it not of Moment enough " to mention; but it may have gotten ſome Ground " with ſome well-minded People, and that is, that " the Forces which I have raiſed in this War were " deſigned to controul Law and Property. I wiſh " I had had more Forces the laſt Summer; the " Want of them then, convinces me, I muſt raiſe " more againſt this next Spring; and I do not doubt " but you will conſider the Charge of them in your " Supplies.

" I will

" I will conclude with this Assurance to you, " That I will preserve the true Reformed Protes- " stant Religion, and the Church, as it is now esta- " blished in this Kingdom, and that no Man's Pro- " perty or Liberty shall ever be invaded. I leave " the rest to the Chancellor.

Read the 1ſt of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. Die Sabbati primo die Martii, 1672.

" His Majeſty this Day made a ſhort Speech, " as follows.

My Lords,

" You know, that at the Opening of this Seſ- " ſion, I ſpoke here to your Satisfaction; it has " notwithſtanding begotten a greater Diſquiet in " the Houſe of Commons than I could have ima- " gined.

" I received an Addreſs from them, which I " looked not for, and I made them an Anſwer " that ought to have contented them; but on " the contrary, they have made me a Reply of " ſuch a Nature, that I cannot think fit to proceed " any further in this Matter without your Ad- " vice.

" I have commanded the Chancellor to ac- " quaint you with all the Tranſactions, wherein " you will find both me and your ſelves highly " concerned. I am ſenſible for what relates to " me, and I aſſure you, my Lords, I am not leſs " ſo for the Privilege, and the Honour of this " Houſe.

" Afterwards the Lord Chancellor read the " ſeveral Papers and Addreſſes of the Houſe of " Commons, and his Majeſty's Anſwer there- " unto, and opened his Majeſty's Proceedings up- " on them."

The Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons was read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Paſs over that, you have read it already.

Clerk reads. The next, his Majeſty's Anſwer to the Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons was read as follows,———

* Sir Rob. Sawyer. That hath been read too.

Clerk reads. Then was read the Reply of the Houſe of Commons to his Majeſty's Anſwer, as followeth,———

Mr. Finch. You have read that likewiſe.

Clerk reads. " Upon this it is ordered, that the " Lord Treaſurer, Duke of Buckingham, Earl of " Bridgwater, Earl of Northampton, Earl of Briſtol, " Earl of Berks, Earl of Bolingbroke, and the Earl of " Angleſey, do forthwith withdraw and conſider " what humble Thanks is fit to be given to his " Majeſty for his great Favour in communicating " this Buſineſs to this Houſe, and report the ſame. " And accordingly, the ſaid Lords Committees " did withdraw themſelves for that Purpoſe.

" The Lords being returned, the Duke of Buck- " ingham reported what the Committee had pre- " pared to preſent to his Majeſty by way of Thanks, " which was read as followeth.

" We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Par- " liament aſſembled, do unanimouſly preſent to " your Sacred Majeſty our moſt humble Thanks, " for having been pleaſed to communicate to us " what has paſſed between your Majeſty and the " Houſe of Commons, whereby you have gra- " ciouſly offered us the Means of ſhewing our " Duty to your Majeſty, and of aſſerting the " antient juſt Rights and Privileges of the Houſe " of Peers.

" The Queſtion being put, whether to agree " with the Committee,

" It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

" Ordered, That his Majeſty be deſired, that his " Speech, and the Papers read this Day, may be " entered into the Journal-Book of this Houſe.

" The Lord Treaſurer, the Duke of Bucking- " ham, and the Lord Chamberlain, are appointed " to attend his Majeſty preſently, to know his " Pleaſure, what Time and Place this whole Houſe " ſhall wait upon him, to preſent the humble " Thanks of this Houſe, for his great Favour " ſhewed this Day.

" Ordered, that upon Monday Morning next, " this Houſe will debate the whole Matter of his " Majeſty's Speech, and theſe Papers; and to " conſider the Points of Privilege, and what elſe " may ariſe thereupon.

" The Lords that were appointed to attend his " Majeſty, return with this Anſwer.

" That his Majeſty has appointed this After- " noon at five of the Clock, for this Houſe to " wait upon him in the Banquetting-Houſe at " Whitehall.

" Ordered, that all the Judges now in Town, " ſhall attend this Houſe on Monday Morning " next.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The third of March, 1672, is the next.

Clerk reads. Die Lunæ 3. die Martii, 1672.

" The Lord Chancellor reported, that the " whole Houſe on Saturday laſt waited upon his " Majeſty at Whitehall, and preſented the humble " Addreſs of this Houſe, and his Majeſty was " pleaſed to return this Anſwer.

My Lords,

" I take this Addreſs of yours very kindly; I " will always be very affectionate to you, and ex- " pect you ſhould ſtand by me, as I will always " by you.

" Then the Houſe took into Conſideration " the whole Matter of his Majeſty's Speech " on Saturday, and the three Papers which his " Majeſty acquainted this Houſe withal, and " all the ſaid Papers in their Order were read, " and after a long Debate, the Queſtion be- " ing put,

" Ordered, That the Judges now in Town, ſhall " attend to-morrow Morning.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The 4th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. " Next, The Houſe took into " Conſideration the Advice to be given to his " Majeſty, concerning the Addreſſes made to him " from the Houſe of Commons.

" The Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons, " and his Majeſty's Anſwer were read, and after " a long Debate, the Queſtion being put, Whe- " ther the King's Anſwer to the Houſe of Com- " mons, in referring the Points now controverted " to a Parliamentary Way by Bill, is good and " gracious, that being a proper and natural Courſe " for Satisfaction therein ?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The 8th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. Die Sabbati 8. die Martij, 1672.

" His Majeſty in his Royal Throne, adorned " with his Crown and Regal Ornaments, com- " manded the Gentleman Uſher of the Black- " Rod, to give Notice to the Houſe of Commons, " that they attend his Majeſty preſently.

" The Commons being come with their Speak- " er, his Majeſty made this ſhort Speech follow- " ing.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" YEſterday you preſented me an Addreſs, as the " beſt Means for the Satisfying and Compo- " ſing the Minds of my Subjects, to which I " freely and readily agreed, and I ſhall take Care " to ſee it performed accordingly.

" I hope, on the other Side, you Gentlemen of " the Houſe of Commons will do your Part ; for " I muſt put you in mind, it is near five Weeks " ſince I demand a Supply, and what you voted " unanimouſly upon it, did both give Life to my " Affairs at Home, and diſhearten mine Enemies " Abroad ; but the ſeeming Delay it hath met " withal ſince, hath made them to take new Cou- " rage, and they are now preparing for this next " Summer a greater Fleet, as they ſay, than ever " they have had yet ; ſo that if the Supply be not " very ſpeedily diſpatch'd, it will be altogether in- " effectual, and the Safety, Honour and Intereſt " of England muſt of Neceſſity be expoſed. Pray " lay this to Heart, and let not the Fears and Jea- " louſies of ſome draw an inevitable Ruin upon " us all.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" If there be any Scruple remaining with you con- " cerning the Suſpenſion of Penal Laws, I here faith- " fully promiſe you, that what has been done in that " Particular, ſhall not for the future be drawn ei- " ther into Conſequence or Example. And as I daily " expect from you a Bill for my Supply, ſo I aſ- " ſure you, I ſhall as willingly paſs any other you " ſhall offer me that may tend to the giving you " Satisfaction in all your juſt Grievances.

" Next my Lord Chancellor reported, That " both Houſes waited upon the King Yeſterday, " and preſented him with the Addreſs againſt the " Growth of Popery, and his Majeſty hath been " pleaſe to return this Anſwer.

" My Lords and Gentlemen.

" I do heartily agree with you in your Addreſs, " and ſhall give ſpeedy Order to have it put in " Execution. There is one Part to which I believe " it is not your Intention that it ſhould extend ; " for I can ſcarce ſay, thoſe are in my Pay that " are preſently to be employed abroad ; but as for " all other Parts, I ſhall take Care it ſhall be done " as you deſire.

After which the Lord Chancellor ſaid, he had ſomewhat more to impart to the Houſe by the King's Command, which was,

That his Majeſty laſt Night, having ſpoken with ſeveral Members of both Houſes, found ſome Diſ-ſatisfaction remaining concerning his Anſwer to their Addreſs in the Particular of the Officers to be employed abroad, of which Number he had five or ſix that were of the beſt Officers of France and Flanders, and being his own Subjects, he had been very ſollicitous to get ; but if that bred any Umbrage, the King commanded him to let them know, that he reſolves to give both his Houſes full Satisfaction to their Deſires.

There was another Particular that the Lord Chancellor ſaid he thought fit to acquaint them with, which, though it was by his Majeſty's Leave, yet it was not by his Command : However, he thought it his Duty to acquaint the Houſe with it (Mr. Secretary Coventry intending to acquaint the Houſe of Commons with the ſame) That his Majeſty had the laſt Night, in Purſuance of what he then intended, and declared this Morning, concerning the Suſpenſion of Penal Laws not being for the future drawn either into Conſequence or Example, cauſed the original Declaration under the Great-Seal, to be cancelled in his Preſence, whereof himſelf and ſeveral other Lords of the Council were Witneſſes.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We ſhall now come to that which paſs'd in the Parliament in 1685 —— Read the 9th of November, 1685.

[The Journal of the Lords, 1685, put in.]

Clerk reads. " His Majeſty being on his Royal " Throne adorned with his Regal Robes and " Crown (the Lords being in their Robes alſo) " commanded the Gentleman-Uſher to give No- " tice to the Houſe of Commons that they imme- " diately attend his Majeſty ; who being come, " his Majeſty made the following Speech.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" AFter the Storm that ſeemed to be coming " upon us when we parted laſt, I am glad to " meet you all again in ſo great Peace and Quietneſs ; " God Almighty be praiſed, by whoſe Bleſſing " that Rebellion was ſuppreſſed ; but when I " reflect what an inconſiderable Number of Men " began it, and how long they carried it on with- " out any Oppoſition, I hope every body will be " convinced that the Militia, which hath hitherto " been ſo much depended upon, is not ſufficient " for ſuch Occaſions, and that there is nothing but " a good Force of well-diſciplin'd Troops in con- " ſtant Pay that can defend us from ſuch as either " at Home or Abroad are diſpoſed to diſturb us.

" And in Truth, my Concern for the Peace and " Quiet of my Subjects, as well as for the Safety " of the Government, make me think it neceſſary " to increaſe the Number to the Proportion I " have done. This I owed as well to the Honour " as to the Security of the Nation, whoſe Re- " putation was ſo infinitely expoſed unto all our " Neighbours, by having lain open to this late " wretched Attempt, that it is not to be repaired " without keeping ſuch a Body of Men on Foot, " that none may ever have the Thoughts again of " finding us ſo miſerably unprovided.

" It is for the Support of this great Charge " which is now more than Double to what it was, " that I aſk your Aſſiſtanee in giving me a Supply " anſwerable to the Expence it brings along with " it: And I cannot doubt, but what I have be- " gun ſo much for the Honour and Defence of " the Government, will be continued by you with " all the Chearfulneſs and Readineſs that is requi- " ſite for a Work of ſo great Importance.

" Let no Man take Exceptions that there are ſome " Officers in the Army not qualified according to the " late Teſts for their Employments: The Gentle- " men, I muſt tell you, are moſt of them well " known to me, and having formerly ſerved with " me on ſeveral Occaſions, and always approved " the Loyalty of their Principles by their Pra- " ctices, I think them fit now to be employed un- " der me; and will deal plainly with you, that " after having had the Benefit of their Services in " ſuch Time of Need and Danger, I will neither " expoſe them to Diſgrace, nor myſelf to the Want of " them, if there ſhould be another Rebellion to make " them neceſſary to me.

" I am afraid ſome Men may be ſo wicked to " hope and expect that a Difference may happen " between you and me upon this Occaſion; but " when you conſider what Advantages have riſen " to us in a few Months by the good Underſtand- " ing we have hitherto had, what wonderful Ef- " fects it has already produced in the Change of " the whole Scene of Affairs abroad, ſo much " more to the Honour of the Nation, and the Fi- " gure it ought to make in the World, and that " nothing can hinder a further Progreſs in this " Way, to all our Satisfactions, but Fears and " Jealouſies amongſt ourſelves; I will not appre- " hend that ſuch a Misfortune can befal us as a " Diviſion, or but a Coldneſs between me and " you; nor that any thing can ſhake you in your " Steadineſs and Loyalty to me, who, by God's " Bleſſing, will ever make you all Returns of " Kindneſs and Protection, with a Reſolution to " venture even my own Life in the Defence of " the true Intereſt of this Kingdom.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we pray that theſe half Dozen Lines of the Statute 1 Eliz. may be read.

[A Statute-Book was then produced by Mr. Ince.]

L. C. J. We will have it read out of our own Book. [Which was delivered into Court.]

Clerk reads. " This is 1 Eliz. Cap. 2. An Act for " Uniformity of Religion, &c. Whereabout is it?

Mr. Ince. 'Tis the 15th Paragraph, at theſe Words——And for the due Execution, &c.

Clerk reads. " And for due Execution hereof, " the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty, the Lords " Spiritual and Temporal in this Parliament aſ- " ſembled, do in God's Name earneſtly require and " charge all the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and " other Ordinaries, that they ſhall endeavour them- " ſelves, to the utmoſt of their Knowledge, that the " due and true Execution hereof may be had " throughout their Dioceſes and Charges, as they " will anſwer before God for ſuch Evils and Plagues, " wherewith Almighty God may juſtly puniſh his " People for neglecting this good and wholeſome " Law."

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, the Charge is a Charge for a Libel, and there are two Things to be conſidered.

Firſt, Whether the Biſhops did deliver this Paper to the King? But that we leave upon the Evidence that has been given; only we ſay, there has been no direct Proof of that.

In the next Place, ſuppoſing they did deliver this Petition to the King, Whether this be a Libel upon the Matter of it, the Manner of delivering it, or the Perſons that did it?

And

And with Submiſſion, my Lord, this cannot be a Libel, although it be true, that they did ſo deliver it.

Firſt, my Lord, there is a little Diſingenuity offered to my Lords the Biſhops, in only ſetting forth Part, and not the Whole, in only reciting the Body, and not the Prayer.

But, my Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, taking the petitionary Part, and adding it to the other, it quite alters the Nature of the Thing; for it may be, a Complaint without ſeeking Redreſs might be an ill Matter; but here taking the Whole together, it appears to be a Complaint of a Grievance, and a Deſire to be eaſed of it.

With your Lordſhip's Favour, the Subjects have a Right to petition the King in all their Grievances, ſo ſay all our Books of Law, and ſo ſays the Statute of the Thirteenth of the late King; they may petition, and come and deliver their Petition under the Number of ten, as heretofore they might have done, ſays the Statute; ſo that they all Times have had a Right ſo to do, and indeed if they had not, it were the moſt lamentable Thing in the World, that Men muſt have Grievances upon them, and yet they not to be admitted to ſeek Relief in an humble Way.

Now, my Lord, this is a Petition ſetting forth a Grievance, and praying his Majeſty to give Relief. And what is this Grievance? It is that Command of his, by that Order made upon my Lords the Biſhops, to diſtribute the Declaration, and cauſe it to be read in the Churches: And pray, my Lord, let us conſider what the Effects and Conſequences of that Diſtribution and Reading is: It is to tell the People, that they need not ſubmit to the Act of Uniformity, nor to any Act of Parliament made about Eccleſiaſtical Matters, for they are ſuſpended and diſpenſed with. This my Lords the Biſhops muſt do, if they obey this Order; but your Lordſhip ſees, if they do it, they lie under an Anathema by the Statute of 1 Eliz. for there they are under a Curſe if they do not look to the Preſervation and Obſervation of that Act: But this Command to diſtribute and read the Declaration, whereby all theſe Laws are diſpenſed with, is to let the People know, they will not do what the Act requires of them.

Now, with your Lordſhip's Favour, my Lords the Biſhops lying under this Preſſure, the Weight of which was very grievous upon them, they by Petition apply to the King to be eaſed of it, which they might do as Subjects: Beſides, my Lord, they are Peers of the Realm, and were moſt of them ſitting as ſuch, in the laſt Parliament, where, as you have heard, it was declared, ſuch a Diſpenſation could not be; and then in what a Caſe ſhould they have been, if they ſhould have diſtributed this Declaration, which was ſo contrary to their own Actings in Parliament? What could they have anſwered for themſelves, had they thus contributed to this Declaration? when they had themſelves before declared, that the King could not diſpenſe.

And that this was no new Thing, for it had been ſo declared in a Parliament before, in two Seſſions of it, in the late King's Reign, within a very little Time one of another; and ſuch a Parliament that were ſo liberal in their Aids to the Crown, that a Man would not think they ſhould go about to deprive the Crown of any of its Rights. It was a Parliament that did do as great Services for the Crown as ever any did, and therefore there is no Reaſon to ſuſpect, that if the King had had ſuch a Power, they would have appeared ſo earneſt againſt it.

But, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, theſe are not the Beginnings of this Matter; for we have ſhewed you from the Fifteenth of Richard the Second, that there was a Power granted by the Parliament to the King to diſpenſe with a particular Act of Parliament, which argues, that it could not be without an Act of Parliament: And in 1662, 'tis ſaid expreſsly, that they could not be diſpenſed with but by an Act of Parliament. 'Tis ſaid ſo again in 1672, the King was then pleaſed to aſſume to himſelf ſuch a Power as is pretended to in this Declaration; yet, upon Information from his Houſes of Parliament, the King declared himſelf ſatisfied that he had no ſuch Power, cancelled his Declaration, and promiſed that it ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example. And ſo the Commons, by their Proteſtation, ſaid in Richard the Second's Time, that it was a Novelty, and ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example.

Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, if this Matter that was commanded the Biſhops to do, were ſomething which the Law did not allow of, ſurely then my Lords the Biſhops had all the Reaſon in the World to apply themſelves to the King, in an humble Manner to acquaint him why they could not obey his Commands; and to ſeek Relief againſt that which lay ſo heavy upon them.

Truly, my Lord, Mr. Attorney was very right in the opening of the Cauſe at firſt, that is, That the Government ought not to receive Affronts, no, nor the inferior Officers are not to be affronted; a Juſtice of the Peace, ſo low a Man in Office, is not. For a Man to ſay to a Juſtice of Peace, when he is executing his Office, that he does not right in it; is a great Crime, and Mr. Attorney ſaid right in it: But ſuppoſe a Juſtice of Peace were making of a Warrant to a Conſtable, to do ſomething that was not legal for him to do, if the Conſtable ſhould petition this Juſtice of the Peace, and therein ſet forth, Sir, you are about to command me to do a Thing which, I conceive, is not legal, ſurely that would not be a Crime that he was to be puniſhed for; for he does but ſeek Relief, and ſhew his Grievance in a proper Way, and the Diſtreſs he is under.

My Lord, this is the Biſhops Caſe, with Submiſſion; they are under a Diſtreſs, being commanded to do a Thing which they take not to be legal, and they with all Humility, by Way of Petition, acquaint the King with this Diſtreſs of theirs, and pray him, that he will pleaſe to give Relief.

My Lord, there is no Law but is either an Act of Parliament, or the Common Law; for an Act of Parliament there is none for ſuch a Power; all that we have of it in Parliamentary Proceedings, is againſt it; and for the Common Law, ſo far as I have read it, I never did meet with any thing of ſuch a Nature, as a Grant or Diſpenſation that pretended to diſpenſe with any one whole Act of Parliament; I have not ſo much as heard of any ſuch Thing mentioned by any of the King's Counſel; but here, my Lord, is a Diſpenſation that diſpenſes with a great many Laws at once, truly, I cannot take upon me to tell how many, there may be forty or above, for ought I know.

Therefore, my Lord, the Biſhops lying under ſuch a Grievance as this, and under ſuch a Preſſure, being ordered to diſtribute this Declaration in all their Churches, which was to tell the People they ought to be under no Law in this Caſe, which ſurely was a very great Preſſure, both in Point of Law and Conſcience too, they lying under ſuch Obligations to the contrary, as they did. With Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, If they did deliver this Petition (Publiſhing of it I will not talk of, for there has been no Proof of a Publication, but a delivering of a Petition to his Majeſty in the moſt ſecret and decent Manner that could be imagined) my Lords the Biſhops are not guilty of the Matter charged upon them in this Information. It has been expreſsly proved, that they did not go to diſperſe it abroad, but only delivered it to the King himſelf: And, in ſhort, my Lord, if this ſhould be a Libel, I know not how ſad the Condition of us all would be, if we may not petition when we ſuffer.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I challenge them to ſhew us any one Inſtance of ſuch a Declaration, ſuch a General Diſpenſation of Laws, from the Conqueſt till 1672. The firſt Umbrage of ſuch a thing is, that of Car. II. 1662; but your Lordſhip hears the Declaration of the Parliament upon it. Before that, as there was no ſuch thing, ſo your Lordſhip ſees what the Parliament did to enable the King (not to do this Thing, but ſomething like it) in Richard the Second's Time, where you ſee the Parliament did give the King a Power to diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors for a Time; but at the ſame Time declared that very Grant of their own to be a Novelty, and that it ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example.

My Lord, we ſhall leave it upon this Point; To ſuſpend Law is all one as to abrogate Laws; for ſo long as a Law is ſuſpended, whether the Suſpenſion be Temporary, or whether it be for ever; whether it be at once, or at ſeveral Times, the Law is abrogated to all Intents and Purpoſes: But the Abrogation of Laws is Part of the Legiſlature, that Legiſlative Power is lodged (as I ſaid before, and I could never find it otherwiſe, in all our Law) in Kings, Lords, and Commons.

L. C. J. You did open that before, Mr. Finch.

Mr. Finch. With this, my Lord, that my Lords the Biſhops finding this Order, made upon them to publiſh this Declaration, did what in Duty they were bound to do; and unleſs the Jury do find, that they have done that which is contrary to Law and to the Duty of their Places, and that this Petition is a Libel, and a ſeditious Libel, with an Intent to ſtir up Sedition among the People (we rely upon it) my Lords the Biſhops can never be found guilty upon this Information.

L. C. J. Have you now done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. Yes, my Lord, till they give us further Occaſion: If they have any other Evidence to offer, we muſt anſwer it; if not, this is the Anſwer we give to what they have ſaid.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We make no Bargain with you: If you have done, ſay ſo.

L. C. J. You muſt know, that you are not to have the laſt Word.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You have been three Hours already, if you have any more to ſay, pray conclude.

Mr. Finch. If they ſay they have no more Evivence, then we know what we have to do.

L. C. J. If you do ſay any thing more, pray let me adviſe you one Thing; don't ſay the ſame Thing over and over again; for after ſo much Time ſpent, it is irkſome to all Company as well as to me.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordſhip at preſent, unleſs they, by offering new Evidence, give us Occaſion to reply upon them.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, you ſhall have all the legal Favour and Advantage that can be; but, pray let us keep to an orderly decent Method of Proceeding.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, favour me a Word before we conclude. My Lord, I do find very few Attempts of this Nature in any King's Reign.

In the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was an Act of Parliament that Foreigners ſhould have a free Trade in the City of London, notwithſtanding the Franchiſes of London: After the Parliament roſe, the King iſſued out his Proclamation, forbidding the Execution of that Law, and commanding that it ſhould be in Suſpenſe, uſque ad proximum Parliamentum; yet that was held to be againſt Law.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you are to look to, is the Publiſhing of this Paper, and whether it be a Libel or no. And as to the Buſineſs of the Parliament you mentioned, that is not to the Purpoſe.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I ſay, I would put it where the Queſtion truly lies; if they don't diſpute the Point, then we need not labour it; but I don't know whether they will or no, and therefore I beg your Lordſhip's Favour to mention one Caſe more, and that is upon the Statute of 31 Hen. VIII. Cap. 8, which enables the King by Proclamation, in many Caſes, to create the Law; which Statute was repealed by 1 Edw. VI. Cap. 12. That very Act does recite, that the Law is not to be altered, or reſtrained, but by Act of Parliament; and therefore the Parliament enables the King to do ſo and ſo: But that was ſuch a Power, that the Parliament thought not fit to continue, and it was afterwards repealed; but it ſhews, that at that Time the Parliament was of the ſame Opinion, as to this Matter, that other Parliaments have been ſince.

Mr. Sommers. My Lord, I would only mention the great Caſe of Thomas and Sorrel in the Exchequer Chamber upon the Validity of a Diſpenſation of the Statute of Edward the Sixth, touching Selling of Wine. There it was the Opinion of every one of the Judges, and they did lay it down as a ſettled Poſition, that there never could be an Abrogation, or a Suſpenſion (which is a Temporary Abrogation) of an Act of Parliament, but by the Legiſlative Power. That was a Foundation laid down quite through the Debate of that Caſe. Indeed it was diſputed, how far the King might diſpenſe with the Penalties in ſuch a particular Law, as to particular Perſons; but it was agreed by all, that the King had no Power to ſuſpend any Law: And, my Lord, I dare appeal to Mr. Attorney General himſelf, whether in the Caſe of Godden and Hales, which was lately in this Court, to make good that Diſpenſation, he did not uſe it as as an Argument then, that it could not be expounded into a Suſpenſion: He admitted it not to be in the King's Power to ſuſpend a Law, but that he might give a Diſpenſation to a particular Perſon, was all that he took upon him to juſtify at that Time.

My Lord, by the Law of all civilized Nations, if the Prince does require ſomething to be done, which the Perſon who is to do it takes it to be unlawful, it is not only lawful, but his Duty, Reſcribere Principi. This is all that is done here, and that in the moſt humble Manner that could be thought of. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve how far it went, how careful they were that they might not any way juſtly offend the King: They did not interpoſe by giving Advice, as Peers; they never ſtirr'd till it was brought Home to themſelves. When they made their Petition, all they beg is, that it may not ſo far be inſiſted upon by his Majeſty, as to oblige them to read it. Whatever they thought of it, they do not take upon them to deſire the Declaration to be revoked.

My Lord, as to Matters of Fact alledged in the ſaid Petition, that they are perfectly true, we have ſhewn by the Journals of both Houſes. In every one of thoſe Years which are mentioned in the Petition, this Power of Diſpenſation was conſidered in Parliament, and, upon Debate, declared to be contrary to Law: There could be no Deſign to diminiſh the Prerogative, becauſe the King hath no ſuch Prerogative. Seditious, my Lord, it could not be, nor could poſſibly ſtir up Sedition in the Minds of the People, becauſe it was preſented to the King in private and alone: Falſe it could not be, becauſe the Matter of it is true: There could be nothing of Malice, for the Occaſion was not ſought: the Thing was preſſed upon them; and a Libel it could not be, becauſe the Intent was innocent, and they kept within the Bounds ſet by the Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject leave to apply to his Prince by Petition when he is aggrieved.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. We have done, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I ſhall be a great deal more merciful to your Lordſhip and the Jury than they have been, who have ſpent theſe four Hours in that which I think is not pertinent to the Caſe in queſtion: They have let themſelves into large Diſcourſes, making great Complaints of the Hardſhips put upon my Lords the Biſhops, by the Order of Council to read his Majeſty's Declaration; and putting theſe Words into the Information of Seditious, Malicious, and Scandalous: But, my Lord, I admire that Sir Robert Sawyer ſhould make ſuch Reflections and Obſervations upon theſe Words, when I am ſure he will ſcarce find any one of his own exhibiting, that has ſo few of thoſe aggravating Words as this has; and therefore that might have been very well ſpared, eſpecially by him.

In the next Place, my Lord, we are told what great Danger our Religion is in by this Declaration: I hope we have an equal Concern for that with them, or any Perſon elſe whatſoever. But, however, I am ſure our Religion teaches us, not to preſerve our Religion, or our Lives, by any illegal Courſes; and the Queſtion is, whether the Courſe that my Lords the Biſhops have taken to preſerve, as they ſay, our Religion, be legal or not: If it be not legal, then I am ſure our Religion will not juſtify the uſing ſuch a Courſe for never ſo good an End.

My Lord, for the Thing itſelf, I do admire that they, in ſo long a Time and Search that they have made, ſhould not, which I expected, produce more Precedents of ſuch a Paper as this is. They challenge us to ſhew, that ever there was any ſuch Declaration as this: I'll turn the ſame Challenge upon them. Shew me any one Inſtance, that ever ſo many Biſhops did come, under pretence of a Petition, to reflect upon the King out of Parliament.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that your Way of anſwering, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, you have had your Time, don't interrupt us; ſure we have as much Right to be heard as you.

L. C. J. You have been heard over and over again, Sir Robert Sawyer, already.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I don't intend to interrupt him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We cannot make them be quiet, they will ſtill be chopping in upon us.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is an Art that ſome People have always practiſed, not to permit any body to ſpeak but themſelves.

But, my Lord, I ſay, that thoſe few Inſtances that they have produced, are nothing at all to this Matter that is now upon Trial before your Lordſhip and this Jury: Nay, they are Evidences againſt them; for they are only Matters tranſacted in Parliament, which are no more to be applied to this Thing that is in Controverſy now, than any the moſt remote Matter that could be thought of; and though they have gone ſo high in Point of Time, as to the Reign of Richard the Second, yet they have nothing between that and the late King's Reign, to which they at laſt have deſcended down.

But, my Lord, I ſay, that all the Talk of Richard the Second's Time is wholly out of the Caſe: Truly, I do not doubt but that in Richard the Second's Time they might find a great many Inſtances of ſome ſuch ſort of Petitioning as this; for our Hiſtories tell us, that at that Time they had 40,000 Men in Arms againſt the King; and we know the Troubles that were in that King's Reign, and how at length he was depoſed: But certainly there may be found Inſtances more applicable to the Caſe, than thoſe they produce. As for thoſe in King Charles the Second's Time, do they any ways juſtify this Petition? For now they are upon juſtifying the Words of their Petition, that this Power has been declared to be illegal in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

For what was done in 1662, do they ſhew any thing more than ſome Debates in the Houſe of Commons, and at laſt an Addreſs, an Anſwer by the King, a Reply of the Commons, and then the Thing dies. Pray, my Lord, is a Tranſaction in the Houſe of Commons, a Declaration of Parliament? Sure, I think, no one will affirm that any thing can be a Declaration of Parliament, unleſs he that is the Principal Part concurs, who is the King: For if you ſpeak of the Court of Parliament in a legal Senſe, you muſt ſpeak of the whole Body, King, Lords, and Commons, and a Declaration in Parliament muſt be by all the whole Body; and that is properly an Act of Parliament.

Why

Why then they come to the Year 1672, where your Lordſhip obſerves, that the late King did inſiſt upon his Right; for after the Diſpute which was in 1662, his Majeſty did iſſue out another Declaration, and when it comes to be debated in Parliament, he inſiſts upon his Right in Eccleſiaſtical Matters; and though his Declaration was cancelled, yet there is no formal Diſclaimer of the Right.

My Lord, after all, how far theſe Things that they have offered may work, as to the Point that they have debated, I ſhall not now meddle with it, nor give your Lordſhip any Trouble about it, becauſe it is not at all pertinent to the Caſe in Queſtion; for I do (after all this Time and Pains that they have ſpent) take Leave to ſay, that theſe Gentlemen have ſpent all this Time to no Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, I'll tell you what they offer, which it will lie upon you to give an Anſwer to; They would have you ſhew how this has diſturbed the Government, or diminiſhed the King's Authority.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whether a Libel be true or not, as to the Matter of Fact, was it ever yet in any Court of Juſtice permitted to be made a Queſtion, whether it be a Libel or not? or whether the Party be puniſhable for it; and therefore I wonder to hear theſe Gentlemen to ſay, that becauſe it is not a falſe one, therefore 'tis not a Libel. Suppoſe a Man ſhould ſpeak ſcandalous Matter of any Noble Lord here, or of any of my Lords the Biſhops, and a Scandalum Magnatum be brought for it, though that which is ſpoken has been true, yet it has been the Opinion of the Courts of Law, that the Party cannot juſtify it, by reaſon it tends to the diſturbing of the Peace, to publiſh any thing that is Matter of Scandal: The only Thing that is to be looked into, is, whether there be any thing in this Paper that is reflecting and ſcandalous, and not whether it be true or no; for if any Man ſhall Extra-judicially, and out of a legal Courſe and Way, reflect upon any of the great Officers of the Kingdom, nay, if it be but upon any inferior Magiſtrate, he is to be puniſhed, and is not to make his Complaint againſt them, unleſs he do it in a proper Way. A Man may petition a Judge, but if any Man in that Petition ſhall come and tell the Judge, Sir, you have given an illegal Judgment againſt me, and I cannot in Honour, Prudence, or Conſcience obey it; I do not doubt, nor will any Man, but that he that ſhould ſo ſay, would be laid by the Heels, though the Judgment perhaps might be illegal.

If a Man ſhall come to petition the King, as, we all know, the Council Doors are thronged with Petitioners every Day, and Acceſs to the King by Petition is open to every body, the moſt inferior Perſon is allowed to petition the King; but becauſe he may do ſo, may he therefore ſuggeſt what he pleaſes in his Petition? Shall he come and tell the King to his Face, what he does is illegal? I only ſpeak this, becauſe they ſay, in this Caſe his Majeſty gave them Leave to come to him to deliver their Petition; but the King did not underſtand the Nature of their Petition, I ſuppoſe, when he ſaid, he gave them Leave to come to him.

My Lord, for this Matter we have Authority enough in our Books, particularly there is the Caſe of Wrenham in my Lord Hobart. The Lord Chancellor had made a Decree againſt him, and he petitioned the King, that the Cauſe might be re-heard; and in that Petition he complains of Injuſtice done him by my Lord Chancellor, and he put into his Petition many reflecting Things. This, my Lord, was puniſhed as a Libel in the Star-Chamber; and in that Book it was ſaid, that though it be lawful for the Subject to petition the King againſt any Proceedings by the Judges, yet it muſt not be done with Reflections, nor with Words that turn to the Accuſation or Scandal of any of the King's Magiſtrates or Officers, and the Juſtice of the Decree is not to be queſtioned in the Caſe; for there Wrenham in his Defence would have opened the Particulars wherein he thought the Decree was unjuſt, but that the Court would not meddle with, nor would allow him to juſtify for ſuch Illegality in the Decree: So in this Caſe, you are not to draw in Queſtion the Truth or Falſhood of the Matter complained againſt; for you muſt take the Way the Law has preſcribed, and proſecute your Right in a legal Courſe, and not by Scandal and Libelling.

My Lord, there is a great deal of Difference between not doing a Thing that is commanded, if one be of Opinion that it is unlawful, and coming to the King with a Petition highly reflecting upon the Government, and with ſcandalous Expreſſions telling him, Sir, you act illegally, you require of us that which is againſt Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience, as my Lords the Biſhops are pleaſed to do in this Petition of theirs. I appeal to any Lord here, that if any Man ſhould give him ſuch Language, either by Word of Mouth or Petition, whether he would bear it, without ſeeking Satisfaction and Reparation by the Law.

My Lord, there is no greater Proof of the Influence of this Matter than the Crowd of this Day, and the Harangue that hath been made: Is it not apparent that the taking this Liberty to canvaſs and diſpute the King's Power and Authority, and to cenſure his Actions, poſſeſs the People with ſtrange Opinions, and raiſes Diſcontents and Jealouſies, as if the free Courſe of Law were reſtrained, and arbitrary Will and Pleaſure ſet up inſtead of it?

My Lord, there is one Thing that appears upon the Face of the Information, which ſhews this not to be the right Courſe; and if my Lords the Biſhops had given themſelves the Opportunity of reading the Declaration ſeriouſly, they would have found in the End of the Declaration, that the King was reſolved to call a Parliament in November. Might not my Lords the Biſhops have acquieſced under their paſſive Obedience till the Parliament met? But nothing would ſerve them but this, and this muſt be done out of Parliament, for which there is no Precedent can be ſhewn, and this muſt be done in ſuch a Manner, as your Lordſhip ſees the Conſequence of, by your Trouble of this Day.

There is one Thing I forgot to ſpeak to: They tell us, that it is laid malicious and ſeditious, and there is no Malice or Sedition found; we know very well that that follows the Fact, thoſe Things ariſe by Conſtruction of Law out of the Fact. If the Thing be illegal, the Law ſays it is ſeditious; a Man ſhall not come and ſay, he meant no Harm in it: That was the Caſe of Williams; in his treaſonable Book, ſays he, I only intended to warn the King of the Danger

Danger approaching, and concludes his Book with God ſave the King; but no Man will ſay, that a good Preface at the Beginning, or a good Prayer at the End, ſhould excuſe Treaſon or Sedition in the Body of a Book. If I meet another Man in the Street and kill him, though I never ſaw him in my Life, the Indictment is, that it was ex Malitia præcogitata, as it often happens, that a Perſon kills one he never had Acquaintance with before; and in favorem vitæ, if the Nature of the Fact be ſo, the Jury are permitted to find according to the Nature of the Caſe; but in Strictneſs of Law there is Malice imply'd: But, my Lord, I think theſe Matters are ſo common, and that is a Point that has been ſo often ſettled, that the Form of the Indictment and Information muſt follow the Nature of the Fact, that I need not inſiſt upon it, if the Act be unlawful, the Law ſupplies the Malice and evil Intentions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King, and I ſhall take Leave to proceed in this Method: Firſt, I ſhall put the Caſe of my Lords the Biſhops, and then conſider the Arguments that have been uſed in their Defence, and anſwer them as much as is material to be anſwered; and then leave it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury's Conſideration, whether what has been ſaid by theſe Gentlemen, weigh any thing in this Caſe?

Firſt, my Lord, I take it for granted, and I think the Matter is pretty plain by this Time, by my Lord Preſident's Evidence, and their own Confeſſion, that it is not to be diſputed, but that this Paper was preſented by theſe Lords to the King; I think there is no great Difficulty in that Matter at all, but I juſt touch upon it, becauſe I would follow them in their own Method.

Then, my Lord, let us take this Caſe as it is, upon the Nature of the Petition, and the Evidence that they have given, and then let us ſee whether that will juſtify the Thing that is done: For the Buſineſs of Petitioning, I would diſtinguiſh and enquire, whether my Lords the Biſhops out of Parliament can preſent any Petition to the King. I do agree, that in Parliament the Lords and Commons may make Addreſſes to the King, and ſignify their Deſires, and make known their Grievances there; and there is no doubt but that is a natural and proper Way of Application: For in the Beginning of the Parliament, there are Receivers of Petitions appointed, and upon Debates, there are Committees appointed to draw up Petitions and Addreſſes; but to come and deduce an Argument, that becauſe the Lords in Parliament have done thus (there being ſuch Methods of Proceedings uſual in Parliaments) therefore my Lords the Biſhops may do it out of Parliament, that is certainly a Non ſequitur, no ſuch Concluſion can be drawn from thoſe Premiſes.

My Lord, I ſhall endeavour to lay the Fact before you as it really is, and then conſider what is proper for the Court to take Notice of, as legal Proof or Evidence: And I take it, all thoſe Precedents that they have produced of what the Lords did, and what the Commons did in Parliament, is no Warrant for them to ſhelter themſelves under, againſt the Information here in Queſtion.

[Here Mr. Juſtice Powell ſpake aſide to the Lord Chief Juſtice thus.]

Mr. Juſt. Powell. My Lord, this is ſtrange Doctrine; ſhall not the Subject have Liberty to petition the King, but in Parliament? If that be Law, the Subject is in a miſerable Caſe.

L. C. J. Brother, let him go on, we will hear him out, tho' I approve not of his Poſition.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Lords may Addreſs to the King in Parliament, and the Commons may do it, but therefore that the Biſhops may do it out of Parliament, does not follow. I heard nothing ſaid that could have given Colour to ſuch a Thing, but the Curſe that has been read in 1 Eliz.

But pray, my Lord, let us conſider that Evidence they have given: They have begun with that Record in Richard the Second's Time, and what is that? That the King may diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors, till the Meeting of the next Parliament, and a Proteſtation of the Commons at the End of it, whether that be an Act of Parliament that is Declaratory of the Common Law, or Introductory of a new Law, non conſtat; and for ought appears, it might be a Declaratory Act: And if ſo, it is a Proof of the King's Prerogative of Diſpenſing. It might be an Act in Affirmance of the King's Prerogative, as there are a great many ſuch, we very well know; and generally moſt of the Laws in that kind, are in Affirmance of the King's Power; ſo that the Law turns as an Argument for the King's Prerogative, and they have given him that which will turn upon themſelves: So it ſtood in Richard the Second's Time; but whether that be an Argument one way or other concluſive, is left to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

Ay, but ſay they, there is no Execution of ſuch a Power till very lately, and the firſt Inſtance that they produce, is that in the Year 1662. But your Lordſhip knows, that before the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was great Juriſdiction aſſumed by the Lords in Original Cauſes: Then comes the Statute of Appeals, 1 Hen. IV. which takes Notice, that before that Time the Lords had aſſumed an original Juriſdiction in all Cauſes, and would proceed and determine them in Parliament, and out of Parliament; and it fell out to be ſo great a Grievance, that it was thought neceſſary to make a Law againſt it, that Appeals in Parliament ſhould be aboliſhed and deſtroyed; and then comes that Law in Favour of the Subject of England, and that ſettles the Bounds between the King and the Lords in a great Meaſure. Before that time the Lords were grown very powerful, and where there is a Power, there always will be Applications; and what is the Effect of that Statute, 1 Hen. IV.? For all that we endeavour is, to make Things as plain as can be, that no further Applications, no Accuſations, no Proceedings in any Caſe whatſoever be before the Lords in Parliament, unleſs it be by Impeachment of the Commons: So that there is the Salvo; and the Uſe that I make uſe of it is this; The Commons, by that very Statute, did aboliſh the Power that the Lords had arrogated to themſelves, and ordered, that they ſhould not meddle with any Cauſe, but upon the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, and eſtabliſh the Impeachment of the Commons, which is as antient as the Parliament, for that was never yet ſpoken againſt, the Power of the Commons impeaching any Perſon under the Degree of the Prince; and that is the regular legal Way, and ſo the Commons aſſerted their antient Right, and whatſoever the Lords took Notice of, muſt come by Application of the Commons; then Conferences were to paſs between the Houſes, and both Houſes by Addreſs apply to the King. This is the proper Way and Courſe of Parliament, of which my Lord Coke ſays, It is known to few, and practiſed by fewer: But it is a venerable, honourable Way; and this is the Courſe that ſhould have been taken by my Lords here, and they ſhould have ſtayed till the Complaint had come from the Commons in Parliament, and then it had been regular for them to Addreſs to the King; but they were too quick, too nimble.

And whereas the Statute of Hen. IV. ſays, That no Lord whatſoever ſhall intermeddle with any Cauſe, but by the Impeachment of the Commons, they interpoſe and give their Advice before their Time: If there be any Irregularity in Parliament, or out of Parliament, the Commons are to make their Complaint of it, and a Man muſt not be his own Judge, nor his own Carver, nor muſt every Man create Difficulties of his own, nor ſet upon petitioning in this ſort: But there I lay my Foundation, that in ſuch a Matter as this, there ought to have been the Impeachment of the Commons in Parliament before theſe Lords could do any thing; and I know nothing can be ſaid for the Biſhops more than this, that they were under an Anathema, under the Curſe that Sir Robert Sawyer ſpeaks of; and for Fear of that, they took this irregular Courſe. But ſome would ſay, Better fall into the Hands of God than of Men: Some would ſay ſo (I ſay) I know not what they would ſay; but theſe being the Methods that theſe Lords ſhould have taken, they ſhould have purſued that Method; the Law ſhould have carved out their Relief and Remedy for them, but they were for going by a new Fancy of their own.

My Lord, the Law continued thus, and was practiſed ſo till 3 Hen. VII. where the Grievance was found, that Offences in the Intervals of Parliament could not be well puniſhed, and then comes the Statute that ſets up the Court of Star-Chamber, and there Men were often brought to Judgment and Puniſhment for their Sins; and though very great Power was given them, yet they arrogated to themſelves a greater; and therefore that Court is aboliſhed by the Statute of 15 Car. I. and what is the Reaſon of aboliſhing that Statute? Becauſe the Star-Chamber did not keep within their Bounds that the Law ſet them, but aſſumed to themſelves a larger Power than the Law would allow, and grew very exorbitant and very grievous to the Subject: And another Reaſon was, which the Statute of 15 Car. I. founded itſelf upon, becauſe there was nothing that was brought in Judgment before that Court, but might be relieved and remedied in the ordinary Methods of Juſtice in the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall: So that upon thoſe two Conſiderations, becauſe that Court was exorbitant, and becauſe all the Sins and Miſdemeanors that were puniſhed there, might be puniſhed in an ordinary Way of Law in another Court, and therefore there was no need of that Court, and ſo it was aboliſhed, and the Subject was pretty ſafe. If there was a Crime committed here, a Man might come properly before your Lordſhip into this Court, and have it puniſhed.

My Lord, they find fault with the Words in the Information, and they ſay, Why are theſe Words put in, Seditious, Malicious? If the Matter be libellous and ſeditious, we may lawfully ſay, and it is no more than the Law ſpeaks, it reſults out of the Matter itſelf; and, if it be a libellous Paper, the Law ſays, it is maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly done, and theſe Gentlemen need not quarrel with us, for ſo are all the Informations in all Times paſt, and 'tis no more than the Vi & Armis, which is common Form. It may be ſaid, How can the publiſhing of a Libel be ſaid to be done Vi & Armis? That is only a ſuppoſition of Law, and they may as well object to the Concluſion of the Information, that it was contra Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis. If it be an illegal Thing, or a Libel, theſe are neceſſary Conſequences; it is no more than the ſpeaking of the Law upon the Fact.

But, my Lord, let us a little conſider, whether this Matter were warrantable, and whether they had any Warrant to do what was done: They pretend it was done upon this Account, That the King had ſet forth a Declaration, and had ordered them to read it; which to excuſe themſelves from, they make this Petition, or this Libel (call it what you will) and they uſe this as the main Argument, That they ſay the King has done illegally, and they tell the King plainly ſo, that it is illegal; for they take Notice of this Declaration, and ſay, it is illegal becauſe it is contrary to the Declarations of Parliament in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

Pray, my Lord, let us conſider a little whether there be any Declaration in Parliament that they have given Evidence of. Have they read any Declaration of the Parliament in 1662? What is a Declaration in Parliament, but a Bill that is paſſed by the King, Lords, and Commons? That we know to be the Meaning, and no other. If it paſs the Commons, it is no Declaration in Parliament; nay, if it paſs the Lords and Commons, it is not a Declaration in Parliament, except it alſo paſs the King. All theſe Things are Nullities, and the Law takes no notice of them: We have it in our Books over and over, and no Court ought to ſuffer ſuch Evidence to be given. I know theſe Gentlemen are very well acquainted with the Authority in Fitzherbert, Title, Parliament. There was ſuch an Act that was ſaid to be by the King and the Lords; but becauſe the Commons did not agree to it, it is declared and adjudged to be a Nullity, and the Court would take no Notice of it; and how can any Man call that a Declaration in Parliament, which is only a Vote of the Houſe of Commons, or of the Lords? No, ſure, that is one of the Heads I go upon; 'tis not a Declaration in Parliament, unleſs it be by an Act of Parliament.

Indeed, my Lord, there is another ſort of a Declaration in Parliament before the Lords, as they are a Court of Judicature, and that is a fair Declaration too; for if any thing comes judicially before the Lords, either by Writ of Error, or by natural Appeal from any of the other Courts, or by Adjournment, and there be any Judgment given, that is a Declaration in Parliament, and may be fairly ſo called. So likewiſe there is another judicial Declaration, which is, when any thing comes before the Lords judicially, upon an Impeachment of the Commons, and they give Judgment upon that Impeachment, that is a Declaration in Parliament: But to ſay that there is any other Declaration in Parliament, is to ſay more than theſe Gentlemen can make out. If they will ſhew me any ſuch, I will ſubmit to them, and not ſpeak a Word againſt my Lords the Biſhops; but if theſe learned Gentlemen cannot ſhew me any ſuch, then they have not ſaid what was true in this Petition, that it was ſo and ſo declared in Parliament.

For let us conſider what there is in this Caſe upon this Evidence; for that in 1662, is only a Vote and Opinion of the Houſe of Commons; and I always underſtood, and have been told ſo by ſome of the Gentlemen of the other Side, that ſuch a Vote ſignifies nothing: But beſides, it ſeems to be a miſtaken Addreſs; for they ſay in it, that the Declaration in 1662, which they addreſs againſt, was the firſt Declaration of that Sort to ſuſpend Laws without Act of Parliament; and yet in the ſame Breath, they do take Notice of the King's Declaration from Bredah. But here is a mighty Argument uſed from the King's Speech, that becauſe he wiſhed he had ſuch a Power, this muſt be declared in Parliament that he had no ſuch Power. Is the Speech of the Prince a Declaration in Parliament? All the Speeches that were made upon the Opening of the Parliament, will you ſay they are Declarations in Parliament? Then the Chancellor, or the Keeper's Speech, or the Lord Privy Seal's, muſt be a Declaration in Parliament. Whoever ſpeaks the Senſe of the King, if he does not ſpeak that which is Law and Right, is queſtionable for it, and ſevaral have been impeached for ſo doing; for they look not upon it as the King's Speech, except it be according to Law. Nothing can turn upon the Prince but what is legal; if it be otherwiſe, it turns upon him that ſpeaks it. I never did hear that a Speech made by the Chancellor (and I will appeal to all the Lords that hear me in it) was a Declaration in Parliament.

Then, my Lord, we come to the Buſineſs in 1672, which with that in 1662, and that in Bredah, ſhews, that this of the King's is not ſuch a Novelty, but has been done often before. In 1672, the King was in Diſtreſs for Money, being entangled in a Dutch War, and wanted Supply: He capitulates with his Commons (you have heard it read) and, upon the Commons Addreſs, he aſſerts it to be his Right, and makes his Complaint to the Lords how the Commons had uſed him; for when he gives them a fair Anſwer, they replied, and there are Conferences with the Lords about it; but at length it all ends in a Speech by the King, who comes and tells them of his preſent Neceſſities, and ſo he was minded to remit a little at the Inſtigation of the Commons, and he has a good Lump of Money for it. Would this amount to a Declaration in Parliament? Can my Lords the Biſhops fancy or imagine that this is to be impoſed upon the King, or upon the Court, for a Declaration in Parliament?

Then laſt of all, for that in 1685, in this King's Time, what is it? The Commons make an Addreſs to the King, and complain to his Majeſty of ſome of his Officers in his Army, * that might pretend to have a Diſpenſation, ſomething of that Nature, contrary to the Teſt-Act; and what is done upon it? They make their Application to the King, and the King anſwers them, and that is all: But ſince it is ſpoken of in the Court, I would take Notice, that it is very well known by the Caſe of Godding and Hales, the Judgment of this Court was againſt the Opinion of that Addreſs.

* Here Mr. Juſtice Powell ſpeaking to the Lord Chief Juſtice.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. My Lord, this is wide, Mr. Sollicitor would impoſe upon us: let him make it out if he can, that the King has ſuch a Power, and anſwer the Objections made by the Defendants Council.

L. C. J. Brother, impoſe upon us! He ſhall not impoſe upon me; I know not what he may upon you; for my Part, I do not believe one Word he ſays.

But what Sort of Evidence is all this? Would you allow all the Addreſſes of the Houſe of Commons to be Evidence? Give me Leave to ſay it, my Lord, If you ſuffer theſe Votes, theſe Copies of imperfect Bills, theſe Addreſſes, and Applications of one or both Houſes to the King, to be Evidence and Declarations in Parliament, then what will become of the * Bill of Excluſion? Shall and body mention that Bill of Excluſion to be a Declaration in Parliament? If ſo, then there is Declaration againſt Declaration; the Declaration of the Commons againſt the Declaration of the Lords. I know not what Judgment my Lords the Biſhops may be of now, concerning thoſe Things of Votes and Addreſſes being Declarations in Parliament, but I am ſure they have ſpoken againſt it heretofore: Nay, I am ſure ſome of them have preached againſt it.

* Here there was a great Hiſſing.

And if my Lords the Biſhops have ſaid, theſe are Declarations in Parliament, and they are not Declarations in Parliament; and if they accuſe the King of having done an illegal Thing, becauſe he has done that which has been declared in Parliament to be illegal, when it was never ſo declared, then the Conſequence is very plain, that they are miſtaken ſometimes; and I ſuppoſe by this Time they believe it.

I dare ſay it will not be denied me, that the King may, by his Prerogative Royal, iſſue forth his Proclamation; it is as eſſential a Prerogative as it is to give his Aſſent to an Act of Parliament to make it a Law. And it is another Principle, which I think cannot be denied, that the King may make Conſtitutions and Orders in Matters Eccleſiaſtical; and that theſe he may make out of Parliament, and without the Parliament. If the King may do ſo, and theſe are his Prerogatives, then ſuppoſe the King does iſſue forth his Royal Proclamation (and ſuch in Effect is this Declaration under the Great Seal) in a Matter Eccleſiaſtical, by Virtue of his Prerogative Royal; and this Declaration is read in the Council, and publiſhed to the World, and then the Biſhops come and tell the King, Sir, You have iſſued out an illegal Declaration, being contrary to what has been declared in Parliament, when there is no Declaration in Parliament; is not this a diminiſhing the King's Power and Prerogative in iſſuing forth his Declaration, and making Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical? Is not this a queſtioning of his Prerogative? Do not my Lords the Biſhops in this Caſe raiſe a Queſtion between the King and the People? Do not they, as much as in them lies, ſtir up the People to Sedition? For who ſhall be Judge between the King and the Biſhops? Says the King, I have ſuch a Power and Prerogative to iſſue forth my Royal Proclamation, and to make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, and that without the Parliament, and out of Parliament. Say my Lords the Biſhops, You have done ſo, but you have no Warrant for it. Says the King, Every Prince has done it, and I have done no more than what is my Prerogative to do: But this, ſay the Biſhops, is againſt Law: How ſhall this be tried? Should not the Biſhops have had the Patience to have waited till a Parliament came, when the King himſelf tells them, he would have a Parliament in November at furtheſt?

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Sollicitor, come cloſe to the Buſineſs, for it is very late.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I beg your Patience; you have had a great deal of Patience with them, pray ſpare me a little. I am ſaying, when the King himſelf tells them, that he would have a Parliament in November at furtheſt, yet they have no Patience to ſtay till November, but made this Application to him. Is not this raiſing a Queſtion upon the King's Prerogative in iſſuing forth Declarations? and upon the King's Power and Right in Matters Eccleſiaſtical? And when I have ſaid this, that my Lords the Biſhops have ſo done, if they have raiſed a Queſtion upon the Right of the King, and the Power of the King in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, then they have ſtirred up Sedition. That they have ſo done is pretty plain; and for the Conſequence of it, I ſhall appeal to the Caſe in the 2 Cro. 2 Jac. I. That is a plain direct Authority for me.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Nay, Mr. Sollicitor, we all very well know, to deny the King's Authority in Temporals and Spirituals, as by Act of Parliament, is High Treaſon.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I carry it not ſo far, Sir. We have a gracious Prince, and my Lords the Biſhops find it ſo by this Proſecution: But what ſays that Caſe? It is printed in three Books, in Noy 100, in Moor 375, and in Mr. Juſt. Cro. 371. Says that Caſe, The King may make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But how will you apply that Caſe to this in Hand, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Soll. Gen. I will apply it by and by, Sir. I would firſt ſhew what it is: There is a Convention of the greateſt Men in the Kingdom.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Indeed, Mr. Sollicitor, you ſhoot at Rovers.

Mr. Soll. Gen. There is the Lord Privy Seal, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and a great many others: It is the greateſt Aſſembly we meet with in our Books, and all of them are of this Opinion, that the King may make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

My Lord, there is another Authority, and that is, from the Statute 1 Eliz. which erected the High Commiſſion Court, and that Statute was not introductory of a new Law, but Declaratory of the old Law. The King by his Proclamation declares his Senſe to do ſuch and ſuch a Thing; the Court, and all Perſons there, give their Judgment and Opinion upon that Statute, that they looked upon it as the groſſeſt Thing, and the fouleſt Affront to the Prince, for any Man to bring into Queſtion that Power of the King in Matters Eccleſiaſtical: 'Tis ſaid to be a very high Crime. Why then, my Lord, what is done in this Caſe?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, pray when you are applying, apply that other Part of the Caſe too, which ſays, that it was a heinous Offence to raiſe a Rumour that the King did intend to grant a general Toleration; and is there any Law ſince that has changed it, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Soll. Gen. In the main, Judgment goes another Way. As for that Part, it was Perſonal to the Prince that then was, of whom they had ſcandalouſly reported, that he intended to do ſuch a Thing. They look'd upon it as a Scandal to King James, that it was a ſowing Sedition, and ſtirring up People againſt the Government, and that will come up to our Caſe: For as ſome Men do it on the right Side, others do it on the left; and whoever he be that endeavours to bring a Diſlike of the King in the People, that is moving Sedition againſt the Prince; but that is Perſonal to the Prince himſelf, and does not go to his Succeſſors.

Now, my Lord, I come to that which is very plain from the Caſe of De Libellis Famoſis: If any Perſon, in any Paper, have ſlandered the Government, you are not to examine who is in the Right, and who is in the Wrong, whether what they ſaid to be done by the Government be legal or no; but whether the Party have done ſuch an Act. If the King have a Power (for ſtill I keep to that) to iſſue forth Proclamations to his Subjects, and to make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, if he do iſſue forth his Proclamation, and make an Order upon the Matters within his Power and Prerogative; and if any one would come and bring that Power in Queſtion, I ſay, that is Sedition, and you are not to examine the Legality or Illegality of the Order or Proclamation; and that, I think, is very plain upon that Caſe, in the fifth Report; for it ſays, If a Perſon does a Thing that is libellous, you ſhall not examine the Fact, but the Conſequence; whether it tended to ſtir up Sedition againſt the Publick, or to ſtir up Strife between Man and Man, in the Caſe of private Perſons: As if a Man ſhould ſay of a Judge, he has taken a Bribe, and I will prove it; this is not to be ſent in a Letter, but they muſt take a regular Way to proſecute it according to Law.

If it be ſo in the Caſe of an inferior Magiſtrate, what muſt it be in the Caſe of a King? To come to the King's Face, and tell him, as they do here, that he has acted illegally, doth certainly ſufficiently prove the Matter to be libellous. What do they ſay to the King? They ſay, and admit, that they have an Averſeneſs for the Declaration, and they tell him from whence that Averſeneſs doth proceed; and yet they inſinuate, that they had an Inclination to gratify the King, and embrace the Diſſenters, that were as averſe to them as could be with due Tenderneſs, when it ſhould be ſettled by Parliament and Convocation. Pray what hath their Convocation to do in this Matter?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor General, I will not interrupt you; but, pray come to the Buſineſs before us. Shew us that this is in Diminution of the King's Prerogative, or that the King ever had ſuch a Prerogative.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I will, my Lord, I am obſerving what it is they ſay in this Petition—— They tell the King it is inconſiſtent with their Honour, Prudence and Conſcience, to do what he would have them to do: And if theſe Things be not reflective upon the King and Government, I know not what is. This is not in a Way of Judicature; Poſſibly it might have been allowable to petition the King to put it into a Courſe of Juſtice, whereby it may be tried; but alas! there is no ſuch thing in this Matter.

It is not their Deſire to put it into any Method for Trial, and ſo it comes in the Caſe De Libellis Famoſis; for by this Way, they make themſelves Judges, which no Man by Law is permitted to do. My Lords the Biſhops have gone out of the Way, and all that they have offered does not come home to juſtify them; and therefore I take it, under Favour, that we have made it a good Caſe for the King: We have proved what they have done, and whether this be warrantable or not, is the Queſtion, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The whole Caſe appears upon Record; the Declaration and Petition are ſet forth, and the Order of the King and Council. When the Verdict is brought in, they may move any thing what they pleaſe in Arreſt of Judgment. They have had a great deal of Latitude, and taken a great deal of Liberty; but truly, I apprehend, not ſo very pertinently. But I hope we have made a very good Caſe of it for the King, and that you, Gentlemen will give us a Verdict.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Mr. Sollicitor, there is one thing I would fain be ſatisfied in: You ſay the Biſhops have no Power to petition the King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Not out of Parliament, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray give me Leave, Sir, Then the King having made ſuch a Declaration of a general Toleration and Liberty of Conſcience, and afterwards he comes and requires the Biſhops to diſperſe this Declaration; this they ſay, out of a Tenderneſs of Conſcience, they cannot do, becauſe they apprehend it contrary to Law, and contrary to their Function: What can they do, if they may not petition?

Mr. Soll. Gen. I'll tell you what they ſhould have done, Sir. If they were commanded to do any Thing againſt their Conſciences, they ſhould have acquieſced till the Meeting of the Parliament.

[At which ſome People in the Court hiſſed.]

Mr. Att. Gen. This is very fine indeed! I hope the Court and the Jury will take Notice of this Carriage.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, it is one thing for a Man to ſubmit to his Prince, if the King lay a Command upon him that he cannot obey, and another thing to affront him. If the King will impoſe upon a Man what he cannot do, he muſt acquieſce; but ſhall he come and fly in the Face of his Prince? Shall he ſay it is illegal? and that the Prince acts againſt Prudence, Honour or Conſcience? and throw Dirt in the King's Face? Sure that is not permitted; that is Libelling with a Witneſs.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Sollicitor, I am of Opinion that the Biſhops might petition the King, but this is not the right Way of bringing it in. I am not of that Mind that they cannot petition the King out of Parliament; but if they may petition, yet they ought to have done it after another Manner: For if they may in this reflective Way petition the King, I am ſure it will make the Government very precarious.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, it would have been too late to ſtay for a Parliament; for it was to have been diſtributed by ſuch a Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They might have lain under it and ſubmitted.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. No, they would have run into Contempt of the King's Command, without petitioning the King not to inſiſt upon it; and if they had petitioned, and not have ſhewn the Reaſon why they could not obey, it would have been looked upon as a Piece of Sullenneſs, and that they would have been blamed for as much on the other Side.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. After ſo long a Debate, I ſhall not trouble you long; moſt Things that are to be ſaid have been ſaid; but I ſhall only ſay this in ſhort: I cannot deny, nor ſhall not, but that the Subject has a Right to petition; but I ſhall affirm it alſo, he has a Duty to obey; and that in this Caſe, the Power of the King to diſpenſe with Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, is not a Thing that is now in queſtion, nor need we here have had theſe long Debates on both Sides. It may be perceived plainly, by the Proofs that have been read, that the Kings and Princes have thought themſelves that they had ſuch a Power, though it may be the Parliament thought they had not; and therefore the Declarations of the one or the other, I ſhall not meddle with in this Caſe. That Power it ſelf which the King has, as King of this Realm, in Matters rather Eccleſiaſtical and Criminal, than Matters of Property, may ſomewhat appear by what has been read before your Lordſhip: But all this will be nothing in our Caſe, neither has his Majeſty now depended ſo much upon this Thing: The Declaration has been read to you, and what's there ſaid? The King there ſays, That for thoſe Reaſons he was ready to ſuſpend thoſe Laws; and be they ſuſpended? Yet, my Lord, with this too, that he refers it to, and hopes to make it ſecure by a Parliament: So that there being this, it has not gone, I think, very far; and it not having been touch'd here, it is not a Point of Duty in my Lords the Biſhops, as Biſhops, that's here enquired into; Whether they ſhould have meddled with this or no, in this Manner, is the Queſtion. That the King is Supream over all of us, and has a particular Supremacy over them, as Supream Ordinary and Governor, and Moderator of the Church, is very plain; and, my Lord, it is as plain, that in ſuch Things as concern the Church, he has a particular Power to command them. This is not unknown, but very frequent and common in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, and Matters of State. It is not here a Queſtion now, whether theſe Declarations which they were commanded to take care of getting read, were legal or not legal; what Prudence there was, what Honour there was, what Conſcience there was, for their not reading it, is not the Queſtion neither: But the Point was, the King as Supream Ordinary of his Kingdom, to whom the Biſhops are ſubject, does in Council order; and what is it he orders? Their ſending out and diſtributing his Declaration. They were concerned in no more than that, and it had been a very pretty Thing, a ſmall Thing, to ſend out the King's Declaration to be read by the Clergy. All the Clergy were ordered to read it, but my Lords the Biſhops were only commanded to diſtribute it. This he might do by Virtue of his Power Eccleſiaſtical. And if this be not an Evil in it ſelf, and if it be not againſt the Word of God, certainly Obedience was due from my Lords the Biſhops: Active Obedience was due from them to do ſo much as this. It was no Conſent of theirs, it was no Approbation of theirs of what they read, that was required. So that if they had read it, or another had read it by the King's Order, eſpecially if that Order be legal, they are bound to do it by Virtue of their Obedience, and not to examine more.

And, my Lord, in this Petition, here they come to relieve, not only themſelves that were preſent, (for I ſpeak to the Preamble, as others before me have ſpoke to the Concluſion) but they do involve the reſt of the Biſhops that were abſent; for it is in Behalf of themſelves, and their Brethren, and all the Clergy of that Province. Now that all theſe ſhould join in the Petition, is a Thing very uncertain. How does it conſtrue here, whether they were all together, and conſented to it, or how all their Minds could be ſo fully known, that they would be all involved in the Diſobedience to this Order of the King? Then, my Lord, What is the Thing they are greatly averſe to? There are two Things required in the Order: The Biſhops required to diſtribute the Declaration to the inferior Clergy, and the inferior Clergy are required to read it. Then their Averſeneſs muſt be to diſtribute it, and the others to read it, and ſo they will be involved; none of whom did ever appear to have joined in it. And then they give Reaſons for their Averſeneſs; and it is true, Reaſons might have been given, and good Reaſons ſhould be given, why they ſhould not do this in Duty to his Majeſty; more gentle Reaſons, and other kind of Reaſons than thoſe that they have given.

L. C. J. Pray, Brother, will you come to the Matter before us.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. I have almoſt done, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. The Information is not for Diſobedience, Brother, but for a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. No, Sir, it is not for Diſobedience, but it is for giving Reaſons for the Diſobedience in a libellous Petition, and I am going on to that. The Declaration is ſaid in the Petition to be illegal; which is a Charge upon the King, that he has done an illegal Act. They ſay, they cannot in Honour, Conſcience, or Prudence, do it; which is a Reflection upon the Prudence, Juſtice, and Honour of the King in commanding them to do ſuch a Thing: And this appearing to have been delivered to the King by my Lords the Biſhops, Perſons to whom certainly we all owe a Deference, as our Spiritual Maſters, to believe what Things they ſay, as moſt likely to be true; and therefore it having an univerſal Influence upon all the People, I ſhall leave it here to your Lordſhip and the Jury, whether they ought not to anſwer for it.

Mr. Recorder. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare me one Word?

L. C. J. I hope we ſhall have done by and by.

Mr. Recorder. If your Lordſhip don't think fit, I can ſit down.

L. C. J. No, no, go on, Sir Bartholomew Shower, you'll ſay I have ſpoiled a good Speech.

Mr. Recorder. I have no good one to make, my Lord, I have but a very few Words to ſay.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. That which I would urge, my Lord, is only this; I think, my Lord, we have proved our Information, and that they have made no Anſwer to it; for the Anſwer they have made, is but Argumentative, and taken either from the Perſons of the Defendants, as Peers, or from the Form of its being a Petition. As Peers, it is ſaid they have a Right to petition to, and adviſe the King; but that is no Excuſe at all; for if it contains Matter reproachful or ſcandalous, it is a Libel in them as well as in any other Subject; and they have no more Right to libel the King than his Majeſty's other Subjects have; nor will the Privilege of their Peerage exempt them from being puniſhed. And for the Form of this Paper, as being a Petition, there is no more Excuſe in that neither: For every Man has as much Right to publiſh a Book, or Pamphlet, as they had to preſent their Petition. And as it would be puniſhable in that Man to write a ſcandalous Book, ſo it would be puniſhable in them to make a ſcandalous, and a libellous Petition. And the Author of Julian the Apoſtate, becauſe he was a Clergyman, and a learned Man too, had as much Right to publiſh his Book, as my Lords the Biſhops had to deliver this Libel to the King. And if the City of London were ſo ſeverely puniſhed, as to loſe their Charter, for petitioning for the Sitting of a Parliament, in which there were reflecting Words, but more ſoft ——

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray, good Mr. Recorder, don't compare the Writing of a Book to the Making of a Petition; for it's the Birthright of the Subject to petition.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, it was as lawful for the City of London to petition for the ſitting of a Parliament, as it was for my Lords the Biſhops to give Reaſons for their Diſobedience to the King's Command: And if the Matter of the City of London's Petition was reckoned to be libellous, in ſaying that what the King had done in diſſolving the Parliament, was an Obſtruction of Juſtice, what other Conſtruction can be made of my Lords the Biſhops ſaying that the King's Declaration is illegal? And if the Matter of this Petition be of the ſame Nature with that of the City of London, your Lordſhip can make no other Judgment of it, but that it ought to have the ſame Condemnation.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Recorder, you will as ſoon bring the two Poles together, as make this Petition to agree with Johnſon's Book. They are no more alike than the moſt different Things you can name.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, I have but one Word.

L. C. J. How unreaſonable is this now, that we muſt have ſo many Speeches at this Time of Day? But we muſt hear it; go on, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, that which they ſeem moſt to inſiſt upon on the other Side, and which has not been much ſpoken to on our Side, is, that this Power which his Majeſty has exerted, in ſetting forth his Declaration, was illegal, and their Arguments were hypothetical. If it were illegal, illegal, they had not offended; and they offered at ſome Arguments to prove it illegal: But as to that, my Lord, we need not go much further than a Caſe which is very well known here, which I crave leave to mention, only becauſe the Jury, perhaps, have not heard of it, and that was the Caſe of Sir Edward Hales; where, after a long Debate, it was reſolved, That the King had a Power to diſpenſe with Penal Laws.

But, my Lord, if I ſhould go higher into our Books of Law, that which they ſeem to make ſo ſtrange of, might eaſily be made appear to have been a frequent and conſtant Practice.——

L. C. J. That is quite out of the Caſe, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. I beg your Lordſhip's Favour for a Word or two. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to conſider the Power the King has, as Supream Ordinary, we ſay, he has a Power to diſpenſe with theſe Statutes, as he is King, and to give Eaſe to his Subjects, as Supream Ordinary of the whole Kingdom, and as having Supream Eccleſiaſtical Authority throughout the Kingdom. There might be abundance of Caſes cited for this, if there were Need: The Statute of primo Eliz. doubtleſs is in Force at this Time, and a great many of the Statutes that have been made ſince that Time, have expreſs Savings of the King's Supremacy: So that the King's Power is unqueſtionable. And if they have come and queſtioned this Power in this Manner, by referring themſelves to the Declarations in Parliament, they have done that which of late Days has been always look'd upon as an ill Thing; as if the King's Authority was under the Suffrages of a Parliament. But when they come to make out their Parliament Declarations, there was never a one, unleſs it be firſt in Richard the Second's Time, that can properly be called a Parliament Declaration: So that of the ſeveral Parliaments is a Matter perfectly miſtaken; and if they have miſtaken it, it is in the Nature of falſe News, which is a Crime for which the Law will puniſh them. More Things might be added, but I conſider your Lordſhip has had a great deal of Patience already, and much Time has been ſpent, and therefore I ſhall conclude, begging your Lordſhip's Pardon for what I have ſaid.

L. C. J. I do aſſure you, if it had not been a Caſe of great Concern, I would not have heard you ſo long. It is a Caſe of very great Concern to the King and the Government on the one Side, and to my Lords the Biſhops on the other; and I have taken all the Care I can to obſerve what has been ſaid on both Sides. 'Tis not to be expected that I ſhould repeat all the Speeches, or the particular Facts, but I will put the Jury in Mind of the moſt material Things, as well as my Memory will give me Leave; but I have been interrupted by ſo many long and learned Speeches, and by the Length of the Evidence which has been brought in, in a very broken, unmethodical Way, that I ſhall not be able to do ſo well as I would.

Gentlemen, thus ſtands the Caſe: It is an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops, his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the other ſix Noble Lords; and it is for Preferring, Compoſing, Making, and Publiſhing, and Cauſing to be Publiſhed, a ſeditious Libel: The Way that the Information goes is ſpecial, and it ſets forth, That the King was graciouſly pleaſed, by his Royal Power and Prerogative, to ſet forth a Declaration of Indulgence for Liberty of Conſcience, in the Third Year of his Reign; and afterwards, upon the 27th of April, in the fourth Year, he comes and makes another Declaration; and afterwards, in May, orders in Council that this Declaration ſhould be publiſhed by my Lords the Biſhops in their ſeveral Dioceſſes; and after this was done, my Lords the Biſhops come and preſent a Petition to the King, in which were contained the Words which you have ſeen.

Now, Gentlemen, the Proofs that have been upon this, you'll ſee what they are. The two Declarations are proved by the Clerks of the Council, and they are brought here under the Great Seal. A Queſtion did ariſe, whether the Prints were the ſame with the original Declarations, and that is proved by Hills, or his Man, that they were examined, and are the ſame. Then the Order of the Council was produced by Sir John Nicholas, and has likewiſe been read to you. Then they come to prove the Fact againſt the Biſhops, and firſt they fall to proving their Hands. They begun indeed a great Way off, and did not come ſo cloſe to it as they afterwards did; for ſome of their Hands they could hardly prove, but my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand was only proved, and ſome others; but there might have been ſome Queſtion about that Proof. But afterwards it came to be proved, that my Lords the Biſhops owned their Hands; which, if they had produced at firſt, would have made the Cauſe ſomething ſhorter than it was.

The next Queſtion that did ariſe, was about the Publiſhing of it, whether my Lords the Biſhops had publiſhed it; and it was inſiſted upon, that no body could prove the Delivery of it to the King. It was proved, the King gave it to the Council, and my Lords the Biſhops were called in, and there they acknowledged their Hands; but no body could prove how it came to the King's Hands. Upon which we were all of Opinion, that it was not ſuch a Publiſhing as was within the Information; and I was going to have directed you to find my Lords the Biſhops Not Guilty: But it happened, that being interrupted in my Directions by an honeſt, worthy, learned Gentleman, the King's Council took the Advantage, and informing the Court that they had further Evidence for the King, we ſtaid till my Lord Preſident came, who told us how the Biſhops came to him to his Office at Whitehall, and after they had told him their Deſign, that they had a Mind to petition the King, they aſked him the Method they were to take for it, and deſired him to help them to the Speech of the King: And he tells them he will acquaint the King with their Deſire, which he does; and the King giving Leave, he comes down and tells the Biſhops, that they might go and ſpeak with the King when they would; and, ſays he, I have given Direction that the Door ſhall be opened for you as ſoon as you come. With that the two Biſhops went away, and ſaid, they would go and fetch their other Brethren, and they did bring the other Four, but my Lord Archbiſhop was not there; and immediately when they came back, they went up into the Chamber, and there a Petition was delivered to the King. He cannot ſpeak to that particular Petition, becauſe he did not read it, and that is all that he knew of the Matter;

Matter; only it was all done the ſame Day, and that was before my Lords the Biſhops appeared at the Council.

Gentlemen, after this was proved, then the Defendants came to their Part; and theſe Gentlemen that were of Council for my Lords, let themſelves into their Defence, by notable learned Speeches, by telling you that my Lords the Biſhops are Guardians to the Church, and great Peers of the Realm, and were bound in Conſcience to take Care of the Church. They have read you a Clauſe of a Statute made in Queen Elizabeth's Time, by which they ſay, my Lords the Biſhops were under a Curſe, if they did not take Care of that Law: Then they ſhew you ſome Records; one in Richard the Second's Time, which they could make little of, by reaſon their Witneſs could not read it; but it was in ſhort, a Liberty given to the King, to diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors. Then they ſhew you ſome Journals of Parliament; Firſt in the Year 1662, where the King had granted an Indulgence, and the Houſe of Commons declared it was not fit to be done, unleſs it were by Act of Parliament: And they read the King's Speech, wherein he ſays, he wiſh'd he had ſuch a Power, and ſo likewiſe that in 1672, which is all nothing but Addreſſes and Votes, or Orders of the Houſe, or Diſcourſes; either the King's Speech, or the Subjects Addreſſes; but theſe are not Declarations in Parliament. That is inſiſted upon by the Council for the King, that what is a Declaration in Parliament is a Law, and that muſt be by the King, Lords, and Commons; the other is but common Diſcourſe, but a Vote of the Houſe, or a Signification of their Opinion, and cannot be ſaid to be a Declaration in Parliament. Then they come to that in 1685, where the Commons take Notice of ſomething about the Soldiers in the Army that had not taken the Teſt, and make an Addreſs to the King about it: But in all theſe Things (as far as I can obſerve) nothing can be gathered out of them one way or the other; it is nothing but Diſcourſes. Sometimes this Diſpenſing Power has been allowed, as in Richard the Second's Time; and ſometimes it has been denied, and the King did once wave it: Mr. Sollicitor tells you the Reaſon, There was a Lump of Money in the Caſe; but I wonder indeed to hear it come from him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I never gave my Vote for Money, I aſſure you.

L. C. J. But thoſe Conceſſions which the King ſometimes makes for the Good of the People, and ſometimes for the Profit of the Prince himſelf (but I would not be thought to diſtinguiſh between the Profit of the Prince and the Good of the People, for they are both one; and what is the Profit of the Prince is always for the Good of the People) but I ſay, thoſe Conceſſions muſt not be made Law, for that is reſerved in the King's Breaſt, to do what he pleaſes in it at any Time.

The Truth of it is, the Diſpenſing Power is out of the Caſe, it is only a Word uſed in the Petition; but truly, I will not take upon me to give my Opinion in the Queſtion, to determine that now, for it is not before me: The only Queſtion before me is, and ſo it is before you, Gentlemen, it being a Queſtion of Fact, Whether here be a certain Proof of a Publication? And then the next Queſtion is a Queſtion of Law indeed, Whether if there be a Publication proved, it be a Libel?

Gentlemen, upon the Point of the Publication, I have ſummed up all the Evidence to you; and if you believe that the Petition which theſe Lords preſented to the King was this Petition, truly, I think, that is a Publication ſufficient: If you do not believe it was this Petition, then my Lords the Biſhops are not guilty of what is laid to their Charge in this Information, and conſequently there needs no Enquiry whether they are guilty of a Libel: But if you do believe that this was the Petition they preſented to the King, then we muſt come to enquire whether this be a Libel.

Now, Gentlemen, any thing that ſhall diſturb the Government, or make Miſchief and a Stir among the People, is certainly within the Caſe of Libellis Famoſis; and I muſt in ſhort give you my Opinion, I do take it to be a Libel. Now this being a Point of Law, if my Brothers have any thing to ſay to it, I ſuppoſe they will deliver their Opinions.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Look you, Gentlemen, it is not uſual for any Perſon to ſay any thing after the Chief Juſtice has ſummed up the Evidence; it is not according to the Courſe of the Court: But this is a Caſe of an extraordinary Nature, and there being a Point of Law in it, it is very fit every body ſhould deliver their own Opinion. The Queſtion is, whether this Petition of my Lords the Biſhops be a Libel, or no. Gentlemen, the End and Intention of every Action is to be conſidered; and likewiſe, in this Caſe, we are to conſider the Nature of the Offence that theſe Noble Perſons are charged with: It is for delivering a Petition, which, according as they have made their Defence, was with all the Humility and Decency that could be: So that if there was no ill Intent, and they were not (as it is not, nor can be pretended they were) Men of evil Lives, or the like, to deliver a Petition cannot be a Fault, it being the Right of every Subject to petition. If you are ſatisfied there was an ill Intention of Sedition, or the like, you ought to find them guilty: But if there be nothing in the Caſe that you find, but only that they did deliver a Petition to ſave themſelves harmleſs, and to free themſelves from Blame, by ſhewing the Reaſon of their Diſobedience to the King's Command, which they apprehended to be a Grievance to them, and which they could not in Conſcience give Obedience to; I cannot think it is a Libel: It is left to you, Gentlemen, but that is my Opinion.

L. C. J. Look you, by the Way, Brother, I did not aſk you to ſum up the Evidence (for that is not uſual) but only to deliver your Opinion, whether it be a Libel or no.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly I cannot ſee, for my part, any thing of Sedition, or any other Crime, fixed upon theſe Reverend Fathers, my Lords the Biſhops.

For, Gentlemen, to make it a Libel, it muſt be falſe; it muſt be malicious, and it muſt tend to Sedition. As to the Falſhood, I ſee nothing that is offered by the King's Council, nor any thing as to the Malice: It was preſented with all the Humility and Decency that became the King's Subjects to approach their Prince with.

Now, Gentlemen, the Matter of it is before you; you are to conſider of it, and it is worth your Conſideration. They tell his Majeſty, It is not out of Averſeneſs to pay all due Obedience to the King, nor out of a Want of Tenderneſs to their diſſenting Fellow Subjects, that made them not perform the Command impoſed upon them; but they ſay, that becauſe they do conceive that the Thing that was commanded them was againſt the Law of the Land, therefore they do deſire his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to forbear to inſiſt upon it, that they ſhould perform that Command which they take to be illegal.

Gentlemen, we muſt conſider what they ſay is illegal in it. They ſay, they apprehend the Declaration is illegal, becauſe it is founded upon a diſpenſing Power, which the King claims, to diſpenſe with the Laws concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

Gentlemen, I do not remember in any Caſe in all our Law (and I have taken ſome Pains upon this Occaſion to look into it) that there is any ſuch Power in the King, and the Caſe muſt turn upon that. In ſhort, if there be no ſuch Diſpenſing Power in the King, then that can be no Libel which they preſented to the King, which ſays, that the Declaration, being founded upon ſuch a pretended Power, is illegal.

Now, Gentlemen, this is a Diſpenſation with a Witneſs; it amounts to an Abrogation and utter Repeal of all the Laws; for I can ſee no Difference, nor know of none in Law, between the King's Power to diſpenſe with Laws Eccleſiaſtical, and his Power to diſpenſe with any other Laws whatſoever. If this be once allowed of, there will need no Parliament; all the Legiſlature will be in the King, which is a Thing worth conſidering, and I leave the Iſſue to God and your Conſciences.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. The ſingle Queſtion that falls to my Share is, to give my Senſe of this Petition, whether it ſhall be in Conſtruction of Law a Libel in itſelf, or a Thing of great Innocence. I ſhall endeavour to expreſs myſelf in as plain Terms as I can, and as much as I can, by way of Propoſition.

And I think, in the firſt Place, That no Man can take upon him to write againſt the actual Exerciſe of the Government, unleſs he have Leave from the Government, but he makes a Libel, be what he writes true or falſe; for if once we come to impeach the Government by Way of Argument, 'tis the Argument that makes it the Government, or not the Government: So that I lay down that in the firſt Place, that the Government ought not to be impeached by Argument, nor the Exerciſe of the Government ſhaken by Argument; becauſe I can manage a Propoſition in itſelf doubtful, with a better Pen than another Man: This, ſay I, is a Libel.

Then I lay down this for my next Poſition, That no private Man can take upon him to write concerning the Government at all; for what has any private Man to do with the Government, if his Intereſt be not ſtirred or ſhaken? It is the Buſineſs of the Government to manage Matters relating to the Government; it is the Buſineſs of Subjects to mind only their own Properties and Intereſts. If my Intereſt is not ſhaken, what have I to do with Matters of Government? They are not within my Sphere. If the Government does come to ſhake my particular Intereſt, the Law is open for me, and I may redreſs myſelf by Law: And when I intrude myſelf into other Mens Buſineſs, that does not concern my particular Intereſt, I am a Libeller.

Theſe I have laid down for plain Propoſitions; now then let us conſider further, whether if I will take upon me to contradict the Government, any ſpecious Pretence that I ſhall put upon it ſhall dreſs it up in another Form, and give it a better Denomintion; and truly I think 'tis the worſe, becauſe it comes in a better Dreſs; for by that Rule, every Man that can put on a good Vizard, may be as miſchievous as he will to the Government at the Bottom: So that whether it be in the Form of a Supplication, or an Addreſs, or a Petition, if it be what it ought not to be, let us call it by its true Name, and give it its right Denomition, it is a Libel.

Then, Gentlemen, conſider what this Petition is: This is a Petition relating to ſomething that was done and ordered by the Government. Whether the Reaſons of the Petition be true or falſe, I will not examine that now, nor will I examine the Prerogative of the Crown, but only take Notice that this relates to the Act of the Government. The Government here has publiſhed ſuch a Declaration as this that has been read, relating to Matters of Government; and ſhall, or ought any body to come and impeach that as illegal, which the Government has done? Truly, in my Opinion, I do not think he ſhould, or ought; for by this Rule may every Act of the Government be ſhaken, when there is not a Parliament de facto ſitting.

I do agree, that every Man may petition the Government, or the King, in a Matter that relates to his own private Intereſt; but to meddle with a Matter that relates to the Government, I do not think my Lords the Biſhops had any Power to do more than any others. When the Houſe of Lords and Commons are in Being, it is a proper Way of applying to the King: There is all the Openneſs in the World for thoſe that are Members of Parliament, to make what Addreſſes they pleaſe to the Government, for the rectifying, altering, regulating, and making of what Law they pleaſe; but if every private Man ſhall come and interpoſe his Advice, I think there can never be an End of adviſing the Government. I think there was an Inſtance of this in King James's Time, when by a ſolemn Reſolution it was declared to be High Miſdemeanor, and next to Treaſon, to petition the King to put the Penal Laws in Execution.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Brother, I think you do miſtake a little.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother, I dare rely upon it that I am right: It was ſo declared, by all the Judges.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Puritans preſented a Petition to that Purpoſe, and in it they ſaid, if it would not be granted, they would come with a great Number.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Ay, there it is.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. I tell you, Mr. Sollicitor, the Reſolution of the Judges is, That ſuch a Petition is next Door to Treaſon, a very great Miſdemeanor.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. They accompanying it with Threats of the Peoples being diſcontented.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. As I remember, it is in the ſecond Part of the Folio 35, or 37, where the Reſolution of the Judges is, That to frame a Petition to the King, to put the Penal Laws in Execution, is next to Treaſon; for, ſay they, no Man ought to intermeddle with Matters of Government without Leave of the Government.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That was a Petition againſt the Penal Laws.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Then I am quite miſtaken indeed, in caſe it be ſo.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. That is not material at all which it was.

Mr. Pollexfen. They there threatned, unleſs their Requeſt were granted, ſeveral Thouſands of the King's Subjects would be diſcontented.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. That is the Reaſon of that Judgment, I affirm it.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. But then I'll tell you, Brother, again, what is ſaid in that Caſe that you hinted at, and put Mr. Sollicitor in mind of. For any Man to raiſe a Report that the King will, or will not permit a Toleration, if either of theſe be diſagreeable to the People, whether he may, or may not, it is againſt Law; for we are not to meaſure Things from any Truth they have in themſelves, but from that Aſpect they have upon the Government; for there may be every Tittle of a Libel true, and yet it may be a Libel ſtill: So that I put no great Streſs upon that Objection, that the Matter of it is not falſe; and, for Sedition, it is that which every Libel carries in itſelf; and as every Treſpaſs implies Vi & Armis, ſo every Libel againſt the Government carries in it Sedition, and all the other Epithets that are in the Information. This is my Opinion as to the Law in general.

I will not debate the Prerogatives of the King, nor the Privileges of the Subject; but as this Fact is, I think theſe venerable Biſhops did meddle with that which did not belong to them: They took upon them, in a petitionary Way, to contradict the actual Exerciſe of the Government, which I think no particular Perſons or ſingle Body may do.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Have you a Mind to drink before you go?

Jury, Yes, my Lord, if you pleaſe.

[Wine was ſent for for the Jury.]

Juryman. My Lord, we humbly pray that your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to let us have the Papers that have been given in Evidence.

L. C. J. What is that you would have, Sir?

Mr. Soll. Gen. He deſires this, my Lord, That you would be pleaſed to direct that the Jury may have the Uſe of ſuch Writings and Statute-Books, as may be neceſſary for them to make uſe of.

L. C. J. The Statute-Book they ſhall have.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But they can have no Papers but what are under Seal.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. They may have them by Conſent, and they may have a Copy of the Information.

L. C. J. They ſhall have a Copy of the Information, and the Declarations under Seal.

Mr. Pollexfen. If they have thoſe, and the Libel, as they call it, they will not need a Copy of the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray that your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to aſcertain what it is they ſhall have.

L. C. J. They ſhall have a Copy of the Information, the Libel, and the Declarations under the Great-Seal.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But not the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, nor the Journals, for they are not Evidence.

L. C. J. No, I don't intend they ſhall.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we pray they may have the whole Petition.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. That is, with the Direction and Prayer, you mean.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, with all our Hearts.

[Then the Court aroſe, and the Jury went together to conſider of their Verdict, and ſtayed together all Night, without Fire or Candle.]

On Saturday the 30*th Day of* June, Anno Dom. 1688, about Ten o'Clock in the Morning, the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Biſhops, came again into the Court, and immediately after, the Jury were brought to the Bar.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Crier, Take the Appearance of the Jury. Sir Roger Langley.

Sir Roger Langley. Here.

Crier. Vous avez, &c.

[And ſo all the reſt were called, and anſwered.]

[Then Proclamation for Silence was made.]

Sir Sam Aſtry. Gentlemen, are you agreed on your Virdict?

Jury. Yes.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Do you find the Defendants, or any of them, Guilty of the Miſdemeanor whereof they are impeached, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it —— You ſay, the Defendants, and every of them, are not Guilty of the Miſdemeanor whereof they are impeached; and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

[At which there were ſeveral great Shouts in Court, and throughout the Hall.]

Mr. Sollicitor General taking Notice of ſome Perſons in Court that ſhouted, moved very earneſtly that they might be committed: Whereupon a Gentleman of Gray's-Inn was laid hold on, but was ſoon after diſcharged. And after the Shouting was over, the Lord Chief Juſtice reproving the Gentleman, ſaid,

L. C. J. I am as glad as you can be, that my Lords the Biſhops are acquitted; but your Manner of rejoicing here in Court is indecent, you might rejoice in your Chamber, or elſewhere, and not here.

[Then ſpeaking to Mr. Attorney, he ſaid,]

Have you any thing more to ſay to my Lords the Biſhops, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. No my Lord.

[Then the Court aroſe, and the Biſhops went away.]

CXLV. Pro-

CXLV. Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons againſt ROGER PALMER, Earl of Caſtlemaine, for High Treaſon, in going Embaſſador to Rome, October 26, 1689. 1 W. & M.

THE Attorney General [Sir George Treby] being, on Saturday the 26th of October, 1689, inform'd, that the Earl of Caſtlemaine, Sir Edward Hales, and other Priſoners of the Tower, were brought by their Habeas Corpus to the Hall to be bail'd, deſir'd to know the Pleaſure of the Houſe in that Affair; who order'd that they ſhould preſently be ſent for to their Bar, which was done accordingly; only the ſaid Earl was not there; for he remain'd ſtill in the Tower, having, it ſeems, made uſe of no ſuch Writ: However, the Houſe directed the Governor to bring him up (as he did) the Monday following; and then the Speaker [Henry Powle] ſaid to this Effect.

MY Lord, the Houſe having underſtood that you went Embaſſador to Rome, and alſo took your Place at the Board as a Privy-Councellor, without taking the Oaths (which are great Crimes, and againſt Law) they have ſent for you to know what you have to ſay for yourſelf.

His LORDSHIP's ANSWER.

IT cannot, Mr. Speaker, but put me into more than an ordinary Confuſion, when I find myſelf in this Place as a Criminal; eſpecially, ſeeing, through the whole Courſe of my Life, the Glory and Welfare of England has been my chief Aim and Endeavour. You are pleas'd, Sir, to lay ſo great a Charge upon me, that, without Shuffling or Impertinence, I might ask Time to conſider it; yet ſince I well know how much you value your Time, and ſince Time alſo may make what I ſay ſuſpected more of Artifice than Candor, I ſhall now, without further Delay, let you and this great Aſſembly ſee (where ſo many of Birth and Quality are met) how far I am from deſerving either Cenſure or Reproach. But, Mr. Speaker, before I go further, I muſt humbly beg theſe few Favours of you. Firſt, That you would pardon all Tautologies, or Want of Method, as beginning perchance in the Middle, and ending again where I ſhould have begun. Secondly, That you would not take any Advantage at my Anſwers, for I ſhall be ingenuous to the Utmoſt, and heſitate at nothing you ſhall ask. And Laſtly, if, through Inadvertency or Haſte, I ſhould ſay what might ſhock you, that you would not ſtand upon the Rigour of the Words, but upon the Sincerity and Clearneſs of my Explanation.

Be pleas'd then to know, Sir, I was ſo far from ſeeking this Employment, that I did not ſo much as dream it was deſign'd me; and when I knew it, I us'd my utmoſt Endeavour to avoid it. My Ignorance of the King's Intentions appears by this, that, in the Year I went to Rome, returning out of the Country, according to my uſual Cuſtom, after Michaelmas, I found a Proteſtant, a Perſon of Note at my Houſe, who told me, that before I ſpoke with any Man, he was to bring me to my Lord Sunderland, and from thence I was to go to his Majeſty; nor would he ſcarce afford me Time to put myſelf in a tolerable Order to attend them. My Lord Sunderland ſoon hinted to me what the King's Intentions were; and when I recurr'd to his Friendſhip, I had this Anſwer, or Words to this Purpoſe: That if Subjects ſhould refuſe their King's Service in every thing that was troubleſome or Contre-Cœur, all Kings would be in an ill Condition; that my Requeſt was beyond his Power, and that he believed I ſhould find his Majeſty very poſitive; and ſo I did, Mr. Speaker, I'll aſſure you. Nay, to ſatisfy you yet more fully of my Backwardneſs to this Journey; can you think, Sir, that I, that had been at Rome more than once; that had ſeen the Grandeur of ſo many Roman Embaſſies, and knew they exceeded in Splendor and Expence three Times thoſe to any crown'd Head whatſoever, ſhould not be extraordinarily concern'd at an Employment which had for its Subſiſtence, as the Lords of the Treaſury well know, no other Eſtabliſhment than to Spain or France, which (being 100 l. a Week) amounts only to 5200 l. per Annum?

Having thus, Sir, ſhew'd you how little fond I was of the Thing, let me now, with Submiſſion, ask you, what could I otherwiſe do in my Circumſtances? For firſt, I call all that's Good to witneſs, I never heard of Law againſt it, nor know of any to this very Day: And yet, on the other Side, I was not only commanded by the King, but knew his Royal and Legal Power of commanding the Service of his Subjects, and moſt particularly in Embaſſies, as appears by many old Examples; nay, by a fatal one in this very Century; I mean the Caſe of Overbury, to which no body here, I'm ſure, is a Stranger. In the next Place, Sir, what did I go to Rome for? Why only with a Letter; with a Complement from a profeſs'd and open Catholick King to his Holineſs, as all Princes of that Communion do in the Beginning of their reſpective Reigns. Beſides, Mr. Speaker, as I know no Law that forbad my Obedience, ſo I muſt needs ſay (and this without cramping, or putting any Bounds to the Legiſlative Power) that no ſuch Law can be made: For, Sir, the Pope is a very conſiderable Temporal Prince, whoſe Territories border on two great Seas, the Mediterranean and Adriatic: If then our Merchants ſhould be by Storm, or or other Neceſſities, driven into his Ports; if Engliſhmen ſhould be ſurpriz'd by any Roman Party as they travel in a neighbouring Country, ſhall our Government (not to mention a Hundred other greater Accidents) want Power to ſend a Meſſenger to ranſom and compound for them? What Law therefore was there ever yet fram'd, or can be enacted (let the Commerce or Intercourſe between Nations be never ſo much broken and prohibited) but that a Commander in Chief, a General, and much more a King, may beat a Parley, diſpatch a Trumpet; nay, ſend and receive Letters as often as Occaſion does require?

Now, Mr. Speaker, for Religion, I neither had any Commiſſion concerning it, nor tranſacted with his Holineſs about it; and as no body ever did, or could lay any thing of that Nature to my Charge, ſo for ſome Confirmation of it, I will appeal even to the Aqua-Freſca Houſes of Rome, and to all the Proteſtant Gentlemen of our Nation there during my Embaſſy; for though what I tell you, Sir, be a Wonder, yet the honourable Perſons who have reſided in thoſe Parts, know it to be true, that for a Diſh of Chocolate, or a Diſh of Limonade, one may know the Meaſures and Particulars of an Embaſſy in that City, as well as we do what paſſes within theſe Walls at our Coffee-Houſes. I am ſure my under Servants have often ſmil'd at the Grimaces and Myſteries which my Secretaries us'd in the Beginning to make before my Audiences; for they have told them, within few Hours after my Return, almoſt Word by Word what had paſs'd. Give me alſo Leave, Sir, to add one Truth more, which will aſſure you that I had no dangerous Intrigue in Hand; and this is, that notwithſtanding his Holineſs never had the leaſt Imagination or Thought, but that I was as real and ſincere a Catholick as any Man living; and the ſame Thing alſo I can ſay of all the Cardinals; and in fine, of the whole Court in general; yet none of them (and every Engliſhman in Town knew it), but look'd upon me as one that if any Immunity of the Crown were in Queſtion, or any Temporal Concern of the Kingdom touch'd, would ſtand as much in the Gap, and be in as Diametrical an Oppoſition as any Perſon of the Reform'd Religion whatſoever.

You ſee then, Sir, both how and why I went; nor have I done any thing certainly to merit any Man's Unkindneſs or Ill-will; nay, to lay yet further before you the Hardſhip I am under, I ſhall ſtate you a Caſe not fetch'd out of old forgotten Records, or tranſacted in an Age diſtant from ours, but of a Man attainted in this very Houſe, in the Memory of ſeveral now ſitting, and even whilſt I myſelf had the Honour to be a Member of it. The Caſe, Mr. Speaker, is Axtel's the Regicide; one whoſe Crime, I dare ſay, my greateſt Enemies think I abhor in the higheſt Manner; nor do I mention the Thing in Favour of the Criminal, but in Honour of his grave and worthy Judges. Axtel, you know, Mr. Speaker, was indicted for the Murder of Charles the Firſt; and to ſhew that he maliciouſly contrived and abetted it, the King's Council urged his commanding in the Hall at the Trial; his placing the Centinels all about; and in ſhort, his performing there the whole Office of Captain of the Guard. The Priſoner anſwer'd, but pray, Mr. Speaker, let me beg Pardon, if the Interval of almoſt thirty Years has made me forget his Words, I am ſure the Senſe of them I have not. I ſay, Sir, the Priſoner anſwer'd; My Lords, I am under great Oppreſſion, I am hardly dealt with. Has Charles the Second been ſo gracious as to paſs over the ordinary Tranſgreſſions of his ſtrayed Subjects, and to look upon the Obedience of Soldiers to their then Superiors, as if the Authority had been more legal; And ſhall I now die (who was under Military Diſcipline) for that which I muſt have preſently died for, had I not done it; to wit, had I not drawn up my Regiment, kept the Poſt order'd me, and perform'd the other Duties, the Concourſe being great and troubleſome? Upon this the Judge reply'd; I confeſs (conſidering the King's merciful Reſolutions) that your Argument is ſtrong; it has great Weight in it; but Mr. Axtel, did you no more? Did you only perform the Duty of a commanded Soldier? Who was it, I pray, that animated the Rabble? Who beat the Soldiers for not crying Juſtice? Who encourag'd ſpitting in the King's Face? And who barbarouſly revil'd and threaten'd a Noble Lady, that in the Tranſport of her Zeal (when ſhe ſaw her Sovereign abus'd, when ſhe heard ſuch Blaſphemy againſt him, and all this father'd upon the Nation) made a Noiſe or Stir in the Court? Theſe Things therefore, Sir, being prov'd againſt him, he was convicted, condemn'd, and ſo paid a Debt to Juſtice, and to the ſacred Aſhes of that great and juſt Man.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to Application: And firſt (after a little Glance on the Tenderneſs of theſe Judges, when any Neceſſity could be pretended) let me, with your Pardon, ask you, ſhall I ſuffer as a Tranſgreſſor of the Law, were there any, when I muſt have ſuffer'd by the Law, had I refus'd his Majeſty's Orders and Commands? But, Sir, if you demand, did I no more than carry a Letter, or go with a Ceremonious How d'ye from the King? I muſt anſwer yes, and a great deal more too. For my Houſe was an Aſylum, a Place of Refuge to all diſtreſs'd or oppreſs'd Fellow Subjects. If Seamen mutiny'd, or had any Conteſt with their Captains, here a Reconciliation was made, and here they return'd to their Obedience; if the Captains themſelves, fraughted for the Camera, were delay'd their Money, or miſus'd by under Officers, they quickly found Redreſs; and often, by my Intereſt, receiv'd more than they themſelves expected. And if the Queſtion happened about Quantity, or how Goods were condition'd at Delivery, the Verdict I am ſure went ſtill on their Side: Nor was my Care confin'd to Rome only, but reach'd to all the Factories of Italy: For the Conſuls themſelves, nay every private Perſon, found both an eaſy Acceſs to me, and an indefatigable Zeal in their Concerns: So that the Merchants in general that had to do in thoſe Parts, were far from being behind Hand in their thankful Ackowledgments. Nay, one of the greateſt Companies of our Nation, I mean that for Turkey, not only return'd me their Thanks very heartily by Letter, but did it again by Word of Mouth after my Arrival Home.

I am ſure, Mr. Speaker, if the Employment I ſubmitted to were a Fault, I have already not a little ſuffer'd for it; for I never put Bounds (as our Travellers, as well as my own Officers, fully know) to any Expence that could be imagin'd for the Dignity of the Nation. And give me Leave to tell you alſo, Sir, that though the Name of Rome may be harſh and ungrateful to your Ears, yet what I did was with a good Intention, and like a true and faithful Engliſhman. For had I been ſent with a Character to Conſtantinople, where they are Mahometans, or to China, where Gentiles, the Eclat or Figure which I ſhould have endeavour'd to make, would never be conſider'd by you as an Honour to their Religion, but our Country; therefore ſince it is a Diſparagement and great Reflection to a Kingdom, to come below, or ſhort of others, in any thing that is Publick and of Note, I cannot but have at leaſt faint Hopes, that you will have ſome Conſideration, ſome Opinion of an Embaſſador, though at Rome, that kept up, to his Power, the Glory and Grandeur of England.

But, Mr. Speaker, not to trouble you longer on the preſent Head, I'll end when I have told you this: That if I have done amiſs in obeying the King's Commands, no Conſul that has purſued a Pirate or Banditti at Rome; no private Factor that has follow'd a Debtor thither, nor in ſhort, any Man that has written ſo much as one Letter to that City, though it were to demand his own, but is a far greater Criminal than myſelf, and lies at the Mercy of every Enemy, to be indicted as a Contemner and Breaker of the Laws.

Your ſecond Charge, Mr. Speaker, is my being a Privy Counſellor, without taking the appointed Oaths; to which I can truly ſay, they were never offer'd me; though I muſt alſo confeſs (for I ſhall be ſincere with you in every thing) that I believe, nay, that I am certain, I ſhould not have taken them, had they been offer'd: So that I do acknowledge the Omiſſion a Fault againſt Law——

[Here the Speaker, thinking that his Lordſhip had made an End, deſir'd him to withdraw; but being inform'd that he had not done, he excus'd the Interruption, and then his Lordſhip went on.]

I ſay, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge this a Fault againſt Law, were there not ſeveral Things of Weight that will, I hope, juſtify me to you: And here, Sir, I muſt entreat you not to conceive that I come now to defend, or make good the Diſpenſing Power, but only to ſhew you how neceſſarily I was driven and induc'd to the aforeſaid Omiſſion; for, Mr. Speaker, in Controverſies and Diſputes, what can one do, but recur either to his own Obſervation, or to the Opinion of learned Men, and Profeſſors in the Science?

In the firſt Place then, when I began to examine myſelf as to the Right the King claim'd and aſſerted, I ſaw Non obſtantes deem'd Legal, which ſignified to me Diſpenſing: I found the Power of continuing Sheriffs own'd for many Ages to be undoubted Law, and yet I knew there was a poſitive Statute againſt it: Nay, I remember'd an Act which I myſelf had in this Houſe given my Vote and Conſent to, viz. That about the Regulation of Carriages and Waggons; or if this be not the exact Title, I muſt beſeech you to pardon my treacherous Memory, and 'tis, I'll aſſure you, the only Traitor I ever yet ſuccoured or ſupported. I ſay, Sir, I remember'd this very Act, almoſt as ſoon as made, ſuſpended by Charles the Second's Proclamation, without the leaſt Queſtion or Murmur; and I took ſo much Notice of it, as to make even then this Reflection (and I do aſſure you upon my Honour 'tis true) That though our Monarchs could not impoſe and abrogate Laws of themſelves, yet they had the Power, I perceiv'd, to reſpite them.

In the ſecond Place, Mr. Speaker, if I went abroad; I mean, if I conſulted the Thoughts and Sentiments of others, I found not only great Men of the long Robe, but the Judges alſo themſelves, declaring in Favour of this Prerogative; and the Interpretation or Determination of theſe Sages was always told me to be Law, till a new Law, or a new Explanation ſhould be enacted. What would you then, Mr. Speaker, have me to do, who was call'd to the Board by the King; who could not in Conſcience take the Oaths, and yet had no Reaſon to think I committed, in not taking them, a Crime; ſeeing the Law was thus openly expounded and publiſh'd?

And now, Sir, ſince I have been forc'd to mention my Religion, which I know is a legal Fault, and of a high Nature, I muſt not forget alſo to celebrate the Goodneſs of this Houſe, which has pardon'd the Fault, even in the ſolemneſt Way, and by the ſolemneſt Act that ever paſs'd ſince Magna Charta; to wit, The great Act of Oblivion. Give me Leave, Sir, to ſay this too, for I can juſtly do it, that being ſo faithful and ſo true an Engliſhman, I neither ſhould, nor could, I am ſure, have ever, during my Life, offended my Country, but in my Religion. Pardon alſo I humbly beſeech you this Digreſſion, and together with it the Incoherences and Disjunctions all along; nor ſhall I any ways doubt of it, ſince you ſo well know how uneaſy and troubleſome a long Diſcourſe (which my Circumſtances have now required) muſts needs be to one that wants both Eloquence and Practice.

But, Mr. Speaker, to return where I left, and ſo conclude: How, Sir, I pray you (and I demand it again of you with great Reſpect) could I think the Omiſſion, as I ſaid, of the Oaths a Breach of the Laws, when our Guides, who had the Laws in their keeping, told us explicitely, and without Reſerve, the ſaid Oaths were not neceſſary? Shall I then ſuffer, that had neither Buoy nor Mark to direct me? Certainly no; for if there were a Fault, 'tis not I muſt ſuffer, but the Judges, and thoſe knowing and deputed Pilots, that hung out, it ſeems, the wrong Flag and Signal. I have, Sir, but one Word more to trouble you with, and this I ſpeak in Behalf of all here; nay, in Behalf of all the People of England; that if I now undergo your Severity, and that ſingle Perſons (notwithſtanding the Determinations and Judgments of our Courts of Juſtice) muſt be ſtill reſponſible, no Man can be ſafe, no Man can be at reſt; for no body that acts can know (as Accidents will often happen) whether he be innocent or guilty.

Mr. Speaker, I am in great Diſorder for impoſing thus on your Patience; and eſpecially ſeeing I muſt yet preſume to do it, one thing more occurring to me, as I hope, for your further Service, or at leaſt Satisfaction: And 'tis to let you know how I came to be a Priſoner, and why I continued ſo thus long. Be pleas'd then, Sir, that I tell you, that as ſoon as the King firſt left Whitehall, I thought it Decency to go out of Town; and therefore three Days after I took Coach for Montgomeryſhire, where of late I us'd to reſide in the Summer Time. On the Borders of that County, at a ſmall Corporation called Oſweſtree, I was firſt ſtopp'd by the Rabble, and afterwards detain'd, with a ſtrong Guard, at my Inn by the Mayor; though no body, as he confeſs'd, made any Oath againſt me; and though he had no Orders, as he ſaid, from London for it; nay, after a Months Reſtraint, he denied me my Liberty upon Bail, notwithſtanding two neighbouring Lawyers, whom I ſent for, aſſur'd him he could not juſtify the Refuſal by Law. I do not, Sir, complain of any Incivility, either from him or the People; for I was us'd with Reſpect enough; but I judge it extremely fit to let you ſee how the Liberty of a Subject was wilfully invaded by a Magiſtrate, and how little conſcious I was of any Guilt, ſince inſtead of Flying, I went to a Place where I was known by every body.

In fine, Mr. Speaker, after a Confinement of ſeven Weeks, I was ſent for up, and brought hither by a Party of Horſe; nor was I ever queſtion'd or examin'd by any body, but kept (upon the Suſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus Act) at a Meſſenger's Houſe for three Months; and when the ſaid Act was ſuſpended the laſt Time, I was committed by my Lord Shrewsbury's Warrant to the Tower, for Suſpicion of treaſonable Practices.

His Lordſhip having ended, retir'd with the Serjeant at Arms to his Room, where, after a little Stay, he was ſent for in again; and then the Speaker told him, that ſince he ſaid his Journey to Rome was with a Letter of Civility to a Temporal Prince, and not about Religion, the Houſe (to be more fully ſatisfied of it) deſir'd to ſee his Inſtructions. To which his Lordſhip thus anſwer'd.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, though I ſhall readily acknowledge my own natural Weakneſs, you will not yet think me ſo imprudent, as that, in a Time of ſuch Troubles and Diſtraction, I would keep Papers by me; and eſpecially about Rome, to render my ſelf liable to every malicious Man's Extravagancy and Comment. This therefore cauſed me, Sir, the Night before I went towards Wales, to burn all Papers that came to hand; and truly, ſome among the reſt, that I have ſince wanted: Nay, this I can alſo juſtly aver, that I remember not now one Word of thoſe Inſtructions, having, I'm confident, never read them twice; only this I remember, they were Things of Courſe, Words of Form, and needed no further Conſideration. Yet, Sir, that you may plainly ſee my Sincerity, and how far I am from any Deſign of illuding and deceiving you, I ſhall ſhew you how you may retrieve them, when I tell you, that Mr. Monſtevens brought them me, and that they were drawn, as I take it, by Mr. Bridgman; for I'm certain they came from my Lord Sunderland's Office.

But, my Lord, reply'd the Speaker, had you no private Inſtructions? None, anſwered his Lordſhip. What none at all? ſaid Mr. Speaker again. None, I'll aſſure you, Sir, reply'd his Lordſhip; unleſs the King's Orders, to demand a Cardinal's Cap for Prince Reinaldo of Eſte, were private Inſtructions; nor do I certainly know, whether thoſe Commands were in my foremention'd Inſtructions, or whether I had them by Word of Mouth.

My Lord, ſaid the Speaker, I have another Queſtion to ask you; to wit, who of the long Robe told you of the King's Power of Diſpenſing, and that there was no Neceſſity of taking the Oaths?

I am, Sir, anſwer'd his Lordſhip, infinitely troubled, if I have, through Want of Care, or by any improper Expreſſion, given you Occaſion to miſapprehend me; for I never ask'd any particular Man of that Profeſſion about this Affair: But my Meaning was (and I hope my Words are not contrary to my Meaning) that the ſaid Power was manifeſtly and openly declar'd to be Law by Judges and Lawyers; ſo that I deem'd it no Soleciſm in Diſcourſe to mention it as if they themſelves had told it me.

Then his Lordſhip retir'd again, and after a long Debate, the Houſe paſs'd this Order, That the Earl of Caſtlemaine ſtand committed to the Tower by a Warrant from this Houſe of High Treaſon, for endeavouring to reconcile this Kingdom to the See of Rome, and for other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

As ſoon as his Lordſhip was inform'd of this Vote, he entreated a Member to let the Houſe know, that he had a Word or two more to trouble them with: So that being brought in, the Speaker told him, that the Houſe having Notice, he had ſomething further to acquaint them with, was very willing to hear him.

Mr. Speaker, replied his Lordſhip, I have nothing more to ſay about the former Matters; but underſtanding your Pleaſure, I thought it my Duty to let you know, how the Cuſtom of the Tower, as to Priſoners, is changed; for in Courſe heretofore, unleſs there were a particular Order of State to the contrary, they had the Liberty of the Tower; that is to ſay, they could walk about at ſeaſonable Hours with a Warder: But now as ſoon as one is committed, though it be upon bare Suſpicion, as I was, he is confin'd to his Lodging, and hindred from the Conſolation of ſeeing his Friends, till, after much Sollicitation and Trouble, Leave be granted by the Secretaries. Therefore, Sir, being morally certain that I ſhall be confin'd again as ſoon as I return, I humbly deſire the Favour of this Freedom; it being alſo what I hitherto enjoy'd after I had been reſtrain'd for ſome Days in the aforemention'd Manner.

This ſaid, his Lordſhip went out, and then was carried to the Tower, where he was made a cloſe Priſoner, as he foretold; though what he moved, occaſioned the following Vote.

That a Committee be appointed to bring in a Bill for the better regulating the Impriſonment of the Subjects of this Kingdom, and to ſettle the Fees of Goalers. And it was likewiſe referr'd to them to examine into the Abuſes of Goalers towards their Priſoners which have heretofore been committed.

On Wedneſday the 5th of the following February, his Lordſhip mov'd for his Habeas Corpus, and was brought by the Lord Lucas, the preſent Governor of the Tower, to Weſtminſter, on the 10th. So that appearing at the King's-Bench, his Commitments were read, and Mr. Attorney having nothing to object againſt his being bail'd, the Court awarded it upon the Security of Thirty thouſand Pounds; that is to ſay, a Recognizance of Ten thouſand for himſelf, and Five thouſand a-piece from his four Sureties, which were, John Earl of Bath, Thomas Earl of Aileſbury, Thomas Earl of Suſſex, Charles Lord Lanſdown.

CXLVI. Proceedings againſt JOHN PRICE, Eſq; late Receiver of Ireland, and One hundred other Proteſtants, at the Aſſizes at Wicklow in Ireland, for High Treaſon, againſt King James, March 6, 1688-9, 1 W. & M.

JOhn Price, Eſq; Receiver General to the late King Charles the Second, having his Country Houſe in the County of Wicklow, at Ballinderry, twenty-four Miles from Dublin, did for the Safety and Preſervation of himſelf and Family, obtain the Lord Deputy Tyrconnel's Protection, as many more of the Engliſh Proteſtants living in the Country at the ſame Time did: For the late King James going away for France, and the Adminiſtration of the Government being put into the Hands of his preſent Majeſty, the Lord Tyrconnel gave out Commiſſions, for the raiſing a mighty Army, to any Iriſh Papiſt that would take one, and promiſe to Subſiſt, Maintain and Cloath their Men for three Months. Moſt of theſe new Officers are Men of mean Fortunes, not capable of ſubſiſting themſelves; their Men live altogether on the Engliſh, coming into their Houſes in the Day-time, and commanding from them their Meat and Drink; and often robbing them in the Night, ſtealing away their Cattle. Likewiſe the Prieſts of every Pariſh obliged all their People to furniſh themſelves with Half-pikes and Skeans, and bring them to Maſs, or not preſume to appear there, on the Penalty of Excommunication, or a ſevere Puniſhment; which cauſed all the Iriſh to arm themſelves with the aforeſaid Weapons; upon which, Robberies, Thefts and other Outrages were daily committed upon the Engliſh; particularly in the County of Wicklow, where ſome Hundreds were got together for that Purpoſe, who gave themſelves the Name of Merry Boys, and had very great Succeſs in their thieviſh Attempts upon their Proteſtant Neighbours, that lived hitherto ſecure in their own Houſes. It is obſervable, what great Power the Romiſh Clergy have over the Iriſh; they arm themſelves immediately at their Command, and yet to this Day have neither kept them from robbing of the Engliſh, nor reſtored them any thing taken away; which if they had been ſo minded, they might have done by the ſame Power. Several of Mr. Price's Neighbours repaired to Ballinderry, to preſerve themſelves and Goods; but an Order coming out ſoon after, for the taking away all Horſes and Arms from the Proteſtants, both in City and Country, Colonel Toole, with a Party of his Men, came to demand what Arms and Horſes they had at Ballinderry. Mr. Price and the reſt having the aforementioned Protection, refuſed to obey their Orders; and Complaint coming to Dublin, Colonel Sheldon was immediately ſent away with a Body of Horſe and Foot againſt Ballinderry. Mr. Price, upon his Approach, preſently ſubmitted to him, who thereupon was made Priſoner, and all the reſt of the Men that were in the Houſe: But the Priſon of Wicklow not being able to contain them, ſeveral of them were admitted to Bail, until the following Aſſizes, which began March the fifth laſt paſt, and ended the eighth.

Lord Chief Juſtice Keating's Charge to the Grand-Jury.

GENTLEMEN,

YOU that are here returned to ſerve on this Grand-Jury, you have this Day before your Eyes the greateſt Example, and the firmeſt Proof that a Gracious Prince can give to the beſt of Subjects. You ſee his ſacred Majeſty King James the Second (whom God long preſerve for the Protection of all his good and dutiful Subjects, and for the Subverſion and Irradicating of all thoſe who deſire the Subverſion of his Government, either by Foreign Force or inbred Conſpiracy) notwithſtanding the great Troubles on his own Perſon, yet he is not wanting in his Care towards you; and I dare boldly ſay, it is the laſt thing he will relinquiſh in the World, after that of his own Conſcience, the Care of his Subjects. He hath ſent us with his Commiſſion to enquire into all the Maladies, Diſeaſes, and Sores within your County. He has likewiſe given us Command to apply the healing Balſam of the Laws, which will preſerve the Subject moſt entirely in his Property. And I am ſorry I muſt tell you, that there was never more need than now at this Time. I am glad at the ſame Time that I can ſay, that the Miſchiefs fallen on a great part of this Kingdom, and on no part more than on this County, that is under the very Eye of the Government. I ſay, I am glad it can be ſaid to have ariſen, for the moſt part, from a Rabble of People, who have arm'd themſelves without any Direction from the Government, and that with unuſual Weapons: I mean Half-pikes and Skeans. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you plainly, it looks rather like a Deſign to maſſacre and murder, than any thing elſe. They do not belong to the Army, neither are they any part of them; but theſe are the Vultures, Kites, and Ravens that follow Armies. Soldiers that have travelled Abroad ſay, Such are not known among them there. I am told, and very well aſſured, that in Foreign Parts, where theſe Vultures and Birds of Prey are, it is hard for an Army to lie conceal'd, without being diſcovered by them; for it is Odds, but that a Horſe or a Man drops where ſuch Multitudes of People are. I am very far from laying this to the Charge of any that are under Command; though it is poſſible that ſome of them, under the Scarcity they are in, do give their Aſſiſtance, or at leaſt Encouragement to theſe Robbers; otherwiſe it could not be, that whole Flocks and Droves of Cattle are daily driven away, and yet no one taken or brought to Juſtice for it. The King is not wanting in his Care; he has given Directions to have the Laws put in Execution, that Criminals may be brought in and puniſhed; and the Government has iſſued out many Proclamations, but they are grown too familiar with them. You are to enquire into this Matter, in order to bring to Puniſhment, not only them that ſteal, but thoſe that receive. I am told that open Markets are ſet up in this County of Wicklow: A fat Bullock for Five Shillings, and a fat Sheep for One Shilling; but it will fall heavy on them at laſt. Divines ſay, that God Almighty oftentimes makes the very Crime to become their own Puniſhment; and I verily fear, that a few Months will produce a Famine in this Kingdom; and what ſucceeds a Peſtilence, and the worſt of all Peſtilences; for it is obſerved, that a ſtarved Rot is the worſt of all Rots; it falls out unhappily at this Seaſon of the Year, when the Cattle are breeding. Under the old Law the Jews were not to ſeeth the Kid in the Mother's Milk; but theſe unmerciful Wretches go further than that, ſparing none, but deſtroying old and young, the Encreaſe and all. Pray, Gentlemen, conſider of it, and ſearch the Houſes of ſuch as you have Reaſon to ſuſpect, that had not any thing to eat the laſt Year; go now into their Houſes, and you will find whole Carcaſes of Beef powdered up: Nay, it may be for Want of Salt, or Money to buy it, lying rotting and ſtinking. Let me tell you, it will be your Turn next, when they have robbed and ſpoiled your Proteſtant Neighbours, they will come to you, unleſs you take ſpeedy Care to prevent it. The King has done what he can, and the Government what they can; in vain is the Law made, if Offenders be not brought to condign Puniſhment. You all know there has been an Invaſion in England of a foreign Enemy, the Prince of Orange; and the ſame is deſigned on this Kingdom: The Effects of an Invaſion is not known. Defence is natural to all Kingdoms and States, and therefore the Government has given Directions for raiſing a greater Army than at any Time heretofore this Kingdom ever had. It was ſo among the Romans of old, who in Caſes of Neceſſity did Things clear contrary to the Fundamentals of their Laws. The ſame Neceſſity has put the King on arming here (in France they have their Ban, and with us our Commiſſion of Array, from ſixteen to ſixty) but without any Deſign that the Effects ſhould be to arm the Country with Half-pikes and Skeans. They are fit indeed for the Mountains, or to guard a Man's Houſe, but not to go abroad with at Noonday. Gentlemen, you that are Juſtices of the Peace, and Officers of the Army, wherever you meet, you ought to ſecure them, and bind them over, and know by what Authority they dare go abroad with ſuch Weapons. I need not ſay any thing to you in Defence of the King, for it is really and truly your own Defence; and therefore I ſhall proceed into the Heads which are prepared for your Enquiry at this Time. Our Buſineſs here is like to be very great, and our Time ſhort, and therefore I ſhall not trouble you with ſmall Things; we have greater Matters than Aſſaults and Batteries. We have Deſolations and Ruins to ſhew you, and ſet before you, and without your Care, we are like to fall into the Gulph of Miſery and Deſtruction. The firſt Thing we have to ſpeak of, is High Treaſon; we have no Petty Treaſon in Ireland. If any ſhall go about to conſpire the Death of the King, Queen, or the Heir apparent, the Prince of Wales, this is High Treaſon at all Times; it was ſo at Common Law: You muſt look to this betimes, for if a Blow be once ſtruck here, there can be no retrieving of it. If any one ſhould go about to ſeize the King's Perſon, or impriſon him, this, Gentlemen, is Treaſon; there is but few Steps between the Priſons and Graves of Kings; and by all the Obſervation that I can make out of the Engliſh, or Scots, or Iriſh Hiſtories, where we have had Swarms of murdered Kings, that if once they went into Priſon, they ſeldom ever eſcaped with Life. Our King has more Reaſon than any to dread this: His Father, who now is a glorious Martyr in Heaven, loſt his Life; and the King himſelf, ever ſince his Eſcape with Colonel Bamfield from St. James's, has had ſo many miraculous Deliverances both by Sea and Land, that we may conclude he is preſerved for ſome mighty Matter, or elſe Providence had not done ſuch great Things for him; and 'tis but of late that he himſelf is eſcaped out of Priſon. I am told by Authority, and am ordered to tell you, that he is expected in this Kingdom very ſuddenly, as a Place of Refuge. He is the firſt King, I think, ſince Henry the Second, except Richard, that has been in this Kingdom. It is a great Misfortune that he ſhould be forced to it, but we may look upon it as a great Bleſſing, that he ſhould think himſelf ſafe here, when he cannot be ſo elſewhere.

To ſeize any of the King's Forts or Ships of War (for theſe are the Bulwarks to defend him againſt his Enemies) this, Gentlemen, is Treaſon.

To hold Correſpondence with any of the King's Enemies, or with Rebels in actual Rebellion, or to join with them, this is Treaſon. You are not to enquire into the Puniſhment, but to open a Door for the petty Jury to enquire into the Matter of Fact, and what the Law is, ſhall by the Bleſſing of God be our Buſineſs.

To counterfeit the King's Coin, or clip it (and you have very little of it at this Time, therefore you had need be careful in a more eſpecial Manner) this likewiſe is Treaſon.

It is likewiſe Treaſon to counterfeit the Great Seal of the King; for 'tis the common Security, by which many hold their Eſtates, and ſome their Lives.

The killing of the Chancellor, or any of the Judges or Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, in the doing of their Duty, this likewiſe is Treaſon, not ſo much with Regard to their Perſons, as to the Work that they are about, they repreſenting the King's Perſon. The meaneſt Conſtable there, if he has his Staff in his Hand, and doing his Duty, he that kills him ſhall die the ſame Death as he that kills the beſt Man that wears Scarlet on the Bench. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you another Crime, and it looks like a Mark of Infamy on this Kingdom. Murder in England is but Felony, but it has been thought fit to make it Treaſon here, and they that go out on burning and robbing Houſes, they ſhall be indicted for Treaſon: And Clerk of the Crown, if any ſuch be here, now take Notice, I will have them indicted for Treaſon.

The next Thing for your Enquiry is Felony, that concerning the Life of the Subject. For a Man to kill his Fellow Subject, this is Felony, if he does it on a ſudden Paſſion and Heat: A Man may kill another in his own Defence; for 'tis natural for a Man to kill rather than be killed, and therefore he ſhall have his Pardon of Courſe. But, Gentlemen, this is not in Favour of Duels, and only where there is a great Provocation: There is not a Man but has ſome Paſſion about him; but for a Man to go to Bed with Malice, and ariſe the next Morning and go meet his Fellow Subject and kill him, this is Murder and Treaſon in Ireland.

The next Thing that is Felony, is concerning the Goods of the Subject; for an honeſt labouring Man, that by the Induſtry of his whole Life has gotten a fair Stock for the Maintenance of himſelf, ſelf, his Wife and Children, at Night goes to Bed, and next Morning when he ariſes, he is a Beggar, and wants Bread. Gentlemen, it would make every honeſt Man's Heart bleed to hear what I have heard ſince I came into this Country. It is ill in other Parts of the Country, but here they ſpare not even the wearing Cloaths and Habit of Women and Children, that they are forced to come abroad naked, without any thing to cover their Nakedneſs: So that beſides the Oath you have taken, and the Obligation of Chriſtianity that lies upon you as you are Chriſtians, I conjure you by all that is ſacred, and as ever you expect eternal Salvation, that you make diligent Enquiry. Let it never be ſaid by any of you, that it was your Neighbour, or your Neighbour's Servant did it, and you are ſorry for it, but will not trouble your ſelves: I tell you it is every Man's Buſineſs, and I beſeech you look into it.

To break into any Man's Houſe after Night-fall, is Felony. It is a ſound Sleep that the labouring Man takes, but the idle Rogue that lies lurking and ſleeping all the Day, at Night he ariſes and ſeeks whom he may devour. If you were to do the moſt charitable Work, as building of a Bridge or Chappel, or mending a High-way, how many do you think of theſe Men with half Pikes and Skeans would come to your Aſſiſtance? Not one of them I'll engage. But if a Houſe or Town be to be plundered, they all run thither. All Riots and Routs are to be enquired into. Numbers of People may meet for their own Defence, if they ſhould hear or ſee the Country robbing and ſpoiling, by a riotous Multitude coming to burn and rob their Houſes. In this Caſe they may meet and defend their Goods, and apprehend the Robbers, in order to bring them to Juſtice; but after all this, they are not to conteſt with the Government, nor do any thing to the Prejudice of that. I told you, I would not trouble you with unneceſſary Matters: All are loſt in the greateſt of Crimes and Outrages that are committed daily in the Country round about.

If I ſhould go through all the Heads of this Charge, it would take up more Time than we have to ſpend here; and therefore I ſhould ſhut up all, and ſay no more than this, that every Man do apply himſelf to his Huſbandry and Tillage, to prevent that imminent Danger of an approaching Famine that ſeems to be coming upon us, and that you make it your Buſineſs to ſearch after, and bring to Judgment thoſe Robbers that live on the Mountains; and while you continue to do your Duty, you ſhall have all the Protection the Government can give you. So upon Complaint of any Juſtice of the Peace that ſhall be backward or unwilling to appear againſt them, Care ſhall be taken to puniſh ſuch, and make them Examples. Go together, Gentlemen, and conſider of theſe Things.

[The Priſoners brought into Court.]

Clerk of the Crown. Set John Price to the Bar, Tho. King to the Bar, W. Lewis, James Beacon, William Heatly, Tho. Burroughs to the Bar, &c.

Hold up your Right Hands.

Clerk. John Price, Tho. King, &c. You ſtand here indicted, for that you on the 25th Day of February, in the fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, at Ballindery in the County of Wicklow, with divers other wicked Traitors and Rebels, in a warlike Manner then and there did aſſemble your ſelves, and a cruel and open War and Rebellion againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, and his faithful Subjects of this his Majeſty's Kingdom of Ireland, did raiſe and levy, and did intend our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and Deſtruction, to bring, and to depoſe him from his Kingly Authority and Government of this his Kingdom of Ireland: And to fulfil and accompliſh theſe your ſaid traiterous Intentions and Deſigns, you the ſaid Perſons, with others the ſaid wicked Traitors and Rebels, the Day, Year, and Place aforeſaid, did arm your ſelves with divers warlike Weapons, as well offenſive as defenſive; and did move and excite divers others the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, to join themſelves wickedly and traiterouſly, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Duty of your Allegiance, and the Statute in that Caſe made and provided, &c.

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou John Price, art thou guilty of the Treaſon that thou ſtandeſt here indicted, &c. or not guilty?

Mr. Price. Not Guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Priſoner. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Note, The Priſoners were brought into Court in ſeveral Parties, to be arraigned, as many as the Dock would hold at one Time.

[The ſecond Time the Dock was filled.]

Clerk Cr. Set William Fulham to the Bar, &c.

[Thady Brine, the High-Sheriff, ſtood up and ſaid, My Lord, Fulham was cleared.]

Bar. Lynch. Pray, Sir, who cleared him?

High-Sheriff. The chief commiſſioned Officer that was here; Colonel Sheldon did acquit him.

Bar. Lynch. He acquit him! how could that be? If there be nothing againſt him, we ſhall acquit him.

J. Keating. Clerk of the Crown, is he indicted?

Clerk. Yes, my Lord, a Bill of Indictment is found againſt him.

Pendergraſs, the Sub-Sheriff. My Lord, I will tell you, Mr. Sheriff is miſtaken; there was ſome Boys diſcharged, and he thinks Fulham is one of thoſe Boys.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, you do well to reflect on your Employer.

High-Sheriff to the Sub-Sheriff. You have done this to get Money for your ſelf. My Lord, Fulham was not concerned at all, and therefore was diſcharged.

Priſoner Lewis. My Lord, we are ſo crowded with a File of Muſqueteers and a Serjeant, that they take up our Chairs, that we cannot ſit down; and they come with their lighted Matches to our very Noſes; and laſt Night a Piece went off in the Room among us: We have not the Conveniency of quiet Repoſe, nor our Friends the Liberty of ſeeing us. My Lord, we were not born Lawyers, therefore deſire we may have our Friends come to us, and Council to adviſe with.

[This Lewis and Lord Galmoy are Brother and Siſters Children, and was offered a Troop if he would turn Papiſt.]

J. Keating. Mr. Lewis, you have been bred to the Law; but you ſhall have Council allowed you; and you, Mr. Sheriff, you are not to keep them with Fire-Arms, nor with your Soldiers. I ſaw a Centry at this Door Yeſterday, and forbad it — I remember that when Warren, Jephſon, and Thompſon

Thompſon were tried in 1663, for a Deſign to ſurprize Dublin Caſtle, becauſe this was a great Matter, forſooth, they muſt be guarded with Soldiers ——(They were tried at the King's Bench; and ſeveral Perſons deſirous to ſee or hear, being gotten up into the Arch in the Wall next the Court of Common Pleas) as they were going up Stairs, a Piece went off, and ſhot a Man through the Head. I tell you Mr. Sheriff, that brown Bill is your Guard [pointing at one in Court] the Law knows nothing of Fire Arms; [ſpeaking to the Priſoners] Gentlemen, I muſt tell you plainly, that I received Directions from my Lord Deputy, by the Attorney General, that you ſhould have all the Juſtice imaginable.

Bar. Lynch. Mr. Sheriff, you muſt command thoſe Soldiers to be civil, they are your Guards when you employ them.

Seventy Priſoners were arraigned and returned back to Priſon; 31 more that were indicted, and upon Bail, did not appear.

Next Day —— Thurſday March the 7th, they were again brought to Court to their Trials, and the Jury was impanneled, whoſe Names were as followeth, Papiſts marked thus † viz.

Jailor, ſet the Priſoners to the Bar.

Clerk Cr. You good Men that are to try the ſeveral Iſſues between the King and John Price, &c. and other Priſoners at the Bar, that ſhall be given you in Charge, &c. Jury, look at the Priſoners; Priſoners, look at the Jury.

Clerk Cr. Thomas Cowdell, to the Book.

Priſoner Lewis. I challenge him.

Clerk. What is your Cauſe of Challenge?

Deputy King's Council, Fitz-Patrick, My Lord, before they begin their Challenges, let us know whether they will all agree in their Challenges, otherwiſe we muſt be forced to try them ſeverally.

It was at length agreed, that if any one made a peremptory Challenge, the other Priſoners were to be ſatisfied with it.

[Coll. Tool on the Bench, ſpeaking to the L. Chief Juſtice Keating.]

My Lord, Mr. Lewis has been Sub-Sheriff of the County, and knows all that have Freehold.

J. Keating. It is the better for himſelf that he does know them.

Priſoner Lewis continued to challenge, until they had gone through the Pannel, and only two Gentlemen that were Proteſtants, Mr. Cradock and Mr. Pew, were ſworn.

Clerk Cr. Mr. Sheriff, a new Pannel——The Sheriff gave in another of eleven in Number, which were all likewiſe challenged by Mr. Lewis. —— Whilſt both the High and Sub-Sheriff were looking about the Court, for to make up a third Pannel, ſays

L. C. J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, How many Freeholders have you on the Grand-Jury?

Sheriff. Six or Seven, my Lord.

J. Keating. You have been ſparing enough of your Freeholders. The Law requires that all the Grand-Jury ſhould be Freeholders, and have you but ſix?

Sheriff. There is but very few Freeholders in the County, my Lord.

Counc. Fitz-Patrick. In Caſes of Neceſſity, my Lord——

J. Keating. You know the Law is ſo.

Counc. Fitz-Patrick. Yes, there is a Statute for it.

J. Keating. The Priſoner for his Life may challenge twenty peremptorily, without ſhewing Cauſe; and the whole World for Want of Freehold —— And ſhall I put ſuch a one on for his Life? Sir, I will not be hanged for any body.

Fitz-Patrick. Was ever a Judge hanged?

Mr. Handcock, Council for the Priſoners. Yes, above twenty in a few Years.

J. Keating. Mr. Fitz-Patrick, I will not be hanged with Juſtice Belknap, nor Treſſilian neither.

Counc. Handcock. My Lord, they were hanged at Tyburn.

J. Keating. I think they were.——The greateſt Part of this County is in the Hands of two or three Men, my Lord Strafford and Roſs.

J. Keating. Who is here that is concerned for my Lord Strafford and my Lord Roſs?

Court. Here is Dr. Hall on the Bench for the Lord Strafford, and the Sheriff is concerned for my Lord Roſs.

J. Keating. Dr. Hall, and you Mr. Sheriff, let me tell you, I do not know but that their Lordſhips have forfeited their Eſtates for this Day's Work. In the Act for Plantation, there was Proviſion made for Freeholds, and there were enough before the Wars. I fear theſe great Lords have ſwallowed up the Freeholds their Anceſtors made. I only tell you this.

The Sheriff by this Time had drawn up a third Pannel, being eight in Number.

J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, have you all your Freeholders here?

Sheriff. My Lord, we ſummoned all here.

J. Keating. On the firſt Pannel you might have returned forty, becauſe you do not know how far peremptory Challenges will run; and you are obliged after to return a fewer Number when you enlarge your Pannel; but you can never enlarge it farther than it was at firſt.

Clerk Cr. Birne, to the Book.

Priſ. Lewis. I challenge him for Want of Freehold.

J. Keating. Mr. Birne, have you a Freehold in this County?

Birne. My Lord I have a Leaſe of Lives.

Priſ. Weſtland. I Challenge him peremptorily.

Bar. Lynch. What Sir, do you begin to challenge? This ſhall not be allowed you, to challenge one upon another.

Counc. Hancock. My Lord, you are Council for the Priſoners.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, you are not to tell me my Duty; I will have you to know, Sir, I ſhall give an Account for myſelf. I am Judge for the King too, as well as Council for the Priſoners; and I am concern'd for the King.

J. Keating. [Turning towards him.] And do you think I am not concerned as well as you?

Bar. Lynch. Yes, my Lord, I ſpeak for you as well as myſelf.

Counc. Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, they agreed at firſt, that one Man ſhould challenge for them all —At this Rate we are never like to get a Jury for them. It is but an ill Sign of their Innocency, that they are not willing to come to a Trial.

[Mr. Hancock Council for the Priſoners.]

In the peremptory Challenges they agreed (but not in the Challenges for Freehold) and this peremptory Challenge we will ſtand by.

J. Keating. I will tell you how I underſtood it: That in their peremptory Challenges, if any one of them challenged, the reſt ſhould be concluded by it. Mr. Weſtland has made a peremptory Challenge, and they are willing to ſtand by that.— However, Mr. Birne, ſtand by, do not go away, we may call you again. Clerk of the Crown proceed — &c. — which he did, until he ended the third Pannel.

[Sub-Sheriff calls Willam Baker.]

Anſw. My Lord, he has a Freehold.

Baker. My Lord, I have no Freehold.

J. Keating. You ſee the Sub-Sheriff is a fit Man to be an Officer; he is blind—he is indifferent.

[High-Sheriff calls Peter Ayris.]

Anſw. He is on the Grand-Jury.

J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, why do you call ſuch?

Sheriff. I ſaw him in Court, and ſo I called him, my Lord.

J. Keating. There is already but five peremptory Challenges made, ſo that they may challenge fifteen more peremptorily; and there is but two ſworn, ſo that there wants ten.

Clerk Cr. Sheriff, ſee if you can get any more.

Sheriff. I ſee never a Freeholder in the Court.

Counc. Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, the Sheriff ought to be puniſhed for his Neglect.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, why did you not take care to return a Jury of Freeholders? You ſhall be fined for it.

High Sheriff. My Lord, I have returned all the Freeholders there is in the County (I ſent Yeſterday above twenty Miles for one Gentleman here) they are all gone out of the Country. — I hope you do not expect I ſhould go to the North, or Iſle of Man, or England, or Scotland, among the Rebels, to ſummon them?

J. Keating. I do really believe you, Mr. Sheriff, you have done like an honeſt Man —— Mr. Fitz-Patrick, what do you ſay in this Caſe?

Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, I cannot tell what to ſay.

Deputy King's Counc. Hammond. What if there was not one Freeholder in the County, muſt not Juſtice be done?

J. Keating. Can we make a Law for it?

Hammond. My Lord, I know that in Caſe of an Ejectment, a Trial has been removed from one County to another.

J. Keating. Can you by Law go to another County in Caſe of Life?

Hammond. It appears there is not ſufficient Freeholders in this County, the Lands being in ſome few Hands.

J. Keating. You know the Law is otherwiſe, and what would you have us that are Judges do? Pray tell us, Sir, what you would be at.

Hammond. We would have it removed to the next County, or another County.

J. Keating. For God's ſake, Mr. Hammond, do not put us on making Law.

Lynch. Mr. Hammond, when did you hear that ever a Matter capital was tried in a Foreign County? In Matters Civil, by Rule of Court, or Order of Chancery it may be, but of a capital Offence it was never known; and we are by our Commiſſion to try Offences committed againſt the Law in the Counties where the Fact was committed. —— We muſt try them in this County, and cannot remove them from one County to another.

J. Keating. Mr. Hammond, becauſe I would take you off of this new Law that you ſo much inſiſt on, that in Caſe of an Ejectment it may be tried in a Foreign County —— I tell you it cannot be tried in a Foreign County: We have no Law for it but that of K. James, and the Reaſon was, becauſe of the Story that was here on Foot; for an Heir Male, if collateral, he carried it againſt the Heir general. K. James he gave Direction that in that Caſe it ſhould be tried in a different County. And that my Brother tells you of trying in a different County, by Order of Chancery is this: A Perſon comes in Chancery, and he ſuggeſts that ſuch an one was too potent in ſuch a County, and therefore he deſired it might be tried in an indifferent County, or get ſuch a Rule of Court on ſuch a Suggeſtion. And this was the Caſe of the Archbiſhop of ——— when he was Biſhop of Limerick. And if Walcot might be believed, he ſaid, was the Occaſion of his running into Rebellion.

C. There is a Caſe in Hobart, &c.

J. Keating. I would undeceive you in that Particular: As in the Caſe of Auſten and Colonel Garret Moor. If in the County of Galloway it was Auſten's; if in the King's County, it was Colonel Moor's. So that you ſee, in diſputable Caſes, the Law has Regard that it be tried by Juries in proper Counties: And truly I think it one of the moſt reaſonable Laws in the World, that a Man ſhall be tried by his County, by the Neighbourhood; and it has given Ground to a good Engliſh Proverb, He that has an ill Name, is half hanged. A Man's Repute among his Neighbours goes a great Way in this Matter: When his Neighbours ſhall ſay they never knew ill by him. And this Man to be carried out of the County of Wicklow, to be tried at Wexford, you may by the ſame Rule bring a Jury from Tyrone, or the fartheſt Part of Connaught. There is nothing like what you ſay in the Law.

Hammond.

Hamond. I do not ſay that ever I met with ſuch a Thing in the Law.

Bar. Lynch. And do you think that we will make the Precedent?

Hamond. That two or three Perſons ſhould have almoſt the whole County.

J. Keating. Before God, I believe they think they have little enough, whatever you may think of their having too much.

Bar. Lynch. What you ſay, Mr. Hamond, if there be any thing in it, we ſhall adviſe with all the Judges. The Judges declaring their Opinion, that the Priſoners after being arraigned, could not be admitted to Bail.

Coun. Suxborough to Bar. Lynch. My Lord, you took Bail for Captain Ruth at Kilkenny, after his Arraignment.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you reflect on me? There was no Evidence appeared, and my Brother bailed him as well as I.

Coun. Suxborough. I ſay he was bailed.

Mr. Hancock. My Lord, Mr. Cooper at Galloway was bailed by your Lordſhip likewiſe.

Lord Chief Juſtice Keating ſent privately to Dublin to the Deputy, acquainting him, that if they were left in Priſon until the next Aſſizes, they would certainly periſh, they having loſt all they had, and the County was not able to maintain them; upon which he received Orders to bail all but ſeven of the Principal; viz.

John Price, Eſq.	James Bacon,
Thomas King,	Joſeph Crichley,
Richard Weſtland,	George Crichley.
William Lewis,

Who are kept cloſe Priſoners, in order to their Trial the next Aſſizes, which will be in this Month of July. Upon the taking theſe Gentlemen Priſoners, the Soldiers and Rabble plundered and ſpoiled all the Engliſh Families in Balinderry, Redrum, Balina-Claſh, &c. and the Iriſh Women with their Skeans came afterwards and ſtripp'd the Women and Children naked, leaving them in a moſt miſerable and deplorable Condition, having not left them either Bread, or any Food in ſeveral Towns, but carried all away with them. And as an Iriſhman, a Tanner, declared to ſeveral at the Aſſizes, in the Hearing of this Relator, that one Captain Tool had for his Share twenty-ſix Horſe-Loads, or more, of Plunder; and the Lord of Lowth's Troop of Dragoons that were quarter'd in Wicklow Town, had great Quantities of Woollen and Linnen Cloth, Womens Cloaths, Pewter, and other Goods in Abundance. But the Lord Chief Juſtice Keating coming there to the Aſſizes, and having an Account of the extream Poverty and Miſery the Proteſtants thereabouts were reduced to, did encourage their Petitioning, and where they could find their Cloaths, &c. he endeavoured to help them in the Recovery of them. And Mr. Richard Lamb having ten fat Bullocks taken away by Col. Tool's Men, and brought to Wicklow, and there killed and eaten by the Soldiers, he preferred a Petition to the Court, Colonel Tool being preſent on the Bench.

J. Keating. Colonel Tool, you heard the Petition read; do you know any thing of theſe Oxen Mr. Lamb had taken from him by your Soldiers?

C. Tool. My Lord, I will tell you how it was: Mr. Lamb had ſold the Bullocks to Mr. Price, and as they were driving them to Balinderry, the Soldiers met them and took them away.

J. Keating. But Mr. Lamb was at home at his own Houſe, and not at Balinderry; the Bullocks were to be paid for upon Mr. Lamb's delivering them to Mr. Price at Balinderry; your Soldiers took them away from his Servant ſeveral Miles from Balinderry: I ſee no Reaſon why Mr. Lamb ſhould not be paid for them.

C. Tool. My Lord, Colonel Sheldon came down ſoon after with the King's Army, and I adviſed with him, and he ordered they ſhould be killed for the Army, which was done accordingly.

J. Keating. Pray Colonel Tool, however, Mr. Lamb ought to be paid for them; he was not concerned with Balinderry, but kept his own Houſe.

Coun. Fitz-patrick. My Lord, his Houſe was a Garriſon too.

Mr. Hancock. For Shame, Mr. Fitz-patrick, a Thatch'd Cabin a Garriſon! I find you are for making all Proteſtants Rebels that live peaceably at home in their own Houſes.

C. Tool. My Lord, I have no more to ſay to the Matter.

Clerk of the Crown. Calling over the Gentlemen of the County, called one —— Savil, Gent.

Mr. Savil. Here I am, my Lord, God knows, a poor Gentleman, being robb'd of all, and not a Penny left me to buy a Pint of Drink.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, when were you robb'd?

Mr. Savil. The laſt Wedneſday they came and took away what little they had left untaken before, my Wife and Childrens Cloaths, robbing me of all.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, what Value may your Loſs be?

Mr. Savil. Truly, my Lord, I have not yet computed my Loſs, but they have taken away all; I deſire your Lordſhip will diſcharge me from attending the Court, for I have not wherewithal to ſubſiſt while I am here.

J. Keating. Sir, I am ſorry for you, I diſcharge you.

J. Keating. Colonel Tool, let the Officers be ſent for into Court, to hear this Proclamation read, that is ſent down here by the Government.

C. Tool. My Lord, they are here moſt of them. Here is Captain Archbold, Captain Tool, &c.

Clerk of the Crown read the Proclamation, the Subſtance whereof was, That they ſhould reſtore the Proteſtants ſuch of their Horſes again, as were not fit for the King's Service, &c.

J. Keating. calls for it from the Clerk, and giving it into Colonel Tool's Hand, who ſtood next him on the Bench; Sir, Pray take this Proclamation, and I hope you will take Care that Obedience be given to it.

C. Tool. My Lord, we have received other Orders; Colonel Sheldon, who is our chief Commander, has given Directions to have them kept for Draught for Carriages.

J. Keating. Nay, Sir, if Colonel Sheldon muſt be obeyed before the Government, I have no more to ſay, I have done.

C. Tool. My Lord, I ſhall obey it.

J. Keating. Pray then, Colonel Tool, let the Horſes be ſent for while that I am here, that what Horſes are not muſterable may be return'd: I cannot in my Conſcience go about to fine Men for not appearing at the Aſſizes, when they have not a Horſe left them to ride on.

CXLVII. The Trial of MAURICE CAVENAUGH, EDMUND POOR, and WILLIAM BOWLAND, in Ireland, for Felony, in ſtealing Cows, March 7. 1688-9. 1 W. & M.

SEVERAL were arraigned for ſtealing conſiderable Numbers of Cows, Sheep, &c. but the Evidence againſt moſt of them durſt not appear to proſecute.

Leaghlin Birne indicted for ſtealing nine Head of Black Cattle from one Colwell; no Perſon appearing to proſecute, ſays Juſtice Keating [to the Jury]. Gentlemen, you have nothing againſt this Man; he was born in the State of Innocency; but the Truth is, the Parties dare not appear againſt him.

[Witneſſes came in againſt three Fellows; viz. Maurice Cavenagh, Edmund Poor, William Bowland.]

[Clerk of the Crown calling them to come and proſecute, and they appearing.]

J. Keating. You that are Evidences againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, I charge you, as you will anſwer it before God, that you neither for Favour or Affection be enclined to ſpare any of theſe Villains; and likewiſe, that you will conceal nothing of the Truth, as you will anſwer it at the Great Day; for I tell you, the Cries and Groans of the poor Women and Children, and the many Families that are ruined, and in great Diſtreſs, will go up to Heaven againſt you.

Evidence againſt Edm. Poor. My Lord, when I came to him, and asked him why he ſtole my Cows, he ſaid, the Devil did make him do it. I ſpake him fair, and he gave me Money for my Cows.

Poor. Ay, my Lord, and he promiſed not to trouble me.

J. Keating. It was an unlawful Promiſe; the Law would not juſtify him in it; he has done like an honeſt Man. If you paid the Money out of Conſcience, you did well; but I fear it was your Danger of the Halter made you part with your Money; for if twenty-two Shillings and Damnation ſtood in the Way, I believe you would have kept the Money. I am ſure, without Satisfaction, you cannot expect Abſolution; the Prieſt that gave the other Advice for the Maddoge or Skean, will, I ſuppoſe, tell you ſo.

Two Proteſtant Evidences againſt Maurice Cavenagh, for ſtealing ſeveral Head of Black Cattle, hearing Judge Keating ſpeak againſt Skeans, ſaid.

Evidence. My Lord, when we ſeized him, we took a Skean away from him.

J. Keating. Sir, How durſt you carry ſuch an unlawful Weapon?

Cavenagh. My Lord, I am a Butcher, it was a Butcher's Knife.

J. Keating. Ay, I do not queſtion but thou canſt butcher upon Occaſion.

One Hicky ſpoke. My Lord, He is no Butcher, but one of the greateſt Rogues in the County round us. I have been in Purſuit of him ſeveral times.

Cavenagh. He is a Murderer, my Lord, do not believe him.

Evidence. My Lord, it was near ten Inches long, thick at the Back, and ſharp Point, every way a Skean.

J. Keating. Is that your Butcher's Knife? you are a great Villain, for carrying ſuch a Weapon.

Cavenagh. I was ordered to have a Skean, my Lord.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, who ordered you?

Cavenagh. The Prieſt of the Pariſh.

J. Keating. A Prieſt, Sir, [turning to his Brother Judge] do you hear that Brother?

Bar. Lynch. What Prieſt, Sir? What Prieſt? What is your Prieſt's Name?

J. Keating. Hold, Brother. Come, Sir, I ſhall not ask your Prieſt's Name: I believe you will have Occaſion to ſee your Prieſt ſoon, to do you a better Office, than to adviſe you to carry Skeans.

[And looking towards Col. Tool, and two Prieſts on the Bench, next Sheriff Birne.]

J. Keating. A Prieſt, Gentlemen! A Prieſt is a Miniſter, and a Miniſter of the Goſpel; his Doctrine ought to be Peace, for the Goſpel is a Doctrine of Peace. When our Saviour came into the World Peace was proclaimed; and when he went out of the World he left it for a Legacy to his Diſciples: My Peace be with you. And pray, Sir, tell your Prieſt ſo from me when you ſee him. It is not for Prieſts to arm or animate ſuch Villains as you are for Miſchief. I ſhall not ask your Prieſt's Name.

Clancy, an Iriſh Gentleman. My Lord, he belies the Prieſt; he is a Rogue.

Cavenagh. I do not: The Prieſts of every Pariſh did give Orders to get Half-pikes and Skeans; and they were getting together in Companies in every Pariſh.

J. Keating. Who were they that were gotten together; ſuch Fellows as you?

Cavenagh. No, my Lord, better Men than I; a great many that are here in Court.

[The Jury withdrawing, and returning ſoon again, brought Poor and Bowland in guilty, Cavenagh not guilty.]

J. Keating. Gentlemen, you have acquitted the greater Villain; at your Door let it lie.

[The Ordinary being called to give Bowland and Poor the Book, for their Clergy.

J. Keating. Sir, I expect as true a Return from you, as if I were there my ſelf. The Times are ſo, that Men muſt forget Bowels of Mercy. Ordinary, do your Duty: What Place do you ſhew them?

Ordinary. My Lord, I ſhew them the fiftieth Pſalm.

J. Keating. Let them read the fifth Verſe.—This is an Act of Mercy, and I know not why it ſhould not be in Iriſh rather, the Country Language.

guage. It was formerly in Latin, becauſe the Romiſh Church hath their Worſhip in Latin.

[The Ordinary return'd them both, Non legit.]

J. Keating. You William Bowland, and you Edmund Poor, you have been arraigned for ſtealing of Cows, two ſeveral Thefts: It is a great Misfortune and Sin to be guilty of ſuch Crimes at any Time; but yours is ſo much the worſe, becauſe it falls in a Time when there are ſuch general and vaſt Depredations in the Country, that many honeſt Men go to Bed poſſeſs'd of conſiderable Stocks of black and white Cattle, gotten by great Labour and Pains, the Induſtry of their whole Lives, and in the Morning when they ariſe, not any thing left them, but turn'd out of all, to go a begging, all being taken away by Rebels, by Thieves and Robbers, the Sons of Violence, that make every thing they lay their Hands on their own. On this ſide the Cape of Good Hope, where are the moſt brutiſh and barbarous People we read of, there is none like the People of this Country; nor ſo great a Deſolation as in this Kingdom, at this Day, any where to be found, and particularly in this County. It is come to that paſs, that a Man that loſes the better Part of his Subſtance, chooſes rather to let that, and what he has beſides go, than come to give Evidence: And why? Becauſe he is certain to have his Houſe burnt, and his Throat cut, if he appears againſt them. Good God! what a Paſs are we come to! For what has any Man, if the ſtronger Hand can take it from him? It is better to live under no Law, than in ſuch a Place. We have lived to ſee twenty-nine Years of Peace paſs over our Heads, and I have ſat on this Bench before now: I pray God, that my Lenity, and others, has not given Encouragement to theſe Thieves and Robbers. There may be a Rogue in the Court, or one that is evilly enclined (I know none) but take Notice of this, the Government is at length tir'd with Mercy; they ſee it does no good, and Examples and Puniſhments of this Kind are not intended ſo much in a great Part for the Puniſhment of the Offender, as for diſcouraging of others, to make them take Warning by their Example, that, ſeeing what evil Courſes bring Men to, they may reform.

I will not take up Time to tell you how the Benefit of Clergy came; whether in the room of the Cities of Refuge that were in the old Times: I know that Reſtitution was under the Jewiſh Law ſufficient Satisfaction; and if the Thief could not make Reſtitution, he was to be ſold for a Slave, and the Money given to the Party. But as the World grows old it grows worſe, and thoſe Lenitives ſignify nothing for preventing Thieving and Robbery; for Thieves and Robbers are like a Gangreen in the Commonwealth; they are worſe than Drones in the Hive. I cannot tell my ſelf, that under the Circumſtances we are in, I ſhould adviſe to pardon any that are taken in this general Depredation that we are under; and therefore you Bowland and Poor, that might have lived as ſafely under the Laws as the biggeſt Man in the Kingdom, and none of your Fellow Subjects durſt lay his Hand upon you, but he was liable to anſwer for it: And thus you might have lived to a fair old Age, and ended your Days in Peace; but you have choſen the quite contrary, for the Law provides likewiſe for the Puniſhment of wicked and offending Perſons, among which Number you are found by a Jury of twelve able Men of your Country; and therefore the Sentence of the Law is this, That you be both, and each of you, taken from this Place, to the Place from whence you came, and there your Irons to be ſtruck off, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and there you ſhall be hanged by the Neck till you are dead, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

And now let me give you Advice; your Time is ſhort, ſpend it well, and flatter not your ſelves with the Hopes of a Reprieve or Pardon: And for you, Poor, you have ſhortned the Work of your Life; you have gone a great Way towards Heaven, if that Reſtitution you made was out of Conſcience. Mr. Sheriff, let them have a Confeſſor ſent to them, for Saturday is the Day of their Execution. [The Women, their Friends, ſetting up their Cry in the Court.]

J. Keating. They did not cry thus when the Cows were brought Home to them, they were buſied then in the killing and the powdring them up.

The Copy of a Protection or Paſs, given by an Iriſh Officer to ſome notorious Robbers of the County of Wicklow.

I James Byrne, Enſign to Captain Charles Byrne, do hereby certify to you, Terlagh Kelly, Patrick Byrne, and Patrick Mac-Teige, and William Doyle, to ſave you harmleſs from any Miſdemeanors whatſoever. As witneſs my Hand this 24th of April, 1689. JAMES BYRNE.

The following Letter being ſent by the Lord-Deputy to the Judges of Aſſize, was read in Court to the Grand-Jury, &c.

By the Lord-Deputy General, and General Governor of Ireland.

AFTER Our hearty Commendations, We Greet you well. As his Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to entruſt us with the Government of this his Kingdom, ſo upon the invading of England, and upon receiving certain Information, that the Prince of Orange doth intend alſo to invade this Realm, We have, for the Defence thereof, raiſed a conſiderable Army, far above what could be maintained by the King's Revenue at the beſt of Times, and when the Trade of this Country was in the moſt flouriſhing Condition. This we have done by the King's Command, to ſupport his Regal Authority, Crown and Dignity, and to preſerve the Lives, Liberties and Properties of all his Liege People within this Kingdom. And ſince our Dangers are at Hand, and that we may daily expect the Landing of an Enemy, who intends the Subverſion of his Majeſty's Government, and the total Deſtruction of all his good Subjects, here we find our ſelves under an abſolute Neceſſity to keep the King's Army ſtill on foot, in order to our Preſervation from the approaching Dangers. And tho' we have hitherto with all the Care and Induſtry imaginable, and by the generous Concurrence of the Officers, ſupported the new raiſed Forces, without being a Burthen to any of his Majeſty's People: Yet conſidering the Decay of Trade, the great Fall of the Revenue in theſe diſtracted Times, the great Charges the Officers have been at in ſubſiſting Men, it cannot be expected that the ſtanding Forces can hereafter be maintained without Supplies; and ſince the ſame cannot be done by Parliament, We cannot think of a more effectual Expedient, than by voluntary Subſcriptions, by way of Loan, from the People; which, if generouſly done, with what may be made of the Revenue, may ſupport the Army, and will ſtop all the Diſorders that may be

be committed by the Soldiers, which we ſhall always endeavour to prevent with all the Care and Induſtry poſſible. By this, Huſbandry may go on as formerly, and we ſhall be in a Capacity to form the Army ſo as that, with the Aſſiſtance of Almighty God, we do not doubt to put this Kingdom in a perfect Poſture of Defence. We do therefore pray your Lordſhips to recommend this weighty Matter effectually at the open Aſſizes in every County when you ſit, to all the Inhabitants of ſuch Counties, and to appoint the reſpective Sheriffs of ſuch Counties to procure voluntary Subſcriptions, by way of Loan, from the Inhabitants of ſuch Counties, of ſome certain Sum of Money from each, to be ſubſcribed to their Names, to be afterwards ſatisfied by them reſpectively, in Money, Wheat, Oats or Oatmeal, towards the Maintenance of the Army, to be paid in, or delivered to the reſpective Sheriffs, or their Order, and in ſuch Places as the ſaid Sheriffs ſhall reſpectively appoint, from whom we expect an Account of their Proceedings herein, and a Copy of ſuch Subſcriptions as ſhall be made. We do not doubt but every true and loyal Subject will, according to his Ability, and the Excellency of the ſubject Matter, generouſly and chearfully contribute towards the carrying on of ſo great, ſo neceſſary, and ſo glorious a Work. We expect your diligent Care herein, and ſo we bid you heartily Farewell.

From his Majeſty's Caſtle of Dublin, March 2, 1688. Your very loving Friend, TYRCONNEL.

An Anſwer to the foregoing Letter being drawn up by the Grand Jury, and entred into their Book, and preſented to Sir Henry Lynch, ſetting forth the extream Poverty of their Country, occaſioned by the daily Ruin of the Engliſh, &c. That they were not in a Capacity to ſubſiſt themſelves, and therefore not capable to raiſe any thing conſiderable for the Army (Chief Juſtice Keating returning to Dublin, and leaving Baron Lynch to go on to the other Counties, &c.) the ſaid Lynch told the Grand Jury, before he diſcharged them, that the Writing they had drawn up, was a Reflection and Scandal to their Country, would be taken very ill by the Government, and did not queſtion but it would be brought in hereafter as an Evidence againſt them, and therefore ordered it ſhould be torn out of the Book, which was done accordingly.

CXLVIII. The Trials of Sir RICHARD GRAHME, Baronet, Viſcount Preſton in the Kingdom of Scotland, and JOHN ASHTON, at the Old-Bailey, for High Treaſon, Jan. 17. 1690. 2 W. & M.

Die Veneris, 16. die Januarij, Anno Dom. 1690.

THE King and Queen's Writ of Habeas Corpora was ſent to the Governor of the Tower of London, to bring up the Bodies of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, Viſcount Preſton, in the Kingdom of Scotland, John Aſhton and Edmund Elliot, Gent. to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, London; where they were brought between the Hours of Ten and Eleven in the Forenoon; and being placed at the Bar, were arraigned upon an Indictment of High Treaſon, found the Day before by the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's-Hall, in Manner following:

Clerk of Arraignments. " SIR Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand, [which he did, and ſo the other two.] You ſtand indicted by the Names of Sir Richard Grahme, late " of the Pariſh of St. Anne within the Liberty of " Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, Baronet; " John Aſhton, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent Garden, in the County aforeſaid, Gentleman, and Edmund Elliot, late of the Pariſh of St. James within the Liberty aforeſaid, in the " County aforeſaid, Gent. for that you, as falſe " Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and moſt " Excellent Princes William and Mary, King and " Queen of England, Defenders of the Faith, &c. " your Sovereign Lord and Lady, not having the " Fear of God in your Hearts, nor weighing the " Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and " ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the " cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which every true and faithful Subject of " our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady the King " and Queen that now are, towards them our " ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and " Queen ſhould, and of Right ought to bear, " wholly withdrawing, and contriving, practiſing, and with all your Strength intending " the Peace and common Tranquillity of this " Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and " diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our " ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and " Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of " England to ſtir up, move, and procure; and the " Government of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King " and Queen of this Kingdom of England, to ſubvert, change and alter; and our ſaid Lord and " Lady, the King and Queen, from the Title, " Honour, and Royal Name of the Imperial " Crown of this their Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive; and our ſaid Lord and Lady, " the King and Queen, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put; you the ſaid Sir " Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliot, " the nine and twentieth Day of December, in " the ſecond Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord " and Lady, the King and Queen that now are; " and

L. Preſton. My Lord, I have ſomething humbly to offer to your Lordſhips.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it your Lordſhip would ſay?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I find I ſtand indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, but I do take myſelf to be entituled to another way of Trial, as being a Peer of England, by Virtue of a Patent before the Vote of Abdication was made; and it was in a Time when all your Proceſſes, and all your Writs went in the late King's Name, and all Officers acted by Virtue of his Commiſſions. My Lord, this is a Matter that concerns me in Point of Life, Eſtate, Poſterity, and all that's dear to me; and therefore I deſire to know whether your Lordſhips think fit to allow me my Peerage; I offer it, my Lord, with all the Reſpect and Modeſty imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I apprehend your Lordſhip to offer againſt your being tried here, that you are a Peer.

L. Preſton. I take myſelf to be ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you muſt make that out to the Court.

L. Preſton. I told your Lordſhips the Ground of my Claim and Apprehenſion: It is from a Patent I received before the Vote of Abdication, when all Commiſſions, and all Proceſs, and all the Courts of Judicature run in that Name.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that Patent, my Lord?

L. Preſton. It is in the Hands of the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, we cannot take Notice of that Patent; If your Lordſhip plead that you were made a Peer by a Patent under the Great Seal of England, you muſt produce it under the Great Seal, that the Court may ſee what it is, and whether it be ſufficient to juſtify your Plea.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip and this Court will enable me to do that, by ſending an Order to the Clerk of the Houſe of Lords, to bring the Patent hither; for it is in his Hands.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that is not in our Power: If your Lordſhip take yourſelf to be a Peer, and would thereby ſtop this Court from proceeding to try you, you muſt be ready to make it out.

L. Preſton. I am ready to make it out: If I had my Patent here, that would make it out. Certainly there is ſome Authority now in being (I humbly offer it with all Submiſſion and Reſpect) that may order the Clerk of the Houſe of Lords to attend this Court, and produce this Patent.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, we are not to enable you to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I offer it with all Reſpect to the Court: I am concerned in it for my Life, and my All, and if that be over-ruled, this I hope you will do before you go on, you will hear me by my Council.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is nothing that you have ſaid; for if your Lordſhip plead this Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, it ought not to be received without ſhewing your Patent.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire my Council to be heard to this Matter.

L. C. J. Holt. I know your Lordſhip has had the Benefit of Council, and I know your Council muſt tell you, that what you ſay goes for nothing, unleſs you put in your Plea, and produce your Patent, that the Court may judge upon it.

* Sir John Somers.

* Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I have obſerved what my Lord Preſton has mentioned———

L. Preſton. Pray, Mr. Sollicitor, will you ſpeak out, that I may hear what you ſay?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I ſay, I have taken Notice of what your Lordſhip has offered: It has been moſt truly obſerved by the Court, that it is your Lordſhip's Part to make good your Plea, and it ought not to be expected that any Court ſhould help a Perſon to plead to its Juriſdiction: But becauſe it ſhould not be pretended that an Advantage was taken againſt the Priſoner for a Defect in Point of Form, or that any thing was inſiſted on which ſhould have the leaſt Appearance of a Hardſhip, and that we may proceed in the moſt clear and unexceptionable Manner that can be, I muſt beg leave to obſerve to your Lordſhip and the Court, how far this Matter which my Lord Preſton has inſiſted on, has been debated and determined in another Place.

L. C. J. Holt. So; on Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord upon the eleventh of November 1689, my Lord Preſton did make ſome Claim in the Houſe of Lords that he was a Peer of the Realm; the Houſe of Lords demanding of him upon what he founded his Pretence: He ſaid he claimed by Letters Patents from the late King James, which paſſed the Great Seal before the Time of the Vote of Abdication. The Lords required that thoſe Letters ſhould be produced, which being done, and my Lord Preſton inſiſting upon his Claim to be a Peer of England, the Lords thought fit that Day to commit my Lord Preſton to the Cuſtody of the Black Rod. The next Day being the twelfth of November, upon ſolemn Debate of the Validity of theſe Letters Patents, and conſulting with the Judges then preſent, the Lords, nemine contradicente, did adjudge and declare thoſe Letters Patents to be void and null; And by another Order of the ſame Date, they did order Mr. Attorney General to proſecute my Lord Preſton in the King's-Bench for a High Miſdemeanor, in preſuming to claim Peerage by thoſe Letters Patents. And by a Third, it was ordered, that the Letters Patents ſhould remain in Cuſtody of the Clerk of the Parliament. Thus you ſee, my Lord, this Matter hath had already a ſolemn Determination in a Court which had the moſt proper Conuſance and Juriſdiction of Claims in this Nature. And they having pronounced their Judgment, I did not think it would have been urged again in this Place. I thought it proper to mention theſe Things, to ſhew how it comes to paſs that my Lord Preſton has not his Letters Patents to produce, and to ſatisfy every Man that there is no Hardſhip put upon my Lord Preſton, by trying him here, when he ought to be tried by another Judicature. The Lords have given Judgment againſt theſe Letters Patents, and have ordered that they ſhall remain in Cuſtody of the Clerk of the Parliament, and my Lord Preſton is not a Stranger to theſe Tranſactions; and therefore if my Lord's Council had been of Opinion he could have made any uſe of them, they would have inform'd him he muſt have taken another Courſe to have got them, and could not expect this Court ſhould make an Order for him, contrary to the Order of the Houſe of Lords, to take the Letters Patents out of the Hands of the Clerk of the Parliament, and this, to help him to a Plea againſt their own Juriſdiction. I omitted one thing, that upon the 27th of the ſame Month of November, upon my Lord Preſton's humble Submiſſion and Petition, his Lordſhip was diſcharged of his Impriſonment, and the Houſe of Lords were pleaſed to remit the Order given to Mr. Attorney, for proſecuting him in the King's-Bench for the Miſdemeanor: So that I cannot but wonder to hear of this Claim of Peerage after that Submiſſion. But there is nothing offered to the Court by my Lord that the Court can take any legal Notice of. If my Lord will plead any thing to the Juriſdiction of the Court, he ought to have his Plea in Form, and be ready with his Proofs to make it good.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord Preſton, upon this laſt Order of the Houſe of Lords, has diſclaimed any Right of Peerage when he made his Petition, otherwiſe he had not been diſcharged.———

L. Preſton. My Lord, I beg leave———

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Beſides, my Lord, what my Lord Preſton offers is a Matter of Record, as all Letters Patents are; and though out of his Hands he might have had Recourſe to the Record of the Enrollment.

L. Preſton. For that, my Lord, I muſt humbly beg of you Lordſhips a little Time to put my ſelf in a Capacity to plead it in Form. If you will over-rule it, I can ſay nothing to it; I offer it with all the Modeſty and Reſpect imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. It ſhall do your Lordſhip no Prejudice, my Lord; God forbid but that you ſhould make uſe of all Advantages that you can invent for your Defence. But, my Lord, we muſt tell you, what you have offered is nothing that we can take any Notice of, unleſs you had your Patent to produce, and we cannot give your Lordſhip Time to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

L. Preſton. Then if your Lordſhips are pleaſed to over-rule this Matter, I ſubmit, but I hope you will give me leave to make all the juſt Defence I can make for myſelf. Does your Lordſhip over-rule me in it?

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe we are all of the ſame Opinion; if not, I ſuppoſe they will declare their Minds.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That which has been ſaid by Mr. Sollicitor, was only that you and all the World may be ſatisfied that there is nothing of Hardſhip put upon you. But the Court, if this had not been ſaid, yet could take no Notice of what you ſay, unleſs it were pleaded, and pleaded in legal Form. But if the Matter be as the King's Council have repreſented it, that this Patent you now pretend to have, hath already had its Determination in a proper Place, this Court, which is an inferior Court to that of the Lords in Parliament, cannot intermeddle with it. We cannot help you, nor can we ſet up what was condemned there. So that you can entertain no Hope or Expectation of our doing any thing for you in this Matter, or any Relief or Help by ſuch a Plea.

* Sir Robert Atkins.

* L. C. Baron. My Lord Preſton, you may remember (I am ſure ſome of us that were there preſent do) that you did decline further inſiſting upon this Matter in the Houſe of Lords; and thereupon you had that great Favour from the Houſe ſhewn you, as the King's Council have opened.

L. Preſton. I did decline it, 'tis true, my Lord: When they had declared it a Miſdemeanor, I made my Application to the Court, and therein declared I was ſorry for having miſdemeaned myſelf.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, we will read the very Orders of the Houſe of Lords, to ſatisfy my Lord Preſton, that we put no hardſhip upon him.

L. Preſton. If there be any thing of Hardſhip upon me in this Caſe, it is becauſe I think I have a Right to inſiſt upon this Matter, and cannot have an Occaſion or Power to have that which I would make my Defence by.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip ſhall have a fair Trial, if you will pleaſe to put yourſelf in a Condition to be tried, by pleading to the Indictment.

Mr. Bar. Lechmere. The Lords in Parliament have diſclaimed you for being a Peer, and we cannot make you one.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhips will put no hard Thing upon me, but give me Leave and your Lordſhips Help to make my Defence.

L. C. J. Holt, You ſhall, by the Grace of God, have all the Liberty you can deſire to make your Defence; but you muſt firſt plead.

L. Preſton. Since your Lordſhips are pleaſed to over-rule me in this Caſe, I ſhall ſay no more of it. I did not intend to offer any thing that might be an Offence to the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. As I told your Lordſhip before, ſo I aſſure you now again, it ſhall do you no Prejudice.

L. Preſton. Then, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, ſince the Language is different in which the Indictment is written from that in which it was read, and ſome Things may be of different Signification in both Languages, I deſire the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it in Latin.

L. Preſton. I have one Thing to beg of your Lordſhip before it be read.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it you deſire, my Lord?

L. Preſton, My Lord, I humbly deſire, becauſe I cannot retain all the Contents in my Memory, that my Sollicitor may have Leave to ſtand by me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you all join in this Deſire? For if you ſhould each of you ſeverally, have it read a great many Times over, they that take Notes in Short-hand may take a Copy of it as it is read, and a Copy is not to be allowed.

L. C. J. Holt. If we find they deſire to be troubleſome, we can over-rule them.

L. Preſton. I would be guilty of nothing that may give the Court Offence, nor offer any thing that ſhould take up the Time of the Court unneceſſarily.

L. C. J. Holt. If they would have it read in Latin, let it be read.

L. Preſton. If it be troubleſome to the Court, I wave it my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. No, we do not think it troubleſome.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot, do you deſire to have it read again?

Aſhton, Elliot. We all join with my Lord, and deſire it may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it. [Which was done.]

Cl. of Arr. Juratores pro Domino Rege & Domina Regina, ſuper Sacramentum ſuum præſentant quod——& contra formam Statuti in eo caſu editi & proviſi.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am ſorry I have taken up ſo much of your Time, I thought the Difference of Language might have made ſome Miſtake, which I thought would be of Advantage to me in my Trial; And for the ſame Reaſon, I humbly requeſt you will pleaſe to order me a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that we cannot do; it hath been frequently demanded upon theſe Occaſions, but always denied. I have always known it denied.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip will give me leave to ſay what your Lordſhip muſt needs know much better than I. There is a Statute in the 46th of Ed. III. that doth order a Copy of any Record to any Priſoner, or other Perſon, if he demand it: And it has been granted, as I am informed in other Caſes, particularly in the Caſe of Colonel Sidney.

L. C J. Holt. No, my Lord, it was denied in Colonel Sidney's Caſe.

L. Preſton. If I miſtake, I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon. It is a Reaſon in a late Law made for the Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder. The Parliament do there ſay that it was not a legal Trial, becauſe he had not a Copy of the Indictment, and Time given him to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I do not know how that Matter ſtands: That Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder is but a private Act of Parliament. I never ſaw it, nor heard it read, nor can we take Notice of it. But your Lordſhip is to be tried by the ſame Methods of Law that all Perſons that have gone before you have always been. It has always been the Courſe, that the Priſoner ſhould not have a Copy of his Indictment; Colonel Sidney had it not; and I remember, in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane, in the Year 1662, he demanded a Copy of the Indictment, and it was denied him; and it has been conſtantly denied ever ſince in ſuch Caſes.

L. Preſton. I humbly deſire to know whether it was not granted in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel.

L. C. J. Holt. No indeed, my Lord, my Lord Ruſſel had it not; I can take it upon me to ſay that, for I know all the Proceedings in that Cauſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. No, my Lord, never any Man had it in all my Experience.

L. C. J. Holt. Some of us that are here were of Council for my Lord Ruſſel at that Time, and we did not adviſe him to demand a Copy of the Indictment, for we knew he could not have it by Law.

L. Preſton. I am very tender of taking up your Lordſhips Time unneceſſarily, but it ſtands me upon to do all I can to defend myſelf; may not I have my Council heard to that Point? Becauſe if it be a Point of Law, though your Lordſhips are of Council for the Priſoner, yet I beg that I may have my Council heard to argue it.

L. C. J. Holt. To what Point would you have your Council heard?

L. Preſton. To that Point, whether I may not have a Copy of my Indictment according to the 46th of Edward the Third. That is the Point I would have my Council heard to.

L. C. J. Holt. There is no ſuch Statute as your Lordſhip mentions, that gives the Priſoner a Copy of his Indictment.

Mr. Jones. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to hear me for my Lord Preſton ——

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, Mr. Jones, you are miſtaken in this Matter: If my Lord himſelf will ſhew that there is any ſuch Statute, we will conſider of it; and if it be a Matter that requires Debate, we may aſſign my Lord Council to argue it; but till then Council are not to be heard. My Lord Preſton, if your Lordſhip can ſhew us that Statute, pray do.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire none if it be not ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. I have heard a Diſcourſe concerning ſuch a Statute, but I could never find it.

L. Preſton. I ſuppoſe my Sollicitor is here with it; there is ſuch a Statute, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court over-ruled it in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane.

L. C. J. Holt. And ſo it was I remember in another Caſe, and in none of the Trials that have been ſince King Charles the Second came in, was ever a Copy given that I know or heard of.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, this Statute that my Lord Preſton mentions, 46 of Ed. III. is printed at large in the Preface to my Lord Coke's third Report; and has been inſiſted upon in ſeveral Caſes in the King's-Bench, where the Priſoner has deſired a Copy of his Indictment; but a Copy has been always denied, and this Statute has been taken to extend only to Records, which may be Evidence for the Subject.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. 'Twas always ruled that it did not extend to this Matter.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, 'tis a Miſconſtruction of that Statute that your Lordſhip thinks that it gives the Priſoner a Copy of his Indictment: For that Statute ſays, that all Perſons ſhall be free to make uſe of the publick Records, and take Copies of them, becauſe oftentimes the Records are Evidences of Mens Eſtates, and their Titles.

L. Preſton. My Lord, an Indictment I ſuppoſe is a Record.

L. C. J. Holt. But not ſuch a Record as is within the Intent of that Statute.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am tender of taking up your Lordſhips Time; but ſince all that is dear to me is at Stake, I deſire to this Point I may be heard by Council.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am ſatisfied you have had Council with you, I have heard a great many. Does any one of them tell you that this has been done? If ever any one of them will come and ſhew us when it has been done, you ſay ſomething, but I dare ſay none of them will, or can. Mr. Jones there, is as like as any body, but I believe he will not ſay it ever was done.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I cannot ſay my Council has told me ſo, but I have read ſuch a Statute myſelf; for it ſtands me upon it, and I believe there is ſuch a Statute, and it will be produced before your Lordſhips. If your Lordſhips will inſiſt upon not allowing me a Copy, I deſire I may be heard to it by my Council; for I take it to be a Point of Law, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we muſt not hear Council to debate plain Points that have no manner of Queſtion in them: It has been always diſallowed, and 'tis a ſettled Point at Law, and as plain as any whatſoever, that no Copy of an Indictment ought to be allowed to a Priſoner in Felony or Treaſon.

L. Preſton. My Lord, there is a Statute that ſays it ſhall be allowed to all Perſons to have Copies of Records, as well for, as againſt the King, and certainly the Indictment is a Record, and a Record of great Conſequence to me at this Time; and though my Council has not told me when it was done, yet thoſe that I have adviſed with, do ſay that the Statute is expreſs.

L. C. Baron. If any doubtful Words be in ſuch a Statute, yet the conſtant Practice muſt expound it; and ſince it has been ſo often denied, nay always, the Law is now ſettled, that it is not within the Meaning of that Statute.

L. C. J. Holt. We muſt go in the Way of our Predeceſſors, we received the Law from them, and muſt not contradict the received Practice of the Judges in all Ages, nor alter the Determinations tions that have been made in all Caſes of the like Nature.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhips intend, and I don't queſtion it, that my Trial ſhould be a legal Trial. If there be ſuch a Statute that gives me a Copy of the Indictment, and the Court deny it me, I am not legally tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you pleaſe to name the Statute, my Lord, it ſhall be read to you; but you are miſtaken if you think there is any thing in that Statute that will do your Lordſhip Service in this Point.

L. C. J. Holt. See the 46th of Ed. III. Read it.

L. Preſton. Here is a Copy of the Record in Court.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not printed, but it is mentioned in the Preface to my Lord Coke's third Report, and 'tis mentioned no where but there that I know of; but whether there were any ſuch Statute or no, Non conſtat; for it is not printed. But if it be a Statute, it does not meddle with Things of this Nature, ſuch as Indictments; for you muſt conſider, my Lord, yours is not a Caſe different from all other Caſes of like Nature as to this; but it is the Caſe of all Men that are tried as you are to be. And if all People were to have Copies of their Indictments to make Exceptions out of them before they plead, inſtead of Days of Goal Delivery, the whole Year would not be ſufficient, but would be ſpent before they could be brought to their Trial.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am to defend my ſelf as I can by Law, and not to conſider what other People's Caſes are. It is my particular Caſe now; what the Caſe may be as to any other hereafter, or what the general Conſequence may be, it not to be conſidered; but if there be any thing that is legal, that can give me an Advantage in making my Defence, I know your Lordſhips are too juſt to hinder me from taking Advantage of it.

L. C. Baron. My Lord, it is no new Thing to demand it; it has been frequently demanded, but it has been always over-ruled.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is now deſired, and a Reaſon is given you that perhaps was not given before: There is ſuch a Law. My Lord Chief Juſtice ſays well it is not printed, but it is a Record, and there is a Copy of that Record in Court. I deſired there ſhould be, I am ſure.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Copy of any Record of an Act of Parliament, it ſhall be read, if it be proved.

L. Preſton. Nay, we offer nothing if we don't prove it; but there is ſuch a Record, and the Sollicitor is ready to atteſt it. Pray ſwear Mr. Whitaker.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Swear him.

Clerk of Arr. You ſhall true Anſwer make to all ſuch Queſtions as ſhall be demanded of you by the Court. So help you God. Is this a true Copy?

Mr. Whitaker. It is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did you examine it?

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord, it is a true Copy of the Record, I examined it at Mr. Pettyt's Office in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Upon what Number Roll is it?

Mr. Whitaker. There is the Number Roll and all upon the Book.

Clerk reads. Item pria les Commons que come recorde & queconque choſe en la Court le Roy de reaſon devoient demurrer illeoques pur perpetual evidence & eide de touts parties a ycelly & de touts ceux a queux en nul manner ills atteignent quant, meſtier lour fuit. Et ja de nouvel refuſent en la Court noſtre dit Seignior de ſerche ou evidence encounter le Roy ou diſadvantage de luy. Que pleaſe os deiner per Eſtatute que Serche & Exemplification ſoit faitz as toutz Gentz de queconque Recorde que les touche en aſcun manner auxy bien de ce que chiet encountre le Rey come autres Gentz. Le Roy le voet.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is only Copies of Records that they ſhall have for Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, your Lordſhip hears by this Record, you may as well pray that an Exemplification be made of this Indictment as a Copy; for ſo the Words of this Act run; it is only meant of thoſe Records that were to be given in Evidence. But this Indictment that you would have a Copy of, is not now to be given in Evidence, nor to be exemplified, and ſo it does not reach your Caſe.

L. Preſton. My Lord, this Indictment is a Record, and a Record againſt me, and I think it is given in Evidence againſt me.

Mr. J. Eyres. No, my Lord, it is no Evidence, but an Accuſation; it is no Proof at all.

L. Preſton. It is always ſworn unto.

Mr. J. Eyres. The Witneſſes are ſworn that teſtify the Matter of it to the Grand Jury, but the Indictment itſelf is no Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. Suppoſe a Statute be doubtful, as truly I do not take this to be, we are to expound the Statute as it has been expounded in all Ages. It was never thought by any Judges in any Reign, that this Statute did entitle a Priſoner to have a Copy of his Indictment, but always held the contrary.

L. Preſton. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed then to allow me Council to be heard to it?

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not Council in a plain Caſe: If the Court apprehend there is any Matter that may be debateable, or whereupon a Doubt may be made, we may aſſign Council, and ſhall; but never in a plain Caſe, where there is no Manner of Queſtion.

L. Preſton. My Lord, here is a Doubt in this Caſe.

L. C. Baron. But, my Lord, it's not the Doubt of the Priſoner, but the Doubt of the Court, that will occaſion the aſſigning Council.

L. Preſton. But the Priſoner may offer his Doubt to the Court, and your Lordſhips are ſo juſt, that you will take Care that the Doubt may be legally reſolved.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is our Duty to ſee Juſtice and Right done, and God willing, it ſhall be.

L. Preſton. And I am bound in Duty to my-ſelf, in ſuch a Caſe, to inſiſt upon all Advantages I can have by Law.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, no body blames you, though your Lordſhip do urge Things that are unneceſſary, or improper; and we ſhall take Care that it ſhall not tend to your Lordſhip's Prejudice. We conſider the Condition you are in; you ſtand at the Bar for your Life; you ſhall have all the fair and juſt Dealings that can be; and the Court, as in Duty bound, will ſee that you have no Wrong done you.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preſton, for this Thing that you now mention, in all Ages, in all our Books, it is the ſame Thing, and has been in all Mens Caſes that have been for their Lives, denied; and this Statute that you bring is quite of another Intent: For it is ſaid, the Records ſhall remain in Court for perpetual Evidence, and the aiding of all Perſons to whom they ſhall belong. My Lord, this is none of your Caſe; for God knows, you expect no Aid from this Indictment: But this is meant of all Copies that concern the Eſtates of Men, that they may have Recourſe to their Records to make out their Evidences to their Eſtates, or to have them exemplified under the Seal of the Court for Evidence: But to have a Copy of an Indictment, thereby to be enabled to conſult with Council how to make Exceptions to that Indictment, is a Thing that has been denied in all Ages, by all the Judges that ever were. If any one can ſay to the contrary, it were ſomething; but ſhall we now admit Council to debate a Thing that has been in all Ages denied, and never admitted ſo much as once? That cannot be expected from us.

L. Preſton. The Act ſays, That it ſhall be all Records that ſhall be in Aid to any Perſon that ſhall deſire it. Here is no Diſtinction made of what Kind the Records are to be. If it be for the Aid of any Perſon, it ought to be granted, and I may be aided by this Record, if I have a Copy of it; and I think it is hard, when I am ſo much concerned in this Record, that I cannot be help'd to it by this Law.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Conſtant Experience has gone according to what we ſay.

L. Preſton. If that be Law, and it has not been demanded, then they are not entituled to have the Benefit of it: But now I demand it, ſure it is good Law.

L. C. J. Holt. It is no Queſtion a good Law, but not applicable to your Lordſhip's Caſe: I ſuppoſe we are all of the ſame Opinion; if any think otherwiſe, I deſire they would ſpeak.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I ſubmit to the Court, but then I deſire one Thing. You know my Life, my Fortune, my Reputation, my Poſterity, and all are at Stake, and all that is dear to me muſt fall with me if I miſcarry: Therefore I take Leave to repreſent, that I have had very ſhort Notice of my Trial. I do aſſure you, I have not had above ſix or ſeven Days Notice: I hope you will not refuſe me a little longer Time before I come to my Trial; and I have had no Copy of the Jury yet.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If my Lord pleaſe to plead to the Indictment, that will be Time enough to move afterwards, and till Iſſue is joined, it cannot properly be moved for.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not proper to deſire Time yet, till you have put your ſelf upon your Trial, by pleading to the Indictment.

L. Preſton. It was granted in Colonel Sidney's Caſe: He had eight or ten Days granted him after he had pleaded; and in the Act for the Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder, it is given as one Cauſe for the Reverſal, that he had not Time to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, ſeven Days is very fair Notice. Your Lordſhip knew when the Seſſions would be, and your Lordſhip might reaſonably expect, that you ſhould be tried here: I think truly you have had very fair Notice.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, we have had ſeven Days Notice of our Trial, 'tis true. This Day Sevennight at Night we had Notice we were to be tried as this Day; but three of the ſeven, we had not the Liberty of ſeeing any Friend, or Council, or any body, not till Tueſday Night, and that we got with great Application, and great Charge, to get an Order for Council to come to us: So that though we had ſeven Days Notice, yet we have had but three Days in all to conſult with any body; and we never have had a Copy of our Jury till this Minute.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We ſee the Nature of the Thing, and I am ſorry that I muſt ſay, it is fit that we ſhould take Notice of it. Perhaps the Thing that you are accuſed of is not true; but if it be true, you ſee what it is, that there are Letters and Papers preparing for a Deſign to ſet all the Kingdom in Confuſion. Men that will venture upon ſuch ſort of Things, are not to condemn the Law, if it be a little hard upon them; for 'tis the common Preſervation that is principally aimed at in Proſecutions of this Nature; and if this Accuſation be true, 'tis but juſt and reaſonable, that all Speed ſhould be uſed to enquire into, and prevent it; and as it falls out in this Caſe, it is not in our Power to do it. This Seſſions is ſet before this Buſineſs is known, and this is an Act done in this County, and therefore the Seſſions is the proper Place for the Trial; and ſo you have the ſame ſort of Proceedings that all other Criminals have, which are very many, though I hope not many of ſo high a Nature. Seven Days Notice you have had, you acknowledge; if my Lords pleaſe we will indulge you as far as we can, and give you Time for your Trial till to Morrow, but you muſt plead preſently.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we debate the Time of your Trial too early; for you muſt put your ſelf upon your Trial firſt, by pleading.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope I ſhall always carry my ſelf as becomes me towards the Court; but I do not really think that you have any Trials that are of ſo great Concernment, and this ſure is a fit Time for me to offer it; for it may be I have a great many Witneſſes in the Country, and at a Diſtance from this Place, and one another.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we cannot diſpute with you concerning your Trial, till you have pleaded. I know not what you will ſay to it, for ought I know there may be no Occaſion for a Trial. I cannot tell what you will plead; your Lordſhip muſt anſwer to the Indictment before we can enter into the Debate of this Matter.

L. Preſton. Will your Lordſhip give me Leave to move it afterwards?

L. C. J. Holt. You may offer any thing then concerning your Trial: If you can ſhew any Reaſon to defer it, it will be proper to do it then.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, I think one Reaſon why my Trial ought to be put off is, becauſe I have Privilege of excepting againſt ſo many of my Jury; but if I have not Time to look into the Pannel, I ſhall loſe that Privilege.

L. C. J. Holt. We are not to come to that yet, you are to plead now.

L. Preſton. Then your Lordſhips are pleaſed to over-rule my Claim of Peerage.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we are of Opinion you ought to plead to this Indictment.

Clerk of Arr. What ſays your Lordſhip, are you guilty of this High Treaſon, or not guily?

L. Preſton.

L. Preſton. Not guilty.

Clerk of Arr. Culprit. How wilt thou be tried?

L. Preſton. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

John Aſhton, What ſayeſt thou? Art thou guilty of the ſame High Treaſon, or not guilty?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I have only this to obſerve, beſides what my Lord Preſton has offered: As to the Buſineſs of the Act of Parliament, your Lordſhips have been pleaſed to over-rule that Plea; but, my Lord, I am told, that if an Indictment be faulty, but even in a Letter, we cannot be found guilty upon that Indictment. Now, if we never have a Copy of that Indictment, how ſhall we know whether there be any ſuch Fault in it? Your Lordſhips, who are our Council, I ſuppoſe have never ſeen the Indictment, and ſuppoſe there be twenty Faults, we have not the Advantage of them, by not having a Copy; and how ſhall we come to have any Advantage, if neither your Lordſhips, who are our Council, nor we our ſelves can ſee them. It may turn upon that.

L. C. J. Holt. But we will ſee it when you come upon your Trial.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is a Mis-information, for it may be ſuch a Letter as is not material, and it may be ſuch as is material; as I ſuppoſe your Name being Aſhton, the A ſhould be left out, it would then be a Queſtion, what there would be to charge you.

Mr. Aſhton. We know that it has been ſo in ſeveral Inſtances.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be ſuch an Omiſſion that may make it no Crime, but we muſt not preſently conclude that it is ſo; but you have heard it read, and ſo have we; if there had been any ſuch Letter miſtaken, it would have been taken Notice of.

Mr. Aſhton. As to the reading, there may in the reading of the Indictment be many Words not nicely obſerved. I ſuppoſe the Indictment be right; I ſay it is poſſible it may, or it may not; but if your Lordſhips never ſee it, who are our Council by Law, nor you will allow us Council to look into it, if there be forty Faults in it, we have no Advantage of it.

L. C. J. Holt. We muſt not allow you Council to pick Holes in the Indictment, that never was done. If you aſſign any Reaſon, we may aſſign you Council to debate any Matter of Law that may ariſe, but never was Council allowed to find out Faults in an Indictment. When you come to your Trial we ſhall try you upon your Indictment, and if there be any thing conſiderable, you are to ſuppoſe we ſhall obſerve it for your Advantage.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, we never had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury; I pray we may have it.

L. C. J. Holt. That you cannot have till you have pleaded.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Aſhton, we have over-ruled my Lord Preſton about a Copy of the Indictment: Do you think we ſhall grant it you, when we have denied it him?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire we may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt plead firſt.

Clerk of Arr. Are you guilty of the High Treaſon, or not guilty?

Mr. Aſhton. Not guilty.

Clerk of Arr. How will you be tried?

Mr. Aſhton. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Edmund Elliot, How ſay you, Are you guilty of the ſame High Treaſon, or not guilty?

Mr. Elliot. Not guilty.

Clerk of Arr. How will you be tried?

Mr. Elliot. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope now it may be Time to pray that my Trial may be deferred.

L. C. J. Holt. Why would you have it deferred?

L. Preſton. Becauſe of the Diſtance of my Witneſſes, and other Things that would be neceſſary for me to have to prepare me for my Defence; and beſides, we have not had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury, and the Reaſon of the Law does order, that becauſe it gives us Liberty to except againſt them, and that we cannot know how to do, unleſs we inform our ſelves of the Men; and therefore I beg that I may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. As for having a Copy of the Pannel, the Court grants it. Let them have a Copy of the Pannel.

Clerk of Arr. Here is one ready for you.

Mr. Soll. Gen. There was Direction given that there ſhould be one ready.

Mr. Aſhton. We have demanded it every Day ſince we had Notice of our Trial.

L. C. Baron. You could not have it till there was an Iſſue joined, and that could not be till you had pleaded.

L. C. J. Holt. And as to the putting off your Trial, I know not to what Time to put it off.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am willing to have this Matter tried as ſoon as poſſible; for it cannot but be uneaſy to me to lie under theſe Accuſations; but ſome of my Witneſſes live in the Country, at a remote Diſtance. If it may be, next Term, my Lord, or the next Seſſions; for, if I have a Copy of the Pannel to Night, and am to be tried to Morrow Morning, how can I provide for my Defence? I cannot be prepared to except againſt the Jury, and I am ſure you will be tender, and conſider the Caſe of a Man, whoſe Life and Fortune are concerned in this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Holt. To put it off till the next Term, is to remove it out of this Court; that we cannot do, and to put it off till after the Term will be too long a Time.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We cannot ſit here after Monday, becauſe the Term begins on Tueſday.

L. Preſton. My Lord, this Term is always a ſhort Term, and if I be tried to Morrow, it is trying me without giving me Time for my Defence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, there has been all the Care taken that the Nature of the Thing was capable of, to prevent any Complaint of this kind. Order was given, that my Lord and theſe Gentlemen ſhould have Notice as early as was poſſible. As ſoon as ever Mr. Attorney-General had had an Opportunity of looking into the Evidence, Notice was given them, that they ſhould be tried, and that this was the Day appointed for their Trial. But there ſhall be no contending in a Matter of this Nature for a Day. If it be deſired, and the Court pleaſe to put it off till to Morrow, we are contented; but there can be no Reaſon to put it off for a longer Time. As there is always a Tenderneſs to be uſed, and I know will be, and and, as far as I am concerned, always ſhall be towards Perſons in theſe Circumſtances; ſo there is a Regard to be had towards the Government and the Publick. I am ſure if the Accuſation that is againſt theſe Gentlemen is true, the Government is highly concerned that this Matter ſhould come to a ſpeedy Examination, and that Perſons that enter into ſuch Deſigns be brought to Judgment. The Charge in the Indictment is of ſuch a Nature as draws very great Conſequences along with it; it concerns no leſs than the Life of the King and Queen, the Deſtruction of the Fleet of the Kingdom, and the Invaſion of the Realm by the Forces of a Declared Enemy. Theſe are the Things that the Priſoners are charged with, and certainly there ought to be no Delay in the ſearching into ſuch Matters as theſe. They have had a Week's Notice of Trial already, and for many Days of that Week, at leaſt they have had as many Council to aſſiſt them as they deſired, and all the Sollicitors that they had a Mind to, have had free Acceſs to them; ſo that they have wanted no Opportunity to prepare for their Trial that Men in their Circumſtances could have. As to what has been ſaid with relation to the Jury, the Law indulges them in the Number of their peremptory Challenges, without being put to ſhew Cauſe, and the Court hath granted them at the very Inſtant of their Pleading, a Copy of the Pannel; and there is a reaſonable Time between this and to Morrow for their making ſuch Enquiry into the Jury as is juſtifiable, and fit to be made: But if by Time to look into the Jury, it be meant, that there may be a Time for tampering, that I am ſure your Tenderneſs of the Government will not permit; you will take Care as much that no ſuch thing be done, as you will that they ſhould not be ſurprized. If your Lordſhips are pleaſed, that the Trial be put off till to Morrow, we will be ready to Morrow to attend it.

L. Preſton. My Lord, 'tis a very hard Preſumption that Mr. Sollicitor makes of our asking a Copy of the Pannel, that it is with a Deſign to tamper with the Jury.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I did not ſay ſo, but I ſaid till to Morrow was Time enough to make a juſtifiable Enquiry.

L. Preſton. But if I be to be tried to Morrow, I am willing to be tried to Day, for I am as ready now as I ſhall be then.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be ſo, and as ready as you will be after the Term; but I know not what your Lordſhip means by expreſſing ſuch Reſentment, that becauſe you can't have what Time allowed you would, therefore you will have none, but be tried now.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You may have Time enough to prepare yourſelf as to the Jury, certainly, between this and to Morrow.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, we that are for the King, have given theſe Gentlemen Notice long enough to be prepared, if we ſhould try them now; for that's the Time we gave Notice for: But becauſe we would indulge them as far as we could, we are willing that they ſhould have till to Morrow, and intending them that Kindneſs, are not ready to try them to Day, and there can be no Pretence for them to put off their Trial any longer; for there can be no want of Evidence as to the Fact we can charge them with; for all the Evidence that we ſhall bring againſt them was taken from themſelves, or the greateſt Part of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what Time will you be ready then?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. To Morrow Morning.

L. C. J. Holt. Then to Morrow at Eight o'Clock you are to be tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preſton, do but conſider you have had ſeven Days Notice, and to Morrow makes eight.

L. C. J. Holt. You had Notice for this Day, this Day ſeven-night.

Mr. Aſhton. But we have had only three Days Time to conſult with our Council, though we deſired we might have our Council come to us that Day.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They were told, they muſt apply themſelves to the King for that at the ſame Time.

Mr. Aſhton. We did ſo that Night to my Lord Sidney; then Sunday interven'd, which was no Day for Buſineſs, and we could not have our Order. On Monday we could not have it till Night; ſo that it was Tueſday before we could get any body to us. My Lord, it is a weighty Concern, and all ſuch haſty Proceedings were thought very hard in the late Times, and particularly the denying Mr. Corniſh Time; and 'tis one of the Reaſons given in this King's Declaration for his coming here into England, the Hardſhips that the Law laid upon Men in their Trials, which he came to prevent.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Hardſhip that was upon Mr. Corniſh was, that he was taken upon the Tueſday off from the Exchange, and tried before that Day ſeven-night, and that was hard indeed: But beſides, he was taken about his Buſineſs off from the Exchange. I know not whether you were about your Buſineſs, your lawful Buſineſs, when you were taken, God of Heaven knows that. And pray conſider, here is a Matter of very great Conſequence on the one Side, and on the other: For if Men be plotting againſt the Government, to give them Time to carry on their Plots will be miſchievous on that Side.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, till that be legally proved before your Lordſhips, that is but a Suppoſition.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That will lie upon them to prove.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, we are to ſuppoſe you not guilty, 'till you are proved guilty.

Mr. Aſhton. Then, my Lord, the Law ſays we may except againſt ſo many Perſons; what is the End of the giving us a Copy of the Pannel? 'Tis not to be preſumed we can do it by their Faces; for what can I ſay to the Face of one I never ſaw? We muſt enquire concerning the Men, and that is a Work of Time; for ſome of theſe Gentlemen, I preſume, live eight or ten Miles out of Town. Is it poſſible for me before to Morrow Morning eight o'Clock to ſend to thirty-five Men to enquire after them?

L. C. J. Holt. No, nor is it intended you ſhould.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Nay, if you intend to ſend to the Jury-men, we have no Reaſon to give you Time.

Mr. Aſhton. I mean to enquire after the Men, their Lives, what Religion they are of, what ſort of Men they are.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe they are all Proteſtants of the Church of England; but ſuppoſe they are all Strangers to you, and yet good and lawful lawful Men of the County, and there be no Difference between you and them, then they are fit to try you.

Mr. Aſhton. 'Tis true, my Lord, but if I have Liberty to except againſt thirty-five, I ought to know ſomething of them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Yes, and inform yourſelf as well as you can of them, but not to ſend to them, that is not to be permitted.

L. Preſton. There is another Point to enquire of them, and that is, whether they be Freeholders or not?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We have neither your Lordſhip's Affidavit, nor the Oath of any other Perſon, only an Allegation.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you muſt expect your Trial to Morrow Morning; we cannot put it off, we are limited in Time, the Seſſions can hold no longer than Monday, becauſe of the Term.

Mr. Aſhton. Then will your Lordſhip pleaſe to put it off till Monday?

L. C. J. Holt. No, we ſhall not have Time to do it, it may be a long Trial.

L. Preſton. I proteſt to your Lordſhips, I cannot be ready to Morrow to make that Defence I deſire, and deſign to make, and which I may make if your Lordſhips give me a longer Day.

Clerk of Arr. Here is a Copy of the Pannel for your Lordſhip.

[It was delivered to the Lord Preſton, who gave it to his Sollicitor.]

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, we ſhall not have Time to enquire into the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, we are not bound to do this, but you have it as ſoon as you have pleaded.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, it will take up five or ſix Hours in Writing of it out, and we muſt each have a Copy.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They are all joined in one Indictment, and have joint Council, and joint Sollicitors, as we are informed.

Mr. Aſhton. Then I hope you will allow us Liberty till Monday for our Trial.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court cannot allow longer Time; the Court here can ſit no longer than Monday, and here muſt needs be a great deal of Buſineſs to do of the ordinary Buſineſs of the Seſſions, and when that Day comes, perhaps it will not ſerve to go through with the Trial, and then it muſt be adjourned till after the Term, and in the mean while, ſome are in hopes the King of France may come and determine the Matter.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, Let no Suggeſtion againſt us prepoſſeſs the Opinion of the Court before we be tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I don't ſuggeſt any thing, but 'tis in the Indictment alledged againſt you, and that you are to be tried upon, and if ſuch Things be there ſuggeſted, as we would give you all reaſonable Time for your Defence, ſo we muſt take Care that the Government ſuſtain no Hurt by Delays.

L. C. J. Holt. It is obſerved by the King's Council, that they are Things of very great Conſequence, and therefore they preſs for the Trial.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I cannot believe but that you will be as ready to Morrow, as you can be on Monday.

Mr. Aſhton. The Government cannot be prejudiced by putting it off till Monday, ſure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Evidence that is to convict you, lies all on their Side that are for the King, and I cannot imagine where your Witneſſes ſhould be, unleſs they are in France; but you had Reaſon to expect your Trial, being apprehended in the Manner as you were, and to provide for it.

L. C. J. Holt. The want of Witneſſes is only a Surmiſe, and a Pretence, for there is no Oath of any Witneſſes that they want, or who they are: Indeed, if we had Oath made that they wanted material Witneſſes, and to material Points for their Defence, that might be Occaſion for our further Conſideration; but ſhall we put off a Trial upon a bare Suggeſtion of the Want of Witneſſes? Sure that was never done.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Name any one particular Man that is your Witneſs, and the particular Thing that he can prove; for if any of your Witneſſes do know any thing of this Kind, it muſt be Particulars, and not Generals: If you will not name them, it is plain, it is only a Pretence you inſiſt upon for Delay.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I inſiſt upon the Point of the Jury, that we have not Time to look after them.

L. C. J. Holt. Then that of the Witneſſes is waved.

L. Preſton. 'Twas I that deſired Time for my Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you neither name them, nor bring us any Oath about them, or of any thing they can prove for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray don't ſpend the Time of the Court, nor your own Time unneceſſarily, you muſt prepare for your Trial to Morrow.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, there is not a Perſon in Court, I believe, but will think it hard that we are ſo ſtreightned in Time.

L. C. J. Holt. The Time you have had Notice to prepare for your Trial, is ſufficient.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Corniſh's Caſe has been complained of as a very hard Caſe in this very Reſpect, and we would hope, the King that now is, came to reform ſuch Abuſes.

L. C. J. Holt. You have been already told, wherein the Hardſhip of that Caſe lay, I am ſure yours is not like it; but take Notice, we will be ſitting here punctually at Eight.

L. Preſton. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to let us have our Council come to us, and our Friends?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes ſure, you ſhall have all that is neceſſary for your Defence that we can allow you, but unneceſſary Delays muſt be avoided.

[Then the Priſoners were taken away by the Keeper of Newgate to the Goal.]

Sabbati, 17 January, 1690.

THIS Day, between the Hours of Eight and Nine in the Morning, the Court being ſat, and thoſe Perſons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded; then the Priſoners were brought to the Bar.

Clerk of Arr. You the Priſoners at the Bar, theſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady, our King and Queen, and you, upon Trial of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths; if therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip will inform me, whether if I have any thing to offer to the Court, it is proper before the Jury be impannelled, or after.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I don't know what your Lordſhip has to offer; I think you have nothing to offer why the Jury ſhould not be ſworn, for now your Lordſhip has put yourſelf upon your Trial, and are going to proceed in that Trial, and the Jury are going to be ſworn: If you have any thing to offer, as to them, you may challenge them.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, I have ſomething to offer, but it is only what I did humbly offer Yeſterday, and that is, That my Warning was ſo ſhort, that I am not prepared for my Trial. We had not above three or four Days wherein we might conſult about it, all the former Time we have been kept cloſe Priſoners; we are now brought here to be tried, without having Time to look into the Pannel of our Jury. The Pannel we had not till Yeſterday, and I humbly beg, that I may have ſome Time to prepare for my Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, this is that which you inſiſted upon Yeſterday. Your Lordſhip ſaid you wanted Witneſſes, and your Lordſhip did not then mention what Witneſſes you wanted, nor was any Oath made of any one that you wanted; and therefore the Court over-ruled you, and wiſhed you to prepare for your Trial, and would not put it off: For if it ſhould not be to Day, but ſhould be put off till another Time, it muſt be the putting of it off till another Seſſions; for we are ſtreightned with it in Point of Time, for the Seſſion can laſt no longer than Monday, and you have had convenient Notice.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, I think it is hard when my Life and Fortune, and all are concerned, that I ſhould be hurried on to a Trial, only becauſe the Court is ſtreightned in Point of Time; and yet that is the only Reaſon that I can perceive why ſuch Haſte is made. I deſire a little more Time to prepare myſelf, and I think it very hard I ſhould be denied; I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips: If you will not allow me Time, I cannot make my Defence as I would.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the Shortneſs of the Time, that is no Objection; you have had convenient Notice; as much Notice as the Law requires, and as much Time as without particular Cauſe ſhewn, hath here at any Time been given in ſuch a Caſe. If indeed there had been any particular Reaſon offered for putting off the Trial, and you had made it appear by Oath, the Court poſſibly might have put off the Trial; but becauſe your Lordſhip only ſuggeſted you wanted a Witneſs, naming neither Perſon, nor Place, or Matter ſuch Witneſs ſhould prove, they are of Opinion no Cauſe appears for ſuch Delay of your Trial.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I aſſure you I am not prepared for my Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Court over-ruled this Matter Yeſterday, it cannot be put off.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I would humbly offer your Lordſhip one Thing before the Jury be called and ſworn. By the Law, theſe Gentlemen at the Bar have the Privilege to challenge peremptorily to the Number of Thirty-five; which is ſo great a Number, that if each of them ſeverally take Advantage of it (as they may do by Law, and God forbid they ſhould be denied any Advantage the Law gives them) it will be next to impoſſible to have a ſufficient Number of Jurors appear ſo as that we may proceed in the Trial.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, we don't hear what Mr. Sollicitor ſays.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you not? Then I'll tell you what he ſays when he has done: Go on, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, all that I would know of them is, whether they intend to take the Advantage that the Law gives them, of ſingle and particular Challenges; for then they muſt be tried ſeverally; or whether they will be content that the ſame Perſons that are challenged by any one, ſhall ſtand challenged for all three. I leave it to them to take their own Choice; let them do what they pleaſe in it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, Mr. Sollicitor tells you what the Law is, that every one of you may challenge five and thirty without Cauſe; and if the Court ſhould proceed to try you all together, and every one of you ſhould challenge five and thirty, perhaps a ſufficient Number will be wanting to try you: The Number challenged will then amount to 105 in all. If ſo be you agree in your Challenges, that what one challenges ſhall be challenged by the other two, then the Court will go on, and try you all together, otherwiſe they will be forced to ſever you; therefore he deſires to know, whether you will join, or ſever in your Challenges.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Take your own Choice Gentlemen, and do what you think beſt.

L. Preſton. My Lord, the Matter of Challenging is ſo great an Advantage to a Man upon his Life, that for my Part I muſt inſiſt upon that which the Law gives me, to challenge as many for myſelf as I think fit, to the Number that the Law allows me.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton ſays he will, as 'tis fit he ſhould, take all Advantages he can: What ſays Mr. Aſhton to it?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I expect the ſame Advantage.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt have it; it is not propoſed to preclude you from any Advantage that the Law allows you: If you inſiſt upon that Advantage, you muſt have it, and then you muſt be tried ſeverally.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then, my Lord, ſince they are pleaſed to declare they will ſever in their Challenges, we muſt deſire to ſever them in their Trial, and to begin with the Trial of my Lord Preſton.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire the Liberty to be by when my Lord is tried.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, that is not to be permitted.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. If you had joined in your Challenges, then you had been tried all together.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That Advantage you loſe by ſevering in your Challenges; you loſe the Aſſiſtance of each other at your Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Conſequence; but do as you pleaſe; ſet them by.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be they do not ſo well weigh the Conſequence, therefore call them them again. Gentlemen, do you conſider the Conſequence of your not joining in your Challenges? You muſt not be by, if my Lord Preſton be tried by himſelf, but muſt withdraw, and thereby you will loſe the Advantage of helping one another.

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, I deſire to be tried alone.

Mr. Aſhton. And ſo do I, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Captain Richardſon, take them away.

[Afterwards the Court was informed that Mr. Elliot deſired to be tried with my Lord Preſton, and thereupon they were called again.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, do you deſire to be tried alone, or with my Lord Preſton?

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I deſire to be tried with my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then we will try my Lord Preſton by himſelf.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Does Mr. Aſhton deſire it too?

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lord, I deſire to be tried by myſelf.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then we will try my Lord Preſton by himſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Elliot, the King's Council do not think fit to try you with my Lord Preſton, without Mr. Aſhton; and unleſs you will all join, you muſt all be tried ſeverally.

Mr. Elliot. I can only anſwer for myſelf.

Mr. Aſhton. I am for being tried alone.

L. C. J. Holt. Then my Lord Preſton muſt be tried alone.

[The other two were carried back to Newgate, and the Lord Preſton was bid by the Clerk to look to his Challenges]

Clerk of Arr. Sir Goddard Nelthrop, Baronet, Challenged.

William Withers, Eſq; Challenged.

Richard Cradock, Eſq;

Mr. Cradock. My Lord, I know not how I came to be ſummoned upon this Jury; for I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. Then ſet him aſide.

Clerk of Arr. John Cane, Eſq; Challenged.

William Jacomb, Eſq;

Mr. Jacomb. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you not been a Freeholder?

Mr. Jacomb. Nearte our Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Give him his Oath. [Which was done.]

Have you no Freehold in the County of Middleſex in your own Right, nor in the Right of your Wife?

Mr. Jacomb. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you muſt go on to the next.

Clerk of Arr. Joſeph Dawſon, Eſq;

Mr. Dawſon. My Lord, I am an antient Man; and not fit to ſerve upon the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now you are here, for this Time ſerve; we will excuſe you hereafter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire to know when any one is challenged for the King, whether they muſt not ſhew Cauſe.

L. C. J. Holt. By and by, if there be not enough they ſhall ſhew Cauſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You ſhall have all that the Law allows you certainly, my Lord.

Clerk of Arr. Thomas Auſtin, Eſq; Not appeared.

Richard Paget, Eſq;

L. Preſton. Has this Gentleman any Freehold?

Mr. Paget. Yes, my Lord, I have in the County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. I do not except againſt him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly deſire they may ſhew their Cauſe.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, Cauſe is not to be ſhewn by the King's Council till all the Pannel be gone through; and then, if there be not twelve left to try, then they are bound to ſhew Cauſe; that is the Law.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is a Thing of a very tender Concern to me; I deſire to know, if it be not uſual that they ſhould aſſign the Cauſe, when they challenge any for the King: For if it be not according to Law, it may be a Prejudice to me; and I deſire I may have Council heard to that Point.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, ſhall we aſſign Council to diſpute Matters not diſputable? There is not any more clear Caſe in all our Law than that: If your Lordſhip pleaſe, you ſhall have a Book to read, that the King is not bound to ſhew Cauſe till the Pannel is gone through.

L. Preſton. Then I don't inſiſt upon it.

Clerk of Arr. Walter Bridal, Eſq; Challenged.

Samuel Hodgkins, Eſq; Challenged.

Thomas Elton, Eſq;

L. Preſton. I do not challenge him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we challenge him for the King.

Clerk of Arr. John Milner, Eſq; Not appeared.

Richard Page, Eſq;

L. Preſton. I do not except againſt him.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then we challenge him for the King.

Clerk of Arr. Richard Marſh, Eſq;

Mr. Marſh. My Lord, I deſire to be excuſed; I am not fit to ſerve upon a Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Why?

Mr. Marſh. I am thick of Hearing.

L. C. J. Holt. Methinks you hear me very well.

Mr. Marſh. Truly, my Lord, I do not hear well.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, you may ſpare him if there be enough.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I do not challenge him; I deſire he may be ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We challenge him for the King.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as uſual.

Clerk of Arr. Sir Richard Grahme, Hold up your Hand—— [Which he did] —— Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Pariſh St. Anne within the Liberty of Weſtminſter, Baronet, together with John Aſhton, &c. —— prout in the Indictment mutatis mutandis——and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty of this Felony and High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the Felony and High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty. If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knapp. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt my Lord Preſton, who is indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, and ſtands now Priſoner before you at the Bar; and the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner, together with one John Aſhton and Edmund Elliot, as falſe Traitors againſt our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, not weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, the 29th of December, in the ſecond Year of their now Majeſties Reign, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in this County of Middleſex, did conſpire, conſult and imagine, to depoſe their Majeſties from the Throne and Government of theſe Kingdoms, and to bring the King and Queen to final Death and Deſtruction, and levy War within this Kingdom, and procure an Invaſion to be made here; and that to bring their Treaſons to paſs, they did prepare and compoſe, and cauſe to be prepared and compoſed divers treaſonable Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in Writing, which were to inform the French King and his Subjects, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the Number, Force and Condition of their Majeſties Ships, and how ſome of them were Mann'd, and the Names of ſeveral of the Commanders of them, and how the Caſtles and Forts of Portſmouth, South-Sea, and Goſport, within this Kingdom were fortified, and how they might be ſeized and ſurprized by the King's Enemies; as alſo to inform them of the Time, Places, Ways and Means how they might invade this Kingdom, depoſe their Majeſties, and fight with their their Ships against their Majesties Ships, and cause and procure great Forces to be raised against the King and Queen, and send Ships to plague the City of London, and War and Rebellion within the Kingdom to procure; and that they did knowingly and secretly prepare and conceal two several Bills of Exchange for the Payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and got these Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes and Memorandums, into their Custody; and afterwards, the 30th of December, for the Sum of one hundred Pounds, by them, or some of them paid, they did hire a Ship to carry them and the said Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions, into Parts beyond the Seas, to, and among their Majesties Enemies; and did also prepare a Boat, which was to carry them to the Ship, and accordingly they went into the Boat, and went on Board the Ship with the Bills of Exchange, and Papers aforesaid; and being on Board they set Sail, and made away towards France with those Bills of Exchange and Papers, with Intention to disperse them, and to perfect their said Treasons. And the Indictment further sets forth, that there was, and is a War between our King and Queen and the French King, and the People of those Parts, under his Dominions, who are Enemies of the King and Queen. The Prisoner, together with those other two named before, as false Traitors, did adhere to the Enemies of the King and Queen; and to bring about this Treason, they did procure such Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Instructions, and did hire such Ship and Boat to carry them and those Papers into France; and did go on Board the said Ship, and sailed away for France, with Intention to aid and assist the King's Enemies in Counsel and Intelligence, by those Papers, and Bills of Exchange, as I before opened unto you; and this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of their Majesties, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, the Prisoner pleaded, he is not guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon his Country, which you are. If we prove him guilty, it is your Duty to find him so.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment hath been opened to you at large, and I do not doubt but you have observed it: It consists of two Parts, which are formed upon two several Branches of the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. The one is for compassing and imagining the Deposing and Destruction of the King and Queen; the other for aiding and assisting the King and Queen's Enemies.

Treason, Gentlemen, consists in the Imagination of the Heart; but because that Imagination of the Heart can be discovered no other way but by some open Act, therefore the Law doth require, that some Overt-Act, manifesting that Intention and Imagination, be assigned and proved. I doubt not but you have observed that there are several Overt-Acts of both these kinds of Treason, assigned in this Indictment.

Gentlemen, the general Design of the Conspiracy (as will appear by the Evidence) was this: The King and Queen were to be deposed, and this was to be effected by a French Army, and a French Fleet.

It will be easily granted, that nothing more dreadful can enter into the Imagination of an Englishman; than the Destruction of our Fleet, and the Conquest of the Kingdom by the Arms of France.

But yet it will be part of the Evidence that we shall offer to you, that the Prisoners, and others of the Conspirators seem to be of another Mind; for amongst the Papers which were taken with the Prisoners, you will see one, which is stiled, The Result of a Conference, wherein they pretend to shew the Possibility of Restoring King James by the Power of the French King, and yet to preserve the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. They themselves went no farther than to think it possible; and I believe it will be hard to perswade any other Englishman, that it is possible, unless one Instance could be given, that the French King ever employed his Arms for setting up any body but himself, his own Religion, and his own Government. I never heard that he did pretend to form any Part of his Glories upon the Virtue of Moderation, or Self-denial. And there can hardly be imagined a greater Instance of Self-denial, than for the French King, after he had destroyed the Dutch and English Fleets, and subdued our Forces at Land, not to make use of his Success, so as to add these three Kingdoms to his Conquests, and possess himself of the uncontested Dominion of the Sea for ever, but only to entitle him, at so great Hazard and Expence, to become a Mediator between King James and the People of England, and, by his Mediation, to establish the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of the People: And yet, as absurd as this seems, you will find this to be the Result of one of their Conferences. I did never think it was the Part of any who were of Council for the King in Cases of this Nature, to endeavour to aggravate the Crime of the Prisoners, by going about to put false Colours upon Evidence, or to give it more than its due Weight; and therefore I shall be sure to forbear any thing of that Nature. But I think it my Duty to give some short Account of the Nature and Course of the Evidence to be produced to you; which consisting of several Sorts, it will be in some sort necessary to open it, that you may the more clearly apprehend it, and with more Ease make your Observations upon it.

Gentlemen, we shall produce in Evidence, as well living Witnesses, as Papers and Writings, which by a strange kind of Providence were taken upon my Lord Preston, and the other two Persons named in the Indictment, when they were apprehended; and therein this Design that I have opened to you, will be made evident beyond all Contradiction.

As to the living Witnesses, the Course of the Evidence will be this. One Nicholas Pratt is the Owner of a Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth, he does usually entrust his Wife, Jane Pratt, with the hiring out of this Smack; William Pasely is Master of the Vessel, and has of late been made a Part-Owner, to protect him from being press'd; for it is a Privilege that the Owners of the Vessels claim, not to be press'd.

Some Time since (the Witnesses will tell you the precise Time) this Jane Pratt was sent for to one Mr. Burdet's House in the City, where she met with Mr. Ashton, who desired to know, whether she could undertake to convey him and ſome others, with Safety into France. She ſaid, ſhe did not doubt but ſhe could do ſo; and thereupon Mr. Aſhton told her, that he and his Friends were Merchants, and Traders, and that they ſhould make great Advantage, to the Value of a Thouſand Pounds at leaſt, if they could be there quickly. Their Diſcourſe went no farther at that Time; but Mrs. Pratt was appointed by Mr. Aſhton to bring the Maſter of the Veſſel along with her, for he had a Mind to diſcourſe himſelf with the Maſter, and they were to meet at the Wonder Tavern in Ludgate-ſtreet; and becauſe there ſhould be no Miſtake about the Meeting, Mr. Aſhton gave the Woman a Note of Direction in Writing, ready to be produced.

Accordingly, by the 29th of Decemb. Mrs. Pratt and the Maſter, came to the Wonder Tavern, where Mr. Aſhton met with them, and there they treated of the Price to be given for the hiring of this Veſſel to carry them to France, and I think 150 Guineas was the Sum then inſiſted upon, but no Bargain was made at this Time; but there was a new Appointment to meet the next Day, which was the 30th of December, at Mr. Burdet's Houſe.

The next Day, when ſhe and the Maſter came thither, they found there together Aſhton and Elliot, the two other Perſons named in the Indictment, and there this Matter was treated of with great Secreſy in Mrs. Burdet's Bed-Chamber.

And they came to an Agreement that 100 l. ſhould be the Sum to be paid to Mrs. Pratt for conveying into France, Aſhton and Elliot, and two other Perſons. So the Contract was originally made for others beſides Mr. Aſhton and Elliot, and the Money was actually depoſited by Mr. Aſhton and Elliot in Mrs. Burdet's Hands, and a Six-pence was broken; one Half of which was delivered to Mrs. Burdet to keep, the other Half Mr. Aſhton was to take along with him, and when the Maſter had ſafely landed them in France, Mr. Aſhton was to deliver his Half of the Six-pence to the Maſter; which being brought to Mrs. Burdet, either by him or Mrs. Pratt, upon the joining of the two Pieces together, the Maſter was entituled to receive the hundred Pounds.

The next Appointment was to meet at one Mr. Rigby's Houſe in Covent-Garden, and that was to be on the one and thirtieth of December, when the Voyage was to be begun: And the Tide not ſerving to go through Bridge till late, the Appointment was to meet the later. When they, Mrs. Pratt and the Maſter, came there, they found only Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot; but before that Time Care was taken to provide a Sculler at Surry-Stairs, to be ready to carry them on Board the Smack, and the Waterman was appointed to ſtay in a little Ale-houſe thereabouts, to be ready when he ſhould be called.

About ten o'Clock at Night four Perſons came down together, and went into this Sculler with the Maſter of the Smack, and made what Haſte they could through Bridge till they came to Pickle-herring Stairs, over-againſt the Tower, where the Smack lay, and there went aboard the Maſter and theſe four Perſons, my Lord Preſton, a Servant of my Lord Preſton's, Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot.

The Smack ſet Sail immediately after they were on Board, and their Haſte made them carry away the Waterman's Coat, which he had lent them whilſt they were in the Sculler, and that Accident was the Occaſion of diſcovering who the Waterman was that carried them from Surry Stairs.

After they were on Board the Smack, they were poſſeſſed with great Fear of being ſurprized. They knew the Nature of the Buſineſs they were about, and the Danger they were in, if they ſhould be diſcovered; and therefore when they were to paſs by the George Frigate, a Man of War that lay in the River, they deſired the Maſter to hide them, which he did, by putting them under the Quarter-Hatches, a Place where they could not ſtand or ſit, but muſt lie along on the Ballaſt. When they were paſſed by the George Frigate, they quitted that Place; but when they were near the Block-Houſe at Graves, they grew apprehenſive, and they deſired to be hid a ſecond Time, which was accordingly done.

And they continued to lie in that Place till they were taken; and it was a happy Thing they did ſo. The Place was ſuch, that they had not any Poſſibility of throwing away their Letters and Papers, though they had made Preparation for it in Caſe of any Accident, having tied them together, and fix'd a Piece of Lead to them, that ſo if they ſaw themſelves in Danger of being taken, they might eaſily ſink the Pacquet: But being ſo cloſe ſhut up in this Place, that they could not execute their Purpoſe, the Papers were taken, and will be offered to you in Evidence.

Gentlemen, Captain Billop, by the Order of a noble Lord, now preſent, was directed to uſe his utmoſt Diligence to ſeize ſome dangerous Perſons, of whoſe Deſign of going beyond Sea for ſome very ill Ends, an Intimation had been given. He got ready a Pinnance well Mann'd, and went in Purſuit of them down the River; and both as he went and return'd, he took Care to ſearch ſuſpected Veſſels. When he came to this, he demanded of the Maſter what Number of Men he had on Boord, pretending he came to preſs Men: The Maſter told him he had but three, and for thoſe he had a Protection. But the Captain ſaid he muſt be better ſatisfied, and muſt ſearch the Veſſel; and in the Search he found theſe four Perſons lying concealed in this ſecret Place, under the Quarter-Hatches.

As they were taken out one after another, one of the Seamen obſerv'd Mr. Aſhton to take up a Bundle of Papers from off the Ballaſt, and put it in his Boſom; and near the Place where the Papers lay, he took up two Seals, which after proved to be my Lord Preſton's Seals when he was Secretary. Captain Billop being inform'd of this by that Seaman, he put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and took away from him the Bundle of Papers with the Lead fix'd to it.

When they were put on Board the Captain's Pinnance, they all preſſed him much, that he would let them go on Shore at Graveſend, pretending want of Refreſhment, they not having eaten, and the Night having been cold; but he did not think that proper nor ſafe, but told them, they ſhould go on Board the George Frigate, and refreſh themſelves there.

When they came on Board the George Frigate, all the three Gentlemen, and my Lord Preſton in particular, were very earneſt with Captain Billop to diſpoſe of the Bundle of Papers, mixing extraordinary Promiſes with great Complements.

Not

Not prevailing there, when they were returned to the Pinnace, they renewed their Sollicitations, and one of them told him, it would be eaſy to remove all Suſpicion, by fixing the Lead to ſome other Papers of little Signification, which were found in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, which he might produce, and they would without Difficulty paſs for the Papers that were taken.

Bnt the Captain was too juſt to comply with this Propoſal. When they found he was not to be moved, you will find from the Witneſſes, that their Promiſes were turned into Threats, and they uſed another ſort of Language.

When they were brought to Whitehall Stairs, upon their Landing they gave Money to the Maſter and the Seamen, deſiring them to ſay, they were hired to go for Flanders, and not for France.

Gentlemen, Theſe Things which I have open'd, carry a ſtrong Preſumption of Guilt, for Engliſhmen, eſpecially one of that Quality of my Lord Preſton, to go into the Country of an Enemy, without any manner of Paſs-port, and in ſuch a Manner as they could not expect but to be ſeized for Spies, unleſs they were aſſured, that their Character was ſo well known there, that they ſhould be look'd upon, not as Perſons coming to get Intelligence, but to give it; unleſs they were well aſſured of a good Reception when they came there.

But there is no Occaſion to leave any thing to conjecture in this Caſe; what is contained in theſe Papers makes the Deſign of the Voyage beyond Diſpute. I think, Gentlemen, after you have heard the Evidence, you will be very well ſatisfied, that my Lord Preſton, and the other two who ſtand indicted, were equally concerned in the Papers; they were all alike earneſt to preſerve them from being ſeen; they all ſollicited for the diſpoſing of them, and promiſed Rewards if they might prevail.

Gentlemen, Theſe Papers are of various Natures.

One I mentioned before, is entituled, The Reſult of a Conference between ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs; in which it was undertaken to prove the Poſſibility and Methods of Reſtoring King James by a French Power, without endangering the Proteſtant Religion, and the Civil Adminiſtration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

Another contains Heads for a Declaration to be prepared, in order to be publiſhed when the French have had Succeſs at Sea, and are landing; and that is filled with ſuch Pretences as they thought moſt ſpecious, and moſt likely to amuſe and delude the People.

There is another Sort of theſe Papers which conſiſts of Letters. Theſe Letters are directed in falſe Names, and are not ſubſcribed; and it is not to be imagined it ſhould be otherwiſe. Yet, Gentlemen, (though that is not the preſent Buſineſs) the Hands of the Writers of theſe Letters are very well known, and the Subject Matter of them will eaſily reveal to you for whom they were intended; for though theſe Letters are moſt of them written under divers Cants, ſome under the Colour of Trade, ſome of them under the Colour of a Law-ſuit for the Redeeming of a Mortgage, others under the Notion of a Match, and a Settlement to be made upon that Match, yet the real Buſineſs is ſo plain, that you need but hear them read, to ſee through the Diſguiſe.

Though they begin generally in the Stile of Merchants writing to one another, or the like, yet towards the End of the Letters you will obſerve Expreſſions of Duty and Reverence (Terms which do not uſually paſs in Correſpondence between Perſons of that Sort) ſufficient to ſhew, that ſomewhat elſe was intended to be covered in what went before.

Gentlemen, It will appear to you, that ſome of the Writers of theſe Letters were of the Number of thoſe who were ſecured the laſt Summer, when the French Fleet was upon our Coaſts, and you will obſerve they complain, that by reaſon of that Reſtraint, the Deſign was very much hindred, though they have endeavoured to redeem that Loſs of Time ſince their Diſcharge, and have carried on the Buſineſs with more Vigour than ever.

In ſhort, the Deſign of theſe Letters is to importune the ſetting out of the French Fleet with all poſſible Expedition: They ſay they muſt not ſuffer ſuch a fit Seaſon to be ſpent unprofitably: That the beſt Time is between this and the firſt of March to come to a good Market; and if they come not before the tenth of March, all will be loſt. In another of their Letters they ſay, If the Suit be well ſollicited and managed, it may come to a final Hearing before the End of Eaſter Term.

They complain, that there are ſeveral indiſcreet Letters came from St. Germains, that turn to the Prejudice of the Deſign. Thoſe Letters are not enough diſguiſed to deceive the People here, but ſpeak too plainly what is to be expected from themſelves, and from the French. You will take Notice, that the Letters which all you will hear, are all Bills with high Characters of the Bearer; for which Reaſon they write in ſuch general Terms, becauſe the Bearer was entruſted with the whole. Some of the Letters ſay, no Particulars are, or need be expreſſed, becauſe he will inform them of every thing: Others, that they could not write ſo much as he could ſay; and that nothing was wanting, but to allow him a full and fit Seaſon to give an Account of all the Buſineſs; and that they entirely depend upon his Account of them and their Condition.

And, Gentlemen, in one of the Letters the Bearer is ſtiled a Lord; and to whom can that be applied, unleſs to the Priſoner at the Bar?

In another Letter, when they ſpeak of ſending the Copper and the Linnen (the Goods pretended for carrying on the Trade) it is added, And what the Meaning of that is, they muſt refer to the Bearer, who was able to give them a particular Account.

I have mentioned ſo much of the Papers, only that you might have a general Notion of them; that ſo when you hear them read, you may more readily make your Obſervations. I aſſure you I have been as careful as I could, not to exceed the Truth in opening any Part of the Evidence: But it is your Part to ſee whether what I have opened be made out in Proof.

There is another Paper that gives an Account of their Majeſty's Fleet to be ſent out this Summer; and there is an Obſervation at the End of it, that it was hoped it may be out in March. But you will find by other Papers (and particularly by one of my Lord's own Hand-writing) that he was of another Mind, that the Fleet would not be out before June.

Gentle-

Gentlemen, the laſt Sort of Papers which I will mention to you, are ſome Memorandums and Notes written by my Lord Preſton, wherein he gives an Account of ſeveral Things of great Moment; which, as his Memory ſerved him, are put together without Connexion or Method, being only to remind him of them when he ſhould have Occaſion to mention them.

He therein gives an Account of the Number and Strength of the Engliſh Fleet; how they are Manned, and who are the principal Officers and Commanders, and in what Time they will be out.

He likewiſe gives an Account of the Number and State of the Dutch Fleet, and how that is to be divided and diſpoſed of.

And with relation to the French Fleet, there is a particular Memorandum, That they muſt be out at fartheſt in April; that they muſt be out ſo as to ſeparate the Dutch Fleet and ours; that they muſt be ſure to look in at Spithead as they come by, and ſecure what Ships ſhould be in that Harbour from joining the reſt.

There is alſo a Hint given of thoſe that were moſt likely to come in to them: And there is Advice in what Place their Fleet ſhould fight ours. They muſt not come ſo high as Beachy, where they fought the laſt Year, but rather chooſe to fight in the Chops of the Channel.

There is an Account of Portſmouth, how fortified and garriſon'd, that it had but five hundred Men; that Goſport had nothing but Palliſadoes about it, and South-Sea-Caſtle very weak.

There are Memorandums of other Heads proper for a Declaration.

There are the Names of ſeveral Perſons, ſome of them with particular Characters, and ſome without; and amongſt the reſt, there is the Character given of the Clergy of the City of London, that they are the worſt of all others.

Gentlemen, we ſhall proceed to the Evidence, and firſt call the living Witneſſes, and then read the Papers; and when you have heard what the one can ſay, and what the other contain, we muſt leave it to your Conſideration, and ſubmit all to the Direction of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſwear Mrs. Pratt, Jane Pratt.

[Who was ſworn, with ſeven or eight more.]

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, pray will you tell us what you know concerning the hiring of a Veſſel, and whither it was to go? and by whom it was hired, and for what? Pray tell your whole Knowledge in this Matter.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet, may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, ſent for me to his Houſe, to hire a Veſſel to go for France, and asked me, if I could carry them ſecure. I told them I could let them have a Smack that would carry them; and, if it pleaſe you, my Lord, we met ſeveral times at his Houſe, and at laſt there was Mr. Aſhton there, and Mr. Aſhton appointed to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill; I think they call it the Wonder Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. Miſtreſs, pray begin again, and ſpeak out.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet ſent for me to hire my Smack to go for France, and they asked me if I thought it would carry them ſecure. I told them yes, I thought it would; and I came ſeveral times about it to Mr. Burdet's Houſe. The Smack was not then come to the Tower, as it did afterwards; and then after they ſent for Mr. Aſhton, and he met me at Mr. Burdet's, and meeting at Mr. Burdet's, he gave me a Note, to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill, and there Aſhton met, but Mr. Burdet did not come.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was with Aſhton when you met at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. None but a Man of his, as Mr. Aſhton ſaid: There we ſat about an Hour and an half and did nothing. At length we went away, and appointed to meet at Mr. Burdet's Houſe the next Day at ſeven or eight o'Clock, and there we met, and the Bargain was made.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Bargain?

Mrs. Pratt. I ask'd 150 l. and they told me that was too much. Says Aſhton, I will give you Fourſcore; ſays Mr. Burdet, pray encourage them, offer them 100 l. Thereupon he did offer 100 l. and we agreed for 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Day was that, can you remember?

Mrs. Pratt. We met on the Monday, and the Tueſday we agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Ninety-three Guineas and Six-pence.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by when the Bargain was made?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Elliot was along with them, Mrs. Burdet, and the Maſter of the Veſſel, at the Agreement.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What is the Maſter's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. His Name is Paſely; and there was Six-pence broken, and Mr. Aſhton took one of the Six-pences, and Mr. Burdet ordered him to give his Wife the other, and ſo he did; and when the Money was paid, Mr. Aſhton brought in a Paper wrapp'd up, and ſaid, we ſhould ſee it told out, and he told it out there, and it was ninety-three Guineas, and the Six-pence.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Who did they tell you they were to carry into France?

Mrs. Pratt. Truly, my Lord, they ſaid three, that was all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What followed then? Did they give you any Note where you were to come for them?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton bid Mr. Elliot write a Note where they ſhould come; it was at Mr. Rigby's in Covent Garden, at the Seven Stars, and there we were to meet at eleven o'Clock at Night; and when we came there, Mr. Aſhton was within, and went out and fetch in ſome Company. Mr. Elliot came, and two other Gentlemen that I never ſaw in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Miſtreſs, you ſpeak of the breaking of a Six-pence, what was to be done with that?

Mrs. Pratt. My Maſter was to bring the half of the Six-pence that Mr. Aſhton had, to Mrs. Burdet, and then we were to have the 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had Mrs. Burdet the other Piece?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, Mr. Aſhton had one half, and ſhe had t'other.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Was there any Proviſion carried on Board this Smack?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, there was a Hamper and a Trunk, which were fetch'd from Mr. Burdet's Houſe; my Man, John Fiſher, carried the Trunk, and a Porter carried the Hamper, and I took Care to ſee it put in the Veſſel.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came to Covent-Garden that Night, what Diſcourſe had you? and what Enquiries were there made, and by whom?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Aſhton comes in, and ſhe ſaid Mr. Aſhton was her Husband, and ſaid there was ſome News from Court, of having Papers in a Hat, and that they had choſen ſome Lord or other: Something it was, I remember, I can't tell what; but ſays one Gentleman that ſtood by, and ſaid, I was choſen the laſt Year, that ſignifies nothing; and another ſaid, I miſſed it; it is only a Chriſtmas Gambol, it ſignifies little.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What further Diſcourſe had they?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Aſhton ſaid ſhe was afraid they ſhould have no very good Luck, for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Was there any Diſcourſe what Advantage they ſhould get by going, or you by carrying of them?

Mrs. Pratt. They ſaid they would help us to the earning of 1000 l. before Lady-day, if they went this Time ſafe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray Miſtreſs recollect your ſelf; were they to go to Flanders? or where?

Mrs. Pratt. They were to go for France? they were not to go for Flanders.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Time of Night did you depart from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. About Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. How did they go away from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not go with them: Mrs. Aſhton kept me, and gave me a Leg of a Gooſe, and ſome Drink.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know any thing further?

Mrs. Pratt. No; I think I have told all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were you hired for France or Flanders? I ask you once again.

Mrs. Pratt. We were hired for France; any Place there where we could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any particular Port mentioned?

L. C. J. Holt. If you have done with her, will my Lord ask her any Queſtion?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be ask'd, whether ſhe ever ſaw me before?

Mrs. Pratt. No, never, my Lord, but in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But ſhe ſays, when they were at Rigby's, there came in two Gentlemen with Mr. Elliot that Night.

L. Preſton. I deſire to know of her whether I was one of them two?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, ſhe does not ſay your Lordſhip was one of them.

Mrs. Pratt. No, my Lord you were not one of them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſet up Paſeley. Paſeley, what do you know about hiring of this Smack to go for France? I think you are Maſter of the Smack called the Thomas and Elizabeth, are you not?

Mr. Paſeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then pray give an Account of the whole Matter.

Mr. Paſeley. The Smack was hired of the Woman, and not of me; and when I came up to London, ſhe told me ſhe had got a Voyage over to France, if I was minded to go; I ſaid, yes; and ſhe appointed me to go along with her to this Miſtreſs what do ye call um's Houſe, this Mrs. Burdet; and when ſhe came to this Houſe, there was no body within but Mr. Aſhton: Preſently after came in Mr. Elliot. After they came in they told us the Things were not ready yet, but they would be ready preſently to carry on Board. When theſe Things were ready, John Fiſher carried the Trunk down, and the Porter carried the Hamper, and I went along with them to Billingſgate, and carried them on Board; and when I carried them on Board I went to Billingſgate again, and ſo we went along to this Mr. Burdet's Houſe; and ſo when we came up to Burdet's Houſe, Aſhton and Elliot were not there preſent; but we had been there but a little Time e'er they came in; and then they came and ſaid to my Owner and me, You ſhall ſee the Money told: It was all in Gold but one Six-pence; there was Ninety-three Guineas: And, after the Money was told, there was a Six-pence that was broken in half, and the Guineas he rolled up in a Paper, and gave them to Mrs. Burdet, and bid her lay them up; and he gave her one half of the Six-pence, and kept the other half himſelf; and when I brought that other half that he had, or my Owner, then ſhe was to give the Money to her or me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray what Room of the Houſe was this in at Mr. Burdett's?

Paſeley. It was on the left Hand going in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was it a Bed-Chamber?

Paſeley. Yes, 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Time of Night was it, pray?

Paſeley. About Eight o'Clock.

Mr Serj. Tremain. What Diſcourſe had you with them there, pray?

Paſeley. They asked me if I thought they might get well over? I told them yes, I believed they might.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they tell you what Part of France they were to go to?

Paſeley. No, they named no Place, but any Part in France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, go on, tell us what they ſaid further.

Paſeley. So, Sir, they gave us Direction to meet them at the Seven Stars in the little Piazza's in Covent-Garden. When we came there it was Eleven o'Clock at Night, and they were not in the Houſe when we came in, except 'twere Mr. Aſhton; but preſently after Aſhton and Elliot came in, and they ſat down; and ſo in came two Gentlemen more, but what they were, or who they were, I don't know; and they diſcourſed about Papers ſhaking in a Hat, and ſaid they ſhould have no good Luck, for the Cock crowed: And after this Elliot and Aſhton came out of the Houſe, and called me to go with them; and after we were gone out, Mr. Aſhton leaves Elliot, and went away from him, and Elliot bid me go along with him; ſays he, come, Maſter, come along with me. He did not name any Place whither they were to go; but it happened to be Surry-Stairs, and going down, he calls in at the Corner Houſe, which is an Ale-houſe, for the Waterman, and bid me go before to the Water-ſide; and when we came thither the Waterman ſteps into his Boat, and I after him; and when I was in the Boat I went into the Stern, and by that time I was ſeated in the Stern, there came down four Men; but I never ſaw my Lord and his Man before they came into the Wherry.

L. C. J. Holt. Who came into the Wherry?

Paſeley. There was all thoſe four, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot, my Lord, and his Man.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this do you ſay?

Paſeley. At Surry-Stairs, there the Boat was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was the Priſoner at the Bar one of them?

Paſeley. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what did you do then?

Paſeley. After we were ſeated in the Boat at Surry-Stairs, we put off, and went down through Bridge, and going through Bridge we came on Board, the Veſſel riding juſt againſt the Tower almoſt, and we went all on Board; and when we came on Board, my Men were all aſleep, and being aſleep, I call'd them out of the Cabin to hale up the Anchor; and there being very little Wind ſtirring, we could not go very far, but came juſt below the Half-way Tree, and then we ſtopp'd, and I order'd them to drop the Anchor for fear of the Veſſels in the River; and the next Morning about Eight o'Clock we weigh'd our Anchor again, and went on till we came near to the George Man of War, and there they all of them hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who?

Paſeley. All of them, my Lord. There was Aſhton, and Elliot, and my Lord Preſton, and his Man.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. In what Place did they hide?

Paſeley. In the Quarter-Hatches, under the Hatches where we lie.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they deſire you to hide them?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did they ſay?

Paſeley. They ſaid, that if there ſhould come any Boat on Board to preſs, I ſhould ſhew them my Protection; and ſo there came no Boat then.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How big is this Place that they hid in?

Paſeley. 'Tis in the Quarter under, near the Cabin-Hatches.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I ask you what kind of Place it is?

Paſeley. They cannot ſit upright, nor ſtand upright, but they are fain to lie along, or lean upon their Elbows.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Well, go on, what happen'd afterwards?

Paſeley. After that we were paſs'd the Man of War, they came up and ſate in the Cabin, where we uſed to eat our Victuals; and when we came to Graveſend, over againſt the Block-houſe, they would go down again and hide, and did ſo till we paſſed the Block-houſe, and then they were for coming up again; and then I ſaw a Boat coming about Tilbury, which made towards us, and thereupon they duck'd down again, and the Hatches were laid down upon them, and there they remained till they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where were they taken?

Paſeley. They were taken between the North Block-houſe and the Little ——

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But I mean in what Part of the Ship?

Paſeley. They were taken in that little Place where they were hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were the Hatches ſhut down upon them?

Paſeley. Yes, they were.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How long had they been hid before they were taken?

Paſeley. A quarter of an Hour, or thereabouts.

Sir W. W. Did they deſire to be hid there?

Paſeley. Yes, they did; and they were hid there.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Now tell us, after ſuch Time as they were taken, what they ſaid, and what you obſerved.

Paſeley. After they were taken they ſaid nothing to me; my Lord, nor none of them did ſpeak to me after the Boat had taken them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. But what happened after they were taken?

Paſeley. After they were taken, Captain Billop ordered them to go into the Boat, and us with them; and when we came to Whitehall-Stairs, one of them ſaid to me, Maſter, when you come upon your Examination, ſay you were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Which was that that ſaid ſo?

Paſeley. 'Twas Elliot, and he gave me half a Crown to bear my Expences that Night, and ſaid he would remember to take Care of us afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they give any Money to the Seamen?

Paſeley. Yes, Aſhton gave one of my Men half a Crown, and bid him ſay he was bound for Flanders, and not for France; and my Lord's Man gove my other Man half a Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. Was my Lord Preſton by when that Money was given?

Paſeley. My Lord was upon the Bridge, but not near me.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon If my Lord have any Queſtions ask to him, we have done with him for the preſent.

L. Preſton. No, my Lord, I have no Queſtions to ask him.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was my Lord Preſton by when the Direction was given you to ſay you were to go to Flanders, and not to France?

Paſeley. I ſay, he was upon the Bridge, but was not near me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Diſcourſe had you on Board with any of them?

Paſeley. Very little. They ask'd me if I thought they ſhould go clear, and I told them yes, I thought they might.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Clear of what?

Paſeley. Clear of the Veſſel's ſearching. They examin'd me that Night I was at the Seven Stars, if I knew the Way of the Swing, on the Back of the Channel, to go clear of the Town. I told them I did not know the Way by the Back of the Sands by Margaret's, but the Swing would not keep them clear of the Town.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there a Note written whither you were to come?

Paſeley. Yes, there was a Note written to meet them at the Seven Stars in the Little Piazza's.

L. C. J. Polexfen. Whereabouts is Burdet's Houſe?

Paſeley. That is in Queen-ſtreet in the City.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. You, Paſeley, Did the Waterman that brought them on Board leave two Coats behind him?

Paſeley. Yes, the Waterman did leave two

Coats;

Coats; and I put them into my Cheſt, and afterwards they broke open my Cheſt, and took them out, and brought them to my Lord Chief Juſtice's.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we will next produce that Waterman. Set up Charles Betſworth.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Come, will you give us an Account who you carried on board a Smack, and what happened?

Betſworth. I was going over the Water from Surry-Stairs about ſeven or eight o'Clock, and a Gentleman at the Stairs called Sculler, and ask'd me if I would carry him down the River; ſaid I, how far? Says he, to the Tower: Said I, 'tis againſt Tide, and I can't carry you down ſo low. He ſaid he would ſtay till the Tide turn'd: Said I, if I be out of my Bed ſo long, I deſerve to be well paid for it; if you will give me Half a Crown I'll carry you down. Says he, I'll give it you. So then I came aſhoar, and he ask'd me what my Name was; I told him, Charles Betſworth: Says he, will you be ſure to ſtay for us? Yes, ſaid I, if yon will be ſure to come. If I be not at the Stairs, I'll be at that Alehouſe there in the Corner: So I ſtaid, and carried a Fare or two over the Water; and about eleven o'Clock, as I was ſitting in the Houſe a Gentleman comes, and calls, Charles, and ſo out I went to my Boat, and took them in. There was one Man, as I ſuppoſe, in the Stern, and he that called me out, followed me down, and by and by came three more into my Boat; one of them had a whitiſh Cloak on, and the other a grey looſe Coat, and a red Bag of the Quantity of a Peck, and ſo we put off, and row'd away; and juſt under the Temple-Wall, which was all the Words I heard from them that I can remember, ſays one Gentleman, When do you hear the King goes away? and another made Anſwer, and ſaid, on Tueſday. So we rowed down through Bridge; and when we were through Bridge, they asked where the Veſſel lay; and he that was in the Stern ſaid, it was Southwark-Side, over againſt the Tower, and bid me row over thither. And when we came juſt below Battle-Bridge, that Man ſaid, that is ſhe that rides a-head of us. I looked, and ſhe had a Pennant up: So they were put on board, and as ſoon as they were on board, ſhe went off, and I rowed up to the Bridge, and went through Bridge, and came up as far as and there I ſtayed, and took my Sculls and my Staff out of my Boat; and when I took them out, I miſſed my Cloaths. Says I, God bleſs me, I have loſt my Cloaths; but then I thought it was but a ſtill Tide, and therefore I would try if I could overtake them; for I thought they could not be got far, there being little or no Wind; ſo I went down to the Place where the Veſſel lay, and ſhe was gone; and I enquired of ſeveral Smacks that lay there, but could hear nothing; and I rowed as low as Limehouſe-Reach; and about Black-Wall and Limehouſe-Reach, I came up to a Smack that I ſuppoſed was ſhe, and cried out, Ho the Smack, and they anſwered me, So. I aſked them if I did not bring a Fare a Board that Smack awhile ago? Then they ſaid no. I told them I had brought a Fare a Board ſome Smack that lay about Horſley-down and Pickle-herring-Stairs, and they had got two Coats of mine, which I had forgotten, and it had a Pennant up when they went on Board, but this had none; ſo I rowed on further, till I came as far as Barkin-Sherf; and I thought there being ſo little Wind, that none could be gone beyond me, and therefore waited to ſee a Smack with a Pennant coming down, but I could not meet with it, and there I lay all Night in my Waiſtcoat, and the next Day I came back to Greenwich, and as I came along, I went on Board ſeveral Veſſels to enquire, becauſe I took her for an Attendant upon a Man of War; but I could not hear of my Cloaths, till laſt Friday was Seven-night two Watermen came, and brought me the Cloaths I loſt.

L. C. J. Then you have your Cloaths again?

Betſworth. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray look upon that Gentleman there, my Lord Preſton, are you ſure that he was one of them that was in your Boat?

Betſworth. I can't tell that ever I ſaw him in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. You Paſeley, I ask you, was my Lord Preſton one of the Gentlemen the Waterman brought on Board your Smack?

Paſeley. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Waterman?

Paſeley. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell; but the Waterman's Coat was left on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then let me aſk you another Queſtion, Had you a Pennant?

Paſeley. Yes, I had when I came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pennant?

Paſeley. Yes, I did afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Why did you take it in?

Paſeley. They aſked me if there was a Pennant, and I told them yes; and they bid me take it in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who bid you take it in?

Paſeley. Elliot did; ſo we took it down.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will my Lord aſk Betſworth any Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No, I have nothing to ſay to him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did they carry on Board with them, Paſeley?

Paſeley. They had nothing on Board but the Trunk and Hamper, that were brought down before from Burdet's Houſe; and there was nothing brought in the Boat but only a Leather Bag.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſet up Fiſher. I think his Name is John Fiſher. You was one of the Seamen that did belong to the Smack, I think.

Fiſher. Yes, I was.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray then tell us, who were brought thither, and what happened upon it.

Fiſher. About ſix Hours before they came on Board us, our Maſter came himſelf on Board, and took me along with him; but whither I was to go then I did not know. He carried me to a Houſe in the City, and there gave me a ſmall Trunk to carry, and a Hamper to a Porter; and we went away with them; and he bid us at Billinſgate, carry them on Board, which we did.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Trunk and Hamper brought on Board?

Fiſher. About ſix or ſeven o'Clock at Night, on Wedneſday, I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, and what followed?

Fiſher. My Lord, and Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot, and my Lord's Man, and the Maſter, came on Board between eleven and twelve: There was no more came on Board that I know of; but we were aſleep when they came on Board; and immediately our Maſter ordered us to hale up the Anchor. Now there was but little Wind ſtirring; and by that Time we were fallen down as low as the Half-way Tree, it being ſtill Flood, we could go no farther: So there we were ordered to ſtop, and we lay by till Morning; and about eight in the Morning we weighed Anchor again, and about nine, when we came to the George Man of War, they hid; they deſired to go down into the Quarters, and we laid the Hatches upon them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of Place is it that they hid in?

Fiſher. They could not ſtand upright, nor ſit upright, but they muſt lie, or lean upon their Elbows. So when we were got below the Ship, they came up again into the Cabin: And when we came at Graveſend near the Block-Houſe, then they hid again till we were below the Block-Houſe, and then we ſpied a Boat coming, which made them to keep below; and there they continued till Captain Billop took them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were they all four there?

Fiſher. Yes, all four.

Mr. Serj Tremain. After they were taken, what ſaid they?

Fiſher. After ſuch Time as they were taken, and come up to White-hall Stairs, Captain Aſhton gave me a Half Crown Piece, and bid me ſay, they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But whither were you going?

Fiſher. Truly, I did not know where we were to go, till ſince we came on Shoar. I underſtood nothing till they hid; and then indeed I thought we were going to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did any body tell you you were to go to France?

Fiſher. Since we came on Shoar.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will my Lord ask him any Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then the next Witneſs we call is one Amonds. Pray tell us what you know of this Matter.

Amonds. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, I know nothing concerning my Maſter's Buſineſs; but all that I know of this Buſineſs is, That they came on Board about Twelve o'Clock at Night, and I was then aſleep in the Cabin, and hearing ſome come on Board, and my Maſter call, I looked out, and there were three or four Gentlemen, and my Maſter, and he ordered us to ſet Sail immediately, and make our Way down as faſt as we could. There was little or no Wind: So that when we came down to the Half-way Tree, we were forced to come to an Anchor, and there we rid at Anchor till it was broad Day, when there was a brave Gale to the Weſtward; and by that Time we got down to Long-Reach, about nine o'Clock we came to the George Frigate, a Man of War, and they underſtanding that, deſired to hide theſe Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. What Gentlemen?

Amonds. My Lord Preſton, Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot, and the other Gentleman that was with them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look upon my Lord there, was he one?

Amonds. Yes, that Gentleman was one.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, go on.

Amonds. And ſo, Sir, after we were paſſed the Frigate, they came up again, and did not deſign to go down any more till they ſee ſome other Danger. When we came almoſt to Graveſend, they went down again: When we paſs'd the Block-Houſe I was at the Helm, and they were reſolving to go to Dinner, and bid that Man, my Fellow, to reach them ſome Victuals out of the Hamper: And while he was reaching them ſome Victuals, I ſee the Pinnace coming towards us: Said I, here is a Pinnace coming a Board: Says my Lord, and they, we muſt go down again and hide; and ſo they did go down again. We apprehended that they were coming a Board to preſs us, and they had no Mind to be ſeen. When the Pinnace came near, they waved to us in this manner, as much as to bid us ſtay: So we laid the Sail by, and ſtaid for them till they came up; and when the Captain came on Board, ſays he, this is worth our coming on Board, here are a Couple of brisk Seamen will do the King Service; I muſt have them, I think. Says I, I hope not ſo, noble Captain: Says he, have you any thing to keep your ſelves clear? Yes, ſays our Maſter. I am ſorry for that, ſays the Captain. What is it? Says the Maſter, I have a Protection. Says the Captain, let us ſee your Protection: So the Maſter pulls out his Protection, and ſhews it. Well, ſays the Captain, I muſt look a little further, and away he goes into the Cabin, and takes up the Hatches, where theſe Gentlemen were. Says the Captain, Hye, hye, who is here? Turn out, ſays he: But I ſuppoſe they did not make ſo much Haſte as the Captain expected; ſo he called ſome of his Men on Board; and when they came on Board, my Lord came out, and the reſt of the Gentlemen; and ſays my Lord to the Captain, I hope you will be ſo kind as not to take any thing from us. Says he, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers; 'tis Papers I look for, and put his Hands in both his Pockets, and pulled out Papers, and put them into his own Pocket; but whether they were new or old I can't tell; and there was a Watch likewiſe, but that he gave my Lord again, and ſaid, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers. Then he ſearch'd Mr. Elliot, and Mr. Aſhton was the laſt that came out, and there was one of my Lord's Watermen in the Cabin with him; and, ſays he, and pleaſe you, noble Captain, that Gentleman put ſomething in his Boſom. Says the Captain, What did you put in your Boſom, Sir? Nothing, ſays he, but my Handkerchief.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

Amonds. Mr. Aſhton, and ſhews him his Handkerchief; and afterwards the Captain put his Hand in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and pulled it out.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did he pull out?

Amonds. A Roll of Papers, with a Piece of Lead to it.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did you ſee the Lead fix'd to the Papers?

Amonds. I did ſee it fix'd to the Packthread that tied the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What ſort of Place is it in which they were taken?

Amonds. They could not ſit, nor ſtand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any Money given you?

Amonds. I had Half a Crown given me by my Lord's Man.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it gave you the Money?

Amonds.

Amonds. It was my Lord's Man; he that was on Board the Ship: He gave me Half a Crown in Whitehall, and ſaid, I ſhould ſay we were bound for Flanders, and not for France; but who the Half Crown came from I cannot tell, my Lord ſaid nothing to me at all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you hear any Diſcourſe as they came down?

Amonds. No, I did not mind any thing of Diſcourſe; for I never came among them, unleſs it were at the Hour of Watching.

L. Preſton. Pray did I ſay any thing to you at Whitehall?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your Way is to propoſe your Queſtions to the Court, and they will ask them for you.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire to ask him if I ſaid any Thing to him at Whitehall.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you, Did my Lord Preſton ſay any thing to you at Whitehall?

Amonds. No, my Lord, he never ſaid any thing to me at all; it was his Man that gave me the Half Crown, and ſpoke to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Will your Lordſhip ask him any other Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then call your next Witneſs.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Swear Capt. Billop. [Which was done.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Come, Captain Billop, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, where you did apprehend my Lord Preſton, and the Circumſtances of what happened at their Taking.

Capt. Billop. Sir, I met with them at the upper End of the Hope.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray give us an Account, from the Beginning to the End, what paſſed; how you came with the Boat, and all that happened at that Time.

Capt. Billop. About two o'Clock, or between one and two, upon the laſt of December, my Lord Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the Houſe of Lords, and told me his Father would ſpeak with me; and he carried me to my Lord Lindſey's Chamber, where immediately my Lord Preſident came, and told me there were ſome Perſons going for France about Buſineſs of dangerous Conſequence, and he deſired me to uſe ſome Means to get them apprehended: I then propoſed what I ſhould have to enable me for the Undertaking. My Lord Danby ſaid, there was ſuch a Boat that he would procure me, and my Lord Preſident gave me a Letter to another Perſon, who was to inſtruct me further about this Matter. My Lord Danby got the Boat ready, and ſome Men and Arms in it: But I thought there were not Arms enough; ſo I borrowed ſome Arms of my Lord Lucas, and about eleven o'Clock, as near as I remember, we put off from Tower-Wharf. It being very calm, I thought we ſhould be ſwifter than any Veſſel, and ſhould have the Advantage of them all; and therefore run down as far as Graveſend, and I brought ſeveral Veſſels by the Lee, in which Time I preſſed ſome Barkin Men, two or three of them; and amongſt them one that knew the Veſſels that lay in the River, having been on Board ſeveral; and we did board divers, and took out ſome Men, having a Preſs-Warrant; and he that I had taken of the Barkin Men, after he had paſſed by ſeveral Veſſels, ſeeing this Veſſel ſailing, told me that was the Thomas and Elizabeth: Whereupon we made up to them, and waving towards them, they ſtaid for us. When we came up, there was ſtanding by the Maſter two luſty Sailors, and I told him I would take but one of them: He ſaid he had a Protection; I bid him ſhew it me. When I was come on Board, and had looked upon his Protection, I told him I muſt look a little further, and went down into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there I found them all four lying together.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What four?

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preſton. I did not know him then, nor till afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who elſe was there?

Captain Billop. Mr. Elliot was there, and Mr. Aſhton, who were both my former Acquaintance; but my Lord Preſton I had forgotten, till one of them called him my Lord, and I asked them what Lord it was; and they ſaid it was my Lord Preſton; ſo then I ſaluted my Lord: So we rowed up.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray Captain tell us what happened in the Veſſel before you went out of it, after you found them there.

Capt. Billop. I handed my Lord Preſton up firſt; and after he came out of that little Place, which he was forced to creep out of on his Knees, I turned my Lord about, and told him I muſt ſearch him. He ſaid, he hoped I would not meddle with any thing, I told him I would meddle with nothing but Papers: So I put my Hand in his Pocket, and took all the Papers I could find, and put them in my own Pocket; and taking out a Watch, I delivered it to my Lord again. The next was Mr. Elliot, and I ſearch'd him, and found nothing at all upon him. After that Aſhton came up, and one of my Men told me, that Gentleman had put ſomething in his Boſom: Whereupon I gave him a ſudden Turn, his Back being towards me, and ask'd him what was that he put in his Boſom? He told me nothing but his Handkerchief, and pluck'd his Handkerchief out; with that I clapp'd my Hand in, and got the Packet, and took it out, with the Lead fix'd to it. I have the Lead now in my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray will you produce it, Sir. [Which he did.]

Capt. Billop. This is the Lead, ſeveral of my Men ſaw it when 'twas fix'd to the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did you do with the Packet?

Capt. Billop. I put it immediately into my Pocket, as ſoon as I had ſearch'd Mr. Aſhton further, and then commanded theſe Gentlemen all into my Boat, and took all the People that belonged to the Smack with me, after I had brought her to an Anchor, and left two of my Men on Board of her, and there ſhe rid till next Day, when I ſent two more of my Men to bring her up; and thoſe two Men I order'd to ſearch all the Parts of the Veſſel, and take what they could find; and whatſoever they found, they ſhould carry it to the Tower, to my Lord Lucas; which, I ſuppoſed, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, Capt. Billop, after ſuch time as you had taken theſe Papers, and brought theſe Gentlemen into your Boat, pray what Diſcourſe had you with them? What ſaid they to you concerning the Papers?

Capt. Billop. It was a pretty while before we talked of any thing: The Beginning of our Talk was, I remember, they deſired to go Aſhore at Graveſend to refreſh themſelves, for it was cold, and they had not eaten any thing. It was my

Lord

Lord that desired it; but I begg'd his Pardon for that, and told him there was a Man of War that lay at Long-Reach, where, as I believed, his Lordship would be very well accommodated with any thing he wanted.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, what said they afterwards.

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston, after I had saluted him, upon knowing who he was, and Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot telling him I was of their Acquaintance, he said he was glad he was fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman, and they said they were glad they were fallen into the Hands of an Acquaintance. I told my Lord, I hoped he should never find any thing otherwise than civil from me. My Lord was very civil to me in complementing, and assuring me he would acknowledge my Favour and Kindness to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Ay, what did he say to you?

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston told me, if ever it lay in his Power to do me Service he would, and he did not doubt but he might; and he used a great many Words and Expressions of Kindness, and his Readiness to do me Service; and amongst the rest, my Lord said once to me, if I would dispose of the Packet.——

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray speak that again.

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston, in one of his Discourses of his Kindness in doing me Service, had this Expression, as near as I can remember, if I would dispose of the Packet?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What he would do for you, if you would dispose of the Packet?

Capt. Billop. He did not come to any particular Instance of what he would do; but he said he would serve me in any thing that lay in his Power. Mr. Elliot and Mr. Ashton discoursed me several times about it: They courted me, and desired me to throw the Packet over Board; but I told them I would not do any thing of that kind: And Mr. Elliot, said, that I might take the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and say that was the Packet, and throw the other over Board. I told him, he took the King's Council to be odd People, and very indiscreet, that could not find out such a Thing as that. After this was over, we had a little Interval, and there was a Hamper in the Boat's Stern, and there was some Bottles of Wine taken out, and we drank several times; and by and by we had some Discourse a little further about the same thing, and they pressed me to throw the Packet away; and one time particularly Mr. Ashton, I remember, said it would be a generous Thing. Billop, if you would go along with us, I think you may do as well there as here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Whither would he have had you gone with them?

Capt. Billop. He did not name any Place, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Promises did they any of them make you?

Capt. Billop. Mun Elliot whisper'd me several times, Dear Billop throw the Packet over-Board; what Good would it do you to injure so many honest Gentlemen? And Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot said, I had it now in my Power to make my self as great and as rich as I would be.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did any of them say about the Tide turning?

Capt. Billot. Mun Elliot also said, it was impossible the Current, or the Tide could run long this Way, or always this Way.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. When you had refused this that they desired of you, notwithstanding their Promises, pray tell us how they turned their Discourse into Threatnings.

Capt. Billop. Elliot told me, when nothing would prevail, that every Dog had his Day; but I answered, I hoped never to see it your Day: But, however, said I, pray desist from any such Language, for I can't bear it. After that they never ask'd me any thing about it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Now tell us what you did with these Gentlemen, and these Papers, afterwards.

Capt. Billop. I brought these Gentlemen up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, and delivered the Packet with the Lead fix'd to it, and stood by my Lord Nottingham in the Room till he had opened the Papers, except while my Lord Preston was examined; and when he opened the Papers I stood by, that I might see him make them up again; and I think I took some of them in my Hand, and he said I might read them; but I was uneasy, and not disposed at that time to read many of them; so I did not read them all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. They were all by when Ashton said you would do generously to go along with them, were they not?

Capt. Billop. Yes, they were all in the Boat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did not one of them say to you, I know if Captain Billop do serve us, he will do it generously?

Capt. Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was it?

Capt. Billop. It was Ashton.

L. Preston. I desire I may ask Captain Billop a Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, put your Question to the Court, and they will ask it him.

L. Preston. I desire to know, my Lord, where it was I said this to Captain Billop, that he would dispose of the Packet.

Capt. Billop. Just after I had first saluted your Lordship, you said you were glad you were fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman.

L. Preston. Was it aboard the Boat that I desired you to dispose of the Packet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, and before we came on board the George Frigate, when we drank about, upon the opening of the Hamper; it was in the Boat I am very sure, and before we came on Board the George.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston said to you, you say, he would do you all the Kindness that lay in his Power, if you would dispose of the Packet; how would he have you dispose of it? What did he mean by it?

Capt. Billop. I don't remember he used any other Word but that, dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But Ashton and Elliot did desire of you a great many times to throw it over Board?

L. Preston. I desire he may be asked this Question. You said you carried these to my Lord Nottingham: Did you see them opened?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I did see them opened, and I saw my Lord as he opened them, lay them one by one, and read them over, and put them up again. And I looked upon several of them, while my Lord Nottingham was reading others; and and I ſtood by the Fire, and I ſee my Lord make them up, and he tied them with a Piece of Twine, and he clapp'd his Seal upon them, and delivered them to me; and I went immediately and delivered them to my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſton. Were you all the while by, while my Lord Nottingham was reading the Papers?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I was by when he opened them, and read them, and ſtaid till he put them up again; and as they came from his Hands, I preſently carried them to my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſton. Are you ſure, or can you ſwear that theſe are the ſame Papers which were taken on Board the Smack, that you carried from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord Danby?

Capt. Billop. So many of them as I looked into, I mark'd; and all that I mark'd I can ſwear to, and no more than them I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. I think you ſay all thoſe Papers that you delivered to my Lord Nottingham, you ſaw my Lord Nottingham ſeal up, and all them you carried to my Lord Preſident.

Capt. Billop. Yes, I did ſo; all that my Lord opened at that Time, were put together again, and his Seal put to them.

L. C. J. Holt. But my Lord asks you, whether you can ſwear to the particular Papers?

Capt. Billop. What I read I mark'd, and them I can ſwear to.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay you carried all thoſe Papers to my Lord Nottingham ſealed; after he had opened them, to my Lord Preſident.

Capt. Billop. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee my Lord Nottingham open them: I ſee him make them up again, and when they were made up, he put his Seal to them, and I carried them to my Lord Preſident.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire Captain Billop may be asked one Queſtion.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, what is it you would ask him?

Juryman. I deſire to know whether the Papers were ſealed when he took them and brought them to my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. No, they were all tied up together with a Tape, or a Twine, I think with both, very faſt together.

Juryman. There was no Seal on them when he took them.

Capt. Billop. No, but there were ſeveral Letters within the Packet that were ſealed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not the Outſide of the Packet ſealed?

Capt. Billop. I don't remember the Outſide was ſealed: There was a Cover, but as near as I remember, they were Folds of Paper faſt tied together.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You delivered them as you took them, to my Lord Nottingham?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I never took them out of my Pocket, after I had taken them from Mr. Aſhton, till I came to my Lord Nottingham's Office, where I delivered them to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Had you ever opened them, or ſeen them opened, before they came to the Hands of my Lord Nottingham?

Capt. Billop. No, indeed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſet up Johnſon. [Which was done.] Pray tell us what you know of this Matter.

Johnſon. I was in my Lord Dunblain's Barge, and I went down with this Captain Billop, and we were on Board ſeveral Veſſels; and we light upon a Ketch, where we preſſed ſome Men. We thought it had been only ſome Seamen that were to be preſſed; we did not know of any thing elſe. When we had rowed down as far as you have heard, we rowed up again, and ſearched ſeveral little Veſſels and Smacks that were in the River, when a Fiſherman that we had preſs'd ſaid, that that was the Veſſel the Captain enquired after: And then the Captain bid us take ſome ſmall Arms, and I took a Piſtol and went on Board. The Captain read the Protection, and then ſaid, he muſt look further. When the Captain look'd into one of the Cabins, and took up the Hatches, I ſaw a great Piece of Roaſt-Beef, and my Lord Preſton by it, and a Mince-Pie, and a Fowl, and we took the Beef out; but my Lord's Man ſaid, he miſſed his Knife, it lay upon the Bench: And then came my Lord up, and his Man, and Mr. Elliot; and when Mr. Aſhton (the Man with the Pock-holes) came up, he went down again, and pretended to look for his Hat; but when he was down I ſee him cram ſomething into his Boſom, and I told the Captain, I had ſeen him put ſomething into his Boſom; and the Captain took him hold by the Buttons of his Coat, and turned him about, and asked him what he put into his Boſom? He ſaid, Nothing but his Handkerchief; and pulling it out of his Boſom, he ſhewed it to the Captain; but the Captain put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and pulled out the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You ſay, you ſee him put ſomething in his Boſom when he went down. Did you obſerve whence he took it?

Johnſon. It was upon the Gravel, and there were a Couple of Seals, which he afterwards took up lying by; and I believe he took up the Packet and forgot the Seals.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let us ſee the Seals.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Your Lordſhip obſerves, the Packet was not at firſt in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom.

L. C. J. Holt. No, it was not.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But he took it up from the Place where the Seals lay, and put it into his Boſom. Pray in what Place did this Packet and theſe Seals lie?

Johnſon. Upon the Ballaſt, for they had ſhov'd away the Board.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was my Lord Preſton upon the Ballaſt?

Johnſon. Yes, my Lord lay almoſt upon his Back; he was the firſt that we ſaw, and he came out firſt. They were all four lying together there.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who lay next my Lord Preſton?

Johnſon. My Lord's Footman; Mr. Aſhton lay next, and Mr. Elliot lay next.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where were the Seals then?

Johnſon. My Lord was the firſt that I ſee come up.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But I ask you where the Seals were?

Johnſon. The Seals were down upon the Ballaſt; whether they were my Lord's or no, I cannot tell, or whoſe they were.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now that we will ask Captain Billop. Are theſe the Seals?

Capt. Billop. Yes, theſe are the Seals this Man gave me.

Johnſon. I took them from off the Ballaſt.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did my Lord own theſe to be his Seals?

Capt. Billop. I did not aſk him, that I know of.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Well, Johnſon, go on, tell what you know further.

Johnſon. After we came to Long-Reach, a Gentleman that had a long Perriwig, a black Gentleman, Mr. Elliot, I think they call him, had a pair of Whiſkers on when he was taken, and he took a Pair of Sciſſars and cut them both off; and he ſaid, if ever he lived, he ſhould remember me, having a Tooth out, becauſe I was ſo ſharp upon him to make him come out: And when we came on board the George Frigate, in Long-Reach, my Lord's Man came to me, and ſaid, he would give me ſomething to drink, if I would deliver him the Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you any Diſcourſe with my Lord Preſton himſelf about them?

Johnſon. No, it was his Footman that came to me, and ſaid there was no body there but myſelf and him: I had them, and he would give me ſomething to drink, if I would deliver them; but I delivered them to Captain Billop.

L. Preſton. My Lord, may I aſk a Queſtion or two of this Witneſs?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, my Lord, if they have done with him. What ſay you, Brother Thompſon?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We ſhall have done with him preſently, my Lord. Pray had you any Money given you?

Johnſon. No, but my Lord gave the Ship's Company ten Shillings to drink, and one Piece was a Braſs Half-Crown.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did they ſay as they went along, as you remember?

Johnſon. They had a great deal of Diſcourſe while we rowed. I was at the next Oar to them, but I cannot tell what 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Who did diſcourſe?

Johnſon. Aſhton, Elliot, and the Captain.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Cannot you remember what they ſaid, any of them?

Johnſon. They did talk together ſeveral times; Elliot ſaid he was a cold, and came and rowed at the Oar a while; and Elliot ſwore an Oath; ſays he, they row all as if they were rowing to Priſon; but truly I did not much mind their Diſcourſe, I minded my rowing. There were ſome Victuals handed to us, which we did eat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Elliot ſeem to be angry? What did he ſay?

Johnſon. Elliot wiſhed that a Thunderbolt might drop into the Boat ſeveral times, and ſink it; and when we went through Bridge againſt Tide, he wiſhed that London-Bridge might have fallen upon our Heads.

L. Preſton. Now I would aſk him, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, Did you ſee Aſhton take up the Packet?

Johnſon. Yes, I did, as it lay by the Seals.

L. Preſton. I perceive there ſeems to be ſome Streſs laid upon my lying next to Mr. Aſhton, and Seals lying by the Packet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, there has been no Inference made from that yet by the King's Council.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is in vain to deny we were all together there.

Johnſon. You were the firſt that I ſee, my Lord.

L. Preſton. We were all together; but there is no ſuch Thing to be gathered from thence as they would inſinuate; but I ſuppoſe 'twould be deduced from hence, as if this Packet, becauſe it lay near theſe Seals, ſhould be my Packet.

L. C. J. We have not yet heard, my Lord, what Uſe they will make of it.

L. Preſton. But I deſire to take Notice of it, my Lord, and I think it is a very hard Preſumption, becauſe we were in one Place, and the Seals at a little Diſtance from the Packet, therefore the Packet muſt be preſumed to be mine; I hope it ſhall not be preſumed againſt me.

L. C. J. Holt. Since your Lordſhip mentions it, I will take Notice a little of it too. It is only a circumſtantial Evidence that is made uſe of againſt you; how far it will weigh, is to be left to the Jury, when all the Evidence is heard. The Packet is found in the Place where your Lordſhip lay, and by it Seals that belong to you; one is the Seal of your Office, as Secretary of State, the other is your own proper Coat of Arms.

Juryman. With Submiſſion, my Lord, I deſire this Witneſs may be aſked this Queſtion, Whether he ſaw Captain Billop take the Packet out of Aſhton's Boſom?

Johnſon. Yes, I did.

Juryman. And whether he ſaw Billop deliver the ſame Packet to my Lord Nottingham?

Johnſon. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. You Gentlemen of the Jury, conſider this; he was not then by. Captain Billop tells you, that very Packet which he took out of Aſhton's Boſom he carried to my Lord Nottingham; and he tells you, my Lord opened it in his Preſence, and he is ſure he put all the Papers together again, and ſet his own Seal upon them, and then he took them from my Lord Nottingham, and carried them to my Lord Preſident.

Johnſon. As ſoon as I came to Whitehall, I was ſet Centinel over thoſe three Men that came out of the Smack, and was not admitted into the Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we muſt deſire, my Lord Nottingham may be ſworn.

[The Earl of Nottingham ſworn.]

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where are the Papers?

Earl of Nottingham. Mr. Bridgman, I think you have the Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, does your Lordſhip remember Captain Billop brought a Bundle of Papers to you, and what became of them? Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to give the Court and the Jury an Account of it?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all that I have to ſay in this Matter is, Captain Billop brought to me a Bundle of Papers tied about with a Packthread, to which was fixed a Piece of Lead, I believe the ſame Piece that was now produced; at leaſt it was one very like it: He brought alſo a Signet, which I preſume I can know again when I ſee it.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray ſhew my Lord the Seals. [Which was done.]

Earl of Nottingham. This is the Signet I preſume which he brought to me; I am ſure he brought juſt ſuch a one, if not the ſame. Thoſe Papers, when he delivered them to me, I opened in his Preſence, and when I had ſo done, I read them, and put them up together again, and ſealed them with my own Seal, and delivered them to him him back again. What the Papers are, and what he did with them, I ſuppoſe he will give you an Account.

L. C. J. Holt. But your Lordſhip ſays, the Bundle of Papers he delivered to you, you ſealed up, and delivered to him again.

Earl of Nottingham. All thoſe Papers that he brought to me I did ſeal up, and deliver back to him again.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, were they ever out of Captain Billop's Sight while your Lordſhip had them?

Earl of Nottingham. Not after they were opened. There was a little Paper that was tied to the Bundle, which fell looſe upon the taking away the Lead, and I opened that while he was by, and the Bundle lay upon the Table while I examined my Lord Preſton; and after my Lord Preſton was gone out, I called in Captain Billop (who went out while I examined my Lord) and I opened that great Packet in his Sight, and read the Papers, and he read ſome of them; and all the Papers in the great Packet, and the little Paper that was ſtuck in, I delivered, ſealed up, to Captain Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, were the Letters in the Packet ſealed?

Earl of Nottingham. Yes, there were ſome of them ſealed; and all that I received from him I delivered to him, and no more.

L. C. J. Holt. The Gentlemen of the Jury hear what my Lord ſays.

Earl of Nottingham. The very ſame, all, and no more, I ſay.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Captain Billop, when you had them back from my Lord of Nottingham, pray to whom did you deliver them?

Capt. Billop. To my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we muſt deſire my Lord Preſident would be pleaſed to be ſworn.

[The Marqueſs of Carmarthen, Lord Preſident of the Council, was ſworn.]

Mr. Soll. Gen. We muſt deſire the Favour of your Lordſhip to acquaint the Court when Captain Billop came to your Lordſhip, what he ſaid, and what he brought with him.

L. Preſident. Captain Billop did bring me a Bundle of Papers, and he told me he brought them from my Lord of Nottingham, and they were ſeal'd, wrapp'd up with a Packthread, and ſeal'd with a Seal, which I knew to be my Lord's Seal. He delivered them to me myſelf; and theſe Papers I kept till I ſhew'd them the King the next Morning. And after I had ſhewed them the King, the King delivered them up back to me, having read ſome of them, and commanded they ſhould be delivered to the Cabinet-Council. A Cabinet-Council was called, and accordingly there I did deliver them, Paper by Paper, and they were all marked by my Lord Sidney, and ſome I think by my Lord Marlborough; and ſo I delivered them all together to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then we deſire my Lord Sidney would pleaſe to be ſworn.

[The Lord Sidney ſworn.]

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what Papers were delivered to you, and by whom, and where thoſe Papers are?

L. Sidney. The Papers that were delivered by my Lord Preſident, I have kept them, my Lord, ever ſince. As ſoon as I had them, I read them, and mark'd them with a Letter of my own Name, the Letter H. I have kept them ever ſince; only one Morning I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to be copied out as ſoon as he could, and he delivered them me back again, and they have not been out of my Cuſtody ſince; only the Night before laſt Night they were ſent to Mr. Sollicitor to read, and brought immediately to me again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. To whom did your Lordſhip deliver them to be copied?

L. Sidney. To Mr. Bridgman, I tell you.

Mr. Soll. Gen. So that they were never out of your Lordſhip's Hands till now, but only in Mr. Bridgman's Hands?

L. Sidney. No, I kept them in my Pocket ever ſince, only the Night before laſt, when they were ſent to you.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did your Lordſhip mark them before they were delivered to Mr. Bridgman to copy?

L. Sidney. Yes, I marked them when I received them.

L. Preſton. My Lord Chief Juſtice; your Lordſhip does obſerve that Captain Billop ſwears that they were never out of his Poſſeſſion till he delivered them to my Lord Nottingham; my Lord Nottingham ſays he never opened them, but left the Packet upon the Table while I was examining.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, will you ſpeak a litttle louder, that I may hear you?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am ſaying, my Lord Nottingham ſays, that while he was examining me, the Packet lay upon the Table unopened, and were never out of his Eye till he ſent them ſealed by Captain Billop, and ſo they come to my Lord Preſident, and they were kept by my Lord Preſident; my Lord Preſident ſays, my Lord Churchill ſaw the Papers, and they were in his Poſſeſſion.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, your Lordſhip does miſtake my Lord Preſident: He does not ſay that they were in my Lord Marlborough's Hands; but he did communicate them at the Cabinet-Council, where my Lord Marlborough was. He ſaid, indeed, they were in the King's Hands, but he was by all the while.

L. Preſton. From that Time they came out of my Lord Preſident's Hands, I know not what may be put in, nor what taken out. Theſe Papers were not ſealed, as I hear of, afterwards; and paſſing through ſo many Hands, no body knows what may be done to them. Truly, I think it very hard to ſwear, after all this, that theſe are the Papers that were on Board the Smack.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you pleaſe to ask any Queſtions to ſatisfy your ſelf of any of theſe noble Lords?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I'll put your Lordſhip right.

L. Preſton. With all my Heart, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip hears what Captain Billop ſays. He ſays, he brought them as he took them out of Aſhton's Boſom, to my Lord Nottingham: My Lord Nottingham opened them before him, and did deliver them to him again, having made them up: My Lord Nottingham ſays, the ſame Papers Captain Billop delivered him, he delivered back again, all, and no more; and Billop ſays, he carried them to my Lord Preſident; my Lord Preſident ſhewed them to the King, and afterwards carried them to the Cabinet-Council; there the ſame Papers were opened, and there they were marked, ſome by my Lord Marlborough, and all by my Lord Sidney.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve this: My Lord Nottingham was pleaſed to ſay, he opened no Papers till I was called in and examined, and then Captain Billop withdrew. Now, my Lord, I don't know whether the Captain can ſay that theſe were the very ſame Papers that he took in the Smack?

L. C. J. Holt. Captain Billop ſays, that he ſaw the Papers opened by my Lord Nottingham.

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preſton obſerves a Thing that is very right, my Lord, that after I had delivered the Packet to my Lord Nottingham, while my Lord was examined, I withdrew; but my Lord Nottingham has given your Lordſhip an Account, that he had not opened the Packet then, but only the ſmall Letter or Note that lay apart from the reſt: But, my Lord, the Packet was in the ſame Condition when I came in again, upon the Table, as when I left it: My Lord Nottingham, as I believe, had not opened that Packet; for I found it juſt as I left it, upon the Table.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Nottingham ſays, he delivered back to Captain Billop all the Papers that he received from him: They were never out of my Lord Nottingham's Preſence; nor were they opened, as my Lord ſays, but in Billop's Preſence, nor opened till after my Lord's Examination, except the little Paper that was ſtuck in, and was looſe upon taking away the Lead.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Bridgman.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray when you receiv'd the Bundle of Papers from my Lord Sidney, to whom were they carried, and to whom were they delivered?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord Sidney gave me theſe Papers to have them copied, and I copied ſome of them with my own Hand, the others I delivered to Mr. Poultney, and were copied in my Preſence in the Office: They were never out of my Sight; and as ſoon as ever they were copied, I carried them back to my Lord Sidney, and delivered them to him my ſelf.

L. Preſton. Were any of them taken from you, Sir?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I ſay I copied ſome of them my ſelf, the others were copied in my Sight and Preſence, in the Office.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Queſtion; Were the ſame Papers that were delivered to you by my Lord Sidney, re-delivered back again and unaltered?

Mr. Bridgman. I am very ſure I gave them all, the ſame back again, becauſe I read them every one before they were copied.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did you obſerve my Lord Sidney had mark'd them before you had them?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were all marked before I had them.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire to ask Mr. Bridgman this Queſtion: Pray, Sir, were they ſealed up when you ſent them to my Lord Sidney?

Mr. Bridgman. No, they were not ſealed, they were tied up; but about the Seals I remember when I was in my Lord Sidney's Office——

L. C. J. Holt. The Queſtion is ask'd you, whether you carried them back ſealed or no?

Mr. Bridgman. No, they were not ſealed when they were delivered to me; but I can ſafely ſwear they were never out of my Cuſtody till I delivered them back again; for what I did not copy my ſelf, were copied in my Sight.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. But your Lordſhip is pleaſed to obſerve they were all mark'd by my Lord Sidney before they were delivered unto him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done with our living Witneſſes for the preſent, and will read the Papers.

Mr. Bridgman. One thing, my Lord, I do remember; as ſoon as my Lord Sidney received the Papers back again, he looked over every one of them, and read them, and looked upon the Marks.

L. Preſton. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I would beg the Favour to ask one Queſtion of my Lord Sidney: Pray, my Lord, did your Lordſhip number the Papers?

L. Sidney. No, my Lord, I did not number them.

L. Preſton. But your Lordſhip ſays upon your Oath and Honour, that thoſe are the very Marks upon them that your Lordſhip ſet there?

Mr. Soll. Gen. We are indeed to produce them, and then we ſhall ask that particular Queſtion.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Sidney will ſee them, and then he will anſwer your Lordſhip's Queſtion.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preſton, my Lord Nottingham is here a Witneſs, and his Occaſions call him away, have you a Mind to ask him any more Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What ſay you, Gentlemen, have you any farther Occaſion for my Lord Nottingham?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we muſt beg his Lordſhip's Patience, we do not know what Occaſion there may be: I deſire this Paper may be ſhewn to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.]

L. Sidney. That is my Mark; that Paper I know is one of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here are two of them; one of theſe is the Copy of the other: Both were taken in the ſame Packet; the one is fairer written than the other.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Gentlemen, the Paper we are now offering to you is that which I mentioned before; it is the Reſult of a Conference: There were two of them taken in this Bundle; the one of them ſeems to be the firſt Draught, the other is a Copy more fairly written; but I think they are both in Effect the ſame: However, they were both taken in the ſame Packet, and you ſhall hear them read.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire that before it be read it may be ſhewn to Captain Billop, to know whether it be the very Paper that he took.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, let Captain Billop look upon it.

Capt. Billop. My Lord, I do not remember that Paper.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip obſerves that Captain Billop cannot ſwear that this was one of the Papers that he took.

Capt. Billop. All the Papers that I looked into I marked, and all the Papers that I mark'd I can ſwear to, and no others.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you look into all the Papers.

Capt.

Capt. Billop. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. But he swears all that he brought to my Lord Nottingham were sealed up by my Lord Nottingham, and carried by him from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord President; and my Lord President swears he delivered them all to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney swears this is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. Certainly, my Lord's swearing to a Paper in this manner cannot be a good Proof. My Circumstances, my Lord, are very hard, and your Lordship, I have heard, ought to be of Council for me in any Point of Law; and, my Lord, I humbly desire to know, whether this can be a Proof of a Paper, that he says was taken in a Packet, and yet he can't swear it?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, he does not swear that this was one of the Papers; but the Question is, Whether all these Witnesses together do not prove it? You see how the Evidence runs: All the Papers taken were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; all that were delivered to him were sent back by him sealed, and delivered to my Lord President; my Lord President brought them all to the Cabinet-Council, and delivered them to my Lord Sidney, and this my Lord Sidney says is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. My Lord, I have a very great Honour for that noble Lord, and I am sure, if he had not been upon his Oath, he would have said that which was Truth; but in this Condition that I am in, I must crave Leave to observe every thing that I can for my self; and I cannot but say these Papers are very oddly managed, and delivered up and down from one Hand to another; I desire your Lordship would please to observe, that these Papers are here brought after a very odd manner.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord Preston, you are not to sum up the Evidence to the Jury till we have done, nor to make your Observations.

L. C. J. Holt. Brother, my Lord opposes the reading of the Paper, as not well proved.

L. Preston. I do so, my Lord, and I hope your Lordship will advise me whether you do think it a sufficient Evidence and Proof of these Papers. They are Papers that have been copied out, and sent unsealed from Hand to Hand by some Messengers from one to another, and which now appear to be unsealed, and some of which he that took them cannot swear to.

Juryman. My Lord, we cannot hear one Word that is said.

L. Preston. That is my Misfortune; but I am urging to my Lords the Judges, whether this Paper ought to be read; and I desire your Lordship to advise me, whether it can be admitted as Evidence, being thus oddly proved.

L. C. J. Holt. It is Evidence surely, my Lord; but the Question is, what Credit the Jury will give to this Evidence; the Jury are Judges of that: But certainly it is Evidence to have the Paper read.

L. Preston. I doubt not but your Lordship will do me Justice, and I readily acquiesce in what your Lordships do appoint.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, see how the Evidence stands about this Matter. First, it is sworn by Billop, that he took a Bundle of Papers, though 'tis true, the Particulars he does not undertake to swear to. Well, what is next? Why, says he, all that was in that Bundle I carried to my Lord Nottingham, and I received from my Lord Nottingham all that I carried to him. What says my Lord Nottingham? He swears I delivered back again to Captain Billop the same Papers he delivered to me, and all, and no more, sealed up with my Seal. When he has it sealed up, what does he do with it? why, he carries it to my Lord President. Is there any Possibility of creeping out of this Evidence? Well, he delivers them to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney says this is one of those Papers. Can there be a plainer Evidence than this? when he says, all he had he carried to my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Nottingham swears, all he did receive he sent back, sealed by him, to my Lord President; and my Lord President swears, all he received, so sealed, he gave to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney swears this is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. But your Lordship will please to observe they were carried to the King, and they were in the Hands of my Lord Marlborough.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not out of the Sight of my Lord President. My Lord President says my Lord Marlborough marked some of them, but they were delivered to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney does say they are the same Papers that he had from my Lord President; and my Lord President says, they are the same that were brought him by Captain Billop from my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Nottingham swears he sealed them, the same Papers, all, and no more than he received from Captain Billop.

L. C. Baron. Your Lordship should observe where the Defect of the Proof is, and then it may be supplied; for truly, put it all together, I cannot see how there could be a plainer Proof given.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to be heard as to this: My Lord President was pleased to say, that some of them were delivered to the King.

L. C. J. Holt. No, they were shewn to the King, but my Lord President was by all the while that the King did read them.

L. Preston. My Lord, where a Man's Life lies at Stake, and all that is dear to him, your Lordship will certainly allow him to make what Observations he can for himself.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, in God's Name, by all Means: You shall have all the Liberty you can desire.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we desire my Lord President will be pleased to look upon those Papers. [Which was done.]

L. President. This is one of the Papers that I received from Captain Billop, and which I shewed to the King, and which I brought to the Cabinet-Council; and this is another of the Papers.

L. Preston. Pray, my Lord, was your Lordship by when his Majesty read those Letters?

L. President. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Preston. My Lord, I ask it for this End, to know whether they were out of your Lordship's Sight.

L. President. No, never; I was in the King's Cabinet; his Majesty read some of them, and then put them up again, and gave them me, and I delivered them at the Cabinet-Council to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we desire this Paper may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

The Result of a Conference between ſome Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs, in which it was undertaken to prove the Poſſibility and Method of reſtoring by a Fr. Power, without endangering the Proteſtant Religion, and Civil Adminiſtration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

" 1. F. Muſt either oblige or conquer us: If " the laſt, he will find few Helps here; " but a bloodier Reſiſtance than ever the Romans, " Saxons, or Normands found: It being incredible " how unanimous and obſtinate that very Thought " renders the People; ſo that it may make us a " Heap of Ruin, but no Nation that can ever help " or import any thing to F.

" 2. If K. L. deſires to oblige us, and make the " Work eaſy, that he may be at Leiſure to ply the " Empire or Italy, or to have an advantageous " Peace, he muſt take off the frightful Character " we have of him, and ſhew us he has no ſuch " Deſign as returning our offended K. a Conque- " ror upon us, but that he can, and will be our " Friend and Mediator; upon which Terms he " will find that many Lords and Gentlemen will " ſpeedily ſhew themſelves to his Satisfaction; " eſpecially if he makes Haſte, and loſes no ap- " proaching Opportunity.

" 3. If he incline to this ſort of Senſe, he muſt " over-rule the Bigotry of St. G. and diſpoſe their " Minds to think of thoſe Methods that are more " likely to gain the Nation; for there is one ſilly " Thing or other daily done there, that comes to " our Notice here, which prolongs what they ſo " paſſionately deſire. The Methods thought upon " are theſe:

" Firſt, To prevent dangerous and fooliſh In- " telligence, by forbidden all in that Court to " write any News hither, and that K. J. only " have his Correſpondence by whom to hear from, " and ſpeak to People here; ſince Letters ſo often " miſcarry, and are filled with nothing but what " we ſhould not hear; and what we have are Ar- " guments for the moſt Part againſt the K's Re- " ſtoration.

" Secondly, Since there is a great Body of Pro- " teſtants that never defected, and that many " Thouſands are returning, and that they are the " natural Weight and Power of theſe Kingdoms, " by having the Heads, Hands and Wealth of their " Side, to the Odds and Advantage of at leaſt " two hundred Proteſtants to one Catholick; " the K. may think of nothing ſhort of a Prote- " ſtant Adminiſtration, nor of nothing more for " the Catholicks than a legal Liberty of Conſci- " ence; for much e mutt is againſt all other No- " tions, to which all private Paſſions, and artifi- " cial Frames in Government, muſt yield or break. " He may reign a Catholick in Devotion, but " he muſt reign a Proteſtant in Government. " Cromwel could not, yet on a broader Bottom, " with a victorious Army, ſubſiſt or keep what " he had got.

" Thirdly, He muſt give us a Model of this at " St. G. by preferring the Proteſtants that are " with him above the Catholicks; one being Loy- " al upon leſs Ties of Intereſt; and to tell the " Nation here what they are to hope for when he " comes.

" Fourthly, He muſt give Encouragement to " Lords and Gentlemen here to come to him, at " leaſt Seven or Nine for a ſtanding Council, " which will make us here think he is in ſome " Degree ours again, and that we have a Relation " to him, and ſome Intereſt and Share in him, by " the Men of Quality of our own Religion that " are with him. This will incomparably facili- " tate the Matter here, nor will they, when they " come, come empty, and in their own Names, " which is ſtill better, and will be more ſatisfacto- " ry there.

" Fifthly, To induce this, Engliſh Proteſtants " ſhould be encourag'd by an Edict of Liberty " from the K. of F. to have Chapels at their own " Coſts, in which to worſhip God after their re- " ſpective Ways; by which that K. will make us " reflect upon his Conduct towards his Hugonots, " rather to flow from the Hazard he thought " himſelf in by their Antimon. and reſiſting Prin- " ciples, than a Deſire of Perſecution.

" Laſtly, All other requiſite Meaſures depend- " ing upon the Acceptance this finds, an Anſwer " hereunto is impatiently deſired by thoſe that " have diſcourſed the King's Buſineſs to this Ma- " turity. So ended with an unanimous Conſent, " both Tories and Whigs upon this Occaſion, that " are in a Way of cloſing in his Intereſt.

L. Preſton. I can very ſafely ſwear, my Lord, that I never ſaw that Paper in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Come go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This is another Paper of the ſame, but the Words that are written ſhort in that, are written at Length in this.

[The Paper was read accordingly, and in the firſt Blank there was written K. J. in the firſt Paragraph (France) twice, in the third Paragraph (St. Germains) in the fifth (Mathemat. for Much e mutt) the reſt are obvious, and need not be ſupplied.]

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray ſhew my Lord Sidney that Paper. What ſays your Lordſhip to it?

L. Sidney. This is one of the Papers that I marked, and that I received from my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray will my Lord Preſident be pleaſed to give himſelf the Trouble to caſt his Eye upon that, and ſee if that be one of the Papers.

L. Preſident. My Lord, I remember it well, it is one of the Papers I received from Capt. Billop.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This Paper is what Mr. Sollicitor mention'd as Heads of a Declaration.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I think it neceſſary to offer one Thing to your Lordſhips before it be read. I deſire Captain Billop ſhould ſwear it to be one of his Papers.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, you obſerve what has been done already. My Lord Preſident ſays 'tis one of thoſe Papers that was ſent him by my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Sidney has ſworn it is one of the Papers he had from my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſton. I ſhall not give your Lordſhip any more trouble than needs; I only offer it to your Lordſhip: I wave it.

L. C. J. Holt. There is Evidence enough to have the Paper read.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

" That the King will return with a Deſign of " making an entire Conqueſt of his People, is ſo

" ſo ridiculous as well as difficult, that it needs " not be ſpoken to.

" That the King's Declaration be worded in " general Terms, That he will govern by the " Laws; that they ſhall be the Rule of his Acti- " ons; that he will endeavour to ſettle Liberty " of Conſcience by Law; that whatſoever things " were formerly done by him, which occaſioned " Jealouſies in the Minds of his People, ſhall be " left to the Determination of a Parliament, to " be formally and regularly called as ſoon as is " poſſible.

" That he has given ſufficient Evidence of his " Unwillingneſs to bring an Army of Strangers " into his Kingdom, by refuſing the Succours of " the King of France offered him, and which " were even ready to be embarked upon the firſt " Notice of the P. of Orange's intended Invaſion.

" That he brings with him ſuch an Army only " as is neceſſary for his own Defence, and for the " Security of ſuch of his loyal Subjects as ſhall " reſort to him; that he will diſmiſs them as ſoon " as he ſhall have rid the Nation of thoſe Foreign- " ers who have invaded it, and trampled upon the " Laws and Liberties of his People.

" The King's large exerciſing his Diſpenſing " Power gave the great Alarm to the People, " and contributed moſt of all toward the general " Defection. Yet when that Power came to be " debated in the laſt Convention, there appeared " ſo many Difficulties in the limiting of it (every " body, even the preſent Judges believing it ne- " ceſſary, that a diſpenſing Power ſhould be in " the K.) that it was let fall, and that Point re- " mains as it was. And without mentioning " that, or any other Particular, the K. can be in " no Danger by leaving all things which have " been the Occaſion of Jealouſies, to the Deter- " mination of Parliament, where, beſides the " King's profeſſed Friends and Servants, there will " not want others who will be glad of Opportu- " nity to ingratiate themſelves.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you deſire any thing to be read again, or any thing doubtful in it ſhould be explained, tell us, and it ſhall be done.

Juryman. No, my Lord, there is no Occaſion for that. I believe we apprehend theſe three Papers that have been read.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is neceſſary the Gentlemen of the Jury ſhould be ſatisfied in this Point.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay, in any Point; and if they deſire any Scruple ſhould be cleared, the Court will do it for them.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know whether Captain Billop ſigned that Paper or no.

L. C. J. Holt. No, he did not ſign half of them; but unleſs it be proved, you ought to take it for granted that it is not ſigned by him.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I think it fit the Jury ſhould be ſatisfied in any Scruple they raiſe.

L. C. J. Holt. They aſked this Queſtion, Whether Captain Billop did ſign the Paper? And I told them Captain Billop did not ſay ſo; and therefore they are to take it for granted, that he did not.

Juryman. My Lord, we take this laſt Paper that was read, to be a Paper that was delivered in the Bundle taken from Mr. Aſhton to my Lord Nottingham, but not ſigned by Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Then you take it right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then the next Paper that we produce is a Liſt of the Engliſh Fleet, that theſe Gentlemen were carrying over into France.

L. Preſton. That is printed, and to be found in every Coffee-houſe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew that Paper to Captain Billop. [Which was done.] Can you take it upon your Oath, Captain, that that Paper was in the Packet that was taken in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom?

Capt. Billop. That Paper I have marked, and that Paper I ſwear was in the Packet I took away from Mr. Aſhton on board the Smack.

L. C. J. Holt. You are ſure of it.

Capt. Billop. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

Memorandum, The new Ships building, are expected will be ready to be launched by the End of March.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew this Paper to Captain Billop. [Which was done.] Pray, Was that Paper there among the others that were taken with theſe Gentlemen?

Capt. Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that that Paper was in the Packet that was in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom?

Capt. Billop. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew him that Paper too. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And can you take upon you to ſay, that that was one of the Papers in the Packet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we deſire theſe may be read.

Clerk of the Peace reads. New-Year's Eve, and it is directed for Mr. Redding.

SIR,

" THOUGH the Bearer of this will do us " the Juſtice to aſſure you, we are as full of " Duty, as unfeignedly and unconcernedly yours, " as your ſelf could wiſh; yet this Gentleman " has undertaken.——You will forgive the Pre- " ſumption, if I do myſelf the Honour to give " you this freſh Aſſurance in a few Words, which " I hope we do by our Accounts. I ſhall omit no " Occaſions, not neglecting the leaſt, and making " zealous Wiſhes for the greateſt, to ſhew our " ſelves ſuch as we ought to be.

Sir,

" Sir, I ſpeak in the Plural, becauſe I write " my elder Brother's Sentiments as well as my " own, and the reſt of the Family, though leſ- " ſened in Number; yet if we are not mightily " out in our Accounts, we are growing in our " Intereſt, that is in yours. He that delivers " this, will, I hope, entirely to your Satisfaction, " repreſent us, and me in particular, as with all " the Devotion imaginable, and unchangeable " Affection.

Yours, God grant the happieſt New-Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Read the other Paper.

Clerk of the Peace. This is dated Decemb. 31. 1690. " I muſt not let this Bearer depart, Ma- " dam, without aſſuring you——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, don't read that yet. Here, ſhew this Paper to Captain Billop. [Which was done.] What ſay you, Captain Billop? Is that one of the Papers taken from Mr. Aſhton?

Capt. Billop. Yes, this is one that I read, and marked.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mrs. Redding.

" AS 'tis impoſſible for me to expreſs that " extraordinary great Satisfaction it gave " me this Time Twelve-month, when I had the " Honour to receive that Mark of your Favour " and Goodneſs under your own Hand; ſo I " have lived in ſome Pain for an Opportunity to " write you my humbleſt Acknowledgements and " trueſt Duty, from which, by the Grace of " God, I am no more capable of ſwerving, than " of renouncing my Hopes of Heaven: I ſay, " this in Behalf of my elder Brother, and the " reſt of my neareſt Relations, as well as for " my ſelf: You may entirely depend upon us, " not only for a conſtant Adherence to ſo well " choſen a Principle, but for our utmoſt Activity " to promote your Intereſt, which are inſepara- " ble from our own. I need come to no par- " ticulars by this Bearer, who can, and will tell, " our whole Heart; and I wiſh you could ſee " them, how ſincerely they are devoted to your " Service. God grant you a moſt happy New- " Year, and many, very many, and very happy. " Our young Maſter hath all our beſt Wiſhes; " he daily gains more Friends, and we get Ground " of his Adverſaries.

New-Years Eve.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now read your other Paper of the 31ſt of December. 1690.

Clerk of the Peace reads, December 31. 1690.

" I Muſt not let this Bearer depart, Madam, " without aſſuring you of my beſt Reſpects. " I have written by him to a Friend of yours, " but depend upon you to give my Note Credit. " Though my Creditors were no Friends to " the Match which has been ſo long in Treaty; " for your Relations have been very hard upon " me this laſt Summer; yet as ſoon as I could go " ſafely Abroad, I purſued the Buſineſs, and do " beg you to believe, that no Endeavours of mine " ſhall be wanting to perfect the Settlement. " You once put me in Hopes of ſeeing you be- " fore this Chriſtmas: Your Friends are ſorry for " the Diſappointment, pray loſe no more Time " than is of abſolute Neceſſity. The Bearer will " tell you all Things may be now eaſily ſettled, " if the right Way be taken. I long to hear " how your young Daughter does; ſhe will find " many Friends, and I hope her Portion will be " well ſecured. God ſend you a happy New- " Year, and that I may be merry with you before " it be far ſpent; and I beſeech you keep me in " the good Opinion of your Friend. I will al- " ways make good what I promiſed to you. [It is directed for Mrs. Charlton.]

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know who that is directed to.

Clerk of the Peace. 'Tis directed to Mrs. Charlton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew Captain Billop thoſe two Papers. [Which was done] What ſay you to them, Captain?

Capt. Billop. My Mark is on the Outſide, but there is nothing written in that, I believe it is taken off from the inner Paper.

L. Preſton. Pray my Lord is this any Proof? I beſeech you for God's Sake to have Regard to a Man's Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſhew the Paper to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.]

L. Sidney. This was one of the Papers I received from my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we muſt beg my Lord Preſident would be pleaſed to look on it. [Which was done.]

L. Preſident. This was one of the Papers brought me by Captain Billop from my Lord Nottingham, in that Bundle.

L. Preſton. Captain Billop does not know the Paper, though his Mark be to it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not indeed very material whether he does or no, becauſe he did not read all; but I would obſerve, that 'tis ſworn by Lord Sidney, that this was delivered to him by my Lord Preſident, and ſworn by my Lord Preſident, that he had it in that Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. Preſton. But, my Lord, it does ſhew that there may be ſome Alteration in the Papers; becauſe he having marked it, and marking none but what he read, he does not now own that to be the Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to take it as it is. Theſe are two Papers; the one is only the Cover, the other is the Writing: Captain Billop has only marked the Cover, and not the Writing; but my Lord Sidney he has marked the Paper itſelf, as delivered him by my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident has given you an Account, that it is one of the Papers he received in that Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. Preſton. I only mark, that there may be Alterations made in theſe Papers ſince they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads, December 31. 1690. It is directed to Mr. Jackſon.

" THE Bearer can give you ſo full an Account " of all things relating to your Eſtate here, " that I need not have troubled you at this Time, " but that I am deſirous to lay hold of any Op- " portunity I think ſafe to aſſure you of my Ser- " vice, and that I will never quit your Intereſt, " whatever the reſt of the Freeholders do. Your " Adverſary has been ſo hard to his Neighbours, " that he has extremely diſobliged all the old " Tenants, and a little Matter would redeem the " whole Eſtate, if you would appear in Weſtmin-

" ſter

" ſter Hall your ſelf; the beſt Council have a good " Opinion of your Title, and will zealouſly purſue your Inſtructions: I only beg you would " haſten them to us, and that you will appear your " ſelf as ſoon as is poſſible: No Time ſhould be loſt, " and the Cauſe may be brought to a final Hearing " before the End of Eaſter Term, if it be well " ſollicited. I heartily wiſh you a happy New " Year, and beg you to tell Mr. Charlton, that I " long to know wherein I may ſerve him; and " that I will follow his Directions to the utmoſt, " while I live. God keep you and yours.

L. Preſton. Pray, Sir, to whom is that Letter directed?

Clerk of the Peace. To Mr. Jackſon, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew that Paper to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.)

L. Sidney. This is one of the Papers I received from my Lord Preſident.

[Then it was ſhewn to my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſident. This is one of the ſame Papers that I received in the Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. December the 31ſt.

" THE Interruption of the former Correſpondency had a very ill Effect many ways; " but for that Reaſon, no Opportunity ought now " to be loſt, and I hope this will prove a happy " one.

" In Trade, as well as in Government, Schemes " muſt be laid; for there is no living from Hand " to Mouth any more in Commerce than in Poli- " ticks: Lay therefore your Deſigns probably, " and purſue them diligently, and with Vigour; " though it be a hazardous Time, yet by ventu- " ring boldly, where venturing is adviſeable, it " often returns great Profit.

" There is nothing more to be ſaid, but to give " the Bearer fit and full Seaſons to tell what he " knows, both as to Goods fit for our Market, and " when and where to be ſent. The Sea will quick- " ly grow ſo troubleſome, that unleſs you diſpatch " what you intend for us, you will looſe a great " Opportunity of Advantage. I hope the Ac- " count he has to give of our Negociations here " with the Merchants that deal with us, eſpeci- " ally thoſe that have lately brought us their Cu- " ſtom, will both encourage a larger Trade, and " excite the utmoſt Diligence. I will ſay nothing " of my ſelf, it ſhall be enough that I can live in " the good Opinion of one I bear ſo great a Re- " verence and Affection for; but for this honeſt " Factor I muſt own, I can hardly ſay enough. " Truth and Boldneſs are excellent Qualities in a " Servant, and he has ſhewn both, as Occaſion " has required him to ſhew them.

" I have but one Word to add, and pray take " it as the trueſt Mark of unalterable Reſpect: " Chooſe well, but have to do but with a few; " for a Multitude may give, but can never keep " Council.

" I ſhall, with more Impatience than becomes " me, wait the Reſult of this, and it will be a " great Mark of Goodneſs to let us have it the " beſt and ſafeſt Way.

" Once more; let not the Seaſon ſpend unprofi- " tably, for a more likely one can hardly come " than between this and the 1ſt of March. In- " terpret this, I pray, as no private Intereſt of my " own, or partial Motion of any other Perſon. " It is my Senſe, my Duty, and my Friendſhip, " which will not let me prevaricate, nor ſuffer " thoſe I love and honour to looſe ſo happy and " preſſing an Occaſion of Advantage. With the " beſt Wiſhes I cloſe up this, and am, &c.

L. Preſton. Pray, my Lord, who is that Paper directed to?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This is directed to no Body at all.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Shew that Paper to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.]

L. Sidney. This was one of the Papers I had from my Lord Preſident.

[Then it was ſhewn to my Lord Preſident.]

L. Preſident. This is one of the Papers I had from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is dated December 31, but is not directed to any Body at all.

" IT is a Preſumption incident to thoſe that " are any where upon the Spot, to think that " they know better than thoſe that are not, what " is fitteſt to be done in any Occurrence. This " makes me ſay, that now is the Time to make " large Advantages by Trading, the Sea being " freer than two Months paſt, or we can hope " it will be two Months hence. This Gentleman " is well inſtructed in our Markets, and what " the Goods are we want, and when and where " they ſhould be ſent. It is moſt earneſtly deſired " that this happy Opportunity may not be loſt, " eſpecially by the late Undertakers, and I would " not for much, they ſhould receive the leaſt Diſ- " guſt. They are ſomewhat poſitive in their " Terms; but they alſo ſay, they will be good and " conſtant Cuſtomers; and I have more than once " ſeen the Miſchief of over-rating and over-ſtaying " the Market. Opportunities are to be uſed, they " cannot be given by Men.

" The Bearer needs nothing from me to re- " commend him, but he is deſerving in our Opi- " nion here, and many will take their Meaſures by " the Uſage he finds there; and indeed the preſ- " ſing Poſture of our Trading Affairs will not " permit more Experiments. If the ſeveral Par- " cels arrive not, that have been promiſed, be- " fore the 10th of March at fartheſt (eſpecially " the Copper and Linnen, of which the Bearer " will be more particular) I am ſatisfied we ſhall " looſe this Summer's Profit. I am the more preſ- " ſing, becauſe I am well aſſured of what I " write; and if ever I judged right, it is upon " this Occaſion.

" I have ſaid nothing of another Gentleman " that takes this Opportunity to ſee thoſe Parts; " but he has ſhewn a Zeal and a Sincerity in this " Affair equal to moſt. Jo. is not yet gone, by a " Misfortune, but he will follow with a good " Poſtſcript in this Affair. Of my ſelf I will ſay " nothing; I hope I need not, for no body with- " out Vanity can be more ſincerely and affection- " ately a Friend and Servant to the Company " than my ſelf. I writ at large Yeſterday, and " cannot write what the Hand that gives this can " ſay; and therefore will write no more, but that " with the greateſt Reſpect, I am, &c.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew this Paper to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.]

L. Sidney. This is one of thoſe Papers I received from my Lord Preſident.

[Then it was ſhewn to the Lord Preſident.]

L. Preſident.

L. President. This was one of the Papers in the Bundle I received from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

SIR,

" I Vow to you, I do not repine at having loſt " all for your Sake, which I got by your Fa- " vour; but it grieves me extreamly that there is " not that left which can ſecure me from being " troubleſome to you; for that is the thing in the " World I would not be. I have told my Lord " my Condition. What I deſire of you he thinks " very moderate, I hope you will. Pray, Sir, be " not backward in ſettling my little Affair, for I " have deſerved your Care. Your Daughter and I " muſt ſtarve, if this Government can make us. I " hope our Intereſts are not divided, that is, you " have an equal Tenderneſs at leaſt for both. If " you think fit to ſpeak what I would have you to " this Bearer, he will give me a juſt Account of it. " You know he is obliged to be my Friend, and " I believe him grateful, ſince he ventures ſo " boldly for you. He brings with him ſome merry " Papers. Adieu, for I dare write no more; but " pray ſend a Meſſenger on purpoſe to me, that I " may know exactly what you will do, and would " have me do. If you ſend upon no other Buſineſs, " there will be no Danger. Pray, Sir, ask my Lord, " and he will tell you how I have been uſed, and " upon what Account. I believe you know it not.

December 29.

" Your Daughter is very well, very tall, and " very pretty, as I am told.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is not directed to any body neither.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray then ſhew theſe Papers to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Preſident. [Which was done.] They were two.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Theſe Papers my Lord Sidney ſwears he received from my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident ſwears he received them in the Bundle from Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We pray they may be read.

Clerk of the Peace. December 31. 90.

" WAS my Condition more deſperate and un- " eaſy than it is, I deſire no greater Satis- " faction than to have done my Duty to ſo good a " Maſter: I wiſh it was of more uſe to him; that " is not my Fault, nor of thoſe I have acted with. " Let it be look'd into what has been foretold both " as to Engl. Scot. and Irel. and ſee if moſt of it is " not come to paſs already, and the reſt will fol- " low, if not prevented. I wiſh it may alſo be " conſidered what Uſage we have met with " from Men employ'd, and how they have left " your Buſineſs and Friends; how they managed it, " you will know from all Hands: Things they " could not do, nor durſt not undertake, were bet- " ter undone than not done by them. Men in " this Place, and in theſe Times, muſt have ſome " Courage as well as Senſe to do any thing with " People here. It is not my own ill Uſage makes " me ſay this, but my Concern for one I wiſh the " beſt to in the World, and will give my Proofs of " this upon all Occaſions. I need not enlarge, ſince " all our Grievances are known to him that brings " this. For my own part, I will ſtay here, ſo long " as I can be ſafe, if with ne'er ſo great Trouble; " but it would be ſome Comfort to know Men " (when driven from hence) may be ſo; there- " fore the Reports of People's Uſage are terrible, " as well as of the Indiſcretions of St. Germ. Fa- " mily: We feel the Smart of it by ridiculous Let- " ters falling daily into the Hands of the Govern- " ment. Their Maſter and Miſtreſs are little oblig'd " by it no more than we: If there is any thing, " Sir, you do particularly command me, or depend " upon me for, let me know it. I cannot under- " take much, nor furniſh more. I have ſtill help'd " every body, and paid to every thing I could; " and if a Twelvemonth ago my Condition was " what I then repreſented, you beſt know if it has " been mended. Uſe, and conſidering that of others, " makes me grow more contented; and if the " Proſpect of Miſery to us all was any Satisfaction, " that is now plainly ſeen.

" Pray God bleſs us all, by reſtoring every Man " his own, and you with long Life.

" He that gives you this, hath furniſh'd for your " Uſe to me, &c. two hundred Pounds, which I " deſire may be repaid.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read t'other; it is in the ſame Hand, and was encloſed in the former.

Clerk of the Peace reads. " I only beg, Madam, " no ill malicious Report may take any Place in " your Thoughts, in regard to me. I value your " good Opinion, and will endeavour to deſerve it. " I can do little towards, but wiſh moſt heartily " for your Happineſs. I know no Intereſt, Ma- " dam, but my Maſter's and yours, nor do I think " they are to be made two: If you command me " any thing, I will faithfully obey you, as I have " ever done him.

" We all depend upon this Bearer's Accounts of " us, and our Condition. His Faith and Courage " hath been enough experienced.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here is another Paper, ſhew that to Captain Billop. [Which was done.]

Capt. Billop. This Paper I did mark, and this was one that was in the Bundle.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What is it Brother? pray open it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. 'Tis a Draught of a Cypher, with an Alphabet of Names, for carrying on the Correſpondence.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Your Lordſhip obſerves theſe Matters were deſigned to be carried on under ſeveral Sorts of Cants.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſays Captain Billop to that Paper?

Capt. Billop. That was one of the Papers that I read at my Lord Nottingham's, and mark'd it there.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Capt. Billop. Yes, they were I remember very well.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, they are in French, and therefore we muſt ſwear a Gentleman that we have here, to interpret: Call Mr. Humphry Levermere.

Mr. Levermere. Here I am.

SIR,

AT one Day's Sight be pleaſed to pay by this my Firſt Exchange, to the Order of Mr. Michael Orbinet, Three thouſand Three hundred Thirty-three Livres Tournois, Value of the ſaid Gent. And I am

Your moſt humble Servant,

To Mr. Anthony Pelletier, Merchant, at Paris.

J. Berionde.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray how much do they all come to?

Mr. Levermere. They come to 500 l. wanting but Twelve-pence.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we have ſhewn your Lordſhip part of the Papers that were taken in this Pacquet, but we have reſerved three of the Papers till the laſt Place; and theſe three Papers, if we had no other, were ſufficient to maintain this Indictment, for they are written all with my Lord Preſton's own Hand, wherein he gives an Account how the French ſhould Invade us, how the Forts may be taken, how London ſhould be plagued, and what a ſort of Raſcals the Clergy of London are; theſe are the Contents of the Papers, among other Things. Pray ſhew them to Captain Billop.

(Which was done.)

Captain Billop. Theſe were two Papers that were in the Pacquet, and the other little one with them.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I would deſire your Lordſhip to obſerve one Thing, to the beſt of my Remembrance, Captain Billop ſaid, he only mark'd ſix of the Papers.

L. C. J. Holt. How many has he ſworn to?

L. Preſton. I believe he has proved more.

Capt. Billop. I never ſaid ſo; I mark'd a great many, tho' not all, but I did not ſay how many.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were theſe Papers taken in the Pacquet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, all three.

L. Preſton. Juſt now he ſaid but two.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you look'd upon them all, Sir?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I marked but two of them, but the other little Paper was with them; I read them myſelf, I remember it very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then we pray the Clerk may read them.

And 200 l. for Shop Debts.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, we would open this Piece of Evidence before we read it, that it may be underſtood, and we ſhall prove it to be my Lord's Hand afterwards. It conſiſts of many Heads and Particulars, without Order or Method, and ſeems to be no more than Memorandums made by my Lord Preſton, to put him in Mind what he was to enlarge upon when he came thither.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Gentlemen, have you any more Evidence?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, We ſhall now prove theſe Papers to be my Lord Preſton's own Hand. Pray call Mr. Warr, Mr. Townſend, Sir Henry Johnſon, and Mr. Bland.

Mr. Townſend ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray ſhew Mr. Townſend that Paper. (Which was done) Pray, Sir, whoſe Hand-writing is that?

Mr. Townſend. I believe this to be my Lord Preſton's Hand: I did not ſee him write it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Are you well acquainted with my Lord Preſton's Hand?

Mr. Townſend. I have ſeen his Lordſhip's Hand ſometimes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. How often?

Mr. Townſend. Not very often, but I have ſeen it ſometimes.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray were you Clerk in any Office?

Mr. Townſend. Yes, I am in the Office of the Great Wardrobe, where I have had occaſion to ſee his Lordſhip's Hand ſometimes, and I believe this to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Look upon the t'other two.

Mr. Townſend. I do believe theſe three Papers are my Lord Preſton's Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Thoſe are the three Papers that have been read laſt, which he ſays are my Lord's Hand.

Mr. Townſend. I do believe it, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray look upon that Paper, with the little one within it; do you know whoſe Hand that is?

Mr. Townſend. I did not ſee it written, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you believe you know who writ it by the Hand?

Mr. Townſend. The latter Part looks like my Lord Preſton's Hand; but I cannot well ſay any thing to the other, it is written ſo ſmall.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſwear Mr. Bland.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Give him the Papers. We ask you, Mr. Bland, Whether you were well acquainted with my Lord Preſton's Hand?

Mr. Bland.

Mr. Bland. I have ſeen my Lord's Hand ſometimes.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Have you looked upon thoſe Papers, Sir?

Mr. Bland. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray whoſe Hand are they?

Mr. Bland. I do believe theſe three Papers are my Lord Preſton's Hand-writing?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we pray Mr. Warr may be ſworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Do you know my Lord Preſton's Hand?

Mr. Warr. I have ſeen my Lord Preſton write, but not very often; moſt commonly it was only his Name: But I have ſeen him write ſome Letters too.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Sir, look upon thoſe Papers; whoſe Hand are they do you believe?

Mr. Warr. This Paper ſeems to be like my Lord Preſton's Hand; the other I cannot ſay much of, becauſe that which I commonly ſaw him write was a large fair Hand, and this is a little Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Mr. Warr, look upon theſe Seals; whoſe Seals were they?

Mr. Warr. I believe the Seals to be my Lord Preſton's; one of them was his Seal when Secretary of State.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You were under him in that Office, were you not?

Mr. Warr. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now, my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and ſhall reſt here till we hear what my Lord Preſton ſays to it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, you have heard what has been ſaid concerning the Matter you have been indicted for: What has your Lordſhip to ſay for yourſelf?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If the Gentlemen of the Jury deſire to ſee the Seals, they may have them.

(The Seals were ſhewn to the Jury.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have done for the preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Then if your Lordſhip pleaſe, you may make your Defence.

L. Preſton. My Lord, In the firſt Place I muſt refer myſelf again to my Indictment, for I find, my Lord, that the Treaſons of which I am accuſed, were none of them done in the County of Middleſex, and they are laid to be done within this County; I find nothing of that kind proved upon me to be done here; for any Memorandums that they ſay may be in that Hand, I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, that there was nothing followed upon any of theſe Things, that may be found in thoſe Papers: And in the next Place, I deſire to know, whether they are ſufficiently proved to be mine; that is, whether Similitude of Hands is Proof or not againſt me in ſuch a Caſe? I humbly offer theſe Things to your Lordſhip, and hope your Lordſhip and the Jury will conſider of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this your Lordſhip's Defence, my Lord?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I leave theſe Things to the Conſideration of the Court and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip inſiſts upon it firſt, that there is no Act of Treaſon proved in the County of Middleſex; and then, whether Similitude of Hands be a good Proof to prove theſe three Papers, or any of them, to be your Hand?

L. Preſton. Nobody ſaying they ſee me write them, if I did write them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, have you no Witneſſes, nor nothing that you would uſe of Evidence for yourſelf?

L. C. J. Holt. Would your Lordſhip diſprove any Thing of the Matter that has been proved againſt you?

L. Preſton. I muſt deny the whole Fact; but I have no Witneſſes or Evidence to offer you.

L. C. J. Holt. Then your Lordſhip has no more to ſay?

L. Preſton. I have not, I muſt leave it ſo with your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ſhall offer nothing farther, but leave it wholly to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip has done then?

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip obſerves none of the Witneſſes have declared that I was going into France, nor knew any thing of it. I did not hire the Ship, nor any thing of that kind; tho' I ſuppoſe if they had, it is not Treaſon; but your Lordſhip obſerves there is no ſuch Thing has been ſworn.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the firſt Matter that your Lordſhip makes a Queſtion upon, Whether there be any Act of Treaſon proved in Middleſex, that does depend upon the Proof of your Lordſhip's being concerned in the Papers; for if your Lordſhip had an Intention in carrying theſe Papers into France, which ſpeaks a Deſign to invade this Realm, your Lordſhip took Boat in Middleſex at Surrey-Stairs, in Proſecution of that Intention, there is an Overt-act in this County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip, and the Gentlemen of the Jury obſerve, theſe Papers were not found upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord; but if it be proved that your Lordſhip had an Intention to carry theſe Papers into France, and took Boat in order to go with them into France, in the County of Middleſex, where-ever your Lordſhip acted in order to that Deſign, that is Treaſon, and there you are guilty. It is a Treaſon complicated of ſeveral Facts, done in ſeveral Places.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly deſire to know, whether they have been proved to be my Papers?

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Queſtion that muſt be left to the Jury upon the Evidence.

L. Preſton. Nobody ſwears they are mine, nor were they found upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. But what I am ſpeaking to your Lordſhip, is in Anſwer to your Queſtion about the Place; for you ſay, that there is nothing proved done in the County of Middleſex: Now the Queſtion is, Whether your Lordſhip had a Deſign to go to France with theſe Papers? if you had, and if your Lordſhip did go on Ship-board in order to it, your taking Boat in Middleſex in order to go on Ship-board, is a Fact done in the County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. It is not proved by any Witneſſes that I deſigned to go into France.

L. C. J. Holt. That is before the Jury upon the Evidence.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip, and the Jury will obſerve 'tis not proved, and in the next Place, there are no Papers taken upon me; with humble Submiſſion, there is no Proof of any ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, how far your Lordſhip was concerned in theſe Papers, and whether you were going with them into France, is to be left, upon the Evidence that hath been heard, to the Conſideration of the Jury.

L. Preſton. But I humbly ſubmit that.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to ſay?

L. Preſton. As to what I offer, that nothing has been proved in Middleſex, I hope your Lordſhip will take it to be a Point of Law, and then it ought to be argued; and I deſire I may have Council.

L. C. J. Holt. No, 'tis a Matter of Fact only; but if you pleaſe, the reſt of my Lords the Judges may give you their Opinion; for this is a Queſtion upon a Suppoſition that your Lordſhip was guilty of a Deſign of going into France, and this with a Purpoſe to depoſe the King, and alter the Government; then the Queſtion is upon ſuch a Suppoſition that you were guilty of that Deſign, whether you were guilty in Middleſex or no?

L. Preſton. My Lord, they have not proved that Deſign.

L. C. J. Holt. We do not ſay, it is taken for granted now, but 'tis a Queſtion upon a Suppoſition. Now, my Lord, I'll tell your Lordſhip in ſhort my Opinion, the reſt of the Judges will tell you theirs: I am of Opinion, If your Lordſhip had ſuch a Deſign to go with theſe Papers into France, and theſe Papers were formed by you, or you were privy to the Contents of them, then it is plainly proved, that you went into a Boat in the County of Middleſex, in order to carry on this Deſign, and that will make it a good Indictment, and here is a plain Overt-act of High-Treaſon in Middleſex.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I am of the ſame Opinion; for your Fact as to this particular Point in Law ſtands thus: You are indicted of High-Treaſon in two Points; one is, For conſpiring to depoſe the King and Queen, and alter the Government: And the other is, For aiding and aſſiſting the French King, and his Subjects, declared Enemies, and in open War againſt the King and Queen, and to invite the Enemies of the Kingdom to invade the Kingdom. Now this Deſign, and this Help and Aſſiſtance, are written in theſe Papers; for they are Inſtructions for the carrying on of this Deſign. You, my Lord, are the Perſon that is charged to go with theſe Papers to help on this Deſign; you began your Journey in the County of Middleſex, for according to the Evidence, you took Water at Surrey Stairs, which is in the County of Middleſex, and every Step you made in purſuance of this Journey, is Treaſon, where ever it was: So then here is a ſufficient Proof of a Fact in Middleſex.

L. Preſton. That, my Lord, is a Point of Law, and I humbly deſire your Lordſhip, that I may have Council in this Caſe. It is not proved by any Body, that I ſaid I would go into France; and in the next Place, it is not proved that I had theſe Papers about me; there has been no Evidence given that I did take Water with an Intention to go with theſe Papers into France.

L. C. J. Holt. The Jury are to be Judges of that.

L. Preſton. Then, my Lord, what have I done? I have not done any Thing within the Danger of any Statute upon which I am indicted; beſides, my Lord, what I have to offer further is this, I think I ought to have two credible Witneſſes to prove every Fact, and I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, there is nothing but Suppoſition as to me; and I hope I and my Family ſhall not be ruin'd upon a Suppoſition.

L. C. J. Holt. Has your Lordſhip any more to ſay?

L. Preſton. All the Judges have not given their Opinion.

L. C. J. Holt. The reſt will give their Opinions, if you deſire it.

My Lord Chief Baron, what ſay you?

L. C. Baron. My Lord Preſton, I am called upon, it ſeems, to give my Opinion in this Caſe, but this I take it muſt be left to the Jury, what Credit they will give to the Proof. Your Lordſhip makes a Queſtion, as the Proof ſtands, whether here be any thing done in this County? here are Inſtructions given to the French King how to invade England, and carry on the War againſt us. Theſe Inſtructions are contained in ſeveral Papers, and theſe Papers in a Pacquet are carried to the Smack, which Smack was hired to go to France. You are found taking Water at Surrey Stairs, which is in the County of Middleſex, in order to go to the Smack: You did go to the Smack; the Papers were taken in your Company, and were ſeen lying by your Seals; and the Witneſſes ſwear, they believe ſome of them to be your Hand; you took care to deſire to have them diſpoſed of. Now how far the Jury will believe this Matter of Fact, that is thus teſtified, is left to them; this ſeems to be the Proof, and if the Jury do believe it, here is a plain Evidence of an Overt-act in the County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. I do inſiſt upon it, with humble Submiſſion, it is not proved that theſe Papers were taken upon me, or that I did take Water at Surrey Stairs to go to France.

L. C. Baron. That muſt be collected out of all the Circumſtances; the Credit of which is left to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. All the reſt of my Lords the Judges are of the ſame Opinion, as they tell me. Have you any more, my Lord?

L. Preſton. I muſt ſubmit.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord Preſton ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon, in imagining and compaſſing the Depoſition, Death, and Deſtruction of the King and Queen; and for that Purpoſe, did write, or cauſe to be writ, ſeveral treaſonable Papers and Letters, deſigned to go into France, and there to correſpond with the French King and his Subjects, who are Enemies to the King and Queen; and to carry with him thoſe treaſonable Papers and Letters, containing a Project, and a formed Deſign how this Kingdom ſhould be invaded by Foreigners.

There is another Treaſon in the Indictment mention'd, and that is for adhering to, and abetting the King's Enemies, there being open War declared between the King and Queen, and the French King.

You have heard, Gentlemen, a very long Evidence, Witneſſes have been produced viva voce, and ſeveral Papers have been read to you; ſome of the Papers that have been produced, tho' they may ſeem myſterious and canting, yet they are not ſo very obſcure and unintelligible, but if you conſider them well, the Meaning of them will appear. Others of them are more expreſs, and do plainly demonſtrate a Deſign, that this

King

King and Queen ſhould be depoſed, and that there ſhould be another Prince ſet upon the Throne, and reſtored to the Government of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, There are two other Perſons mentioned in the Indictment with my Lord; and tho' my Lord is only now upon his Trial, yet the Evidence which doth affect them, doth alſo concern my Lord.

You have heard how there was an Intention of ſome Perſons to go to France, and how Mr. Aſhton, one of the two others, that ſtands indicted with my Lord, did treat with one Mrs. Pratt, one of the Witneſſes, to hire a Veſſel for that Purpoſe, and it was by the Means of one Mr. Burdett, that lives in the City; they had a Meeting at Burdett's Houſe, where they treated about the Price that ſhould be given for the Hire of this Ship to go to France, but at that Time they did not agree. It was concluded, that the Woman and Aſhton and Burdett ſhould meet at the Wonder Tavern; but Mr. Burdett not being there, nothing was concluded upon them.

After that the Woman, Mr. Burdett, and Aſhton, and Elliott, met at Mrs. Burdett's; the Woman inſiſted at firſt upon 150 l. After they had been treating for ſome time, the Bargain was made to go to France for 100 l.

Then the next Thing conſidered was, how this Money ſhould be paid; by Agreement 93 Guineas, and 6 d. which made up the 100 l. was depoſited in Mrs. Burdett's Hand; a Six-pence broken, one Part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other Part of the Six-pence Mr. Aſhton had: And when either Mrs. Pratt, or the Maſter of the Veſſel did bring back that Part of the Six-pence that Aſhton had, to Mrs. Burdett, the Money was to be paid.

After this Agreement, they were appointed to go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden, to the Houſe of one Mr. Rigby; and there the Woman, Mrs. Pratt, and the Maſter of the Veſſel, Aſhton and Elliot met, and they were that Night to go away and to take Water at ſome Place near to go on Ship-board; and having ſtayed there till it was about ten a Clock at Night, then they went away into the Strand, and ſo into Surrey-Street, and took Water at Surrey Stairs.

But before that they came from Mr. Rigby's, ſome Perſons went to Surrey Stairs to ſee for a Boat, and met with that Fellow that was here produced, who was a Sculler, and did hire him to go through the Bridge when the Tide ſerved, and to carry ſome Gentlemen on Ship-board; they agreed with him for half a Crown, and he was to ſtay in an Houſe near the Stairs until they came.

And at the Time appointed, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliott, and the Maſter of the Veſſel, came to that Place, and my Lord Preſton and his Man with them, to take Water. My Lord Preſton was not at Burdett's Houſe at the Hiring of the Ship, nor at Mr. Rigby's; but it is proved by the Maſter of the Veſſel, that he took Water with the reſt of them at Surrey Stairs, that he went with them on Ship-board, and was to go along with them.

Being on Board the Ship, they did appear to have ſome Apprehenſions of Danger, and paſſing by a Man of War, my Lord Preſton, his Man, and the other two went under the Quarter-Hatches, where they lay down to prevent themſelves from being taken or diſcovered; and they hid another time when they came near Graveſend, and coming up they ſeeing a Boat coming towards them, they hid themſelves again. Captain Billop, who it ſeems, was ſent to apprehend them, pretended he was to preſs Seamen, and when he came on Board the Smack, he ſaid he would preſs the Mariners, who anſwered they had a Protection: But he being upon his Search, pulled up the Boards of the Quarter-Hatches, and there was my Lord Preſton and the other Perſons lying down: It was not a Place that was very proper for Gentlemen, or, indeed, for any Paſſengers, to repoſe themſelves in; it was an uneaſy Place, nobody could ſtand or ſit upright in it; nay, there was no convenient Place for lying down, but they muſt lean upon their Elbows, which Poſture thoſe Gentlemen were in; ſo that their Purpoſe was plainly to conceal themſelves, and their concealing themſelves muſt be becauſe of ſome Deſign they were about, which they would not have diſcovered.

They being taken out from under the Hatches, one of the Witneſſes tells you, he ſaw a Pacquet lying there, and Aſhton, pretending to fetch his Hat, went down, took it up, and put the Pacquet into his Boſom; and the Witneſſes informing Captain Billop thereof, he cauſed Aſhton's Coat to be ſearched, and from thence took the Pacquet, and a Piece of Lead tied to it, which was produced here in Court.

When they were bringing away in Cuſtody, they ſeemed all of them to be very much concerned about this Pacquet; ſome of them, that is, Aſhton and Elliot, would have had it thrown with the Lead over-board. My Lord Preſton did not ſay ſo much, but complimented Captain Billop in this manner, He was glad he was fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman, a Perſon of Worth, and he ſhould always acknowledge his Kindneſs, and would do him all the Service he could, if he would diſpoſe of the Pacquet.

My Lord Preſton was ſearched at that time, and Letters of no great Moment taken about him. Aſhton and Elliot would have had Captain Billop to take thoſe Letters which were taken in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them and have thrown the Pacquet over-board, and to report to the King and Council, That thoſe Letters were the Pacquet that was taken with the Lead; and ſo have perſuaded him to be falſe to the Truſt that was repoſed in him.

And Aſhton and Elliot uſed many Expreſſions to induce him to that Compliance; they told him the Government was unſtable, and every Dog had his Day, and the Tide would turn; and that he would deſerve very well if he would change Sides, and go with them where they were going; and that he had Opportunity to get any Preferment he would have

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip obſerves that I ſaid none of all this.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I do not ſay you did; my Lord Preſton did not ſay any thing of all this, but only about diſpoſing of the Pacquet; that his Lordſhip ſpoke of to Captain Billop, and complimented him, and promiſed him Kindneſs if he would diſpoſe of the Pacquet.

But, Gentlemen, as there was a Pacquet taken, ſo there were two Seals taken at the ſame Time, and in the ſame Place, which have been produced and ſhewn to you; they lay both of them upon the Ballaſt under the Quarter-Hatches, near the Pacquet: The one of them is the Seal of my my Lord Preſton's own Coat of Arms, the other Seal belongs to the Secretaries Office, which Office my Lord once held in the late Reign.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to obſerve that the Papers were not taken upon me, and it can be no Treaſon to have Seals, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. Holt. Good my Lord, I will not do your Lordſhip any Wrong; I do not ſay that the Papers were taken about you, no nor the Seals; but only, that they lay upon the Ballaſt from whence the Pacquet was taken: And I ſay further, That theſe Seals are not denied by your Lordſhip to be your Seals; the one is your own Seal of your Coat of Arms which was taken at that Time, and ſo I do not your Lordſhip any Wrong, and by the Grace of God will not.

L. Preſton. It is no Crime, I hope, to have Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. I do ſay, my Lord, the Papers were taken about Aſhton, and not about your Lordſhip; but they lay upon the Ballaſt where the Seals were, and where your Lordſhip lay: But how far my Lord Preſton is concerned in this Matter, is to be conſidered by you of the Jury by-and-by.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard how earneſt Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot were; one of them, to wit, Elliot, wiſh'd a Thunder-Bolt might ſtrike the Boat under Water as they were coming back; and when they came through Bridge, he wiſh'd that London-Bridge had fallen upon them and knock'd them upon the Head.

L. Preſton. But I hope that is not to lie upon me neither, for I ſaid no ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. No: But Aſhton and Elliot did ſay theſe Things, and how the Caſe ſtands as to that in relation to your Lordſhip, is to be conſidered. It is proved, they afterwards gave Money to the Seamen, half a Crown apiece, to two of them, to ſay, they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Now, Gentlemen, that my Lord was on Board this Veſſel, that my Lord was under the Hatches, and that the Papers were taken in this manner, is beyond all Contradiction: So likewiſe that the Ship was hired for Fruce; that my Lord took Water at Surrey Stairs, and was taken in this Veſſel in that manner that you have heard.

The next Thing, Gentlemen, is about the Papers: I muſt tell you, though there are ſeveral of them that do ſeem myſterious, yet they are Papers that do ſhew a very great Deſign of Depoſing the King and Queen, and a Purpoſe of altering the preſent Government.

But, Gentlemen, I will mention to you thoſe Papers that are very plain, and leave you to conſider what Conſtruction to put upon thoſe that are obſcure. There is one Paper that ſeems to be Inſtructions and Heads for a Declaration, that is to ſay, That the King of France muſt not come with a Deſign to make an intire Conqueſt.

L. Preſton. My Lord, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, I hope you will pleaſe to remember and obſerve to the Jury, that Paper is not proved to be mine.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I'll do your Lordſhip no Wrong, but I cannot ſpeak all my Words at once.

L. Preſton. I am ſure you will not my Lord; but I beg leave to put your Lordſhip in Mind.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, then, Gentlemen, the Paper begins, That the King's Declaration is to be formed in general Terms; that he will govern by the Laws; that they ſhall be the Rule of his Actions; that he will endeavour to ſettle Liberty of Conſcience by a Law, and that whatſoever was done by him that gave any Occaſion of Jealouſy, ſhall be ſettled by Parliament. That the King hath given ſufficient Proofs and Evidence of his not being willing to bring an Army of Strangers into the Kingdom, by refuſing the Succours the King of France offered him, and that were even ready to be embarqued upon the firſt Notice of the Prince of Orange*'s coming. That he brings ſuch an Army only as is neceſſary for his own Defence, and ſecuring ſuch of his Loyal Subjects as ſhould come to him; and that he will diſmiſs them as ſoon as he ſhall have rid the Nation of thoſe Foreigners that had invaded us, and trampled upon the Laws.*

So that, Gentlemen, here is a Paper in this Pacquet, that has plainly laid open and proved the Deſign, and ſhews the Meaning of it was to ſeduce their Majeſties Subjects from their Allegiance; it was to be in ſuch general Terms, making general Promiſes, hoping thereby that People would be the more eaſily impoſed upon to renounce their Allegiance to their preſent Majeſties.

But, Gentlemen, the Declaration imports farther, that the Realm was to be invaded by Foreigners; and to palliate it, it is pretended, that Foreigners were only brought in to rid the Nation of Foreigners, and you know who are meant by that: So that this Project was only to colour a foreign Invaſion; and this Declaration was to direct them how, and upon what Pretences they ſhould invade this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, there is no manner of doubt but this is a treaſonable Declaration, and if any Perſon had this in his Poſſeſſion, and was going into France to carry, with an Intention there to make uſe of it, that is Treaſon, though it be couch'd under ſpecious Pretences of reſtoring People to their Liberty: It was plainly a Deſign to invade England by a French Army.

L. Preſton. My Lord, that Paper was not found about me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it was not; but, good my Lord, give me your Favour, I will certainly obſerve every Thing that is fitting; but I tell you I cannot do it all at once.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Paper found in the Pacquet, that is ſaid to be the Reſult of a Conference that was had between divers Lords and Gentlemen, as well Tories as Whigs, as they call them, to prove it poſſible to reſtore the late King by French Arms; and how this may be effected, were Propoſals made: Yet ſtill it was pretended to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion, and the Civil Adminiſtration according to Law.

And that it might be brought to paſs, the Credulous were to be impoſed upon, and made to believe that the French King would not conquer England for himſelf; no, but he would conquer it for the late King; he would be at that vaſt Charge, that great Expence of Men and Arms to reſtore King James, and make no Profit of it himſelf.

And it was propoſed how to ſeduce the People of England into a Belief of the French King's Kindneſs; he was to indulge the Engliſh Proteſtants in France, and let them have the Exerciſe of their own Religion there at their own Charges; and this to ſatisfy the Engliſh Proteſtants, that his Perſecution of the Hugonots in France, was not out of Averſion to the Proteſtant Religion, but only becauſe of their Antimonarchical and reſiſting Principles. So that they were propoſing among themſelves what they were to do to make the People believe the French King had no dangerous Deſign againſt our Religion and Liberties; and if they could meet with Perſons to believe this, that was a probable Way thought upon in this Conference to get a great many Adherents to the French King, thereby this Invaſion was to be facilitated, and the whole Project rendred more ſucceſsful.

that

There is another thing, Gentlemen, in this Paper, and that is this; They complained of the Miſmanagement of their Affairs at St. Germains; that though they did earneſtly deſire the Reſtitution of the late King, yet there was always ſome fooliſh thing or other that came from St. Germains that obſtructed their Deſign.

What that fooliſh Thing is, I can't ſay, it does not appear; but whether it were not too great a Diſcovery of their Zeal for Popery, and the Advancement of the Popiſh Religion, is worth your Conſideration.

And ſomething is to be done for Satisfaction of the People as to that; and it is adviſed that there ſhould be Seven or Nine, or ſuch a Number of Engliſh Men, that ſhould go over, and be received into Favour at St. Germains, and they ſhould be of the Council there, and theſe were to be Proteſtants; and that was to be a Colour and Pretence that the late King was reconciled to the Proteſtant Intereſt, becauſe he choſe Proteſtant Counſellors, and had received them at St. Germains, and was adviſed by them.

This, ſays the Paper, will make the World believe, he is ours, and that we have gained him; which was to delude a great many of the People of England, that they ſhould not be affrighted in caſe there ſhould be ſuch an Invaſion of England, but invited rather, and encouraged to join with the French when they came.

But, Gentlemen, the three laſt Papers that have been produced to you, are Papers that do ſomewhat more nearly concern my Lord Preſton.

The firſt Paper contains ſeveral Memorandums; It begins with Lady D. 2000 l. who that Lady D. is, I muſt leave it to you to imagine, tho' perhaps it may not be hard to gueſs.

It takes notice that the Engliſh and Dutch were like to join; and theſe Memorandums do alſo ſhew a Deſign and Purpoſe of ſomething to be done for the Prevention of that Conjunction. They ſeem alſo to be Inſtructions to be made uſe of upon going into France to negotiate or tranſport ſome Matters of dangerous Conſequence.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope that your Lordſhip will obſerve, that theſe Memorandums are broken kind of Notes, incongruous and incoherent.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, my Lord, they are ſo, they are but broken things; but I ſay ſtill, they are Memorandums that were to be uſed for ſome Purpoſe: Now I leave it to the Jury to conſider of the Matter of them: What can be plainer than what is there expreſſed? The French are to come in time, before the Dutch and the Engliſh join; they are to watch their Opportunity and come betimes, and they are to fight at the Chops of the Channel, and not to come ſo far as Beachy.

L. Preſton. This is all but preſumptive Evidence my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. I appeal to your Lordſhip if it was not in the Paper, and I appeal to the Memory of the Jury, whether I miſ-repeat it or not.

The Paper mentions Jennings and Strickland, and Trevannion, that they were to come from St. Malo's in one Night; the King (meaning the late King) was not to be on board; and there were Ships to lie at Newcaſtle, to plague London: It is eaſy to underſtand what they meant. Among theſe Memorandums, it is made as a Remark, that the London Clergy are the worſt. It gives an Account how Portſmouth was fortified, and Goſport, and what Number of Men were in them; and of the State and Condition of our Navy; what Rates our Ships were, and how many, and who were to be the Commanders.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip to obſerve this is not Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſhall tell you that, my Lord, by-and-by; I am now ſtating the Evidence.

Gentlemen, my Lord Preſton inſiſts upon it, that theſe Papers were not found about him: It is true, they were not, but it does not therefore follow, that they were none of his Papers: But you have three Witneſſes, Mr. Townſend, Mr. Bland, and Mr. Warr, produced to prove theſe Papers to be my Lord's Hand; Mr. Townſend ſays, he was acquainted pretty well with my Lord Preſton's Hand; he was one of his Clerks in the Office of the Wardrobe; he ſays, he has ſeen my Lord write ſeveral times, and does believe the Writing to be his Hand; and to the ſame Purpoſe ſays Bland; and Mr. Warr ſwears to one of the Papers, that he believes it to be my Lord Preſton's Hand.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve to the Jury, that this is only a Proof of Similitude of Hands: no-body ſee me write them.

L. C. J. Holt. They only ſay they do believe it to be your Hand; no-body ſays they ſaw you write them; if I omit any thing, pray tell me when I have done.

Gentlemen, there are other Papers which have been produced and read, that are writ in Canting Terms, which yet plainly ſhew the general Deſign; they tell the Party, that Council are of Opinion, he has a very good Title; they hope he will appear himſelf, and if the Cauſe be well ſollicited, it may come to a Hearing before the End of Eaſter Term.

There is another Matter mentioned in another Letter which is under the Diſguiſe of Trade, That the Goods muſt come before the firſt of March. And another of them ſays, that unleſs the Copper and the Linnen come before the Tenth of March, they ſhould loſe this Summer's Profit.

Gentlemen, what can be the Meaning of all this?

L. Preſton. I know not indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. In another of the Papers it is ſaid, 'Tis thought our Fleet will be ready by March or April, but they believe not till June.

Truly, Gentlemen, I have not been able to take Particulars of every Letter, but I muſt leave it to your Obſervation; only there is one of them that makes Mention of acquainting my Lord with the Condition of the Writer, and Direction is therein given to ſpeak to the Bearer; and what other Lord was there, but he, in the Company?

L. Preſton.

L. Preſton. I deſire to obſerve, my Lord, that I was not the Bearer.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell who was meant; I muſt leave it to the Jury to judge of that; but there was no other Lord in that Company.

L. Preſton. I give yonr Lordſhip Thanks for obſerving that it was not proved that they were taken upon me before; but I beg your Pardon for interrupting of your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Holt. Interrupt me as much as you pleaſe, if I do not obſerve right; I will aſſure you I will do you no Wrong willingly.

Now, Gentlemen, the Queſtion is, in the firſt place, Whether this be Treaſon? and I told you before, without Queſtion, if any Perſons do go into France to negotiate ſuch a Deſign as this, or do purpoſe to go into France, and do any Act in order thereunto, that is High Treaſon; and theſe Letters do import High Treaſon as great as can be committed; a Treaſon againſt the King and Queen, a Deſign to invade the Realm, to ſubvert the Government, to reſtore another Prince to the Throne by the Aſſiſtance of Foreign Force.

There was a Deſign to delude and impoſe upon a great many People; and thoſe that would not be deluded into a Belief by theſe fair Pretenſions of Friendſhip, they were to be ſubdued by an Army of Foreigners.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Queſtion will be, how my Lord Preſton is affected by this Evidence, and whether you have ſufficient Proof from what has been offered, to ſatisfy you, that he is guilty of this Treaſon or no?

Firſt, my Lord tells you, there has not been a clear Proof that theſe are the Papers that were taken; for, (ſaith he) they have been conveyed from Hand to Hand, and therefore poſſibly there might be ſome Alteration made in them. You, Gentlemen, are to conſider, notwithſtanding this Objection, whether the Identity of the Papers be not proved.

Captain Billop tells you, he took them, and in what Manner; and afterwards carried them to my Lord Nottingham, who laid them by for a little while upon his Table, and Captain Billop withdrew (that is part of my Lord's Objection) while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preſton: after that, my Lord Nottingham called in Billop again, and Billop ſwears the Pacquet was not opened, but remained intire in ſuch manner as they were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; and ſo ſays my Lord Nottingham. Then Captain Billop ſaw my Lord Nottingham open it at that time, and he ſaw all theſe Papers every one put up again by my Lord Nottingham; ſo that he could not be deceived; and my Lord Nottingham delivered them to him, and he carried them to my Lord Preſident, all ſealed up with my Lord Nottingham's Seal: and my Lord Preſident tells you he opened them, aud brought them to the King, and had them back from the King; but they were never out of his Sight while the King read ſome of them, but he took them all, and brought them to the Cabinet Council, where my Lord Sidney received all theſe Papers that have been read, and marked them. You have my Lord Sidney's Oath that theſe are the Papers he had from my Lord Preſident; you have my Lord Preſident's Oath that he had them from Billop, ſealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal; you have my Lord Nottingham's Oath that he had them from Billop; and Billop ſwears that they were taken in the Smack.

So that it is plain, if you believe this Evidence, that they are the ſame Papers. Beſides, as to ſeveral of them, Billop marked them, and ſwears directly to them. If you believe theſe Witneſſes, as you have no Reaſon, I think, to the contrary; it is plainly proved theſe are the very Papers which were taken from the Boſom of Aſhton, and taken up by him from under the Quarter Hatches in the Smack.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for one thing.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what ſay you, pray? Say what you will.

L. Preſton. With humble Submiſſion, there is one thing that I think the Jury ought to take Notice of, That when the Papers were ſent from Mr. Bridgman to my Lord Sidney, they were ſent by a Meſſenger.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you are miſtaken as to that Objection, for my Lord Sidney did not ſend them to Mr. Bridgman by a Meſſenger, but he delivered them with his own Hand, and after he had ſet his own Mark upon them; and Mr. Bridgman ſays they were never out of his Sight, he copied them all but two or three, the other Mr. Poulney copied in his Preſence, and ſo he ſwears he re-delivered them to my Lord Sidney.

L. Preſton. With humble Submiſſion, my Lord, if I remember right, they were in a third Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Never, never.

L. Preſton. Did not my Lord Sidney ſay ſo, or Mr. Bridgman?

L. C. J. Holt. No, neither my Lord Sidney, nor Mr. Bridgman ſaid ſo; I ſuppoſe the Jury are apprehenſive of the Matter; I would not miſlead them, I'll aſſure you, nor do your Lordſhip any Manner of Injury in the World.

L. Preſton. No, my Lord, I ſee it well enough that your Lordſhip would not; I am for my Life, and beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for interrupting of you.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, the next thing is to conſider, whether my Lord Preſton be anſwerable for theſe Papers, or a Party in this Treaſon.

Firſt, Gentlemen, I would have you to conſider, that there was the hiring of a Veſſel for France: It is true, my Ld Preſton was not preſent at the Bargain; but you obſerve, that my Lord Preſton, his Servant, Aſhton, and Elliot took Water at Surrey-Stairs, on purpoſe to go on board that Smack.

Now, Gentlemen, whether or no you can intend any other Ways than that my Lord Preſton was privy in the Hiring of this Veſſel, though he was not preſent at the hiring of it; for how ſhould my Lord Preſton be ready to take Water with them at Surrey-Stairs? Can you imagine my Lord came there by chance, and took a ſudden Reſolution? if you can imagine that he came only to go on Ship-board, without knowing the previous Deſign, truly you imagine a very great thing for my Lord's Advantage.

It is plain he went voluntarily, without Compulſion; truly, I think the Evidence is very ſtrong to induce you to believe he was privy to this Deſign, and that he did know of hiring the Veſſel.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip will obſerve, at the ſame Time, that I was never ſeen before we took Boat.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I have obſerved it, and I lay that Weight upon the Evidence that I think it will naturally bear, and no more; and leave it to the Jury to conſider, whether your Lordſhip was privy to the Deſign or no, when they weigh the Circumſtances of the Evidence together.

L. Preſton. I hope I ſhall not be condemned upon Preſumption and Argument.

L. C. J. Holt. What Weight the Evidence has they will conſider.

And then, Gentlemen, there is another thing that I would obſerve; Why ſhould my Lord Preſton, a Noble Man, a Perſon of his Honour and Quality, put himſelf in ſuch a Place as he was found in, and that twice? It muſt ſure be out of an Apprehenſion of ſome Danger. As for the Seamen, they were ſecure enough; they were not frightned, becauſe they thought they were protected, and my Lord Preſton knew he was not liable to be preſt; the Maſter of the Veſſel tells you they were fearful, and therefore hid themſelves in a Place they could not ſtand in, nor ſit in, there was the Gravel and Ballaſt, it was uneaſy to them, dangerous to their Health to be there.

Gentlemen, why do Men avoid the Light and put themſelves under Covert, unleſs they have ſome Evil Deſign? Perſons that are innocent ſeek not Obſcurity.

The Seals were found there, and my Lord does not deny they were his Seals.

L. Preſton. I do not deny that: I hope it is no Crime to have ſuch Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay but, ſays my Lord, that does not affect —— becauſe the Papers were not found about me, but were found about Aſhton. Gentlemen, if you can imagine my Lord Preſton had a different Deſign from the reſt of the Company that were with him, then you may acquit my Lord, and find him Not Guilty. But it is left to you to conſider whether he had not the ſame Deſign with them. Beſides there's Mention made in one of the Letters, my Lord, and there was no other Lord but he; and here are Papers prov'd to be my Lord's own Hand, containing ſeveral of the Matters of which he ſtands indicted, and he would have had the Captain to have diſpoſed of the Papers.

Now, Gentlemen, what Account does my Lord give you were he was going? It ſeems they did pretend at the Time they were taken, and they would have had the Maſter of the Veſſel ſaid, that their Deſign was for Flanders; but the Witneſſes tell you poſitively, That the Veſſel was hired for France.

Truly, Gentlemen, I muſt leave the Matter to your Conſideration whether my Lord be guilty of this Deſign or Not Guilty.

There is another thing that my Lord has urged (for I would not willingly omit any thing material on the one Side or the other) he ſays his Indictment is laid in the County of Middleſex, but the Papers were not taken there, the Ship they went on Board lay at Anchor in Surrey; and when they were taken, it was in the County of Kent, and ſo there is no Proof of Treaſon in Middleſex.

Ay, but Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, if you are ſatisfied upon this Evidence, that my Lord was privy to this Deſign, contained in theſe Papers, and was going with them into France, there to excite an Invaſion of this Kingdom, to depoſe the King and Queen, and make uſe of the Papers to that End, then every Step he took, in order to it, is High-Treaſon, wherever he went; his taking Water at Surrey-ſtairs in the County of Middleſex, will be as much High-Treaſon, as the going a Ship-board in Surrey, or being found on Ship-board in Kent, where the Papers were taken.

Gentlemen, I have failed of recollecting ſeveral of the Particulars of the Evidence, becauſe they are many; and you will not depend upon my Recollection of Things ſo very incoherent as ſome Parts of the Evidence in the Papers are, but upon your own Notes and Obſervations.

If you do think, having heard this Evidence, That my Lord was not concerned in this Matter, that my Lord had no Deſign to go into France with theſe Papers, but that he was an utter Stranger to all theſe Things, then you are to Acquit my Lord. But if you believe my Lord was privy to, and knew of the Hiring of this Veſſel, and that he went to carry on the Deſign contained in theſe Papers; and that he wrote ſome of theſe Letters, and with the others he was acquainted, then you are to find him Guilty.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I would obſerve one thing to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, by all means, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſhall ſay but a few Words to you, becauſe indeed my Lord has ſumm'd up the Evidence very fully, for Matter of Law: I am fully of Opinion there never was a more black nor horrible Treaſon than is in this Plot that is now diſcovered; for I think Engliſhmen have no greater Enemies than the French and the Papiſts, and you ſee this is a Plot to bring in both; and therefore I think there was never any thing of greater Conſequence to the Government and the Nation, than to have this Plot detected and puniſhed; tho' perhaps never any thing was more improbable than this ſame Plot, that it ſhould ever take Effect, whatſoever they promiſed to themſelves, and their Deſire of having it effected, might perſuade them to the contrary.

But, Gentlemen, the thing that I would mention about the Matter before you now, is this; Here are three Papers, that by three ſeveral Witneſſes, acquainted with my Lord's Hand-writing, are teſtified, as they believe, to be his Hand-writing; if ſo, then there is an End of all, for therein is a horrid deal of Treaſon contained. If theſe Inſtructions, theſe Memorandums, theſe Heads that were written down, were my Lord's, and he did intend to go with theſe in a Voyage towards France, that will be ſufficient of it ſelf, if there were nothing elſe in the Caſe, to maintain this Indictment.

But, Gentlemen, you have in the reſt of the Papers that were taken, A great Character of the Bearer; that the Bearer had done great Things; that the Bearer could inform them fully of every thing; and there ſhould be full and intire Confidence put in the Bearer, and a great many ſuch Phraſes.

But, ſays my Lord, I was not the Bearer, it was Mr. Aſhton that the Papers were found about; it does not appear directly who the Bearer was; and they were not found about me.

Now, Gentlemen, pray let us look a little how this Evidence ſtands: Pray where was this Bundle found? even upon the Gravel, where my Lord Preſton and Mr. Aſhton lay; there was it found, and my Lord's own Seal with it.

How, in the Name of God, came my Lord's Seals to be found with other Peoples Papers, if they did belong to any body elſe? How came they together in that Place? It may be, he had a mind to leave his Seals behind him, becauſe they would diſcover his Quality. But why ſhould my Lord Preſton have all this Fear upon him? Why ſhould two Men go and take a Ship for themſelves and two others; and when they came to take Boat, take in my Lord and his Man, if they were not the two others that were deſigned? and this to be done at Night in the Dark? Why ſhould my Lord be under ſuch terrible Apprehenſions, as to creep into a Hole ſo unfit for one of his Quality?

Why do you not hear from my Lord ſome good Account from what Occaſion my Lord and his Man were going to France? Or whither elſe my Lord was really going? for ſome where or other it was plain he was going.

Gentlemen, no Man goes into an Enemy's Country without ſome Licence, unleſs he go upon ſome ill Deſign: Fear ſeldom is without ſome Guilt; and there appears, throughout the whole Management of the Story, that there was a great deal of Fear upon theſe Gentlemen.

Beſides, afterwards, when he is taken, and the Letters taken with him in the ſame Company, you hear what Endeavours there were to ſuppreſs the Truth, even by my Lord's deſiring to have the Pacquet diſpoſed of; and my Lord's Man gave one of the Seamen half a Crown to ſay they were going to Flanders, not to France. I ſuppoſe the Man knew how unfit it was to be known that they were going to France: And my Lord's two Companions ſpared for no Pains to get the Pacquet thrown over-board; tho' all that my Lord ſaid was what great Kindneſs he would do him when it lay in his Power, if he would diſpoſe of the Pacquet; I ſuppoſe that is very eaſily intelligible.

Gentlemen, there is one thing which is mentioned in one of the particular Letters, that I deſire particularly to obſerve to you, and that is all I ſhall ſay to you: Here is a Letter in my Hand that in divers Places has ſomewhat remarkable; it ſays, Your Daughter and I muſt ſtarve, if this Government can make us: That the Party did not repine at all for having loſt all for your Sake, which your Favour had beſtowed. And in another Place this Letter doth ſay, Your Daughter grows very tall, and very pretty, as I am told. But that which I chiefly mention it for, is, it's twice mentioned, My Lord will tell you all my Condition, how I have been uſed; and I have told my Lord my Condition: what I deſire of you, he thinks very moderate.

And pray conſider and remember, that the firſt Article of my Lord's Paper, that is taken to be under my Lord's own Hand, there is Two thouſand Pounds to the Lady D.

Now if any Body ſhould put theſe together, do they lack any great Interpreter for? for my part I leave them to you.

Then in another Place, towards the End of the Letter, it is ſaid, Pray, Sir, ask my Lord how I have been uſed.

Now this Letter being thus taken, and there is never a one of the reſt that was a Lord, do you think any of the reſt was meant? I muſt leave it to you.

If my Lord Preſton had produced any Teſtimony to prove his own good Carriage and Behaviour towards the preſent Government, it had been very much for his Advantage, and might have had great Weight with you; but when Things appear only in this manner as they do now, I muſt leave it to you.

Gentlemen, 'tis a great Matter, and of great Moment; if thoſe that conſpire againſt the Kingdom, againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and againſt the preſent Government, may do it with Impunity, it will be worth the Conſidering what the Conſequence of that may be. Your own Conſciences require you to do Right and Juſtice on both Sides; and if you are ſatisfied he is Not Guilty, you will find him ſo; if you are ſatisfied that he is Guilty, you will find him ſo.

L. Preſton. My Lord, may I have the Liberty to ſay any thing before the Jury go out?

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip ſhould have ſaid what you had to ſay before: It is contrary to the Courſe of all Proceedings in ſuch Caſes to have any thing ſaid to the Jury after the Court has ſummed up the Evidence; but we will diſpenſe with it. What has your Lordſhip to ſay?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordſhip; I am not acquainted with ſuch Proceedings.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you know I permitted your Lordſhip to interrupt me as much as you wou'd, which was never done before in any ſuch Caſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is contrary to the Courſe of the Court: But yet if you have any thing to ſay to the Court or the Jury, for this once we permit it.

L. Preſton. Gentlemen of the Jury —

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what you have to ſay, pray direct yourſelf to the Court, that we may hear what it is.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I only deſire the Jury may be informed, that I am a Proteſtant, that I was baptized in the Religion of the Church of England, and have always lived in it, and hope to die in it. My Lord, 'tis true, things have been urged with Severity againſt me that are a little hard, in making that, which I hope will amount to but a Preſumption, to be a Proof; as in the Caſe of the Letters that are written in a Cant, and my Intention to go to France, and thoſe Words in the Letter, where my Lord the Bearer is named. But your Lordſhip obſerves, That that Letter is not directed to any body, and that is full of Cant as well as all the reſt; Why ſhould I be ſuppoſed to be the Bearer any more than either of the others, and they were found about one of them? But, my Lord, for the Reaſon of my going beyond Sea, it was this; I deſigned to go to Flanders, or any Place I could be driven to, and that ought not to be wondred at; for really I who had lived quietly after the Loſs of my Places, upon this Revolution, and ſuffered great Inconveniences in my Eſtate, and was retired to my own Houſe, with a Deſign to live a retired Life, was impriſoned twice in the Tower, and proclaimed a Traitor in every Market Town, without any Indictment; and my Impriſonment tended greatly to the impairing my Health and my Fortune; all this made me very uneaſy here: and, my Lord, I went under

under a fixed Reſolution to go to Flanders, or any Place where I thought I could be quiet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your Lordſhip ſhould have ſaid all theſe Things before, for it is not the Courſe to reply upon the Court; if you had had any Thing to ſay, you know we heard you out of Courſe, and I let you interrupt me as much as you did think fit, though that has not been allowed at any Time before. But, my Lord, pray let me ſay one Thing more: Suppoſe your Lordſhip did think yourſelf hardly uſed, though I know not any Reaſon you had to think ſo: yet your Lordſhip muſt remember, it was in a Time of Danger that your Lordſhip was taken up before, and you had ſhewed your Diſſatisfaction with the preſent Government, and therefore they were not to be blamed if they ſecured themſelves againſt you; but if you had a Mind to retire into the Country, or to go Abroad, was France the only Country you could chooſe? A known declared Enemy's Country, at open War with the Government?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon, if I give any Offence.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, you give me no Offence at all; but your Lordſhip is not right in the Courſe of Proceedings; I acquaint you with it not by Way of Reproof, but by Way of Information.

L. Preſton. Then I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, that all that is alledged againſt me is but Preſumption; my Life and Fortune, my Poſterity and Reputation, are all at Stake; I leave all to the Jury's Conſideration, and the God of Heaven direct them.

L. C. J. Holt. If you go on thus to reflect upon the Court, you will make the Court reflect upon you. The Jury hear how the Evidence has been ſtated; I think it has been done very impartially, and without any Severity to you: Why ſhould you think we would preſs the Evidence further than it ought to go againſt you? You are a Stranger to moſt of us, and I am ſure we do not deſire your Life; but ſtill we muſt take Care that Juſtice be done to the Government and the Kingdom, as well as to any particular Perſon; and Evidence that is given muſt have its due Weight and Conſideration: If any one can deſign innocently to go into France, at this Time of Day, with ſuch Papers, and in ſuch a Manner, that I leave to the Jury's Conſideration.

Then the Jury withdrew, to conſider of the Evidence, and the Court adjourned for a little while, and returned in half an Hour; and the Jury came in, and were called over, and appeared.

Cl. of Ar. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand (which he did) Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony and High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods and Chattles had he?

Foreman. None at all that we know of.

Then the Verdict was recorded.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I think, truly, Gentlemen, you have done according to your Evidence; and though it be a hard Caſe upon particular Men that have brought themſelves into theſe Inconveniences, yet it is neceſſary Juſtice ſhould have its due Courſe, or elſe there is no longer living for any Man in any Society or Government.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate, and the Court Adjourned till Monday Morning following at Seven o'Clock.

Die Lunæ, XIX Januarii, 1690.

The Court being ſate, the Jury was called over, and the Appearance of thoſe who anſwered Recorded. Then Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot were brought to the Bar; but Mr. Elliot was ordered to be carried back to Newgate, the King's Council reſolving to try Mr. Aſhton by himſelf.

JOHN ASHTON, hold up thy Hand, [Which he did.] Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and Perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady our King and Queen, and You, upon your Trial of your Life and Death. If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray ſtay a little.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly deſire your Lordſhip will allow me the Benefit of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray let him have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Mr. Aſhton. And likewiſe that you would give my Sollicitor leave to be as near me as poſſibly he can, only to refreſh my Memory, if I ſhould forget any thing.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Thing you cannot of Right demand, the other of Pen, Ink, and Paper, you may.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſhall acknowledge it as a very great Favour.

L. C. J. Holt. That is an Innovation that ought not to be; the Court cannot allow it.

Mr. Aſhton. I acknowledge it a Favour, but if the Court thinks it not fit to allow it, whatſoever your Lordſhip ſhall order I readily ſubmit to.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have Pen, Ink, and Paper; and what is fit for the Court to do they will do it.

L. C. Baron. If the Witneſſes ſay any thing that you do not hear, you muſt ſpeak to the Court, and you ſhall have them ſay it over again.

Pen, Ink, and Paper was given to the Priſoner.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Hedges, Knight.

(He appeared.)

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I would not trouble your Lordſhip and myſelf with unneceſſary Challenges; I intend to put myſelf with an intire Dependance upon the firſt Twelve Men that appear, be they who they will.

L. C. J. Holt. What you pleaſe for that matter, you have your own Choice.

Mr. Aſhton. Whoever they are, I ſubmit to them; I know them not.

Cl. of Arr. Swear Sir William Hedges.

(Which was done.)

And ſo were the Eleven next ſucceeding in the Pannel; and the Names of the Twelve ſworn follow.

Sir William Hedges, Knt.
John Wolſtenholm, Eſq;
James Boddington, Eſq;
Thomas Johnſon, Eſq;
Ralph Bucknall, Eſq;
Lucy Knightly, Eſq;
Thomas Cuthbert, Eſq;
John Herbert, Eſq;
John Tully, Eſq;
Thomas Smith, Eſq;
William Withers, Eſq; and
Daniel Thomas, Eſq;

Then the Jury were numbered, and Proclamation made for Information and Evidence in the uſual Manner.

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you deſire Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope the Court will take care to provide them for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, ay, let the Gentlemen of the Jury have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

(Which was done.)

Cl. of Arr. John Aſhton, Hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe: He ſtands indicted by the Name of John Aſhton, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul's Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. For that he, together with Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Pariſh of St Ann, in the Liberty of Weſtminſter, Baronet, who ſtands convicted of High Treaſon, and Edmund Elliot, late of the Pariſh of St. James, in the ſaid Liberty, Gent. For that they, as falſe Traytors, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis) and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he has been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are; your Charge is, to enquire whether he be guilty of the Felony and High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the Felony and High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince; if you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knapp. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt John Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Indictment, Gentlemen, charges him, That he, as a falſe Traytor againſt their preſent Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, his Supreme and Natural Lord and Lady, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, did, upon the Twenty-ninth of December laſt paſt, together with Sir Richard Grahme, who ſtands convicted, and one Edmund Elliot, and divers other ill diſpoſed Perſons, unknown to the Jury, did conſpire, imagine, and intend to depoſe and deprive the King and Queen, and to bring them to Death and Deſtruction, and to ſubvert and alter the Government; and to cauſe War and Rebellion within this Kingdom againſt their Majeſties; and to bring theſe Intentions and Purpoſes to paſs, the Priſoner, with the reſt of them, did prepare divers Notes, Papers, Letters, and Memorandums in Writing, which were to inſtruct the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the Number of their Majeſties Men of War, how they were mann'd, and the Names of the Commanders of ſeveral of them, and to inform them how the Caſtles and Forts of Portſmouth, Southſea, and Goſport were fortified, and how they might be ſurprized by the King's Enemies, and of the Times, Ways and Means how they might invade the Kingdom, in order to depoſe the King and Queen; and to procure and incite ſuch an Invaſion; and further to bring theſe Purpoſes to paſs, the Priſoner, and the other Traytors, did ſecretly conceal, and detain in their Cuſtody, ſeveral Bills of Exchange, for the Payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and the ſeveral Letters, Notes and Memorandums before mentioned, which were for the Purpoſes I before opened to you; and further, to bring theſe Purpoſes and treaſonable Intentions to paſs, they did for One Hundred Pounds hire and prepare a Ship, which was to carry them ſecretly out of this Kingdom into France, with an Intent there to deliver theſe Inſtructions, and Memorandums, and Bills of Exchange into the Hands of their Majeſties Enemies; and did hire a Boat to carry them to the Ship, and did enter into it at St. Clement Danes, within your County, and rowed to the Ship, and went on board the Ship, and there with the Bills of Exchange, Notes, and Memorandums, they ſet ſail to go to France, in order to deliver them to the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen; and the Indictment doth further ſet forth, that there hath, and ſtill is, a War between the French King, and our King and Queen, and that he and his Subjects are Enemies to the King and Queen and their Subjects; and that during this War, the Priſoner together with the reſt that were before named, were adhering to the King and Queen's Enemies in this War; and in purſuance thereof, did prepare ſuch Letters and Inſtructions before opened, and had, and concealed in their Cuſtody, and hired a Ship and a Boat, and went into the Ship, and ſet ſail in order to go for France, to aid and aſſiſt the King's Enemies there with Money, Intelligence, and Counſel; and this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove him Guilty, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted of a very heinous Offence, no leſs than High Treaſon, the greateſt Offence that can be committed againſt any Human Law. You have heard the Particulars in the Indictment read. I will not trouble you with any Repetition, but go to open the Evidence according to the Steps that are obvious in the Caſe.

You

You have heard in general, the Deſign was to depoſe this King and Queen, which the Law expounds to be to bring them to Death and Deſtruction: You have heard it was to alter the Government, and cauſe a Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to bring in a foreignPower; and theſe are laid to be the Heads of the Offences that the Priſoner ſtands charged with.

Gentlemen, the firſt Step that was made in this Matter was by the Priſoner at the Bar; for there was one Mr. Burdett, which it ſeems had been one of his Acquaintance, and had undertaken to bring him acquainted with a Perſon that could furniſh him with a Ship; and in order to that, one Mrs. Pratt, that had the Management of the Smack which belonged to her Huſband, ſhe, by Burdett's Means was brought to Burdett's Houſe, where ſhe met Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, and they had ſome Treaties about the Hiring of a Ship; the Purpoſe declared by the Priſoner then, was to hire a Ship to go to any Part of France, and he would give a conſiderable Reward for it; he ſaid it was for himſelf and Three more. They did not come to any Concluſion about the Ship, but there was an Appointment made, to have the Maſter of the Ship to meet with them at the Wonder Tavern, in Ludgate-ſtreet; and in order to that, Paſeley, that is the Maſter, and the Woman came there, and met with Mr. Aſhton; but becauſe Mr. Burdett was not there, they came only to this Propoſal, One Hundred and Fifty Pounds was demanded for the Hire of this Veſſel; but there being no Concluſion then made, they thought it better to do it at Burdett's Houſe, and about a Day after they came to Mr. Burdett's, and then it happen'd that Elliot, one of the Perſons that is indicted, but not one before you, came thither too; and at that Time it was agreed to give One Hundred Pounds for the Hire of the Ship. Ninety-three Guineas were depoſited in Mrs. Burdett's Hands; and there was a Token paſt betwixt them by the breaking of a Six-pence, one Part whereof was to lie with Mr. Aſhton, and the other with Mrs. Burdett; and whenever the Maſter of the Veſſel brought back the broken Piece of Six-pence that Mr. Aſhton had, then ſhe was to pay the Money, that being the Sign that they had attained their Ends, and were ſafely landed in France.

The next Step they take is this, they appoint to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent-Garden, thither the Maſter of the Veſſel and the Woman were to come, and that was near the Time, that very Day that they deſigned to go down; and there was Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliott, but the other Perſon did not appear as yet; there the Seamen were ordered to go along with them, and thence they went down to the Water-ſide, to Surrey-Stairs, and the Waterman was called, and in the mean time came my Lord Preſton and his Man to them, and they four did go in that Boat, by the Direction of the Maſter, and were carried on Board his Smack.

After they came on Board (for I would note the particular Circumſtances) they were very apprehenſive of Danger, for they knew what they went about, their own Guilt gave them Reaſon of Fear, and when they came near a Man of War, which lay at Anchor in Long-Reach, in the River, they deſired the Maſter to hide them, that they might be ſafe from any Search, and they were hid and put cloſe under the Hatches for ſome time; afterwards, when they came to another Place of Danger, it was by the Block-Houſes at Graveſend (as they apprehended) there they deſired to be hid again, and ſo they were put in that Place, where they were in very difficult Circumſtances under the Hatches, and there they remained till a Pinnace, that had been ſent to inquire after them, came and boarded this ſame Veſſel.

Upon its boarding of them, the Captain made a Search, and found theſe Gentlemen, my Lord Preſton, Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot, and I ſuppoſe his Man alſo, all hid under the Hatches.

Then the next Thing which is obſervable, Gentlemen, and the great Matter that will ſhew where the Treaſon was, is this, There was a Bundle of Papers that was on Board, ready prepared, if they had not been ſurprized, but could have had an Opportunity for it, to have been caſt over-board, and there was Lead fixed to it, to have ſunk it, and Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, was the Perſon that concealed this Bundle of Papers, betwixt his Body and his Coat, and from thence it was taken by the Captain that took them.

When they were ſo taken, the Captain, according to his Duty, was bringing the Priſoners to Whitehall, they deſired to go on Shore at Graveſend, but the Captain did not think that ſo fit, but carried them on Board the George Frigat, and then you will hear theſe Gentlemen did fall into a Treaty with the Captain to ſuppreſs theſe Papers; and one Inſtance I remember they did tell him, that ſince there were a Parcel of Papers that he had taken out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, he might take off the Lead and fix it to thoſe Papers, and ſink the others; and what ſhould he have for it? They promiſed him great Rewards, they told him he might be a great Man, he had an Opportunity of making his Fortune; and when that would not do, they uſed many Threatnings to him, all which will appear in the ſeveral Circumſtances that the Witneſſes will tell you of.

I come, Gentlemen, in the laſt Place to ſhew you, That all the whole Conſpiracy, all this Treaſon, did lie hid under this Bundle of Papers that were taken from Mr. Aſhton, and ſo he might well be afraid of having them opened, for there you will find a formed Deſign to alter this Government by a French Power and Aſſiſtance; and they contain ſo many Particulars, that in regard I would not do the King's Evidence Injury on the one hand, nor the Priſoner on the other, I will forbear repeating the particular Inſtances.

Gentlemen, you will have all the Letters and Papers read; but in the General, I muſt needs ſay, you will find it manifeſt, that there is a black and wicked Conſpiracy to introduce a foreign Power to eſtabliſh the Proteſtant Religion, and that by a Popiſh Intereſt, and to ſettle our Laws, Liberties, and Properties, by a French Army. And let them pretend what they will, for the Proteſtant Religion, when you hear theſe Papers read, no-body will imagine it was to any other Purpoſe (if the Plot had taken Effect) but to have what Religion, what Laws the French King had pleaſed to impoſe upon us.

If the Priſoner be Guilty, Gentlemen, of theſe Matters, I know you will do your Duty; but if he be not Guilty, God forbid that you ſhould find him Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. Call your Witneſſes, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We begin with Mrs. Pratt.

She was ſworn.

Sir W.

Sir W. Wil. Look you, Mrs. Pratt, here is another Gentleman at the Bar to be tried, againſt whom you are called as a Witneſs.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, my Lord.

Sir W. Wil. Pray hear what we ask you. Pray do you give the Court and the Jury an Account, what Treaty you had with that Gentleman, about a Veſſel to go to France, and what was done in it?

Mrs. Pratt. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I was ſent for to Mr. Burdet's Houſe in Queen-Street by Cheapſide, to know whether he could have a Smack to go for France; I told him yes, I could help him to one; he told me, there were two or three Gentlemen bound for France, as Merchants to fetch Silk, and I was at Mr. Burdett's two or three Times, and at laſt Mr. Aſhton met me there.

L. C. J. Holt. Look upon the Gentleman, Is that he?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that is the Gentleman, and he met me there, and meeting with Mr. Aſhton, he hired the Veſſel; but firſt of all, he deſired us to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill, to make the Bargain, and we did meet there, and were there about an Hour, or an Hour and a half, and Mr. Burdett did not come; and the next Morning, Mr. Aſhton deſired me to meet him at Mr. Burdett's again; and the next Morning I met at Mr. Burdett's, and there we made the Bargain for 100 l. and there was a Six-pence broke in two Pieces.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was the Hundred Pound paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, but we agreed on the Tueſday Morning, and there was a Six-pence broken in two, and Mr. Aſhton had both the Six-pences in his Hand, and the Tueſday Night the Hundred Pound was paid at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was by?

Mrs. Pratt. There was one Mr. Elliot, and the Maſter of the Smack, and Mrs. Burdett.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they pay the Money in Gold or Silver?

Mrs. Pratt. This Gentleman, Mr Aſhton, told the Money, there was 93 Guineas and a Six-pence, and Mr. Aſhton gave one half of the broken Six-pence with the 93 Guineas, to Mrs. Burdett; and when the Maſter of the Veſſel brought the other Half of the Six-pence, or I, either of us, we were to have the 100 l.

Sir W. Wil. Pray to what Place did they hire the Ship to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To France.

Sir W. Wil. Who hired the Ship?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman, Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. To what Hand was the Money paid?

Mrs. Pratt. It was paid in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-Chamber, into her Hand.

Sir W. Wil. Who broke the Sixpence?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton, that Day the Bargain was made.

Sir W. Wil. Who carried it away?

Mrs. Pratt. When the Money was paid, Mr. Aſhton had one, Mrs. Burdett had the other Part.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. To which Part of France were you hired to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To any Part where they could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray did they give you any Note about any Thing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, they gave me one Note to meet at the Dog Tavern, and another to meet at the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who gave you the Notes?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Look upon that Note.

(Which ſhe did.)

Mrs. Pratt. This to my beſt Remembrance Mr. Aſhton wrote, I cannot well remember the Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Aſhton deſire to meet at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and he did meet at the Dog Tavern; but Burdett did not come.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you meet at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Monday Night before New-Year's Day.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Money paid?

Mrs. Pratt. On Tueſday Night, at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After the Money was paid, what did you do the next Day?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton ordered a Note to be written, to meet at the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden, at one Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. At what Time were you to go to Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. A Wedneſday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. But at what Time?

Mrs. Pratt. Some Time about Ten o'Clock, and we came there accordingly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was with you at Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Maſter of the Veſſel, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot, and two Gentlemen more, that I never ſaw before nor ſince.

Sir W. Wil. I aſk you again, who firſt treated with you about hiring this Veſſel;

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdett firſt treated with me about it.

Sir W. Wil. Who next?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. Who made the Bargain with you?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. What can you ſay more?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let me aſk you, when you came to Mr. Rigby's, in what Manner did you go away from his Houſe, and what was ſaid at parting?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton was not there himſelf, at firſt, but he and Mr. Elliot, and two other Gentlemen were there afterwards, and Mr. Aſhton's Wife ſaid ſomething about Papers hove in a Hat at Court, and about ſomebodies being choſen; and one of the Gentlemen ſaid, there was nothing in that, I was one that was choſen laſt Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Aſhton and Elliott go out together from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not ſee them go.

Mr. Trevor. Had you any Directions from Mr. Aſhton, to ſend for a Hamper or a Trunk?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that was at Mr. Burdett's Houſe.

Mr. Trevor. When was that Hamper and Trunk to be ſent for?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Wedneſday Night before we went to Rigby's Houſe.

Sir W. Will. Do you know one Wm Paſeley?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes.

Sir W. Wil. Was he with them?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, he was with them.

Sir W.

Sir W. Wil. What Occaſion brought him thither?

Mrs. Pratt. I carried him to Mrs. Burdett's Houſe.

Mr. Trevor. Pray did the Priſoner deſire to ſee the Maſter of the Veſſel, or ſpeak with him?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and when I brought him, he ſaid he liked him very well.

Mr. Trevor. What is the Maſter's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. William Paſeley.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. Aſhton's Wife after they went away?

Mrs. Pratt. We had little Diſcourſe, only ſhe gave me ſome Victuals and Drink; and ſhe ſaid ſhe hoped I would not tell of her Husband.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What elſe did ſhe ſay?

Mrs. Pratt. She hoped God would deliver them out of the Lyon's Mouth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did ſhe ſay any Thing about Cock-crowing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, ſhe ſaid ſhe thought ſhe ſhould have no good Luck, for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by in the Chamber when the Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Maſter of the Veſſel by, and Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I heard her ſay ſomewhat of ſome Papers, which I do not very well underſtand. Does ſhe know of any Papers that the Priſoner had?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That was only about the Two Notes.

L. C. J. Holt. She talks of Papers being ſhaken in a Hat, but nothing can be made of it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you would ask her any Queſtions before ſhe goes, now is your time to do it.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may ſtand up again. Mrs. I ask a Queſtion, not ſo much in Kindneſs to myſelf, as Juſtice to another Gentleman. You ſay Mr. Elliot writ one of the Notes.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, as I remember, it was that to meet at Mr. Rigby's.

Mr. Aſhton. I do it to juſtify that Gentleman, I take that Note upon myſelf; and you ſay I hired the Ship, and Mr. Elliot was by.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot is not now upon his Trial, it concerns you only to ask ſuch Queſtions as relate to yourſelf. What is ſaid now concerning Mr. Elliot, goes for nothing againſt him.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do it only to do him Juſtice.

L. C. J. Holt. But you are to ask Queſtions only for yourſelf.

Mr. Aſhton. Remember, good Woman, you are upon your Oath; and have a Care of forſwearing yourſelf; my Blood is at Stake.

Mrs. Pratt. I am ſure I ſay nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Aſhton. Did I ever ſpeak to you of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, you did.

Mr. Aſhton. As I hope for Salvation I did not.

Mrs. Pratt. And another Thing you told me more, if I helped this well away, you would help me to the Earning of 1000 l. before Lady-Day.

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen, as to what was ſaid of that kind, of helping her to 1000 l. is no great Matter to the Thing in Hand; for if I was minded to go out of the Kingdom, it was neceſſary to uſe all Arguments I could, to perſuade her to help me to go away.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, you muſt ſtay your time before you ſpeak to the Jury; make your Obſervations upon the Evidence to yourſelf, you ſhall be heard at large all that you can ſay in your proper Time.

Mr. Aſhton. I do aſſure myſelf, my Lord, of all the Favour that can be ſhewn to a Man in my Circumſtances.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have all that is juſt, I do aſſure you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I am glad in the Circumſtances I am in, that I am to be tried before your Lordſhip. But, good Woman, by Virtue of the Oath that you have taken, did I ever ſpeak to you directly or indirectly of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and you asked for a Hole to hide what you might have occaſion to keep ſecret.

Mr. Aſhton. But I ask you about going to France; did I ſpeak to you about going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, you did.

Mr. Aſhton. Then, as I hope to be ſaved, I never ſpoke directly or indirectly of going to France to her.

Mrs. Pratt. You were not to go for Holland or Flanders, I am ſure.

Mr. Aſhton. Nay, I did take it for granted, that you did know before I met you, that we were to go to France; but I never ſpoke to you of it in my Life, that I am ſure of; but I only urge this to let your Lordſhip know, that Woman has forgotten herſelf.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, You will have all lawful Favour; but your Time for arguing upon the Evidence is not come.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You muſt ask your Queſtions now, and make your Obſervations afterwards; you muſt reſerve yourſelf for that, till after we have done.

Mr. Aſhton. But then, my Lord, I ſhall have too many Things for my Memory to retain; and therefore I beg leave, as they occur to my Memory now, and as the Witneſſes go along, to make my Obſervations.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, Pray, when the Veſſel was hired, and you were told it was to go to France, what Perſons did Mr. Aſhton ſay were to go with him?

Mrs. Pratt. Three Perſons he ſaid were to go, but he did not name them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſet up William Paſeley.

[Which was done.]

Sir W. Williams. What can you ſay of any for the hiring of a Veſſel?

Paſeley. I did not know the Veſſel was hired before I came thither.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Prithee tell us what thou doſt know.

Paſeley. The Woman came to me when I was at Billingſgate, and ſaid I muſt go a little Way along with her; and as we were going, ſhe told me it was to go to M. Burdett's in Queen-Street; and when we came there, Ellict and Aſhton were not within: But by that time we had been there a little while in came Mr. Aſhton, and preſently after him Mr. Elliot; and Mr. Aſhton bid the Woman give him the Money out of the Place where it was.

Juryman. My Lord, we do not hear him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray begin again, and ſpeak out.

Paſeley. I met with this Woman at Billingſgate, and and ſhe told me I muſt go a little way along with her.

L. C. J. Holt. That Woman, name her.

Paſeley. Mrs. Pratt; and I went along with her, and askt her where ſhe was going; ſhe ſaid up into Queen-Street: And coming to Queen-Street, we went to Mr. Burdett's Houſe, I was never there in my Life before. When I came there, Aſhton nor Elliot were neither of them there; after a little while in came Aſhton, and preſently after in came Elliot, and he went up Stairs into the Bed-chamber; and being in the Bed-chamber, they brought the Money out, rolled up in a half Sheet of Paper, ſet up an Edge, and told it out at the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. Who told it?

Paſeley. Aſhton told the Money out; and after the Money was told, he pulled out two pieces of a Six-pence, and when he had pulled out the two pieces of a Six-pence, he gives one half to this Mrs. Burdett, and the other half he kept himſelf; and he bid her pay this ſame Money, when the other half Six-pence that Aſhton kept, came to this Woman, to match that which ſhe had; and after the Money was told, we ſtaid but a ſmall while there, and came down Stairs; and when we came down Stairs we went down to Billingſgate. I think John Fiſher was there, and we carried away with us a Trunk and a Hamper; John Fiſher carried the Trunk, and another Man the Hamper; and after that we had carried the Things on Board, I came up to the Houſe again; and after I came up to the Houſe, they directed us to go to the Seven-Stars in the little Piazza, there was a Note written to direct us, which ordered us to go thither betwixt 10 and 11 at Night. When we came there, I think there was neither of them there preſent, but by that time we had been there a ſmall Space, in they both came and ſate down; and a Gentleman came in and ſaid the Cock crowed, and therefore they ſhould have no good Luck. And then they talked about Papers being toſſed in a Hat, I don't know what, and in came two Gentlemen more, juſt before we went away, to ſee them; and after thoſe Gentlemen had ſeen them, they ſtaid but a little while. Says Elliot to me, Maſter, come along with me; ſo I went along with him, and we came to Surrey-ſtairs, and on the Corner on the Left-Hand, there was an Alehouſe. He called the Waterman out of the Ale-houſe, and he bid me go before, and I went down; and by the Time that I had gotten down, the Waterman came and halled his Wherry to, and I went in, and by that time I was gotten to the Stern, down came Aſhby and Elliot, and my Lord, and his Man.

L. C. J. Holt. You mean Aſhton, not Aſhby?

Paſeley. Yes, my Lord, that is the Man. And after they had got into the Wherry, and were ſeated, they bid the Waterman put off from Land, and ſo we went through Bridge; and after we were through Bridge, we got on Board the Smack, and they got into the Cabbin; and when they were got into the Cabbin, I called my Men, and bid them hale up the Anchor, and they did ſo; it proved to be but little Wind, but that Tide we got below half-way Tree, and were forced there to drop our Anchor, and ſtay till the next Morning: The next morning we weighed Anchor, and by that time it was Nine a Clock, we got to Long-Reach, where lay the George Man of War, and there they hid.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And how was the hiding pray?

Mr. Paſeley. It was down in the Quarters under the Hatches.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Why did they hide?

Paſeley. We reckoned they would come on Board a Preſſing, and they bid me ſhew my Protection.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they deſire to be hid?

Paſeley. Yes, and after we came by the George Man of War, they came up again, and remained afterwards in the Cabbin, till we came almoſt to Graveſend: A little before we came to Graveſend, they all hid again; and when they were hid, remained hid all, I think, but only Elliot, I think, he popt up; and they were reſolved to go eat their Victuals; but then I told them there was a Barge a coming, and ſo he went down again, and there they remained till they were taken, for the Barge was on Board preſently, and found them there.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of Place was it that they were hid in?

Paſeley. They could not ſit, nor ſtand upright in it, but lay all along, or leaned on their Elbows.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they lie upon there, pray?

Paſeley. There was Ballaſt, and ſlit Deal atop of the Ballaſt.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Well, what happened when the Captain came on Board?

Paſeley. When Captain Billop came on Board, Maſter, ſays he, you have got a Couple of ſtout young Men, I muſt preſs them, or to that Effect. I hope not ſo, Captain, ſaid I. Why what have you to ſhew, ſays he? I told him, I had a Protection. Let me ſee it, ſays he: So I ſhews him my Protection, and he looks in it. Well, ſays he, Maſter, I muſt look farther; and went to rights to the Place where they lay, and found them lying all together. After they were taken, and were come out, Captain Billop commanded them into his Boat, and commanded me and my two Men, to go into the Barge; afterwards he ſet his Man on ſhoar at Hungerford Stairs; and when we came to Whitehall Bridge, the Gate was not opened, and we ſtaid a little while at Whitehall Bridge; and when we came a Shoar, Elliot gave me half a Crown, and bid me ſay, when I came upon my Examination, that we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where were you bound for, pray?

Paſeley. They examined me in the Chamber, when they paid the Money, if I knew they went to France; and I told them, Yes, very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they deſire you to go to any particular Port in France?

Paſeley. No, we were to touch at any Place we could.

Sir W. Williams. Did they mention any thing of Flanders to you?

Paſeley. No, they did not.

L. C. J. Holt. Did any body mention going to France to you?

Paſeley. Yes, they did. They ask'd me, whether I could carry them to France ſafe.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Who did ask you that?

Paſeley. Elliot or Aſhton, one of the two, I cannot directly ſay which; but if I be not miſtaken, it was Aſhton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When came you from Rigby's at the Seven-Stars? Who came away with you?

Paſeley. Aſhton and Elliot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Elliot and Aſhton both come out with you?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. And did they part after they were come out?

Paſeley. Yes, Aſhton did go away from us preſently after we were come out.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. When you came on Board, had you any Diſcourſe with Aſhton about going to France?

Paſeley. No, not that I remember.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go on Foot from the Seven-Stars?

Paſeley. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. And did they part after you come out?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

L. C. J. Holt. And who went with you, did you ſay?

Paſeley. Elliot came with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Whither went Mr. Aſhton then?

Paſeley. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he ſay to you when he went from you?

Paſeley. He bid me go along with Elliot.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mr. Aſhton there as ſoon as you?

Paſeley. Not quite; but by that time the Waterman had got the Boat to the Shore, and I in the Stern, they were all come down.

L. C. J. Holt. When Aſhton came, who came along with him?

Paſeley. I ſaw them all upon the Stair-head; I was in the Boat when they came. I never ſaw my Lord, till he was upon the Stairs.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to ask him, What the Sum of Money was, that was paid at Burdett's?

Paſeley. It was 93 Guineas and Six-pence.

L. C. J. Holt. Who brought it?

Paſeley. It was laid down in the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. But I ask you, who brought it?

Paſeley. I did ſee Aſhton bring it, and lay it down in the Window, and he told it out, and put it up again, and gave it to Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know what is the uſual Rate to go to Flanders; what may a Smack and three Men deſerve?

Paſeley. Truly I cannot tell, I never went upon my own account in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Pratt, what ſay you, what is the uſual Rate to go for Flanders or Holland?

Mrs. Pratt. I believe they may go for a matter of 20 l. or 30 l.

L. C. J. Holt. You hear them, Gentlemen, what they ſay?

Juryman. Yes; but, my Lord, he ſays, he gave them Notice the Barge was a coming: I deſire to ask him, Did he know there was a Deſign to ſearch him or no?

Paſeley. Sir, I knew that there was a Search for Seamen.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you know there was to be a Search, in order to the taking theſe Gentlemen on Board you? For that is the Queſtion, I believe, the Jury would ask you.

Paſeley. No, I did not know of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you ſay, theſe Gentlemen deſired to be hid?

Paſeley. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you hid them according to their Deſire?

Paſeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before you went on Board, had you any Diſcourſe of hiding? Did they ask you for a Place to hide in?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who did?

Paſeley. Aſhton and Elliot both ask'd if there were a Place in the Ship to hide them, and I told them, yes, there was.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire to ask him this Queſtion: Did we deſire you to come and hide us, or did you deſire us to go down?

Paſeley. You deſired this of us, that if we ſaw any Man of War's Boat we would tell you, that you might be hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray repeat that over again, did they deſire you to give them Information when any Boat was coming, that they might hide, or did you deſire them to hide yourſelf?

Paſeley. They deſired it of me.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſet up Charles Betſworth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Betſworth is examined, I would ask Paſeley one Queſtion? Was there any Coat left on Board you?

Paſeley. Yes, there were two Coats of the Waterman's left on Board, and I took them and lock'd them up.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Man that own'd the Coats?

Paſeley. Yes, it is.

Sir W. Williams. Then, Betſworth, will you give an Account of what you know againſt the Priſoner at the Bar?

Betſworth. I cannot tell, my Lord, I never ſaw the Gentleman in my Life before, that I know of.

Sir W. Williams. Prithee hear, Friend, tell what you know of carrying any Gentlemen on Board the Smack.

Betſworth. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I was going Home from our Stairs about 7 or 8 a Clock in the Evening; that is, from Surrey Stairs, and a Gentleman called, Sculler. Said I to him, Sir, where do you go? Says he, As far as the Tower; ſaid I, 'Tis againſt Tide, I cannot go; it will be Ten a Clock before it be high Water. Says he, Will you go with us at that Time? Said I, What will you give me? Will you give me half a Crown? then I'll carry you down, for I cannot ſtay out ſo late for nothing. Yes, ſays he, I will give it you. Then I came and brought my Boat to the Shore; he asked me then, What my Name was; I told him Charles Betſworth. Says he, Will you be ſure to ſtay till we come? Yes, ſaid I, if you will be ſure to come; and if I be not here, I will be at ſuch a Houſe, an Alehouſe, that was there by; the Sign of the Swan: So I ſtaid, and carried a Fare or two over the Water; and about 11 a Clock comes a Gentleman down, and calls Charles, and I went out a Doors down towards my Boat, and there comes one Gentleman down, and a kind of a Seaman, as I thought; and the Seaman went into the Stern, and the Gentleman ſat down at the Back-board, and there was three Gentlemen more came down the Stairs into the Boat; one had a whitiſh Cloak, and the other a looſe Coat; and they brought a Leather Bag that would hold about a Peck; ſo I put off with them, and rowed down the River, and all that I heard them ſay, was, when we came under the Temple, ſays one of the Gentlemen, When do you hear the King goes away? Says another of them, He goes away a Tueſday; and when we got through Bridge, one of the Gentlemen ask'd where the Veſſel lay, and a Man in the Stern ſaid, On Southwark Side, over-againſt the Tower; and when we came a little below Battlebridge, near Pickle-Herring Stairs, the Maſter ſaid, There lies the Veſſel, and it had a long Pendant and a Top-Sail looſe; ſo they paid me before they came on Board, and when they were got a Board, away rowed I; and when I came to Land to take out my Sculls and Things, there I miſt my Cloaths; and I rowed after them, thinking they could not be got far; but when I came to the Place where they went on Board, the Veſſel was gone, and I rowed down as low as Limehouſe Reach, and in Blackwall Reach I overtook a Veſſel, which I thought was the Veſſel. I ask'd them who they belonged to, and they ſaid they came from Horſeleydown, and I made anſwer, I brought two Fares on Board a Veſſel at Pickle-herring Stairs, and had forgot to take my Cloaths that they had; they made Anſwer, I brought no Fare on Board them; ſo I rowed on farther beyond Barkinſhelf, and becauſe there was no Wind, I thought none could have gone beyond that Place, and therefore reſolved to row back again when it was Flood; and I rowed up to Greenwich, but could not meet with the Veſſel; and I heard nothing of my Cloaths, till laſt Friday was Seven-night I had my Cloaths brought to me.

Sir W. Williams. Can you ſay this Gentleman, Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, was one of them that you carried on Board the Smack?

Betſworth. No, I know never a one of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But you ſay the Perſons that you took in at Surrey Stairs carried away your Cloaths with them?

Betſworth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then I ask you, Paſeley, is that one of the Perſons that he brought on Board your Smack?

Paſeley. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How many came on Board the Smack?

Paſeley. Four; my Lord Preſton, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot, and my Lord Preſton's Man.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pendant?

Paſeley. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did you take it in?

Paſeley. As ſoon as we weighed Anchor.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How came you to take it in?

Paſeley. Elliot ſpoke to me take it in.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they mention how many were to go in the Smack?

Paſeley. He ſaid, there were three of them, not four, as I remember, that were to go.

Sir W. Williams. Will you ask him any thing, Mr. Aſhton.

Mr. Aſhton. No, Sir: But I deſire the Woman may not go out of Court.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no; She ſhall ſtay.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then call John Fiſher and James Amonds. (Fiſher ſtood up.)

Sir W. Williams. Pray do you acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of this Matter, whether you carried any Things on Board the Smack, and what, and who came on Board, and what hapned.

Fiſher. My Lord, a matter of ſix Hours before they came on Board, my Maſter carried me a Shore, and brought me to Mr. Burdett's Houſe, and gave me a Trunk, and I went with it, and another Man with a Hamper, and brought them on Board; and about 11 or 12 a Clock, my Maſter comes and brings Mr. Aſhton and the other aboard; and he bid me go forward, and heave up the Anchor, and ſo I did, and we went down the River; but we could go but a little way becauſe there was no Wind; and when we came to Halfway-Tree, the Tide turning, we were forced to caſt Anchor again, and ſtay till the Morning; and in the Morning we weigh'd Anchor again, about 8 a Clock, and about 9 we came into Long Reach, where lay the George Man of War, and then Mr. Aſhton and they hid; and when we came below them again, they came up again till we came almoſt near the Block-Houſes at Graveſend, and there they hid again; and Mr. Aſhton, I think, came up afterwards, and bid me go down to the Hamper, and fetch them up ſome Victuals for their Dinner, and I went down and fetched up ſome Beef, and Mr. Aſhton took hold of it; and I took a Bottle of Wine or two out; and juſt before I brought all the Victuals up, the Barge was ſpied a coming to us; and then he went down again, and there they hid, and the Piece of Beef was a Top of them. Captain Billop, when he came near, waved his Hat, to bid us lie by; and we did lie by till he came up to us; and when he came up to us, ſays he, Maſter, you have gotten a Couple of good likely Men, worth the coming on Board for. Says the Maſter, I hope, Captain, you won't preſs them. What have you to keep you clear? Says he, I have a Protection. Have you, ſays the Captain? Let me ſee it. So he ſhewed him the Protection, and he read both our Names in it. Then, ſays he, Maſter, I muſt look farther; and he went down to the Quarter-Hatches, and took them up juſt where they lay. Firſt my Lord came out; and he ſearched them all, as they came out. Mr. Elliot came out next, and Mr. Aſhton ſtaid within, being the laſt Man. And after he had ſearched them, and done what he pleaſed, he got all the Papers and Writings; then he commanded us all to go into the Barge, and they came on Board the George Frigate in Long Reach. And at the Ship, Mr. Elliot came to us, and bid us ſay, we were going to Flanders. And after we came to Whitehall, Mr. Aſhton gave me a half Crown Piece, and bid me ſay, we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

L. C. J. Holt. Was that after they were taken, or before?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was the firſt time, that they would have you ſay, they were bound for Flanders?

Fiſher. It was on Board the George Frigat in Long Reach.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that bid you ſay ſo?

Fiſher. Mr. Elliot and Mr. Aſhton both, in the Ship's Steerage, where they came to us.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Where was the next Place, that they bid you ſay ſo?

Fiſher. At Whitehall Bridge Aſhton gave me a half Crown Piece, and bid me ſay ſo.

Juryman. Did he ſpeak that aloud, or ſoftly at Whitehall?

Fiſher. He whiſpered it in my Ear.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they ever ſay they were bound for Flanders, till after they were taken?

Fiſher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of Place was this that they hid in?

Fiſher. An ugly Hole, where a Man has no Room to lie along at Eaſe; he can neither ſtand upright, nor ſit upright.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you ſee the Waterman that brought them on Board?

Fiſher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any Waterman's Coat left?

Fiſher. Yes, there was two.

L. C. J. Holt. But didſt thou ſee the Boat?

Fiſher. We were aſleep when they came on Board, and the Boat was put off aſſoon as ever they came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then aſſoon as ever they were on Board, you got up the Anchor, and pulled in the Pendant?

Fiſher. Yes. We immediately hove up the Anchor, and took in the Pendant.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did any Sculler hale you afterwards, as you were going down?

Fiſher. Yes, as we were going down there did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did you ſay to him?

Fiſher. I was not ſteering then; but this other Man made Anſwer.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, Will you ask him any Thing?

Mr. Aſhton. When I gave you the half Crown that you ſpeak of, what did I ſay to you?

Fiſher. You bid me when I came to be examined, ſay we were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Mr. Aſhton. What did I ſay elſe?

Fiſher. You bid me take that half Crown for to Night, to help to bear my Charges, and Tomorrow you would take farther Care of us.

Mr. Aſhton. I told you, you were Priſoners now, and I gave you that, and told you I would take farther Care of you.

Fiſher. You did not ſay we were Priſoners, but you ſaid you gave me that to help bear Charges for that Night, and on the Morrow you would take farther Care of us.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſet up James Amonds.

Sir W. Williams. Are you ſworn, Friend?

Amonds. Yes, Sir.

Sir. W. Williams. Then let the Court and the Jury know what you can ſay in this Matter.

Amonds. My Lord, they came on Board about 11 or 12 a Clock at Night; I was aſleep in the Cabbin, and heard a Boat coming aboard, and I turned out, and before I could get out of the Cabbin, they were got aboard, and I ſee no Boat, nor nothing. So ſays the Maſter, Go forward and heave up the Anchor; and after we had heaved up the Anchor, I goes into the Ship to tow the Veſſel down, becauſe there was no Wind, and we would not let the Veſſel go foul on the Ships that were in the River, and a little after we came on Board again; and when I came on Board again, they were all on Board, all Four. After that comes a Waterman, and I was at the Helm ſteering, and he called out to us! Oh hoe, ſays he; did not I bring a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board this Smack? Not as I know of, ſaid I. Says he, I carried a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board ſome Smack that had a Pendant out, and I know not where it is; they carried my Cloaths on Board with them. Said I, I know nothing of it, nor I did not; for I ſaw neither Waterman nor Boat; ſo away the Waterman goes, and we went down the River, and when we came to Halfway Tree, we came to Anchor, and my Maſter went and laid himſelf down, the Tide being almoſt done, and there being no Wind, and Mr. Aſhton and they lay in the Cabbin; and ſays Mr. Aſhton to me, Take Care of us now, and we will take Care of you hereafter; ſays he, we ſhall help you to many a Freight, and many a Pound. Ay, ay, ſaid I, you will be taken Care of to be ſure at Day-break, or when the Day comes on: About 8 a Clock, we hove up the Anchor again, and fell down as low as Long Reach, where the George Frigate lay; and when we came there, they went down to hide in the Quarter-Hatches. I ſteered it down ſtill; and when we were got paſt that Man of War, the Hatches were taken up, and they came up again out of the Quarters, and ſate in the Cabbin again, and we had a freſh Gale of Wind, and run down to Graveſend quickly, and when we came near the Block-Houſes, ſaid I, We are almoſt at the Block-Houſes; then ſaid they, We will go down and hide a little; and ſo they did till they were paſt there, then reſolving to go to Dinner.

L. C. J. Holt. What time a Day was this?

Amonds. About 11 a Clock, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, they did go down to hide then, did they?

Amonds. Yes, they did go down and hide, and came up again, I am ſure ſome of them; I heard ſome of them in the Cabbin.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, what followed?

Amonds. After they were gotten up, and paſt Graveſend, this Man was ſent for Victuals for them, and ſo he fetch'd them ſome Roaſt Beef, and ſome other Things; and juſt as the Roaſt Beef was going into the Cabbin, ſaid I, Here comes a Barge off to Preſs. So when I cried, the Barge was a coming, they took the Victuals down into the Quarters, and there lay they, and the Victuals a-top of them. And when the Barge came near us, the Captain waved his Hat to command us to lie by. Said I, We muſt lie by, for the Barge is coming up to us. And we clapp'd the Helm-a-lee, and lay by; and after we were laid by, the Barge came on Board us. Says the Captain of the Barge, You have got a Couple of likely, good Men, Maſter, ſaid he. Ay, ſays the Maſter, but I hope you won't preſs them. Says the Captain, Have you got any thing to keep you clear? Yes, if it pleaſe you, noble Captain, I have got a Protection. I am ſorry for that, ſays he, and comes on Board, for he ſtaid all this time in the Barge; and ſmiling upon him, he comes on Board, and ſays he, Come, let's ſee your Protection. And the Maſter ſhew'd it him, and he read it. Says the Captain, I muſt look a little farther. And he goes into the Cabbin, and took up the Hatches, and there there lay all theſe Gentlemen. They were ſomething longer in coming up than he would have them; ſo ſays the Captain to his Men in the Barge, Come on Board, and ſee who is here. And ſo ſome of his Men did come on Board; and, to the beſt of my Remembrance, my Lord was the firſt Man that came up: And when my Lord came up, the Captain run his Hands into his Coat Pockets, to feel for Papers, as I ſuppoſe; and my Lord deſired the Captain to be kind, and take nothing away. Says he, I'll take nothing but Papers; 'tis Papers I look for: And he pull'd out a Watch, and gave it him again. After that, Elliot came out; and whether he found any thing upon Mr. Elliot, or no, I cannot tell. Mr. Aſhton was the laſt that came up; and when he came up, a Waterman of the Captain's calls to him, and ſays, That Gentleman that came up laſt has put ſomething into his Boſom, but what I can't tell. So the Captain took Mr. Aſhton by the Arm, and turn'd him about; and, ſays he, What did you put in your Boſom? Says Mr. Aſhton, Nothing but my Handkerchief; and pull'd out his Handkerchief, and ſhew'd him. Then the Captain put his Hand in, and pull'd out Papers, with a piece of Lead tied to them. And that is all that I ſaw.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But tell us what happen'd afterwards.

Amonds. When that was done, the Captain commanded us all into his Barge; and I rowed, and ſome of the reſt row'd, it being cold Weather, till we came up to London. After we came up to London, they did not ſay any thing to me, becauſe I was a rowing till then. It ſeems they did give them ſome Money, but they gave me none, not till I came into Whitehall; and then my Lord's Man came to me, and call'd me a one Side; ſays he, Here's half a Crown, will ſerve you to Night; and be ſure, when you come to be examined, that you ſay, you were bound for Flanders, and not for France, and you will be taken farther Care of To-morrow.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of Place is that Quarter-Hatches?

Amonds. They could neither ſit, nor ſtand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did they lie upon?

Amonds. There were three or four ſlit Deals that were laid over the Ballaſt, but it ſeems they had ſhuffled 'em on one Side when they were taken, for the Ballaſt lay open.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did the Waterman that brought theſe Men on Board you, leave his Coat there?

Amonds. I did not ſee the Boat, nor the Waterman; and therefore I am not able to ſay any thing about it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came the Pendant to be taken down?

Amonds. I can't tell that, I was in the Skiff when it was taken down.

Juryman. My Lord, I do not well underſtand how the Papers came to be taken away from Mr. Aſhton.

L. C. J. Holt. He tells you, Mr. Aſhton was ſeen to put his Hand with ſomething into his Boſom; and being tax'd with it, he ſaid it was his Handkerchief; and the Captain put in his Hand, and pull'd out a Bundle of Papers.

Juryman. Did he ſee Aſhton take away the Papers from any other Place?

Amonds. No, an't pleaſe your Honour, I did not ſee them till they were taken out of his Boſom.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee Captain Billop take the Papers from out Mr. Aſhton's Coat?

Amonds. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Holt. Where were they before they ſpy'd the Barge a coming?

Amonds. If it pleaſe your Honour, I heard 'em talk; I thought they had been up, but it ſeems there was but one of 'em up when they ſaid, the Barge was coming aboard: I was at the Helm, and heard 'em talk.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you knew nothing of theſe Papers, but when you ſaw them taken out of Aſhton's Boſom?

Amonds. No, my Lord.

Sir W. Williams. If you will ask him any thing, Mr. Aſhton, now you may.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Friend, had not I been up firſt, and ſearch'd before the Papers were taken?

Amonds. Not as I know of.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not I go down into the Hold to take my Hat, and call to you, and deſired that I might go down for my Hat?

Amonds. I can't tell; for when I ſaw the Papers taken from you, I was in the Stern; I was not down.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not I been ſearched firſt?

Amonds. Not that I know of, till you were in the Stern.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſwear Captain Billop.

Which was done, he ſtanding up by the Sheriff.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Captain, I ſuppoſe you may be heard from that Place.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire the Witneſs may come down, elſe I ſhall not be able to diſtinguiſh what he ſays: It is the proper Place for him I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Let him come down.

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly deſire, my Lord, that the Witneſſes may all be obliged to ſtay in Court.

L. C. J. Holt. Let them all ſtay.

Sir W. Williams. You are ſworn, Sir: Are you not?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I am.

Sir W. Williams. Then, pray, will you give an Account where you took theſe Perſons, how you took 'em, what you found, and how you diſpoſed of it.

Capt. Billop. Muſt I begin from the Beginning?

Sir W. Williams. Yes; Tell your whole Knowledge, in Order of Time, as it fell out.

Capt. Billop. What, from the Time I went out?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Make it as ſhort as you can.

Sir W. Williams. Yes, you muſt tell all; for you ſpeak now to a new Jury, and here is another Priſoner at the Bar to be tried.

Capt. Billop. The laſt of December, about Two a Clock, or between One and Two, my Lord of Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the Houſe of Lords, and told me, his Father muſt ſpeak with me; and he carried me up to my Lord Lindſey's Chamber; and in a little time my Lord Preſident came there, and told me, he heard there were divers Perſons that had Papers of dangerous Conſequence, and were going to France, and deſired me to uſe my Skill for my ſeizing

ſeizing and ſecuring of the Papers. I began then to talk of what was proper for ſuch an Undertaking; and I told my Lord, I thought the beſt way was to go to Woolwich or Deptford, and to take a Man of War's Pinnace with us: Upon that, my Lord of Danby being by, ſaid, he knew of a Boat that he could have, which was my Lord Duke of Grafton's; and my Lady Dutcheſs had lent it him, and he would go and get it ready: Upon this my Lord Preſident ſaid, he would give me a Note of the Name of the Veſſel, and where ſhe went out; and likewiſe a Letter to another Perſon, that would inſtruct me farther, and ſhew me the Veſſel; accordingly my Lord Preſident gave me the Letter, and I went away to look for the Perſon, but could not find him. My Lord Danby came to Tower-Wharf himſelf with the Boat; and I left a Man there to bring me Word when the Boat came up at the Place where I was; and Captain Stringer, and Sir Thomas Taylor came there to me. After my Lord of Danby had told me what I had in the Boat, I told him, I thought there were not Arms enough; and therefore it were beſt to go to the Tower, to borrow ſome Arms from thence: When we came to the Tower, my Lord Lucas was not come in; and when I had ſtaid a little time, he did come in: And when I had acquainted him with my Buſineſs, he ſent for an Officer of the Guard, and there we borrowed ſome Arms, a Blunderbuſs of his, and a Carbine, and the like; and about a Eleven a Clock, or ſomewhat paſt, we put off from Tower-Wharf. It was Calm, and we rowed down towards Graveſend; and we went aboard a Veſſel or two, but I was not willing to loſe much time, becauſe I was reſolved to take them before they were gotten too far: So we rowed away for Graveſend, where I refreſhed my Men, and afterwards went down into the Hope; and I did Judge that no Veſſel that came from London that Tide could be a head of me. I went on Board ſeveral Veſſels that lay in the River, in order unto the preſſing of Men; and I went on Board all Sorts of Veſſels, becauſe I would give no Suſpicion of what I was about; and having been on Board of ſeveral, I preſſed two or three Barkin Men; and one particularly, that knew all the Veſſels upon the River, and I made him to row very near to me, that I might talk to him; I had got the Names of a great many Smacks, and gave it out that I would preſs a Smack to carry for a Tender to my Ship, when the Fleet went out; and naming this Smack that I was to go ſearch, I told him, I heard ſuch a Smack ſailed well, and I had Thoughts of preſſing her; he told me, She was old; but ſaid I, She will ſerve a Summer well enough; and that is it I intend to preſs, if I can find her. Says he, I'll ſhew you her, I know her when I ſee her; ſo we went on Board ſeveral Veſſels as we went along. And as we were rowing along, before we came to the Neſt Point by Tilbury-Fort, we ſaw ſeveral Smacks coming down the River; and when we came about the Point, the headmoſt Smack of all, the Fellow lookt out, and ſaid, Yonder is the Thomas and Elizabeth. Then I called to one of my Men to wave, and bring them to lie by, which they did, and they lay by till I came on Board. When I came on Board, I ſaw two luſty Men ſtand by the Maſter; ſaid I, Maſter, you have got two good luſty Fellows that would ſerve the King; but I'll be kind and civil to you, I'll take but one. Says the Maſter, I hope not ſo; for I have a Protection; with that, I came on Board, and took his Protection in my Hand, and read it. As ſoon as I had read it, I ask'd him, If he had no more Men upon Deck than what I ſaw? He ſaid, No. Then ſaid I, I muſt look a little farther. And I went into the Quarters, and took up the Scuttle, and the Hatches, and I ſaw ſome Gentlemen lie. Oh, ſaid I, What a pretty Poſture is this? Where are we a going? Gentlemen, you muſt turn out. The firſt that came to hand was my Lord Preſton; but I did not know him then, nor ſome time after I was in the Boat with him: So I took hold of him, and help'd him up; and when he was up, ſaid I, Sir, I muſt ſearch you. Says he, I hope you will take nothing from me. Nothing, ſaid I, but Papers: So I ſearched all his Pockets; and as I found any Papers, I put them into my own Coat Pocket. And I took his Watch, and pull'd it out, and gave it him again: After that I had ſearch'd him, came up Mr. Elliot the firſt Man, and the next was Mr. Aſhton, who crowded up while Elliot came up, in his Night-Cap. I think, Mr. Aſhton, you had your Night-Cap on. So Mr. Aſhton goes down again, and puts on a Perriwig, I think; but coming up again, one of my Seamen ſees him take ſomething, and put it into his Boſom: He follows Mr. Aſhton quick, and pulls me by the Coat; and, ſays he, That Gentleman has got ſomething in his Boſom: So I took hold of him, and turned him round; ſaid I, Mr. Aſhton, what have you got in your Boſom? Nothing, ſays he, but a Handkerchief; and immediately he put his Hand into his Boſom, and pluck'd out the Handkerchief, and ſhew'd me. As ſoon as he had pulled out the Handkerchief, I put my Hand into his Boſom, and there I met with the Pacquet that had the Lead affixed to't; and pulling it out, I clapp'd it into my own Pocket; for I thought that was the Matter of Moment that I was to ſecure. So I ordered them to go into the Boat, and the Maſter of the Veſſel to let go his Anchor; and two Men I left in the Veſſel, whom I ordered to ſearch, and to ſecure what they found till farther Order; and I left two Muſquets with them. And after we were in the Boat, they deſired to have ſomething handed in, which I gave Order for, a Hamper, and a Night Bag; and away we put off from the Veſſel, and rowed up; it was againſt Tide, and very cold Weather. In a little time Mr. Elliot called one of the Gentlemen, my Lord; then I whiſpered him, and ask'd him who that Lord was, and he told me, It was my Lord Preſton. Then I ſaluted my Lord; and my Lord was pleaſed to ſay, he was very well ſatisfied they were fallen into the Hands of a Civil Gentleman. So rowing up againſt Tide, and it being a Weſterly Wind, which blow'd very freſh, my Lord deſired that I would let them ſtop at Graveſend, till the Tide turned, that they might refreſh themſelves. I begged his Pardon, and ſaid, there was a Ship in Long-Reach, the George Frigat, and we would ſtop there; and I did not doubt, but I could command the great Cabbin for his Accommodation; and there he might have any thing that he wanted. My Lord ſeemed contented with it; but before we came on Board the Man of War, there happen'd a great deal of Diſcourſe betwixt us of ſeveral Things.

Sir W. Williams. Pray repeat it, as well as you can remember; what Diſcourſe happened?

Capt.

Capt. Billop. Truly, my Lord Preſton being cold, and the Hamper ſtanding by, ſays he, Captain Billop, we have not eaten, we will eat, if you will. And there was a piece of Beef at the Top of the Hamper, and Bottles of Wine; and I opened the Hamper, ſitting faireſt for it, and handed out the Beef, the Bread, and the Bottles; and after we had eaten what we would, my Lord ordered the reſt to be given to the Men that were the Boat's Crew, and after we had done this, and taken out a Bottle or two, and ſhut up the Hamper again, my Lord Preſton drank to me once or twice, and ſeemed very well ſatisfied and pleas'd with his Uſage. He told me, he was ſenſible of my Civilities; and if ever it lay in his Power, he would not forget me. So we drank again, and talk'd again; but before we came to the Ship, my Lord Preſton told me, that if ever it lay in his Power, he would be ſure to make an Acknowledgment of the Civility I had ſhew'd him. And, to the beſt of my Memory, he had this Expreſſion, If there ever was any thing he could ſerve me in, he would do it with all his Heart, if I would but diſpoſe of the Pacquet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What would Mr. Aſhton have had you done? What did he ſay to you?

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton ſaid, it would do me no good to injure ſo many Gentlemen; and deſired me that I would throw the Pacquet over-board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he mean by ſo many Gentlemen?

Captain Billop. My Lord, I cannot tell, but that was his Expreſſion.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who deſired you to throw the Pacquet over-board?

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton did ſeveral times.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he ſay to you? What Arguments did he uſe?

Capt. Billop. My Lord, it was ſo many times over, and ſo much mixture of Diſcourſe we had, that I am not able to tell the Particulars.

L. C. J. Holt. But what Arguments did he uſe?

Captain Billop. I don't know that he uſed any more great Arguments, more than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Holt. Say that again that you ſaid before.

Captain Billop. He ſaid, 'twould do me no good to injure ſo many Gentlemen. Prithee, Captain Billop, ſays he, throw it over-board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he ſay farther?

Captain Billop. I'll tell you, if you'll give me leave. Mr. Aſhton did ſay, a little after this, with a great deal of Inſinuation, Captain Billop, What if you ſhould turn about, and go along with us? No, Mr. Aſhton, ſaid I, that I cannot do. Says Mr. Elliot, Prithee, throw the Pacquet over-board. This they did as we came up the River; and 'tis the moſt that I can remember, 'till we came on Board the George; and when we came on Board the George, Elliot called me into the Steerage, and deſired me, of all Love, that I would diſpoſe of the Pacquet: And he ſaid, that now I had an Opportunity to make myſelf as Rich, and as Great as I would, and nobody could ſee it, if I did throw it away. While I was in the Ship, Mr. Aſhton, my Lord, and Mr. Elliot, were with me in the Steerage. Said I, I ſhall be taken notice of, to be whiſpering; pray forbear. Aſhton then ſpoke to me again, to deſire me to throw the Pacquet over-board; by this time the Victuals was handed in, and there we eat and drank, and my Lord ſmoaked a Pipe of Tobacco before the Tide turned; and when the Tide made, we went into the Boat again, and rowed up towards London, and they were uſing theſe Sorts of Arguments over and over again. And once Mr. Elliot, I think 'twas, to the beſt of my remembrance, told me, Now you have it in your Power to make your Fortune, and may be as great a Man, and as rich a Man as you can deſire. And Mr. Aſhton ſaid ſome Words ſomething to the ſame Purpoſe; Prithee, ſaid he, throw it over-board: What good will it do you? So I refuſing it, as I did many times, Mr. Elliot told me, that I might take the Letters that were taken in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and throw the Pacquet over-board. No, ſaid I, Mr. Elliot, Sure you would take the King's Council to be a very odd Sort of Men, that they cannot find out ſuch a thing as this. Prithee, dear Billop, ſaid he, throw it over-board; many times whiſpering me in the Ear; and ſo did Mr. Aſhton many times, ſaying, You may do us a great Kindneſs in it. And we drank, and had ſeveral Intermiſſions; and they at me again, and I denied them, and they deſiſted; and then they at it again: And Mr. Elliot then told me, Prithee, dear Billop, throw it over-board. Said I, Mr. Elliot, If I ſhould be ſo great a Villain to do ſuch a thing, if ever it was your Day would you truſt me again? Put it to be your own Caſe. Says he, You have Gentlemen to deal withal. But, ſaid I, I will never put it into your Power. Mr. Elliot ſeemed to be angry at this, and ſaid, Every Dog had his Day. Said I, I hope never to ſee it your Day: But I pray, forbear this Diſcourſe; let me beg that of you; for I do not deſire to be provoked to uſe you otherwiſe than as Gentlemen. And after that, they never urged me more to throw the Pacquet over-board: But Mr. Elliot was angry, and very much diſturbed, and wiſhed a Thunderbolt might ſtrike the Boat and ſink it. So I brought them up, through London-Bridge, and they ſaid no more about the Pacquet; but Elliot wiſhed, that London-Bridge might have fallen on our Heads. At length I brought them to Whitehall; and I put my Man aſhore at Hungerford Stairs, that he might get before, and give the Porter notice at Whitehall-Bridge, that he might open the Gate. I brought my Lord Preſton, and the reſt to the Bridge; and while I was arming my Men, to guard them up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, I ſuppoſe they then took the Opportunity to give the Men Money, getting near to them; I know nothing of that: But I carried them up to my Lord Nottingham's, and there I delivered them, and the Pacquet to my Lord. After ſome time, the Pacquet lay upon the Table, and my Lord Nottingham ſends me for my Lord Preſton. When my Lord Preſton came in, I withdrew without bidding, and the Pacquet lay upon the Table unopen'd: And when my Lord Preſton came out, I went in on myſelf, and the Pacquet lay in the ſame Place and Poſture, and not opened. And I ſtay'd while Mr. Aſhton was called in, and my Lord Nottingham asked him a great many Queſtions.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray repeat thoſe Queſtions, Captain Billop; and what Anſwers I made.

Captain Billop. Truly, my Memory does not ſerve me to remember all of them, and I was in a very uneaſy Condition at that time, and would much much rather have been in my Bed, than any where elſe: For the Night before I went down, I had a Plaiſter of Spaniſh Flies put to my Back, and they had raiſed a great Bliſter, and it had not been dreſſed ſo long, that the Napkin that was applied ſtuck ſo to it, that the Fleſh was jagged, and I was in a great deal of Pain, ſo that I did not mind ſo much as I ſhould have done at another time, what was ſaid.

Mr. Aſhton. But pray, Captain, remember as much as you can what paſs'd.

Captain Billop. But I'll tell you what I remember; I remember my Lord Nottingham ask'd, who I took the Packet from? And you owned, I took it from you.

Sir Will. Williams. Pray, Mr. Aſhton, give us leave to have done with him, and then you ſhall ask him what you pleaſe. Pray go on, Captain Billop.

Captain Billop. Then my Lord Nottingham ſent for Mr. Elliot in, and ask'd him whither he was going? And he ſaid for Flanders. My Lord asked him, what he was going there for? He ſaid, He was going to ſeek his Bread; he was turned out of all at Home, and he had rather go Abroad to ſeek his Bread, than ſtay at Home to ſtarve.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was this the Lead that you took fixed to the Packet?

Captain Billop. Yes, Sir; that is the Lead.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take that Lead, with the Pacquet, out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom?

Captain Billop. This was tied faſt to the Pacquet that was taken out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom. Theſe honeſt Men ſaw me take it.

Sir Will. Williams. Now, if you have a Mind to ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Captain Billop, did not you ſearch me before you took the Pacquet upon me?

Captain Billop. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not you taken ſome other Papers from me before?

Captain Billop. No, Sir; I took none from you but the Pacquet.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray recollect yourſelf, for, perhaps, my Life may turn upon it: You are as much a Witneſs for me, as for the King; you are to ſwear the Truth, and the whole Truth.

Captain Billop. And I will do you all the Juſtice I can, I will aſſure you.

L. C. J. Holt. Anſwer his Queſtion, Captain Billop.

Mr. Aſhton. Was not I the firſt Man that ſpoke to you after we came up?

Captain Billop. No, Mr. Elliot was the firſt Man that ſpoke to me, that I knew.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not I ask you to give me leave to go down for my Hat?

Captain Billop. Truly, I don't remember that.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not you reply, That the Man ſhould go down and fetch my Hat?

Captain Billop. 'Tis likely I might, but I don't remember it.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not you ſearched me then, and taken my Papers from me?

Captain Billop. No, Mr. Aſhton; for, upon the Oath that I have taken, I took no Papers that I remember, but the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and the Pacquet that I took out of your Boſom; for my Lord Nottingham ask'd me, if that Pacquet was all the Letters I took? I told him no; and ſhewed him the Papers took out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and they proved to be of no Conſequence, and my Lord Nottingham gave them me again, and I carried them to my Lord Preſton.

Mr. Aſhton. Did I not go down into the Hole for my Hat?

Captain Billop. I believe you might.

Mr. Aſhton. And was it not after that, that you took the Papers out of my Breaſt?

Captain Billop. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Aſhton. Where is your Man that called to you, and ſaid, I put ſomething in my Breaſt?

Captain Billop. Here he is, by me, if you would ask him any thing.

Mr. Aſhton. You ſay, I ſpoke to you about diſpoſing of theſe Papers: Pray, from the Time that we came into your Boat, before we came on Board the George Man of War, did I ſpeak to you?

Captain Billop. Yes, of the Pacquet you did: You ſaid, What Good would it do me to injure ſo many Gentlemen?

Mr. Aſhton. There paſs'd no more than general Diſcourſe before we came on Board.

Captain Billop. Yes, Mr. Aſhton, I'll tell you another Thing you put me in mind of. When you ſaw that, though you were ſo eager with me, nothing would prevail, you ſaid, I know Captain Billop, and have known him many Years; and nothing will prevail on him, if he have no mind to it: And I know, if he will ſerve us, he will ſerve us generouſly, and like a Gentleman.

Sir W. Williams. Speak that again.

Captain Billop. He ſaid, I know Capt. Billop; if he will ſerve us, he will do it generouſly, and like a Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton.

Mr. Aſhton. Did I ſpeak to you to diſpoſe of the Papers after we came from on Board the Ship? I ſuppoſe you remember it was cold, and the Tilt was call'd for, to be laid over us, and I fell aſleep; and you know I never wak'd, nor ſpoke, till I came to London-Bridge.

Captain Billop. Yes, yes; we had the Tilt over us.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray ſpeak your Queſtions out, that we may hear 'em, Mr. Aſhton.

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton did go to Sleep a while, but he had many times urg'd me, and ſpoke to me to throw the Papers over-board.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that told you, Every Dog had his Day?

Captain Billop. That was Elliot.

Sir W. Williams. Was there any Diſcourſe about turning of the Tide?

Captain Billop. Mr. Elliot ſaid, You have now an Opportunity to make your own Fortune, and you may be as Great, and as Rich as you pleaſe; for 'tis impoſſible the Tide can run long this way.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Aſhton ſay any thing about going along with them?

Captain Billop. Yes: You may remember, Mr. Aſhton, that you ſaid, Come, go along with us, you may do as well there, or better than you do here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did he tell you where you were to go with 'em?

Captain Billop. No, Sir; nor I did not ask him the Queſtion.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, When did you give my Lord Nottingham theſe Papers?

Capt.

Captain Billop. Do you mean that Bundle that I took out of your Boſom?

Mr. Aſhton. Yes.

Captain Billop. As ſoon as ever I followed my Lord Nottingham into his Room, I pull'd 'em out, and gave 'em him.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not you go out of my Lord Nottingham's Room, and give my Lord Nottingham ſome looſe Papers?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Aſhton. After this, was not my Lord Preſton called in to be examined?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Aſhton. How long was my Lord Preſton in the Room while you were out?

Captain Biliop. I can't tell very well.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Sir, anſwer that Queſtion.

Captain Billop. I believe it might be half a quarter of an Hour: I do not think it was much more.

Mr. Aſhton. I believe you muſt remember ſome ſort of Diſcourſe that was betwixt you and Captain Elliot, even to a Quarrel almoſt. And did you not ſpeak to my Lord Nottingham's Servants, to fetch your Hat out of my Lord Nottingham's Room?

Captain Billop. Yes, I do remember that.

Mr. Aſhton. This muſt be a good conſiderable Time: It was all the Time that my Lord Preſton was within with my Lord Nottingham, that you were out.

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Aſhton. And all that while was not the Bundle of Papers out of your Sight?

Captain Billop. It lay upon the Table.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, anſwer my Queſtion: Was it not out of your Sight?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, yes; it muſt be, for he was out of the Room.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came into the Room, did you find the Papers in the ſame Condition?

Captain Billop. Yes, they were un-opened, except that my Lord had taken off the Lead, and a little Paper fell looſe from the reſt.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, take Notice of that, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. But pray don't infer more from thence than it will bear.

Mr. Aſhton. It ſeems ſome of the Papers were taken out.

L. C. J. Holt. He does not ſay any ſuch thing, that ſome of the Papers were taken out.

Mr. Aſhton. He ſays, ſomething was cut, and ſome Papers fell out.

Captain Billop. There was a little Paper or two tied to the great Pacquet.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of them?

Captain Billop. They were cut looſe, but not opened.

Mr. Aſhton. How can you tell they were not opened.

Captain Billop. Becauſe I ſtood by when they were cut.

Mr. Aſhton. But how can you tell that; for you ſee the little Papers taken, and they were looſe from the others.

Captain Billop. They were taken from the great Bundle before I went out.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not my Lord opened thoſe Papers before you came in.

Captain Billop. No.

Mr. Aſhton. How can you tell that?

Captain Billop. I tell you, as near as I can judge, they lay in the ſame Poſture that I left them in.

Mr. Aſhton. Was the Pacquet ſealed when you took it?

Captain Billop. No; but it was tied. There were ſeveral Letters in it that were ſealed; it was tied up very hard.

Mr. Aſhton. I do not queſtion but my Lord Nottingham will do me the Juſtice to ſay how long he was in the Room.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt not comment, nor make your Obſervations till your proper Time.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I deſire he may be asked, who was with my Lord Nottingham when my Lord Preſton was there?

Captain Billop. There was nobody elſe then.

Juryman. Then 'tis not probable they were altered before Captain Billop came in.

Mr. Aſhton. But I hope Probabilities ſhall not be Evidence to condemn any Man.

Juryman. Thoſe two little Papers you ſpeak of, were they ſevered from the Pacquet?

Captain Billop. I cannot tell whether they were or no; they ſeemed looſe upon untying the Bundle.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they cut in your Preſence?

Captain Billop. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot ſay, that I did ſee them cut.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray take Notice of that, Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. They are Twelve honeſt Gentlemen, they will do you right.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Obſerve what the Witneſs ſays; he ſays, That he does not remember that they were cut in his Preſence, but he does not ſay they were not.

Mr. Aſhton. If he does not ſwear they were, it is reaſonable to conclude they were not cut in his Preſence.

L. C. J. Holt. He ſays, the great Pacquet was not opened, the two little Papers were looſe from the reſt of the great Bundle.

Captain Billop. There might be two or three of them, leſs or more, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You will be farther ſatisfied in this Matter upon my Lord Nottingham's Evidence, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We have done with Capt. Billop for the preſent. Pray call Johnſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Sir W. Williams. Were you at the taking of that Gentleman, and the other in the Smack?

Johnſon. Yes, I was.

Sir W. Williams. Then pray give an Account of the Matter how it was.

Johnſon. We went down in a Pleaſure Boat, and went to the Tower, we ſet through Bridge againſt Tide, my Lord of Danby was with us; and when we came to Tower Wharf, there they went to the Tower for Arms, and we ſtayed till Ebbing Water, and rowed to Graveſend; and when we came to Graveſend, we went on Board ſeveral Ships, and I thought we were going a Preſſing; and we ſtayed at Graveſend the Time of the Writing of a Letter, and then we went both into the Boat again, and rowed after a Smack that had gained of us, but that not being the Smack, we turned back again, and then it was high Water: And when we came to the upper-end of the Hope we ſaw ſeveral Smacks coming, and there was a Fiſherman on board that ſaid, That was the Smack the Captain enquired after, that was coming down there; and when they came on board, the Captain ſaid, there were two or three brave Men, and he hoped he could ſpare one of them: and the Maſter ſaid, he hoped he would take none of them, becauſe they had a Protection, which he ſhewed to the Captain. Then the Captain went in and bid me take ſome ſmall Arms, and go on board with him, and told the Maſter he muſt look a little further; and the Boards were taken up, and I ſaw a great Piece of Roaſt-Beef, and under that, my Lord Preſton, and Mr. Elliot, and this Gentleman, Mr. Aſhton: My Lord Preſton came up firſt, and Mr. Elliot next to him; and I ſee this Gentleman take up ſomething and put it into his Boſom, and I told the Captain of it, and he asked him what it was, and he ſaid, Nothing but his Handkerchief, and plucked out the Handkerchief; but the Captain put his Hand into his Boſom, and pulled out ſomething elſe.

L. C. J. Holt. What was it?

Johnſon. It was a Parcel of Papers tied up, with a Piece of Lead tied to it, for I came up cloſe after him, and ſee him take it up.

Sir W. Williams. What elſe were there found with the Papers? was not there ſome Seals?

Johnſon. That was afterwards; but when the Captain asked him what he had gotten in his Boſom, he pulled out his Handkerchief, and ſaid, Nothing but his Handkerchief; but the Captain took the other Papers out of his Boſom, and ſo I went down, and there were the two Seals, and I took them up; and when I came up, Elliot had a pair of black Whiskers on, and he borrowed a Pair of Sciſſars and cut them off, and ſaid, he ſhould remember me again if ever he lived, he ſhould know me by my Tooth being out. And coming up into Long-reach, Elliot was a cold, and got to the Oar and Rowed, and ſaid, You row as if you were rowing to Priſon; and he wiſhed that a Thunder-bolt might drop into the Boat, and that London-Bridge might drop down upon his Head. And when we came up to Whitehall I ſtood a Guard over them.

Juryman. Did you ſee Captain Billop take the Packet of Letters from that Gentleman's Breaſt?

Johnſon. Yes, I did.

Juryman. Did you belong to Captain Billop?

Johnſon. Yes, I was one of the Boat's Crew.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not I been up and ſearched before?

Johnſon. Yes, I think you had been up before.

Mr. Aſhton. And then you ſaw me take up the Pacquet off from the Ballaſt?

Johnſon. Yes, I ſaw you take it out of the Ballaſt and put it into your Boſom.

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen, I hope you will be pleaſed to take notice of that.

L. C. J. Holt. No doubt of it they will.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not that Bundle of Papers that was taken out of my Breaſt, did not they lie near to the Place where the Seals lay?

Johnſon. Yes, it lay juſt by them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray ſet up Captain Billop again (which was done.)

When you brought theſe Papers to Whitehall, Captain Billop, who did you deliver them to?

Captain Billop. To my Lord Nottingham.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. After he received them, what did he with them?

Captain Billop. After he had examined all theſe Gentlemen, he went to opening of the Papers, and he deſired me to ſtay in the Room till they were opened, which I did; and my Lord looking on ſome of the Papers ſaid, If this Pacquet had gone, we had quickly been viſited by the French. With that I took them up, and look'd into them. My Lord ſaid, I might look into as many Papers as I pleaſed; but I was very uneaſy, and full of Pain, and had more mind to be gone, and be a Bed, than looking into Papers; but ſeveral of the Papers I did look into, and ſeveral I put my Mark upon; and the next Day at the Council, what of them I did know, I did put my Mark upon.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. After my Lord Nottingham had peruſed them, what did he do with them?

Captain Billop. My Lord put them up in a Cover, and tied them with a Piece of Twine, and put his Seal upon them, and gave them me, and deſired me to carry them to my Lord Preſident; which I immediately did, and, without ſtopping, carried them to my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Aſhton. When was this, Sir? Was it that very Night that we were brought to Whitehall?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we muſt deſire my Lord Nottingham to be ſworn.

The Earl of Nottingham Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give the Court an Account how theſe Papers came to your Lordſhip, and how your Lordſhip diſpoſed of them.

Earl of Nottingham. Captain Billop came to my Office———

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to ſpeak louder; for I cannot hear your Lordſhip, and I fear the Jury cannot.

Earl of Nottingham. I ſpeak as loud as ever I can, but I have a great Cold.

L. C. J. Holt. You may hear my Lord very well, if the Court be but ſilent.

E. Nottingham. Captain Billop brought to me a Pacquet tied about with a Packthread, to which there was a Piece of a Leaden Pipe fixed, in which Pacquet there was ſtuck in another Paper; I think there was but that one beſides the Cover, but what it was particularly I do not remember: this Pacquet was laid upon the Table while he was by; and I called in my Lord Preſton, not being willing to make him ſtay, and after I had ſome Diſcourſe with my Lord, to examine him what Account he could give of theſe Proceedings; then I called in yourſelf, Mr. Aſhton, and Captain Billop was by alſo, but the Pacquet ſo tied with the Packthread, I cut open in Billop's Preſence with a Pair of Sciſſars; the ſame Papers that were in that Pacquet, together with the little Paper that was ſtuck in, I tied up; I am ſure I ſealed them in a Sheet of Paper, and gave them back again to Captain Billop to carry them to my Lord Preſident.

Sir W. Williams. Captain Billop, you have already declared, that all you received from my Lord Nottingham, you carried to my Lord Preſident.

Captain Billop. All the Papers that I received from my Lord Nottingham, juſt as I received them, ſealed with my Lord's Seal, I went directly to my Lord Preſident's, and gave them him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray, my Lord, did your Lordſhip deliver to Captain Billop all the Papers that you received from him?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all the Papers that Captain Billop brought to me, that were in the Pacquet (for he brought ſome Letters that he took out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, that were of no Conſequence) but all the Papers that were in the Pacquet, I delivered back to Captain Billop, ſealed as I received from him, and no more, and no others; for the other Letters, they being from my Lord Preſton's Children, and not relating to the Publick, I gave them to him to give my Lord Preſton again.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to tell the Court how long my Lord Preſton was with your Lordſhip in the Room.

E. Nott. Truly I am not able to tell you particularly how long it was, I believe it might be about a quarter of an Hour, or ſcarce ſo much.

Juryman. Was there no body with your Lordſhip, when Captain Billop was out, but only my Lord Preſton?

E. Nott. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I have one Favour more to beg your Lordſhip, I humbly pray your Lordſhip will pleaſe to tell the Court and Jury what Anſwer I gave to your Lordſhip, when you asked me how I came by thoſe Papers.

E. Nott. As near as I remember, the Account that you gave of them was, That you went down again after you were come up, as you ſaid, to fetch your Hat; and that when you did go down into the little Hole to fetch your Hat, you brought up theſe Papers with you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, this was the Account I did give. Now this very well correſponds with that Man's Evidence, that ſays he ſaw me take up the Papers and put them into my Breaſt.

L. C. J. Holt. He does ſay ſo, and this does all very well agree.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we deſire my Lord Preſident would be pleaſed to be ſworn.

The Lord Preſident ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, will your Lordſhip pleaſe to declare to the Court what Papers Capt. Billop brought to your Lordſhip, and how your Lordſhip diſpoſed of them?

L. Preſident. Captain Billop did bring me a Pacquet tied with a Packthread, and that was ſealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal, I knew it to be his Seal; and he told me, that my Lord Nottingham commanded him to bring the Pacquet to me. I opened the Pacquet, and peruſed all the Papers; it was very late, and I locked them up till Morning, and I then carried thoſe very Papers to the King, and in the King's Cloſet, at Kenſington, the King read ſome of them, and in my Sight, for I never parted from the King, but was by all the while: The King put up all the Papers again, and commanded me to call a Cabinet Council, and to let them be delivered there to the Council; accordingly I did deliver them Paper by Paper, and they were all marked there by my Lord Sydney, who is here preſent; and they were then delivered into the Hands of my Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you pleaſe to ask my Lord any Queſtions, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, if your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to pardon me, I would ask your Lordſhip, Did any of your Lordſhip's Servants, or Family read any of theſe Letters?

L. Preſident. No, not one.

Mr. Aſhton. Were they locked up where any of your Lordſhip's Secretaries, or Servants could come to them?

L. Preſident. No, I lock'd them up in a ſtrong Box in my Cloſet.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I only deſire this Favour further of your Lordſhip: Your Lordſhip, at the Committee of the Council was pleaſed to ask me, how I came by thoſe Papers; I preſume you may remember, and I pray your Lordſhip to declare, what Anſwer I gave.

L. Preſident. Truly, Mr. Aſhton, to tell you Truth, I do not remember the Particulars; I remember you denied every Thing; I can only ſay that, in the general; but what you ſaid in particular I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you put my Lord in mind if you can; ſee whether he does remember it.

Mr Aſhton. My Lord, I only deſire to ask my Lord Preſident, whether I did not tell him I went down, after I had been ſearch'd, into the Hold, and there I ſee the Papers lie, and brought them up, and put them into my Breaſt; they were no ſooner in my Hands but Capt. Billop had them in his; for the Man called and ſaid, This Gentleman has ſomething in his Breaſt, and the Captain put in his Hand and pulled it out.

L. Preſident. Truly, Mr. Aſhton, I do not remember the Words that you uſed, but remember you ſaid ſomething to which I made anſwer, What makes it matter, They were found upon you, and taken out of your Boſom, do you look to it how you came by them. I do not remember what you ſaid, for I cannot remember particular Words, but I believe you might ſay ſome ſuch thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, pray, my Lord Sydney, will you be pleaſed to be ſworn.

The Lord Sydney ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to declare what Papers you received from my Lord Preſident?

L. Sydney. At the Cabinet Council my Lord Preſident delivered a Pacquet of Papers, I received them every one there, and mark'd them, and put them into my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did your Lordſhip deliver them to any Perſon afterwards?

L. Sydney. The next Day, or the Day after, I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to copy out, and he delivered them back to me again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to ask this Queſtion——

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Your Lordſhip had mark'd them before you delivered them to Mr. Bridgman to copy?

L. Sydney. Yes, I mark'd them at the Council Table, at my Lord Nottingham's Office.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, thoſe Papers that you mark'd, were the ſame Papers that my Lord Preſident brought, and delivered in at the Council?

L. Sydney. Yes, the very ſame.

Juryman. My Lord, ſhall we have Leave to ask my Lord Sydney a Queſtion?

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; what is it?

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, did the Pacquet come to you ſealed? That which was taken from this Gentleman, was it ſealed when it came to you?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, it had been opened by my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Preſident.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, you are under a Miſapprehenſion of the Matter. My Lord Nottingham, after he had opened them, ſealed them up again, and delivered them to Captain Billop; Capt. Billop carried them ſealed to my Lord Preſident; my Lord Preſident opens them, and lays them up; they were never out of his Poſſeſſion; he carries them to the King; the King read ſome of them in his Lordſhip's Preſence; he delivers them at the Cabinet Council to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney ſwears he read them there, marked them, and when he had done, put them in his Pocket.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sidney, will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to look upon theſe Papers, and ſee if theſe be Part of them.

L. Sydney. I know them very well, I have read them ten Times, I marked them at the Council, and that is my Mark.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, are thoſe two Papers that you have in your Hand, Two of thoſe Papers that my Lord Preſident delivered at the Cabinet?

L. Sydney. Yes, that they are.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Preſident, will you pleaſe to look upon them.

(Which his Lordſhip did.)

L. Preſident. Theſe are two of the ſame Papers that Captain Billop brought me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we ſhall deſire to have them read; but give me leave to obſerve to you, That one of them is a Copy of the other; only in the one ſome Words are written ſhort, that are written out at length in the other.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to aſk, are they of the ſame Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, they are of different Hands.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, Gentlemen of the Jury, take Notice, and obſerve theſe Papers, for there is a great deal of Matter of great Moment in them; for you cannot expect the King's Council ſhould repeat every thing that is in ſo many Papers as we ſhall read; it is impoſſible we ſhould take Notice of all.

L. C. J. Holt. Or I either, therefore pray, Gentlemen, obſerve what is read, for I ſhall be able only juſt to ſtate the Evidence to you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I hear them ſay, one of thoſe Papers is a Copy of the other; I deſire, the Original may be read, and not the Copy.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Who knows which is the Original?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, we don't know which is the Original, or which is the Copy, they are both found together, they contain the ſame Matter, and the ſame Words: It may be you can tell which is the Original.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You may look upon them your ſelf, and tell us which is the Original, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Aſhton. That is very well obſerved, Sir. That is throwing Water upon a dead Mouſe. Then I deſire both of them may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Indeed, Mr. Aſhton, I think there is a particular Reaſon why you ſhould not deſire to have the Copy read, becauſe leaſt it ſhould prove to be your own Hand-writing.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, let both be read.

Cl. of Peace reads. The Reſult of a Conference——

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray attend, for this is the Scheme of the whole Work.

Cl. of Peace reads. The Reſult of a Conference, &c.

And the other was likewiſe read as before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray let Mr. Aſhton ſee that Paper.

The Paper was handed to Mr. Aſhton, being one of the Papers before read.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, look upon that ſame Paper a little, ſatisfy your own Mind a little whoſe Hand that Paper is in. Look upon it well, I would have you be ſatisfied about it. Look particularly upon the latter Part of it.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I have looked upon it, I have ſeen it all.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Come then, give it me back again, and think of it a little in your own Heart.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, pray, will your Lordſhip look upon this Paper.

L. Sydney. This is one of the Papers that was, among the reſt, delivered by my Lord Preſident; at the Cabinet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſhew it my Lord Preſident; What ſays your Lordſhip to it?

L. Preſident. This was one of the Papers I gave my Lord Sydney, and was brought to me in the Pacquet by Captain Billop.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King would return with a Deſign of making an entire Conqueſt of his People——

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, give me leave, before it be read, to acquaint the Jury what this is, that they may make the better Obſervations upon it. This, Gentlemen, is the Heads of a Declaration that was intended to be publiſhed when the French came; and you will ſee what it is when it is read. Pray obſerve it.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King will return, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The next Paper is an Account which they had taken with them of the Force of the Kingdom, of the Ships, particularly how many in Number, what Rates, what were in Repair, what out of Repair, and what a Building. Pray ſhew it my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. This is another of the Papers that I received from my Lord Preſident, and marked at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſhew it my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſident. This is one of the Papers that were in the Pacquet that Captain Billop brought me. Clerk of the Peace reads.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord Sydney, look upon theſe Papers, and tell where your Lordſhip had them.

The Papers were ſhewn both to the Lord Preſident and the Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſident ſays he received them from Captain Billop, and gave them to my Lord Sydney; and my Lord Sydney ſays, they are the ſame he received from my Lord Preſident.

Juryman. Are thoſe the Papers that have been read, my Lord?

Mr. J. Eyres. No, but they both ſay the ſame, as to thoſe that have been read.

Juryman. Then pray, my Lord, what are thoſe Papers that are going to be read?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Theſe are two Letters, Gentlemen, that are written, giving an Account how the Affairs in England ſtood with reference to to the Perſons Concerns that they are written to; and there is a particular Paſſage in one of them, How their young Maſter prevailed in his Intereſt, and got Ground of his Adverſaries. If you obſerve them, you will eaſily underſtand what is meant by them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Redding, New-year's Eve, Though the Bearer of this, &c. As before.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mrs. Redding. As it is impoſſible for me to expreſs, &c. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we deſire my Lord Sydney, and my Lord Preſident would look upon theſe Papers.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire the former Part of that laſt Letter may be read again.

Which was done.

L. Sydney. Theſe I had from my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſident. And I had them out of the Pacquet that Capt. Billop brought me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will open them to the Jury. Here are two Letters, in one of them there is an Account given, that they were heartily ſorry they were diſappointed, and that they had not been here already, but hoped they would be here as faſt as they can; that the Match was concluded, the Settlement prepared, and no doubt but the Daughter's Portion would be well ſecured, if they would come quickly.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31, 1690. 'Tis directed for Mrs. Charlton. I muſt not let this Bearer depart, Madam, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That Letter tells you that the Daughter's Portion would be well ſecured; this that we now produce will tell you, how it ſhall be raiſed. It ſays, the old Tenants are weary of their Maſter, and a little Matter, if he would but appear in Weſtminſter-Hall, would redeem the Eſtate; and the Cauſe might be brought to a final Hearing before the End of Eaſter Term, if they made haſte, and it were well ſollicited.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Jackſon, Dec. 31, 1690. The Bearer hereof will give you, &c. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We muſt deſire my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Sydney, would be pleaſed to look upon theſe Papers.

L. Preſident. I received theſe from Capt. Billop in the Pacquet, and gave it to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. Theſe are ſome of the Papers I had from my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Letters we now produce to be read, ſeem to be written by a Man that was involved in a great Trade, that had great Projects in his Head, and drawn many Schemes in his own Brain how to carry on the Trade; he directs what Sort of Wares he would have ſent, what was proper for their Markets, that he had got many a new Cuſtomer, and hoped they ſhould not be diſobliged; that all muſt be ſent before the Firſt of March, at leaſt before the Tenth, or the whole Summer Profits would be loſt

Clerk of the Peace reads. 31 Dec.——

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Superſcription firſt.

Cl. of the Peace. There is no Superſcription, my Lord, at all.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, read on.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. The Interruption of the former Correſpondence had a very ill Effect many ways, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Gentlemen, doubting that Letter might not be preſſing enough, here is another to the ſame Effect.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. It is a Preſumption incident to thoſe that are any ways upon the Spot, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. One would imagine this Letter were written by ſome Perſon that uſed to talk Cant, that he is ſo ready at it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord Preſident, what ſays your Lordſhip to theſe Papers?

L. Preſident. Theſe two Letters were in the Bundle that Captain Billop delivered to me, and I delivered them to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. Theſe are ſome of the Papers I had from my Lord Preſident, at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That firſt of theſe Papers is a Letter wherein the Party gives an Account of his own Condition here, and how he would venture to bring about what was deſired.

Cl. of the Peace reads. 31 Dec. 1690. Was my Condition more deſperate and uneaſy than it is, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This little Paper was incloſed in the other.

Cl. of the Peace reads. I beg, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now ſhew this Paper to my my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Sydney.

Which was done.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſident, and my Lord Sydney ſwear the ſame for this Paper, as for the reſt.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This Paper ſhews they were going about a Deed that they did not deſire to have known; 'tis a Key how to explain their Meaning.

Clerk of the Peace reads. For Mrs. Anne Ruſſel, &c. As before.

Then three other Papers were ſhewn to, and ſworn by the Lord Preſident, and the Lord Sydney, to be Part of the ſame Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Papers that we are going to read are theſe. Gentlemen, here is a Letter of Recommendation in behalf of one Mr. Orbinet, which is a Name, they pretended of ſome Perſon that was at Paris, or to go there, and 'tis written by one Mr. Dellivere, to his Correſpondent there; and he tells him, the Bearer had ſomething to diſcloſe to him, and that he might have an entire Confidence in him: but the Letter of Recommendation alone, without a Sum of Money, they reckoned would meet with a bad Welcome in France, and therefore they take 500 l. with them, and here are two Bills to pay it.

Then Mr. Humphrey Levermere was ſworn to interpret them, being in French, (which he did) and read them as in the former Trial.

Juryman. Were theſe Bills found in that Pacquet?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, Yes; they are ſworn to by both thoſe Lords.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, pray, my Lord, will you pleaſe to look upon theſe Papers?

The Lord Preſident and Lord Sydney both teſtified, That thoſe were Part of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. This next Paper that we give in Evidence is very ſhort. It ſeems to be a Table for the Memory of the Perſon that was to carry it? They are ſhort Heads for the Memory, conſiſting of a great many Particulars; You will make your Obſervations upon them, and what Judgment you think fit of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, I deſire to take Notice of theſe Papers that we are now going to read; you will obſerve theſe Things in them, which are worth your remarking, Gentlemen; becauſe theſe Papers that we now read to you, are of themſelves ſufficient to prove every Article in the Indictment: For theſe Papers give an Account of the Ships, their Number and Force, the Forts of the Kingdom, how they are Manned, how they may be Surprized, where the French Fleet ſhould Fight, where they ſhould Aſſault us, how they ſhould hinder the Dutch and Engliſh Fleets from joining, what Number of Soldiers would be ſufficient, and what Number of Ships in Newcaſtle to plague the City of London, how to manage this whole Affair; and it gives Characters of the Clergy of England, and particularly of the City of London, and ſays, they are the worſt of Men.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. No, Brother, 'tis the worſt of all the Clergy.

L. C. J. Holt. Come read them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Lady D. 2000 l. &c.

As before.

The Jury deſired to ſee the laſt Papers, and had them delivered to them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we reſt it here, to ſee what the Priſoner will ſay to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, the King's Council have done their Evidence for the King, what have you to ſay for yourſelf?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly deſire to know of your Lordſhip, whether all the Letters are read, that were read at the Trial of my Lord Preſton?

L. C. J. Holt. What is that material to you, whether they be or not?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I am informed that there were ſeveral Letters, that particularly name my Lord, implying him to be the Bearer, and I deſire thoſe Letters may be read.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. With all my Heart, if you do deſire it, it ſhall be read, we do not think it material.

Mr. Aſhton. I do deſire it; it will be plain, I believe, from hence, that I could know nothing at all of this Matter; and if your Lordſhip pleaſe, my Lord, to obſerve it, three or four of theſe laſt Papers, as Mr. Serj. Tremain obſerved, were the Ground-Work of all this Buſineſs, which refers to Portſmouth and South-Sea, and ſome other Papers; theſe I think, with Submiſſion, were proved to be the Hand of another Gentleman, and I deſire it may be proved again to the Jury, by which I think it will be plain, that they do not affect me.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, it is not proved to be your Hand, nor pretended to be ſo.

Mr. Aſhton. But poſitively proved to be another's Hand, as I am informed, and 'tis that which Mr. Serj. Tremain obſerved, was the Ground-Work for carrying on the whole Deſign. I preſume the Witneſſes are in Court that proved it then, and I hope your Lordſhip will be ſo kind as to let it be proved now; they did prove it to be another Perſon's Hand upon a Trial not long ago.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Mind to call any Witneſſes to prove the Papers to be another's Hand, you may call them.

Mr. Aſhton. I hope the King's Witneſſes are now in Court that did prove them to be his Hand-writing, and they'll prove it now I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Mind, you may call them, they have not a Mind to produce them for the King.

Mr. Aſhton. I know not where they are, my Lord. Pray Mr. Aaron Smith, be you ſo kind as to call them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You ſhould have ſent and Subpœna'd them to be here.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Warr is there, my Lord, I deſire he may he ask'd the Queſtion; and I believe Mr. Blane is in the Court, pray let him be ask'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Warr, you are called by the Priſoner, as a Witneſs, to prove my Lord Preſton's Hand.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Warr, Mr. Townſend, and Mr. Blane, I deſire may be all ask'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, you have inſiſted upon it, that theſe Papers were my Lord Preſton's own Writing.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do inſiſt upon it, to know whether they were not proved to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, they were ſo, 'tis agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We do grant the King's Witneſſes proved, that they did believe them to be my Lord Preſton's Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. The King's Council do admit, that theſe three laſt Papers were not your Hand, but they admit them to be my Lord Preſton's Hand, and 'tis very well done of them to admit it; ſo that now 'tis to be taken for granted, that thoſe three laſt Papers were my Lord Preſton's Hand.

Mr. Aſhton. Then, my Lord, I deſire the Subſtance of thoſe Papers may be the more preſs'd upon the Jury, becauſe Mr. Serj. Tremain obſerved that the whole Deſign in the Scheme of it lay in thoſe Papers, and they are not my Hand, but another's; and for what is in them, I know nothing, nor am concern'd.

L. C. J. Holt. What have you farther to ſay, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You mentioned another Letter which you did deſire ſhould be read.

Mr. Aſhton. Ay; two or three where my Lord is nam'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the Letter I ſuppoſe you mean, the Clerk ſhall read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Sir, I vow to you, I do not repine at having loſt all for your Sake, &c.

(As before.)

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen, I hope you will obſerve, in that Letter my Lord is call'd the Bearer; and it tells that he brings Papers with him, by which it is plain, that you cannot imagine I could know any thing of theſe Papers. And, Gentlemen, it has not appeared by any Evidence that has been given, that I knew any thing more, than that they were unfortunately found upon me: But with Submiſſion, I believe there is another Letter, if I am informed right, wherein my Lord is named, and called, my Lord the Bearer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, I do aſſure you now, we have to my Obſervation, read every Letter, and every Paper, that was read on Saturday.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Sollicitor, I am ſatisfied, for I am confident you would not affirm it if it were otherwiſe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. There is not any Letter that ſays my Lord the Bearer, but my Lord will give you an Account, ſo and ſo; the Bearer will tell you theſe and theſe Things; will you have it read again? You ſhall if you will.

Mr. Aſhton. I am unwilling to take up your Lordſhip's time, unleſs the Jury deſire to have it read again.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, when that Letter was read on Saturday, how was it conſtrued by the Court? How did they take it then?

L. C. J. Holt. We did take it then, becauſe my Lord was mentioned, that he might poſſibly be the Bearer.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is very probable, and ſo it was underſtood then, that the Lord mentioned in the Letters was my Lord Preſton, and ſo that my Lord was the Bearer that could give an Account of the Counteſs's Condition; and in the Beginning of thoſe Papers that are of my Lord's Hand, there is mentioned ſo much Money for the Lady D——, which is my Lady Dorſet, I ſuppoſe, that is there meant, and that writ that Letter.

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lady Dorcheſter.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Dorcheſter, I cry your Mercy; and it is probable the ſame Reaſon is a Reaſon ſtill to make it believed that my Lord Preſton was meant.

Mr. Aſhton. I think my Lord Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to obſerve, as I have been informed, in giving his Charge to the Jury, that theſe Papers, ſome of them naming my Lord, muſt be meant of my Lord Preſton, there being no other Lord but he; and he likewiſe gave another Reaſon; ſays he, They lay by my Lord's Seals that were produced, and therefore it was plain, they could not be Aſhton's nor Elliot's.

L. C. J. Holt. No not ſo, but my Lord might be concern'd, becauſe my Lord's Seals were there where the Papers were found.

Mr. Aſhton. I am wrong inform'd, if thoſe were not the Words my Lord Chief Juſtice Pollexfen uſed.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What do you ſay were the Words? If you will repeat them, I'll tell you as near as I can.

Mr. Aſhton. Your Lordſhip ſeem'd to infer, That my Lord being nam'd, and the Bearer in the ſame Paper, that of Conſequence that muſt be my Lord Preſton, and the Papers muſt be his; and you did give another Reaſon for it, to inforce it, that the ſame Man that ſaw me take them up, ſaw them lie by the Seals, which were proved to be my Lord Preſton's, from whence your Lordſhip did ſay, it is plain they were my Lord Preſton's, and that Aſhton or Elliot could not be concerned in them.

L. C. J. Holt. You miſtake that matter, ſure there was not any ſuch Word ſaid, for that Evidence that tended to convict my Lord Preſton, did by no means tend to acquit you; the Queſtion then was, How far my Lord Preſton was concerned; my Lord inſiſted upon it, ſays he, They were not taken from me, but from Mr. Aſhton; there the Queſtion was not about you.

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly hope, my Lord, you will forgive me for inſiſting upon theſe Matters, becauſe I am for Life.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I would do you all the Right I can, I aſſure you, Mr. Aſhton; but certainly there was no ſuch Thing ſaid as you have mentioned.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do not queſtion but you will do me Right, and I thought ſo, when I choſe the Jury out of the firſt that appeared, without challenging any.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Sir, pray go on to your Defence.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, my own Defence will be very weak upon the Whole, for I am very illiterate and unskill'd in the Laws, but where I do fail of taking Advantage, to obſerve what may be for my Advantage, I hope your Lordſhips will be ſo kind to me, as well as juſt (I may call it) to yourſelves, being upon your Oaths, as to take notice of it. My Lord, in the firſt Place ——

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Mr. Aſhton proceeds, I would obſerve one Word in a Letter that has been read, which is one of theſe Papers; it ſays, I ſay nothing of another Gentleman that takes Opportunity to ſee thoſe Parts, but he has ſhewn a Zeal and Sincerity in the Affair equal to moſt.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You hear, Gentlemen, that there is notice taken of another Perſon beſides the Bearer.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, is it any Conſequence that I muſt be the Perſon that muſt be meant, or that I muſt know what the Contents of the Letter was, There was another beſides me, and ſo it is not plain who was meant; or if I were the Man meant in this Letter, it muſt not therefore follow that I muſt know of it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I did not mention it as a Proof that you were the Perſon meant, but only to ſhew that there was another Perſon beſides my Lord taken notice of in them.

L. C. J. Holt. I muſt confeſs, I think Mr. Aſhton obſerves right, it does not concern him, for as well as he was there, there was another, and it is uncertain whether it relates to him or the other, and ſo it ſignifies nothing at all; that's my Mind. Pray go on, Mr. Aſhton.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, upon the Whole I have this to obſerve; firſt as to my Buſineſs of going into France, I muſt ingenuouſly own it, though I proteſt to you I never own'd it or named it to the Woman, though ſhe had ſworn it, but yet I do now. My Deſign was to go to France, and I had very great and good Reaſon for it, I think; I had endeavour'd all Ways I could in the World to procure a Paſs to go to France; 'tis very well known, I did Buſineſs under Lieutenant-General Worden, that died half a Year ago; his Accounts are now depending, and ſuch Accounts as may be prejudicial in ſome Points to his Family, to whom I have always own'd, and muſt, a great Obligation, and would be very glad upon all Occaſions to ſerve it, and all the Branches of it: This was not the Whole nor the only Deſign I had in going thither, but I had likewiſe ſome Buſineſs of my own, I have a conſiderable Sum of Money owing me, if it be neceſſary to prove it, I can prove it by a Bond from a Perſon that is there; a great Sum it is, a very conſiderable one to me at leaſt. And, my Lord, I did think if I did not go myſelf, it was impoſſible for me to do any thing in that Affair, and that was the true and only Reaſon of my Deſign in going to France, having been out of Hopes of getting any other Convenience otherways; this was not a Deſign juſt now formed, as if I were juſt now upon ſome Plot concerning the Publick, but it has been my Deſign ever ſince Lieutenant-General

Worden

Worden died, and he upon his Death-bed ingaged me to do it; and I once went down, hoping to have gone from Dover, and there I was apprehended and taken. And, my Lord, I have uſed all manner of Endeavours to go other ways, but they have always failed me, and this way I hoped would have taken: My Lord, I do own I did hire the Boat, and I did pay the Money; but with Submiſſion, I think that is not any manner of Treaſonable Act, my Lord; perhaps it is an ill Act, but it does not amount in the leaſt to Treaſon going to the King's Enemies, ſuppoſe I went upon that account, that is no manner of Treaſon in the World; carrying Papers to the King's Enemies, except it be proved that I was privy to them, and knew the Contents of them, if Lawyers inform me right, is not Treaſon; then what remains? 'Tis true, I muſt own the Papers were found upon me, and I believe there is nobody that has heard the Evidence that has been given, but muſt readily conclude, that I found them in the Place where the Seaman ſays I took them up; and beſides, my Lord, there is not any manner of Proof ſo much as aim'd at by the King's Council in all their Evidence, that I was privy to any one of theſe Papers; ſo that, my Lord, I think there is very little proved upon me at all: I had the Misfortune to be taken in this Company that was going where theſe Papers were taken, it's true, but they have not attempted to prove that I was privy to, or knew any thing of them at all, nor that I was more concerned than that they were taken in my Stomach; this is all I have to obſerve upon the Whole: As to the Buſineſs of the Indictment, there are great and grievous Aggravations in it, and ſuch as I am not able to comprehend the Meaning of, the Words confound me; and therefore I humbly deſire your Lordſhip to tell me upon what Statute I am indicted.

L. C. J. Holt. I'll tell you, Mr. Aſhton, you are indicted upon the 25th of Edward the Third, for conſpiring, compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King and Queen, and for that Purpoſe going to France, and endeavouring to incite the French King to invade the Kingdom, and telling him how he ſhould do it, and letting him know in what State and Condition the Kingdom was, and how fit to be invaded.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, is that at all proved upon me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Queſtion that the Jury are to judge of upon the Evidence that has been given.

Mr. Aſhton. As to that of Compaſſing the Death of the King and Queen, I am ignorant of Dealings in Law; but I conceive there are ſeveral Species of Treaſon mentioned in that Act of the 25th of Edward III. and as to the imagining the Death of the King, that's only to be proved by ſome Overt-Act: Now I think nothing at all has been proved of any open Act conducing to prove the Imagination or Compaſſing the Death of the King or Queen, no manner of Conſultation or Treaſonable Act at all; and therefore, my Lord, I do not ſee that there is any great Matter that is proved upon me, and I hope you are of that Opinion too.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, that you may not go away with a Miſtake, any that deſign'd the Depoſition of the King and Queen, and the Invaſion of the Kingdom, which is proved by any Overt-Act, is ſufficient to prove that they compaſs and imagine the Death of the King and Queen.

Mr. Aſhton. I preſume it may be ſo, I believe that may be the Conſtruction of the Law.

L. C. J. Holt. And I make no queſtion but thoſe that you have conſulted with have told you as much.

Mr. Aſhton. Truly as to Council, my Trial has been as hard as ever Man met withal.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you ſay ſo, Mr. Aſhton? the Court has not been hard upon you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do not complain of the Court, but as to the matter of Time, I had Notice by that Gentleman, Mr. Bale, to prepare for my Trial, and that was on Friday, and not before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Friday was Sevennight, you mean, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Aſhton. Yes, I do mean Friday was Sevennight, I was then a cloſe Priſoner, I had not the Opportunity or Liberty of ſeeing any Chriſtian Soul; I ſpake to him then, and told him, Mr. Bale, this is very ſhort Notice, pray be ſo kind as to move my Lord that I may have Council; truly he was civil enough, and ſaid, he would do all he could; ſays he, Will you give me the Names of your Council? So I gave him the Names of four, and of a Sollicitor; but I never heard more of him in the Matter: I did with all my Induſtry and Skill give my Friends notice, but I was under great Difficulty, for I had not the Liberty of Pen, Ink, nor Paper, nor a Man to ſend upon a Meſſage, on Saturday; I gave my Friends notice of it upon Sunday, which was no very good Day for Buſineſs, they applied themſelves to my Lord Sydney, whoſe Favour and Kindneſs I ſhall always own as long as I live; he gave me all the Diſpatch poſſible, and got me an Order to ſee my Wife that Day, though it was Sunday; the next Day I made Application to have my Council come to me, that was Monday; he with the ſame Readineſs procured that: but it was Tueſday in the Afternoon before I could ſee any living Soul but my Wife; and ſome of the Council that I deſired, would not readily come to me, and it was Wedneſday before I did ſee any Body of them, and ſo I had but Wedneſday and Thurſday to conſult with them in. On Friday I was brought here, and I endeavour'd to procure a Copy of the Pannel, that I might inform myſelf of the Characters of the Men that were to be my Jury; and, my Lord, I would deſire you to give me leave to clear one Point, which through Inadvertency ſlipt from me about the Time that I deſir'd to ſend to enquire about the Jury. I did not mean, as was apprehended, to ſend to them to take them off, but I only meant to enquire after their Characters; this was done upon Friday; I had not a Copy of the Pannel till laſt Friday, when we were Arraigned in Court, it was Two of the Clock before the Pannel was given us, it was between Three and Four when we came to Newgate; we were to come upon our Trial the next Morning by Eight of the Clock; ſo that before the Copies could be tranſcribed for us, there were left but ſix Hours for us to enquire into the Morals of ſo many Men, of whom ſome lived eight, ſome ten, ſome fifteen Miles out of Town; for my Part I was not able to enquire after any one, and that your Lordſhip may think, by my taking the firſt Twelve that appear'd, and believing myſelf innocent of this Matter, I reſolved to put myſelf upon my Trial by any twelve indifferent Engliſh Men; I only beg if

if I have omitted any Thing in reference to myſelf, or misbehaved myſelf with reſpect to the Bench, that you would pleaſe to ſet me right, and conſider that I ſtand here for my Life; and to grant me your Pardon for any thing wherein I have offended your Lordſhips, to whom, and to the Jury, I refer my Cauſe; only I beg leave to call two or three Witneſſes, I know it hath been allowed before in ſuch Caſes, to give ſome ſhort Account of my Life and Converſation, becauſe it hath been reflected upon me that I was a Papiſt, becauſe I deſigned to go into France; but I believe there is not any Man, whoſe Devotion to the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law, is greater than mine hath been, or to whom that Religion is dearer than to myſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. You are not accuſed of any ſuch thing; nobody pretends you are a Papiſt: but call whom you will.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray call Dr. Burſh, Dr. Lake, Dr. Fitz-Williams, and Dr. Davenant. There is Dr. Fitz-Williams; I beg the Favour of you, Dr. Fitz-Williams, to give the Court an Account of your Acquaintance with me, and particularly about my Religion.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Will your Lordſhip give me leave, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; Come, what do you know of Mr. Aſhton.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I ſuppoſe, my Lord, that he calls me in as a Witneſs to his Religion, and to his Morality, I think ſo; with my Lord's Permiſſion I will give the trueſt Teſtimony I can: I have known him for ſome time, he uſed to be frequently at the Service of the Church in the Proteſtant Part of the Family at St. James's, where I was Chaplain; during the Time I was there, I obſerved him to be a frequent Receiver of the Holy Communion; and, as far as I could obſerve, lived anſwerable to what he profeſſed to be, a ſincere Member of the Church of England, and a ſerious Chriſtian. For his Sincerity and Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, I can give this Inſtance, he had an Aunt that had a Relation to that Family, one Mrs. Du-pee, who he thought did warp a little towards Popery, and he deſired me, about five Years ago, to have recourſe to her, and deſired to know if ſhe were diſſatisfied with any Point of Religion in the Church of England, in Communion with which ſhe lived viſibly, and I would do my Endeavour to ſatisfy her; as I do not doubt but I could. She was deſirous to know who was the Perſon that ſent me: I told her I came of my own Head in the greateſt Part; but I ſuppreſs'd the Interpoſition of Mr. Aſhton for ſeveral Reaſons, and told her, I had great Suſpicion of her inclining the other Way; and I had great Reaſon for it, becauſe of her Husband, who was a Papiſt, and the great Reſort of Popiſh Prieſts to their Lodgings. She told me then, She was ſatisfied in every thing, and if ſhe had any Diſſatisfaction ſhe would ſend for me to give me an Account. Some Months after I came to St. James's to wait, and obſerving her to be more than uſually before from Prayers in the Chapel, I went to her, and asked her the Reaſon: She told me, it was becauſe ſhe was making ſome Linnen for her Maſter King James, which was to be made in haſte: But ſhe then deſigned to go for Flanders quickly; and Mr. Aſhton about that Time, or two or three Days after, told me his Aunt was gone to France, and ſpoke it with very great Concern, and that he believed, under the Pretence of calling over her younger Son, ſhe was gone to declare herſelf a Papiſt, and he was very much troubled at it. This I know for his Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. This was, my Lord, about five Years ago.

Mr. Aſhton. That is, as to the Buſineſs of my Aunt I ſuppoſe; I know not how he comes to mention it, but as to my Life and Morals, you can give a later Account.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. My Lord, I have Adminiſtred the Sacrament to him.

L. C. J. Holt. What Queſtions do you farther ask him, Mr. Aſhton? or can you ſay any more, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, my Lord, I can ſay no more, but that he received the Sacrament about half a Year ago.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We have not objected any thing, as to his Religion, at all.

Mr. Aſhton. But I know it has been a Reflection that has gone about of me, that I am a Papiſt, therefore I beg leave to prove my Religion and Converſation.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, call whom you will, you ſhall not be hindered, take what Courſe you pleaſe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Doctor, you ſay he has received the Sacrament lately; when was that, and where?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. It was at Ely Chapel, within this ſix or ſeven Months.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you been lately converſant with him?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Truly, my Lord, I have not been very lately.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray what have you heard him ſay concerning his Affection to King William and Queen Mary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not remember any thing at all of that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you heard him ſay any thing to the contrary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I cannot remember that.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What have you heard him ſay about his Affection to K. James?

L. C. J. Holt. Do not ask him that; there may be a Snare in that Queſtion.

Juryman. You ſay, Doctor, that he received the Sacrament ſix Months ago in Ely Chapel; Did you deliver the Sacrament to him there?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I did not.

Juryman. Pray, Doctor, were the Prayers that were uſed at that Time altered, as they are now in the Common-Prayer-Book?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot ſay they were.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you ever ſee him drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not uſe to drink Healths, I came here only to do an Office of Juſtice and Kindneſs to Mr. Aſhton, to teſtify about his Religion and Converſation.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But anſwer the Queſtion, Did you ever ſee him drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot remember I ever did.

Juryman. Was King William and Queen Mary pray'd for in thoſe Prayers?

Dr. Fitz-

Dr. Fitz Williams. I cannot say they were.

Mr. Just. Eyres. But the Juryman's Question was, Whether King William and Queen Mary were pray'd for? And whether the Prayers were as they are now altered?

Dr. Fitz Williams. My Lord, I say, I don't remember there were any Names mentioned, as the Prayers are now altered.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That's very well.

Dr. Fitz Williams. I did neither read the Prayers, Sir, nor administer the Communion at that Time.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you were not at the Prayers, as they are now altered, I perceive.

Dr. Fitz Williams. Yes, I have several times.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Not with that Gentleman, Mr. Ashton.

Dr. Fitz Williams. But I have been an hundred times at the Prayers, as they are now altered.

Mr. Ashton. I desire Dr. Lake, who is there upon the Bench, that he may be asked what he knows of me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But I have one Question to ask of Dr. Fitz Williams before he goes.

L. C. J. Holt. What will you ask him?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I would ask you, Sir, one Question. Have you taken the Oaths to this King and Queen?

Dr. Fitz Williams. No, I have not, Sir, that's my Unhappiness; but I know how to submit, and live peaceably under them.

Mr. Ashton. But there is one Dr. Lake that has taken them, he'll give you an Account what he knows of me.

Dr. Fitz Williams. If any one can say I have done or acted any thing against the Government, I will readily submit to be punished for it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Dr. Lake, what say you?

Dr. Lake. My Lord, I have known Mr. Ashton above these sixteen Years, we liv'd together in the same Family several of them; I always observed him to be a Person of exemplary Piety, and singular Devotion; he duly came to the Prayers of the Church twice a Day, and to the Sacrament once a Month; he has taken Occasion, that I know, several times, both at St. James's and at Edinburgh, to testify his Zeal against Popery: and I am apt to think, that he has suffered sometimes for doing so.

Mr. Ashton. Dr. Bursh, Pray, as to my Religion, I beg you to give an Account what you know of me; particularly something you may remember of me, of my perhaps Over-heat against Popery.

Dr. Bursh. My Lord, I have long known Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, and, till within these two Years, frequently conversed with him; and while I did so, I believed him a good Protestant, and I have so many Instances of it, and particularly before some upon whom his Fortune depended; but as to any thing of late, I can say nothing, because our Conversation has ceased.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Dr. Bursh, have you known any thing of Mr. Ashton's Conversation for two Years past?

Dr. Bursh. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord, I have nothing more, unless your Lordship desire any thing more of this Nature.

L. C. J. Holt. Call whom you will.

Mr. Ashton. Here is one Mr. Tomlinson.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, what say you, Sir?

Mr. Tomlinson. My Lord, I waited upon Major General Worden when he was sick, and there read the Prayers of the Church, and Mr. Ashton was a constant Attender upon the Publick Prayers at the Visitation of the Sick, and was very devout; that's all I can say.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was in the Sickness of Major Gen. Worden.

L. C. J. Holt. How long ago was that?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was about half a Year ago.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Were those Prayers as they are altered now, or not?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was only the Visitation of the Sick, and the Collect for the Morning, and Collect for the Evening, because the General's Sickness was such, that he could not bear long Prayers.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, have you been acquainted with the Prisoner any time?

Mr. Tomlinson. About eight Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then I would have you to answer me this one thing; Why were you so desirous, and used such Importunity, that the Papers should be thrown overboard?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, that is a Point I ought to have spoke to, to clear my self.

L. C. J. Holt. It seems material, and I would not have it forgot, if you can answer it.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly thank your Lordship, and whatsoever my Fate is, I cannot but own I have had a fair Trial for my Life, and I thank your Lordship for putting me in mind.

L. C. J. Holt. And take this other thing with it, Why did you desire Captain Billop to go along with you where you were going?

Mr. Ashton. He has sworn it, my Lord, that I did so, but as I hope for Salvation, if I were to die immediately, I do not know that I spoke to him of any such thing; How was it possible that I should prevail with him? or how was it likely that I should force him to go along with us, when he had about twelve or fourteen Men with him armed, and we unarmed?

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, it was not forcing, it was but persuading him to go.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not know any thing of it, I'll assure you; but as for endeavouring to persuade him to throw the Pacquet overboard, I must own I did endeavour to persuade him to it; and, I do presume, there is no body in Court, that had been engaged with a Person so unfortunate, that would not have done the same thing for any common Friend, not knowing what the Contents of those Papers were, seeing them in that Posture, especially when I saw some body else so near me, so uneasy and concern'd to have them seen.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Mr. Ashton, there's another thing which you open'd, which I would have you prove; you say you were to go into France upon the Affairs of Col. Worden's Family; first you say Col. Worden had a great Account to make up; how will you make that out?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I will prove here in Court, though it is a sort of Surprize upon me, that there is a great Account depending; I believe I may appeal to Mr. Sollicitor himſelf, who knows that there is a Petition in the Houſe of Commons, now depending, from the Queen's Tradeſmen and Debtors, whom ſhe owed 68000 l. She did aſſign the Arrears of ſome growing Rents for the Satisfaction of this Debt; but the King and Government have not thought fit to let it be applied to her Uſe, or to the paying of thoſe Debts ſhe aſſign'd it to. Nay, it has gone farther, I can appeal to ſeveral Perſons, there is one Man by Chance in the Court, that I believe does know that I promiſed and engaged, and actually have paid a great Part of this Debt; for believing that the Money was good upon the Aſſignment, I have actually paid ſome of theſe Men out of my own Pocket, and perhaps more than became me to venture; I think it may very well call my Diſcretion in Queſtion.

L. C. J. Holt. Who will you have called, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, here is Mr. Spalding.

L. C. J. Holt. That the late Queen does owe People Money, that I believe is true.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Mr. Spalding, will you give the Court an Account, whether there is any Money due from the Queen to you?

Mr. Spalding. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I have a Debt due to me from the late Queen, as her Coach Harneſs-maker; it is 470 l. or ſomething thereabouts, and Mr. Aſhton has paid me Part of this Debt; this I do own.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Aſhton, Sir?

Mr. Spalding. A dozen Years, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you any Intimacy with him?

Mr. Spalding. He and I have been very well acquainted.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you ſeen Mr. Aſhton write at any time?

Mr. Spalding. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know his Hand?

Mr. Spalding. Yes, I think I do.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray how came Mr. Aſhton to pay you that Part of your Money?

Mr. Spalding. I preſs'd Mr. Aſhton, and told him my Neceſſities, and he did advance me this Money.

L. C. J. Holt. How much did he advance?

M. Spalding. Almoſt 400 l.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was it he paid it you?

Mr. Spalding. Almoſt a Year ago.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he pay it out of his own Pocket?

Mr. Spalding. I believe ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. I believe ſo; or was it Money that he had returned to him?

Mr. Spalding. I believe it was out of his own Pocket, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you believe ſo?

Mr. Spalding. Truly I believe it was out of his own Packet.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray who was to repay him?

Mr. Spalding. About that very Time we were petitioning the Houſe of Commons, that we might have our Debts ſecured, and our Money out of the Arrears of Rents due to the late Queen, according to her Aſſignment; and we ſo far preſs'd the Matter, that there was a Clauſe inſerted into the Bill for the ſecuring of our Debt; but upon the next Day, or the Day following, the Parliament was Prorogu'd.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Which way did he expect to be repaid?

Mr. Spalding. I'll tell you which way, I ſuppoſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did he not tell you which way?

Mr. Spalding. No, he never told me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, did you never tell him how you ſhould be repaid?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I hoped to be repaid, and concluded I ſhould, out of the Arrears of Rent in the Tenants Hands.

L. C. J. Holt. But you are very kind to pay Money out of your own Pocket upon ſuch Hopes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Sir, will you look upon that Paper; do you know the Hand?

Mr. Spalding. No, Sir, I do not.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe he did compound with you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This does ſhew an extraordinary Kindneſs towards ſome ſort of People.

Mr. Aſhton. If he diſcounted the Intereſt to the Time that we reckoned it would be paid, you know that Prejudice would be to him, and not to me; it may, indeed, prove a Prejudice at laſt, if the Debt be not paid, becauſe the Receipt is Conditional: if it be not allowed him, ſhe ſhall diſcount to me again.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was there no Money return'd over from the Queen, K. James's Queen that was?

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lord, directly nor indirectly, not one Penny. I believe they are not in a Condition to return Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Mr. Aſhton, what have you more?

Mr. Aſhton. I have nothing more to ſay, I ſubmit my Cauſe to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, as to ſome Things that you have mentioned, Firſt, there's nobody queſtions but you are a Proteſtant; nay, as far as I diſcern, ſo they are all that are concern'd in this Matter. The whole Deſign ſhews, that they are all ſo careful of the Proteſtant Religion, that they Deſign to reſtore and eſtabliſh it by the King of France; ſo that it appears they are all Proteſtants concern'd in this Project.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, who is it that propoſes that?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Papers that were carrying to France, Mr. Aſhton, you have heard them read.

Mr. Aſhton. I hope, my Lord, that no doubtful Inſinuations or Suggeſtions are to affect me?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. There is a Gentleman that was called to by the Priſoner, it may be, he knows his Hand; pray, Dr. Fitz Williams, look upon that Paper, you have been acquainted with him many Years, do you know his Hand?

Dr. F. Williams. No, Sir, I do not know his Hand, I never did ſee him write; I cannot ſay I ever received a Letter from him.

Mr. Aſhton. I entirely ſubmit my Cauſe to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you have done, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Eyres. Mr. Aſhton, becauſe you cannot reply again upon my Lord Chief Juſtice, after he has ſummed up the Evidence; there's another

another thing that I would put you in mind of, that you may give an Anſwer to it. Captain Billop ſwears, before the Papers were found upon you (and it ſeems to ſtick upon you) when he was informed by the Seamen, that you had put ſomething in your Boſom, and he ask'd you what it was, you ſaid nothing but your Handkerchief: Now, if you knew not what was in the Papers, how came you to deny you had any thing in your Boſom?

Mr. Aſhton. For the ſame Reaſon that I would have endeavoured to have had them thrown overboard; out of Kindneſs to the Perſon with whom I happened to be taken.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Conſider, Mr. Aſhton, what a ſtrange many Things you run upon: Firſt, you would have it believed, that you had a mind to go into France upon your own Account.

Mr. Aſhton. I do own that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Next then, that you hired a Veſſel for you and Elliot. Why would you have Elliot to go with you into France?

Mr. Aſhton. I would not have him, he deſired the Favour of going.

L. C. J. Holt. Who deſired my Lord Preſton to go, or did he deſire to go with you?

Mr. Aſhton. I had not ſeen Mr. Elliot of three Months before I went into the City to hire the Boat.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Why would you have my Lord Preſton go with you?

Mr. Aſhton. Why would I have my Lord Preſton go with me? My Lord, I hop'd to have got my Paſſage free with a Perſon of my Lord's Quality.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you hired this Veſſel for my Lord Preſton?

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it my Lord's Money, or your own that you paid?

Mr. Aſhton. The Money I paid; but how I ſhould be repaid I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you, for your own Convenience, pay a Hundred Pounds for a Boat to go to France, and yet hope to get your Paſſage free by taking in my Lord Preſton?

Mr. Aſhton. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell, how it would have been; at the utmoſt, we could but have paid our Share of it.

L. C. J. Holt. But you can tell me if you will; I ask you, how it was agreed amongſt you?

Mr. Aſhton. Truly, my Lord, as I hope to be ſaved, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Then there is another Thing, Why did you deſire one of the Seamen to ſay, That you were to go to Flanders, and not to France, and give him Half a Crown to ſay ſo?

Mr. Aſhton. I preſume, your Lordſhip knows that it is a Fault, though it be not a treaſonable Fault, to go into France.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But, Mr. Aſhton, Truth is the thing that we are enquiring after; and, that is the Thing we would have prevail, and I hope ſhall in all Caſes: If you are not guilty, we hope it will prevail of your Side? if you are guilty, we hope it will prevail on the other Side. Now how likely is it that you ſhould get into this ſame Company by chance, without a previous Agreement? you ſent ſomething from Burdet's, a Hamper, and a Trunk, and afterwards ſome other Things went from Rigby's, who is your Father-in-law.

Mr. Aſhton. No, There was nothing at all carried from Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, the Leather Bag, I believe. But another thing is this, That, if it be poſſible, you will do well to give an Anſwer to, Why did you enquire for a hiding Place? Why did you ask the Maſter of the Ship, whether there was a convenient Place to hide in?

Mr. Aſhton. As to that Matter, my Lord, I had heard of divers People, that actually had Paſſes, and were going to Flanders, yet were ſtopped and brought to Town again. I believe my Lord Nottingham has bail'd many a One, and your Lordſhip knows it to be ſo, and has bailed many yourſelf; and therefore I had great Reaſon, upon that Account, to endeavour Secrecy as much as I could.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, as I remember, you ſaid yourſelf, you were once before a going over, and had the Misfortune to be ſtopt: now to venture a ſecond Time without a Paſs, was ſomething ſtrange. Why had you not gone and applied yourſelf to the Secretary for a Paſs?

Mr. Aſhton. I had made all the Application I could to my Lord Nottingham, I cannot ſay in my own Name, becauſe I was ſure before-hand, I ſhould be denied; but I did by others Hands endeavour to have got a Paſs to have gone into Flanders, becauſe it was of extraordinary Conſequence to me, as I tell your Lordſhip, to go quickly.

L. C. J. Holt. If you had ſuch an Occaſion to go, and had made it out to the Secretary, and given Security, you might have got it ſure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. One Word further, Why ſhould you be ſo much concerned to have theſe Papers thrown over-board?

Mr. Aſhton. Perfectly out of Friendſhip, and had I been travelling with your Lordſhip, or any Man elſe, that had been ſo unfortunate, I would have done the ſame.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Well, have you any more to ſay for yourſelf?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Mr. Aſhton. Call what Witneſſes you will, and ſpeak as long as you will for yourſelf, you ſhall be heard at large.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Serjeant, I thank you heartily, I have no more at preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Then the King's Counſel deſire to ſpeak a Word to the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: It falls out to be my Duty to ſum up the Evidence that has been given. I opened the Cauſe at the Beginning to you, and I opened it at large, and many Particulars there were mentioned, and truly, I do not think we have failed in the Proof of any one; I know you are Men of that Obſervation, that I need not, nor ſhall take upon me to repeat all the particular Circumſtances; but as near as I can, I ſhall touch upon the Heads of the Evidence, and do it with as equal Regard to my Duty, and as much Tenderneſs to the Priſoner, as any one can do.

Gentlemen, in the firſt Place, you ſee what the Indictment is for; 'tis for a High-Treaſon of a very Great Nature, no leſs than the Depoſing the King and Queen, and Subverting this Government, and that by a French Power and Intereſt: if inviting an Invaſion, and giving an Account of the Weakneſs, and where the Strength of the Government lay, carrying Papers to ſollicite the French to come, and to incite this Nation into Rebellion, that ſo they might depoſe depoſe this King, and ſet up the late King James again: If theſe be High-Treaſon, as doubtleſs they are, then Gentlemen, how far forth the Priſoner at the Bar had a Share in it, I muſt refer to you from what we have proved.

He is the Man, it ſeems, that made the firſt Step, for you may remember it was proved, that he met this Woman at Burdet's, in the City, for the Hiring of this Ship, and after two or three Meetings more, they come to a Concluſion, and 93 Guineas and Six-pence are depoſited to make up 100 l. which was the Price agreed upon, and that was actually paid by Mr. Aſhton; this is ſworn to be ſo.

The next Thing is, to what Purpoſe this Money was paid, and the Ship hired, that is directly ſworn, it was to carry Mr. Aſhton, and two or three more of his Friends, not naming of them, and they were to go for France, one of the Witneſſes ſays, to any Port in France, it was not directly declared to what Part. This, I ſay, was the Purpoſe for which the Money was paid, and the Veſſel hired, and this was to carry you, Mr. Aſhton, and two or three more Friends of his into France.

It is true, Mr. Elliot afterwards did meet Mr. Aſhton, and I think was by at the Bargain making, or at leaſtwiſe, when the Money was paid; I will not be poſitive in that, becauſe I would do him no Wrong, he being to make his Defence hereafter.

Mr. Aſhton. No, he was not by, I made the Bargain my ſelf.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then afterwards I remember one Circumſtance; when he hired this Ship, he was to hire a Ship that had a Place to hide in, and ſo he muſt needs know upon what Deſign, I ſay, by that he muſt needs know, that there was a Matter of great Moment which he was to tranſact, for he was to have ſuch a Ship as he might hide in.

After this Ship was hired, then they met in Covent-Garden, and there they take Order with the Man to go down with them to the Stairs, where the Waterman was called; indeed Mr. Aſhton did part from them in the Way, but preſently after came to them at the Stairs, and there came my Lord Preſton and his Man, who, together with Elliot, that was there before, I think before, all embark'd in the Boat, and were carried to the Ship, and made all the Haſte away they could for France.

When they were there, and came to a Place of Danger, near a Ship of War, there was Care taken, according as they had enquired of the Maſter of the Ship before, that they ſhould be hid, and hid they were.

Afterwards, when they were paſt that Danger, when they came to the Block-Houſe at Graveſend, there they thought fit to hide again, and did ſo, and there they concealed themſelves, 'till they were ſurprized in that Place by Captain Billop.

My Lord, after ſuch Time as Captain Billop had ſurprized them, he tells you, how he came down after this Smack, you ſee what happened; my Lord Preſton firſt came up, and after he had ſearched my Lord Preſton, Elliot came up, and he was ſearched, and after Mr. Aſhton was once come up, he went down to fetch his Hat, and there was ſeen to take up this Bundle of Papers, and there the Papers upon Search, were found in Mr. Aſhton's Breaſt.

This being ſo found in his Breaſt, you have heard what Applications were made by this Gentleman, to get theſe Papers caſt over-board, and what Promiſes were made to the Captain, and what Likelihood there was of making his Fortune, if he would go along with them, or throw away the Pacquet.

You hear, Gentlemen, that after they came to Whitehall, one of the Men ſwear, that this Gentleman gave them Money, that they ſhould ſay, they were not hired for France, but for Flanders.

Theſe, Gentlemen, are the ſeveral Circumſtances, that do appear in this Caſe, which ſhew the mighty Care and Diligence that was uſed to get theſe Papers ſuppreſſed that had been thus taken, or to get them again into their own Cuſtody, and that is a Matter that ſhews how far this Gentleman was concerned in this Deſign; and taking all theſe Things together, I think there can no greater Evidence be given, that Mr. Aſhton was in this Contrivance, that he was concerned in the Meſſage, that he was to be ſent, and all this Buſineſs that was to be done, was as much Guilty, as my Lord Preſton, who now ſtands convicted for it.

And the Court will tell you, Gentlemen, there are no Acceſſories, in Treaſon, all are Principals; though it be not actually proved, that this Gentleman did know all theſe Papers what they were, yet in Caſe he hired a Ship for himſelf and the Lord, whoſe Papers they were, to go in, and take ſuch Notice of the Papers, as to take Care of them, to ſuppreſs and conceal them, that is an Evidence of his Knowledge of the Importance of them? and if ſo, he will be equally Guilty of the High-Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. I doubt that.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, I would not willingly preſs any thing further, than the Nature of the Thing will bear.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, go on, Brother, we are only talking among ourſelves.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. The next thing is this, that is to be conſidered, That after ſuch Time as theſe Papers came to be laid open, what is it that appears among them? Truly I ſhall not take upon me to repeat ſo much as the Subſtance, much leſs the Particulars of the ſeveral Papers; but, I muſt ſay, that there does appear to be a formed Deſign of Subverting the Government, of depoſing this King and Queen, and of bringing us all into War, Rebellion and Blood-ſhed, all this under a Pretence of Eſtabliſhing the Proteſtant Religion, and our Legal Government again (tho' I can ſee no Means they had to depend upon for it) but by a Popiſh Intereſt, and a French Power; and how far that is poſſible, or probable, to promote ſuch an End, by ſuch Means, I leave to your Conſideration.

Gentlemen, you have heard all the particular Papers read; here was the Reſolution of a Conſult and Conference, where this Project was deſigned; here were Heads of a Declaration, that was to be framed to make the Credulous believe, what mighty Things ſhould be done upon their New Revolution: you ſee, what Letters have been produced, and cannot but eaſily apprehend what is the Import and Meaning of them. I reſolve, as I ſaid, not to mention the Particulars,

but

but there is ſcarce one Line among them, but what is Treaſon, for it all tends to this Purpoſe and Deſign, to depoſe the King, and alter the preſent Government.

Now upon the whole Matter, Gentlemen, what this Gentleman has ſaid, I confeſs to me ſeems ſtrange; he ſaid indeed at firſt, that he had no Defence at all, or that which was very weak, and ſo it ſhould ſeem the Truth was, for you ſee what his Defence has been.

He ſays, That he went into France, that he owns that he was going thither; but what was it to do? it was to ſettle ſome Accounts with the Family of Colonel Worden, and to receive a Sum of Money that was owing to him by a Perſon there.

Gentlemen, if the Deſign had ſo much Innocency in it, certainly he might have had a Paſs, at leaſt, there was no need of hiring a Veſſel at ſuch an extravagant Rate; there was no Neceſſity of hiding in this ſecret manner, and no Neceſſity of impoſſible Suggeſtions, and proffering Great Rewards for the diſpoſing of, and concealing theſe Papers.

Gentlemen, You will remember many Particulars more, which have not ſlipt your Obſervation; I ſhall not take upon me to repeat them, but leave them to your Conſideration.

Only this I muſt ſay, That this is a Treaſon of a very high Nature, a Treaſon to depoſe a King that has ventured all he had, even his Life has been in Danger, and his Blood has been ſpilt to eſtabliſh this Government, and our Religion, and our Laws, and yet it ſeems there are Men that think this may be better done by a Popiſh Intereſt and French Power, which I think nobody of either Wiſdom or Honeſty can imagine, or will ingage in, and therefore I leave it to your Determination.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you underſtand, that Mr. Aſhton is now tried for High-Treaſon; it is mentioned in the Indictment, to be for conſpiring the Death, and depoſing of the King and Queen, and for that Purpoſe, he did endeavour to go into France, and to carry divers Propoſals in Writing, and ſeveral Memorials to ſhew how this Kingdom might be invaded by the French.

To prove this, the Evidence that has been produced and given by the King's Council has been long, and conſiſts of two Parts, Witneſſes Viva Voce, they have told how Mr. Aſhton deſigned a Voyage to France, and that he hired a Ship for that Purpoſe, and ſeveral Papers were taken out of his Boſom.

In the firſt Place, the Witneſſes tell you, that about the latter End of December laſt, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot came to Burdett's Houſe, where they met with Mrs. Pratt, and Burdett having before that ſpoken to her about a Smack that ſhe called the Thomas and Elizabeth.

Then there was a Meeting appointed between her and Mr. Aſhton at the Wonder Tavern, where they did treat and debate about the Hire of it; afterwards they came back to Burdett's again, and there the Agreement was made betwixt the Woman and Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, to have a Hundred Pounds. Ninety-three Guineas and Six-pence was fetch'd down by Mr. Aſhton, and told out, and depoſited in the Hands of Mrs. Burdett; then there was a Six-pence broken, and one Part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other Part Mr. Aſhton had, and when either the Maſter, or Mrs. Pratt, ſhould bring the Part of the Six-pence that Mr. Aſhton kept, to Mrs. Burdett, the Hundred Pounds was to be paid.

And this Agreement being made, 'tis poſitively ſworn, that they did ask, whether there was a hiding Place in that Veſſel? an Anſwer was made, There was one, and thereupon a Note was given, that the Maſter and Mrs. Pratt ſhould go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Upon Wedneſday Night, they went there according to the Directions, where meets Aſhton and Elliot, but before that, there was a Boat hired at Surrey Stairs to carry them down to the Ship through Bridge, over-againſt the Tower, but the Tide not ſerving till about Ten a Cock at Night, they had agreed with a Waterman for half a Crown to carry them, and he was to ſtay till the Tide ſerved. And when they went out from Rigby's they parted, Elliot and the Maſter went together, Mr. Aſhton did not go with them, but came near about the ſame time to Surrey Stairs, where they took Water.

Being aboard, it was obſerved that all theſe Gentlemen were very timorous, and ſeemed to be much frighted at the Sight of any Veſſel, from which there was any Apprehenſion of their being taken notice of; and, therefore they went down under the Quarter-Hatches, which is a Place very inconvenient for ſuch Perſons, where none could ſtand or ſit upright, but they were forced to lie upon the Boards, or upon the Ballaſt.

It ſeems ſome Intimation was given, that ſome Gentlemen had an Intention to go into France to proſecute ſome Treaſonable Deſign: And Captain Billop being employed to purſue them, which he did in a Pinnace, when he came near the Veſſel where they were, he called to the Veſſel, and under pretence of preſſing Seamen, he went on Board: The Maſter of the Veſſel ſaid he had a Protection from the Admiralty; ſo that there was no Cauſe for them to fear preſſing, nor indeed was there any for Gentlemen to fear it, they being not liable to be preſſed.

When the Captain came near the Ship, and declared his Intent of coming on Board, theſe Gentlemen were gone under the Quarter-Hatches again; Captain Billop coming on Board, and ſpeaking about preſſing of the Men, and ſaying, There was a Couple that would make good Seamen for the King; the Maſter ſhewed his Protection, and then the Captain ſaid he would ſearch further in the Ship, and ſo he did, and then he pulls up the Boards, and there he finds all theſe Gentlemen, who were called up one after another, and ſearch'd by the Captain.

Gentlemen, There is one of the Witneſſes tells you, that when they were come up, he ſaw a Pacquet that lay in this very Place under the Quarter-Hatches, unto which was tied a piece of Lead, which Mr. Aſhton takes up, and puts in his Boſom, with which the Captain being acquainted, Enquiry is made by him, what Mr. Aſhton had there? Mr. Aſhton ſaid it was his Handkerchief, and nothing but that which he pull'd out: But Captain Billop puts his Hand in his Boſom, between his Coat and his Body, and takes out the Pacquet, and carried theſe Gentlemen on Board the George Frigat, where they ſtayed till the Tide ſerved to bring them to Whitehall.

But

But before they came on Board the Frigat, Mr. Aſhton was very importunate with him to throw this Pacquet into the Water; when they were on Board the George Frigat, and in the Cabbin alone, they continue their Importunity.

Now, ſay they, we have you here, and you are alone, pray will you throw this Pacquet over-board; and particularly Mr. Aſhton ſaid it would do the Captain no good to injure ſo many Gentlemen, and Mr. Elliot would have perſuaded the Captain to take the Lead that was tied to the Pacquet, and tie it to ſome Letters that were taken out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and throw the Pacquet over-board; and then have informed the King and Council, that thoſe Letters was the Pacquet taken out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom: But the Captain very honeſtly rejected all their Motions of that kind.

Truly, Gentlemen, my Memory will not ſerve me to repeat all the Particulars, but I queſtion not your Notes will bring them to your Minds. Mr. Elliot, it ſeems, was ſo mightily concerned at their being taken with theſe Papers, that when they ſhot London-Bridge, he wiſh'd the Bridge might have fallen upon them and knock'd them on the Head; and, when they were got through, he wiſh'd a Thunder-bolt would fall down into the Boat and ſink them: That, indeed was Mr. Elliot, and not Mr. Aſhton; but Mr. Aſhton was as much concerned about diſpoſing of the Pacquet as Mr. Elliot.

At Whitehall this Pacquet is opened, and you have ſeveral Papers produced in Evidence, and read to you; you have heard what Evidence has been given, that theſe are the very Papers that were in the Pacquet thus taken.

Firſt of all Captain Billop tells you he carried them to my Lord Nottingham, and that they lay there in his Office; he withdrew, indeed, while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preſton, but the Pacquet was not opened in the Interim, but there was only a Paper ſtuck on the Out-ſide, that my Lord had taken off before the Captain returned into the Room, and there the Pacquet remained intire. He ſays, my Lord Nottingham opened the Pacquet and put up all the Papers that were in the Pacquet in his Preſence into a Cover again, and ſealed them up with his Seal. My Lord Nottingham ſays poſitively, he did put up all the Papers that were in the Pacquet again, all and no more, except the Cover, and that he ſealed up and delivered it to Captain Billop.

Captain Billop ſays, he took theſe very Papers from my Lord Nottingham, and as he received them, carried them without opening to my Lord Preſident.

My Lord Preſident ſays, he lock'd them up, unopen'd, in a cloſe Cabinet in his Cloſet-Room, where nobody comes; there they were that Night, and the next Day he carried them intire to the King, and ſome of them were read by the King, in the Preſence of my Lord Preſident; and they were all taken away again by his Lordſhip, no more nor no leſs; and, my Lord Preſident brought them all to the Cabinet Council, where they were read, and were delivered to my Lord Sydney.

My Lord Sydney ſwears, Theſe Papers now produced, are the ſame Papers he had from my Lord Preſident; and my Lord Preſident ſwears, That they are the ſame he received by Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Sydney mark'd them.

So that there can remain no Doubt of theſe being the ſame Papers, that were contained in the Pacquet, that was taken out of the Boſom of Mr. Aſhton.

Then, as to the Matter of the Papers, I think it is plain, beyond all Contradiction, that the Import of them is Treaſonable: They ſhew a Deſign of invading the Kingdom by a foreign Force, and of Depoſing the King and Queen from the Government, and of ſetting the late King upon the Throne.

It is agreed, as it is mentioned at a Conference, between ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen, that were of the Whig and Tory Party, as they call them, that the late King was to be reſtored, though by a French Power.

It was impoſſible for them to effect it, by going plainly to Work, and ſaying in plain Words, the French ſhould invade us. It was to be done in this manner.

The French King muſt pretend by all Means to be our Friend, and a Mediator betwixt the late King, and the People of England, and this was out of Deſign, plainly, to get a Party of the Kingdom to join with them; the moſt credulous and inconſiderate Sort of People; who when they ſhall be ſeduced into a Belief of the French King's great Kindneſs, it was not doubted but there would be a Conjunction between them and the French Forces, to reſtore the late King.

And to procure ſuch a Perſuaſion in the People, the French King was to ſhew himſelf kind to the Engliſh Proteſtants, to appear and act another Part than he had formerly done; he was to permit them the Exerciſe of the Proteſtant Religion, thereby to perſuade many, that his Perſecution of his own Subjects, the Hugonots, was not out of any Averſion to the Proteſtant Religion, but only to their Antimonarchical and Reſiſting Principles.

Then an Inconvenience is to be removed; for they complain, that they are too full of Bigotry at St. Germains, and too bare-fac'd: For they make an open Profeſſion of Popery, and ſpeak truly what they do intend; but ſay they, if they will have the Deſign take Effect, they muſt be more Cloſe and Secret; For the Folly and Bigotry at St. Germains was a very great Obſtruction. Therefore, they propoſed, that ſome Perſons might be ſubſtituted as Agents to correſpond here, that underſtood the Temper of the Nation, and what would eaſilieſt prevail with the People: And a Model was to be framed at St. Germains; the Proteſtants are to be ſeemingly careſſed, Seven or Nine to be of the late King's Council, that ſo we might believe, that he was ours in Intereſt again, and that we have a Relation to him.

And if Things were carried with ſuch Cunning and Subtlety, they hoped to delude a great many People over into the Intereſt of the late King; but, if they went bare-faced, it would cauſe ſuch great Jealouſies, that they muſt totally deſpair of Succeſs.

Yet they did not hope by theſe Artifices to obtain ſo many Friends here, as might have been ſufficient to accompliſh their Deſign; and therefore they muſt have recourſe to a foreign Force, particularly a French Force. For ſays one of the Papers, Uſe Foreigners to expel Foreigners; that is, Uſe French to expel Dutch Foreigners, who are our Allies, and are falſly accuſed by them to have trampled upon the Rights and Liberties of the Nation.

There

There is one Argument used to encourage People to assist the French in the Invasion of their own Country, which I cannot omit; namely, That as soon as the French, with a considerable Expence of Men and Money, had restored the Protestant Religion, the late King to the Crown, and the People to their Liberties, that he would withdraw all his Forces, and reap no Profit or Advantage by his Success. I must confess, this carries so little of Persuasion in it, that it is ridiculous to think thereby to impose upon any Number of Men; but notwithstanding the Weakness of their Arguments, it is apparent they were in good earnest; the Papers give an Account to the French, in what State and Condition our Forts were, Portsmouth not mann'd with above 500, and Gosport how weakly fortified.

It was a happy Juncture between this and the first of March, when Advice is given to make use of the Opportunity: For Men cannot give, but Men may use Opportunities, and something was to be done forthwith, and the Goods must be got in Readiness, particularly Linnen, and the Copper, are mentioned, which are mysterious and dark Expressions, and you may put a Construction upon them as well as I; for they are written in a Style of Trade, as if they were a Correspondence between two Tradesmen, and the Linnen and the Copper are ordered to be brought before the 10th of March.

But however obscure some of these Expressions are, there are others that are more plain, That the French Fleet must be out in April at farthest, and are to come before the Conjunction between the English and the Dutch, and Jennings, Strickland, or Trevannian are to come from St. Malo's in one Night, and to fight the English Fleet in the Chops of the Channel, and not to come so high as Beachy, where they came the last Year.

And there is an Account given, in what Condition and State our Navy was, how many Ships, what Rates, how mann'd, and who the Officers; and then as the French were to be in Readiness to come in April, so they say our Fleet was not to be out till June.

Gentlemen, there are a great many other Particulars; but these are enough, nay half of them were enough to make any Man Guilty of Treason, that was concerned in them, or that had a Hand in carrying or making use of them.

Besides, there are other Letters which can import nothing, but the Writer was of the late King's Interest; one directed to Mr. Redding, the other to Mrs. Redding; and these were to go to France, to let them know how zealous he was in his Duty, and how the Interest of the young Master increased. The Letters have these Expressions; That tho' the Family were decreased, yet our Interest is increased, which is yours, and I speak in the Plural Number, because I speak the Sentiments of my elder Brother, and the rest of our Relations, and desire them to believe they were zealous and cordial in their Duty to Mr. Redding. Now what Interpretation you will make of this, I'll leave to you.

Then there is another Letter to Mrs. Charlton, and another to Mr. Jackson, and divers other Things that have been read, and among the rest, have been read the Heads of a Declaration at large, shewing what should be done, and what Methods should be taken in order to the restoring the late King, and deposing this.

And there is also mention made in a Paper, how divers Persons, who were to be pardoned, as particularly, all Justices of the Peace actually in Commission, are not to be excepted; Outlaws are to be pardoned; Chimney Money to be taken away; and all that come in within one and twenty Days, are to be forgiven.

So that it is plain these Letters import a Design to depose the King and Queen, and the Kingdom to be invaded by Foreigners; only a little to colour the Matter, nor to lose the Pretence of a Protestant Interest altogether, there was to be 5 or 6000 Swedes to be made use of in the Invasion.

Gentlemen, if there was a Design of an Invasion, be it by Papists, or by Protestants, if any Act was done tending thereunto, it is High-Treason within the Statute of 25 E. III. For purposing and intending to depose the King and Queen, manifested by any Overt-Act, hath been always held to be High-Treason.

This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that has been giving against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ashton says for himself, It is true, saith he, my Design was to go to France. I was so unfortunate as to have the Papers taken about me. I did take them up; but, says he, it is not at all proved that any one of the Papers that are now produced are my Hand: which is true: There is no such Proof.

The next thing is, that Mr. Ashton being ask'd, What Occasion he had to go to France? he says, He had formerly a Relation to Col. Worden, and did transact, and had the Management of his Affairs, which were very great. Col. Worden died half a Year ago, and he enjoin'd him upon his Death-Bed to go into France about settling some Accompts of his, and he was desired by the Family of Col. Worden so to do.

This Mr. Ashton alledges; but he has not proved it. 'Tis very strange, that if Mr. Ashton was to go to France to negotiate that Affair for Col. Worden's Family, none of that Family should be produced to prove, that Col. Worden gave him such Directions, or that the Family desired him to go into France upon that Account.

Then Mr. Ashton hath endeavoured to give another Reason for his Voyage into France: he affirms, he had some Affairs of his own with relation to the late Queen; he was concerned for her, and she did owe Monies here, and he paid several Debts to Tradesmen, particularly 400 l. she owed to the Coach Harness Maker; and he having paid it, went over to reimburse himself: The Tradesman was produced, and he says, Mr. Ashton did pay the Money a Year ago; but whether Mr. Ashton had Effects from the late Queen, or paid it out of his own Pocket, does not appear; Mr. Ashton says, he paid it out of his own Pocket, which is very extraordinary, that he should be so kind to pay what he was not obliged to pay, and have no Security to reimburse himself.

So that, Gentlemen, you had best consider whether there be any thing at all said or proved, that can justify Mr. Ashton's going to France, or whether there be any good Reason offered for it.

Then Ashton has called Witnesses to prove, that he was always a Protestant, though he did live in a Popish Family, where they did encourage Papists and discountenance Protestants; for which he had the Ill-will of those he did depend upon.

Gen-

Gentlemen, all that is agreed, and it is not a Queſtion in this Caſe, whether Mr. Aſhton be a Proteſtant, or a Papiſt; but the Queſtion is, Whether he be guilty of High-Treaſon? from which the being a Proteſtant does not ſecure a Man.

But, Gentlemen, if Mr. Aſhton had no Knowledge upon what Deſign the other Perſons were to go into France, though he had actually gone into France, it had been a Crime in this Juncture of Affairs, yet not High-Treaſon; but to go into France, and carry a treaſonable Scheme of a Deſign, and Project of an Invaſion, that is Treaſon.

Now the Queſtion is, Whether Mr. Aſhton went with ſuch a Purpoſe or not, you are to conſider; I would not lead you into any Strain of the Evidence, but only ſtate it how it ſtands. It is plain he was concerned all along in hiring the Smack, and as the King's Council obſerved to you, the Price was ſomething extraordinary; they were to pay 100 l. for the Voyage, to which was added ſome Encouragement to the Woman, that if ſhe performed this Voyage well, ſhe might get 1000 l. before Lady-Day, and the Money was paid by Mr. Aſhton, and he was taken aboard the Veſſel.

Mr. Aſhton was much concerned to ſecure the Papers, by taking them out of the Place where they lay upon the Ballaſt under the Quarter-Hatches; and after they were taken out of his Boſom, he was very importunate, and ſo often, with Captain Billop to throw them over-board.

And why ſhould he be ſo earneſt and concerned, unleſs he very well knew, and was acquainted with the Contents of thoſe Papers?

And he gave one of the Seamen 2 s. 6 d. to ſay, They were bound for Flanders: Unleſs it was a Matter of great Importance he went about, and that was not fit to be known, why ſhould he deny it, or labour to have it concealed? An 100 l. to be paid for this Voyage, was, upon a joint Account, as well for my Lord Preſton, as for Mr. Aſhton and Elliot; Mr. Aſhton did pay the Money, and he does not make it appear whoſe it was.

Gentlemen, it reſts upon you to conſider the Evidence you have heard, whether it is ſufficient to induce you to believe Mr. Aſhton was going into France with theſe Papers to carry on the Deſign of Depoſing the King and Queen, and Invading the Kingdom: If you are not ſatisfied in your Conſciences that he is guilty, then find him not guilty: On the other Side, if you are ſatisfied that he is guilty, I do not queſtion but you will find him ſo.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord has rightly repeated and ſtated the Evidence to you; I ſhall only ſay but a very few Words to it.

Mr. Aſhton, as at firſt he did, ſo in his Defence has complained of a very ſpeedy Trial, and would inſinuate ſomething of Favour that he might find for that Reaſon. It does appear he had Notice of his Trial ſufficient, and had Time enough to prepare for it: But there is one Thing extraordinary has happened to his Advantage, which I would deſire may be taken Notice of. If he had been tried on Saturday, perhaps he had had more Reaſon to complain than now he has; for he has now (and you ſee he uſes it, and wiſely enough too) the Advantage that happened to him upon my Lord Preſton's Trial; and has had Time ſince Saturday to prepare for this Day's Work; ſo that there is no hard Point upon him as to that Matter, but he has had pretty good Fortune therein.

Next he does inſinuate, that he is a Proteſtant; Gentlemen, the Law does not diſtinguiſh between a Proteſtant Traytor, and a Papiſt Traytor; if he has committed ſuch an Offence, as by the Law is High Treaſon, the Law does not diſtinguiſh, nor may we. And Proteſtants may ſerve Papiſts Deſigns, though they do not directly intend it. Therefore the Evidence to prove him a Proteſtant is nothing before you; for the Matter is only, whether he be guilty of this Crime or not.

In the Trial of my Lord Preſton, then the Labour was, that my Lord was not the Man that was concerned, as the Bearer of this Pacquet of Letters or Writings wherein the Treaſon is contained; but then it was Mr. Aſhton, the Pacquets were found about him; but now it is not Mr. Aſhton, but my Lord Preſton, and this is now the Queſtion before you, that he ſtands upon.

But if ſo be they were all concerned in the Carriage and Tranſporting of this Buſineſs, then they are all alike guilty of Treaſon, and therefore they cannot ſhuffle it from one to another.

Now there appears ſome Reaſon why they would not all agree to be tried together; for now it is but turning it from my Lord Preſton upon Aſhton, and Mr. Aſhton upon my Lord Preſton, and Elliot upon either of them, and ſo by this Means all might eſcape, if this were ſufficient to ſerve their Turn.

But the Queſtion before you is, Whether all theſe Perſons are not all in all equally concerned? and 'tis the Evidence that muſt be your Guide and ours: for it is not Mr. Aſhton's Affirmation, that he had Buſineſs to go into France, and he happened unluckily to fall into theſe Mens Company, that will be a ſufficient Excuſe, unleſs he prove it.

It had been an eaſy Matter for him to have proved, if he had been going into France upon Buſineſs for Colonel Worden; but at length that is turned off, and then the Pretence for going is, to recover ſome Money he had owing to him there, and that he had payed for another Perſon. Had he Papers of Inſtructions of this kind? Had he any one Witneſs of this Thing?

The Merchandize that he carried out with him is of another Import. Where were the Notes or Bonds that he was to recover? Where is the Accompt that he had to make up with any body beyond Sea? There is no Manner of Evidence of any ſuch thing.

Next, Gentlemen, do but conſider, if the Man were ſo innocent as he would inſinuate, as if he had not gone with the reſt upon this Errand, how came the Man to have ſo heavy a Concern upon him? Why ſhould he go to take up theſe Papers, if they were not his Brats? Why ſhould he clap them in to his Boſom, if he knew nothing what was in them? Why was his Concern ſo great to have them thrown over-board?

Gentlemen, if you expect that the Hearts of Men ſhould be proved otherwiſe, than as Men gueſs by one another's Meanings, by their Actions, 'tis impoſſible to convict any Man of a Crime; for if his own Affirmation ſhall be a Defence, he will never want a Defence to keep himſelf from being convicted: But that is not what the Law gives Credit to; it muſt be Proof and Evidence that you are to judge upon. But of all he pretends to, he proves nothing.

How came he acquainted with my Lord Preſton? Sure he was a Man ſufficiently known in the World? Why ſhould he go with him and Mr. Elliot? Are they not all known? Are they not Perſons of the ſame Diſpoſition, and much in the ſame Imployment?

He had been taken a little before, he ſays himſelf, and was hindred from going; and he had ſtrange ill Luck, if there was nothing elſe in the Buſineſs than what he pretends.

Gentlemen, in ſhort, if you do find by the Evidence, that he was going upon a good and an honeſt Deſign, and that he knew nothing of the Danger that was in theſe Papers, and that theſe Perſons were in, by reaſon of theſe Papers, and yet would go about to have theſe Papers concealed; and endeavour to have them thrown away, without knowing what was in them: Theſe are Evidences that will be good for you to go by, if you have any ſuch; but to take his Affirmation, becauſe he ſays it, when he proves nothing, that is no Evidence to go by.

I leave it to you, as my Lord has done. If you are ſatisfied upon the Evidence that he is guilty; I doubt not you know, and will do your Duty, and will find him ſo; and if you have no ſuch Evidence, or any to prove the contrary, that he is not guilty, then you ought to find him ſo too.

Mr. Aſhton. I beg your Pardon for one Word.

L. C. J. Holt. What would you ſay?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſhall reckon it a particular Favour, if you will pardon me one Word, after your Lordſhip has given the Charge.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what ſay you?

Mr. Aſhton. I think, with Submiſſion, that there is no Proof I knew, or was privy, to the Contents of any of theſe Papers.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, Mr. Aſhton, ſhew any Man any Reaſon, if you can, why did you go down and catch up theſe Papers, if you did not known what was in them? they might be for your Advantage to be ſhewn, for any thing you pretend to know.

Mr. Aſhton. I did it for my L. Preſton's Sake, whoſe Hand was proved, and he ſtands convicted as the Bearer of thoſe Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. But you forgot one thing that was plainly proved, Mr. Aſhton, that when you importun'd Capt. Billop to throw away the Papers, you uſed this as an Argument, It would do him no good to injure three honeſt Gentlemen.

Mr. Aſhton. I did not ſay ſo, my Lord, that I know of, tho' indeed he has ſworn it.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, you have been heard as long as you did deſire to ſpeak, and were ask'd over and over again, whether you had any more? You are not now ſaying any new Matter; if you could urge any thing that had been omitted, which made for your Advantage, I believe the Court would indulge you, tho' it be againſt the Courſe.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſay there is nothing under my Hand, there is no Privity proved; Does Suppoſition condemn a Man? And is there any thing but Suppoſition againſt me? There is not my Hand proved in any of the Papers. I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Jury to obſerve that.

L. C. J. Holt. Your being in the Company, and being ſo concern'd, and importunately endeavouring to have them thrown overboard; the Hiring the Veſſel to go with theſe Treaſonable Papers to an Enemy's Country, and the Papers found about you, is Fact proved, and is left to the Gentlemen of the Jury to conſider of.

Mr. Aſhton. But does all this amount to more than Suſpicion?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, if you ſpeak after we have charged the Jury, you will give us an Occaſion of ſpeaking to anſwer you; the Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Underſtanding; they have very well obſerved the Evidence, and I perceive they have been very extraordinary intent upon it; they will be able to make a right Judgment, no Queſtion, of it.

Mr. Aſhton. All that I deſire, is; there is nothing proved upon me, of my knowing what was in theſe Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. And there is that which is very conſiderable too, that 'tis plain, what you ſay about Col. Worden's Account, is but a Pretence; for when you were ſearch'd, there was not one Paper, nor one bit of Account found about you, nothing but this Bundle of Treaſonable Papers and Letters.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly beg you will obſerve what is for me, as well as what is againſt me.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, do you think you ſhall ſtay out any time. The Court deſires to know it, becauſe they will order themſelves accordingly.

Juryman. My Lord, we do not know till we come together.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, take your own Time, only the Court would comply with your Conveniency in the Adjournment.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourn'd for half an Hour, and when they were returned, the Jury came in to give their Verdict, and being called over, anſwered to their Names.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict;

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. John Aſhton, hold up thy Hand. Which he did. Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you? Is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Maj. Richardſon. Look to him, he is found guilty of High-Treaſon.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court has recorded it. You ſay, That John Aſhton is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Lands nor Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, nor at any time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen, I think truly you have gone according to your Evidence, which the Law requires you to do, and that it is which will preſerve us all. And tho' it be truly a Thing that falls hard upon the particular Men that are concerned in ſuch Things; yet notwithſtanding we muſt have more Conſideration of the general Good and Preſervation, and the Support of the Government, and that the Law have its due Courſe, Courſe, than of any particular Man's Caſe, as to the hard Point of it: we muſt look to theſe Things, or there will be no living in the World.

Sir W. Hedges. My Lord, we humbly deſire of your Lordſhip, that we may be diſmiſs'd from further Attendance this Seſſions.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, you are diſmiſs'd, and the Court thanks you for your Service.

Then the Court adjourn'd for an Hour, and then the Lord Mayor and Deputy Recorder, with ſeveral of the Juſtices and Aldermen, returned into the Court, and after Proclamation for Silence, Order was given to bring the Lord Preſton, and Mr. Aſhton to the Bar. Which was done. The Lord Preſton ſtanding without the Bar, and Mr. Aſhton within.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand. Which he did.

John Aſhton, hold up your Hand. Which he did.

My Lord Preſton, you ſtand convicted of High Treaſon, for conſpiring the Death of the King and Queen's Majeſties, for adhering to the King's Enemies, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government: What can you ſay for yourſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment againſt you of Death, according to the Law?

Lord Preſton. 'Tis true my Lord, the Jury have found me guilty of the Treaſon aſſigned in the Indictment. My Lord, it is a Treaſon of a very heavy and black Nature, 'tis of ſuch a Nature, that if I had been conſcious to myſelf to have deſerved, I ſhould be very willing to undergo that Judgment that is like preſently to paſs upon me. It is to endeavour to bring in the King of France to conquer and invade this Kingdom; 'tis a Thought I always abhorred; I love my Religion, my Family, my Country too well to attempt or endeavour any ſuch thing; I muſt appeal to your Lordſhip, though now perhaps it is too late, whether the Treaſon that is laid againſt me has been perfectly proved; for in the Caſe of proving Hands, and particularly in the Caſe of Colonel Sydney, it was diſallowed that Compariſon of Hands ſhould be Evidence; there ought to be at leaſt one, if not two, Evidences to prove the Writing of it. My Lord, I know this is too late, I ſhould have offered this to the Jury before, but being in the Crowd, and in great Diſorder by ſtanding ſo long, I had not Strength or Ability enough to urge it as I ſhould. I have nothing more to ſay in the Caſe, but ſubmit to that Judgment that the Law has aſſigned.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preſton, your Lordſhip knows the Proceedings of the Law in ſuch Caſes; there is no averring againſt the Verdict of the Jury; they have found your Lordſhip guilty, and the Law ſays, that Judgment muſt be given upon you according to that Verdict.

Lord Preſton. Mr. Recorder, I do not aver againſt the Verdict. I own it is too late; I ſhould have offered it before, and I muſt ſubmit to the Judgment of the Law.

Cl. of Arr. John Aſhton, hold up thy Hand. Which he did.

You are in the ſame Caſe with the Priſoner laſt before you. What can you ſay for yourſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt you to die according to Law?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I would humbly deſire I might have a Sight of my Indictment; I have ſome Reaſon, perhaps, to believe that I am found guilty upon an Erroneous Indictment; and if it be ſo, I would deſire to have Council to argue the Errors of the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have heard it twice read in Engliſh, and once in Latin, and that is all that is allowed to any one in your Caſe; I never knew the Record of any Indictment ſhewn to any Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Aſhton. Suppoſe there be any Error in it?

Mr. D. Recorder. I am not to ſuppoſe any ſuch thing; if there is any, it has been read to you, aſſign it, and the Court will conſider of it.

Mr. Aſhton. If I can aſſign the Errors in the Indictment, may I have the Advantage of it then?

Mr. D. Recorder. If there be Errors, you will have the Advantage of them, if you will aſſign them; if there be none, you can have none.

Mr. Aſhton. Then I ſay, if there be Words in the Indictment, that there are no ſuch Word in Nature, then, Sir, I am told it is a Vicious and Erroneous Indictment, and that is enough to viciate the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No ſuch Words in Nature? It is hard to tell what you mean by that; perhaps there are Terms of Art in the Law, which, though you are not acquainted with, we are.

Mr. Aſhton. Then there are ſuch Words in Nature.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is an inſenſible Expreſſion, Words in Nature!

Mr. Aſhton. I am informed that even a Letter in an Indictment is enough to viciate it, or if it be falſe Latin, that will make it an Erroneous Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No, that is not ſo; but if you will tell me what that Letter is, I'll tell you what I ſay to it; it may, or it may not be material.

Mr. Aſhton. We know it was lately diſputed in a Caſe of this Nature at this Place, and I am informed the Court were of Opinion, if it had been in the Body of the Indictment, it had been an Error.

Mr. D. Recorder. If you pleaſe to tell me wherein the Error in your Indictment conſiſts, I may be able to give you a good Anſwer to it, or you will have the Advantage of it.

Mr. Aſhton. I ſay it conſiſts in this; the Word Cymba is written with an S in the Indictment, whereas it ſhould be with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. How do you know it?

Mr. Aſhton. It is no matter how I know it; I have ſome Reaſon to know it, it may be.

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Hardeſty, look upon the Record.

Mr. Aſhton. With Submiſſion, that is an Error, for there is no ſuch Word as Cymba with an S.

Cl. of Arr. It is a long Indictment; will you pleaſe to ask him where about it is?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Aſhton, will you tell me where 'tis written?

Mr. Aſhton. In the Indictment, when you come to ſpeak of Cymba a Boat.

Mr. D. Recorder. By the Sound I cannot diſtinguiſh whether it be S or C.

Mr. Aſhton. Sir, I hope you will do me the Juſtice to examine the Indictment itſelf.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk is looking upon it: how is it, Mr. Hardeſty? Is it with an S or a C?

Cl. of Arr. It is with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk has read it, and he certifies me it is in both Places with a C. which is true Latin.

Mr. Aſhton

Mr. Aſhton. Is it in all Places with a C?

Cl. of Arr. I have look'd in two Places, and 'tis right; I'll look further, if you pleaſe

Mr. Aſhton. Pray do, Which he did.

Cl. of Ar. It is with a C in all Places.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk tells me it is the ſame, and right in every Place, and he has look'd over all the Indictment, as to the Matter.

Mr. Aſhton. Then, Sir, I ſubmit to it.

Mr. D. Recorder. Make Proclamation for Silence. Which was done.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preſton, or rather Sir Richard Grahme, and Mr. John Aſhton, Ye have been Indicted, Arraigned, and Convicted of High-Treaſon againſt their preſent Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, whom God preſerve. Ye have had a long, a fair, and favourable Trial, as any Perſons that ever have been tried at this Bar.

The Jury that has paſſed upon your Lives and Deaths has convicted you; and the Court are now to do their laſt Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon ſuch Crimes as ye ſtand convicted of.

It is a great Trouble to me to pronounce a Judgment that is ſo heavy upon you; but I muſt ſay, the Evidence that has been given againſt you, was ſo clear, and, I ſuppoſe, not only convincing to the Twelve Men that tried you, but to all Byſtanders, that I can do it with that Satisfaction that becomes one who is intruſted with the King's Juſtice, that the Law may obtain, and that there ſhould be no Interruption of Juſtice. And the Sentence that the Law has declared ſhould be pronounced in this Caſe, is this:

That Ye do reſpectively go to the Place from whence Ye came; from thence to be drawn upon a Sledge to the Place of Execution, to be there hanged up by the Neck, to be cut down while Ye are yet alive, to have your Hearts and Bowels taken out before your Faces, and your Members cut off and burnt, Your Heads ſevered from your Bodies, Your Bodies divided into four Quarters, Your Heads and Bodies reſpectively to be diſpoſed of according to the King's Will and Pleaſure; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Priſoners were conveyed away to Newgate, the Place from whence they came. Lord Preſton obtained a Pardon; but Mr. Aſhton was executed on the 28th of January.

THE Queen having remitted that Part of Sentence, as to Drawing and Quartering, he went in a Coach, with two Divines, to Tyburn, where he was executed, and his Body given to his Relations to bury. He delivered this Paper to the Sheriff.

Mr. Sheriff,

Having obſerved, that the Methods of making Speeches at the Place of Execution, were not always attended with the deſigned Succeſſes; and thinking it better to employ my laſt Minutes in Devotion, and Holy Communion with my God, I have prepared this Paper to leave in your Hands, as well to aſſert my Principles, as to teſtify my Innocency.

As to my Religion, I profeſs, by God's Grace, to die in the Faith into which I was baptized, that of the Church of England, in whoſe Communion (nothing doubting of my Salvation, thro' the Merits of my Saviour) I have always thought myſelf ſafe and happy. According to her Principles, and late much eſteemed Doctrine (tho' now unhappily exploded) I have regulated my Life; believing myſelf obliged, by my Religion, to look upon my rightful, lawful Prince (whatever his Principles were, or his Practices might be) as God's Vicegerent, and accountable, (if guilty of Male-Adminiſtration) to God only, from whom he received his Power; and always believing it to be contrary to the Laws of God, the Church, and the Realm, upon any Pretence whatſoever, to take up Arms againſt him: And let all the World take Notice in this Belief I die. But I have more particular Obligations to the King, my Maſter, whom I had the Honour to ſerve, and received many ſignal Favours from him, for 16 Years paſt; ſo that Gratitude (a Thing not much eſteem'd at this Time) as well as Duty and Religion, commanded the utmoſt Service I could pay him. And when I had theſe Conſiderations, That we were born his Liege Subjects; That we had ſolemnly profeſſed our Allegiance, and often confirm'd it with Oaths; That his Majeſty's Uſage, after the Prince of Orange's Arrival, was very hard, ſevere, and (I may ſay) unjuſt; and, That all the new Methods of ſettling this Nation, have hitherto made it more miſerable, poor, and more expoſed to foreign Enemies; and, That the Religion we pretend to be fond of preſerving, is now much more than ever, likely to be deſtroyed: There ſeemed to me no Way to prevent the Impending Evils, and ſave theſe Nations from Poverty and Deſtruction, but the calling Home our injur'd Sovereign; who, as a true Father of his Country, has (notwithſtanding all his Provocations and Injuries,) a natural Love and Tenderneſs for all his Subjects. And I am ſo far from repining at the Loſs of my Life, that had I Ten thouſand, I ſhould rather think myſelf obliged to ſacrifice them all, than omit any juſt and honeſt Means to promote ſo good and neceſſary a Work. And I adviſe and deſire all my Fellow-Subjects to think of their Duty, and turn to their Allegiance, before the ſevere Judgments of God overtake 'em for their Perjury and Rebellion: But certainly the Good and Intereſt of theſe Nations, abſtracted from all other Conſiderations, will e'er long convince them of the Neceſſity of doing it.

Having thus frankly declared my Principles, I know the Inference will be, that I have acted accordingly, and conſequently, that I am now juſtly condemn'd: But, as I ingenuouſly own the Inference, ſo I as poſitively deny the Conſequence; for whatever my Inclinations, or Actings have been, yet, as to the Matter I was ſentenced to die for, I declare myſelf innocent. And I will appeal, even to the Judges themſelves, whether or no, upon my Trial, there appeared the leaſt Proof that I knew a Tittle contained in the Papers; but Preſumptions were with the Jury thought ſufficient to find me guilty, tho' I am told I am the firſt Man that ever was condemned for High-Treaſon upon bare Suſpicion or Preſumption; and that contrary to my Lord Coke's, and other eminent Lawyers Opinions. The Knowledge of my own Innocency, as to the Indictment and Charge againſt me, was That that arm'd me with ſo much Aſſurance, and occaſioned my caſting my Life upon the firſt twelve Men of the Pannel, without challenging challenging any. But tho' I have, I think, juſt Reaſon to complain of the ſevere Charge given by the Judges, and hard Meaſure I have received; not to mention my cloſe Impriſonment, the haſty and violent Proceedings againſt me, nor the Induſtry us'd in the Return of fitting Perſons to paſs upon me; the denying me a Copy of the Pannel, &c.

Yet, as I beg for Pardon and Forgiveneſs at the Hands of God, I do moſt heartily pray for, and forgive them, and all my Enemies, all the World; nay, even that Judge and Juryman who did ſo ſignally, (contrary to common Juſtice) expoſe themſelves to deſtroy me. But let the Will of God be done, I rely wholly upon his Mercy, and the Merits of my bleſſed Saviour, for Salvation; I do chearfully and intirely reſign myſelf into his Hands, as into the Hands of a faithful Creator, in ſure and certain Hopes of a happy Reſurrection.

Bleſs, protect and ſtrengthen, O Lord God, my good and gracious King and Maſter: In thy due Time let the Virtue, Goodneſs, and Innocency of the Queen, my Miſtreſs, make all their Enemies bluſh, and ſilence the wicked and unjuſt Calumnies that Malice and Envy have raiſed againſt her. Make her and theſe Nations happy in the Prince of Wales; whom, from unanſwerable and undoubted Proofs, I know to be her Son. Reſtore them all, when thou ſeeſt fit, to their juſt Rights, and on ſuch a Bottom as may ſupport and eſtabliſh the Church of England, and once more make her flouriſh, notwithſtanding what ſhe hath received of late from her prevaricating Sons. Forgive, forgive, O Lord, all my Enemies; bleſs all my Friends; comfort and ſupport my dear afflicted Wife, and poor Babes; be thou a Huſband and a Father to them; for their Sakes only I could have wiſhed to have lived; but pardon that Wiſh, O good God, and take my Soul into thy everlaſting Glory. Amen. (a)

CXLIX. The Trial of Henry Harrison, at the Old-Bailey, for the Murder of Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Phyſick, April 6. 1692. 4 W. & M.

Wedneſday, April 6. 1692.

Judges preſent { Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, Lord Chief Baron Atkins, Mr. Juſtice Nevil.

THE Keeper of the Priſon of Newgate, did, according to Order of the Court, being then ſate, bring up the Body of Henry Harriſon, Gent. to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, London, who being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found that Day by the Grand Jury for the City of London, in Manner following:

Cl. of Arr. HEnry Harriſon, hold up thy Hand. Which he did. You ſtand Indicted by the Name of Henry Harriſon, late of London, Gent. for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the fourth Day of January, in the third Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, of England, &c. about Eleven of the Clock in the Night of the ſame Day, with Force and Arms, &c. at London, viz. in the Pariſh of St. Peter, Cornhill, in the Ward of Lime-ſtreet, in London aforeſaid, being in a certain Coach with one Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Phyſick, and a certain Man yet unknown, in and upon the ſaid Andrew Clenche, in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, then and there being, violently, felonioufly, and of your Malice forethought, did make an Aſſault. And that you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the Help and Aſſiſtance of the ſaid Man unknown, with a Pocket Handkerchief, with a Coal in the ſame, being put, of the Value of Two-pence, about the Neck of him the ſaid Andrew Clenche, then and there felonioufly, voluntarily, and of your Malice before-thought, did put, faſten and bind; and that you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the ſaid Handkerchief with the Coal aforeſaid in it, by you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the Help and Aſſiſtance of the aforeſaid Man unknown, about the Neck of the ſaid Andrew Clenche then as aforeſaid, put faſtened and bound, him the ſaid Andrew Clenche, then and there with Force of Arms, &c. Felonioufly, Voluntarily, and of your Malice before-thought, did choak and ſtrangle, by Reaſon of which Choaking and Strangling of the ſaid Andrew Clenche by you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the Handkerchief aforeſaid, with the Coal as aforeſaid put in it, he the ſaid Andrew Clenche inſtantly died: So that you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the Help and Aſſiſtance of the ſaid Man unknown, him the ſaid Andrew Clenche, the ſaid fourth Day of January in the Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, voluntarily, and of your Malice before-thought, did Kill and Murther, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen now, their Crown and Dignity.

How ſay you, Henry Harriſon, are you Guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand indicted, or not Guilty?

Mr. Harriſon. Not Guilty in Thought, Word nor Deed.

Cl. of Arr. Culpreſt, How will you be tried?

Mr. Harriſon.

Mr. Harriſon. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Then the ſaid Mr. Harriſon was taken away from the Bar by the Keeper of Newgate.

And afterwards the ſame Day, about Eleven of the Clock in the Morning, the ſaid Henry Harriſon was brought to the Bar, and he deſired the Court that he might then be tried, which was granted, and thoſe Perſons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Ar. You Henry Harriſon, Theſe Men that you ſhall hear call'd, and Perſonally do appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Harriſon, you may challenge ſuch of the Jury as you ſhall think fit before they be ſworn.

Then the Jury was called and ſworn, and then were counted; and the Twelve ſworn were theſe whoſe Names follow:

JURORS.

John Roll	John Lawford
Nathaniel Houlton	Nicholas Wildeboare
Michael Pindar	Robert Williamſon
James Hulbert	William Merriden
Joſeph Howe	Thomas Simpſon
Richard Chewne	Thomas Pakeman

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as is uſual.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I have made no Challenges, becauſe I do believe the Jury to be honeſt Men.

Cl. of Ar. —— Henry Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Henry Harriſon, late of London, Gent. &c. [he reads the Indictment.] Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince. If you find him not Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you found him Guilty. If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Darnell. —— My Lord, Mr. Harriſon's Agents or Friends have, ſince the laſt Seſſions, made or conveyed away a young Man that was a Principal Evidence againſt him.

L. C. J. That is a very ill Thing, and if it be prov'd, it will no way conduce to Mr. Harriſon's Advantage.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I know nothing of it. But, my Lord, one of my Witneſſes, that would have been material for me, is lately dead, Sir Edward Hungerford's Son.

Mr. Darnell. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn: I am of Council for the King and Queen againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands indicted for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, which was as barbarous a Murder as any that hath been committed in this Age. And conſidering it was done in the Dark, I think there will be given as clear an Evidence of it againſt Mr. Harriſon the Priſoner, as can be expected. And that it was upon this Occaſion; One Mrs. Vanwicke a Widow (between whom and Mr. Harriſon there was a great Kindneſs) prevailed with Dr. Clenche, to whom ſhe was indebted Twenty Pounds, to lend her ſo much more as would make it up One hundred and Twenty Pounds, and to take a Mortgage of a Houſe of hers in Buckingham-Court near Charing-Croſs for his Security; and Mr. Harriſon was preſent with Mrs. Vanwicke at the lending of the reſt of the Money, and executing of the Mortgage, as he was wont to be at the Management of her Affairs; but when the Time came that it was to be repaid, the Doctor could not get his Money, and Mrs. Vanwicke having but an Eſtate for Life in the Houſe, and having long delayed the Doctor, he brought an Ejectment for the recovering of the Houſe, upon which the Priſoner came to Dr. Clenche, and abuſed him with very ſcurrilous Language, and his Paſſion growing higher, he laid his Hand upon his Sword, and would have drawn it, and if it had not been for one Mr. Johnſon, 'twas thought he would have kill'd the Doctor at that time; ſo that the Doctor deſired Mr. Johnſon to take the Buſineſs upon himſelf, and to act in his own Name, he was ſo much afraid of him. And it will be proved further to you, that at another time the Priſoner ſaid, That Dr. Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and deſerved to have his Throat cut. And ſome time after this, Mrs. Vanwicke would have borrowed ſome more Money of the Doctor, but he refuſed to lend it her, whereupon ſhe acquainting the Priſoner with it, he ſaid, Leave him to me (Madam) I'll warrant you, I'll manage him; he is a Rogue, and deſerves to have his Throat cut. And afterwards, about St. Thomas's Day laſt, the Priſoner went to Mrs. Weſt the Tenant, who dwelt in the Houſe mortgaged to Dr. Clenche, and deſired of Mrs. Weſt to have ſome Money for Mrs. Vanwicke, and it ſhould be diſcounted in Part of the then next Chriſtmas Rent. But the ſaid Mrs. Weſt refuſed to pay him any, telling him, that ſhe and her Husband were forbid by Dr. Clenche and the Ground Landlord, to pay any more to Mrs. Vanwicke, and thereupon the Priſoner expreſſed his further Malice againſt the Doctor, and ſaid, He is a great Rogue, and a Villain, and deſerves to have his Throat cut, and will not die in his Bed. And, Gentlemen, ſoon after the Priſoner began to put his malicious Deſign againſt the Doctor in Execution, and the Method he took was firſt to change his Lodgings; for on the Day before Chriſtmas Eve laſt, he took new Lodgings at one Mr. Garway's in Threadneedle-Street, near the Old Exchange, attended by a Foot-Boy, pretending himſelf to be a Parliament-Man, and that he was juſt then come out of the Country, and lay in his Lodgings there every Night, until the firſt Day of January following, but lay out that Night, and the two next Nights following. And whilſt he lodged at this Mr. Garway's this Matter happen'd, which does conduce ſomewhat towards towards the Diſcovery of this Murder; One Evening the Priſoner being in his Chamber there, and one Mrs. Jackſon, the Daughter of Mrs. Garway, making a Fire for him, he did take out his Handkerchief, and held it before the Fire to dry it, which ſhe took great Notice of, becauſe it was coarſe and dirty, and not fit for his Quality (as ſhe thought) it being made of ordinary Indian Stuff, like her Mother's Maid's Apron. And Gentlemen, this very Handkerchief was the ſame with which the Murder was committed, and this Mrs. Jackſon will ſwear it to be the ſame; for it is a very remarkable one, and it will be produced to you. And we ſhall ſhew you further, That on the third Day of January (being the Day before this Murder was committed) he cauſed a ſham Letter to be left for him at his Lodgings at this Mr. Garway's, as written from a Friend of his that was ſick in the Country, earneſtly preſſing him to come quickly down to him: And we ſhall prove, that the ſame Evening, he being with Mrs. Vanwicke in Woodſtreet-Compter, did again threaten Dr. Clenche, and ſaid, That he was a Rogue, and he would have his Blood. And upon the Fourth Day of January laſt, he again changed his Lodgings, and took new ones at one Mr. Jones's a Cane-Chair-Maker in St. Paul's Church-yard, and there he pretended himſelf to be a Country Gentleman, juſt then come out of Cumberland, and brought in a Portmanteau Trunk thither: And the ſame Day he ſent a Letter to Mrs. Garway, where he had lodged before, acquainting her, That he was gone out of Town for a Week or ten Days. And, to give you farther Satisfaction, we ſhall prove, that upon the ſame fourth Day of January, in the Night of which this unfortunate Gentleman was murder'd, the Priſoner was at one Mr. Robert Humſton's Lodgings at the Golden Key in Fleetſteeet, over-againſt Fetter-Lane End, at near Nine of the Clock at Night, and being aſk'd by Mr. Humſton to ſtay and ſup with him, he ſaid, he could not, for he had been about earneſt Buſineſs that Day, which was to be done that Night, and that a Gentleman ſtayed for him in the Street, to go with him about it, and ſo he went away. And ſoon after, about Nine of the Clock the ſame Night, two Men ſtanding in Fleet-ſtreet, at Fetter-Lane End, call'd for a Coach, and ask'd the Coachman if he knew Dr. Clenche, who dwelt in Brownlow-ſtreet in Holborn; and the Coachman reply'd, he did know the Street, but not the Doctor: whereupon they went into the Coach, and ordered him to drive to the End of Brownlow-ſtreet; and when they came thither, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him go to Dr. Clenche's, and tell him, that two Gentlemen in a Coach, at the End of the Street, deſired him to go with them to a Patient that was very ſick? which the Coachmin did. And he found the Doctor in his Night-Gown and Slippers, and juſt a going to Bed; but he immediately dreſſed himſelf, and went to them into the Coach. And it fell out very happily for the further Diſcovery of this Murder, that while this Coach ſtood at the End of Brownlow-ſtreet, a young Gentlewoman ſtanding at her Door near it, and fancying that while the Coachman went on the Errand, the Gentlemen would ſlip out of the Coach (I think they call it Bilking) ſhe watch'd them. And a Lamp that lighted croſs Holborn, over-againſt Brownlow-ſtreet End, and another about the Middle of Brownlow-ſtreet, gave ſuch a Light into the Coach, that ſhe plainly ſaw one of the Men that ſat in it, and ſee him look out of the Coach after the Coachman, and heard him ſwear at the Coachman, becauſe he made no more Haſte in going to the Doctor's Houſe; and ſhe is very certain that the Priſoner at the Bar is the ſame Perſon that look'd out of the Coach, and that did ſwear at the Coachman, and is more confident of it from the Remarkableneſs of his Voice. For ſhe hearing of this Murder, and remembring theſe Circumſtances, ſhe went to Newgate to ſee the Priſoner, and hearing his Voice in another Room, before ſhe ſaw him, ſhe declared to the Perſons that were then with her, that the Voice ſhe then heard, was the Perſon's Voice that ſhe ſaw look out of the Coach, and that did ſwear at the Coachman; and afterwards, when ſhe came into the Room where the Priſoner was, though with ſeveral other Men, ſhe pointed to him as the Perſon, and ſhe hearing him then ſpeak again, declared to the Perſons with her, that both by his Voice, and by his Countenance, ſhe knew him to be the ſame Man. And, my Lord, after thoſe Gentlemen had gotten the Doctor into the Coach, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him make haſte and drive them to Leaden-Hall-Market, and when they were come within Holborn-Bars, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him drive faſter; whereupon the Coachman drove them very faſt through Holborn to Leaden-Hall-Market-Gate; and when he came there, one of them bad him drive to the Pye without Aldgate (before which Time, without Doubt, the Murder was commited upon the Doctor, for his Hat was found next Morning in Holborn, near Fetter-Lane End; but the driving ſo long about after, is ſuppoſed to be done, leſt the Doctor might recover); and when they were come without Aldgate, one of them ordered the Coachman to ask there for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon; which he did, and being anſwered, that no ſuch Perſon was there, he ordered the Coachman to drive back again to Leaden-Hall, and when they came there, one of them called the Coachman, and gave him three Shillings and Six-pence, and bad him go into the Market there to one Hunt a Poulterer, and buy them a Couple of Fowls, but the Coachman could not find any Hunt a Poulterer; but however he bought a Couple of Fowls for three Shillings, and when he came with them to his Coach, the two Gentlemen were gone, and the Doctor left in the Coach, murder'd, with a Handkerchief tied faſt about his Neck, with a Coal in it (which will be proved to be the Priſoner's Handkerchief.) Beſides, there was a Boy in the Street there, who took Notice of the Coachman's being ſent of an Errand, and ſaw the two Perſons come out of the Coach in great Haſte, and he going towards the Coach before they went out of it, one of them did ſwear at him to be gone, and of him the Boy took moſt Notice, and was as poſitive as any Man can be to the Perſon of one that he never ſaw before, that the Priſoner now at the Bar was one of them, and was the Perſon that did then ſwear at him; but this Witneſs is ſpirited away, and cannot be heard of, although he hath been deſcribed in the Gazette, and diligent Search and Enquiry has been made after him. But we have his Examination upon Oath before the Coroner; and we muſt ſubmit to the Court how far that ſhall be admitted as Evidence.

Gen-

Gentlemen, we will call our Witneſſes, and if they prove all this Matter, I believe every Man here will be ſatisfied that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of this baſe Murder.

Mr. Darnel. Pray call and ſwear Mr. George Wigmore. (Who was ſworn with others.)

Mr. Darnel. Pray, Mr. Wigmore, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of any Money that was lent by Dr. Clenche, and to whom.

Mr. George Wigmore. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, there was a Draught of a Mortgage from Mrs. Vanwicke to Dr. Clenche, made by a Gentleman of Grays-Inn, for the Sum of One hundred and twenty Pounds, and I ingroſs'd it; and I paid by the Doctor's Order, above threeſcore Pounds of the Money, and the reſt of it was ſatisfied before; and upon Sealing of the Mortgage for the Money, Mr. Harriſon, and one Mr. Rowe, fell out about their Dividend of the Money, and called one another ill Names; and Mr. Rowe produced a Bill of what he had done and laid out for Coach-hire, and other Things for Mrs. Vanwicke, and Mr. Harriſon and he had high Words about it, and called one another Rogues; ſo I told them, if they could not agree, I would put the Money up again, and carry it Home; but Mrs. Vanwicke and they did agree at laſt, and ſealed the Mortgage, and I paid the Money; and Mrs. Vanwicke, and Mr. Harriſon took out twenty Pounds of the Money, and paid it to Mr. Rowe; and after Mr. Rowe was gone, they deſired me to go with them to the Young Devil Tavern, and they both uſed hard Expreſſions there againſt Mr. Rowe.

L. C. J. Who was the Mortgage made to?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, it was made to Dr. Clenche for One hundred and twenty Pounds.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray, Sir, will you tell the Jury how much Money the Gentlewoman had, and if Mr. Rowe had not ſtept between me and her, I had not been in Queſtion.

Mr. Wigmore. Mrs. Vanwicke acknowledged that the Money I paid her, made up One hundred and twenty Pounds.

L. C. J. What did you hear the Priſoner ſay againſt Dr. Clenche?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, I do ſay that he was very troubleſome to the Doctor.

L. C. J. Were there any Reproaches caſt upon the Doctor at that Time?

Mr. Wigmore. No, my Lord, only upon Rowe, becauſe he was a Truſtee.

Mr. Darnel. Did you hear him ſay any thing againſt the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. Indeed I cannot particularly ſay.

L. C. J. He is upon his Oath, and he is ſenſible and underſtands the Queſtion.

Mr. Wigmore. He did ſay very ugly Words, and when I met him afterwards in the High-Way, he was very huffy, and I thought he would have drawn his Sword upon me.

L. C. J. What did he ſay of the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. I cannot ſay particularly what he ſaid.

L. C. J. Stand down.

Mr. Darnel. Call Mr. Thomas Johnſon. (Who was ſworn, and ſtood up.)

Mr. Darnel. Sir, Pray give the Court an Account what you know concerning this Matter.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I believe I ſhall ſay nothing that Mr. Harriſon will contradict; I was Attorney for Dr. Clenche between him and Mrs. Vanwicke, and I ſued Mr. Rowe, that was bound with Mrs. Vanwicke, in a Bond to perform Covenants for Re-payment of the Money lent her by Dr. Clenche upon Mortgage; and I adviſed the Dr. and told him, Don't let us trouble the Tenant, but let us take Rowe firſt; and I ſued Rowe, and had him arreſted, and after ſome time, I ſaw that the Mortgage muſt do our Buſineſs, for Rowe could not pay the Money; whereupon I cauſed a Declaration in Ejectment to be delivered againſt Mrs. Vanwicke's Tenant of the Houſe mortgaged by her to Dr. Clenche, and then Mr. Harriſon came to me, and he expreſſed himſelf againſt the Doctor after a ſtrange rate, and laid his Hand upon his Sword; ſo, my Lord, I ſaid to him, What a Fool do you make of yourſelf? muſt none go to Law, but they muſt ask your leave? I ſuppoſe Mr. Harriſon cannot deny this. Then Mr. Harriſon preferred a Petition to the Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal for Mrs. Vanwicke, and thereby ſuggeſted to their Lordſhips, that ſhe was wronged in the Purchaſe, and in the Mortgage Money, and that twenty Pounds of it was a former Debt of her Husband's; and he finding ſhe could have no Relief before them without Payment of the Mortgage Money, he grew troubleſome; yet ſays I, Mr. Harriſon, What ſhe hath done, I cannot help, but if ſhe would pay the reſt, I told him I would abate her twenty Pounds, and the Intereſt Money alſo.

Mr. Darnel. Pray, Sir, did the Doctor deſire you to act for him in your own Name, becauſe he had no mind to meet with Mrs. Vanwicke and the Priſoner?

Mr. Johnſon. The Doctor did find himſelf too deeply concerned with them, and he did not care to have to do with them; whether it was that he was afraid of his Life, I cannot ſay; but he ſaid to me, Pray, Sir, go on, I will put all into your Hands, and I will truſt you with all the Affair, and let them come to you, and not trouble me, own it to be your own; and I told him I feared none of them, and the Doctor gave out, That he had made over all to me, although he had not, and upon this, I fear, comes this unfortunate Buſineſs, and the Doctor's Lady muſt look after it herſelf.

L. C. J. What did he ſay when he had laid his Hand upon his Sword in your Study?

Mr. Johnſon. He ſaid the Dr. had cheated the Widow, and he ſaid, That he would be revenged on him, as near as my Memory will ſerve me; I ſuppoſe he will not deny it; whether he did this in a Paſſion, or to affright the Doctor or no, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was that before you offered to abate the twenty Pounds?

Mr. Johnſon. It was before I offered to abate it.

Mr. Harriſon. How long was it before Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Mr. Johnſon. I think it was about a Fortnight, or three Weeks, or a little more.

Mr. Harriſon. I never threatned the Doctor in my Life, but I ſaid, Rowe had been a Villain, and a Cheat, and he and Rowe were the Men, and I ſhall make it appear that the Dr. never wrong'd the Widow.

L. C. J. How came Rowe to be intruſted or concerned with the Money?

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, Mr. Cornelius Vandinanker, a Merchant, gave a Legacy of five hundred Pounds to the Widow Vanwicke and her Children, and and Mr. Rowe was a Truſtee on the Purchaſe, and had by that the Management of the Affair.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. George Howard.

(Who being ſworn, ſtood up.)

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Howard, Give the Court an Account of what you know concerning the Priſoner's threatning Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was at Joe's Coffee-houſe near Warwick-Houſe in Holborn, ſome conſiderable time before Dr. Clenche was murdered, where Mr. Harriſon uſed ſeveral very virulent Expreſſions againſt Dr. Clenche; among others, one was, That he was a Rogue and a Raſcal, and deſerved to have his Throat cut. Mrs. Vanwicke was then in Company, and they both ſaid, That they then came from Dr. Clenche's.

Mr. Darnell. You are ſure he ſaid that Dr. Clenche deſerved to have his Throat cut?

Mr. Howard. Yes: He ſaid, That Dr. Clenche, deſerved to have his Throat cut.

Mr. Harriſon. Who was I talking to?

Mr. Howard. You were talking to Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

(Who was ſworn, and ſtood up.)

Mrs. Sheriff. My Lord, Mrs. Vanwicke came to my Houſe with Mr. Harriſon, and deſired me to go with her to Dr. Clenche's Houſe; and when we came there, ſhe deſired him to let her have Twenty Pounds more, and he ſaid, No; If his Houſe were full of Money, he would not lend her any more, ſo long as ſhe kept Mr. Harriſon Company, for he would ſpend it; and he adviſed her to be a Gentleman's Houſe-keeper, and he would help her to a Place; and told her withal, That ſhe owed him One hundred and twenty Pounds, for which he would take One hundred Pounds; and we left Mr. Harriſon behind us at my Houſe, and did not take him with us, becauſe we were afraid he might anger the Doctor, and fall out with him; ſo when we came back, Mr. Harriſon asked Mrs. Vanwicke, what Dr. Clenche ſaid; Why, ſays ſhe, he ſaith, That he will not lend me any more Money while I keep you Company, for you will ſpend it, and that I muſt go to Service. To Service! ſaid Mr. Harriſon, God damn him, have a Perſon of your Quality go to Service! he deſerves to have his Throat cut; let me alone, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed; and ſo away they went together.

Mr. Harriſon. Did not you ſay, That as you hop'd to be ſaved, that I was innocent of the Thing?

L. C. J. She does not accuſe you of doing the Fact, but gives an Account of ſome Expreſſions that paſſed from you.

Mrs. Sheriff. You were always talking againſt Dr. Clenche, and you ſaid, God damn him, he was an old Rogue, and that Mrs. Vanwicke was almoſt ſtarved to Death.

Mr. Harriſon. Rowe, Rowe, I meant, my Lord.

(The Priſoner then being in a Paſſion.)

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, do not fall into a Paſſion; it may be more to your Advantage in the making your Defence, if you keep your Temper.

L. C. J. Witneſs, what were the Words that he ſaid againſt Doctor Clenche?

Mrs. Sheriff. Why, he ſpeaking of Doctor Clenche, ſaid to Mrs. Vanwicke, God damn him, would he have a Perſon of your Quality go to Service! he deſerves to have his Throat cut; Well, Madam, ſays he, be contented, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed.

Mr. Harriſon. What had you for your Swearing?

Coroner for the King and Queen. Witneſs, he asketh you, If you had any thing for your Swearing againſt him?

Mrs. Sheriff. No, I had nothing, neither have I need of any thing? I had not ſo much as my Coach-hire.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elizabeth Weſt.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Miſtreſs, give an Account to the Court, what you know about the Priſoner's coming to demand Rent of you, and what paſſed.

Mrs. Weſt. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, this Gentleman, the Priſoner, came to me two or three Days before St. Thomas's Day laſt, and deſired me to give him ſome Rent for Mrs. Vanwicke, and I told him I had no Power to pay him, becauſe I was warned by Dr. Clenche to pay no more; ſays he to me again, Dr. Clenche and Rowe, are great Rogues, and great Villains. Sir, ſays I to him again, I believe that the Doctor is a very honeſt Man: No, ſays Mr. Harriſon, he is a great Villain, and he will never die in his Bed; which of them he meant, Mr. Rowe or Dr. Clenche, I cannot tell. And Mrs. Vanwicke, and Mr. Harriſon, a little time before that, preſſed me to let them have ſome Shop Goods in Part of her Rent, to grow due, and ſhe made great Complaint, that her Children were ready to ſtarve, and I then told them, that Mr. Johnſon had fore-warned me to pay more Rent to Mrs. Vanwicke, and if I did, I ſhould pay it again; and therefore I would not pay any more Rent to her, or deliver her any Goods, until ſhe had agreed with Mr. Johnſon; and then Mr. Harriſon ſaid, that Mr. Johnſon was a great Villain and a great Rogue, and that they had all combined together to cheat the Widow. And Mr. Johnſon being at my Houſe, Mrs. Vanwicke fell upon him in a great Rage, and ſaid, ſhe would tare his Throat out, and laid hold on him, and Mr. Johnſon got from her, and went away in great Haſte. And the laſt time I ſaw Dr. Clenche, I preſſed very hard upon him, to let Mrs. Vanwicke have more Money; and the Doctor ſaid, that ſhe would never do any good with it, for ſhe ſpent it all upon Mr. Harriſon; and I wiſhed him to let her have twenty Pounds more, and he ſaid, That he adviſed her to go to Service, and that he had wiſhed her to a Service of Twenty Pounds a Year, and ſhe abuſed him for it.

L. C. J. What Cloaths had the Priſoner on?

Mrs. Weſt. My Lord, he had an old Threadbare black Cloth Suit of Cloaths on, which looked very ſhabby.

Mr. Harriſon. What Religion are you of, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Weſt. I was born and bred a Proteſtant.

Mr. Harriſon. I believe you are a Papiſt, and will ſwear any thing; you keep Roman Catholicks in your Houſe, they have murdered Dr. Clenche, for ought I know.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Harriſon ever lodge in your Houſe?

Mrs. Weſt. No, my Lord, I have none but Perſons of Quality lodge in my Houſe, and they belong to the preſent Government.

Mr. Darnell. Call Ann Watſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell.

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Harriſon's taking of Lodgings at Mr. Garway's Houſe, and when it was?

Anne Watſon. He came about ſix a Clock at Night, the Day before Chriſtmas-Eve laſt, to my Maſter's, Mr. Garway's Houſe, and told us, that he was newly come out of the Country; and lodged there that Night, and ſo he did until and upon the laſt Night of December; and on the firſt Day of January he went out, and ſtaid out that Night; and on the Sunday, the third of January laſt, at Night, he came again with a Perſon with him, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and Things, and paid for his Lodging; and in his Abſence there was a Letter left for him, which I gave him, and he ſaid, it came out of the Country, and that he had a Friend ſick in the Country, and did intend to go down to ſee him, being one from whom he expected a Legacy, and he left that Letter on the Kitchen Window, and on the Monday after, being the fourth Day of January laſt, he ſent a Letter, ſignifying he was gone out of Town.

(Then the Letter was produced, marked with the Penny-Poſt Mark.)

Mr. Darnell. Who knows Mr. Harriſon's Hand? Mr. Johnſon, take that Letter and look upon it, and tell the Court if you think it to be Mr. Harriſon's Hand.

(Mr. Johnſon takes the Letter and looks upon it.)

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I believe it to be Mr. Harriſon's Hand.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Mr. Clerk of the Peace, read the Letter; and the Subſcription firſt.

(Clerk of the Peace reads.)

To Mrs. Garraway, at the Hand and Apple in Threadneedle-Street, near the Royal-Exchange, Preſent.

Mrs. Garraway,

I AM ſorry it ſhould be ſuch an Inconveniency to you, as it is. I have left with your Maid, Three half Crowns, and if it is not enough, I will give you more. I am gone out of Town for a Week or Ten Days, and as ſoon as I come again, I will wait on you; which is all till I ſee you, from

Your Friend,

4th Jan. 1691. and Servant,

H. Harriſon.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Henry Garway and his Wife. (Who were called and ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Garway, take that Letter, and look upon it, and tell the Court, when you received it.

Then ſhe takes the Letter which was produced, and read as before, and looked upon it.

Mrs. Garway. My Lord, I received this Letter on Monday the 4th Day of January laſt.

L. C. J. Watſon, when did he leave the Lodgings, ſay you?

Anne Watſon. He went away the firſt of January laſt, about nine a Clock in the Morning, and returned not that Night, but on the ſecond of January laſt, he was at my Miſtreſs's Shop again (as my Miſtreſs told me) and he came about five a Clock on the next Sunday Night (being the third of January laſt) with a Perſon with him, to my Maſter's Houſe, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and Things, and left Three Half Crowns with me for his Lodgings, which I gave to my Miſtreſs.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Catherine Jackſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning Mr. Harriſon's coming to lodge at Mr. Garway's, and when he went away, and what you know of any Handkerchief he had.

Mrs. Jackſon. He came on the Day before Chriſtmas-Eve, to lodge at my Father's, Mr. Garway's Houſe, and lodged there ſeveral Nights, and went away the third of January at Night, with his Things, but was abſent ſome Nights between his coming and going away, and whilſt he lodged there, I obſerved a Handkerchief in his Hand, as I was making a Fire for him in his Chamber, and the more, becauſe he had ſaid he was a Parliament-Man, and I thought it more like a Seaman's Handkerchief, than a Parliament-Man's, and our Maid had an Apron of the ſame kind of Stuff.

(Then the Handkerchief was produced in Court by the Coroner, and the Coal in it, wherewith Dr. Clenche was ſtrangled.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Jackſon, I deſire that you would look upon that Handkerchief, and tell the Court what you know of it.

Mrs. Jackſon. This is the Handkerchief that I ſaw Mr. Harriſon hold to the Fire, when I was making of it in his Chamber, or very like that Handkerchief, for I obſerved it to be very like my Mother's Maid's Apron.

(Then a Piece of the Maid's Apron was produced, and they being compared, were very like.)

Mr. Harriſon. Did you hear me ſay, I was a Parliament-Man?

Mrs. Jackſon. Yes, I heard you ſay ſo.

Mr. Harriſon. Perhaps, you might hear my Boy ſay ſo.

Mrs. Jackſon. Your Foot-Boy ſaid, you were a Parliament-Man: And you ſaid ſo yourſelf.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Garway again.

(He appeared.)

Mr. Darnell. Where is the Letter you receiv'd from Mr. Harriſon, ſince he was a Priſoner?

L. C. J. What do you ſay about a Letter that came to your Houſe from the Priſoner?

Mr. Garway. My Lord, I had this Letter from him laſt Saturday, directed to my Wife, and I believe it to be his Hand.

(He produceth the Letter.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Read the Letter, Mr. Tanner.

(Clerk of the Peace reads.)

To Mrs. Garway, at the Hand and Apple in Threadneedle-Street, behind the Royal-Exchange, Preſent.

Mrs. Garway,

I Was informed Yeſterday, that you are to appear againſt me at next Seſſions. I am ſure, you never heard me mention Dr. Clenche, in all your Life; and if you do, it will look like Malice. My Lord Chief Juſtice is ſenſible of the Wrong done me. This is all from

Your Servant,

Henry Harriſon.

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, Did I ever tell you, That I was ſenſible of it?

(To which he made no Reply.)

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. John Cartwright.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. I would have you declare, what you heard Mr. Harriſon ſay, concerning Doctor Clenche.

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, upon the Third of January laſt, Mr. Harriſon came to Woodſtreet Compter; it was on a Sunday in the Evening, about Five or Six a Clock, I was ſtanding in the Gate, and I let him in. Aſſoon as he came in, he asked how poor Mrs. Vanwicke did; ſays he, She hath been wronged of Five Hundred Pounds within theſe 12 Months: Then I let him into the Court, and he went into her Chamber; and about half an Hour after, I was ſent by my Maſter, to require ſome Chamber-rent of Mrs. Vanwicke, and I heard Mr. Harriſon and ſhe at high Words, and in a great Paſſion, and I heard Mr. Harriſon ſwear, God damn his Blood, he would be reveng'd of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winche, I cannot tell which, and he would have his Blood, ere it were long.

Mr. Harriſon. Where were you?

J. Cartwright. My Lord, I was at the Chamber-door, and there was no Body on that Side of the Houſe, but Mr. Harriſon, Mrs. Vanwicke, and my ſelf.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Jones.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, I will call one to prove, where he took a new Lodging, the very Day the Murder was done.

L. C. J. Cartwright, was that in Mrs. Vanwicke's Chamber that you heard him ſwear ſo?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes, my Lord, in her Chamber, and none was with her, but he only.

Mr. Darnell. You, the laſt Witneſs Mrs. Jones, when did Mr. Harriſon come to lodge at your Houſe?

Mrs. Jones. He came on a Monday.

Mr. Darnell. What Day of the Month was it?

Mrs. Jones. I can't tell what Day of the Month, for I did not ſet it down.

Mr. Darnell. Was it the Monday before he was taken?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, it was the Monday before.

Mr. Darnell. Whence did he pretend to come?

Mrs. Jones. He ſaid, That he was come out of the Country, and had formerly lodged in Fleet-ſtreet, and that where he had lodged formerly, they had left off Houſe-keeping, and were gone into the Country.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe?

Mrs. Jones. In St. Paul's Church-Yard, at the Sign of the Golden-Ball.

Mr. Darnell. Call James Howſeman.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Do you tell what you know, about Mr. Harriſon's being at Mr. Jones's Houſe.

Howſeman. My Lord, he came in about Eight a Clock at Night, and brought a Porter with him, and a Portmanteau Trunk; and after that, the Porter went out a little before him, and then he followed him, and went out after.

Mr. Darnell. Did you hear him ſay, from whence he came?

Howſeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Darnell. Call Anne Evans.

(Who did not appear.)

Mr. Darnel. Then call Mr. Robert Humſton.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Humſton, I deſire you will give the Court an Account of Mr. Harriſon's being at your Houſe that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered.

Mr. Humſton. My Lord, I met Mr. Harriſon on Monday the 4th of January laſt, and he told me, he was going to the Compter, to a Gentlewoman that was much oppreſſed, and that he wanted Money to get her releaſed; upon which, I gave him ſome Money, and after ſome Diſcourſe, I deſired him to bring home my Gown, that I formerly let him, and ſeemed angry with him, for that he had ſeveral times promiſed me to bring it home, but had failed therein; and thereupon he promiſed, that I ſhould have it that Night: And that Evening about Nine of the Clock, he came to my Lodgings, and brought home my Gown, and when he came, I asked him, if he had gotten Mrs. Vanwicke releaſed: And Mr. Harriſon anſwered, No. Upon which, I blamed him for neglecting an old Friend; and Mr. Harriſon excuſed it, telling me, That he had met with ſome Perſons upon earneſt Buſineſs, which prevented him. And then I asked Mr. Harriſon to ſtay and ſup with me, but he refuſed it, ſaying, That he had been about extraordinary Buſineſs that Day, which muſt be done that Night, and that a Gentleman ſtay'd in the Street for him, and they two were going to do it.

L. C. J. Where do you live? And how long ſtayed he at your Houſe?

Mr. Humſton. I lodged then at the Golden-Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over againſt Fetter-lane End: He came to my Lodgings about Nine of the Clock at Night, and ſtayed there but a little time.

L. C. J. What manner of Cloaths had he on?

Mr. Humſton. My Lord, he had a Cloak on, but I cannot tell what Cloaths he had under it, he brought my Gown up under his Cloak.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Eſther King.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Do you know what time Mr. Harriſon was at Mr. Humſton's Lodgings?

Eſther King. It was on Monday the fourth Day of January laſt, about Nine of the Clock at Night, as near as I can gueſs, the Shop was ſhut up, and I let him out.

Mr. Darnell. Where was it?

Eſther King. At the Golden Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over again Fetter-lane End.

Mr. Darnell. What Cloaths had he on?

Eſther King. I cannot tell well, but he had a Cloak on, I do not know what Cloaths he had on beſides.

Mr. Harriſon. Was it Eight or Nine a Clock?

Eſther King. It was near Nine, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr. Darnell. Swear John Sikes the Coachman.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Darnell. Give an Account to the Court what you know about carrying two Men in your Coach, and how you found Dr. Clenche murdered.

John Sikes. My Lord, on the 4th of January laſt, being Monday, I was at the Play-Houſe, and there I took up a Man and a Woman, and carried them into the City; ſo I brought the Gentleman back again, to the Green-Dragon Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet; and then, he ſaid, he would pay me by the Hour; he ſaid, That it was but much about Nine a Clock. Then I left him him, and was driving up the Street towards the Temple, and two Men ſtood in Fleet-ſtreet, about Fetter-lane End, and they asked me, if I knew Dr. Clenche, who dwelt in Brownlow-ſtreet in Holborn? I told them, That I did not know Dr. Clenche, but I knew the Street. So they went into my Coach, and one of them bad me drive thither, and I did, and ſtopt at the Street's End; becauſe the Gate at the other End was ſhut, ſo that I could not turn my Coach: And one of them bid me go and tell the Doctor, That there were two Gentlemen in a Coach at the Street's End, that would deſire him to go with them to ſee one that was not well. The Doctor asked me, If I could tell who they were? Or, who it was, that he was to go to? I told him, that I could not tell. The Doctor was in his Night Gown and Slippers, and he dreſſed himſelf: and when he came to the Coach, one of them removed from his Place, and gave him the hinder Part of the Coach, and told him, That they had a Friend, that was not well: And one of them bad me drive to Leaden-Hall-Market; and when I came about Holborn-Bars, one of them called to me, and asked me, Why I drove ſo ſlowly? And bid me drive faſter; ſo I drove faſt, and came to Leaden-Hall: And then one of them bad me drive to the Pye Tavern without Aldgate, and there ordered me to ſtop. And when I had ſtopped there, one of them called to me, and told me, That I need not ſtir out of my Coach-Box; but call to the Boy at the Tavern, and ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, which I did do: And when the Boy came to me again, he ſaid, there was no ſuch Man. Then one of them bad me drive back again to Leaden-hall; and in the Time I ſtayed there, and turned my Coach, Aldgate was ſhut; and when I came to the Gate, one of them gave Six Pence to the Watch, and the Gate was opened, and I drove to Leaden-hall Gate. And when I came there, I ſtopped again, and one of them gave me half a Crown, and bad me go and buy a Fowl of one Hunt a Poulterer; but after I had gone a little way from the Coach, he called me again, and ſaid, Here, Coachman, you had as good take another Shilling, and buy a Couple: ſo I went, and bought a Couple of Fowls, but could find no ſuch Poulterer as Hunt; ſo I bought them of another, and I gave three Shillings for them. And when I came back to the Coach-Side, I found Dr. Clenche, (as I thought) ſitting againſt the Fore-ſeat, with his Head againſt the Cuſhion: I pull'd him, and cryed, Maſter, Maſter, for I thought he had been in Drink, but I could not get one Word from him; and then I went to the Watch, who were near; and when they came, we found him Strangled, with a Handkerchief about his Neck, and a Coal in it, plac'd juſt upon his Wind-Pipe, but the other two Men were gone.

L. C. J. Had one of the two Men a Cloak on?

J. Sikes. I cannot remember that.

L. C. J. What kind of Habit had he? Had he black Cloaths on?

J. Sikes. My Lord, I cannot tell juſtly what Cloaths he had on?

L. C. J. You have heard him ſpeak. What ſaid he?

J. Sikes. My Lord, he never ſpoke to me; it was the other Man.

Mr. Harriſon. What kind of Man was the other? Was he leſs than I, or taller?

J. Sikes. He was taller than you, with his own Hair.

Mr. Darnell. Can you be poſitive that the Priſoner at the Bar is one of thoſe two Perſons?

J. Sikes. My Lord, one of thoſe two Perſons had a Perriwig on, of a light coloured Hair: And I do verily believe, that the Priſoner at the Bar is the ſame Perſon; I cannot be poſitive he is one of them, but as near as I can judge of a Man whom I have ſeen but once, he is one of them.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip to obſerve the Time that he took the two Men up, aud what Time it was they ran out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Coachman, what Time was it that they left your Coach?

J. Sikes. About half an Hour paſt Ten, and it was about a quarter of an Hour paſt Nine, when I took them up.

Mr. Darnell. Pray let's ask the Coachman one Thing more. Coachman, look upon that Handkerchief, do you know it, and where did you ſee it?

The Handkerchief was produced by the Coroner.

J. Sikes. I do believe that it is the ſame Handkerchief that was about Dr. Clenche's Neck when he was found murdered.

L. C. J. Call the Coachman again. Hark you, In what Poſture did you find Dr. Clenche when you came back to your Coach?

J. Sikes. My Lord, he was ſat in the Bottom of the Coach, leaning on one Side, with his Head againſt the Cuſhion.

L. C. J. Was a Handkerchief then about his Neck?

J. Sikes. Yes, my Lord, I untied this Handkerchief, and this is the ſame; and here is the Coal that was lapt in it: it was lapt in the Middle of it, and it laid juſt againſt the Doctor's Wind-Pipe.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Rebone and Mr. Marriot.

(Who were ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Rebone, tell what you know concerning the Handkerchief, and how you found the Doctor.

He takes the Handkerchief, and looks on it.

Mr. Rebone. This Handkerchief was about the Doctor's Neck, and the Coal in it, and it lay juſt upon his Wind-Pipe, when I ſaw him dead in the Coach. The Coachman came to Mr. Marriot's Houſe, and ask'd for a Conſtable, and we went to the Coach-Side, and there we found him lying along; and we took him, and carried him to the Bull Inn, and there he was let Blood on the Arms, and the Chyrurgeon took about half a Spoonful of Blood out of his Right Arm; and he was let Blood on the other Arm, but that did but juſt trickle down, and we could not get him to Life again; and we found a Silver Ink-horn in his Pocket, and that, and the reſt of his Things, were ſecured. This is all I can ſay to the Matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elianor Aſhbolt.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of any Perſons you ſaw in a Coach at Brownlow-ſtreet End, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered.

Mrs. Aſhbolt. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I went out of an Errand for one Madam Anwel, a Gentlewoman who lodges at my Mother's houſe; and coming home again, I ſaw a Coach ſtop at Brownlow-ſtreet End, between Nine and Ten a Clock at Night, and the Coachman went to the ſide of the Coach: And one in the Coach bad him go to Dr. Clenche's, and tell him, That there were two Gentlemen ſtayed for him in a Coach; and as he went up the Street, he went ſlowly, and looked back two or three times: Whereupon, one of the Perſons leaned out of the Coach, and did ſwear at the Coachman to make Haſte; and I went round the Coach, and could diſcern Mr. Harriſon's Face; and I ſtayed, and ſaw Dr. Clenche go into the Coach, and one of them gave his Place to the Doctor.

Mr. Darnell. Why were you ſo curious, Miſtreſs, and what did you obſerve further?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. I thought they might give the Coachman a Slip. I well obſerved Mr. Harriſon, but do not know the other Man. There were two Lamps burning, one in Brownlow-ſtreet, and the other in Holbourn, over againſt the End of Brownlow-ſtreet, and they lighted quite through the Coach; and the Men pulled themſelves backwards, when they ſaw me look on them: It was that Night that the Doctor was murdered. I went to Newgate afterwards. Madam Clenche deſired me to go and ſee Mr. Harriſon; and when I came to Newgate, it ſeems, he was writing Letters, ſo I ſtaid before I went into the Room: And there were two Men with me, and Mr. Harriſon was talking very loud; ſaid they to me, Who is that ſpeaks now? Why, ſays I, it is one of the Perſons that was in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was murdered.

L. C. J. Who are thoſe two Men that were with you?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. One of them was one Mr. Jones, a Coachmaker in Holbourn, and the other was Madam Clenche's Coachman.

L. C. J. Did you know the Priſoner, when you ſaw him in Newgate, to be one of them that were in the Coach?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. Yes, I did; I knew him to be the ſame Man, as ſoon as I ſaw him: And he changed Countenance, as ſoon as he ſaw me.

Mr. Harriſon, My Lord, This Woman is certainly hired by the Villains that are againſt me. Pray, aſk her, my Lord, Why ſhe did not make a Diſcovery ſooner?

L. C. J. Miſtreſs, What ſay you to that?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. I acquainted Madam Anwell what I had ſeen and obſerved, and ſhe told Madam Clenche, after laſt Seſſions; and then ſhe deſired me to go to Newgate, to ſee Mr. Harriſon, and I went accordingly; and I ſhould have told it to Madam Clenche ſooner, but my Mother was loth I ſhould be concerned about ſuch a Thing.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have ſome Witneſſes who can give your Lordſhip an Account, that one of our Witneſſes, whom I mentioned to your Lordſhip before, is ſpirited, or withdrawn from us, by a Gentleman that ſaid he came to him from the Priſoner, and deſired him to be kind to the Priſoner; which Witneſs is ſince abſent, and not to be found: his Name was Andrew Bowſell, a Youth, and an Apprentice to one Mr. Tims, a Shoemaker.

L. C. J. You muſt prove upon him, that he made him keep away.

Mr. Darnell. Call Barnabas Smith.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Give my Lord and the Court an Account, what you know of this Matter.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, This Andrew Bowſell, which the Council for the King ſpeaks of, was ſent to Leadenhall-ſtreet of an Errand, to the Bull-head Alehouſe there. And as he was going along, a Gentleman met him, and aſked him, if he was not an Evidence againſt Mr. Harriſon: And being told by the Boy that he was, he deſired him to be kind to him; and pulled out a Piece of Money, and offered it him, deſiring him to be kind to Mr. Harriſon. Upon which the Youth replied, That he owed him Nothing, and Nothing he would take. Then the Gentleman told him, That he would come again another Time, and ſend for him near to his Maſter's. So the Boy ſaid, and told me: And ſaid further, That if he could have gotten him to have gone to the Bull-head Alehouſe, he would have ſeized him.

Mr. Darnell. What is become of the Boy?

Mr. Smith. Truly, we do not know what is become of him, we never heard of him ſince the ſixth Day of March laſt.

Mr. Darnell. Call his Maſter, Mr. Richard Tims. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of this Matter, and what is become of your Apprentice, Andrew Bowſell

Mr. Tims. My Lord, He went away from me on the ſixth Day of March laſt; he was inticed away by three Soldiers that Night, and on the Morrow-morning one of them came and demanded his Coats, Shirts, and Neckcloths: Says I to him, Who ſent you, and who is your Captain? and he anſwered, why, Captain Harris: He huffed, and ſaid, That if I would not give him the Cloaths, he would ſend his Officer; and then I told the Soldier, I would have him before a Juſtice of the Peace, ſo he went away, and never came to me again: And I could never hear of my Apprentice ſince, tho' I have made great Enquiry after him.

L. C. J. Did your Servant tell you of any Money that had been offered him by the beforementioned Gentleman?

Mr. Tims. No, my Lord; he did not tell me, but he told Mr. Smith, the Witneſs at was laſt examined, as he told me.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that Andrew Bowſell's Examinations before Mr. John Browne, the Coroner of London, upon Oath, may be read.

Which being proved by the Coroner, were directed to be read.

Clerk of the Peace reads. 12. Januarii, 1691.

Andrew Bowſell, Servant to Richard Tims, Shoemaker, ſworn and examined touching the Death of Andrew Clenche, Doctor in Phyſick, deceaſed, ſaith, that he, this Informant, being ſent to Mr. Parker's, at the Bull-head Alehouſe in Leadenhall-Street, on Monday laſt was Se'nnight, being the Fourth of this inſtant January, between the Hours of Ten and Eleven of the Clock in the Evening, ſaw a Coach ſtanding againſt Leadenhall-Market; and heard ſome Perſon that was in the Coach ſay, Make Haſte: And this Informant ſays, that, according to the beſt of his Remembrance, he heard him talk of a Poulterer's. And this Informant ſays, That ſoon after the Coachman was gone into the Market, this Informant ſaw two Perſons go out of the Coach, one whereof had, as this Informant believes, a black Coat on; and that this Informant ſaw the ſame Perſon, as ſoon as he came out of the Coach, fling a Cloak over him: and then both the Perſons went through the the Market on the Weſt Part. And this Informant ſaith, That this Informant going to look into the Coach, the Perſon that had the Cloak on him, cry'd Damn him; and this Informant ſaith, That he, this Informant, thereupon going away, went to Mr. Parker's, and told them, that two Perſons had cheated a Coachman, or to that Effect.

And. Bowſell being further Examined the 23*d* Day of January, 1691. touching the Death of Andrew Clenche, ſaith, That he hath ſeen Hen. Harriſon, now a Priſoner in their Majeſties Gaol of Newgate, and believes he was one of the Perſons that came out of the Coach at Leaden-hall, a little after Ten of the Clock at Night, on Monday the 4*th* of this Inſtant January; and believes he knows him by his Voice. And ſoon after, this Informant underſtood that the ſaid Andrew Clenche was murder'd in a Coach, being the ſame Coach which the ſaid Harriſon, and another Perſon unknown, a little before went out of.

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, What have you to ſay againſt that which hath been proved againſt you? what Defence can you make?

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I did attend Dr. Clenche about a Mortgage that was made him by Mrs. Vanwicke, and Dr. Clenche did pay one Hundred Pounds, but this Gentlewoman would pay, or allow Rowe but Fifteen Pounds, and we did not know how to get the Money from Rowe, ſo we petition'd the Lords Commiſſioners about it, which was above Six Months before Doctor Clenche was murder'd; and Mr. Fairbeard wonder'd that I would put Doctor Clenche's Name into a Petition with ſuch a Rogue as Rowe; and I do poſitively ſay, That I had not ſeen Doctor Clenche in a Month before, and if Doctor Clenche had died in his Bed, it had been the ſame thing to me; and, my Lord, Mr. Johnſon and I had never any angry Words between us; and I have the Report in Chancery, which I had from Sir John Hoſkins, which I will read, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

L. C. J. Let's ſee it.

Which was handed to the Lord Chief Juſtice, ſitting on the Bench.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, that is the Original, which if your Lordſhip pleaſes to remember, I had Rowe before you twice about it; and it is Rowe that hath been the Rogue, and therefore what Occaſion had we to be angry with Doctor Clenche?

Then the Report was perus'd by the Lord Chief Juſtice, and return'd to him.

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, this will do you no good, not being to the preſent Purpoſe; therefore proceed in your Defence.

Mr. Harriſon. Now, my Lord, I have ſome Witneſſes to prove where I was at the Time that the Coachman ſays the Murder was done. Cryer, call Thomas Turner a Porter, and Mr. Maccaffee.

Who appeared, but were not ſworn, and examined apart, at the Requeſt of Mr. Darnell, the King's and Queen's Council.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I ſhall prove by theſe Witneſſes, that I was elſewhere when the Coachman ſaid he took up thoſe two Men, a little after Nine o'Clock. Pray, Mr. Turner, give an Account to the Court, what time it was I called you to carry my Trunk.

Tho. Turner. My Lord, I was, about Seven of the Clock in the Evening, the 4th Day of January laſt, at the Two Kings and Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over againſt Saliſbury-Court; and I was told, That a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-houſe in Saliſbury-Court, wanted a Porter; and I preſently went to him thither, and it was this Mr. Harriſon; and he bad me take up his Trunk, which I did, and carried it to the Two Kings and Key, and he went with me; and he aſked me to get ſome Linen waſh'd for him againſt the next Day at Noon; and he gave me ſome Linen, which I carried to my Wife to waſh for him, and return'd to him again preſently; and I went with him from thence, and carried his Trunk to his Lodgings in Paul's Church Yard; and when I had deliver'd his Trunk, I left them there; and then it was about Eight of the Clock at Night.

L. C. J. At whoſe Houſe was it you deliver'd the Trunk?

Thomas Turner. My Lord, it was at Mr. Jones's Houſe in Paul's Church Yard.

L. C. J. And did he ſtay within?

Thomas Turner. No, my Lord, he went out preſently after me.

L. C. J. Were you any where elſe with him that Night, beſides at the Places you have mentioned?

Tho. Turner. No, my Lord.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I will prove that Mr. Humſton miſtakes an Hour.

Mr. Humſton. I cannot miſtake an Hour, becauſe the Shop is ſhut up about Nine a-Clock, and it was ſhut when you came firſt to my Lodgings.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, there ſtands in Court one Thomas Johnſon, Apprentice to Mr. Pemmel; he can tell what time a Night it was I came to Mr. Humſton's, he let me in? I deſire he may be call'd.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Thomas Johnſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

L. C. J. What time of the Night was it that Mr. Harriſon came to ſpeak with Mr. Humſton, on that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Tho. Johnſon. My Lord, on the 4th of January laſt at Night, Mr. Harriſon came to my Maſter's Houſe, and knock'd at the Door; and I went to the Door, and open'd it, for I had ſhut up the Shop; and he aſk'd me if Mr. Humſton was within? And I told him, he was: And he came in, and went up to Mr. Humſton's Chamber; and it was then about Nine of the Clock, as near as I can gueſs.

L. C. J. Where is your Maſter's Houſe?

Tho. Johnſon. My Lord, it is the Golden Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over againſt Fetter-lane end.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray call Adam Maccaffee, Mr. White, Mr. Carden, and John Allen.

Who appeared. And Mr. Maccaffee ſtood up.

Mr. Maccaffee. Upon Monday the 4th Day of January laſt, the Priſoner was at my Houſe, and ſtay'd from Nine a-Clock till paſt Eleven, and play'd at Cards with one Mr. Baker, and one Mr. White and his Wife; and he ſtay'd till it had ſtruck Eleven a-Clock.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe, Sir?

Mr. Maccaffee. My Houſe is in Chancery-Lane, over againſt Serjeants-Inn.

L. C. J. Did he tell you where he had been before?

Mr. Maccaffee. He ſaid, That he had been towards the City, and was very cold.

L. C. J. Did he ſay any thing of Mr. Humſton?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Mr. Darnell. Pray what Room were you in? Did you play at Cards in the Kitchen?

Mr. Maccaffee.

Mr. Maccaffee. Yes.

Mr. Darnell. Were they up Stairs?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Lord Mayor. At what time a Night did they come in?

Mr. Maccaffee. Betwixt Nine and Ten a Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. What made you take Notice of the Day of the Month, and Hour of the Day?

Mr. Maccaffee. My Lord, I heard that Doctor Clenche was murder'd, and that Mr. Harriſon was taxed with it? and that made me take Notice of the Day.

L. C. J. Call Mrs. Maccaffee. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Miſtreſs, what time did Mr. Harriſon come to your Houſe on the 4th of January laſt at Night?

Mrs. Maccaffee. My Lord, it was near Nine a Clock as any thing can be, when he came in firſt.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. I cannot tell how long he ſtay'd, but there were two Accidents happen'd; one was, our playing at Cards; and the other was, that there was a Pick-Pocket carried by to be pump'd at Lincolns-Inn; it was from Nine to Eleven before he went away, and there were Mrs. White, Mr. Baker, and one Mrs. Faireleſſe.

L. C. J. Did any one come with the Priſoner to your Houſe? in what Humour did he ſeem to be?

Mrs. Maccaffee. No, my Lord, there was no one came with him, and he never ſtirr'd out, neither did he ſeem to be diſorder'd; he was neither too merry, nor too melancholy.

L. C. J. Where did he ſay he had been?

Mrs. Maccaffee. He ſaid that he had been in the City.

L. C. J. Did he uſe to frequent your Houſe?

Mrs. Maccaffe. Formerly he did; but I had not ſeen him in half a Year before.

Mr. Darnell. How many were there, do you ſay?

Mrs. Maccaffee. There was one Mrs. Faireleſſe, and one Mrs. White, and myſelf, and my Husband was upon the Bed, and Mr. White came for his Wife about Ten a Clock, to come home.

Mr. Darnell. Do you remember that Mr. Baker was there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. Yes, he was there.

L. C. J. Pray, Miſtreſs, did Mr. Harriſon come in, and find them at Cards?

Mrs. Maccaffee. No, we went to Cards afterwards.

L. C J. Where was your Husband?

Mr. Maccaffee. He was upon the Bed in the Kitchen.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Baker. [Who ſtood up.]

Mr. Baker. This Gentleman, the Priſoner, is a Stranger to me; but here is a Letter that he ſent me two or three Days afterwards. I came into Mrs. Maccaffee's Houſe about half an Hour after Nine a Clock, with two Women more: Mrs. Maccaffee owed me Money, and I had been in Lincolns-Inn, for I do ſome Work there for Sir Thomas Cook, and the Women ask'd me to play at Cards; and I ſaid, that I did not care to play, becauſe I had been abroad, and could not get any Money, which made me out of Humour. My Lord, I never ſaw the Man in my Life before.

L. C. J. Who were they that play'd at Cards?

Mr. Baker. It was one Mrs. Faireleſſe, the Woman of the Houſe, and Mr. Harriſon, and myſelf.

L. C. J. Who were together?

Mr. Baker. Mrs. Fairleſſe and I, and the Woman of the Houſe and Mr. Harriſon the Priſoner, and we play'd for Penny a Corner. I cannot ſay any more to it, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay?

Mr. Baker. I left him after Ten a Clock, and, as I hope for Mercy, I never ſaw him but once before, and I had not known him again, but by a particular Token.

Mr. Harriſon. Were there not ſome Accidents happen'd at that Time?

Mr. Baker. Yes, there came a Vintner's Boy to ask for a Woman, one Mrs. Frances, and he was in great Haſte, and a Pick-pocket was carried up the Lane to be Pump'd at Lincolns-Inn Pump.

Mr. Harriſon. Call Mrs. Faireleſſe, call Mrs. Whipple. [neither of which appeared.]
Call Mr. Sutton. [Who appeared.]

L. C. J. Where do you live, and what is your Name?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, my Name is Sutton, and I live in Stone-cutter-ſtreet.

Mr. Harriſon. Mr. Sutton, what time was it that I was coming by, when one Mr. Ruſſell and you were drinking?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, it was about Eleven a Clock at Night, at the King's Head Tavern at Chancery-Lane End.

Mr. Harriſon. What had I on, a Cloak and a Muff?

Mr. Sutton. Yes, I think you had a Cloak on.

Mr. Darnel. What time was it? before or after Eleven a Clock?

Mr. Sutton. It was about a quarter before Eleven.

Lord Mayor. What Day of the Month was it?

Sutton. It was the fourth of January.

L. C. J. Where was he going? which way went he?

Mr. Sutton. He was going towards Fleet-Bridge, my Lord, and I called after him, but could not make him hear at firſt; but afterwards he came to us.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray call Mr. Ruſſel.
[Who appeared.]

Mr. Ruſſell. I can't hear, my Lord, but if you pleaſe to permit Mr. Sutton to ſpeak to me, I can hear his Voice better than any Man's.

L. C. J. Speak as loud as you can, Sir, and we will let you hear us; Mr. Sutton muſt not ſpeak for you.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray, Mr. Ruſſell, what time of Night was that you ſaw me go by you, when you were drinking at the King's Head Tavern?

Mr. Ruſſell. I can't tell, my Lord, I have not heard a Clock theſe three Years.

L. C. J. Where were you going at that time of Night?

Mr. Ruſſell. I was going to Wild-ſtreet, to the Chyrurgeon's-Arms, to receive ſome Money.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Mr. Ruſſell. He had been with me all that Day, and I deſired him to go with me; and, my Lord, I did expect that the Money would have been brought to me, but it was not, ſo I went for it.

L. C. J. Well, and what then?

Mr. Ruſſell. While we ſtay'd at the King's-Head Tavern Door to drink Wine, Mr. Sutton ſent the Drawer to call Mr. Harriſon.

L. C. J. What had you been doing before that time?

Mr. Ruſſell. We had (I ſuppoſe) been drinking together.

L. C. J. Where had you been before you came to the King's Head Tavern?

Mr. Ruſſell. We had been at the Horſeſhoe Tavern in Chancery-lane.

L. C. J. Did you requeſt Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Ruſſell. Yes, I did, my Lord.

L. C. J. You ſay your Buſineſs was to go to Wild-ſtreet, to receive ſome Money?

Mr. Ruſſell. Yes, it was, my Lord, and I did receive it.

L. C. J. When was it that you met Mr. Harriſon, the Priſoner?

Mr. Ruſſell. My Lord, I can't poſitively ſay, but by Computation of the Night, I believe it was about Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. Did you meet Mr. Harriſon before you went to the Horſeſhoe Tavern, or after?

Mr. Ruſſell. Afterwards, my Lord, I ſaw Mr. Harriſon turn at the Corner of Fleet-ſtreet, towards Fleet-Bridge.

L. C. J. At the Time when Mr. Sutton and you went firſt out, did you agree of your going to the Horſeſhoe Tavern?

Mr. Ruſſell. We went thither to ſend for the Gentleman out of Wild-ſtreet.

L. C. J. When you had been drinking all the Afternoon, how came you to ſtop your Coach at the King's Head?

Mr. Ruſſell. We ſtopt there, whilſt Mr. Sutton ſent for ſome-body to come to him.

L. C. J. You ſaid juſt now, That Mr. Sutton ſent for Mr. Harriſon.

Mr. Ruſſel. No, my Lord, I do not remember that; but Mr. Sutton ſaid, Harry, or Harriſon; where art thou going, when he went by us.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, this Man is a Stranger to me. Call John Allen, Drawer at the King's Head Tavern. [Who appeared.]

Mr. Harriſon. John Allen, what time of Night was it that Mr. Sutton and Mr. Ruſſell came to your Houſe in a Coach?

J. Allen. I believe it was about Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. How much Wine had they?

J. Allen. Two Half Pints of Canary.

L. C. J. What Night was it? what Day of the Month was it?

J. Allen. My Lord, I can't remember what Day of the Month, but it was that Night that Doctor Clenche was murder'd.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Mr. Harriſon there?

J. Allen. I can't tell that, I never ſaw him, till I ſaw him at Priſon.

Mr. Harriſon. Did not you go to Mr. Maccaffee's Houſe?

J. Allen. Yes, I did.

Mr. Harriſon. Did not one ſtrike you with a Muff?

J. Allen. Yes, but I can't remember who it was.

Lord Mayor. Look upon that Man, do you know him to be the Perſon?

J. Allen. No, my Lord, I do not know him to be the Perſon.

Mr. Darnell. Who ſent you to Crown-Court?

J. Allen. Mr. Ruſſell.

Mr. Darnell. For what?

J. Allen. For a Servant Maid, and he bid me tell her, that he had a Deſire to ſpeak with her.

Mr. Darnell. How long did you tarry at the Houſe?

J. Allen. I did not ſtay at all.

Mr. Harriſon. Call Mr. Carden, Drawer at the King's Head Tavern [Who appeared.]

Mr. Harriſon. What time did Mr. Sutton come to your Houſe? did you ſee any one ſtand at the Coach Side? and what Cloaths had he on?

Carden. I ſaw one ſtand at the Coach Side, and he had a Hanging Coat, or a Cloak on; it was about the Hour of Eleven, to the beſt of my Knowledge, and I ſaw a Man go into the Coach, and come out again.

Mr. Coroner. What time of Night do you ſhut your Doors, eſpecially on Monday Nights? and were they ſhut when Mr. Sutton called in the Coach?

Carden. We ſhut them commonly about Eleven a Clock at Night, but on Monday Nights uſually later; they were ſhut when Mr. Sutton called, and I opened them for him.

L. C. J. Can you ſay that the Priſoner was the Man that drank with Mr. Sutton?

Carden. To the beſt of my Knowledge (looking on the Priſoner) that is the Man, I can't be poſitive, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Harriſon. No, my Lord, unleſs Mr. Eſſington be here, he promiſed to be here to give an Account of me. My Lord, there is a Gentleman that is in the Preſs Yard, one Mr. ——— Butler, I deſire he may be ſent for, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

L. C. J. Let him be fetch'd down.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. But in the mean time, it behoves you to give an Account of theſe Things. Firſt, Why did you ſay that you were a Parliament Man? Secondly, Why did you leave your Lodgings, and take other Lodgings in Paul's-Church-Yard? Thirdly, Why did you ſay that you had extraordinary Buſineſs? Give ſome Account what your Buſineſs was, and who that Gentleman was, that ſtaid for you in the Street, when Mr. Humſton deſired you to ſtay and ſup with him; what hinder'd you from accepting his Invitation? Now we would have you to conſider of theſe Things, and give an Anſwer to them, for it much concerns you ſo to do.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, firſt, as to the firſt, I do declare, That I never went for a Parliament Man, nor never ſaid ſo: Secondly, That Night I was to go out of Town, I had left Word at ſeveral Coffee Houſes, that I was going out of Town upon earneſt Buſineſs, and with above twenty People beſides, that I was going out of Town, and I was about to go to Baſing-Stoke, to a Gentleman that owed me Money, one Mr. Bulling, but I could not get Money to go.

L. C. J. Prove that you were to go into the Country.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I can't prove that now, except I could have ſent to Baſing-Stoke.

L. C. J. That you ſhould have done before now; why did you not ſtay with Mr. Humſton, when he invited you to ſup with him? You might have been better entertained there, than by going among Strangers to play at Cards for a Penny a Corner, at an Ale-houſe.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I was unwilling to ſtay, becauſe he had Stangers with him.

L. C. J. What if he had? you are not ſuch a baſhful Man that you could not ſup with Strangers.

Mr. Harriſon.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, Mr. Rowe was accuſed with me.

L. C. J. What if he was? he was under ſome Suſpicion, and he hath made it appear where he was at the Time the Fact was committed, and now he is diſcharged.

Then Mr. Butler was brought into Court from Newgate, attended by a Keeper.

Mr. Harriſon. Mr. Butler, Pray tell the Court what Mr. Fairbeard ſaid to you about me?

Mr. Butler. My Lord, Mr. Fairbeard asked me, what I could ſay about what Mr. Harriſon had ſaid to me concerning the Murder of Doctor Clenche? I told him, I could not tell what to make of his broken and rambling Speeches and Diſcourſes, they being moſt of them ſpoken when he was in his Drink. This is all that I know, my Lord.

L. C. J. This is not a Witneſs for your Turn.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Anwell.

Who was ſent for from her Lodgings in Brownlow-Street in Holborn, and appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr. Darnell. Madam, pray give an Account what Mrs. Aſhbolt told you concerning any Man's being in a Coach at Brownlow-ſtreet End.

Mrs. Anwell. I know nothing of my own Knowledge, but the Night that Doctor Clenche was murdered, I ſent Mrs. Aſhbolt of an Errand; and at her Return, I blam'd her for ſtaying ſo long; and ſhe told me, That as ſhe was returning home, a Coach ſtopt at Brownlow-ſtreet End, with two Men, with Cloaks on, in it, and that one of them bad the Coachman go for Doctor Clenche, and deſire him to come to them; and in his going ſeveral times look'd back, as if he ſuſpected the Men would leave the Coach, and ſo ſhe ſtay'd until Doctor Clenche came and went into the Coach, and that one of the Men gave the Doctor his Place; and that one of them had a fair Perriwig, and a ſanguine Complexion.

Mr. Darnell. What Diſcourſe had you with her when you heard that thoſe Men had murdered Dr. Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. She told me, That one of thoſe Men had a fair Perriwig, and a ſanguine Complexion, and that one of them had a Cloak on.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay, that ſhe obſerved either of their Faces?

Mrs. Anwell. Yes, my Lord, ſhe ſaid that one of them had a round Face, and a big Voice.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay, ſhe could know him again?

Mrs. Anwell. No, my Lord, ſhe did not ſay ſo, but ſhe ſaid, that ſhe could know his Voice again. And after the laſt Seſſions, I told Mrs. Clenche of it, and that if ſhe would ſend for the young Woman, ſhe would inform her further of it.

L. C. J. Madam, pray what was the Reaſon that ſhe did not diſcover it ſooner to Mrs. Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. Why truly becauſe Mrs. Aſhbolt, her Mother, was unwilling ſhe ſhould concern herſelf in ſuch a Matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call another Witneſs, Mr. Jones, Coach-maker. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Harriſon. Pray, my Lord, take Notice, that now ſhe ſays, that thoſe Gentlemen had Cloaks on, that came in the Coach to Brownlow-ſtreet End.

L. C. J. Yes, we heard her what ſhe ſaid.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I will ask this Witneſs, Mr. Jones, a Queſtion.

Mr. Darnell. Pray Sir, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Mrs. Aſhbolt did at Newgate?

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I went with her to Newgate, together with Doctor Clenche his Coachman, and when ſhe came to Newgate, before ſhe ſaw Mr. Harriſon (only ſtood at the Chamber Door, and heard him ſpeak) ſhe ſaid, That, to the beſt of her Thoughts, he was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach to look after the Coachman, and ſwore at him, for ſhe knew his Voice. And when ſhe came to ſee him, ſhe ſaid, that ſhe knew his Face, and declared that was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Did he look out of the Coach, Mrs. Aſhbolt?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. Yes, my Lord, he put his Head out of the Coach, and look'd after the Coachman, to ſee if he went right to Doctor Clenche's Door, and did ſwear at him, becauſe he went no faſter.

L. C. J. How could you diſcern his Face?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. By the Light of two Lamps that were near, which did ſhine into the Coach.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath that the Priſoner is the ſame Perſon?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. Yes, my Lord, I can, both by hss Voice and Face.

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip ſomewhat in Relation to the Credit of thoſe Witneſſes, that the Priſoner hath brought here; particularly, as to Mr. Baker, we ſhall prove that he hath been convicted for a Cheat. And as for Maccaffee, he keeps a very diſorderly Houſe, where ill People commonly reſort.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mrs. Martha Whelſtead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

L. C. J. Mrs. Jones, what time did Mr. Harriſon come to your Houſe, to his Lodging, that Night that the Murder was committed?

Mrs. Jones. I think it was about Eleven a Clock, or a little before Eleven.

L. C. J. What time on the Monday did he hire the Lodging of you?

Mrs. Jones. It was ſome time after Dinner.

L. C. J. It was before Night, was it not?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, my Lord, it was before Night.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that Mr. Tanner may read the Record againſt Mr. Baker, whereby it will appear, that he was indicted and convicted at Hicks's-Hall for cheating the Pariſh of St. Giles in Middleſex, when he was Scavenger there, by altering the Figures in the Book, and rating the Sums of Money higher upon divers of the Pariſhioners, than they were in the Pariſh Book, and then collecting and extorting the Money, ſo by him increaſed, from them.

Mr. Tanner reads the Indictment aforeſaid, by which it did appear to the Court, and to the Jury, that the ſaid Mr. Baker was indicted for the Offence aforeſaid, and confeſſed the Indictment, and was fined for it twenty Shillings.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was wrongfully indicted, and traverſed the Indictment, and was acquitted.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, give me the Record.

Lord Chief Juſtice peruſes the Record.

Mr. Baker, I have read the material Parts of the Record, and do find that you were indicted for for that Offence, and that you confeſſed the Indictment, and was fined for it.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was acquitted of it, and can prove it by Captain Cannon, who knows me, and my Reputation, and he is in Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, the Record teſtifieth the Truth, and cannot err, therefore you have great Confidence to aver againſt it; yet I will hear what Captain Cannon ſaith.

Mr. Baker. Call Captain Cannon.

(Who appeared.)

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, do you know this Mr. Baker?

Captain Cannon. Yes, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that Captain Cannon may be ſworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, ſwear Captain Cannon.

(Who was ſworn.)

L. C. J. Sir, do you know that Mr. Baker was indicted for falſifying of the Scavenger's Book, when he was Scavenger, and acquitted, or convicted, and what do you know about it?

Captain Cannon. My Lord, I am an Inhabitant of the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, and ſo I was when Mr. Baker was Scavenger, and do well remember, that ſome of the Inhabitants of that Diviſion where he was Scavenger, were troubled, and complained, that they were charged more than uſually they had been to the Scavenger's Rate; and it was diſcover'd that ſeveral Figures of the Book by which Mr. Baker collected the Money to the Scavenger's Rate, were blotted and altered, and did not agree with the Pariſh Leidger-Book, but the Sums in his Book ſo blotted and altered were razed; whereupon it was ordered, that he ſhould be indicted for it, and it was done accordingly, and he was fined for it, and, to the beſt of my Remembrance, he confeſſed that Indictment.

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, Pray tell the Court and the Jury, of what Reputation Mr. Baker is now.

Captain Cannon. My Lord, he is now of none of the cleareſt Reputations.

Captain James Patrich, of the ſame Pariſh, being in Court, offered himſelf, and gave the ſame Account of Mr. Baker that Captain Cannon did.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, Call Mr. Francis Bramton, Mrs. Martha Whelſtead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

(And Mrs. Whelſtead and Mr. Cole appeared, and were ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Whelſtead, pray give the Court and Jury an Account what diſorderly Houſe Mr. Maccaffee keeps?

Mrs. Whelſtead. My Lord, I dwell in Crown-Court in Chancery-lane, over againſt Mr. Maccaffee's Houſe; and he and ſhe are very ill People; and keep a very evil and ſcandalous Houſe; and ſuch as are reputed to be Houſe-breakers, Pick-Pockets, and lewd Women, do uſe and frequent the Houſe; and there is commonly at late Hours in the Night, Perſons calling out Murder, and Whore and Rogue, and ſuch ſort of Language, diſturbing their Neighbours; and their Houſe hath been ſeveral times ſearched by ſeveral Conſtables for ſtollen Goods, and for the Perſons that have ſtollen them; and upon ſuch Searches, there have been ſtollen Goods found there: And I have ſeen great Lewdneſs there between Men and Women; and the Neighbours do account it a Houſe of an ill Fame, and do avoid going thither.

Mr. Tho. Cole. My Lord, I do know Mr. Maccaffee and his Wife; I do dwell over againſt his Houſe, and they are reputed to keep an ill Houſe, and moſt Perſons that frequent it, are reputed to be Perſons of lewd and evil Lives and Converſations; and it is amongſt the Neighbourhood noted for a ſcandalous Houſe, and ſeveral Conſtables have ſeveral times ſearched there for ſtollen Goods.

L. C. J. What have you more to ſay, Mr. Harriſon?

Mr. Harriſon. I cannot ſay any thing more; you may deal with me according to my Deſerts in this Matter.

L. C. J. You may aſſure your ſelf, that we will do you no Wrong; have you any more to ſay? (He made no reply.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have another Witneſs come now, who was not here before. Cryer, call Mr. Charles Whitfield.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, this Gentleman can give your Lordſhip an Account what the Priſoner ſaid of his being juſt come out of the Country, upon the fifth Day of January laſt. Pray tell my Lord what you know, Sir.

Mr. Charles Whitfield. My Lord, upon the fifth Day of January laſt, being the Day after Dr. Clenche was murdered, I went to Joe's Coffee-houſe in Salisbury-court, and there was Mr. Harriſon ſitting by the Fire-ſide, ſays I to Mr. Harriſon, Where have you been for a long time that I have not ſeen you? Says he, I have been in the Country: Where ſays I? Says he, about twenty Miles of, in Kent; and I want a Laundreſs, and a Lodging. Says I, do you hear the News, Sir? What News, ſays he? Why, ſaid I, of Dr. Clenche's being murdered: I cannot tell the Occaſion, ſaid I, but he was found dead in a Coach laſt Night in Leadenhall-ſtreet. Then ſays he, I did love him very well once, but of late he hath been a barbarous Rogue to a Gentlewoman, a Friend of mine, and ſhe is in the Compter now: And Mr. Harriſon ſaid it was a juſt Judgment of God upon the Doctor for being ſo great a Villain to the Gentlewoman; therefore I will write to her preſently, and give her an Account of his Death. And, my Lord, the Contents of his Letter were theſe, as near as I can remember.

Madam,

" I Am juſt now going to Lambeth; but hearing of Dr. Clenche's Murder, I do hereby give you an Account of it, ann can impute it to no leſs than a juſt Judgment of God upon him for his Baſeneſs ſhewed to you. And if you think fit to ſend to Madam Clenche, it may be, ſhe may ſend ſomewhat towards your Relief, ſhe now being a Widow as well as you.

MADAM,

I am yours to command,

Henry Harriſon.

My Lord, after this, came into the ſame Coffee-houſe another Perſon, one Mr. Ravenſcroft, of whom Mr. Harriſon asked ſome Queſtion about Dr. Clenche; who reply'd, That he heard that Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that it was committed mitted by a Bully of the Town that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter, who was laid in there upon Dr. Clenche's Account; at which he was much ſtartled: Says he again, There is no Perſon familiar with that Gentlewoman but myſelf; for I know and am concerned in all her Affairs: Perhaps then I may be taken up about it: Or, my Lord, he uſed Words to that Effect.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, this Woman was not in the Compter upon Dr. Clenche's Account.

L. C. J. No, the Witneſs don't ſay ſo; but that it was the Diſcourſe of the Town that ſhe was, and the Town did ſuppoſe her ſo to be. What did he ſay further, Sir?

Mr. Whitfield. My Lord, he ſaid, That he had been in Kent about twenty Miles off; and he ſaid, That he wanted a Landreſs, becauſe he had ſome foul Linen to waſh; which he produced. This was on the Tueſday, and the Murder was committed on the Monday Night before: And, my Lord, there were two more Gentlemen that heard him as well as I, that he ſaid, That he had been about twenty Miles off in Kent, and that he was newly come to Town. Now, my Lord, I could not imagine for what Reaſon this Man ſhould ſay, That he had been out of Town about a Fortnight or three Weeks, when he was in that Houſe but the Monday Night before; that is, the Night the Murder was committed.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mr. Biſhop.

(Who appeared and was ſworn.)

Mr. Biſhop About three Years ago the Priſoner came to my Maſter's Shop to cheapen ſome Linen, and when ——

L. C. J. Hold, what are you doing now? Are you going to arraign his whole Life? Away, away, that ought not to be; that is nothing to the Matter. Have you done, Priſoner?

Mr. Harriſon. Yes, my Lord, I have done, I refer my Cauſe to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury; The Priſoner at the Bar, Henry Harriſon, ſtands indicted for the wilful Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, who was barbarouſly murdered on the fourth day of January laſt: You have heard the Witneſſes that have been ſworn; and upon their Teſtimony, it doth appear, that two Perſons came to Brownlow-ſtreet End in a Coach, after Nine a Clock at Night, and ſent the Coachman to the Doctor's Houſe, under Pretence to get him to a Patient, a Friend of theirs, that was ſick. By this Contrivance, they got him into their Coach, which they had brought for that Purpoſe, and then they ordered the Coachman to drive to Leadenhall-ſtreet; and when they came about Holborn-Bars, one of them ask'd the Coachman, why he drove ſo ſlow, and bad him drive faſter. When they came to Leadenhall-ſtreet, then they bad him drive to the Pye-Tavern without Aldgate; where one of them bad the Coachman ask for one Hunt; but he not being there, one of them bad the Coachman return back, and gave Sixpence to the Watch to come through the Gate, which was ſhut in the mean time; and when they came to Leadenhall-Market, one of them gave the Coachman three Shillings and Sixpence, and ſent him to buy a Couple of Fowls; which the Coachman did buy, and brought them to the Coach; but when he came back, he found the Doctor in the Body of the Coach, leaning againſt the fore Seat of the Coach, a Handkerchief being tied about his Neck, with a Coal in it, placed upon his Wind-pipe; which Handkerchief and Coal have been produced in Court.

The Queſtion is, Gentlemen, Whether the Priſoner at the Bar be guilty of this baſe and barbarous Murder? To prove which, there hath been a very long Evidence given, ſome Poſitive, ſome Circumſtantial. It has been proved that Dr. Clenche had ſome Dealings with a Woman named Vanwicke, and had lent her one hundred and twenty Pounds, and had taken a Mortgage for it. This Priſoner, Mr. Harriſon, was a great Acquaintance, and very intimate with this Woman; and did concern himſelf in the Management of her Affairs: and becauſe Dr. Clenche did refuſe to lend the Woman more Money, therefore he had an Animoſity againſt Dr. Clenche. The Money not being paid to the Doctor as he did expect, he did call it in; and therefore this Gentlewoman did oftentimes repair to Dr. Clenche to deſire farther Time of Forbearance, becauſe ſhe could not raiſe or procure the Money elſewhere. That about Michaelmas laſt, it ſeems ſhe came to a Coffee-houſe near Warwick-houſe in Holborn, and there was Mr. Harriſon; where they conſulted what to do. And it was agreed, that the Miſtreſs of the Houſe, and Mrs. Vanwicke, ſhould go to Dr. Clenche's; but Mr. Harriſon ſhould ſtay behind, for it was not thought convenient that he ſhould go, leſt he ſhould provoke the Doctor. When they came to the Doctor, Mrs. Vanwicke was very importunate to have more Money; but the Doctor would lend her no more. And when they returned to the Coffee-houſe again, Mr. Harriſon enquired what paſſed between the Doctor and Mrs. Vanwicke. She told him that the Doctor would not furniſh her with any more Money, although ſhe had preſſed him to do it, and urged her great Neceſſities, but adviſed her to go to Service; Damn him, ſays Harriſon, does he ſay that a Woman of your Quality ſhould go to Service? He is a great Rogue, and deſerves to have his Throat cut, but let me alone, I will manage him.

At another Place there was a Diſcourſe betwixt Mr. Harriſon and one Mr. Johnſon; and that the Priſoner did then ſpeak very hard and ill Words of Dr. Clenche: And that Mr. Harriſon came frequently to him; and one time laid his Hand upon his Sword, uſing ſome menacing Words, but what they were he cannot tell: But he likewiſe ſays, That at ſeveral times he did expoſtulate with him, and told him, That he would not do any good with ſuch Diſcourſes as theſe are, &c. That the Mortgage Money not being paid, it was thought fit, that there ſhould be a Proſecution made to get Poſſeſſion of the mortgaged Eſtate, and that the Tenants ſhould be forbid to pay their Rents. And Mr. Harriſon went to Mrs. Weſt the Tenant, ſome few Days before St. Thomas's Day laſt, and demanded the Rent of her. To which ſhe made Anſwer, That Dr. Clenche had forbid the Payment of the Rent to Mrs. Vanwicke. Thereupon Mr. Harriſon grew very angry, and anſwered, That Dr. Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and bid her that ſhe ſhould not pay him any Rent. And the Witneſs ſaith further, That the Doctor being preſt to let her have ſome more Money, refuſed to do it, becauſe ſhe would ſpend it all upon Harriſon.

Then the Council for the King called ſome Witneſſes, who gave you an Account of the Priſoner's ſoner's ſhifting his Lodgings the Day before the Murder was done. He takes a Lodging at Mr. Garway's in Threadneedle-ſtreet, on the twenty-third Day of December, and there he continued till about the firſt of January. The ſecond of January he was at Garway's Shop; and on the Sunday Night he came and fetch'd away his Things. The Monday after, being the Day that this barbarous Fact was committed, he ſent a Letter to Mrs. Garway, to acquaint her that he was gone out of Town; but he left three Half Crowns with her Maid to pay for his Lodging. But as to his going out of Town, it was falſe, for he never went into the Country; but took a Lodging at Mr. Jones's in St. Paul's Church-Yard. It's obſervable alſo, that he went for a Parliament-man when he lodged at Mr. Garway's, and had his Footman to attend upon him, &c. There it was that he was ſeen to have an ordinary Handkerchief, and to hold it to the Fire; which was taken Notice of by Mrs. Jackſon, the Daughter of Mrs. Garway, which was not ſuitable, as ſhe thought, to a Parliament-man's Quality, but rather fit for a Seaman; for it was like the Apron of the Maid in the Houſe: which hath been ſhewed in Court, and compared with the Handkerchief that was tied about Dr. Clenche's Neck. She ſaith it is the ſame, or very like that which ſhe did ſee Mr. Harriſon hold in his Hand.

Cartwright, the Officer at the Compter, he tells you, that the Sunday Night, the Day before the Murder, Mr. Harriſon came to Woodſtreet Compter, and enquired for Mrs. Vanwicke, and that he only was in her Chamber, and no other Body on that Side of the Houſe but Mrs Vanwicke, the Priſoner, and this Cartwright the Keeper, who ſtood at the Door, and heard Harriſon ſay, That he would have the Blood of that Rogue, and named Clenche, or Wench.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, he was not in the Room.

L. C. J. No, he was not; but there were none on that Side the Houſe but you, Cartwright, and Mrs. Vanwicke.

Now, on the Monday on which this Fact was committed, he having taken a Lodging at Jones his Houſe, he came thither with a Porter, who brought his Portmantua-Trunk about eight a Clock at Night; and after he had been there a little while, he went away.

And you are told, by a Gentleman that lodges at the Golden-Key againſt Fetter-lane End; That he had ſome Acquaintance with the Priſoner, that he had lent him a Morning-Gown; and that about nine a Clock that very Night, he came to his Lodging in a Cloak; and then the Gentleman asked him for his Gown; and he told him, That he had brought it with him. Thereupon the Gentleman invites Mr. Harriſon to ſtay and ſup with him. Mr. Harriſon ſaid, He could not ſtay, for he was engaged; he muſt be gone, for that a Gentleman ſtaid in the Street for him to go about extraordinary Buſineſs.

The Coachman tells you, That near about that Time two Men in Fleet-ſtreet, near Fetter-lane End, hired his Coach of him to go to Brownlow-ſtreet to Dr. Clenche's; but he can't poſitively ſay, that the Priſoner at the Bar was one of them, but he ſwears, he does verily believe that he was one of them.

Mr. Harriſon. He ſaid before your Lordſhip, That he could not remember what I had on.

L. C. J. Well, well, he doth not remember it now; but being hired to go to Dr. Clenche's, he drove to the Street End, and no further, becauſe the Gate at the lower End was ſhut up, and he could not turn his Coach in the Street; but he was ſent by them to the Doctor's, to deſire the Doctor to come out to them, and they ſat in the Coach in the mean time. The Doctor made haſte, and went to them immediately, and they drove away to Leadenhall, and then to Aldgate, and they called at the Pye-Tavern, and enquired for one Mr. Hunt a Chyrurgeon, as I mentioned to you before: He not being there, they returned to drive through Aldgate, gave the Watch Sixpence, and paſſed through the Gate without any Manner of Notice taken; but if the Watch had done their Duty, it might have been better diſcovered. But further, the Coachman tells you, that when he came to Leadenhall-ſtreet, they called to him, and directed him to buy one Fowl; and after that he had been gone a little way from the Coach, they called him back, and bad him take ſome more Money and buy two Fowls. So he went and bought the Fowls; but when he came back, the two Gentlemen were gone, and he found the Doctor ſtill in the Coach; and he not ſtirring, he thought he had been in Drink; but upon further Examination, and calling the Watchman with his Candle, it appeared that the Doctor was ſtrangled with a Handkerchief and a Coal.

There is one Mrs. Elianor Aſhbolt, who lives in Brownlow-ſtreet with her Mother, and had been ſent of an Errand; and between nine and ten of the Clock at Night, ſhe ſaw the Coachman in Brownlow-ſtreet, and thought that thoſe Men in the Coach might have put a Trick upon him, by going away without paying him his Fare. And ſhe ſays further, That by the Help of the Lamps ſhe did diſcern the Face of this Harriſon in the Coach; he had a Cloak on, with a light Perriwig, and looked out of the Coach, and did ſwear at the Coachman; and by this means ſhe knew him when ſhe ſaw him again, to be the ſame Man, both by his Face and Voice. This Woman indeed was not before the Coroner, and ſhe gives you this Reaſon for it, Becauſe her Mother was not willing ſhe ſhould be concerned in ſuch a Matter as this was; and what ſhe could ſay, was not known to Mrs. Clenche until after the ſecond Seſſions; And when he was in Newgate, ſhe ſaw him there, and declared he was the ſame Man.

There was another Piece of Evidence; viz. That of the Boy's, who does not appear; he was examined before the Coroner. There has been Evidence given of ill Practice to take him out of the way, and therefore his Affidavit is read for Evidence: He ſwears he ſaw two Gentlemen come out of the Coach when it ſtood in Leadenhall-ſtreet, and that having ſeen the Priſoner in Newgate ſince, doth believe him to be one. This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence for the King, to prove that the Priſoner was one of thoſe that committed the Murder.

You have heard likewiſe what the Priſoner ſays for himſelf; he does undertake to prove that he was in another Place; (that is) that he ſhould come into Maccaffee's Houſe in Crown-court, over againſt Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-lane: and Maccaffee, he tells you, That there were ſome other Company there, and that Harriſon came in very cold, and that they went to Cards, and plaid for one Penny a Corner at Whisk; and that he did continue there from Nine till Eleven a Clock; and if he was there then, it is impoſſible he ſhould be guilty of this Fact, for the Fact was done between the ſame Hours.

Maccaffee's Wife tells you the ſame, and they both tell you who were there beſides, and who plaid together, and are poſitive that the Priſoner was there.

Baker ſays, That he went away about half an Hour after Ten at Night, and left Harriſon behind him. To confirm this Evidence, they have called two other Witneſſes, beſides the Drawers at the King's-Head-Tavern, viz. Mr. Sutton, the Chyrurgeon, who lives in Stone-Cutter's Street, and Mr. Ruſſell. Mr. Sutton ſays, They had been at the Horſe-Shoe Tavern in Chancery-lane, and called for half a Pint of Sack at the King's-Head Tavern when they came by; and as they ſat in the Coach, Mr. Harriſon came by accidentally, and one of them looking out of the Coach, cries Harry or Harriſon; and he went to them, and they drank together another half Pint of Sack.

As to their meeting with Harriſon, and as to other Paſſages there, Ruſſell ſays the ſame: but as to the Time of Night he is not poſitive. And they ſent one of the Drawers to a Houſe in Crown-Court to enquire for ſome body there.

The Drawers at the King's-Head-Tavern, ſay, That Mr. Sutton and Mr. Ruſſell did call there about that time; and that they drank two half Pints of Wine: and that when they were drinking, a Man came by with a hanging-Coat or Cloak on, and drank with them. And one of the Drawers went to call ſome body in Crown-Court; and one of the Company up with his Muff, and gave him a Slap in the Face.

Now this is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that you have heard on the Behalf of the Priſoner, to induce you to believe that he was not the Perſon that was concerned in the Murder of Doctor Clenche.

To which Evidence, an Anſwer hath been offered;

Firſt, as to thoſe Witneſſes, Maccaffee and his Wife, divers Witneſſes have been produced to prove, that they are People of doubtful Credit; it ſeems they keep an Houſe of ill Fame.

Mr. Harriſon. I am glad, my Lord, that I was there.

L. C. J. Well, well. Gentlemen, the People of the Houſe are not of very good Reputation; they keep a naughty and diſorderly Houſe, (if you believe the Witneſſes) you may conſider of their Credit.

And as to Mr. Baker; about nine Years ſince, he was convicted of an arrant Cheat, which is no leſs than Forgery, for altering the Scavenger's Rate for St. Giles's Pariſh, and therefore the leſs Credit is to be given to his Evidence; for now it appears, that he is a Knave upon Record: and the very Record itſelf was produced againſt him, which is true without doubt, notwithſtanding his Pretence of Innocency. What is ſaid by Mr. Ruſſell and Mr. Sutton, I muſt leave to your Conſideration; they had been a drinking, and the Drawer ſays, they were at the King's-Head Tavern at Eleven of the Clock at Night. Mr. Harriſon, the next Day after the Murder, met a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-Houſe in Salisbury-Court; and though he had taken a Lodging in Paul's Church-Yard, yet he ſaid, that he was newly come to Town, and had been in Kent, and had remained there about three Weeks; and that he wanted a Laundreſs and a Lodging, although he had not been out of Town, and had taken a Lodging but the Day before: And then he told the Witneſs, who diſcourſed with him about the Death of Dr. Clenche, That he had formerly loved him, but he ſaid he had been of late a barbarous Rogue to a poor Gentlewoman, a Friend of his; and that the juſt Judgment of God had fallen upon him for ſo doing, and that he would write to her to give her an Account of it; and adviſe her to write to Mrs. Clenche, and to tell her, That ſhe was a Widow now as well as Mrs. Vanwicke; and he thought by that Means to move Mrs. Clenche to pity her, being a Widow as well as herſelf: And that whilſt they were talking thus, one Mr. Ravenſcroft tells him, That Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that a Bully of the Town, that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter, one Mrs. Vanwicke, was ſuſpected. At which Mr. Harriſon was much ſtartled, and ſaid, That no one was concerned with that Gentlewoman but himſelf; and for ought he knew, he might be taken up for it. This is that which he ſaid.

Now what ſaid Mr Harriſon further for himſelf? Why, ſays he, this Gentlewoman is not in Priſon at the Proſecution of Dr. Clenche, and was not ſo affirmed, but ſo reported; and whether it were ſo or no, is no great matter. Gentlemen, you ought to conſider of the Evidence that you have heard againſt him, and alſo to weigh well the Evidence he hath brought for himſelf.

It is moſt plain, if you believe the Witneſſes, that Mr. Harriſon was concerned for this Woman Vanwicke, and hath threatned Dr. Clenche, called him Rogue and Raſcal, and ſaid, That he deſerved to have his Throat cut; that Harriſon went under a Diſguiſe for ſome time before the Murder. You have had an Account of the Handkerchief, what kind of Handkerchief Harriſon had, and what Handkerchief was taken about Dr. Clenche's Neck, you have ſeen: And you heard what Evidence was given by Mr. Humſton; how the Priſoner was with him about Nine a Clock that Night; and how he refuſed to ſtay and ſup with Mr. Humſton. If Mr. Harriſon had no earneſt Buſineſs, one would have thought he might have ſtaid with Mr. Humſton, better than to have gone to an Alehouſe in Crown-Court, and plaid at Cards at one Penny apiece a Corner; he might have had better Fare no doubt.

The Witneſſes for the Priſoner ſay for him, That he came to Maccaffee's Houſe about Nine a Clock at Night, and ſtaid till Eleven: That is contrary to that Evidence given for the King, viz. That he was in the Coach at Brownlow-ſtreet End; for if he was at Maccaffee's Houſe all the time they mention, it is impoſſible he ſhould be guilty. All theſe Things are under your ſerious Conſideration. You had beſt go together, and if you are not ſatisfied upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is guilty, then you ought to acquit him; but if you are ſatisfied that he did commit this Murder, then you ought to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourned for half an Hour; and when they were returned, the Jury came to give their Verdict; and being called over, anſwered to their Names; and Mr. Harriſon was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arraign. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arraign. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arraign. Henry Harriſon, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you?. Is he guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty.

Foreman. Guilty, of wilful Murder.

Cl of Arraign. What Goods or Chattels, &c?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Major Richardſon. Look to him he is found guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraign. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it.

You ſay that Henry Harriſon is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted; but that he had no Lands or Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the Time of the Felony and Murder committed, nor at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge: And ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

Then the Priſoner was remanded to Newgate, until the laſt Day of the Seſſions; and then he was brought to the Bar, to receive Sentence of Death.

Clerk of Arraign. Henry Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand. Which he did.

Henry Harriſon, You ſtand convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche: What can you ſay for yourſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt you, to die according to Law?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Harriſon, You have been Indicted, Arraigned, and Convicted, of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr Andrew Clenche: You have had as long, and fair, and favourable a Trial, as any Perſon that ever hath been tried at this Bar.

The Jury that has paſſed upon your Life and Death hath convicted you, and the Court are now ready to do their laſt Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon ſuch Crimes as you ſtand convicted of.

Mr. Harriſon. I expect no Mercy here, therefore I humbly deſire you would interceed to the Queen, that I may have twelve Days allowed me, in order to my better Preparation for Death.

Mr. D. Recorder. Well.

Mr. Harriſon. I muſt needs acknowledge, that I was tried before the beſt of Judges, my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt; but one Thing I think ſtrange, that my Witneſſes ſhould be examin'd ſingly, and not the King's.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is no more than what is uſual; the Council for the King and Queen requeſted it, and you did not.

Mr. Harriſon. I begg'd that I might have timely Notice of my Trial, and I had not: There were ſeven People in my Company at that Time when this black and bloody Murder was done, and I could not get them to be here.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have had a long Time to get them ready, and you preſſed on your own Trial, which you ſhould not have done if you had not been ready.

Mr. Harriſon. I humbly ſubmit.

Then the uſual Sentence of Death was pronounc'd againſt him, and he was remanded to Newgate.

The Examination of Henry Harriſon, this 6th Day of January, 1691.

THIS Examinant being asked where his Lodgings are, anſwereth, That he lodgeth at the Golden-Ball in Paul's Church-Yard, and came to lodge there on Monday Night, about Eleven of the Clock, or half an Hour after, but took the Lodgings in the Morning, the Maſter of the Houſe being one Mr. Jones, a Cane-Chair Seller; and before that Time this Examinant lodged at the Hand and Apple near the Exchange, which ſaid Lodgings he left on Saturday laſt in the Morning, and paid for them on Sunday Afternoon: And this Examinant ſaith, that on Saturday Night laſt he lodged at the White Balcony in Old Southampton-Buildings, the Miſtreſs of the Houſe being one Mrs. Pitts, and this Examinant lodged there on Sunday Night alſo. And this Examinant ſaith, That he was at the King's-Head in Crown-Court in Chancery-Lane upon Monday laſt, from between Seven and Eight of the Clock at Night, and ſtayed there until Eleven, playing at Cards with the Man and Woman of the Houſe, and other Perſons unknown. And being asked where he dined on Monday, and how he ſpent his Time on Monday in the Afternoon, he ſaith, he cannot give an Account. And this Examinant ſaith, That on Tueſday laſt Mr. Hartly of Old Southampton-Buildings, diſcourſing concerning the Murder of Dr. Clenche, ſaid, That this Examinant was ſuſpected to be guilty of that Murder. And this Examinant further ſaith, That he wore the ſame Cloaths he hath now on upon Monday laſt; and hath worn them a great while, having no other Cloaths to wear.

Capt. & Cognit. 6 Die Jan. 1691, Coram J. Holt. — Hen. Harriſon.

He was afterwards Executed, purſuant to the Sentence, and died aſſerting his Innocence to the laſt. See State Trials, Vol. 8. p. 465, 466.

CL. The Trial of JOHN COLE, at the Old-Bailey, for the Murder of Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Phyſick, Sept. 2. 1692. 4 W. & M.

Judges preſent { Mr. Juſtice Dolben, and Mr. Juſtice Powel.

THE Keeper of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court, on Friday the 2d Day of September, bring up the Body of John Cole to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, London; who, being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found againſt him by the Grand Jury for the City of London, for the Murther of Dr. Andrew Clenche.

Cl. of Arr. JOHN COLE, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You ſtand Indicted by the Name of John Cole, of London, Labourer, for the Murther of Dr. Andrew Clenche, &c. and the Indictment is in ſuch Manner as that againſt Mr. Henry Harriſon.

How ſay you, John Cole, are you guilty of the Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand indicted, or not guilty?

John Cole. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culpriſt, how will you be tried?

John Cole. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

And afterwards the ſaid John Cole was brought to the Bar upon his Trial: And thoſe Perſons who were returned upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Ar. You, John Cole, Theſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally do appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Then the Jury were call'd, and ſworn, and then were counted, and the Twelve ſworn were theſe whoſe Names follow:

John Clay	Cuthbert Lee
Edward Sherlock	Thomas Watſon
John Ruddyer	Thomas Milburne.
Benj. Evans	Thomas Applebury
George Beſtow	Nicholas Harris
Archibald Wilſon	Ralph Cates

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as is uſual.

Cl. of Ar. John Cole, Hold up your Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen, You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of John Cole, late of London, Labourer, &c. as in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at any Time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you found him Guilty. If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Call Mary Milward, Joſeph Dudley, John Dudley, Jane Warren, Sarah Duely, Anne Gunn, Anne Geſſon, Anne Warren, Elizabeth Harper, Mary Edwards, John Gamble, John Sykes, Robert Rebone, Richard Eades, Richard Marryot, Samuel Revet, Henry Milward, Squire Dalley, William Brown, Francis Hobbs. Who were all ſworn.

Cl. of Ar. Set Mary Milward up.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. What have you to ſay, Woman, againſt Cole the Priſoner, concerning the Murther of Dr. Clenche?

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, my Husband declared to me, that he and Mr. Cole were in the Coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they Two kill'd Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. That's no Evidence at all, what your Husband told you; that won't be good Evidence, if you don't know ſomewhat of your own Knowledge.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, I have a great deal more that my Husband told me to declare.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. That won't do; what if your Husband had told you that I kill'd Dr. Clenche, what then? that will ſtand for no Evidence in Law: We ought by the Law to have no Man call'd in queſtion, but upon very good Grounds, and good Evidence, upon Oath, and that upon the Verdict of Twelve good Men. Have you any Body that can prove any Thing againſt Cole, or does it all ariſe barely from your Husband's Report?

Mrs. Milward. My Husband declared that he and Mr. Cole were to go under a Pretence to rob the Doctor, and ſo take their Opportunity to kill him; and the firſt Time they call'd at Doctor Clenche's he was not within, but the ſecond Time they went he was within, and then they did the Murther.

Mr. Juſtice Powel. When dy'd your Husband, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Milward. The 23d of May laſt, Sir.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. Here hath been two or three Seſſions ſince that Time, why did not you take up Cole about it before now?

Mrs. Milward. I did not know where to find him.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. Why, then you ſhould have gone to a Magiſtrate, and told him of it, and taken ſome Advice about it.

Mrs. Milward. I did, as ſoon as I had found

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Your Buſineſs had been to have diſcovered this to Mrs. Clenche, and ſhe ſhould have looked after Cole. Is Mrs. Clenche here?

Sir Will. Aſhurſt. Here is her Brother-in-law.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Do you proſecute Cole upon this Indictment?

Mr. Wiſe. No, my Lord, I do not. Mrs. Milward is the Proſecutor, and ſhe charged Mr. Cole with the Murther of my Brother, Dr. Clenche; and ſhe told my Siſter Clenche, that Mr. Milward, her Husband, confeſſed and ſaid ſome Time before his Death, that he and Mr. Cole murthered Dr. Clenche in a Coach: and Mrs. Milward ſaid, that ſhe had ſufficient Evidence againſt Mr. Cole for it. And my Siſter Clenche told Mrs. Milward, that Mr. Harriſon murthered Dr. Clenche in a Coach, together with another Perſon, which my Siſter Clenche ſaid ſhe believed was the ſaid Mr. Milward, Husband of the ſaid Mrs Milward; and that ſhe had a Warrant againſt him, the ſaid Mr. Milward, upon Suſpicion for it, but could not take him; and that ſhe ſuſpected that there were other Perſons Contrivers or concerned in it, who were ſet down at the Blue Boar's-Head Alehouſe near Clement's-Inn, by Mr. Gamble, a Coachman, out of his Coach, together with the ſaid Mr. Milward, in their Return from Dr. Clenche's Houſe, that Night he was murthered. And, my Lord, by my Siſter Clenche's Order, I went with Mrs. Milward to all her Witneſſes, and took Notes of their Evidence; and I went with ſeveral of them to my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt's Chamber, before whom they gave in their Informations upon Oath about it: And when I had done it, I told Mrs. Milward I could find no Evidence that ſhe had againſt Mr. Cole, more than that he was at Dr. Clenche's Houſe, and at the ſaid Blue Boar's-Head Alehouſe, with Mr. Milward, and another Perſon, that Night Dr. Clenche was murthered, and ſo he might be concerned in the Contrivance of it; whereupon Mrs. Milward was diſſatisfied, and ſaid, ſhe was not able to proſecute him for it: ſo my Siſter ſaid to Mrs. Milward, that ſhe might if ſhe would prefer an Indictment againſt him for it, and that ſhe would pay for it, and other Charges about it, which ſhe did. And Mrs. Milward hath a Note of the Names of all her Witneſſes, and may call them.

Sir Rob. Clayton. Did you not lie at Cole's Houſe, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Milward. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why did you not take him then?

Mrs. Milward. Becauſe he abſconded himſelf, and gave out that he was gone to Sea.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was there no Quarrel between Cole and you about your Goods?

Mrs. Milward. No, my Lord, I had no Quarrel with him.

Mr. J. Dolben. Becauſe you did not do it ſooner, have you not been troubled with your Husband's Ghoſt? Tell the Jury the Story; we have heard on't; but I am afraid they will laugh at you.

Mrs. Milward. That was very true, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, if you have any thing elſe to ſay, that is material, ſpeak; otherwiſe, my Brother and I are of Opinion, that what you have already offered is no Evidence.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, Here is a Coachman or two that can acquaint your Lordſhip of the Matter of Fact better than I can.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call John Gamble, the Coachman. (Who ſtood up.)

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You, Coachman, Do you know the Priſoner?

Mr. Gamble. No, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Look upon him, do you know him or no?

Mr. Gamble. No truly, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why, look you, Woman, he does not know him! You, Coachman, the Story is well known; therefore I ask you again, upon your Oath, if that Priſoner at the Bar be one of the three Perſons that you carried to the Blue Boar's-Head on the Back-ſide of St. Clements, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Mr. Gamble. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot be poſitive whether he be one of them or no: I took up in Cheapſide three Men into my Coach, and ſet one of them down at Grays-Inn, and drove the other two to Dr. Clenche's Houſe, that Night he was murdered, and he was not at home; and afterwards the Man I had ſet down came in again, and I ſet them all down at the Blue Boar's-Head Ale-Houſe near Clement's-Inn-Gate, about Eight a-Clock at Night.

Cl. of Ar. Set up William Brown, Servant at the Blue Boar's-Head.

Mr. J. Dolben. Hark you, Is this one of the three Men that the Coachman ſet down at your Maſter's Houſe, that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Will. Brown. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Time did they come to your Houſe?

Will. Brown. They came about Eight a-Clock at Night, and this Man and the other ſtayed till after Eleven a-Clock: Only Milward went out, and returned preſently; and then immediately he went out again, which was before Nine a-Clock, and return'd not until Eleven a-Clock after.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Time was Dr. Clenche kill'd?

Will. Brown. About Ten a-Clock, or betwixt Ten and Eleven, as I think.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who went out firſt, only Milward?

Will. Brown. Only Mr. Milward, my Lord: But this Man ſtayed all the Time, till Eleven a-Clock at Night; and another, who went by the Name of Harper, as I am ſince informed.

Mr. J. Dolben. Why then this Man could not be in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was murdered, ſo Harriſon and Milward kill'd the Doctor in all Probability; for he ſays, this Man at the Bar, and another, ſtay'd at his Maſter's Houſe till after Eleven a-Clock.

Will. Brown. My Lord, When Milward came back, he brought a Couple of Men with him, in Soldiers Habit, about Eleven of the Clock at Night.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that Mr. Cole and he went out of the Houſe, and left Mr. Harper behind.

Mr. J. Dolben. But this Man ſwears, that the Priſoner did not go out of the Houſe till Eleven a-Clock at Night, and they were ſet down about Eight of the Clock, and Dr. Clenche was found kill'd a little after Ten at Night; and that Milward went out, and then came in again about Eleven a-Clock, and brought two Men with him him: 'Tis to be feared he had been killing Dr. Clenche in that Time; Have you any more to ſay? If this Man ſays true, nothing can be ſaid more.

Mrs. Milward. Speak what was done when they came to drink the Pot of Ale, Mr. Brown.

Mr. J. Dolbin. I would fain know, Miſtreſs, who ſet you upon this Buſineſs? Is there not ſome Money promiſed you? It was not the Fear of your Husband's Ghoſt that put you upon it, I am afraid.

Mrs Milward. I am much wronged, my Lord, I know nothing of any Money offered me.

Mr. J. Dolben. What ſay you more?

Will. Brown. My Lord, Mr. Milward being at my Maſter's Houſe that Night Dr. Clenche was killed, deſired me to make a Fire in the ſame Room the next Morning, and that he would come again then; and I made a Fire accordingly, but he came not then, nor afterwards at any time to my Knowledge; but on a Sunday Night about a Fortnight after, came the two Perſons that came with Mr. Milward in the Coach to my Maſter's Houſe that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered, and my Maſter being above Stairs, I ſent him Word, that the two Men were there who were there that Night that the Doctor was murdered, and they inquired for Mr. Milward, ſaying he promiſed to meet them there, and he not being there, before my Maſter could come down, they paid for the Pot of Drink, and went away.

Mr. J. Dolben. When they came together to the Blue Boar's-Head, they had ſome evil Deſign, no doubt, but if it be true that thoſe two Men ſtaid from eight a Clock till eleven, then it could not be this Man that murdered Dr. Clenche; but hark ye, Fellow, you ſay, there were three Perſons, whereof Cole was one, and Milward the other, who was the Third?

Will. Brown. I do not know his Name, my Lord, otherwiſe than as I have ſince heard.

Mrs. Mil. The other Man's Namewas Harper.

Mr. J. Dolben. You know nothing but what your Husband told you, and 'tis moſt probable that Harriſon and he did the Murder, for that it appears that the Priſoner at the Bar is not the Man that kill'd the Doctor, that's plain. Have you any more?

Mrs. Milward. About a Fortnight after the Murder was done, they came to inquire for my Husband at the Blue Boar's-Head, and whilſt the Tapſter went to tell his Maſter, they left their Money for the Drink and went away, and would not be ſeen.

Mr. J. Dolben. What if they had run away, what then? If they were at the Blue Boar when Dr. Clenche was kill'd, they could not kill him.

Mrs. Milward. His Maſter ſays, that they were in the Houſe, and out of the Houſe, very often. Call Mr. Dalley the Maſter. Who appear'd, and ſtood up.

Mr. Dalley. My Lord, Two of them were not out of the Houſe all the Night, I am not poſitive that this is the Man that came in with Milward, but thoſe two Men that came in with him, never went out at all until after Eleven a Clock at Night, but only Milward went out between Eight and Nine, and returned about Eleven a Clock.

Mr. J. Dolben. What do you ſay to this, Woman? your Husband told you that the Priſoner was one of the Two, this Witneſs cannot ſay he was one, but ſays poſitively thoſe two Men never went out till Eleven a Clock, and from St. Clement Danes to Leadenhall-Street is not to go in and out, they muſt take a great deal of time to go thither and back again. Hark you, Mr. Dalley, you ſay that thoſe two Men that Milward left, never went out of your Houſe till after Eleven a Clock; you are ſure on't?

Mr. Dalley. No, my Lord, they did not go out.

Mr. Wiſe. Mrs. Milward hath two Witneſſes that can tell ſomewhat more of the Matter concerning her Husband's being concerned in the Murder.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that the Coachman took them up not far from Chancery Lane End, and that Mr. Cole laid Hands upon the Doctor in the middle of Holbourn.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, Call John Sikes the Coachman; who ſtood up.

Mr. Sikes. My Lord, I took up two Men in Fleet-Street, about Fetter-Lane End.

Mr. J. Dolben. What manner of Men were they? What Cloaths had they on?

Mr. Sikes. My Lord, one of them had a light-coloured Perriwig on, and the other was in ſad-coloured Cloaths, and lank Hair, but I cannot be poſitive that this is one of them: They asked me if I knew Dr. Clenche of Brownlow-Street? I told them, that I did not know the Doctor, but I knew the Street; and they bid me drive thither; and when I came to the Street's End, they ſent me to the Doctor's Houſe, and bid me tell him, that two Gentlemen were at the Street's End in a Coach, who deſired him to go with them to one that was not well; ſo the Doctor came preſently after me, and when he was in the Coach, they bid me drive to Leadenhall-Street; and when I came about Holbourn-Bars they bid me drive faſter; and when I came to Leadenhall-Market, they bid me drive to Aldgate, and I drove thro' the Gate to the Pye Tavern, and when I had turned my Coach, they bid me ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, but he was not there; and then I told them the Gate was ſhut, and one of them put his Hand out of the Coach, and gave the Watchman Six-pence to open the Gate, and then I drove back again to Leadenhall-Market, and there they bid me ſtop again, and one of them gave me half a Crown to buy a Fowl, and I went a little way from the Coach, and one of them called me back again, and gave me a Shilling more, and bid me bring a Couple; and he bid me ask for one Hunt a Poulterer; I went all over the Market, but I could find no ſuch Man, ſo at length I bought the Fowls of another Man, and would have had the Man gone with me to my Coach, but he would not; then I came to my Coach-ſide, and found the Door open; and I found the Doctor ſitting at the Bottom of the Coach, with his Head againſt the Cuſhion, and the two Men gone, and one of them ſeemed to be in Drink when I took them up, and I thought him to be that Man fallen aſleep, and that the Doctor and the ſober Man were gone to the Perſon that was not well; ſo then I called the Watch, and found the Doctor dead, and then it was about half an Hour after Ten a Clock at Night.

Mr. J. Dolben. Then I ask you, was that one of the Men?

Mr. Sikes. I cannot ſay it, my Lord; I don't know him.

Mr. J. Dolben. What time of Night was it that you took them up at Fetter-Lane End?

Mr. Sikes.

Mr. Sykes. It was about Nine a Clock, ſomewhat after.

Mr. J. Dolben. Why then, they ſay, that this Man never ſtirr'd out of the Houſe from Eight a Clock till Eleven; this Man can't be concern'd.

Cl. of Arr. Set up John Dudley: Which was done.

Mrs. Milward. Mr. Dudley, What did my Husband ſay concerning the Doctor to you in the Country?

Mr. Dudley. He came into the Country preſently after the Death of the Doctor, and he ſent for me, and was very much concerned; I ask'd him what was the Matter with him, and he told me, that he was come out of Town about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, that I hoped he was not concerned in it; he told me, No, but there was a Warrant out againſt him upon account that he quarrell'd with the Coachman that Night that he carried him to Dr. Clenche's; and he ſaid, that Mr. Harriſon had ſent to him from Newgate, and told him, that he would give him Twenty Pounds if he could make his Trial eaſy.

Mr. J. Dolben. Miſtreſs, this makes it out, that he told you one Story, and to this Witneſs another, which contradicts your Story fully; he told him, that he came away for Fear, and that he was innocent of the Murder; and ſince that he told you, that he was guilty. Well, what elſe did he ſay to you, Mr. Dudley?

Mr. Dudley. He was much concerned to enquire after the Gazettes, and Letters, if he were in them, about the Doctor's Murder, and to enquire if Mr. Cole and Mr. Harper were taken up about it.

Mr. J. Dolben. You hear what is ſaid againſt you; what do you ſay to it, Mr. Cole?

Mr. Cole. My Lord, I know nothing of it.

Mr. J. Dolben. No, I doubt you do, you were one of the Three that was ſet down on the Backſide of St. Clement's Church, at the Blue-Boar's-Head, where all Things were conſulted.

Mr. Cole. My Lord, there was not one Word ſpoke about killing of Dr. Clenche in my Company.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were not you acquainted with Milward?

Mr. Cole. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were you not with Harriſon?

Mr. Cole. No, my Lord, I never ſaw him with my Eyes.

Mr. J. Dolben. Well, have you any more to ſay?

Mrs. Milw. Call Mr. Hobbs. Who ſtood up.

Mr. Hobbs. I met Mr. Milward in York-Buildings, and he ask'd me how I did, and he went from me a little way, and then came to me again, and ask'd me if I would drink: So we went to the George in York-Buildings, and there we drank a Pot or two; and he ask'd me if I heard that he was accuſed about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him No, but he never told me any thing of this Man at the Bar.

Mr. J. Dolben. What was Milward?

Mr. Hobbs. I do not know how he got his Living.

Mr. J. Dolben. Have you any Body elſe, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Milw. No, my Lord, I know no more.

Mr. J. Dolben. Gentlemen of the Jury, Cole the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for murthering Dr. Clenche, who, as it now appears, was murther'd in a Coach by two Perſons that were therein together with the Doctor. The Queſtion now before you is, whether Cole was one of theſe two?

Gamble the Coachman ſwears, That the Night Dr. Clenche was killed, he took up three Men in Cheapſide, ſet one of them down at Gray's-Inn, and drove on to Dr. Clenche's Houſe; the Doctor was not at Home, then the third Man came in again to the Coach, and he drove to the Blue-Boar's-Head, an Alehouſe by Clement's-Inn, and ſet thoſe three Men down there, and 'twas then about Eight of the Clock.

Sikes the Coachman ſwears, He took up two Men at Fetter-Lane End in Fleet-Street, and by their Directions drove to Brownlow-Street, where the Doctor lived, whom they got into the Coach, and he drove as far as Aldgate, and through the Gate, and then came back to Leadenhall; was ſent by the two Men in the Coach to buy a Fowl; when he returned they were gone, but the Doctor found dead in the Coach; and 'twas now half an Hour paſt Ten.

The Queſtion now, as I ſaid before, is, Whether Cole the Priſoner at the Bar, was one of theſe two Men?

The Woman tells you, Milward her Husband told her, that he and Cole were in the Coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they two kill'd Dr. Clenche.

She likewiſe tells you, her Husband told her, that Cole and her Husband went out from the Blue-Boar's-Head near Clement's-Inn, and left only Harper behind.

The Court hath already declar'd to you, That her Evidence, being only what her Husband told her, is no Evidence in Law to take away a Man's Life, eſpecially when it is ſingle, without any Circumſtance to confirm it, as here 'tis. But that is not all, there is a very great Evidence, that what ſhe ſays her Husband told her, is falſe.

He told her, ſhe ſays, that he and Cole went from the Blue-Boar's-Head and kill'd the Doctor, leaving only Harper behind.

The Maſter of the Houſe, and his Servant (Witneſſes which ſhe produceth) both ſwear, That her Husband went out alone, and left two Men behind, who both ſtaid in the Houſe till Milward return'd, which was about Eleven of the Clock. The Maſter, 'tis true, cannot ſay that Cole is one of the two, but the Servant is very poſitive he is, and both are poſitive, that two Men that Milward left behind, continued in the Houſe till Milward return'd at Eleven of the Clock. Theſe two Mens Depoſitions do plainly contradict her Story, and if they ſwear true, Cole the Priſoner was not one of the Perſons that kill'd the Doctor.

You have all heard, I am ſure, that one Harriſon hath been convicted by a Jury in this Place for the Murder of Dr. Clenche: If he was one of the two, then Milward, by his own Confeſſion (if his Wife ſwear true) was the other; but this you cannot take notice of, the Record is not produced, neither hath the Priſoner taken notice of it. The Queſtion is only, Whether Cole be guilty of the Murder? which I leave to you upon the Evidence you have heard.

The Jury having conſidered the Verdict, return'd, That the Priſoner was Not Guilty.

CLI. The Trial of CHARLES Lord MOHUN, before the LORDS at Weſtminſter, for the Murder of William Mountford, Jan. 31. 1692. 4 W. & M.

Tueſday, Jan. 31. 1692.

IN the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall, for the Trial of the Lord Mohun for the Murder of William Mountford;

About 12 a Clock this Day, the Lords came from their own Houſe in their Robes, in Proceſſion in this manner into the Court.

Firſt, the Lord High Steward's Gentlemen-Attendants, two and two.

Then the Clerks of the Houſe of Lords, with the two Clerks of the Crown in the King's-Bench and Chancery, two and two.

Then the Maſters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges, eight of them, two and two.

Then the Peers eldeſt Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

Then the Yeoman Uſher of the Houſe.

Then the Peers according to their Seniority, beginning with the youngeſt Baron, two and two.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

Then Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Uſher of the Black-Rod: Garter on the Right-Hand, and Black-Rod on the Left, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High Steward.

Then his Grace the Marquiſs of Carmarthen, Lord High Steward, alone.

When the Lords were ſeated on their proper Benches, and the Lord High Steward upon the Wool-Pack, the two Clerks of the Crown ſtanding before the Clerks Table, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having their Majeſties Commiſſion to his Grace the Lord High Steward in his Hand, they both made three Reverences to his Grace, and at the third coming up before the Wool-Pack, they did both kneel down, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on his Knee, preſented the Commiſſion to his Grace, who deliver'd it to the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench; and then with three Reverences, they return'd to the Clerks Table, where the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench opening the Commiſſion, commanded Proclamation of Silence to be made in this manner.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. Again.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. Again.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. My Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, and to hear the King and Queen's Majeſties Commiſſion to his Grace my Lord High Steward of England directed, openly read, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Which Words the Serjeant at Arms repeated aloud.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, pray be pleaſed to ſtand up and be uncovered whilſt their Majeſties Commiſſion is reading.

Which his Grace himſelf did, and all the Peers.

Clerk of the Crown reads.

Then his Grace remov'd from the Wooll-Pack to the Chair, which was placed upon an Aſcent juſt before the uppermoſt Step of the Throne, and ſeated himſelf in the Chair.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Cl. of Cr. Chief Governor of the Tower of London, return the Precept to you directed, together with the Body of Charles Lord Mohun your Priſoner, forthwith into the Court, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then the Deputy-Governor of the Tower brought the Lord Mohun to the Bar, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Gaoler of the Tower, who ſtood with it at the Bar, on the Right-Hand of the Priſoner, turning the Edge from him.

The Priſoner at his Approach to the Bar, made three Bows, one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, the other to the Peers on each Hand, and his Grace and all the Peers returned the Salute to him.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, my Voice will not ſerve to ſpeak at ſuch a Diſtance, ſo as to be heard, and therefore I muſt beg leave of your Lordſhips to come down to the Wooll-Pack again.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace came down, and ſeated himſelf on the Wooll-Pack.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, I am to let your Lordſhip know, you are not to hold up your Hand upon your Arraignment; and I am to let you that are Council at the Bar likewiſe know, that both you and the Witneſſes, are to direct yourſelves to the Court, in the Style of My Lords, ſpeaking to the Court.

Then there was a little Pauſe, after which his Grace addreſſed himſelf to the Priſoner thus.

Lord High Steward. My Lord, you are brought here before this Supreme Court in order to your Trial.

The Charge againſt you is, for the Murder of one of the King's Subjects, which is a Crime the King will at no time paſs over in the meaneſt Man's Caſe, without making a ſtrict Inquiry into the Offence, and cauſing due Puniſhment to be inflicted on the Offender.

This, my Lord, is charged upon you, not by any ſlight Information, but by the Grand Inqueſt of this County, made up of Gentlemen of good Worth and Conſideration. It is true, that this Inqueſt does not amount to much more than a bare Accuſation; and therefore it ought not to be made any uſe of, ſo as to prejudice your Lordſhip's Trial; but it is that which is the Ground of preſenting this Black Crime before my Lords your Peers, who cannot receive it without ſome Trouble, to find any one of their Body ſuſpected to be guilty of an Action ſo Diſhonourable as this is repreſented to their Lordſhips.

My Lord, you are a very young Man, and therefore it is to be hoped, you cannot ſo early have had your Hands in Blood. And the ſame Reaſon, becauſe you are ſo young, may, perhaps, make you conceive, that you are under ſome greater Diſadvantage in making your Defence, than you would be if your Experience had been longer.

But to remove any Miſapprehenſion you can have of that kind, it is very proper to put your Lordſhip in mind, that you have the good Fortune now, to be tried for this Fact in full Parliament, where no Evidence will be received, but ſuch as muſt be manifeſt and plain, beyond all Contradiction; ſo that you have nothing to fear here, but your own Guilt.

In the next Place, my Lord, you need not be diſcourag'd for want of Council, for the Honour of this Court is ſuch, as will take care to inform you of any Advantage that the Law can give you. And you may be farther aſſured, that no Art or Skill in Arguing, can take any Place here, either againſt your Innocency, or divert my Lords from doing you exact Juſtice. Nay, I dare preſume to ſay, on the Part of my Lords, that if there be Room for any Abatement of Severity, you may reaſonably expect to find it from their Lordſhips.

Theſe Conſiderations, my Lord, cannot but give you great Conſolation under your unhappy Circumſtances, it being moſt certain, that nothing but your own Crimes can hurt you.

But at the ſame time I muſt tell you, that your Lordſhip is not to flatter yourſelf with an Expectation or Hope, that any Favour will be ſhewed you beyond what Honour and Juſtice can allow: And I hope you have well conſidered, that it is no leſs than your Life, your Honour, and your Eſtate, that you are now to defend, inſomuch, that I cannot doubt but your Lordſhip has recollected and prepared yourſelf for the Defence of what ſo very much concerns you.

I will not therefore detain you any longer than to give you ſome Directions in the Order and Method of your Trial; and thoſe are, that your Lordſhip do give Attention carefully to the Reading of your Indictment. That you give no Interruption to the Council or Witneſſes when they ſpeak againſt you; and when the proper time ſhall come for your Witneſſes to be examined, and that you are to be heard in your own Defence, I will give you due notice of it.

Your Lordſhip may alſo be certain, that when it ſhall come to your turn to ſpeak, you ſhall be heard with all the Patience and Favour that the Matter will bear; and at laſt, when all hath been heard that can be ſaid on both Sides, your Lordſhip needs not doubt, but that my Lord will give ſuch a Judgment as will be ſuitable to the Honour, Juſtice and Equity of this great Court. Clerk, read the Indictment to my Lord.

Clerk

Clerk of the Crown. 'CHarles Lord Mohun, You ſtand 'indicted by the Name of 'Charles Lord Mohun, of the Pariſh of St. Clement 'Danes, in the County of Middleſex, for that you, 'together with one Richard Hill of the ſame Pariſh 'and County, Gentleman, who is fled, and with-'drawn from Juſtice, not having the Fear of God 'before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced 'by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 9th Day of 'December, in the 4th Year of the Reign of our 'Sovereign Lord and Lady William and Mary, by 'the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, 'and Ireland, King and Queen, Defenders of the 'Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, &c. at the 'Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in and 'upon one William Mountford, Gent. in the Peace 'of God, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady 'the King and Queen, then and there being, 'feloniouſly, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-'thought, did make an Aſſault. And that he 'the ſaid Richard Hill, with a certain Rapier 'made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of 5 s. 'which he the ſaid Richard Hill, in his Right-'Hand then and there had and held drawn, the 'ſaid William Mountford, in and upon the Right-'ſide of the Body of him the ſaid William Mount-'ford, near the Right Pap of him the ſaid Wil-'liam, then and there feloniouſly, wilfully, and 'of his Malice aforethought, did ſtrike and thruſt, 'giving unto him the ſaid William Mountford 'then and there, with a Sword drawn aforeſaid, 'in and upon the aforeſaid Right-ſide of the 'Body of him the ſaid William Mountford, near 'the ſaid Right Pap of the ſaid William, one 'Mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, 'and of the Depth of twenty Inches, of which 'ſaid Mortal Wound the aforeſaid William Mount-'ford, from the aforeſaid ninth Day of December, 'in the Year aforeſaid, unto the tenth Day of 'the ſame Month of December, in the Year afore-'ſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County 'aforeſaid, did languiſh, and languiſhing, did 'live, on which ſaid tenth Day of December in 'the Year aforeſaid, the aforeſaid William Mount-'ford of the Mortal Wound aforeſaid, at the Pa-'riſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, died. 'And that you the ſaid Charles Lord Mohun, at 'the Time of the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, 'by the aforeſaid Richard Hill, in Manner and 'Form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his 'Malice afore-thought, done and committed, 'then and there feloniouſly, wilfully, and of your 'Malice afore-thought, were preſent, aiding, 'abetting, comforting, aſſiſting and maintain-'ing the aforeſaid Richard Hill, the ſaid William 'Mountford in Form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, wil-'fully, and of his Malice afore-thought to kill 'and murder. And ſo that you the ſaid Charles 'Lord Mohun, and the ſaid Richard Hill, the ſaid 'William Mountford in Manner and Form afore-'ſaid, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of your Malice 'afore-thought, did kill and murder, againſt the 'Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady the 'King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity.

How ſay you, Charles Lord Mohun, Are you Guilty of this Felony and Murder, or not Guilty?

L. Mohun. Not Guilty, my Lords.

Clerk of the Crown. How will your Lordſhip be tried?

L. Mohun. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God ſend your Lordſhip a good Deliverance.

L. High Steward. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe that the Judges may be covered?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Judges put on their Caps.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. If any one will give Evidence on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen's Majeſties, againſt Charles Lord Mohun the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now he ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

L. High. Steward. You Gentlemen that are of the King's Council, will you begin?

Mr. Serjeant Thompſon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of Council for the King and Queen, againſt my Lord Mohun the Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands indicted for the Murder of one William Mountford.

L. Mohun. My Lords.

L. High Steward. My Lord Mohun, what does your Lordſhip ſay?

L. Mohun. Do not your Lordſhips think it proper, that I ſhould have Pen, Ink and Paper?

Lords. Ay, by all means.

L. High Steward. Yes, give my Lord Pen, Ink and Paper.

Which were carried to him by one of the Clerks.

L. High Steward. Go on, Sir, now.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord Mohun ſtands indicted here before your Lordſhips, for the Murder of one William Mountford, and the Indictment ſets forth, that one Richard Hill, who is ſince fled from Juſtice, did upon the 9th of December laſt, make an Aſſault upon this ſame William Mountford, and that the ſaid Lord Mohun, did likewiſe make that Aſſault. This Indictment particularly ſets forth, that this Hill, by a Sword or Rapier, which he had in his Hand, did give this William Mountford a Wound on his Right-ſide, and that Mountford did languiſh of that Wound till the next Day, which was the 10th of December, when he died; and that at the Time of the giving the Wound, my Lord Mohun was preſent, and was aiding, abetting, aſſiſting, and comforting of Hill; and thereupon we do ſay, he is Guilty of this Murder, and for this he ſtands indicted. It is my Duty to open the Indictment to your Lordſhips, we ſhall call our Proofs, and give you the Evidence, and then leave it to your Lordſhips Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir John Somers. My Lords, the Indictment has been opened, and by that your Lordſhips ſee, the Noble Lord at the Bar ſtands charged with the High Crime of Murder.

My Lords, his Peerage gives him a Right to be tried in this Great and Noble Court; and as my Lord has juſt Reaſon to put a high Value upon this Privilege, ſo on the other Hand, their Majeſties, who are making Inquiſition for the Blood of one of their Subjects, have a full Aſſurance, that no Compaſſion for my Lord's Youth, no Conſideration for his Quality, or Regard for one of your own Order, will make your Lordſhips unmindful of the heinous Nature of the Crime, or cauſe any Variation in the Steadineſs of your Juſtice.

It is true, my Lords, the Difference between the Trial of a Peer and a Commoner is very great, but but there is no Difference in the Crime, whether committed by one or the other: It is the ſame Law by which they muſt be tried and judged; and that Fact which would be Murder in the meaneſt Subject, is no leſs than Murder if committed by the greateſt Peer.

My Lords, it is not inſiſted upon, that the Noble Lord at the Bar gave the Mortal Stroak with his own Hand; Nor is it ſo alledged in the Indictment: The Indictment findeth the Wound to have been given by the Hand of Richard Hill; but if my Lord the Priſoner was of his Party, if he concurr'd with him in the Thing, if he was preſent and abetting to the Fact, though he did not ſtrike a Stroak, though he was no more than a Looker-on when the Thing was done, the Law ſaith, He is a Principal in the Murder.

Whether my Lord's Caſe will fall within this Rule, is the Point for your Lordſhips to determine, when the Witneſſes are heard.

My Lords, it is my Part to give an Account of the Nature of the Evidence, to the end, that your Lordſhips may more eaſily go along with the Witneſſes, as they are examined, and more readily make your Obſervations upon what they ſay.

This I ſhall do as ſhortly, and as exactly as I can, without pretending to aggravate any thing, which I could never think did become any one in my Station; and I am ſure, would be to very little purpoſe before ſuch a Judicature as this; for after all, your Lordſhips will found your Judgments upon the Fact, not as it is repreſented by us, but as it appears upon the Oaths of the Witneſſes.

The Time when the Fact for which my Lord is to be tried was committed, was the 9th Day of December laſt.

The Occaſion of it, was this.

Captain Hill, the Perſon mentioned in the Indictment, had for ſome time before made Addreſſes of Courtſhip in the Way of Marriage, to one Mrs. Bracegirdle, an Actreſs in the Play-Houſe; But theſe Propoſals were totally rejected. This put Mr. Hill in a very great Rage, and he declared, that Mr. Mountford (the Perſon ſlain) was the only Man that ſtood in his way, and with many Execrations, expreſſed his Reſolution to be revenged upon him: This he did at ſeveral times, and before ſeveral Perſons.

The ſame Day the Fact was committed, in the Morning, my Lord, who is now at the Bar, and Captain Hill, went together to hire a Coach to go to Totteridge, and directed the Coachman to have ſix Horſes ready, but to be waiting for them in Drury-Lane near the Play-Houſe, with only two Horſes in his Coach, about Nine a Clock the ſame Night. My Lord and Captain Hill dined together that Day, at a Tavern in Covent-Garden, and here much of their Diſcourſe was about Mrs. Bracegirdle; and both of them did freely declare their Opinion, that Mr. Mountford lay with her. But the Principal of their Diſcourſe, was in relation to a Deſign which they had formed for the ſeizing upon Mrs. Bracegirdle, and forcing her into a Coach, and carrying her away ſomewhere into the Country.

This was to be executed that Night; and accordingly they were then providing Arms for that purpoſe: Mr. Hill did acquaint my Lord, that the Soldiers would be ready by the time; and my Lord took Notice, that the carrying her off, would ſtand Mr. Hill in 50 l. at leaſt. Thereupon (as your Lordſhips will hear from the Evidence) Mr. Hill uſed this Expreſſion, If the Villain reſiſt, I will ſtab him; and then my Lord was pleaſed to ſay, That he would ſtand by his Friend.

After they had continued there ſome time, being about to part, Mr. Hill told my Lord, That unleſs he was at the Play-Houſe by Six a Clock, the Thing could not be effected, and he ſhould be undone: But my Lord promiſed to be there at the Time.

Accordingly they both met at the Play-Houſe, and after they had been behind the Scenes, and informed themſelves that Mrs. Bracegirdle would not be there that Night, they left the Play-Houſe.

But it ſeems they had got Intelligence, that ſhe was to ſup that Night at one Mr. Page's Houſe in Drury-Lane; and therefore they planted themſelves with their Soldiers near that Place, over againſt my Lord Craven's Houſe.

Lord High Steward. They; who do you mean?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar and Mr. Hill. After they had continued there for a conſiderable time (I think till towards Nine a Clock) they began to have a Jealouſy, that they might be under ſome Miſinformation; and therefore ordered the Coachman to drive them into Howard-ſtreet, the Place where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and obſerving ſome Perſons walking near her Lodging, they ſaid, they doubted they were deceived, and had been betrayed.

But they ſoon came back again to Drury-Lane, and fixed themſelves in their former Station. About Ten a Clock, Mrs. Bracegirdle, accompanied with Mr. Page (at whoſe Houſe ſhe had been) and with her Mother, and (I think) her Brother, going Home; when they came to the Place where the Coach ſtood, with the Door open, and my Lord at the Bar placed in the Coach; and ſeveral Caſes of Piſtols by him, the Soldiers, together with Captain Hill, came up to Mrs. Bracegirdle, ſeized upon her, and would have forced her into the Coach: Mr. Hill endeavoured with Violence, to force away Mr. Page, who was then leading her, and ſtruck him; but Mrs. Bracegirdle's Mother holding her about the Middle, they could not readily get her into the Coach, and during this Struggle, there was an Opportunity given to Mr. Page to call for Help, and ſeveral Perſons coming preſently from the Houſes near, and the People in the Street beginning to riſe upon them, they found it impracticable to effect their Deſign at that Time.

Thereupon the Soldiers were diſmiſſed, but my Lord and Mr. Hill, would not be denied the Liberty to wait upon Mrs. Bracegirdle to her Lodging, and accordingly, together with Mr. Page and her Mother, and other Perſons, they went together to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, at one Mrs. Browne's Houſe in Howard-ſteeet. Mr. Mountford's Houſe was in Norfolk-ſtreet, below Howard-ſtreet. Howard-ſtreet is a Croſs Street, which leads from Arundel-ſtreet, and through Norfolk-ſtreet to Surrey-ſtreet; and ſo it was not poſſible for Mountford to come to his own Houſe, but whoever ſhould fix themſelves in Howard-ſtreet, muſt have the Opportunity of ſeeing him.

As they were going along, Hill ſwore he would be reveng'd; but nam'd no-body.

After that Mrs. Bracegirdle and the Company were come to her Lodging, ſhe and her Mother, and Page went into the Houſe: My Lord Mohun and and Mr. Hill ſtaid in Howard-ſtreet, and there continued for near two Hours together, and for the moſt part of that Time, with their Swords drawn.

Mr. Mountford, as it happen'd, did not come Home till late that Night; ſo that their Stay being long, my Lord and Mr. Hill thought fit to ſend for Wine, and had one or two Bottles, which they drank in the Street, near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

During this Time, they were heard to ſay (that is, one of them was; but which of them, by reaſon of the Darkneſs, we cannot tell) that if he could not be revenged that Night, he would the next Morning; upon which, a Boy, who was there with them; (but who the Boy was we cannot diſcover) ſaid, Good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Reſolution. I did obſerve before, that Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped that Night at Mr. Page's Houſe, and Mrs. Page having heard of the great Outrage and Tumult in the Street, and that her Husband was gone home with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and being under a great Concern for his Safety, thought fit to follow him thither. As ſhe entred into the Houſe, ſhe ſaw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill near the Door; and preſently after, before ſhe could have a full Relation of what had happened in Drury-lane, Mrs. Browne, the Owner of the Houſe where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, came into the Room, and told them, That my Lord Mohun and Hill were waiting for Mr. Mountford, and that ſhe was apprehenſive it was with no good Intention. Thereupon Mrs. Page thought it requiſite to go to Mrs. Mountford's Houſe to give her Notice of it, and to deſire her to find out where her Husband was, and to caution him not to come Home, unleſs he brought a good Guard with him.

As ſhe went out, ſhe ſaw them both with their Swords drawn, and ſhe acquainted Mrs. Mountford with it, who ſent to ſeveral Places in Search of her Husband; but ſhe was ſo unfortunate, that the Meſſengers could not find him.

Whilſt this was doing, the Watch came into Howard-ſtreet, being alarm'd at the Report that two Gentlemen were drinking in the Street, and walking there with their naked Swords. The Watch demanded of my Lord Mohun, why he had his Sword drawn. My Lord was pleaſed to return them this Anſwer, That he was a Peer of the Realm, and bid them touch him if they durſt. They then asked Hill, why his Sword was out, and my Lord made the Excuſe for him, That Hill had loſt his Scabbord.

The Watch obſerving the Drawer who attended upon them, and knowing that he lived at a Tavern in Surrey-ſtreet, went to inform themſelves, who theſe Perſons ſhould be, that were walking in ſuch a Manner at that time of Night. But they were hardly got into the Houſe before they heard the Cry of Murder.

The Witneſſes will inform your Lordſhips, that as Mr. Mountford, about twelve a Clock, was coming home, my Lord Mohun met him, and ſaluted him. Mr. Mountford ſaid, My Lord Mohun, What does your Lordſhip do here at this time of Night? and my Lord made Anſwer, He ſuppoſed Mr. Mountford had been ſent for. No, no, ſays Mountford, I came by Chance. My Lord ſaid to him again, I ſuppoſe you have heard about the Lady. Mr. Mountford anſwered, I hope my Wife has given your Lordſhip no Offence. No, ſays my Lord Mohun, It's Mrs. Bracegirdle I mean. To this the Reply of Mr. Mountford was, Mrs. Bracegirdle is no Concern of mine; but I hope your Lordſhip does not countenance any ill Action of Mr. Hill.

Upon this Hill came up to them, and ſaid to my Lord, It was not a Time to diſcourſe of thoſe Matters; and as my Lord continued to talk with Mountford, Hill ſtruck Mountford firſt, and, in a manner, at the ſame Inſtant made a Paſs at him, and run him clean through the Body, and this before Mr. Mountford's Sword was drawn. Immediately, upon this, there was a Cry of Murder, and the Watch came with what haſte they could, and took my Lord Mohun, but Hill was fled; when my Lord was taken, his Sword was not drawn.

As ſoon as my Lord Mohun was taken, the firſt Queſtion he asked was, If Hill was apprehended; and when he was told, he was not, he ſaid he was glad of it, and he did not care if he were hang'd for him. And he ſaid, adding at the ſame time, That he was ſorry that Mr. Hill had ſo little Money about him, and wiſhed him all that he had in his own Pocket; and he did then alſo own to the Watch, that he had changed Coats with Mr. Hill, and had Hill's Coat on him at that time.

My Lords, this is the Subſtance of the Evidence, and in this Order, with your Lordſhips Leave, we ſhall offer the Proofs to your Lordſhips; I do not doubt, but your Lordſhips will attend to the Evidence with all Care, and will determine upon it according to Juſtice and Honour. I will detain your Lordſhips no longer, but proceed to call the Witneſſes to prove what I have opened.

L. H. Steward. Pray call your Witneſſes together, and let me know who you begin with.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We do not know what Place is deſigned for the Witneſſes; but if they are to be on the other Side, and this Croud do interpoſe between us and them, it will be impoſſible for us, who are the King's Council, to hear what they ſay, or know how to proceed.

L. H. Steward. There muſt be Room made there for the Witneſſes; where are your Witneſſes Mr. Attorney?

Clerk of the Crown. If you pleaſe to name them, Sir, we will call them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. John Hudſon, and Mr. George Powel.

Lord High Steward. I know not how this is ordered, but Way muſt be made there by the Bar, that the Priſoner may ſee the Witneſſes, and they him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, by all means.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, the Witneſſes will be moſt conveniently heard, if they come and ſtand by us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, it will not be poſſible either for my Lord at the Bar, or for us, to hear what the Witneſſes ſay, unleſs they be brought into this Place to ſtand between us.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Great Chamberlain, be pleaſed to give order for them to be brought in thither.

Then the Lord Great Chamberlain went down to the Bar.

L. Gr. Cham. The Witneſſes muſt be brought to this Place.

And accordingly, Way was made for the Witneſſes, neſſes, as called, to ſtand at the Bar between the Priſoner and the King's Council.

L. H. Stew. Give me the Name of him that you begin with.

Mr. Att. G. We begin, my Lords, with Mr. John Hudſon. Who came to the Bar, and one of the Clerks held the Book to him, upon which he laid his Hand.

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Oath, Sir; The Evidence that you ſhall give on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen's Majeſties againſt Charles Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: So help you God. (Then he kiſſed the Book.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hudſon, Do you give my Lords an Account what you know of any Applications of Courtſhip made to Mrs. Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill, and what became of it; and what you heard Hill ſay about her, or about any one elſe relating to that Matter.

Hudſon. My Lord, I had the Honour to be invited to Supper with my Lord Mohun, at the Roſe-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where I found Captain Hill with his Lordſhip.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this, Sir? tell the time.

Hud. This was three Nights before this unfortunate Accident happen'd, there I found Captain Hill, and we ſupped together; and after Supper, Captain Hill raiſed a Diſcourſe of Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Mountford; ſays he, I ſhould not doubt the Succeſs of my Amour with Mrs. Bracegirdle, if I were not obſtructed by Mountford, whom I deſign to be the Death of: This is Truth upon my Oath. My Lord Mohun was in the Company; but I cannot ſay that my Lord made any Reply to the Thing, or took any Notice of it: But this Captain Hill did ſay, not only then, but ſeveral times before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſay it at any other time in your Hearing?

Hud. Yes, ſeveral times before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing more of this matter?

Hud. No more, than that my Lord Mohun, that very Night that Mr. Mountford was killed, and Capt. Hill, came into the Scene Room of the Play-Houſe, and my Lord Mohun had Capt. Hill's Coat on, and Capt. Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and they changed their Cloaths in the Play-Houſe. I ſaw them change their Cloaths; but what their Deſign was, I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was that, Sir?

Hud. That very Night that the Gentleman that is dead, Mr. Mountford, was killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay, That my Lord Mohun was preſent when that Diſcourſe of Hill was, about Mountford at the Tavern.

Hud. Yes, but I cannot ſay my Lord took any Notice of it, for he made no Reply that I heard.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Hud. This is all that I know of the Matter.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to ſay to this Witneſs?

L. Moh. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Then our next Witneſs's Name is George Powell. (Who was ſworn in like manner.)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Powell, You have heard the Queſtions that have been ask'd Mr. Hudſon. Pray will you make Anſwers to them; and give my Lords an Account what you know of this Matter.

Powell. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, about 5 or 6 Days before Mr. Mountford was wounded, I was in Company with Captain Hill, and he began Mrs. Bracegirdle's Health. I told him I would pledge it. Says he, I am ſure there is no Bar between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, but Mountford; and I am reſolved to be revenged on him, one way or another. About 3 Days afterwards I was at Supper with my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, and another Gentleman, and the ſame Diſcourſe aroſe again, and Captain Hill whiſpered me in the Ear, ſays he, I am reſolved to have the Blood of Mountford. I told him I did not think it fit for him to ſpeak ſo behind a Gentleman's Back, and to me, who was his Friend. I ſaid, I would acquaint Mr. Mountford what he ſaid, and I did not doubt but he would give him the Satisfaction of a Gentleman for any Injury he did him. I heard no further Diſcourſe at that time, nor do I know more of that Matter, till the Night that Mr. Mountford was wounded, when I ſaw him lying upon the Parlour Floor, and afterward ſaw him laid to Bed, and ſate up all Night with him, and about four a Clock in the Morning, I asked Mr. Mountford how the Thing happened. He told me Captain Hill killed him baſely; I asked him if his Sword was drawn; Yes, ſays he, but it was after I had received my Wound, for whilſt my Lord Mohun talked to me, Hill run me thro'.

Mr. Att. G. At that time, when thoſe Words were ſpoke at Supper, That he deſigned to be the Death of Mountford, was my Lord preſent?

Powell. Yes, my Lord Mohun was preſent, but he was talking to Colonel Tredenham.

Mr. Att. G. Did my Lord Mohun ſay any thing to what Hill ſaid?

Powell. I did not hear him make any Anſwer to it at all.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know any thing elſe in relation to this Fact?

Powell. Nothing elſe, but that Captain Hill did give a Letter to be delivered to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but I know not whether it was delivered or not, and he often told me, he would marry her with all his Heart.

Mr. Att. G. You ſay you had that Diſcourſe with Mountford, when he lay a dying?

Powell. It was about four a Clock, and he died about One.

Mr. Att. G. Was there any thing ſaid about my Lord Mohun at that time?

Powell. Nothing, but that my Lord Mohun was talking to him, whilſt the other run him thro'.

L. H. Stew. If I underſtand you aright, you ſay nothing againſt my Lord Mohun, but his being by one time at Supper when Hill ſaid ſome Words about Mountford; and then the other thing you ſay is, what Mountford told you after he was wounded, That my Lord was talking to him, when Hill gave him the Wound?

Powell. Yes, my Lord, That is all that I heard.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordſhip any thing to ſay to this Witneſs?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. The next Witneſs that we ſhall deſire to call is Mrs. Knight. (Who was ſworn.)

Mrs. Knight. I have nothing to ſay to my Lord Mohun; but what I have to ſay, is to Mr. Hill. About 4 Days before Mr. Mountford was killed, Mr. Hill came to me, and ſpoke to me about Mrs. Bracegirdle: He told me he was ſatisfied ſhe hated him. I told him I did not believe ſhe hated any Body, or loved any Body? Yes, he

he ſaid, ſhe did love ſome Body, but he had thought of a Way to be even with that Body. Upon the Wedneſday Night before Mr. Mountford was killed, he came to me as I was coming out of the dreſſing Room; ſaith he, Mrs. Knight, let me ſpeak a Word with you; ſays he, You are very great with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and I deſire you to be ſo kind, as to ſpeak to her for me, and I would beg of you, if you would give me leave, to give her this Letter from me: No, ſaid I, Mr. Hill, I beg your Pardon; you ſay ſhe hateth you, and if ſhe hateth you, ſhe will not love any Body that ſpeaketh for you; and I am not fond of creating myſelf Enemies in the Houſe, knowing I have ſome already. What Enemies, ſaith Mr. Hill, Mountford do you mean? And then repeating a great Oath, I ſhall find a Way with him ſpeedily.

L. H. Stew. A Way, with what?

Mrs. Knight. A Way with him ſpeedily; Hill ſaid it of Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. What do you call this Witneſs for, Mr. Attorney? what Uſe do you make of her Evidence againſt my Lord Mohun?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Uſe that we would make of theſe Witneſſes, is to give an Account of the whole Fact from the Beginning to the End, Hill's Malice, and what was the Occaſion of it, his Deſign in coming there that Night, and what he did, and to leave it to your Lordſhips, to judge what Influence this will have, how far it will affect my Lord Mohun. The next Witneſs is Mrs. Sandys.

L. H. Stew. What is this Woman's Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Elizabeth Sandys.

(She was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Sandys, give my Lords an Account, whether you were preſent with my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill at the Tavern that Day that Mr. Mountford was killed, and what paſſed there.

Sandys. I dined with my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, at the Three Tuns in Shandois-ſtreet, and there aroſe a Diſcourſe about Mrs. Bracegirdle and Hill, and my Lord Mohun asked me, If I thought Mountford had lay with her or no. I ſaid I could not tell; preſently after, ſays my Lord Mohun, It will coſt Hill 50 Guineas this Deſign. Saith Mr. Hill, if the Villain offers to reſiſt, I will ſtab him; ſaith my Lord Mohun, I will ſtand by my Friend. When this was done, Mr. Hill deſired Mr. Brough to borrow a Caſe of Piſtols of Captain Leiſter, and he ſaid, he would not borrow them himſelf, for he doubted, if he knew of the Deſign, he would not lend them. When that was done, Captain Hill told me, he had a Coach and ſix Horſes in Witch-Street, to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle, and carry her away into the Country; and my Lord Mohun ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend: And when my Lord Mohun went away, Hill ſaid to him, My Lord, if you be not there by ſix a Clock, I am ruined. Saith my Lord Mohun, upon my Word and Honour I will be at the Play-Houſe by Six.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to ſay to that Witneſs?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, I deſire to have her asked, Whether ſhe is a Maid, or a married Woman?

L. H. Stew. You hear the Queſtion; but I do not know what Uſe my Lord will make of it.

Mr. Att. G. You can eaſily anſwer, whether you are married or unmarried.

L. H. Stew. That Queſtion is very fair; Are you a married Woman or a ſingle Woman?

Sandys. I am a ſingle Woman, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Pray, Mrs. Sandys, repeat the Words that my Lord Mohun ſaid, when Hill ſaid, if the Villain reſiſted, he would ſtab him.

Sandys. My Lord Mohun ſaid nothing in the World, but that he would ſtand by his Friend.

L. H. Stew. Have you any further Queſtions, Mr. Attorney, to ask this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. G. I have nothing more to ask her, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you, my Lord Mohun; would you ask her any thing elſe?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then withdraw. (Which ſhe did.)

Mr. Att. G. The next Witneſs we call is Mr. Rogers. (Who was ſworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is this Witneſs's Name?

Mr. Att. G. Rogers, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What is his Chriſtian Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. John. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to remember, that the laſt Witneſs, Mrs. Sandys, ſaid, that Mr. Hill deſired my Lord Mohun, not to fail of being at the Play-Houſe by ſix a Clock, and that he was undone if he did not come; and my Lord promiſed upon his Word and Honour that he would come: Now we call this Witneſs to prove, that they met at the Play-Houſe according to the Appointment on the 9th of December.

Rogers. My Lord, all that I know of this Matter was, That my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill were at the Play-Houſe that Night, and that which made me take particular Notice of their being then at the Play-Houſe, though they had been frequently there before together, was, that Captain Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and my Lord Mohun had Captain Hill's Coat on.

Mr. Att. G. Did you obſerve any thing elſe, when they were at the Play-Houſe?

Rogers. Nothing but only ſome Words that paſſed between Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun, when I went to ask them for the Overplus of the Money for coming in, becauſe they came out of the Pit upon the Stage; he ſaid, he would not give it me, but if I brought any of our Maſters, he would ſlit their Noſes, or ſomething to that Effect.

Mr. Att. G. What were the Words he ſaid when you asked him for Money?

Rogers. I asked them for Money, that they ought to pay more than the reſt that were in the Pit, becauſe they came upon the Stage, and they would not give it me; but he ſaid, if I brought any of our Maſters, he would ſlit their Noſes, or cut their Faces, or to that Effect.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call another Witneſs then.

Mr. Att. G. My Lords, with your Lordſhips Favour, the next Witneſs that we ſhall call, is the Coachman, William Dixon. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Dixon, do you remember the Day when Mr. Mountford was killed?

Dixon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. G. Pray acquaint my Lords, what Perſons you carried in your Coach that Day; whether you carried my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, and to what Place, and where you waited for them.

Dixon. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, Captain

Hill and my Lord Mohun came in a Hackney Coach to my Gate, where I live, and I was juſt a going to ſet my Coaches into the Street for Hire: They bargain'd with me for ſix Horſes, and I was to have thirty Shillings to ſet them down at Totteridge, on this Side Barnet. I ask'd them, Whether they would have me bring all the ſix Horſes with the Coach. No, they ſaid, a Pair would ſerve to the Play-Houſe, and the other four ſhould ſtand at the Pound's End. So I went accordingly to the Place appointed, over againſt the Horſhoe Tavern in Drury-lane, and a Footman came, and Mr. Hill and he bid me drive down lower. So I drove to my Lord of Clare's Door, or thereabouts; and there was ſome Soldiers that would have had me go in, and ſmoke and drink with them: I told them, I did never ſmoak, and I did not care for drinking any thing at that time. With that, my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill came into the Coach, and, as they bid me, I carry'd them into Norfolk-ſtreet, below the Watch-houſe that ſtood there; they bid me turn about, and ſtand there; and then they went to the White-Horſe Tavern; ſo I did turn about, and ſtay'd as they bid me, and they tarried a pretty while before they came again, and then they bid me drive back to the Place from whence I came, ſo I drove into Drury-lane, and they bid me ſtop next to my Lord Craven's Houſe, this was about ten a Clock, and it being ſo late, I went Home, and ſent a Poſtilion down, to take care of the Coach, ſo that what paſſed afterwards, I cannot tell.

L. H. Stew. What Day or Night, was all this you ſpeak of?

Dixon. Truly my Lord, I cannot tell what Day it was, it was in December, as I take it, the 9*th*, and it was Friday I believe, I do not know juſtly.

L. H. Stew. Did you hear of the Death of Mr. Mountford?

Dixon. Yes, I did.

L. H. Stew. Was it the ſame Day that you heard Mr. Mountford was killed?

Dixon. No, I did not hear it till the next Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay, you went with my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill into Norfolk-ſtreet, and there you ſtayed for them, whilſt they went elſewhere?

Dixon. Yes, I did ſo.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know to what Houſes they went?

Dixon. They went to the White-Horſe Tavern, to the hithermoſt Houſe on this Side the Strand, and they went below to a Door on this Side of a Houſe that is not finiſhed yet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them uſe any Expreſſions there?

Dixon. I heard Hill ſay to my Lord Mohun, I think there is a Man and a Maid talking, it was at the Corner Houſe; ſaith Hill, We are betrayed, Damn me, ſaith he, my Lord, let us go and threſh him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they do then?

Dixon. I did ſee them do nothing.

Mr. Att. G. Whither did you carry them from thence?

Dixon To the Place from whence they came, in Drury-lane.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhip ſay any thing to this Man?

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, Whether he had not Orders to go out of Town with us, as ſoon as Mrs. Bracegirdle was put into the Coach.

Dixon. If it pleaſe you, Sir, I had Order thus, That when we were to go out of Town, I muſt drive down into the Strand, and then round about any way that was readieſt and cleareſt to get to the Pound; that Order I had, and no other Order I had.

L. H. Stew. Who is your next Witneſs?

Mr. Att. G. My Lords, the next Witneſs we ſhall call, will give you an Account what was done in Drury-lane, upon their endeavouring to carry her away, and for that we have here Mrs. Bracegirdle herſelf.

L. H. Stew What is this Gentlewoman's Name?

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Ann Bracegirdle.

(Then ſhe was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Bracegirdle, Pray give my Lords an Account of the Whole of your Knowledge of the Attempt that was made upon you in Drury-lane, and what followed upon it.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was in Prince's-ſtreet at Supper at Mr. Page's, and at ten a Clock at Night, Mr. Page went home with me; and coming down Drury-lane, there ſtood a Coach by my Lord Craven's Door, and the Boot of the Coach was down, and a great many Men ſtood by it; and juſt as I came to the Place where the Coach ſtood, two Soldiers came and pulled me from Mr. Page, and four or five more came up to them, and they knocked my Mother down almoſt, for my Mother and my Brother were with me. My Mother recovered, and came and hung about my Neck, ſo that they could not get me into the Coach, and Mr. Page went to call Company to reſcue me. Then Mr. Hill came with his Sword drawn, and ſtruck at Mr. Page and my Mother; and when they could not get me into the Coach, becauſe Company came in, he ſaid, he would ſee me home, and he led me by one Hand, and my Mother by the other. And when we came home, he pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and ſaid, Sir, I would ſpeak with you.

Mr. Att. G. Pray, Mrs. Bracegirdle, did you ſee any body in the Coach, when they pulled you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord Mohun was in the Coach; when they pulled me to the Coach, I ſaw my Lord Mohun in the Coach. And when we came Home, Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and he ſaid, He would ſpeak with him. As they led me along Drury-lane, my Lord Mohun came out of the Coach, and followed us, and all the Soldiers followed them; but they were diſmiſſed, and, as I ſaid, when we came to our Lodging, then Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and ſaid, He would ſpeak with him. Saith Mr. Page, Mr. Hill, another time will do, to Morrow will ſerve; with that, when I was within Doors, Mr. Page was pulled into the Houſe, and Mr. Hill walked up and down in the Street with his Sword drawn. He had his Sword drawn when he came along with me.

Mr. Att. G. Did you obſerve him to ſay any thing whilſt he was with you?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. As I was going down the Hill he ſaid, as he led me, He would be revenged.

Mr. Att. G. Did he ſay of whom he would be revenged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. He did not name of whom then, but when I was in the Houſe, ſeveral Perſons went to the Door, and afterwards Mrs.

Browne

Brown went to the Door, and spoke to them, and asked them, What they staid and walked there for? at last, they said, They staid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford; and then Mrs. Brown came in to me, and told me of it.

L. H. Stew. Who said that?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. G. Were my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill both together when that was said, that they staid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, they were. And when Mrs. Brown came in, and told me, I sent my Brother and the Maid, and all the People we could, out of the House to Mrs. Mountford, to desire her to send, if she knew where her Husband was, to tell him of it, and she did. And when they came in a Doors again, I went to the Door, and the Doors were shut, and I listened to hear if they were there still; and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were walking up and down the Street; and by and by, the Watch came up to them, and when the Watch came, they said, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn? Says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare.

L. H. Stew. Repeat that again, for I could not well hear you: Do you speak of what you heard from Mrs. Browne, or what you observed yourself?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was within Doors, but I was listening at the Door, and heard this my self; they came up to them, and said, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn?

L. H. Stew. Who asked that Question?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. The Watch; and says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare. Then the Watch left them, and they went away, and a little after, there was a Cry of Murder, and that is all that I know, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire this Witness may be asked, How long after this Passage that she speaketh of, was it that she heard Murder cried in the Street.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question, Mrs. Bracegirdle; What say you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I believe it was about a quarter of an Hour after, to the best of my Memory.

L. H. Stew. What do you mean, a quarter of an Hour after the Watch asked the Question?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord.

Then the Earl of Mulgrave stood up.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord I desire to ask this Witness a Question. If I heard her aright, I think she said, They threatned to be revenged of Mr. Mountford, I desire to know of her, whether my Lord Mohun did threaten him?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I do not know indeed; but when Mrs. Browne asked them, What they staid there for? They said, To be revenged of Mr. Mountford. I did not hear them my self, but Mrs. Browne came in and told me so.

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Bracegirdle, I think, If I did not mistake, you said, When the Watch came up they asked them, Why their Swords were drawn?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, and my Lord Mohun made Answer, He was a Peer of England, and bid them touch him if they durst, and they went away.

Mr. Att. G. My Lord, the next Witness that we call, shall be Mr. Gawen Page, at whose House Mrs. Bracegirdle supped that Night.

(He was sworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Page, I suppose you remember the Night, when Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at your House?

Mr. Page. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. I pray give an Account of your whole Knowledge about this Matter, what happen'd that Night.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the Ninth of December last going down Drury-lane, with Mrs. Bracegirdle, whom I led just against my Lord Craven's House ——

L. H. Stew. Pray, Sir, speak out, and tell us what time it was.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the Ninth of December last, going down Drury-lane, and leading Mrs. Bracegirdle, right against my Lord Craven's Door, stood a Coach, where two Soldiers pressed in between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, and parted us: I asked what that was for? But they took hold of Mrs. Bracegirdle, and immediately they would have forced her into the Coach; Captain Hill, whom I saw there with his Sword drawn, made several Blows at me.

L. H. Stew. Who would have forced her into the Coach?

Mr. Page. The Soldiers would.

Mr. Att. G. Pray go on, Sir, what follow'd after that?

Mr. Page. I say, Captain Hill made several Blows at me, and cry'd, You Villain, Stand. I received many of them upon my Cane, but there was none that hurt me; then I got Help, and they were prevented of carrying Mrs. Bracegirdle away. My Lord Mohun was in the Coach; I saw him in the Coach.

Mr. Att. G. Did you see any Arms in the Coach?

Mr. Page. I saw no Arms, but I saw a Bundle in the Coach, tho' I could not tell what it was; and there was one in the Coach, that I saw was my Lord Mohun. So when we had got Help, we went down the Lane to convey her Home, and Captain Hill was with us, and my Lord Mohun followed at a Distance. Captain Hill said to the Soldiers, Be gone, I have nothing more to do with you now. When we came to the House, and Mrs. Bracegirdle was entring in, Captain Hill pull'd me by the Sleeve, and said he would speak with me. Said I, To Night is not a fit time, to morrow is better, therefore pray stay till to morrow Morning. But said he, God damn me, you will not go home to Night.

L. H. Stew. You speak so low, that I cannot tell what you say; I did not hear that last that you said.

Mr. Page. My Lord, I say, when Captain Hill pull'd me by the Sleeve, and said he would speak with me, I told him that Night was not a fit time, to morrow would do better: Well, saith he, To morrow then; but, God damn me, you will not go out to Night: I went in a Doors, and there my Lord Mohun and he staid for an Hour and a half, as I was told; I saw them not my self: But Mrs. Browne came in and said, that they said they waited to be revenged.

Mr. Att. G. Whom did they mean, yourself that they would be revenged of?

Mr. Page. Mrs. Browne said, they waited for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you continue in that Houſe till after the Murder was committed?

Mr. Page. Yes, Sir, I did.

L. H. Stew. How long after you came into the Houſe was the Fact done?

Mr. Page. About an Hour and an half.

L. H. Stew. Did you yourſelf hear or obſerve any thing to be ſaid or done, from the time you came into the Houſe, to the time the Fact was committed?

Mr. Page. No, my Lord, I was in the Back-Room of the Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen, Pray, Mr. Page, did you ſee Mr. Mountford after he was wounded?

Mr. Page. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then give my Lords an Account of what paſſed at that Viſit.

Mr. Page. Upon the Out-cry of Murder, I came into the Street, where I found my Lord Mohun juſt ſurrendering himſelf to the Conſtable; and immediately I went to Mr. Mountford's Houſe, and I found him lying all along in his Blood upon the Floor; he ſeeing me, deſired me to lift him up, which I did, and thinking he had been dying, I ask'd him whether he knew me. He ſaid, Yes. Said I to him, Had you time to draw your Sword in your Defence? He ſaid, He was barbarouſly run through before he could draw it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to ſay, Sir?

Mr. Page. Yes.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd whether my Sword was drawn when I ſurrendred myſelf to the Conſtable.

Mr. Page. No, my Lord, your Sword was in the Scabbard when you ſurrendred yourſelf, but I cannot ſay whether your Sword was drawn before, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witneſs that we deſire to call, is Mrs. Page. (She was ſworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is the Name of this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Mary Page. Pray Mrs. Page, do you remember the Night when Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped at your Houſe, and Mr. Mountford was killed? Acquaint my Lords with all you did obſerve that Night.

Mrs. Page. Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped at my Lodging, and my Husband went home with her, and ſtaying ſomething longer than ordinary, I ſent my Servant to know what was the Reaſon of it: He brought me Word back, that my Husband had like to have been murdered, and Mrs. Bracegirdle carried away. With that I went down myſelf towards Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings, and there I found my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking, Mr. Hill with his Sword drawn, before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door; my Lord Mohun's not. So I went in, into the Houſe; and after I had ſtaid a while there, Mrs. Browne came out to them, and asked them, Why they ſtaid there? They made Anſwer, they ſtaid for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who made that Anſwer?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was with Mr. Hill at that time?

Mrs. Page. My Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any body beſides thoſe two that you obſerv'd?

Mrs. Page. No, there was no-body elſe that I ſaw.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were their Swords drawn?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill's then was, my Lord Mohun's at that preſent was not: But Mrs. Bracegirdle hearing that they waited for Mr. Mountford, deſired me to go over to Mrs. Mountford's Houſe, and ſpeak to her to ſend to her Husband, and deſire him to keep where he was, or come home with a good Guard. Whilſt I was telling Mrs. Mountford what I was deſired to tell her — But I ſhould have told your Lordſhips, that when I came out to go to Mrs. Mountford, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where they there when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings?

Mrs. Page. Yes, they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. And are you ſure, that at that time when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Houſe, my Lord Mohun had his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. I am ſure of it, that when I went out, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn; that was the ſecond time.

L. H. Steward. Out of whoſe Houſe was that you went?

Mrs. Page. Out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

L. H. Stew. Where were they when you ſaw his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. They were walking before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, from one End of the Street to the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Street is that?

Mrs. Page. Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray deſcribe to my Lords that Street.

Mrs. Page. They that ſtand in that Street, can ſee who goeth down to Mr. Mountford's Houſe, and who goeth up Surrey-ſtreet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, now go on.

Mrs. Page. Whilſt I was deſiring Mrs. Mountford to ſend away to her Husband, I heard Murder cried out; immediately I open'd Mr. Mountford's Door, and he came in, and fell with his Arms round about my Neck to ſupport himſelf, I ſuppoſe; and he ſaid, Hill had murder'd him. I help'd him as far as the Parlour-Door, and there down he fell. I went up the Street and called out Murder, and my Lord Mohun came to me, and bid me take notice, he had no Hand in the Murder, for his Sword was not drawn. I told him, I could not tell that, for to my Knowledge he had been in Mr. Hill's Company with his naked Sword juſt before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mrs. Browne.

L. H. Steward. You have nothing to ſay to that Witneſs, my Lord, have you?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to ſay, Mrs. Page?

Mrs. Page. After this, my Lord Mohun reſign'd himſelf up to the Conſtable; the Conſtable ſtanding by me, I bid him ſecure my Lord Mohun, which he did.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire to ask this Witneſs, whether I ſurrendred myſelf, or made Oppoſition, or offered to run away?

Mrs. Page. No, my Lord, the Conſtable laid hold on you.

L. H. Stew. What Anſwer do you make to my Lord's Queſtion?

Mrs. Page. I ſay, my Lord, the Conſtable laid hold upon my Lord Mohun.

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask her, whether I did not ſurrender myſelf?

Mrs. Page. Not till I had desired the Constable to secure your Lordship.

L. Mohun. Did I made any Opposition, or offer to run away?

Mrs. Page. No, for the Constable presently took hold of your Lordship.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether Hill run away.

Mrs. Page. That I know not; I suppose he was gone away out of the Street before I came forth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mrs. Browne.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Browne, you are upon your Oath, pray declare to my Lords what you know happen'd upon that Night that Mr. Mountford was kill'd.

Mrs. Browne. If it please your Lordships, when Mrs. Bracegirdle came Home, I found her crying; I asked her what was the Matter? She said, My Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, had run her into a Coach, with six or seven Soldiers, and lifted her into the Coach, and she said they were at the Door. Upon which, I went to the Door, and saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking along. Said I, are you the Gentlemen that have used Mrs. Bracegirdle in this Manner? my Lord Mohun answered; Madam, said he, I protected her; if it had not been for me, the Rabble would have torn her a Pieces; for if we had a mind to carry her away, we had six or seven Pistols charged in the Coach, and could easily have suppressed the Tumult.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear what the Witness saith, she speaketh so low.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun said, they had six or seven Pistols in the Coach, and could easily have suppressed the Rabble, if they would have carried her away; but he had no Design upon her for his own Part, but only to serve his Friend; and that Mr. Hill's Design was to take her out of Town, and keep her a Week, and see if he could persuade her to marry him; and saith Mr. Hill, I shall light on this Mountford. Why said I to him, What hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been abused, and I will be revenged.

L. H. Stew. That was Hill that said so.

Mrs. Browne. Yes. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what my Lord Mohun said to you about this Matter.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun said, he protected her, for if it had not been for him, the Mob had torn her in Pieces; but if they had a mind to carry her off, they could easily have suppressed the Mob, for they had six or seven Pistols in the Coach: But, saith my Lord, I had no Design upon her myself, but only to serve my Friend. So saith Mr. Hill, I shall light upon this Mountford. Why, said I, what hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been abused, and I will have my Revenge. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it. About half an Hour after, or more, Mr. Mountford came down, and when he came down, I saw him a little before he came to them, and went to him, and would have fain spoke to him, but he would not stay to let me speak what I had to say to him, but going on, presently he met my Lord Mohun. Saith he, Your humble Servant, my Lord. Saith my Lord again, Your Servant, Mr. Mountford. Saith my Lord, I have a great Respect for you, Mr. Mountford, and would have no Difference between us; but there is a Thing fallen out between Mr. Hill and Mrs. Bracegirdle. Saith Mr. Mountford, My Lord, has my Wife disobliged your Lordship? if she has, she shall ask your Pardon; but as for Mrs. Bracegirdle, she is no Concern of mine; and I hope your Lordship will not vindicate such an ill Man as Mr. Hill in such a Matter as this. Upon that I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, Mr. Mountford said, That I will; and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before he drew his Sword, or after, I cannot tell.

L. H. Stew. Speak that last again.

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford and my Lord met; saith Mr. Mountford, Your Servant, my Lord; saith my Lord, Your Servant Mr. Mountford, I have a great Respect for you, and would have no Difference be between us; but here has been a thing fallen out between Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Hill: Saith Mr. Mountford presently again, Has my Wife disobliged your Lordship? If she has, she shall ask your Pardon. But Mrs. Bracegirdle is no Concern of mine: I know nothing of this Matter, I come here by Accident.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who said they came there by Accident?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford said, I know nothing of this Matter, I come here by Accident. But, I hope your Lordship will not vindicate Hill in such Actions as these are: Upon that, I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw; Mr. Mountford said he won'd, and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before or after, I cannot tell; it was in the Night.

Then the Lord Godolphin stood up.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Godolphin.

L. Godolphin. My Lord Steward, I desire this Witness may be ask'd, Whether my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn when he talk'd with Mountford, because the Council opened it before, that the Watch came to them, and saw them with their Swords drawn when they were walking in the Street.

L. H. Stew. Mistress, you heard my Lord's Question: Was my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn whilst he talked with Mountford, or no?

Mrs. Browne. I do not remember I did see my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they near together?

Mrs. Browne. They were near together.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether I went up the Street to meet Mr. Mountford, or he came down to me?

L. H. Stew. You heard the Question, Mistress, what say you?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford came down to him.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she did not go to hinder Mr. Mountford from coming that way?

Mrs. Browne. Yes, I did go to speak to him, but he did not hear me speak, or did not hearken to me; I took him by the Hand, and told him I would speak with him, but he did not hear me, but went on.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not tell him upon what account you would have spoke with him?

Mrs. Browne. No, I had no time.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword was within his Arm, or by his Side.

Mrs. Browne. I believe it was by his Side.

L. Mohun.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked one Question more, whether he could not have went home, without coming to Mr. Hill and me?

Mrs. Browne. He did come out of his Way; his Way was not by my House; he did come down the Street towards them.

L. Mohun. I desire your Lordships to take notice, that he came out of his way to me. I desire to ask her: Did he come as if he was going to his own House, or yours?

Mrs. Browne. As if he was coming to mine.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, Whether I had any hand in killing Mr. Mountford, or went to hold him, or meddled with him?

Mrs. Browne. Not that I did see.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say to this Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor your Lordship?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Witness we desire to call, is Richard Row. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Richard Row, where do you live?

Row. In Surrey-Street.

L. H. Stew. Where doth he live, saith he?

Mr. Att. Gen. In Surrey-Street, my Lord. Pray how near is that to the Place where Mr. Mountford was kill'd?

Row. About ten or twelve Pole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill that Night, and where were they?

Row. All that I can say to the Matter in that Case is, I was in my own House about a quarter after Ten a Clock, and I heard a Noise in the Street, and I went out, and saw two Gentlemen and two Lads about the Middle of the Channel; one of the Lads had one of the Gentlemen by the Arm, just by the Channel, and said, Pray my Lord, good my Lord don't do it, alter your Resolution. There was an Answer made, that they would be revenged that Night, or To-morrow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know who the Boy was that used that Expression.

Row. No, my Lord, it was very dark.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you not know neither who returned the Answer?

Row. No indeed.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you are sure you heard those Words pass?

Row. Yes, indeed, and I went to the Door afterwards, whilst they went to the Upper-end of the Street and returned again; and I saw Capt. Hill's Boy following him. My Lord, I knew Capt. Hill, though he was not in the Cloaths he formerly used to come to my House in, and the Boy I knew to be his Boy.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were those Persons together that you heard speaking so?

Row. Yes, all four together, in a Confusion they seemed to be, for they were pushing to and again, and the Boy had hold of one of the Gentlemens Arms, when he bid him alter his Resolution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Repeat those Words again that you heard him say.

Row. Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordship any thing to ask this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Row. I spoke of this same afterwards, and so they have brought me here to give Evidence: This is all that I can say. I cannot swear to my Lord Mohun, that he was one, I do not know that ever I saw him to my Knowledge in my Life.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord Steward, I desire he may be asked, whether he knoweth who that Boy was that made that Answer.

Row. There was no Answer made by any Boy, but begging and praying, That my Lord would not do it.

E. of Mulgrave. Do you know who that Boy was?

Row. No, I do not know what Boy it was. But when I heard Mr. Mountford was killed, and my Lord Mohun was concerned, I told what I had heard and seen, and so they bring me here to evidence it. That is all I can say to the Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire next to call some of the Watch, and shall begin with Merry. (Who was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is his Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. William Merry. Mr. Merry, I think you are Beadle of the Parish.

Merry. Yes, I am.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what you observed that Night Mr. Mountford was killed, when you saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, the first time; and the second time, when my Lord Mohun was taken.

Merry. When I first came down the Street, walking the Rounds between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, as I turned at the Corner out of Surrey-Street into Howard-Street, I saw my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill walking, that is, upon the paved Stones; my Lord was walking towards me, and I asked, Who comes there? Saith my Lord, A Friend. Said I, What is the meaning of your Swords being drawn? Return your Swords, and stand off. With that, he returned his Sword immediately. Saith he, I am a Peer of the Land; here, will you have my Sword? and he proffered me his Sword; but the Constable was not there then, and I did not take his Sword; but, said I, God bless your Honour, my Lord, I know not what you are, but I hope you are doing no Harm; No, saith he. With that, the Constable came immediately, and he proffered the same to him; there were two Candles in some Maids or Womens Hands at a Door hard by, and I went to ask them if they knew the Meaning of it; and there being a Neighbour's Man leaning with a Bottle and a Glass against the Wall, whom I knew. I think they told me one of them had a Sweet-heart there; and my Lord said, he was drinking a Lady's Health, and as soon as his Bottle was out, he would be gone. That is all I heard of the Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Hill there?

Merry. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was his Sword drawn?

Merry. Yes, his Sword was drawn, and I asked what made that Gentleman with his Sword drawn? and my Lord Mohun said, he had lost his Scabbard; but seeing this Neighbour's Man stand there, I went to the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were both their Swords drawn at first?

Merry. Both their Swords were drawn when I came first into the Street; but my Lord put up his Sword, and the other continued drawn, by reason, as they said, he had lost his Scabbard. And so seeing, as I said, my Neighbour's Man standing there, we went to that House to enquire if they knew what their Business was; we were not got into the Houſe, I am ſure not a Stone's caſt within the Houſe, but Murder was cried out, and we came back again, and my Maſter being nimbler of Foot than I, becauſe he was a younger Man, came firſt into the Place, and ſeized my Lord before I came; how the Seizing was I do not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is Thomas Fennell. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Fennell, you was one of the Watch that Night when Mr. Mountford was killed.

Fennell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lords an Account what you obſerved that Night, in relation to my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill.

Fennell. The Conſtable and his Watch going the Rounds, divided themſelves into two Parts; I went down Surrey-Street with one Party; the Conſtable he went down Strand-Lane with the other Party. We were four or five that came down Surrey-Street, and when we came down, my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill's Swords were both drawn; my Lord Mohun put up his Sword juſt as we came down.

L. H. Stew. Speak out Man, that my Lords may all hear you.

Fennell. I ſay, the Conſtable and his Party went down Strand-Lane, and another Party down Surrey-Street, four or five of us, and my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill had both their Swords drawn: When we came down, my Lord put up his Sword juſt as we came down, but the Conſtable not being come, I went and called him.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay both their Swords were drawn when you came down?

Fennell. Yes, but my Lord put up his Sword juſt as we came down.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time of Night was that?

Fennell. It was between Eleven and Twelve.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long before the Murder was committed?

Fennell. A quarter of an Hour.

L. H. Stew. Do you not ſay, they put up their Swords as ſoon as you came down?

Fennell. My Lord Mohun put up his Sword, but Hill ſaid he had never a Scabbard.

M. Att. Gen. Did you ask them why they had their Swords drawn at that time of Night?

Fennell. No, I went to call the Conſtable.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask of this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. I have not, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor you, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Pray go on then; whom do you produce next?

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is James Baſſit. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you one of the Watch that Night Mr. Mountford was killed?

Baſſit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill that Night?

Baſſit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Acquaint my Lords where it was, and in what manner you found them.

Baſſit. In Howard-Street; I came along with the Conſtable, and I walked before them that went down Surrey-Street with my Lanthorn, and there was my Lord Mohun with his Sword drawn, and Captain Hill with his the like: We asked them what they did there? They ſaid they were drinking of a Bottle of Wine: Hill ſaid to me, You may knock me down if you pleaſe: Nay, ſaid I, we never uſe to knock any Gentlemen down, unleſs there be Occaſion; and then we went into Norfolk-Street to the Tavern to examine what they were, and what they were doing; and in the mean time the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not ask them why their Swords were drawn?

Baſſit. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they ſay?

Baſſit. Hill made Anſwer, that he had loſt his Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What ſaid my Lord Mohun?

Baſſit. My Lord Mohun had put up his Sword by that time we came up to him: That is all I can ſay to it.

L. H. Stew. If you have nothing more to ask him, call another.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked whether he came with the Conſtable when I ſurrendred myſelf?

Baſſit. Yes, and I took hold of your Sleeve, and you ſhook, and quak'd, and trembled, as if you would tear it to pieces.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether my Sword was in the Scabbard when I ſurrendred myſelf?

Baſſit. Yes, it was, he ſurrendred it.

L. H. Stew. That was after the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. With your Lordſhip's Favour, I deſire he may anſwer my Lord Mohun's firſt Queſtion again, ſo as to be heard by your Lordſhips: What was that you were ſaying when my Lord ſurrendred himſelf?

Baſſit. I took him by the Arm when he ſurrendred himſelf up.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then?

Baſſit. Then he quaked, and I had him to the Round-Houſe.

L. H. Stew. Hear my Queſtion; You ſay you took him by the Sleeve, when he ſurrendred himſelf; what do you mean by that? is it that he had ſurrendred himſelf before you laid hold on him, or afterwards?

Baſſit. I took hold of his Arm, when he ſurrendred himſelf.

L. H. Stew. But was it before he ſurrendred himſelf to the Conſtable?

Baſſit. No, it was afterwards, my Lord; to have him away.

L. H. Stew. Then you did ſee him ſurrender himſelf to the Conſtable?

Baſſit. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Charles Knowles; But he did not appear.

L. H. Stew. Whom do you call next, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we call'd Mr. Charles Knowles; but they ſay, he is not come; therefore, with your Lordſhips Favour, we will call Mrs. Brewer. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Brewer, I think, you live at the next Door to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I do ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an Account what you ſaw and heard that Night Mr. Mountford was kill'd.

Mrs. Brewer. I was at Mrs. Bracegirdle's Houſe, and I went to the Door with them; and juſt as I went to the Door, my Lord Mohun came up to me; juſt as he came to the Door, Mr. Mount-

Mountford came down the Street, and my Lord went to him, and imbraced him, and ſaid, Mr. Mountford, Your humble Servant, I am glad to ſee you. Who is this, ſaid Mr. Mountford, my Lord Mohun? Yes, ſaid my Lord. What makes your Lordſhip here at this time a Night, ſaith Mr. Mountford? Saith my Lord again, I ſuppoſe, Mr. Mountford, you was ſent for. Sent for, for what, ſaith he? You have heard of the Buſineſs of Mrs. Bracegirdle, I ſuppoſe, ſaith my Lord: No, my Lord, ſaith he, I come by Chance.

Mr. Att. G. Who ſaid that?

Mrs. Brewer. Mr. Mountford, Sir.

Mr. Att. G. Well, go on, and ſpeak aloud.

Mrs. Brewer. My Lord, Mr. Mountford. — And there ſhe heſitated, and ſeemed to be in a Confuſion.

Mr. Att. G. She is not uſed to ſuch publick Examinations: If your Lordſhips will pleaſe to allow her to begin, becauſe ſhe is in ſome Confuſion, ſhe will be the better able to give you what Account ſhe can of this Matter.

L. H. Stew. Let her recollect herſelf, and begin again.

Mrs. Brewer. When Mr. Mountford came down the Street, I ſtood at the Door, and my Lord Mohun was come to the Door, and my Lord Mohun went to him and ſaid, Mr. Mountford, your humble Servant, I am glad to ſee you, and embraced him. Saith Mr. Mountford, Who is this, my Lord Mohun? Yes, ſaith he, it is. What maketh your Lordſhip here at this time of Night? ſaith my Lord Mohun, I ſuppoſe you are ſent for, Mr. Mountford. No indeed, ſaid he, I came by Chance. Saith my Lord, You have heard of the Buſineſs of Mrs. Bracegirdle. With that, after he had ſaid this, Mr. Hill cometh up, and ſaith, Pray, my Lord, hold your Tongue, this is not a convenient Time to diſcourſe this Buſineſs, and would have drawn my Lord away. Saith Mr. Mountford, I am very ſorry my Lord, to ſee that your Lordſhip ſhould aſſiſt Capt. Hill in ſo ill an Action as this; pray let me deſire your Lordſhip to forbear. Upon this, as ſoon as he had ſaid ſo, Mr. Hill came up and ſtruck Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear. Saith Mr. Mountford, Damme, what's that for? And with that, he whipped out his Sword, and made a Paſs at him, and I turned about and cry'd out Murder, Murder.

Mr. Att. G. But you ſay, you ſaw Hill draw his Sword, and make a Paſs at him?

Mrs. Brewer. No, his Sword was drawn before; but he, immediately after the Box on the Ear, made a Paſs at him, and I turned about and cry'd Murder.

Mr. Att. G. Had Mr. Mountford his Sword drawn at that Time?

Mrs. Brewer. No, he had not.

Mr. Att. G. Are you ſure he had not?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I am ſure he had not, for as ſoon as he ſtruck the Blow, he made a Paſs at him.

Mr. Att. G. Was my Lord preſent at that Time?

Mrs. Brewer. He ſtood juſt by on the Right-hand.

Mr. Att. G. How near to them?

Mrs. Brewer. They were all cloſe together, as well as I could diſcern.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, have you any mind to ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with her?

Mr. Att. G. Yes, my Lord. The next Witneſs we deſire to call is Mr. Davenport, the Conſtable. (Who was ſworn.)

L. H. Stew. Well, what ſaith this Man?

Davenport. The Ninth of December laſt at Night, as I was walking my Rounds between eleven and twelve a Clock, I divided my Watch into two Parts, one was to go down one Street, and the other another, and coming into Howard-ſtreet, my Beadle happened to be there before me, and he had ſpied them, as he told me, with their Swords drawn: As ſoon as I came up, my Lord Mohun very civilly (his Sword not being then drawn) proffered to ſurrender his Sword to me, and ſaid, he was a Peer of the Realm. I asked the other Man what he did with his Sword drawn? and he made anſwer, he had loſt his Scabbard in Drury-lane. With that I found them very civil, and I heard ſome Women at the Door, and they ſaid, they were Serenading them with a Bottle of Wine. There was a Drawer there that I knew, who formerly lived over-againſt me, and then lived at the White-horſe Tavern; ſo I left them (finding them very civil) and went to the White-horſe Tavern to examine what the Buſineſs was; they told me, they were there a drinking, and before I had ſpoken three Words almoſt to the Man of the Houſe, the Watch was called, and when we came, Mr. Hill had made his Eſcape, and ſo I ſecured my Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. G. What was the Occaſion of calling the Watch?

Davenport. They cryed out Murder in the Street; So I took my Lord Mohun, and carry'd him to the Round-houſe, where we kept him all Night.

M. Att. G. I think you ſay, when you firſt came my Lord Mohun's Sword was not drawn.

Mr. Davenport. It was put up then, but the Beadle ſaid they were both drawn before.

Mr. Att. G. You did not ſee them ſo ſoon as your Beadle?

Davenport. No, he was there before me.

Mr. Att. G. Then acquaint my Lord what was done, after you had ſecured my Lord Mohun.

Davenport. After I had taken him, I carried him to the Round-houſe, and when we came there, he asked me, If Hill was taken? I ſaid no; and ſaid I, My Lord, this is a bad Misfortune you are happen'd into; and he ſaid, God Damn me, I am glad he is not taken, but I am ſorry he has no more Money about him; I wiſh he had ſome of mine; and, I do not care a Farthing if I am hang'd for him.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked whether I offered to fly.

Davenport. No, my Lord, I do not ſay you did, but you know, my Lord, you ſaid this to me.

L. H. Stew. But, Mr. Davenport, did not my Lord ſurrender himſelf to you?

Davenport. Yes, my Lord, mighty civilly.

Mr. Att. G. Did my Lord ſay any thing to you about changing of Coats?

Davenport. He ſaid, they had changed Coats three or four ſeveral times that Day, and at the ſame time he had Hill's Coat upon his Back; and I asked him, If he knew where Hill's Lodging was? and he told me; and I went to his Lodging with my Watch; and when we came there, we ſearched the Houſe, but did not find him there; but Captain Hill's Boy came in whilſt we were there; ſo with that, I ſecured the Boy, and ſearched

ſearched him, and found Gunpowder and Ball about him; and I have Hill's Sword in the Court, and Mr. Mountford's, and my Lord's.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether Mountford's Sword was not broke in the Street, or whether he carried it away.

Davenport. I took up a Piece myſelf, and a Servant Maid took up another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword, when it was found, was in the Scabbard or not?

Davenport. No, it was not; I ſaw no Scabbard.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, you ask the Queſtions ſo faſt, that we do not hear the Anſwers. Was not your firſt Queſtion, whether Mountford's Sword was not broken?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What Anſwer giveth he to that?

Davenport. I do not know when it was broken; but by the Report of People that were there by, it was ſaid, Mr. Mountford made a Paſs, and at the firſt Paſs, his Sword was broken? and I went with a Lanthorn, and according as they ſaid, I found a Piece of a Sword, and I took it up myſelf.

L. H. Stew. What is your next Queſtion, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask him in what Part of the Street he found the Piece of the broken Sword.

L. H. Stew. You heard the Queſtion, what ſay you?

Davenport. It was in the Highway in the Street.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, what do you mean by that Queſtion?

L. Mohun. Whether it was in the Middle of the Street towards Surrey-Street or Norfolk-Street, or near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, or upon the Pavement?

Davenport. It was over againſt the Door where you ſtood.

L. Mohun. How far might it be from where I ſtood? I deſire he may be asked that.

L. H. Stew. You hear my Lord's Queſtion, anſwer it.

Davenport. He was walking up and down when I came to take him; and I took the Piece of the Sword up in the Highway; he was walking on the Pavement, the broad Stones.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with that Witneſs?

Mr. Att. G. Yes, my Lord. Is Mr. Charles Knowles come? (He did not appear.)

Mr. Att. G. Then we deſire to call Mr. Bancroft the Chyrurgeon, and Mr. Hunt.

L. H. Stew. Who do you examine firſt?

Mr. Att. G. We begin with Mr. Bancroft.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. G. You attended upon Mr. Mountford, Mr. Bancroft, when he was wounded?

Bancroft. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Pray acquaint my Lords what you know of this Matter.

Bancroft. My Lord, upon the ninth of December laſt at Night, between the Hours of twelve and one, I was knocked up to go to Mr. Mountford, whoſe Servant came for me, and told me, he was a dying of a Wound he had received. So I came to his Houſe, and found him very deſperately wounded; it went in and out by his Back-Bone, behind his left Side. I told him what he muſt expect, that he was a dead Man. I attended him that Night, till about four a Clock in the Morning, and then I took my Leave of him, and went home: About eight a Clock in the Morning I came thither again, and met Mr. Hobbs there, and he was of the ſame Opinion. He lived till about one, and then he died.

Mr. Att. G. What Diſcourſe had you with Mr. Mountford?

Mr. Bancroft. About ten a Clock I was ſent for by the Conſtable to come to Hicks's-Hall, to be examined there before the Juſtices; and being then with Mr. Mountford, and ſome Company being there, Mr. Powell (as I take it) was one; I ſaid to Mr. Mountford, I ſuppoſe where I am going, I ſhall be asked ſome Queſtions about what you may have ſaid to me, you are now upon the Brink of Eternity, and pray anſwer me truly, who gave you this Wound, was it Mr. Hill, or my Lord Mohun? Said he, My Lord Mohun offered me no Violence, but whilſt I was talking with my Lord Mohun, Hill ſtruck me with his left Hand, and with his right Hand run me through before I could put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. G. Did he tell you his Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. He did not ſay, it was or not, but that Hill ſtruck him with his left Hand, and, at the ſame Time, run him through with his Right, before he could put his Hand to his Sword.

Mr. Att. G. Did he tell you my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. The Words were theſe, as near as I remember, My Lord Mohun offer'd me no Violence, but whilſt I was talking with him, Hill, with his Left-Hand, ſtruck me, and with his Right run me through, before I had time to put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. G. Did he tell you he had his Sword drawn at all afterwards?

Bancroft. No, not a Word of that, that I heard.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to ſay to him?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

(Then Mr. William Hunt was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Hunt, you have heard what Mr. Bancroft was examined to, do you give an Account what you know in relation to this Buſineſs.

Hunt. I was ſent for to Mr. Mountford when he lay very ill; and I then asked him the Manner of his being hurt, he ſaid, My Lord Mohun ſpoke to me, but Hill run me through before my Sword was drawn. I asked him, Whether he had time to draw his Sword? And he ſaid, Hill was in me, and was through me, before my Sword was out; and this he repeated again about twelve a Clock, about half an Hour before he died the next Day.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any thing elſe, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. G. We ſhall ask him no more Queſtions, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Att. G. My Lord, I do not hear that Mr. Knowles is come yet; and if he be not come, we have no more Witneſſes to examine; if he does come, we muſt beg Leave that we may examine him.

L. H. Stew. You know that the Court cannot ſtay; for after you have done on both Sides, my Lords are to withdraw, and we are not to ſit here in Expectation of your Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not expect that; if my Lord Mohun pleaſe to examine any Witneſſes on his Part, and it happen that the Witneſs ſhould come before my Lord has made an End, we hope your Lordſhips will favour us ſo far, as that we may examine him.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, if you have any Witneſſes to be examined, now is your time to call them.

L. Mohun. I deſire firſt, Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy may be called.

L. H. Stew. Name him. (He came to the Bar.)

L. Mohun. My Lords, if you pleaſe, I deſire Mr. Brereton may be called firſt, becauſe I would prove to your Lordſhips, and ſhew you I had no Malice to Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. I thought you had called that Boy firſt.

L. Mohun. That was a Miſtake, my Lord, this Gentleman Mr. Brereton, I deſire may be firſt examined.

Mr. Brereton. My Lord, I know nothing as to this Matter of Fact, for I had not ſeen my Lord Mohun of two or three Days before.

L. H. Stew. What do you examine this Witneſs to, my Lord?

L. Mohun. To ſhew that I had no Malice againſt Mr. Mountford, but ſpoke kindly of him ſeveral times.

Mr. Brereton. I had not ſeen my Lord Mohun for two or three Days before this Fact was committed, and therefore can give no Account of what happened then; but the Friday before, the Play of Alexander the Great was acted, and my Lord Mohun and I were at the Play-houſe, and he and I went to Supper together, and we were talking of the Play, and he ſaid it was a good Play, and commended ſeveral Parts in it, and particularly the Acting; and he commended Mr. Mountford's Acting extreamly: I ſaid, I thought he never acted ſo well in his Life before; but my Lord ſpoke particularly very kind Things of Mr. Mountford, that he thought him a very good Actor. I anſwered, as to Comedy he did uſe to act very well, but I thought he would never make ſo good a Tragedian as Mr. Betterton, or ſome others. But my Lord before this, had uſed to commend Mr. Mountford and ſpeak kindly of him: And he ſaid, that ſeveral of the Players had been very rude to him, more than their Buſineſs did require of them; but Mr. Mountford had been more civil than any of the reſt. Upon this, my Lord Mohun was pleaſed to ask me, Whether I was acquainted with Mr. Mountford? I told him, I never was in his Company but once with Mr. Bludworth. Saith, my Lord, I have a great mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Said I, I do not think him worth your Acquaintance, but you may do what you will. Several Things more my Lord ſaid, and ſpoke more kindly of him than of any of the reſt of the Players; but there was no Time fix'd for drinking with him. Upon Tueſday after my Lord Mohun came to my Lodgings, and told me, Mr. Mountford had been very civil to him the Night before at the Play-houſe, when the reſt were very rude to him; and he had a mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Saith he, I am going about ſome Buſineſs to Kenſington, but within a Day or two you ſhall certainly hear of me, and we will fix a Time for it, and if I do not like his Company, I will never trouble you, nor myſelf more with it.

L. H. Stew. When was this, Sir?

Brereton. This was the Tueſday before; the firſt Diſcourſe was upon the Friday before.

(Then the Boy was examined.)

L. Mohun. Was you along with me and Mr. Hill, that Night Mr. Mountford was killed?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, you muſt propoſe your Queſtions to me, and I will ask them.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire to know what the Boy's Name is, and who he is?

L. Mohun. His Name is Thomas Lake, and he was Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if he was with Mr. Hill and me that Night that Mr. Mountford was killed.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Queſtion; what ſay you to it?

Boy. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear you what you ſay.

Boy. I was with them, my Lord, and all I heard was, they had a Deſign to take away the Woman, Mrs. Bracegirdle, and they had provided Night-Cloaths and a Coach for her, to go to Totteridge, which was the Place where they deſigned to carry her.

L. H. S. I do not hear one Word this Boy ſaith.

L. Mohun. My Lord, ſhall I repeat to your Lordſhip what the Boy ſaith?

Lords. No, no, no.

L. H. Stew. No, my Lord, you are not to repeat what your own Witneſs ſaith.

Boy. They had a Deſign to carry away the Woman Mrs. Bracegirdle.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one Word. That Boy can ſpeak out, if he pleaſeth; I warrant him, he would make Noiſe enough if he was in another Place. Speak out, that my Lords may all hear you.

Boy. I cannot ſpeak any louder than I do; I ſay, they had a Deſign to carry away the Woman.

L. H. Stew. I may as well be at the other End of the Town, as in this Place, as for hearing what he ſaith. Some-body ſhould repeat what he ſaith.

L. Mohun. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to allow it, that one of the Officers of the Court may come down to the Bar, and repeat from his Mouth to the Court what he ſaith.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Walker, Then do you go and ſtand by him, and tell us what he ſaith.

Mr. Walker the Clerk went and ſtood by the Boy at the Bar, and repeated his Evidence aloud.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, he ſaith, they had a Deſign to take away the Woman, and they had Night Cloaths in the Coach for the Woman to put on, and they enquired at the Woman's Lodging where ſhe was, and there they were told, that ſhe was at Mr. Page's at Supper, and her Brother came to the Horſe-ſhoe Tavern and drank with them, and he was to go to tell them when ſhe came out, and which way ſhe was to go Home; and there was a Man that was to give Notice, and they went down before her, and the Coach ſtood almoſt at the lower end of Drury lane, where there were ſome Soldiers to put

put her in, and the Soldiers went and took hold of her.

L. H. Stew. Is this my Lord Mohun's Witneſs?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord; and he ſaith, when they went to take hold of her to put her in, Mr. Page ſtruggled with them, and would not let them, and ſhe cried out, and was very much troubled at it.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether he was in Howard-ſtreet when Mr. Mountford was wounded, and what paſſed in Howard-ſtreet before Mr. Mountford was wounded?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, he was in Howard-ſtreet, and ſaw Mr. Mountford come down in Norfolk-ſtreet towards them, and turn into Howard-ſtreet, but out of his way to his own Houſe; He ſaith, he came down, and there met my Lord Mohun and his Maſter, Mr. Mountford did; and he came to my Lord Mohun, and bowed to him, and ſaid, He had a Kindneſs for his Lordſhip. And my Lord Mohun reply'd, He had a Kindneſs for him. My Lord Mohun ſaid to him, He hoped he was not come to vindicate any thing of Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Mountford ſaid Not, and asked if his Wife had done any thing to him, and ſaid, He was very ſorry his Lordſhip ſhould have any thing to do to vindicate Mr. Hill in ſuch Rudeneſs. He ſaith, Captain Hill was at the lower end of the Street, and Captain Hill heard him ſay ſo, and came up and ſaid to him, Mr. Mountford, if you have any thing to ſay to me, I can vindicate my ſelf, and pray now draw; and he went into the Street, and Mr. Mountford drew and met him, and made three or four Paſſes, and in the Paſſes, the Sword was broke. He cannot tell which Sword it was that was broke, he ſuppoſeth it hit againſt the Hilt, and ſnapped in two.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, where I was when they fought?

Mr. Walker. My Lord ſtood upon the flat Stones, he ſaith, by the Houſe Side all the while, and they were in the Middle of the Street.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether Mr. Mountford had his Sword by his Side, and where it was, and whether I meddled with him?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith my Lord Mohun did not meddle with him, but ſtood upon the flat Stones, nor did offer to draw his Sword, and when Mr. Mountford came down, he carried his Sword in his Hand.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd, Whether Mr. Hill did not ſtay in the Street to ask Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith he deſired to ſee Mrs. Bracegirdle, and to beg her Pardon, and as ſoon as he had ſeen her, he would be gone.

L. H. Stew. How can he tell that? Where was he?

Mr. Walker. He was juſt by my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill in the Street, and Mr. Hill ſaid, He would but ſtay and beg Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon for what he had done, and he would go Home.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, Whether I offered to fly when his Maſter went away?

L. H. Stew. What is it you ask, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Whether I offered to run away, or make my Eſcape?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, my Lord did not offer to run away, but ſtood ſtill and ſaid he had done no Hurt, nor drawn his Sword.

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask him, Whether I could not have run away as well as Mr. Hill, if I had had a mind?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, He might have run away as well as his Maſter Mr. Hill, but he ſtood ſtill a great while, till the Watch came and took him, and he gave himſelf up.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before the Boy goeth away, I deſire to know of him whether he has not been already examined upon his Oath elſewhere?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, he was examined at Hicks's-Hall, and was kept in Priſon two Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you examined before the Coroner?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, He was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which was the firſt Place he was examined at?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith he was examined at Hicks's-Hall firſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he was examined before the Coroner, did he give the ſame Evidence as he does now?

Mr. Walker. He gave the ſame Evidence before the Coroner that he doth now, as near as he can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you did make Oath before the Coroner, was it read to you what you ſwore?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, his Evidence was not read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſubſcribe the Evidence you gave before the Coroner yourſelf?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you write your Name yourſelf?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he ſaith.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not know what it was you ſubſcribed your Name to?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, It was not read to him afterwards, he knoweth what it was he gave in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you ſure it was not read to you?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, He is ſure it was not read to him.

L. H. Stew. Was it not read to him before he ſubſcribed it?

Mr. Att. Gen. That I did ask him, my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He doth not remember that it was read to him at all.

L. H. Stew. Can he read himſelf?

Mr. Att. Gen. He writes a very good Hand, my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, They bid him put his Hand to it; and as ſoon as he had put his Hand to it, they put him out, and bid him call another Woman.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would have him conſider of it, before he makes Anſwer; becauſe there are ſeveral Perſons preſent here, who were preſent when it was read to him before he ſubſcribed it.

Mr. Walker. He cannot remember that it was read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember you ſwore at that Time, That when Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill were puſhing at one another, my Lord Mohun ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, my Lord ſaid, He would not go, he would ſtay by his Friend, for Mr. Hill was his Friend.

E. of Carliſle. My Lord Steward.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Carliſle.

E. of Carliſle. I deſire that he may be asked, Whether he was the Boy that ſaid to my Lord Mohun, Pray, my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Reſolution.

L. H. Stew. Call the Boy again (which was done); Was you by when thoſe Words were ſpoken; Pray, my Lord, will you repeat your own Queſtion?

E. of Carliſle. Whether he was the Boy that ſaid to my Lord Mohun, Pray, my Lord, good, my Lord, do not do it, alter your Reſolution, or defer it to another Day?

Boy. No, my Lord, I did not hear him.

L. H. Stew. Did not you ſay ſo your ſelf?

Boy. I ſaid no ſuch thing, nor heard no ſuch thing ſaid by any body.

L. H. Stew. Do you bring any more Witneſſes, my Lord.

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, Mrs. Elizabeth Walker, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

Elizabeth Walker. Here, my Lord, I am ſhe.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before my Lord Mohun proceedeth to examine any other Witneſs, I have one thing humbly to offer to your Lordſhips.

[Then Proclamation was made for Silence.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Of what Conſequence it will be to my Lord Mohun, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips when you have heard it; that is, whether it may not be proper now ſince this Boy has given an Evidence, ſo very different from what he gave upon his Oath before the Coroner, to have his Depoſition that he made before the Coroner, read in his Preſence.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I think I ought to conclude, and give all my own Evidence before Mr. Attorney maketh his Remarks.

L. H. Stew. Then reſerve that till the laſt, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord is certainly in the right of it, there ought to be no Obſervations made upon his Evidence, and we ſhall be ſure to keep exactly to the uſual Method in this Matter; but I take it to be the Courſe of Evidence, where there is an Objection to what the Witneſs delivers now, which does ariſe from what the ſame Witneſs has ſworn before, it is proper to make the Objection, as ſoon as he has delivered ſuch Evidence, whilſt the Matter is freſh in your Lordſhips Memories.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, let the Boy ſtay, he ſhall be called upon afterwards; but let my Lord go on now with the reſt of his Witneſſes.

L. Mohun. Here is Elizabeth Walker, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What is that Woman's Name?

L. Mohun. Elizabeth Walker; did you live with Mrs. Bracegirdle?

Elizabeth Walker. Yes, I did my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Perſon has conceal'd her ſelf, we have been endeavouring to find her out all this while, but could not.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, Whether ſhe lived with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and what ſhe ſaw and obſerved that Night Mr. Mountford was killed.

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, I lived then with her.

L. H. Stew. I cannot hear what ſhe ſaid; Mr. Walker, I think you muſt go thither again; ſpeak out, Woman.

El. Walker. I was her Servant at that time, when Mr. Mountford was killed. And, may it pleaſe you, my Lord, that Night, old Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter, were invited to Supper at one Mrs. Page's in Drury-lane, and coming Home about Ten or Eleven a Clock out of Drury-lane, my Miſtreſs deſired me to go to Mr. Mountford, to ſee if Mr. Mountford was come home. I went, and they ſaid, He was not come home: She deſired me then to go again, and tell Mrs. Mountford, that if he was not come home, ſhe ſhould ſend to ſee where he was, and deſire he would not come home without a good Guard, for my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill were walking about the Street, and ſhe did not know their Deſign, by reaſon Mr. Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand, out of the Scabbord. I asked the Reaſon why he had his Sword drawn, and the Anſwer was made; He had loſt the Scabbord in a Skirmiſh in Drury-lane; but that I know nothing of. Mrs. Mountford ſaid, She would ſend her Maid to ſee where her Husband was, and I told her, if my Miſtreſs would give me leave, I would go along with her, to bear her Company. And when I returned to my Miſtreſs, ſhe did give me leave, and I went along with her to ſeveral Places; but we could not find Mr. Mountford; ſo coming home, I went to my Miſtreſs, and I ſaw them two ſtand at the Door, and they ſtaid there above an Hour, and in the mean time our Landlady, Mrs. Browne, heard the Watch come into the Street, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would go to the Door, and bid the Watch ſeize them; and ſhe did go out, and I was kept within Doors, and heard her talk to the Watch, but what ſhe ſaid, I cannot tell; but preſently the Watch went away and left them. And I ſtood at the Door, and heard Mrs. Browne ſay, There cometh Mr. Mountford, and ſhe would go ſpeak with him; and with that, ſhe went as faſt as ſhe could to meet him, and came to him a good way before he came down to them, and took him by the Arm thus, to ſtay him, and ſhe ſaid, Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun was walking in the Street, and Captain Hill had his Sword in his Hand drawn, and ſhe did not know what their Deſign was.

L. H. Stew. Indeed ſhe muſt ſpeak louder, or I cannot tell what ſhe ſaith.

El. Walker. My Lord, I ſay Mrs. Browne when I was at the Door, ſaid, Yonder cometh Mr. Mountford, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would go and meet him, and away ſhe went as faſt as ſhe could towards him; and when ſhe came up to him, ſhe took him by the Arm thus, and deſired him that he would not come down that Street, but go to his own Houſe, for there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun walking in the Street, and ſhe did not know what their Deſign was, but Captain Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, Mr. Mountford did not anſwer her a Word; but preſſed forward to meet my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, they met one another, and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Mountford complimented one another very lovingly, and ſaid, They were glad to ſee one another; and Mr. Mountford ſaid to my Lord, He had a great Reſpect for his Lordſhip, and my Lord replied to him again, By my Honour, I have the like for you, Mr. Mountford, and with that, they embraced one another. I am ſure this is Truth, for I followed Mrs. Browne out, and ſtood by when it was done. Mr. Mountford told my Lord, it was a Dishonour to him to keep Company with Captain Hill. I will not take my Oath that Captain Hill did hear him say so, but he might have heard him, and it may be he did too; and that might occasion the Quarrel; but I will not take my Oath of that: It came just in my Head after this was said, that our Door was open, and I turned my Back to hear and look who was at our Door, and I heard Mrs. Browne say, that Captain Hill and Mr. Mountford were going to Fight: I saw them Fighting, making Passes at one another, I saw them engaged, I never saw Men naked fighting so in my Life.

it

At which there was a great Laughter.

El. Walker. My Lord, I do not understand these Matters, I tell you as well as I can, they were fighting with naked Swords, Mr. Mountford's Sword was upon Mr. Hill hereabouts, and Mr. Hill's Sword was upon Mr. Mountford hereabouts; and after they had made two or three Pushes at one another, Mr. Mountford said, he was kill'd, and threw down his Sword thus, and I took it up, and there was a good Piece of the Sword broken off. I turned me about thus, towards our own Hatch at our Door, and there stood two or three People, I cannot say who they were, but I gave them the Sword, and I turned my Face towards Surrey-street, and saw Captain Hill making his Escape, running up Surrey-street; and, if it please you, my Lord, Mr. Mountford was the Friend I had most Respect for; and I saw him, as fast as he could, going towards his own House, and my Lord Mohun stood in the same Place that he was in, when he and Mr. Mountford were embracing one another, and I did not see my Lord Mohun stir from that Place; but when they fought, they were engaged in the middle of the pitched Stones, were there was a Place made for the Water to run along the Street like a Channel; and to my Knowledge, I did never see my Lord Mohun off of the Paved Stones, on the Side. I cannot say he was never off, when my Eye was turned another way; but to my Knowledge, I never saw him off of those Stones. If it please you, my Lord, the next thing that I saw, was this, After Captain Hill run up Surrey-street, and Mr. Mountford did go home, I saw my Lord Mohun walking up to the End of the Street, where the Watch were coming, and when the Watch came, I see him deliver himself up to the Watch; but I think one of the Watch said, he must have his Sword, and he did deliver up himself and his Sword to the Watch. And he bid me take Notice, Bear Witness, said he, I have no Hand in the Death of Mr. Mountford. Said I, No, my Lord, I think you have not. The next thing I remember, was Mrs. Page came and said Mr. Mountford was killed, upon which, said my Lord Mohun to her, Bear Witness, I had no Hand in his Death. Said she, You were in his Company, therefore seize him, and carry him to the Round-house; and the Watch did secure him; and my Lord answered, As he was a Gentleman, he desired to be used like a Gentleman; and they did carry him away to the Round-house. This is the Thing that I did say, as near as I can remember, to the Justices; but I have been very much abused and distracted amongst them, and therefore to a Word I cannot say; but as near as I can remember, being abused at the rate I have been, this I did then say, and it is the Truth.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether she was not exanined before the Justices at Hick's-Hall, and whether she was not then Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

L. H. Stew. Truly, my Lord, I have heard very little of what she has said, but I hope my Lords that have been nearer have observed it.

El. Walker. If it please you, if you ask what was done at Hicks's-Hall, I will tell you just as it was, what happened there, and so proceed on to tell you how I have been abused.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, what would you have her asked more?

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, Whether she was not Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant when she was examined at Hicks's-Hall, and whether she swore the same there, as she saith here, and what was done to her since, or what they would have done, and whether they did not try to make her speak what they would, and to put her out?

El. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, that next Morning, there came several of the Players to me, to ask me what I knew of the Death of Mr. Mountford, and I told them; but they did not like what I said, and they seemed discontented at me. And when they were to go to Hicks's-Hall, they said, they had no need of my Evidence, they could do without me. So Mrs. Browne and her Maid they went away, and left me at Home; what they did, or where they staid, I do not know; but about two or three Hours after, a Messenger came and said, my Mistress and I must go to Hicks's-Hall to be examined before the Justices; and we went, and when we came there, all were examined, and I was examined in the last Place; where, my Lord, I gave in the same Evidence that I do now, as near as I can speak. I do verily believe it to be the same, but I have had so much Trouble with their abusing me, that I cannot speak to every Word or particular Thing. For my Mistress stood before me, and said, They brought Evidences that confounded themselves; and another said, Hang her a Jade, pull her by the Coat. I turned me to the Justices, and said, I hoped I might speak now I was there; but it may be for fear of my Mistress, I did not then speak all that I have done now, because I have called more since to my Remembrance. And there is one particular Thing that I call to mind now; I remember that in our Parlour, as soon as they came home out of Drury-lane, there was a Discourse between my old Mistress, and my Young, that Captain Hill waited at the Door to see my Mistress, and that if he might but have Leave to see her, and to beg her Pardon, they would be gone thence to their own Lodging; and I said to my Mistress, If she would give me leave, I would go out to them, and demand Captain Hill's Sword, and then he might come in.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Whether she was not turned away and threatned?

El. Walker. I am going on to tell my Lord what happened in our House that Night. I told my Mistress, If she would give me leave, I would undertake to get Captain Hill's Sword from him, and then she might let him come in and see her, and beg her Pardon, and I thought it would prevent a great deal of Danger that might follow else. And my Mistress said, I was a prating Slut; and my young Mistress said, If he begged her Pardon upon his Knees never so, she would never forgive him, nor see him more.

My

My Lord, there was another Diſcourſe in the Street, that Captain Hill had made a Vow that he would kill himſelf that Night, and that my Lord Mohun, having a Reſpect for him, watched to prevent him from doing himſelf a Miſchief. That was diſcourſed in the Street, but I cannot ſay it was ſo of my own Knowledge.

Then another Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, whether ſhe was not turned away, and whether ſhe was never threatned.

Eliz. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, that Night that I gave in my Evidence at Hicks's-Hall, by their talking, I knew before I went from Home what a Life I ſhould have with my Miſtreſs, for I knew they did not like my Evidence, and I was afraid of coming Home, and went and ſtaid with my Siſter; but notwithſtanding I went Home about Nine a Clock, and they were very inveterate againſt me, and I told one of them, I had witneſſed the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, and that I would ſtand by. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, the next Morning there was this Ann Jones that lay with me that Night, and ſhe told me that in the Morning they threatned, and intended to fetch me to Mrs. Mountford to rattle me for what Account I had given in, and ſhe giving me this Item, I got up, and went to dreſſing my Dinner, and Mrs. Mountford ſent a Man, that I know by Sight, I think it was one Roberts, I believe that was his Name; whereupon he came and asked me where was Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid; I ſaid, I was ſhe, and then he ſaid Mrs. Mountford deſired me to come to her. I ſaid, I had given in my Evidence where I ought to do it, and I had nothing to do with her; but it was upon this account, not that I had any Antipathy againſt Mrs. Mountford, but only as Ann Jones had given me that Item of a Deſign to ſend me to her, to rattle me for the Evidence I had given in, and I did not know what might come of it, or what their Deſign might be.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not interrupt any Witneſs, but becauſe ſhe ſpeaks of what was ſaid by Jones, and Mrs. Bracegirdle, I deſire they may be by to hear what ſhe ſaith.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire my Witneſſes may not be hared.

L. H. Stew. This is not haring of Evidence, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire I may go on with my Evidence without Interruption.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, this is no Interruption.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let Mrs. Mountford be called in to hear what ſhe ſaith of her; I deſire ſhe may be by.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I have no more to ſay to her.

Mr. Att. Gen. But then, my Lord, before ſhe goeth away, I have two or three Queſtions to ask her.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. She ſaith ſhe was examined at Hicks's-Hall, I deſire to know if ever ſhe was examined before the Coroner.

Eliz. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I was not, and I will give you the Reaſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, pray let us hear it.

Eliz. Walker. Why you have not heard how badly they uſed me after this.

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray, Miſtreſs, anſwer my Queſtion.

Eliz. Walker. But, my Lord, if it pleaſe you, I went to my Siſter, and ſtaid with her till Eight or Nine, and my Aunt told me there had been a Porter to enquire for me, to go to the Jury; I was ſorry I was not at Home, but I took a Neighbour with me to go to Mrs. Mountford's, to ſee if the Jury were not gone; and I knowing how they had threatned me, I deſired him to leave me at a Victualling-Houſe by Temple-Bar, and go and tell them, if the Jury were not gone, I was ready to wait upon them; he went, and I remained at the Victualling-Houſe, and he came again, and told me Mrs. Mountford ſaid they had done without me; but he was a little ſurprized.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, ſhe maketh a long Anſwer to a ſhort Queſtion. I would ask her another Queſtion preſently; but by the way, as to this Examination at Hicks's-Hall, I would obſerve that it is a very unuſual, and, I think, under Favour, a very unwarrantable Thing for Juſtices of the Peace, to take upon them, under a Pretence of conſidering, in order to bail a Perſon charged with Murder, to enter into a particular Examination of every one of the King's Witneſſes, as if they were either a Grand Inqueſt, charged upon Oath for finding a Bill of Indictment, or Coroners to take an Inquiſition of the Murder, both the Grand Jury and the Coroner are upon their Oaths to keep the King's Evidence ſecret; but this is to make it publick by an indirect way by a Juſtice of Peace's examining, in order to the Bailing of an Offender. But I would obſerve this Woman goeth away from her Miſtreſs, and continueth away, and concealeth herſelf; ſhe was not to be found to be examined before the Coroner, the proper Officer, nor are we able to tell where ſhe has been; I deſire ſome account may be given, in whoſe Hands ſhe has been all this time.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip's Opinion, whether this may be permitted, that he ſhould talk thus.

L. H. Stew. What do you ſay, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he may interrupt me in my Evidence thus: All this Matter is foreign to the Buſineſs before your Lordſhips.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you pleaſe, I would ask her this one Queſtion.

Lord —— Under Mr. Attorney's Pardon, I think the Priſoner, or his Witneſſes, ought not to be interrupted; but if he have any Remarks upon the Evidence, when they have gone thro' he may call them again, and ask them any Queſtions, or make any Remarks upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ask her but one Queſtion.

L. H. Stew. What is it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. If ſhe heard Mrs. Browne ſay to Mr. Mountford that ſhe would not have him come forward, becauſe my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were there, and ſhe did not know what their Deſign was?

Eliz. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I did hear them, and I was juſt by them; and there was none but ſhe and I.

Mr. Att. Gen. She upon her Oath ſaith, ſhe did not tell him any thing more, than that ſhe would ſpeak with him; but he did not hear her, or hearken to her: But, my Lord, I have no more Queſtions to ask her.

L. H. Stew.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witneſs, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Who is your Lordſhip's next? Pray call your Witneſs.

L. Mohun. I deſire Ann Jones may be examined (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What doth your Lordſhip examine her to?

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked what ſhe knoweth of what paſſed that Night Mr. Mountford was hurt, and tell the whole Story.

Jones. Firſt, I ſaw Mrs. Bracegirdle coming home with her Mother and Mr. Page, about ten a Clock at Night, and there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun with them when they came home, but they did not come in with them, but walked in the Street about an Hour and an Half; and after they came in, Mrs. Browne ſent to Mrs. Mountford, for ſhe ſaid Captain Hill had ſome Deſign, and my Lord Mohun, upon Mr. Mountford, but Mr. Mountford not being at home, they ſent to all the Taverns thereabouts, but could not find him; they came home again, and told Mrs. Mountford and Mrs. Bracegirdle, they could not find him, and there my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill walked to-and-fro about the Street for an Hour and Half in all; about an Hour after they had been to look for Mr. Mountford, or about three Quarters of an Hour, Mr. Mountford came down, and I ſaw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill at this Door.

L. Mohun. At whoſe Door, I deſire ſhe may be asked.

Jones. At this Mrs. Browne's Door, and Mr. Mountford coming down, my Lord Mohun met him, and embraced him, and ſaid, He had a great Honour and Friendſhip for him, and Mr. Mountford ſaid, he had a great Honour and Reſpect for his Lordſhip. Saith my Lord Mohun, Mr. Mountford I ſuppoſe you are ſent for. No not I, upon my Honour, ſaid he. Upon that he up and told him how they had like to have got Mrs. Bracegirdle into a Coach, and carried her away, but were prevented. Saith Mr. Mountford, as to Mrs. Bracegirdle, I have nothing to do, ſhe is no Concern of mine, if my Wife have offended your Lordſhip, ſhe ſhall beg your Pardon. Said Mr. Mountford again, I hope your Lordſhip will not vindicate Mr. Hill in any ſuch Action as this. With that Captain Hill came up and hit Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear, and bid him draw. And, ſaid Mr. Mountford, Damn ye, What is that for? And thereupon he drew; and I tell you what I ſaw, they both came off from the paved Stones into the Middle of the Highway, and made two or three Paſſes at one another; at the ſecond Paſs Mr. Mountford's Sword broke, and he flung down his Sword, and run away, and ſaid he was a dead Man; Mr. Mountford went one way, and Mr. Hill another.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, If I did meddle with Mr. Mountford at all, or helped Mr. Hill whilſt they fought, and where I ſtood all the while?

L. H. Stew. What ſay you? anſwer all thoſe Queſtions my Lord asked you.

Jones. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, he ſtood upon the Cauſey, the paved Stones, in the ſame Place where he was all the time.

L. H. Stew. Did my Lord meddle at all?

Jones. No, I did not ſee my Lord Mohun meddle.

L. H. Stew. Was my Lord's Sword drawn?

Jones. I did not ſee it drawn.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, Whether I run away, or whether I did not ſurrender my ſelf to the Watch.

Jones. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I did not ſee my Lord run away; But I did ſee him ſurrender himſelf.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, if ſhe was not examined at Hicks's-hall?

Jones. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Mohun And whether ſhe did not there declare the ſame upon Oath, that ſhe doth now?

Jones. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to ſay to this Witneſs, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would only ask her this Queſtion: She ſaith my Lord Mohun was upon the Pavement, or Cauſey, as ſhe calleth it, all the while; I deſire to know whether the Scuffle did not begin upon the Pavement?

Jones. Yes, it did upon the Cauſey.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire to know, whether ſhe ſaw any Blood upon that Cauſey the next day?

Jones. No, I ſaw none.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, Whether they did not fight in the Middle of the Street?

Jones. Yes, and pleaſe your Lordſhip, I did ſee them make Paſſes at one another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, Whether the Sword was not broken there in the Middle of the Street, and whether Mr. Mountford did not then cry out, I am killed?

Jones. His Sword was broken in the Middle of the Street; but I did not hear Mr. Mountford ſay he was killed, but he flung down his Sword, and run away, and ſaid, I am a dead Man.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witneſs, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ſay to her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then who is your next Witneſs, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. Edward Warrington, my Lord.
(Who came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What ſay you to him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask him where he liveth? Whether he be not a Neighbour to Mrs. Bracegirdle? and what he ſaw that Night Mr. Mountford was killed? I deſire he would give his whole Evidence.

Warrington. I live, if it pleaſe your Honour, over-againſt Mrs. Bracegirdle's Houſe, at the White-ſwan, on the other Side of the Way.

L. Mohun. I deſire he would tell all that he ſaw that Night.

Warrington. All that I can ſay, is, About nine or ten a Clock, as near as I can gueſs, I heard a Diſturbance at Mrs. Browne's Door, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodgeth, and looking out, I ſaw there were two Gentlemen talking to old Mrs. Bracegirdle, and Mrs. Bracegirdle and ſome People went into the Houſe, and when they were gone into the Houſe, I ſaw the two Gentlemen walk about the Street, one's Sword I ſaw was drawn.

L. H. Stew. Whoſe Sword was that was drawn?

Warrington. Captain Hill's, as they ſay; for my part, I did not know either of them; they walked there for the Space of an Hour and a Half, I ſaw

ſaw them oppoſe no body. But as they came along, I heard them ask a Gentleman that came towards them, Whether he would not drink a Glaſs of Wine or not?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, what he ſaw afterwards of fighting?

Warrington. For fighting, I ſaw Mr. Mountford come down Norfolk-ſtreet, and I ſaw him turn at the Corner with his Sword in his Hand in the Scabbard, to the beſt of my Knowledge, and ſeeing ſome People there, as I ſuppoſe, went towards them, and came up to them; and I ſaw my Lord Mohun, to the beſt of my Knowledge, lay his Hand upon his Shoulder, and embraced him, and complimented him; but I cannot be certain what the Words were that paſſed between them.

L. H. Stew. Did you ſee them fight?

Warrington. If it pleaſe your Honour, I did ſee their Swords both drawn, Mr. Mountford and he that they ſaid was Captain Hill; there were ſome Women about them, ſo that I could not ſo well diſcern when they drew their Swords, or who begun the Quarrel. Hill, they ſaid, had no Scabbard to put his Sword in; my Lord Mohun ſtood by, and laid his Hand upon Mr. Mountford's Shoulder.

L. H. Stew. Was that before the Fighting, or at the time of the Fighting?

Warrington. It was before their Fighting, at their firſt Meeting.

L. Mohun. I deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to ask him, In what Part of the Street they fought, and whether I was near them then?

Warrington. When firſt I ſaw their Swords drawn, it was upon the flat Stones of the Pavement; and I ſaw Mr. Hill come off of the Stones and Mr. Mountford with him. Mr. Hill was, I think, the firſt, and they came both up together with their Swords drawn in their Hands, they were not a Sword's Length off from one another; and they paſſed at one another, and I run into our Houſe to fetch a Paring-Shovel, with an Intention to part them; but before I could get out of Doors with the Paring-Shovel in my Hands, the one was gone one way, and the other the other way; and I ſaw no body in the Street to ask any Queſtions of, but my Lord Mohun at the Corner, three or four Doors above this Place. And I came out, and asked which way they were gone, my Lord Mohun turned about, and I was a little afraid of him at firſt; but, ſaid he, Here am I, I did not offer to oppoſe or draw my Sword; you all know it; and immediately, if it pleaſe your Honour, the Watch came in; that is all I know.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, Whether I did not go towards the Watch, and ſurrender myſelf.

Warrington. I cannot ſay that, but the Watch came in a Minute. My Lord turned about, and ſaid, Here am I, I did not oppoſe or draw my Sword, you all know.

L. Mohun. Pray my Lord, let him be asked, Whether I did offer to fly? And whether I had not as much time to fly, as Mr. Hill?

Warrington. I cannot ſay that, my Lord. I ſuppoſe he might have gone away as well as Mr. Hill, for they were both together.

L. M. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked another Queſtion, Whether, when Mr. Mountford came into Howard-ſtreet, he did not come out of his way to his own Houſe, to come towards us?

Warrington. My Lord, if it pleaſe your Honour, it was out of his way; but whether he did it on purpoſe, or becauſe he ſaw People there, I cannot tell.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may tell you where Mr. Mountford's Houſe is.

Warrington. Mr. Mountford's Houſe is in Norfolk-ſtreet, two Doors in the Corner out of the Croſs Street; and this was done in Howard-ſtreet.

L. H. Stew. I would ask you a ſhort Queſtion, Whether that was the way to his Houſe that he went?

Warrington. No, it was not the way, my Lord; for he turned on the Right-Hand, and he ſhould have kept ſtraight along.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, Whether he was not ſworn at Hicks's-hall, and whether he gave not the ſame Evidence there, that he doth now?

Warrington. I was ſworn there, and did, to the beſt of my Knowledge, give the ſame Evidence I do now.

L. H. Stew. If I underſtand you aright, you ſay both the Swords were drawn of Mountford and Hill?

Warrington. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Can you ſay whether Mountford's Sword was drawn before he was hurt, or not?

Warrington. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I cannot tell that, I cannot be poſitive whether it was or no, for there were Women about them, I ſay, at firſt, and I could not diſcern the Beginning; and I did not ſtand to ſee them puſh, for as ſoon as I ſaw their Swords drawn, and they come off the Pavement to fight, I run into the Houſe to fetch a Paring Shovel.

L. Mohun. Now, my Lord, I will call another Witneſs.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any Queſtions to ask this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. Mohun. Then, my Lord, I will call another Witneſs to ſhew you the Reaſon why Mr. Hill and I ſtayed in the Street, and what was the Buſineſs we ſtay'd for. I deſire Ann Knevit may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask her where ſhe liveth, and what ſhe knoweth of this Buſineſs?

Knevit. My Lord, I live in Howard-ſtreet, exactly againſt Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, and my Lord Mohun, as he gave his own Name to be, to the Watchmen, and another Man that they called Captain Hill; for ſo he gave his Name to be; they came down with Mrs. Bracegirdle, both the Mrs. Bracegirdles, into the Street, and came to their Door, and old Mrs. Bracegirdle put her Daughter in at the Door, and then ſhe ſtood ſtill and talked with the Gentlemen, and asked them their Buſineſs. They ſaid, They wanted to beg the young Woman's Pardon for what they had done, and then they would be gone. She ſaid ſhe thought they came to rob her. They ſaid, No, they came upon a very honourable Deſign. She ſaid, Then they might have come at a more ſeaſonable time; but ſhe believed they came to rob her.

L. Mohun. What time of Night was it?

Knevit. It wanted a Quarter of Ten, I believe, or it was about Ten, a Quarter over or under; I cannot exactly tell. They ſaid, If ſhe would give them leave but to ſpeak to her, and beg her

Pardon

Pardon for what they had done, they would go home immediately. She ſaid, ſhe would not, they ſhould not ſee her any more that Night: Then one of the Gentlemen, I know not which of them it was, ſaid, They would walk a little while in the Street: ſhe did ſee them walk very quietly, but ſhe made a great Noiſe herſelf; and at laſt ſhe went in, and ſhut the Door, and the Gentlemen walked quietly up and down, and by and by, they went to the Door again, and deſired to be admitted to ſpeak with young Mrs. Bracegirdle, that they might beg her Pardon for ſome Affront that they had put upon her, I ſuppoſe, and ſhe ſtill refuſed them, and would not let them ſpeak with her; and ſeveral times they called and knocked at the Door, and ſtill deſired but to ſpeak with her, and beg her Pardon, and they would be gone home, but ſhe every time refuſed it.

L. H. Stew. Woman, I do not hear you, you muſt ſpeak louder.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhips will let one of the Clerks come and take the Evidence, and report it to you.

L. H. Stew. If it be material, another muſt report it; for I have not heard one quarter of it.

L. Mohun. It is very material, my Lord, to ſhew the Reaſon why we ſtayed there.

Knevit. My Lord, I will repeat it over again, if you pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Then pray ſpeak ſo loud that I may hear.

Knevit. My Lord Mohun is a perfect Stranger to me, I only tell you what I ſaw and heard. At the firſt beginning of all, two Gentlemen, and two Women, came to a Door over againſt our Door, and at that Houſe Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter lodged, the Gentlemen ave their Names to the Watch afterwards to be my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill: So when they came there, the old Woman put her Daughter in at the Door, and when ſhe had pulled off her Hood and Scarf, ſhe came to the Door, and asked them their Buſineſs; and they told her, they wanted to beg her Daughter's Pardon for what they had done; but ſhe abuſed the Gentlemen mightily, and gave them very ill Words, and ſaid, She believed they came to rob her Daughther; they ſaid, No, they came upon a very honourable Deſign; then ſhe ſaid, They ſhould have come honourably at a ſeaſonable time; they ſaid, It was not an unſeaſonable time, for ſhe was out of Doors herſelf at that time. So ſhe ſtood there a little, and then at laſt ſhe went in a Doors, and ſhut the Door, and ſome of them opened the Door again, and they were walking upon the Cauſey, and came up to the Door, and ſtill deſired the ſame thing, to ſpeak with the young Gentlewoman to beg her Pardon for what they had done, and they would go home for that Night. One of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, ſaid, He had given her an Affront, and he deſired to beg her Pardon; but ſtill they ſaid, he ſhould not be admitted to ſpeak with her. Then one of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, deſired ſhe would be pleaſed to come but to the Hatch, that he might ſee her, and beg her Pardon, and he would not deſire to come in, but that would not be permitted. So one of them made Anſwer, That they would not ſtir till they did ſee her, and they would walk there all Night.

L. H. Stew. Cryer, call for Silence, and pray, my Lord Great Chamberlain, take ſome Order with thoſe People behind there, for they cannot hear themſelves what the Witneſſes ſay, and therefore they are reſolved we ſhall not hear them neither.

(Proclamation was made for Silence.)

L. H. Stew. Now go on, Woman.

Knevit. They ſaid they would ſtay in the Street all Night, unleſs they did ſpeak with her: But if ſhe would give them leave to ſpeak with her, they would depart to their own Lodgings immediately; but they were denied to be admitted to ſpeak with her. Whereupon one of them called unto his Boy, to bring him his Cloak; but then he ſaid, He would not have his Cloak, he would walk without it, becauſe they had not both of them Cloaks; by and by they ſent for a Bottle of Wine, and there they drank her Health, and took ſeveral Turns, and after they had drunk off the Bottle, or ſome part of it, they went to the Door again, and knocked at the Door, and ſome body anſwered from within, for they were not at the Door, what they would have? They ſaid the ſame thing as before, that they deſired only to ſee her, and beg her Pardon, and they would go home; for it was a very cold Night, and it was not convenient to walk there; but they ſtill refuſed to let them in: By-and-by the Watch came down, and asked, Who was there, and what was their Buſineſs? and one of the Gentlemen made Anſwer, and ſaid, He was a Peer, and his Name was Mohun, the other ſaid, his Name was Hill. So the Watch went by, and ſaid no more, but ſome Body made Anſwer, and ſaid, There was a Gentleman had a Sweet-Heart in that Street, and he wanted to ſpeak with her. Juſt at that Time, I went up Stairs to warm a Bed in our Houſe, and whilſt I was warming the Bed, I heard a little Buſtle in the Street, and running to the Window there I ſaw a Sword in a Man's Body, I could not tell who the Man was, nor who put the Sword there, but the Man that drew out the Sword, run away as hard as he could, and the Man in whoſe Body the Sword was, went as faſt as he could, the other Way. And my Lord that gave his Name to the Watch to be Mohun, ſtood on the farther Side of the Street, and ſaid, I have done no Hurt to any Body, and I will not ſtir. And there was a Woman that called out to the Watch to ſeize him; but who the Woman was, I cannot tell, but he ſtood ſtill between Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, and the next Neighbour's, one that is called Nuttall, I think, and never ſtirred till the Watch came to him, and the reſt went to Mr. Mountford; he ſaid there was no Occaſion to lay Hands upon him, for he would not ſtir from them.

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask her if Mr. Mountford did not ſay, I am killed, after the Sword was broke?

Knevit. Yes, he did ſay he was a dead Man.

L. H. St. What, after his Sword was broke?

Knevit. After the Sword was drawn out of his Body, his Sword was in his own Hand, I ſqualled out when I ſaw the Sword in his Body, and had like to have gone out of the Window, and ſome Body ſaid to me, when I told them why I cry'd out, Will you break your Neck for that Reaſon? it may be it is one of the Watchmen. No, ſaid I, it is not a Watchman.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked where Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill fought, whether it was not in the middle of the Street?

Knevit. My Lord, it was exactly in the Middle, as near as I can gueſs, rather on our Side of the Way, with his Arms ſpread, and his Sword in the Scabbard.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witneſs?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to ſay to her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. G. I would ask her where ſhe liveth?

Knevit. I live in Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. With whom there?

Knevit. At one Mrs. Brewer's.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Employment is your Miſtreſs?

Knevit. My Miſtreſs keepeth a Coffee-houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you live near Mrs. Browne's?

Knevit. I know not any of that Name there; but I live over againſt Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you know the People of that Houſe?

Knevit. No, upon my Word, I do not know their Names that keep the Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let me ask you another Queſtion: You ſpeak of many Meſſages ſent backward and forward, and that they ſaid Mrs. Bracegirdle ſhould not be ſpoken with while my Lord ſtaid there; I deſire to know if you can tell who any of the Perſons were that brought thoſe Meſſages?

Knevit. It was the Man that called himſelf my Lord Mohun, and the other that called himſelf Hill, they ſpoke themſelves.

Mr. Att. Gen. But who was it that came to them ſo often, to tell them they ſhould not ſpeak with her?

Knevit. It was old Mrs. Bracegirdle.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are ſure of that.

Knevit. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you one Queſtion more: When the Watch came up to them, did my Lord tell the Watch his Name was Mohun, or only that he was a Peer of England?

Knevit. He ſaid firſt, He was a Peer of the Land, and then he ſaid, his Name was Mohun, and the other ſaid, his Name was Capt. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are ſure both of them told their Names to the Watch?

Knevit. Yes, I am ſure I heard them ſay ſo.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more Witneſſes to call, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, I could call ſome as to Sandys's Reputation, but I do not think it at all material.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing, Mr. Attorney, to ſay to the Boy that was ſet by? Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I did propoſe that the Boy ſhould hear the Information read which he gave in to the Coroner.

L. H. Stew. Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Well, then call him again.

(The Boy came to the Bar, and his Depoſition before the Coroner was ſhewed to him.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper, is that your Name or your Writing?

Boy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it true you then ſwore before the Coroner?

Boy. Yes, it was true.

L. H. Stew. Read it.

(It was taken by the Clerk, and read at the Table.)

Clerk of the Crown. Reads.

Middleſex. The Information of Thomas Leake, Servant to Richard Hill, Gent. taken upon Oath the twelfth Day of December, 1692, before me.

HE ſaith, That on Friday Morning laſt, about Nine of the Clock, 'twas agreed betwixt my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill, to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle with ſome Soldiers, and carry her away in a Coach about nine Miles off, and about ten of the Clock at Night my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, with about ſix Soldiers, did ſeize her, and endeavour to put her into a Coach; but ſhe refuſed to go, and they led her down into Howard-ſtreet to her Lodging, and then ſaid, they would walk an Hour under Mrs. Bracegirdle*'s Window, and another under Mrs.* Barry*'s; and about an Hour and an Half after, Mr.* Mountford came down the Street, and Mr. Mountford and my Lord Mohun ſaluted each other, and my Lord Mohun ſaid, he hoped Mr. Mountford was not come to vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle; and Mr. Mountford hoped my Lord did not come to vindicate the Rudeneſs done to Mrs. Bracegirdle, by Mr. Hill; and then Mr. Hill ſaid, He was able to vindicate himſelf, and bid Mr. Mountford to draw, and they both puſhed at each other with their Swords, and my Lord ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend: and during the Time that Mr. Hill and Mr. Mountford fought, my Lord Mohun did not endeavour to part them.

Jo. Cooper, Coroner.

Thomas Leake.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, as to this laſt Witneſs, I would deſire ſome of the Watch may be asked, becauſe ſhe ſaith my Lord told them his Name was Mohun, and Hill told them his Name was Hill, whether it was ſo or not.

L. H. Stew. Who would you call?

Mr. Att. Gen. Merry, my Lord, if you pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Call him.

Lord Mohun. I deſire the Conſtable may be called. [Merry did not preſently come in.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think it is not ſo material, as to deſire your Lordſhips ſhould ſtay for him. But as to that one Witneſs that entertained your Lordſhips ſo long, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant, I deſire, that ſhe being here, may give your Lordſhips an Account what became of this Servant of hers.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, ſhe went away from me on the Sunday.

L. H. Stew. Who did?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Maid that was then, and I ſent to her Aunt's the Week after to ſeek for her, but ſhe could not be found; where ſhe was I cannot tell; nor could not hear of her from that time to this.

Lord Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked whether ſhe did not diſcharge her, or pay her her Wages.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I did not.

Lord Mohun. Did not you or your Mother?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Mother, my Lord, did; ſhe was not my Servant, my Mother hired her, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What doth ſhe ſay? were her Wages paid, and ſhe diſcharged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. They were paid becauſe ſhe would not ſtay with me, my Lord; I deſired her to ſtay, and ſhe would not, and then ſhe demanded her Wages, and my Mother paid her.

L. Mohun.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire you would ask the Maid the Reaſon why ſhe would not ſtay.

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, the Reaſon was this. When I came from Hicks's-Hall Mrs. Mountford the next Day ſent for me, and I lying with this Ann Jones that was here, ſhe told me that I ſhould be ſent for, and they would rattle me off for my Evidence that I had given at Hicks's-Hall for the King; my Lord, I having ſuch an Item from Ann Jones, and they being all Players, I was afraid, becauſe Players have a worſe Reputation than other People.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with any more Witneſſes.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be asked if there were not Bailiffs ſent to take her, and ſhe threatned to be arreſted.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you to that?

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I cannot ſwear it, but I will tell you as near as I can, how it was; I had not Time to look over my Cloaths, being in Haſte when I went, and for fear I ſhould have miſtaken any Thing, the next Day I went to look over my Cloaths, whereupon I found I had miſtook, and taken one of my Miſtreſs's Aprons, and left one of my own for it, and knowing their great Suſpicion and Inveteracy againſt me, I went the next Day to my Uncle's, a Porter's, and deſired him to carry it to them; but when I had delivered it to him, he would not let me ſtay to ſpeak much, for he ſaid there had been three Bailiffs to take me, and I having no Friends, was much affrighted, and run crying up and down, and did not know where to fly, for fear they might lay me in a Priſon; and having no Friends, therefore I was forced to fly, and ſo I went to a Juſtice of Peace, and there I gave him an Account of the Buſineſs. But he ſaid he muſt have nothing to do with it, I muſt go again to proffer my Service to my Miſtreſs; but I was not willing to proffer my Service again to her, ſo I kept away ever ſince.

L. H. Stew. If you have done with the Evidence on both Sides; what have you more to ſay, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lords, I hope it will be no Diſadvantage to me, my not ſumming up my Evidence like a Lawyer, being a young Man; I think I have made it plainly appear that there never was any former Quarrel or Malice between Mr. Mountford and me; I have alſo made appear the Leaſon why we ſtaid ſo long in the Street, which was for Mr. Hill to ſpeak with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and ask her Pardon, and I ſtaid with him as my Friend, ſo it plainly appeareth I had no Hand in the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and upon the Confidence of my own Innocency, I ſurrendred my ſelf, and I commit my ſelf to this Honourable Houſe, where I know I ſhall have all the Juſtice in the World.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordſhip no more to ſay?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, but I am innocent of the Fact, and leave my ſelf wholly to your Lordſhips.

Mr. Sol. Gen. * May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, according to my Duty, I am to repeat the Evidence to your Lordſhips on the Behalf of the King.

* Sir Thomas Trevor.

My Lord, the Evidence hath been very long, both that on the Part of the King, and that on the Part of the Priſoner, and I know your Lordſhips have given Attention to it with very great Diligence. I cannot pretend that my Memory will ſerve me ſo well, as to repeat the Circumſtances of this ſo long Evidence; but that which has been material, I ſhall crave leave ſhortly to mention to your Lordſhips.

My Lords, I know a great many Things may ſlip my Notice and Repetition, but nothing can ſlip your Lordſhips Obſervation: So that though I ſhould not lay a due Weight upon the Evidence for the King, yet your Lordſhips will let nothing paſs without giving it its juſt Conſideration, and will give Judgment according to the exacteſt Juſtice.

My Lords, the Evidence for the King doth conſiſt firſt of Facts precedent to the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and next what happened at that Time.

As to what preceded this Fact thus committed, there were two or three Witneſſes called, and the firſt of them is Mr. Hudſon, the next is Mr. Powel, and they give you an Account that Mr. Hill had made his Applications in the Way of Courtſhip to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but that he had an Apprehenſion that Mr. Mountford was an Obſtruction to him in that Matter, and therefore he did declare ſeveral Times, that he would be revenged of him. And one Time (which I think was two or three Days before the Fact was done) my Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, was at Dinner with Hill, when Hill had this Diſcourſe concerning Mountford, and ſaid he would be revenged of him. My Lord Mohun was by, they both ſay, when ſuch Diſcourſe was uſed by Hill, but they cannot tell what Notice he took of it.

My Lords, after this, the Day that this Fact was committed, your Lordſhips have heard how my Lord Mohun and Hill hired a Coach and ſix Horſes in order to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle and carry her away by Force, and that is proved moſt fully, both upon my Lord Mohun and Hill, that they were both concerned in that Deſign, and actually ingaged in it; there can be no Diſpute of that. Accordingly they dined together that Day, and at Dinner there aroſe a Diſcourſe in relation to Mrs. Bracegirdle. And at that Time my Lord Mohun ſaid it would coſt Hill 50 l. to carry her off. And Hill ſaid, if the Villain reſiſted he would ſtab him. And my Lord Mohun ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend. This Declaration was made at Dinner, on the Day this Fact was committed; and then they appointed to meet at the Play-Houſe at ſix o'Clock in the Evening, expecting Mrs. Bracegirdle would be there; and accordingly the Coach was ordered to be ready at that Time in Drury-lane.

My Lords, in purſuance of this Deſign, they both came to the Play-Houſe at Six o'Clock; this is prov'd by two or three Witneſſes. When they came there, they inquired for Mrs. Bracegirdle, but ſhe was not there at that Time. And then not finding Mrs. Bracegirdle there, your Lordſhips have an Account from the Coach-man, to what Places he carried them from thence. Firſt to Drury-lane, there they ſtaid ſome Time and not finding her there, he drove them into Norfolk-ſtreet, near the Place where ſhe lodged, and there a Man and a Woman being diſcourſing together, gave them Occaſion to ſay, they thought they were betray'd. And Hill ſaid, My Lord, let us go and cut that Fellow's Throat, or Words to that Effect.

Then, my Lords, they drove back from that Place, into Drury-Lane again, and ordered the Coach to ſtop over-againſt my Lord of Clare's Houſe. There it happened that Mrs. Bracegirdle came from Mr. Page's Houſe, where ſhe had ſupped. At that Time there were preſent her Mother, her Brother, and Mr. Page, and Mr. Page led her along. Hill came up with ſeven or eight Soldiers, and forced her out of Mr. Page's Hand, and endeavoured to thruſt her into the Coach. In that Coach my Lord Mohun was, that is agreed upon on all Hands, the Coach Door was open, and my Lord Mohun was there in it with ſeven or eight Piſtols.

It happening they could not carry her off, but the Matter taking Air, People came in to their Aſſiſtance, and the Deſign being prevented, Hill would needs go home with her to her Lodging in Howard-ſtreet, and my Lord came out of the Coach and went along with him. When they were come to the Lodging, the Witneſſes tell your Lordſhips, that at that Time, when Mr. Page was going into the Houſe, Hill would have had ſome Diſcourſe with Mr. Page, and deſired to ſpeak with him, but Mr. Page ſaid it was not a convenient Time, but to-morrow would do better, and ſo went into the Houſe, and the Door was locked.

My Lord Mohun and Hill continued walking about the Streets for about two Hours before Mr. Mountford was killed, and now your Lordſhips will obſerve what Tranſactions there were during the Time that they continued walking in the Streets.

Then there was an Interruption for about a Quarter of an Hour, occaſion'd by a Lady's falling into Fits in one of the Galleries; but ſhe being removed, and Proclamation made for Silence, the Court proceeded.

L. H. Stew. Pray, go on, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I was obſerving to your Lordſhips, that Part of the Evidence which related to what happen'd after the Time that Mrs. Bracegirdle was in her Lodging. And, my Lord, your Lordſhips hear from the Witneſſes, that my Lord Mohun, and this Hill continued in the Street, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and walked up and down for near two Hours before Mr. Mountford came.

During that Time, the Conſtable and the Watchmen have told your Lordſhip upon their Oaths, that my Lord Mohun's and Mr. Hill's Swords were both drawn. And the Conſtable ſwears expreſly, That he ask'd my Lord Mohun what he did with his Sword drawn, and that my Lord anſwered, he was ready to put it up, and told him withal, he was a Peer of the Realm; the Conſtable then ask'd, why the other Gentleman's Sword was drawn, and my Lord Mohun made anſwer that his Scabbard was loſt.

But your Lordſhips obſerve, that before the Watch came, Mrs. Browne (as ſhe herſelf hath ſworn) came out of the Houſe where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and deſired to know what they did there, and then Hill ſaid, he ſhould light upon Mountford one Time or other; ſaith Mrs. Browne to him, Why, what hath he done to you? to which he replied, He hath affronted me, and I will be revenged upon him; and this was ſaid in the Preſence of my Lord Mohun, he being juſt by.

My Lords, after this, in a very ſhort Time, Mr. Mountford came down, and Mrs. Browne telleth your Lordſhips, that they were ſo much aware of this Matter, that my Lord Mohun and Hill ſtaid to do Mountford a Miſchief, that there were Perſons ſent to Mrs. Mountford to give her Notice of it, and ſhe ſent Meſſengers to find out her Husband, to prevent his coming in their Way, but they could not find him.

Upon Mr. Mountford's coming down, Mrs. Browne ſeeing him, ſteps up towards him, to tell him that my Lord Mohun and Hill were in the Streets with their Swords drawn, and ſhe was afraid they had ſome ill Deſign againſt him; but ſhe ſweareth ſhe did not, nor could not tell him this, he was in ſuch Haſte; but one of the Witneſſes for my Lord contradicts her in this, and ſays, that ſhe did tell him, but whether the one Witneſs ſweareth true, or the other Witneſs ſaith true, muſt be left to your Lordſhips Judgment.

But Mr. Mountford came down immediately, and as he came down, he met my Lord Mohun, and they did ſalute one another (for I would not injure my Lord in miſtaking the Evidence, as near as I can) but your Lordſhips will obſerve the Witneſſes ſay, that preſently my Lord Mohun asked Mr. Mountford, whether he was not ſent for, and ſaid, I ſuppoſe you have heard what happen'd to the Lady this Night, and I hope you do not come to vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle. And Mr. Mountford replyed, I hope your Lordſhip doth not come to vindicate Mr. Hill in ſuch an Action.

Thereupon Hill ſtepped up, and ſtruck Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear, and at the ſame Time, with his Right Hand, paſſed at him, and run him through, before his Sword was drawn. This two of the Witneſſes for the King ſay Mr. Mountford told them upon his Death-Bed, and it was very probably ſo; becauſe your Lordſhips obſerve by all the Evidence, Hill's Sword was ready drawn in his Hand.

There being ſome Noiſe, Proclamation was made for Silence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords, I was obſerving that it was immediately, and at the ſame Time that he ſtruck him, and run him through, and it is very likely it was ſo, as Mr. Mountford ſaid when dying; for ſeveral of the Witneſſes for the King do ſwear, that the Box on the Ear, was before his Sword was drawn, and Hill's Sword was ready in his Hand. So Mr. Mountford ſaid when he was expiring, and what Regard your Lordſhips will have to the Declaration of a dying Man, we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment; and Mrs. Browne who was there and ſaw the Fact, ſweareth the ſame Thing, that it was done before Mr. Mountford could have Time to draw his Sword.

If that be ſo, it is very plain it was Murder in Mr. Hill, and your Lordſhips will pleaſe to obſerve another Piece of Evidence that came from the Mouth of a Witneſs, examined for the Noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar, and that is Leake the Boy, he was examined before the Coroner; indeed he was not called now for the King, and your Lordſhips may ſee ſome Reaſon why he was not; but your Lordſhips have had his Depoſition before the Coroner read, and by that your Lordſhips may obſerve, how different his Teſtimony then was, from what he now giveth. And whether your Lordſhips will believe what he then ſaid upon his Oath, or what what he now ſaith, is left to your Lordſhips Conſideration. He ſaith, when he was examined upon his Oath, ſoon after the Fact, that my Lord Mohun was by, when Hill did wound Mountford, and that my Lord Mohun ſaid, that he would ſtand by his Friend, and that Hill was his Friend, and that my Lord Mohun did ſtand by, and did not offer to part them. Though he hath ſomething varied from this in his Teſtimony now, yet he ſtill affirms what he there ſwore to be true.

But further, my Lords, your Lordſhips will conſider what the Conſtable ſwore my Lord Mohun ſaid after he was taken, and when he was in Cuſtody at the Round-houſe. Whether he did ſurrender himſelf or no, we muſt leave to your Lordſhips, upon the Evidence that hath been given on the one Side, and on the other. But when he was in Cuſtody (as I ſaid) my Lord Mohun asked whether Hill was taken, and being anſwered No, he ſaid he was glad of that; but he was ſorry he had no more Money about him, and wiſhed that he had that Money which he himſelf had, and that he would be willing to be hanged for him. So great a Kindneſs he expreſſed for Hill, and ſaid, he had changed Coats with him, and then had Hill's Coat on his Back.

This, my Lords, is the Subſtance of the Evidence on the King's Part, and upon the whole of it, it is plain, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, that here was a premeditated Malice in Hill, by his own Declarations preceding, by what was done at the time of the Fact committed, and by ſtabbing him before his Sword was drawn.

The Queſtion will be, whether, my Lord Mohun the Priſoner at the Bar, was privy to this Deſign of Hill's, and did ſo far agree in it, as to keep him Company to aſſiſt and encourage him. For if he was privy, and knew of Hill's Deſign, and ſtaid there for that Purpoſe, to give him Aſſiſtance in it, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips Judgment, he will be as much guilty of the Murder, as Hill that actually killed him: That therefore will be the Queſtion before your Lordſhips, for your Judgment upon the Conſideration of what has been prov'd in this Caſe.

My Lords, the Priſoner my Lord Mohun, has called and produced ſeveral Witneſſes to your Lordſhips, in Defence of himſelf. The firſt Witneſs was called to this Purpoſe, to ſhew that my Lord had no Malice to Mountford, but that they were very good Friends but two or three Days before; that he ſpoke of him with a great deal of Kindneſs, and deſired to drink a Bottle of Wine with him.

Now for this, I would obſerve to your Lordſhips, that it is not the Queſtion, whether my Lord Mohun had any direct or expreſs Malice againſt Mountford; but if Hill, who was ſo great a Friend of my Lord Mohun's, had a Malice againſt Mountford, and my Lord Mohun had ſo great a Kindneſs for Hill, as to accompany and aſſiſt him in taking his intended Revenge (whether it was ſo or no, your Lordſhips are to judge) it will be as much Murder in Law, as if my Lord had himſelf had a Hand in it.

For the other Witneſſes that have been called for the Priſoner, I muſt leave the Conſideration of what they ſay, to your Lordſhips. They are not upon their Oaths, but yet they are to be believed ſo far, as your Lordſhips ſhall judge what they ſay credible, upon Conſideration of all that you have heard. But for the Boy, who hath contradicted his own Evidence, which he gave upon Oath before the proper Officer, but acknowledgeth what he ſwore then, was true, what Credit is to be given to him, will deſerve your Lordſhips particular Conſideration. How he has been prevailed upon to change his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what Weight it will have with you.

My Lords, I will not ſpend more of your Lordſhips Time; I know you very well remember, and will carefully recollect all the Evidence, both for the King and for the Priſoner, and your Lordſhips will conſider that it is a Caſe of Blood, and if your Lordſhips think him Guilty, tho' he be one of your own Body, you will adjudge him ſo, if not, you will acquit him; and therefore I leave the Matter to your Lordſhips juſt Determination.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think now, having heard the Evidence on all Sides, your Lordſhips will think fit to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords. Is it your Pleaſure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. This Houſe is adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords returned to their own Houſe, in the ſame Order as they came into the Court.

After ſome Debate amongſt themſelves in their own Houſe, they adjourned till the next Day, and ordered the Priſoner, Council and Witneſſes to attend in the Court.

Die Mercurii Primo Februarii 1692.

The Lords ſate all Day in their own Houſe, debating amongſt themſelves in the Abſence of the Judges, who were in the Court, and about eight o'Clock in the Evening, the Houſe of Lords adjourn'd till the Friday following, the Thurſday being Candlemas-Day, and no Law-Day.

And the Priſoner, Council, and Witneſſes were ordered to attend in the Court on Friday Morning.

Die Veneris Tertio Februarii 1692.

ABout the Hour of Four in the Afternoon, the Lords (who had till then been debating amongſt themſelves in their own Houſe) came in the ſame Order as the firſt Day into the Court of Weſtminſter-hall, except only that the Judges were a great Part of the Day waiting for them in the Court.

The Lords being ſeated on their proper Benches, and his Grace the Lord High Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamations were made for Silence, and for the bringing the Priſoner to the Bar in uſual Manner; and the Priſoner coming to the Bar, and having ſaluted his Grace the Lord High Steward, and the Peers, and being reſaluted by them, the Court proceeded in this Manner.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, My Lords have heard the Evidence on both Sides, for and againſt you; and upon that Evidence ſome Queſtions have ariſen in Point of Law, in which ſome

ſome of my Lords are doubtful. I am therefore by their Lordſhips Command to propoſe to your Lordſhips, my Lords Chief Juſtices and the reſt of the Judges here, to have your Opinions upon a Caſe ſtated by their Lordſhips; and it is this:

In a Caſe where a Man ſhall murder another, Whether all thoſe that are in his Company at the Time of the Murder, are ſo neceſſarily involved in the ſaid Crime, that they may not be ſeparated from the Crime of the ſaid Perſon ſo as in ſome Caſes to be found guilty of Manſlaughter?

To this, my Lords expect you the Judges ſhould give your Reſolutions ſeverally one after another, and therefore it is to begin with you, my Lord Chief Juſtice.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Queſtion is pretty long; and I deſire, that I may not be miſtaken in the Opinion I ſhall give, that I may have it in Writing, and that I may have a little Time to conſider it, becauſe it hath been a Queſtion framed upon very great Conſideration and Deliberation: Therefore I would be very well adviſed before I give an Anſwer to ſuch a Queſtion, becauſe it is of ſo great Importance.

L. H. Stew. You muſt ſpeak out, my Lords; for elſe I am at ſuch a Diſtance that I cannot hear a Word you ſay.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I make the ſame humble Requeſt: The Queſtion propounded is long, and the Fruit of great Deliberation among your Lordſhips: I deſire therefore my Anſwer may be ſuch as becometh me to it, and to that Purpoſe, that I may have a Copy of it, and ſome Time to conſider of it.

L. H. Stew. I have it here in Writing, and will give it you, if that will ſerve the turn.

The Paper was brought by the black Rod from his Grace to the Judges.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we deſire your Lordſhips will give us Time to withdraw, and conſider of it among ourſelves.

L. H. Stew. Your Lordſhips hear the Motion of my Lord Chief Juſtice; the Judges deſire your Leave to withdraw, and conſider of the Queſtion among themſelves.

Lords. No, no, no.

Then the Judges ſitting upon the Wool-Packs conferred for a little time privately with one another; and then the Earl of Rocheſter ſtood up.

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Rocheſter, What ſay you?

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords, the Priſoner doth deſire to have a Copy of this Queſtion, it being a Queſtion in Point of Law, that his Council may ſee it.

Lords. Ay, ay, he ought to have it.

A Copy was carried by one of the Clerks to the Bar, and delivered to the Priſoner, and he gave it to Sir Thomas Powis, who with Mr. Hawles and Mr. Price, before aſſigned of Council for my Lord Mohun in Matters of Law, ſtood by him at the Bar.

L. Mohun. My Lords, I deſire to know whether my Council may ſpeak to this Caſe before the Judges give their Opinions, it being a Matter of Law, and the Judges ſuperior to my Council?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, they may be heard to any Matter of Law that is Law ſingly, the Council of either Side may be heard to any Thing that is a Point of Law only.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I conceive this to be ſo.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it is agreed to be ſo: But, my Lords, I muſt deſire your Lordſhips leave to go down to the Wool-Pack, or I ſhall not be able to hear what is ſaid.

Lords. Ay, ay,

Then his Grace came down and ſeated himſelf on the Wool-Pack.

Sir T. Powis. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of Council ——

E. of Devonſhire. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Devonſhire.

E. of Devonſhire. I think your Lordſhips have not yet reſolved that the Priſoner's Council ſhall be heard before the Judges; therefore I deſire they may not begin.

Lords. Yes, yes, it was agreed above.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it muſt be either then, or not at all; and I underſtand the Reſolution of the Houſe to be ſo.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Go on, Sir.

Sir T. Powis. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of Council aſſigned by your Lordſhips for this Noble Peer that is now a Priſoner at the Bar: The Queſtion your Lordſhips are pleaſed to propound is this:

In a Caſe where a Man ſhall murder another, Whether all thoſe who are in his Company at the Time of the Murder, are ſo neceſſarily involved in the ſame Crime, that they may not be ſeparated from the Crime of the ſaid Perſon, ſo as in ſome Caſes to be found guilty only of Manſlaughter:

My Lords, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, I take it there are many Caſes where a Perſon that is preſent when a Murder is committed by another Man, ſhall be equally Guilty of that Murder; and there are many Caſes where a Perſon that is preſent when a Murder is committed by another Man, ſhall be guilty only of Manſlaughter: And there are many Caſes where a Perſon that is preſent when a Murder is committed by another Man, ſhall not (with humble Submiſſion) be Guilty of any Crime at all.

For the firſt, there is no Queſtion but if two Perſons or more do meet together with Malice prepenſed to kill another, and one of them killeth him, and the reſt do aid and aſſiſt him in doing of it, though the mortal Wound is only given by one, there is no Queſtion but they are all equally guilty of the Murder with him that gave the Mortal Wound: And it is alſo as clear, if two Perſons meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and during the Execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth kill another Man, the other will be involved in the Guilt of it.

But, my Lords, if ſeveral Perſons do meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and the Deſign of the Act is totally over, ſo that the Proſecution of it is quite left off ——

There being ſome Noiſe and Diſorder about the Court, Proclamation was commanded to be made, and was made again for Silence.

Sir T. Powis. My Lords, I ſay in the ſecond Inſtance that I was offering to your Lordſhips; If two Perſons or more meet together to do an unlawful Act, but are either diſappointed in it, or

or have totally deſiſted from it; and afterwards theſe ſame Perſons having quitted their Deſign, are together, and a third Perſon coming into their Company, though there were Malice between one of thoſe Perſons, and that third Perſon, and upon Words, or ſome other Occaſion or Accident, there ſhould be Quarrelling and Fighting between thoſe two Perſons that bore Malice to one another, and one of them is killed, and he that before had joined in the Deſign of committing an unlawful Act, be only there in the Company, if he doth neither aid nor abet, nor any ways agree to the doing of the Thing, the Authorities are it will neither be Murder nor Manſlaughter; and of this I would, with your Lordſhips Favour, put ſome Inſtances.

If two Perſons agree together, (as the Caſe is put in that which goeth by the Name of my Lord Dacre's Caſe) to enter into another Man's Park and ſteal his Deer, this is an unlawful Deſign; and if one of them kill the Keeper, and the other no way at all act in the doing of it, yet it will be Murder in the Perſon that did go along with that other in that unlawful Act: But the Lord Dacre's Caſe was accompanied with further Circumſtances; for there it did appear that the Lord Dacre's had agreed before hand to kill any Perſon that ſhould oppoſe them; there was that particular Circumſtance in that Caſe.

But, my Lords, I take it, with Submiſſion, to be very clear, that if two ſuch Perſons who made ſuch an Attempt to rob or ſteal Deer in a Park, ſhould be diſappointed, and ſhould leave the Park, and afterwards go to a Tavern, or an Ale-houſe, or any Place to drink, having quitted that Deſign, and ſome Hours afterwards, a Perſon cometh in that was not expected, or thought of, and a Quarrel ariſeth between one of thoſe two Perſons who were before together, and the Man that ſo came in, and he ſhall be killed, I take it that the other Perſon who was preſent will not be guilty of the Murder, unleſs he aided, or aſſiſted, or acted in it.

My Lords, I would ſpeak to your Lordſhips in a Caſe of this Nature with as good Authority as I could, beſides my own poor Reaſon to prove to your Lordſhips that there may be many Caſes where a Perſon may be preſent at the Time when another is murdered, and yet he ſhall be guilty of only Manſlaughter, and in ſome Caſes ſhall be guilty of no Crime at all.

The Caſe that I ſhall cite is out of a Treatiſe of a very Great and very Learned Man; it is the Book that goeth under the Name of Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown; the Caſe is this, You will find in that Book under the Title of Murder, Fol. 51. If A. and B. having Malice prepenſe, meet and fight, and C. the Servant of A. not acquainted therewith, take Part with A. his Maſter, and kill B. this is Murder in A. but only Manſlaughter in C. So here is an Inſtance where one is guilty of Murder, and the other only guilty of Manſlaughter, when both are preſent at the Time of the Fact committed. The ſame Law, ſaith he, it is, if C. came in ſuddenly, and took part with A. and killed B. In this Caſe it is Murder in A. if there was Malice prepenſed between him and B. but only Manſlaughter in C. who came in ſuddenly, and actually killed B.

My Lords, He goeth further, and ſaith, if one come by chance where one is killed, and doth not abet, he is neither Principal nor Acceſſory to that Murder or Manſlaughter; ſo that here are Caſes where it is Murder in one, and Manſlaughter only in the other; and here are Caſes where it is Murder in one, and not ſo much as Manſlaughter, or any Crime at all in the other.

Theſe that I have cited are Caſes where one has Malice againſt another, and he that joineth in the Quarrel doth not know it. But I will put the Caſe now, That a Perſon hath Malice againſt another, and one happeneth to be in his Company that knoweth he hath Malice againſt that other Perſon; if thoſe two that had Malice againſt one another, do fight, and the one kill the other, yet he that is preſent will not be guilty of Murder or Manſlaughter. For if the Law ſhould be, that Men are involved in the Guilt of Murder whenever they are preſent at a Time when one that beareth Malice againſt another killeth his Enemy, Converſation in the World would be very dangerous: For, my Lords, we know the World is too full of Malice, and there are few Men but have Acquaintance with ſuch as bear Malice to others; but if ſo be that no Man that is acquainted with one that bears Malice to another, may be in his Company but at the Peril of his Life; if his Enemy come in his way, and he happen to kill him in his Preſence, then no Man that is ever ſo innocent can be ſafe.

For I would put this Caſe to your Lordſhips: I am walking with a Friend, or an Acquaintance, that I know hath Malice againſt another, and that other Man cometh in the way, and they fight, and my Friend killeth that other Man, and I am no way aiding or aſſiſting in it, if that ſhould involve me in the Crime, ſurely the Law of England would be the moſt unreaſonable and dangerous Law to live under in the World. No doubt but in ſuch a Caſe the Perſon that is ſo preſent is unfortunate, but he is innocent, is not guilty.

For to make one guilty of Murder where Murder is committed, it muſt be either that he doth aid or abet, or ſome way aſſiſt in the killing of the Man, or he muſt have before that time agreed and confederated with the Perſon that killed him, that he would join therein at that Time, and he muſt be there for that End and Purpoſe: For if he never engaged or agreed to the Killing of him, nor was there for that Purpoſe, nor at the Time did any way act, or join, or aſſiſt, in the doing of it; in thoſe Caſes he is certainly not guilty.

My Lords, I dare not apply any of theſe Things to the preſent Caſe, becauſe I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips only propounded this as a Queſtion of Law, and not of Fact; your Lordſhips are the great Judges both of the one and the other: But what in the Argument or Reſolution of this Caſe, your Lordſhips will find agreeable to the preſent Caſe of my Lord now before you, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I will not repeat what has been offered, the Diſtinction is certainly true that has been made, that there are Caſes and Inſtances in Law where a Man may be guilty of Murder, when he is preſent where Murder is committed, and he may be guilty of Manſlaughter only, where another is guilty of Murder; and a Man may be preſent where Murder is committed, and be innocent both of the one and the other. But this I do venture to ſay,

That

That there is no Authority in our Law, that ſaith a Perſon preſent, when a Murder is committed, muſt be guilty either of Murder or Manſlaughter, it muſt be according to the Circumſtances of the Thing, either that he intended to aid or aſſiſt in the Killing, when he was there by Agreement before-hand, or muſt actually aid or aſſiſt by ſome Action or Encouragement.

But, with Submiſſion, the Authority of Law is very plain upon this Queſtion propoſed by your Lordſhips, That one Perſon may be guilty of Manſlaughter, and another of Murder at the ſame time. The Caſe that hath been put out of my Lord Hales, was, upon his Account, Authority ſufficient to quote, if we would only rely on him: But, my Lords, with Submiſſion, the Authority goeth a little higher yet; Stamford putteth the Queſtion before the Juſtices; A. that is, the Maſter, fighteth with B. and C. the Servant taketh Part with his Maſter, and killeth B. A. is guilty of Murder, and C. only of Manſlaughter.

And that Authority is followed afterwards in the Caſe of Salisbury, in Plowd. Com. Fol. 100. B. with the Reſolution of all the Judges in that Caſe, That one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manſlaughter, as to the ſame Fact; and Stamford doth expreſly ſay, as my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales quotes it out of him, that if a Man be preſent, but do not abet or aſſiſt, or contribute to the Thing, he is totally innocent, and neither Principal nor Acceſſory to the Murder or Manſlaughter.

My Lords, We do not find that our Law hath any way prohibited a Man to keep Company with one that oweth another a Spleen; ſure there ſhould be ſome Warning given about it, if that was the Law in ſuch a Caſe. The Law goeth no farther than to caution a Man, that he take care he doth not break the Law himſelf, that he doth not tranſgreſs the Bounds ſet him by the Law.

And it were a very hard Caſe upon a private Perſon, if it ſhould be otherwiſe; for no Law compelleth a private Perſon to part two that are fighting; if he doth attempt it, he doth it at his own Peril, as in that Caſe of A. the Maſter fighting with B. and C. the Servant taking part with his Maſter to part them, if B. be killed, C. is guilty of Manſlaughter, though his Deſign was only to part them, becauſe the Law putteth it not upon a private Perſon to do it; if it did, the Law would protect him for what he did in Obedience to it.

The Law is otherwiſe in the Caſe of a Magiſtrate, or a Conſtable, who endeavoureth to part any Perſons fighting, and to keep the Peace; if he happen ſo to kill a Man, he is totally innocent; but a private Perſon ſhall anſwer for it.

My Lords, I will not trouble your Lordſhips further; I hope it is plain, that Malice is abſolutely neceſſary to make a Man guilty of Murder, and there is no ſuch thing in this Caſe ſtated by your Lordſhips; and therefore I ſubmit the Matter to your Judgment.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I am of Council for this noble and young Lord the Priſoner at the Bar: I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips ſo far as to make any Repetition of what has been ſaid by thoſe Gentlemen that went before me.

But there was a Caſe in Plowden that was cited by Mr. Hawles, by the Name of Salisbury's Caſe; and I would crave leave to cite the Caſe that is next precedent; it is in that Book Fol. 98. There, my Lords, was an Indictment for Murder againſt ſeveral, and, among the reſt, againſt two, one for giving the Wound, and the Stroke, and the other for being preſent, and aiding the other; and they tell you how he was an Aider and an Abetter becauſe he was preſent, and put the Man upon whom the Aſſault was made in Terror, which Terror was the Occaſion that he could not defend his Life; and made him full as much a Principal as the other that gave him his Death's Wound. And there, my Lords, he citeth another ancient Record, which is Quarto Libro aſſiſarum Placito 25. of an Appeal of Murder by a Woman for the Death of her Husband againſt Sixteen; four whereof were Principals, and the other Acceſſories, where the Words are Preſence, Force and Aid.

How that will come up to this Caſe now before your Lordſhips, I am not to trouble you with the Conſideration of, you who have heard the Evidence, are beſt able to judge of it.

My Lords, by the ſame Reaſon and Rule that one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manſlaughter; one may be found guilty, and the other not guilty. As for Example, if A. commandeth B. to kill C. and afterwards it repenteth him of this Command, and he countermandeth it: yet notwithſtanding B. doth kill C. now B. that killed C. is guilty of Murder; but A. that countermanded it, is not guilty as Acceſſory; for his Malicious Intent did not continue till the murdering Stroke was given, and to make Murder, there muſt be a continuing Malice till the mortal Wound given. Caſes to this Purpoſe many might be cited; but for a full Authority there is my Lord Coke in his Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51.

My Lords, I have no more to ſay, but that by the ſame Rule, that one may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manſlaughter for the ſame Fact, by the ſame Rule, (as Circumſtances may be,) the one may be found guilty of Murder, and the other not guilty at all.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ſay that are of Council for the Priſoner?

Sir Tho. Powys. No, my Lord, I have nothing further to offer to your Lordſhips.

L. H. Stew. Have thoſe who are of Council for the King any thing to reply to this that is ſaid by the Council for the Priſoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, the Queſtion that is propoſed, is this,

In a Caſe where a Man ſhall murder another, Whether thoſe who are in his Company at the Time of the Murder, are ſo neceſſarily involved in the ſaid Crime, that they may not be ſeparated from the Crime of the ſaid Perſon, ſo as in ſome Caſes to be found guilty only of Manſlaughter?

My Lords, that which, with all Submiſſion, we would offer to your Lordſhips is this; We are intruſted by their Majeſties, to proſecute for the Death of one of their Subjects; there hath been a Caſe ſtated to your Lordſhips by the Evidence which hath been given before you; That which is mentioned in this Paper has nothing certain in it, we are to imagine a Caſe, and ſuppoſe Facts, and then to argue what will be the Law upon thoſe Facts ſuppoſed. When your Lordſhips are pleaſed to let us know what it is which your Lordſhips take to be the Fact of the Caſe before you, we ſhall be ready to ſpeak to the Law upon that Caſe, as it becomes us, and as it is our Duty to do; but till the Fact be ſo ſtated by your Lordſhips, and declared to be that which your Lordſhips take to be the Fact of my Lord Mohun's Caſe, we think it not conſiſtent with our Duty to enter into a Debate upon Suppoſals, or upon other Caſes than that which is in Judgment before your Lordſhips.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhips then pleaſe that the Judges give their Opinion?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, not to trouble your Lordſhips with any Repetition of what hath been ſaid, it is my Opinion, as Mr. Attorney General has declared his, That, as this Caſe is ſtated, we are bound not to give any Anſwer to it, unleſs your Lordſhips will pleaſe to tell us what the Caſe is upon the Evidence that hath been given before you.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lords, I deſire to be heard one Word in this Caſe. I take it for granted, that your Lordſhips here are Judges both of Fact and Law in this Caſe, and you are ſo entirely Judges of it, that no Body can interpoſe in giving their Opinions in relation to your Judgments, what the Fact is, and from the Fact the Law ariſeth. We, that are of Council for the King, muſt needs prejudice him as to the Evidence of the Fact that we have given, except we argue that which is the Fact of this particular Caſe, and the Law ariſing thereupon together; which is not neceſſary here, where your Lordſhips are Judges of both; and ſince you are better Judges of them than any one elſe can be. Therefore we do not think it our Duty to argue upon a Caſe put ad dextra, and obiter; and hope your Lordſhips will excuſe us from anſwering what hath been ſaid by the Council for the Priſoner; tho' I think it might be eaſily anſwered in every Point; but I ſhall not enter upon the debating of it. For your Lordſhips ſee what Caution we ought to have in relation to our Duty to the Government, which your Lordſhips will always expect we ſhould perform as exactly as we can. When the Fact that hath been proved in this Caſe is ſtated, your Lordſhips then are the proper Judges what it amounteth to in point of Law, or if your Lordſhips deſire that Council ſhould argue it, we ſhall be ready to do it.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lords the Judges, what ſay you to it? my Lords here expect your Opinion in this Caſe.

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will repeat the Queſtion; which is this:

In a Caſe where a Man ſhall murder another, whether thoſe who are in his Company are ſo neceſſarily involved in the ſaid Crime, that they may not be ſeparated from the Crime of the ſaid Perſon, ſo as in ſome Caſes to be found guilty only of Manſlaughter?

My Lords, I ſhall not inlarge upon the Matter, but humbly offer my Opinion to your Lordſhips as generally as the Queſtion. I am of Opinion, that the Crime of thoſe who are in the Company at the Time of the Murder committed, may be ſo ſeparated from the Crime of the Perſon that committeth the Murder, as in ſome Caſes they are only to be found guilty of Manſlaughter. I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips do not expect that I ſhould argue the Caſe, or explain my Opinion upon ſo general a Queſtion, by particular Inſtances, or run into a Conſideration of the different Caſes that may be put upon it, therefore I only deliver this as my Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of the ſame Opinion; I think the Import of your Lordſhips Queſtion is, Whether there may be a Caſe in which it is poſſible that one Perſon, who is in the Company of another at the Time that he committed Murder, may be guilty of Manſlaughter; and, my Lords, I think a Caſe may fall out, and may be ſo circumſtanced, as that it may be poſſible, that he who did accompany the Murderer, may be guilty only of Manſlaughter. Your Lordſhips only expect our Opinion, and therefore I will not go about to argue it.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, I ſhall not ſpend your Time to repeat the Queſtion, it hath been ſo often repeated; but I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lords Chief Juſtices: I muſt concur with them in it, that there may poſſibly be ſuch a Caſe, as that when Murder is committed where others are in Company, he that doth the Thing will be guilty of Murder, and thoſe that were in Company, guilty but of Manſlaughter. There may be ſuch a Caſe.

Earl of Carliſle. My Lords, to ſave your Lordſhips Time, unleſs the reſt of the Judges differ from thoſe that have ſpoken their Opinion, I think you need not trouble them to ſpeak to it ſeverally.

Mr. B. Turton. We are all of the ſame Opinion, my Lords; we cannot differ in Opinion upon ſuch a Caſe.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I humbly beg your Lordſhips leave to propoſe a Queſtion to my Lords the Judges for their Opinions.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. What is your Queſtion, my Lord of Monmouth?

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, the Queſtion is this,

A, conſcious of an Animoſity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him; whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to hand up your Paper, that my Lords the Judges may ſee it.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. What ſaith your Lordſhip, my Lord of Mulgrave?

Earl of Mulgrave. I only deſire, that the Priſoner at the Bar, if he hath a mind to it, may have his Council ſpeak to this Queſtion, before the Judges anſwer it, as was done in the other Caſe.

L. Mohun. I deſire, my Lords, my Council may have the Queſtion in Writing.

L. H. Stew. Make my Lord a Copy of it.

One Copy was delivered by the Clerk to the Priſoner, and by him to his Council, and another to the King's Council; and the Original was delivered to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that my Council may be heard to this Queſtion?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Sir T. Powis. My Lords, the Queſtion that this noble Peer hath been pleaſed to propoſe, is this:

A, conſcious of an Animoſity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him; whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

My Lords, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, I take it in this Caſe the Law is very clear, That as this Caſe is put, he that was in Company when the Murder was committed, under theſe Circumſtances, is not guilty of any Crime: But without queſtion he is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, Malice is ſo abſolutely neceſſary to Murder, either expreſs, or that which the Law calleth Malice implied, that there can be no Caſe where Murder can be committed without it; no Indictment can ever be good, unleſs Ex malitia ſua precogitata be alledged in it; becauſe this is abſolutely eſſential to Murder.

But, my Lord, if ſo be a Man that is preſent, not deſigning, or foreſeeing that unhappy Accident that doth fall out between his Friend with whom he is in company, and another Perſon that came accidentally to them, tho' Malice was between thoſe two, God forbid he ſhould be guilty, if he did neither foreſee it, nor any way acted in it.

He that is preſent muſt be involved in the Crime, either by ſome way aiding, abetting, or contributing to the Death of the Man, or there muſt be ſome precedent Combination and Agreement to do that Act which at that time was done; and that muſt be plainly and clearly proved: For his acting, his ſtanding by innocently and harmleſly, is ſo great an Evidence of his not concurring, that it muſt be a mighty Proof of Malice that muſt convict that Man of a preceding Agreement to do the Fact; and if it doth not appear plainly and manifeſtly, that he agreed before-hand, or acted then, and abetted and contributed to the Thing; I ſay, unleſs this be clear and manifeſt, it is no Queſtion, but in Law, he is innocent of the Murder.

For in ſuch a Caſe it is plain he never had prepenſed Malice expreſs, nor is there any Evidence of that which the Law calleth Malice implied; which is when a Man killeth another without Provocation, that is, when he that doth the Act, had no Provocation, or killeth an Officer in the Proſecution of his Office, That the Law calleth Malice implied. But then that is never but in the Perſon that did the Act, and not in the Perſons who were preſent at that time, unleſs before-hand they had agreed to do that Act; and therefore they cannot be guilty of Murder.

And this, my Lords, is what I humbly offer to your Lordſhips Conſideration, in relation to the Caſe put by that Noble Lord.

Mr. Hawles. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe to favour me with a Word on the ſame ſide with Sir Tho. Powys, and I ſhall be very ſhort in the matter.

The King's Council did complain that the laſt Caſe was not fully ſtated, and therefore they could not ſpeak to it; my Lords, with Submiſſion, this Caſe is fully ſtated: there was nothing in the other Caſe ſaid of Malice between him that was murdered, and him that killed him; but here it is ſaid, That the Perſon preſent was not conſcious of any Malice, nor had any manner of hand in the doing of it: And then, with Submiſſion, my Lords, upon the Queſtion, Whether he was not guilty of Murder? If this was a ſpecial Verdict found by twelve Men, and referred to the Judges, I do not at all doubt but their Judgment would be, That he was not guilty. For tho' in a Special Verdict, where Malice is not found, the Priſoner would be acquitted; yet if it be expreſly found in the Verdict that he did not know of any Malice between them, then, with Submiſſion, there would be no Colour to find him guilty of any thing.

A Lord interrupted him, and ſaid, The Caſe was put of one conſcious of the Malice.

Mr. Hawles, My Lords, I beg your Pardon, I confeſs it is ſo, I did miſtake it; but, with Submiſſion, that will not not much alter the matter. If he was conſcious, that will not make him guilty; for that Conſciouſneſs of his is no matter of Crime: if he did not act any thing, or agree to do any thing before hand, but only was in Company with the Perſon that had Malice againſt another, that will not make him guilty of any Crime whatſoever.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I ſhall ſpeak but one Word to it; I obſerve the great Streſs of the Caſe lieth upon the Word being conſcious of the Malice between B and C. Now as to that, with Submiſſion, I conceive, and am of Opinion, that as this Caſe is, A is not guilty of Murder, and for Authority, I ſhall rely upon the Caſes in Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 40. And my Lord Coke's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51. The Caſe is this, If a Man happen to be in Company where Murder is committed, or Felony, and he cometh not there on purpoſe, or by confederacy to do it, in that Caſe, tho' Murder be committed, and he doth not endeavour to part them, this is no Murder in him, for he is puniſhable by Fine and Impriſonment, if not an Infant; but if he was an Infant, he is not puniſhable at all, for he is not Conuſant of the Law in ſuch a Caſe. But in this Caſe, except Malice prepenſed, expreſs, or implied, be proved, without doing any thing or abetting, he is not guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Gentlemen, you that are of the King's Council, have you any thing to ſay to this Queſtion?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, here is a Caſe put which I hear from the Council on the other ſide, is certainly enough ſtated. My Lords, if this be ſtated to us, as that which is agreed to be the Fact of the preſent Caſe, we are ready to ſpeak to it; but if this be not taken by your Lordſhips, to be my Lord Mohun's Caſe, and as ſuch ſtated to us, then we muſt humbly beg to be excuſed. I know your Lordſhips will be tender in this matter, and as well pleaſed that we hold to that which we conceive to be our Duty in reference to that Station in which we ſerve the King, as with any Forwardneſs in us to anſwer Queſtions: And therefore we beg your Lordſhips Excuſe for ſaying nothing more to it.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I did not propoſe it as a Caſe ſtated and agreed by your Lordſhips, it is only a Caſe particularly ſtated for my own Satisfaction.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. If your Grace pleaſe, let the King's Council know, that they are not to ask you the Queſtion, Whether the Lords are agreed what the Caſe is? They are to anſwer ſuch Queſtions as are propoſed, and not to ask any ſuch Queſtion.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, with that noble Lord's Pardon I did not ask any Queſtion; all that I ſaid was, That when a Caſe is agreed to, and ſtated by your Lordſhips to be the preſent Caſe, Case we would be ready to speak to it, and till we receive that Intimation from your Grace, we shall think our selves excused from giving any Answer to other Questions.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think we must go on, and if any Lord has any more Questions to propose, he may propose them.

E. of Nottingham. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham.

E. of Nottingham. Your Lordships will not certainly require of the King's Council to answer any Questions that they think improper for them to speak to; but when a Question hath been proposed by any noble Lord, to which the Council for the Prisoner hath been heard, and the King's Council think not fit to speak to it, there is nothing more requisite, but that in the Presence of the Prisoner (as the Law requireth it should be) you do demand the Opinion of the Judges.

L. H. Stew. What say you to it, my Lord Chief-Justice?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question.

A, conscious of an Animosity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him; Whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

And, my Lords, as this Case is stated, I do conceive, that A is not guilty of the Murder, for it appeareth the Meeting was casual, and there was no Design in A against C, and therefore tho' A did know of the Malice between B and C, yet it was not unlawful for A to keep Company with B, but he might go with him any where, if it was not upon a Design against C.

Therefore I take it as this Case is put, that C came accidentally into the Company where A and B were, and then, without any Design in A, B killeth C. This is not Murder, indeed no Offence in A.

L. C. J. Treby. If it please your Lordships, as this Case is put, I think it is not an Offence of Murder or Manslaughter in A; it dependeth upon the Words as the last Question did. For the former Question was put generally, Whether there might not be a Case found or framed, wherein one might be guilty of Murder, and the other of Manslaughter? So here it dependeth upon the Word [Happeneth], which I take to signify, (as my Lord doth) a casual coming into, or being in the Company.

Now, my Lords, when B had communicated to A this malicious Purpose to kill C, it stood uncertain, whether he to whom B had communicated it did consent; if he had any way declared his Consent, that he would go to such a Place, and stay there with B for such a Purpose, then it had been Murder in both; but if he meerly was silent, and only kept B Company, perhaps with an Intent to dissuade him from it, or possibly without any Consideration at all, and then the Person intended to be killed accidentally came by, and is killed by B, A doing nothing towards it: In that Case, it is neither Murder nor Manslaughter in A.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, as this Case is, it seemeth to be meer accidental the coming of C into their Company, for it is said, Happeneth to come; and so though A did know that there was an Animosity between B and C, yet declaring no Intent of going with B to that Purpose, but coming with B into a Place where C accidentally came or happen'd to be, between whom and B there is a Quarrel, and C is killed; I do not take it at all that A is concerned, but meerly as any other Person that accidentally was there, and in that Case he cannot be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter, or any other Crime.

E. of Devonshire. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Devonshire.

E. of Devon. If the rest are of the same Opinion, you need not give them any farther Trouble, I think.

Judges. We are of the same Opinion.

E. of Scarborough. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Scarborough.

E. of Scarborough. I humbly beg your Lordships Leave, that I may offer a Question to your Lordships, to be proposed to the Judges, and the Question is this:

Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and some Days after A shall be with B upon some other Design, where C shall pass by, or come in the Place where A and B are, and C shall be killed by B; A standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part against C; whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, give your Paper to the Clerk. (Which was done.)

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, doth your Lordship desire that your Council may have a Copy of this Question, and be heard to it?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, if you please.

Then a Copy was given to him for his Council, and another to the King's Council, and a third the Judges had.

Sir Tho. Powis. Will your Lordships please to favour me with a few Words, and I shall trouble your Lordships very little, because I have said that already to your Lordships which will be an Answer to a good Part of this Case: The Case is this:

Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and some Days after A shall be with B upon some other Design, where C shall pass by, or come in the Place where A and B are, and C shall be killed by B; A standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part against C; whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lord, with humble Submission, we do take it, that the Law in this Case is likewise very clear, that A is not guilty of Murder: For as this Case is put, there doth not appear (nay, the contrary doth appear) that he had any manner of Malice to this Man that was killed, nor any Hand in the Killing of him: And, as I said before to your Lordships, (and I hope the Judges will verify us in that, and your Lordships will be of the same Opinion) there can be no Case wherein a Man shall be guilty of Murder, but where there is Malice against the Person so murdered, or some way abetting and assisting in the Killing of him, or what the Law calleth Implied Malice.

But in this Case that is now put, there is neither express Malice, but the contrary appearing, nor any implied Malice, which is by Construction of Law; the Person that was by, and heard B threaten C before, yet doth no way aid or assist to the Killing of him; and therefore I think, with Submiſſion, the Law, and all our Law-Books, and Reaſon itſelf, are clear for the acquitting of A in this Caſe.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Reſolutions that have been given in the Caſes before, will warrant us in our Opinions in this, that A is not guilty of Murder in this Caſe: For I think it was ſaid by the Judges, That notwithſtanding a Man knew another had a Deſign upon a third Perſon, yet it was lawful to keep Company with him, if he did not join with him in the Deſign. Now here it doth appear, that A keepeth B Company, but not upon that Deſign, for he had no Malice to C nor had any Hand in his Death, and C cometh in by accident into the Company or Place where they are: With Submiſſion, my Lords, A is totally not guilty, for there was no Malice in him; and though he was there, he was there upon his lawful Occaſions; and if they two fight, the beſt Courſe he can take is to ſtand ſtill and do nothing; and therefore he cannot be guilty of Murder or Manſlaughter.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but this Word to ſay, His being there was lawful, C cometh there but by accident, and when they two do fight, his not parting of them doth not make him guilty of the other's Death; here is no Malice, therefore he is not guilty of Murder, and he hath done nothing towards the Fact, therefore he is not guilty of Manſlaughter.

L. H. Stew. Will you ſay any Thing to this Queſtion, you that are of the King's Council?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to ſpeak to the preſent Caſe, when we receive Intimation from your Lordſhips that what is put is the preſent Caſe.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. My Lords, if they put a Caſe of Fact to be argued as a Caſe of Law, and from time to time alledge Facts which are not in the Caſe before us, we cannot ſpeak to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to argue the Caſe of the Priſoner at the Bar when it is ſtated; but till then, we humbly beg your Pardon: We think we are not bound to ſpeak to other Caſes.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Juſtice, What ſay you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will put the Queſtion:

Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and ſome Days after A ſhall be with B upon ſome other Deſign where C ſhall paſs by, or come in the Place where A and B are, and C ſhall be killed by B; A ſtanding by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part againſt C; whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that A in this Caſe will not be guilty of Murder or Manſlaughter: For it doth not appear by the ſtating of the Caſe, that A did conſent to the Deſign, or in any wiſe contribute to the Fact.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Juſtice Treby.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I take this Queſtion to be the ſame in Subſtance as to the Point in Law with the laſt; and am of Opinion that A is not guilty of Murder or Manſlaughter.

Mr. J. Nevil. I am of the ſame Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If all the reſt of you are of the ſame Opinion, you may ſpare your ſelves the Trouble of delivering it particularly.

Judges. We are all of the ſame Opinion.

[Then there was a little Pauſe; and afterwards the Earl of Kingſton ſtood up.

Earl of Kingſton. My Lords, I deſire for my own private Satisfaction to know,

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of that Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. St. My Lord, I muſt crave your Excuſe, there is another Queſtion to precede this.

E. of Devon. My Lords, I had a Queſtion to ask; but it being much to the ſame Purpoſe with the two laſt, I think it better to wave it, for there hath been given an Anſwer to it already.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord of Kingſton, will you be pleaſed to deliver up your Paper to the Table? [Which was done.]

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you deſire your Council may have a Copy of this Queſtion?

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. I deſire your Grace will hear the Queſtion. Pray let it be read, that we may know what it is.

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl. of Crown. Readeth.

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. I think, my Lords, in a Caſe of this Nature we cannot be too exact: I humbly conceive that is not a proper Queſtion to be put, therefore I move that we may adjourn to conſider of it, whether it ſhall be put or not, if that Lord do inſiſt upon it.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingſton, Doth your Lordſhip inſiſt on this Queſtion being put?

E. of Kingſton. Yes, my Lords, I do, and I muſt inſiſt upon it; for I think I cannot give my private Opinion in this Caſe without Satisfaction in it.

Lords. Then Adjourn, Adjourn.

L. H. Stew. This Court is adjourned into the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords went back to their own Houſe in the ſame Order, and debated this Matter amongſt themſelves for about an Hour.

Between ſix and ſeven in the Evening the Lords returned into the Court in the ſame Order, and being ſeated on their Benches, and his Grace in the Chair before the Throne, they proceeded thus:

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Juſtice and you the Judges——

L. Cornwallis. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lord, Before your Grace giveth any Directions, I think you ſhould call the Priſoner.

L. H. Stew. Is not the Priſoner at the Bar?

L. Corn.

L. Cornwallis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call for the Priſoner.

Then Proclamation was made for the Governor of the Tower to bring forth the Priſoner, and he was brought as before.

L. H. Stew. I am to let you that are of Council for the King and the Priſoner know, That if any Queſtion be put by any of my Lords, which any of you ſhall not think fit to give an Anſwer to, my Lords will take it for granted either on the one Part or on the other, that the Reaſon is, becauſe it is not neceſſary to give any Anſwer; and then they will proceed to have the Anſwer of you, my Lords the Judges. And now for my ſelf, I muſt deſire your Lordſhips will give me leave to come down again to the Wool-Pack.

Lords. Aye, ay.

Then his Grace came down, and ſeated himſelf on the Wool-Pack.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingſton, Will you pleaſe to propoſe your Queſtion?

Earl of Kingſton. My Lord, my Queſtion is this, which I deſire the Judges Opinion in for my own Satisfaction:

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you deſire your Council may have a Copy of that Queſtion?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Read it aloud, and deliver a Copy to my Lord.

The Queſtion was read by the Clerk of the Crown, and one Copy of it delivered to the Priſoner's Council, and another to the King's Council, and a third to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure, That my Council be heard to this Caſe?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Sir T. Powis. The Caſe that is put, my Lords, is this:

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime which the Party who had the Deſign and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I ſhall not inſiſt upon the ſame Privilege that the King's Council did even now do, to decline ſpeaking to any Caſe that your Lordſhips ſhall put. But I hope your Lordſhips will permit me to ſay, That I do not admit this to be the Caſe of my Lord Mohun, and I hope that my ſpeaking to it ſhall not be taken as any Admiſſion that this is his Caſe. But as this Caſe is put with that Allowance, that I ſpeak to it not as his Caſe, I do take it, that this Perſon thus preſent at the Killing of the third Man is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, there are but two Circumſtances in the Caſe that can draw him into any Danger:

The Firſt is, That he knew another Perſon had a Deſign to make an Aſſault upon a third Man. And,

The Second is, That he who had the Knowledge of this Deſign, was alſo preſent when upon that Aſſault that third Perſon happened to be killed.

But, my Lords, I do take it, that in this Caſe neither of theſe Ingredients will make this Man guilty of Murder.

As to the Firſt, The knowing that a Man has a Deſign to make an Aſſault upon a third Perſon, that taken by itſelf is no Crime. It frequently happeneth, that a Man heareth what others threaten, that they will aſſault and beat ſuch an one; I may know that another doth ſo deſign, and that he will watch his Opportunity for the doing of it, and yet my meer Knowledge, my meer knowing of it, doth not make me guilty of any Crime, tho' I do not endeavour to prevent it.

I confeſs, it doth become a good Man upon ſuch Knowledge to do all that he can to prevent ſuch Beginning of Miſchief, but if he doth not prevent it, that is no Crime.

The Second Matter is, That tho' he did know of this Deſign, he was alſo ſo unfortunate as not to prevent it; nay more, he was preſent when the Aſſault was made, and that Aſſault is attended with the Death of the Party aſſaulted, but he never acted in it, never abetted it. Take all this together, and yet he is not guilty of Murder, nay, perhaps not of any Crime, at moſt only of a Miſdemeanour.

For it is no more than this: I knew another Perſon did intend to aſſault a third Man; I was preſent when he did aſſault him, but did not prevent it either before he made it, tho' I knew he deſigned it, nor whilſt he was making the Aſſault upon which the Man is killed. That is all that this Thing doth amount to, and no Man can ſay, with humble Submiſſion, That this can involve me in the Crime of Murder.

It is true, if I command A to beat C, and he according to my Command doth fall upon him, and ſo beat him, that he dieth; this maketh me guilty of his Death, becauſe what is done by that Command of mine is my doing; therefore tho' I only commanded him to beat him, yet he dying upon that beating, which was made purſuant to my Command, I that gave the Command muſt anſwer for it, and am guilty of all that followeth thereupon.

But if I only know, that another Perſon deſigneth to do ſuch a Thing, and am neither commanding, aiding nor aſſiſting in the doing of it, but only preſent at the Time, but did not interpoſe to prevent it; that doth not make me ſuch an Agent in this Matter, as that I ſhould be any ways guilty of his Death if it doth enſue. I take it this Caſe cometh to no more than this, there is no Malice precedent, no Sort of abetting, aiding or aſſiſting, but a bare declining to prevent the Aſſault, and that will not amount to any Thing that is Capital; if it be any Offence, it can only be conſtrued as a Miſdemeanour, but neither Murder nor Manſlaughter.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to ſpare me one Word on the ſame Side: It is no Manner of Crime for a Man to know, that another doth deſign to lie in wait to murder a third Perſon, much leſs to aſſault him.

There is but one Caſe that I know of in Law, where the Knowledge of an ill Deſign, without Diſcovery and Endeavour to prevent it, is an Offence, and that is in the Caſe of High-Treaſon; and yet even there the bare Knowledge doth not make make a Man guilty of Treaſon: And it was a hard Caſe if it ſhould, for it is not in the Power of any innocent Man to ſay, that he ſhall not know of an ill Deſign, either of Murder, or High-Treaſon.

It is true, in the Caſe of Treaſon, if I conceal it, it is a Crime, but it is not Treaſon, but only Miſpriſion of Treaſon; which is Forfeiture of Lands, and perpetual Confinement in Priſon during my Life: But it doth not extend to any other Matter; for tho' I know, and do conceal it, that is no Manner of Crime at all, tho' that is farther than this Caſe putteth it; for it only goeth to the Knowing, and not to the Concealing.

And, my Lords, with Submiſſion, this would be likewiſe a hard Caſe if the Law was otherwiſe; For ſometimes a Man may apprehend he knoweth of a Deſign, when there is no ſuch Thing deſigned. Your Lordſhips know where a certain Gentleman ſaid he would kill any Man that did oppoſe him, when he neither deſigned it, nor executed any ſuch Purpoſe: And in ſuch a Caſe, tho' it had been well done of the Perſon that heard of the Deſign, to have gone and informed the third Perſon (and if he had, I believe your Lordſhips would have had no Occaſion of a Trial at this Time, for it might have been determined another Way) yet his not doing it is not a Crime.

Then further, my Lords, a Perſon's being preſent at ſuch a Time is his Misfortune, but not at all his Fault; he can no more help the Action, than he could the ill Deſign, or his own Knowledge of that Deſign. It is a complicated Misfortune, both to know it, and be preſent at the Execution of it; but without having any Hand in it, it can be no Offence: For indeed, it is as to him no more than a Man's being preſent that did not know of ſuch a Deſign. And if this was a Special Verdict, upon an Indictment for Murder, I doubt not but my Lords the Judges would give their Judgment, that the Defendant was not guilty.

Mr. Price. I have only this Word to add, my Lords; I do take it, That the bare Privity of this Deſign, with the bare perſonal Preſence of him that was ſo privy when this Act is committed by another Man, will not amount to make him Principal; and ſo he will not be guilty of Murder: For we find, that to make a Man Principal in Murder, there muſt be aiding and abetting, and only being preſent will not do it. Now the aiding and abetting muſt be, either by commanding or aſſiſting, or putting the Perſon aſſaulted in Terror and Fear, or he muſt be there ready, and deſigning to aſſiſt in Caſe of Oppoſition. Theſe are Facts that the Law requireth to the making a Man Principal in Murder: and bare Privity, with a Mind to aſſault, and bare Preſence, when upon the Aſſault the Man is killed, will not amount to make a Man Principal, and conſequently guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, Do you think fit to ſay any Thing to what the Council for the Priſoner have alledged?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor any other of the King's Council?

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Are ye all of that Mind?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I am of that Mind, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. And ſo am I.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord Chief-Juſtice, what ſay you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will repeat the Queſtion:

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime, with the Party who had the Deſign and killed him, tho' he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I am of Opinion this is no Murder nor Manſlaughter; he that knew of the Deſign of aſſaulting, only happened to be preſent when the Aſſault was made, and the Party killed; but if he did not contribute to his Death, he is not guilty of Murder. This Queſtion is much to the ſame Effect with the Queſtion that was put before: But if the Perſon that knew of this Deſign did adviſe it, or agree to it, or lay in wait for it, or reſolved to meet the third Perſon that was killed, with him that killed him, it would be Murder: But as this Caſe is put, it is neither Murder nor Manſlaughter.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am humbly of the ſame Opinion as this Caſe is put. The Perſon to whom this Matter of the Deſign to lie in wait to aſſault another is communicated, is only paſſive; he only receiveth the Notice of it, and doth nothing towards the Fact. But if by going to the Place, directing, perſuading, promiſing Aſſiſtance, or encouraging, he had diſcovered his Conſent, or had lain in wait himſelf, then he had been guilty: But if he did nothing, but only receive this Notice, and then the Perſon aſſaulted happened to come by, and is killed in his Preſence, this is but an Accident, and doth not involve him in the Murder. And I think in Effect, it is the ſame with the ſecond Queſtion that was propoſed. There it was put, of one that had an Animoſity againſt another, here it is put, of one that lay in wait to aſſault him; There it was put, of accompanying him to the Place where the Party was killed; here it is, of his being killed in his Preſence: So that the Reſolution muſt be the ſame in this Caſe that was given in that.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I ſhall not ſpend any of your Lordſhips Time: I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lords that ſpoke before, and for the Reaſons that they have given.

L. H. St. If they are all of the ſame Opinion, I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips will not require their particular delivering it.

Lords. No, no.

Judges. We are all of the ſame Opinion,

L. H. Stew. I am now to know of your Lordſhips, whether there be any of you that have any more Queſtions to ask?

E. of Nottingham. My Lord.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham.

E. of Nottingham. The Queſtion that I have to propoſe to your Lordſhip is the ſame that hath been already offered to you, but with ſome little Variation; for I do find, my Lords, the Judges do interpret this Perſon's being killed in the Preſence of another, to be upon an accidental Meeting. I would propoſe to your Lordſhips, that the Judges may anſwer what the Law would be, when a Perſon, knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, accompanieth companied him at that Time that that Deſign is to be executed, Whether it be the ſame Crime in the one as the other?

L. H. Stew. If your Lordſhip have your Queſtion in Writing, pray deliver it in.

Earl of Nottingham. I will immediately, my Lord. (Then he did put it in Writing.)

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe that it may be handed to the Table? (Which was done.)

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl. of Crown. Readeth.

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Deſign, if it ſhall happen that the third Perſon be killed at that Time in the Preſence of him who knew of that Deſign, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you deſire a Copy of this?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Carry my Lord one.

(Then Copies were delivered as before.)

L. H. Stew. Well, Sir, what ſay you to that Queſtion?

Sir Tho. Powys. The Caſe that is now propounded is this:

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Deſign, if it ſhall happen that the third Perſon be killed at that Time in the Preſence of him who knew of that Deſign, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I ſhall not, (though I am of Council for this noble Lord) decline or refuſe ſpeaking to this Queſtion; ſtill, my Lords, with that Saving which I know your Lordſhips will allow me, that I am very far from admitting that this which goeth much farther than the laſt Caſe, is the Caſe of my Lord Mohun. Whether your Lordſhips will permit the King's Council, who have declined ſpeaking to any of the Caſes hitherto, as not being, as they pretend, my Lord's Caſe, now to ſpeak to this which we do much leſs admit to be ſo, than they did the others, will be in your Lordſhips Pleaſure to determine, but I ſhall not decline to ſpeak to it with that Saving.

And truly, my Lords, with humble Submiſſion, I do take it, that as this Caſe is put, the Party who accompanied the other in ſuch Manner as in this Caſe it is ſtated, is not Guilty of Murder. I know it was intended by that Noble Lord who propoſed the Queſtion, that it ſhould be admitted, that beyond all Doubt the Fact was ſo as here it is ſtated; and then the Queſtion is, What the Law will be where the Fact is thus admitted and agreed to on all Sides: And if there was ſuch a Caſe, (for, my Lords, I ſpeak to this as a Caſe at large) if there was ſuch a Caſe where the Fact is beyond all Queſtion made out to be ſo as it is here ſtated; yet I take it that in a Caſe of Life, which is the Caſe now before your Lordſhips, the Party will not be guilty of Murder.

My Lords, here is a further Circumſtance added in this Caſe than what hath as yet been inſerted into any of the other Caſes; that is, That the Party knoweth of the Deſign of him that he accompanieth to Aſſault a third Man, and doth accompany him in his Deſign, and then is preſent when the Deſign is executed; yet all theſe together, will not, as I humbly conceive, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips Judgment, make this to be Murder, becauſe it doth not appear in this Caſe that he did accompany him with an Intention to execute this Matter, or to aid and aſſiſt him in the doing of it: There is no ſuch Circumſtance in the Caſe, and 'tis that which muſt be the Thing that will draw him in to be guilty of Murder.

For if two Men (to put a Caſe, which I hope I may do, with your Lordſhips Pardon, to explain my ſelf) ſhould be travelling upon the Way, and one of the Perſons ſhould acquaint the other, that at ſuch an Inn, there is a Servant that he is reſolved to beat, and this Perſon that has this Matter imparted to him, doth accompany the other in the Journey, (which I take it anſwereth the Knowing the Deſign, and Accompanying him in the Deſign) and, when they come to the Inn, the Thing is executed in the Preſence of the Party that knew of ſuch a Deſign, and it doth fall out that Death doth enſue upon it, unleſs he that did accompany him did ſome way or other act, contribute, or aſſiſt in the doing of it, it doth ſtill remain a thing whereof he had only Privity and Knowledge, which he had done well, eſpecially (in regard of the Conſequence of it) to have prevented. And he is highly blameable, that he would accompany a Man who had ſuch a Deſign to do an unlawful Act, and did not prevent him from executing of it.

All this is blameable in him, but it will not, as I conceive, be Murder in him; for I muſt inſiſt upon that in Point of Law, that to make any thing Murder, there muſt be prepenſed Malice in the Perſon that is to be found Guilty of it, or ſome precedent Agreement to do it, or ſome Act of Aiding or Aſſiſting of the Perſon who doth it; but as this Caſe is, here is nothing of Malice doth appear, or that the Perſon who accompanied the other in his Deſign had any ſort of Malice againſt the Perſon aſſaulted. And it doth not appear that he did any way aſſiſt in the doing of it. He was preſent at the Time when the other executed the Deſign he had imparted to him, but he never joined in it, nor had any Malice precedent, nor did aſſiſt or do any Act at that Time; and therefore I take it in this Caſe, which (as I ſaid), I am very far from admitting to be my Lord Mohun's Caſe, that the Party who accompanied the other is not Guilty.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, Though we who are of Council for this Noble Lord, the Priſoner, do not think this Caſe, that is put, to be his Caſe, for, with Submiſſion, if the Indictment be looked upon, your Lordſhip will find ——

L. H. Stew. Sir, I muſt ſtop you there, you are not to tell my Lords what your Opinion is as to the Fact, for of that my Lords are the Judges, you are to take the Caſe fairly, as a Caſe put, and you are to inform my Lords what the Law, in your Opinion, would be upon ſuch Caſe. It is not before you, but before my Lords only, to conſider whether this be applicable to my Lord Mohun's Caſe or not.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I ſhall obſerve your Directions in that Matter, and, with humble Submiſſion, this is not Murder in him who accompanieth the other, as this Caſe is put; for

in

in every Case of Murder the Indictment must be either, that he actually killed him, or aided and assisted him that did kill him. But, with Submission there is neither of these in this Case.

He did know of the Design, there is no Crime, he did accompany him in it, that is, he bore him Company at that Time; he went with him to the Place where he executed his Design, but he did nothing when he came there to further, promote, or encourage the Execution of it; and therefore it can never make him Principal, nor Accessory to the Murder.

Mr. Price. I shall only say this, my Lords, that I take it, that the bare going with him in this Design, without doing any Act, doth not involve him in the Confederacy, as Aiding and Abetting. Something must be done or said, either he must assist or advise, or otherwise he cannot be Principal, and consequently cannot be guilty of this Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any thing to say to this?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Council do not desire to be heard to this Case neither.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear you, Sir, what you say?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not desire to speak to it.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord Chief Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. This is the Question:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen, that the third Person be killed at that Time in the Presence of him who knew that Design and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had that Design and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, as for this last, I desire to make some Observations upon the Words, Had no actual Hand. By these Words, I suppose, is meant he did not draw his Sword, or lay any Hand upon the Person slain, or give any actual Assistance to the other Person at that time when the Third Person is slain, but was only in Company, and a Looker-on.

E. of Nottingham. My Meaning in those Words is, That with his Hand he gave no Stroke.

L. C. J. Holt. That, my Lords, I take to be the Meaning, he did not give an actual Stroke, nor held the Person whilst the other killed him, nor used any Violence.

Now, I am of Opinion, my Lords, that this is Murder in the Person that did accompany the other in the Design. For he being acquainted with the Design, and knowing of the Intention of the Party to commit Murder, or do an unlawful Act, upon which Death might ensue, accompanying him in that Design, he shews an Approbation of it, and gives him greater Courage to put it in Execution. Which is an Aiding, Abetting, Assisting and Comforting, which are the Words used in such Indictments, and so my humble Opinion is, it is Murder in that Person that accompanied the other, as well as in him that did the Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, as this Case is, I think the accompanying of him in that Design (which are the effectual Words upon which the Question turneth) is Murder.

Here is first of all the Party that designeth the Assault, and he doth, pursuant to that Design, make this Assault, and thereupon doth kill the Third Man; this undoubtedly is Murder in him, for here was Malice prepensed, an Intent of Bodily Hurt to the Party, and in Pursuance of this Intent, Death ensueth; this is unquestionably Murder in him.

Then the Question is, What Crime it is in him to whom this is made known, and who accompanied the other in that Design, knowing of it? I take this to be a Consent to the Design, and to the Execution of it. It is more than knowing and not revealing of it, though that was his Duty to have done, (and so the Council for the noble Lord did admit, that it was a Misdemeanor in him not to hinder such a Breach of the Peace.)

But here I say is more than that: He goeth with him to the Place, and accompanieth him in order to the executing the Design, and this is an Aiding and Abetting of it. If a Man say to another, I intend to assault and beat such a one; come along with me, stand by me, and see it done; and the other consenteth, and accordingly goeth along with him, and accompanieth him whilst he beats and kills the Man; this is an Approving, Encouraging, and Emboldening of him in his mischievous Purpose, and shews such concurring Malice in that other Person, as renders him guilty of the same Crime with him that with his Hand and Weapon beat and killed the Man.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, as this Case is, and as I take the Law to be, this is Murder. It is a Case of one's lying in wait, and another Person doth accompany him in the Design, he that did design the lying in wait having told it to him, and then he is present at the Execution. I take it as Law, if the Party is killed, he that is present, and cometh with the other upon that Design, shall be taken to come to assist or abet the other, or defend him if any thing of Opposition should happen, and that I take to be Murder.

L. H. S. Are you all of the same Opinion?

Judges. We are all of that Opinion, it it Murder in both in that Case.

E. of Devon. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

E. of Devon. My Lords, I desire they may all give their Reasons, as well as their Opinions, as this Case is.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion with my Lord Chief Justices that spoke before me, that this is Murder, and my Reason is this: First, He knew of the Design, which was an unlawful Design; then he accompanied him as this Case is put, not only to the Place, but in the Design, which differs the Case from his being present by Accident; for by his going along with him he doth encourage him to do that, which perhaps singly the other would not venture upon, and going and being present when the Design is executed, upon which the Man is slain; I take it he is as much guilty as the Person that struck the Stroke in Point of Law.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion, I take it to be Murder in him that knew the Design, and did accompany the other in it, though he did nothing at all towards the killing of the Man.

For, my Lords, it is the Intention of the Party that diversifieth the Act. If he came there with an ill Intention, and to assist him if need did require, as it is plain he did if he did accompany him in the Design, which is a strong Evidence

dence of the Intention: And, my Lords, Nature hath allowed no Man a Casement into another's Heart, and therefore we can judge of no Man's Intention, but by Circumstances of the Fact appearing without; and then, I say, if the Fact be so apparently from the Circumstances of it, that he knew of the Design, and accompanied him in it, it is a strong Evidence that he came to assist him; and though he doth nothing actually in the Matter, yet being present to assist him if Occasion did require, it is plain he did aid and abet him in the Action, and so it is as much Murder in him, as in the other that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion; the thing that differeth this from the former Case is, That this Person was in the Design with the other; for that, my Lords, I take to be accompanying him in the Design in order to the Execution of it, for bare Privity and Knowledge of the Design would not do it; but if he be with him at the Time, and accompany in order to the Execution, that maketh him as much criminal, as he that did actually occasion the Death of the Person, for he was present in the Company, and ready to assist him in the evil Design, which I conceive is as much Murder as the other.

Mr. B. Powel. My Lords, I am of Opinion, as this Case is now put, That this is Murder in both, and my Reason is this: Where one Person is privy to a Design of Felony, or committing some Personal Violence, as this Case is, and is not only privy to it, but goeth along with him, and accompanieth him in putting this Design in Execution, tho' he may not think it will extend so far as Death, but doth only intend Beating, and hath no Personal Hand, or doth otherwise contribute; but by his being with the other Person when he executeth his Design of assaulting, and the Party beaten dieth, they are both guilty of Murder.

L. Mohun. My Lords, Will your Lordships give leave, that my Council may answer some things that the Judges have said?

L. H. Stew. No, my Lord, you must not Reply after the Judges have given their Opinions. Have any of your Lordships any more Questions to propose?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I have one.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I am very sorry to have Occasion to ask any Questions in this Case, but I humbly desire a Question may be answered by the Judges, which is this:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said, he would stab John, upon which William said, He would stand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the same Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

L. H. S. Pray deliver in your Paper, my Lord.

It was deliver'd in, and read by the Clerk of the Crown, and Copies given of it as before.

L. H. Stew. What say you to this Question, Gentlemen?

Sir Tho. Powys. May it please your Lordships, this Question runneth thus:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said, he would stab John; upon which William said, he would stand by his Friend; and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the same Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas; or what Crime William is guilty of?

My Lords, I do not question but many Cases may be put which will be plainly Murder, and if this Case should be attended with Fact equal to the State of this Case, I believe it will amount to Murder. But upon this Difference the Resolution of it will depend, and every Case must stand upon its own Circumstances.

If a Person do generally say, I am fully resolved I will stab such a Man, and say so without Condition or Limitation, that he will do it; and another doth declare his Intention to assist and aid him, by saying, I will stand by you in it, and afterwards the thing is executed in his Presence, who so concurred; I do take it, that that is an Evidence that he is equally guilty with the other.

But, on the other hand, if a Man say, I will stab such a one if he oppose me in such a Design, and so maketh his Resolution conditional, and the Person that is present doth say, I will stand by you in it, that is in your doing it, if you are opposed in such a particular Matter; my Lords, with Submission, if he is not opposed in that particular Thing or Design upon which he did say he would stab him, but if he doth afterwards, upon some other Occasion different from the former, and not relating to what he was talking of before, or upon some other Provocation, stab him, and the other Person happeneth only to be present, I take it, that the Words which he spoke with a Limitation to a particular Matter, will not make him liable to the Guilt of the Murder that is committed upon quite another Account.

The Words, Standing by him, are capable of two Senses; but I would not, in so serious a Matter as this, offer to put a jocular Sense upon them, as if it was meant he would stand by and not meddle; but I take it, that such a Case as this will turn upon the Manner of the Man's engaging himself; if he engaged to stand by him in a particular Matter, and the other doth stab the threatned Person afterwards, not upon that particular Occasion, but upon another Account, and he happeneth only to be by, these Words will not draw him in, though they should be well proved to be spoken, so as to involve him in the Guilt of that Murder.

For the Law is favourable to a Man in the Case of Life, and will judge according to the Intention of the Party; and he having not abetted or contributed to the Fact, his Words shall not be carried to his Prejudice, farther than his Intention, or farther than the concomitant Circumstances of the Matter, will make them plainly import.

This Case is put generally, and without Restraint; and there is no Question but many Cases may be put that will undoubtedly be Murder; but every Case must, as I said, stand and fall by its own Circumstances.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Case as it is put single, and upon these Circumstances, would be Murder; and my Reason is this, The Person that saith he will stand by a Man, who saith he will kill or stab another, is as much guilty as that Man himself, and will be thought as malicious; but if it should happen that between the Words pronounced, and the Murder committed, that the Person that saith he will stand by his Friend, cometh to have a Friendship and Kindness for the Party that is threatned to be killed, and upon meeting him careſſes him extreamly, and there being no Malice continuing (as there muſt be to the Time of the Stroke given, to make Murder) but he happened to be killed by that other, ſuddenly in his Preſence, thoſe Words will not make him guilty of Murder; but as the Caſe is put, I think it is Murder.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I ſhall not take upon me to trouble your Lordſhips with making a Caſe, but as this Caſe is put without any Condition, or other Circumſtance annexed to it, I think it will be Murder.

L. H. Stew. There will be no need to ask the King's Council upon this Queſtion whether they will ſpeak to it, becauſe the Council for the Priſoner agree it to be Murder; Therefore if your Lordſhips pleaſe, we may now proceed to ask the Judges Opinions; And firſt, What ſay you, my Lord Chief Juſtice?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lords, the Queſtion is this. If a Perſon be by, named William, when Thomas ſaid he would ſtab John, upon which William ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is preſent at the ſame Murder; Whether the Law will make William guilty with Thomas; or what Crime William is guilty of?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is a great Evidence of Murder in William, that was thus actually by. I cannot ſay it is Murder, as the Caſe is put; but upon ſuch an Evidence, Fact is to be left to the Conſcience of a Jury in the Caſe of a Commoner, or the Conſcience of the Peers in the Caſe of a Peer.

For when William ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend, who ſaid he would ſtab John, That is plainly a Conſent, or at leaſt ſuch an Expreſſion, from which, a Conſent to the Stabbing of him may be inferred.

Then afterwards it ſeemeth Thomas actually murdereth John, and William was preſent. Now if William was deſignedly preſent with the other that committed the Murder, then it is plain it will be Murder in William, but if there be no Evidence to prove upon what Account he was preſent, it may be preſumed he was preſent in purſuance of his former Agreement, ſo that it may be Murder, or not Murder, as Circumſtances may happen upon the Evidence; if he was preſent in purſuance of his Promiſe, then no doubt it is Murder; But if he did not meet in purſuance of that Agreement, it may not be Murder. But this is all Matter of Evidence, and that reſts upon the Conſciences of thoſe that are to try the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is Evidence, and great Evidence of Murder; the Fact conſiſteth of two Parts.

Firſt, Here was a deliberate Expreſſion of his Intention, that he would ſtand by his Friend Thomas, when his Friend Thomas had ſaid before he would ſtab John, and this I take properly to be interpreted, and underſtood as a Promiſe of Abetting him in the Murder he would commit; for, I preſume, ſtanding by him in this Caſe to be meant in a grave Senſe, ſignifying that he would befriend, and if there ſhould be Occaſion, defend and ſupport Thomas in what he reſolv'd to do.

Secondly, He was preſent at the Stabbing, which was before deſigned and ſpoken of. Now I think his being preſent when that Reſolution of his Friend was executed, coupled with his preceding Declaration of his Intention, is a ſtrong Evidence of Murder.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, the Queſtion I take to be, Whether the Law of England ſaith William is guilty of this Murder? Truly, my Lords, I muſt ſay as my Lords have ſaid before, that as this Caſe is, This is a very ſtrong Evidence of Murder: For when he doth ſay, That he will murder ſuch a Man, and the other ſaith, he will ſtand by him, in the common Acceptation of thoſe Words, it is taken, that he doth then agree with him in that Deſign, which he declareth to be to ſtab John.

But then it ſeemeth to me truly, that this Caſe is not put full, how long it was afterwards that the Fact was done, and what Circumſtances attended it; for if any Circumſtance happened afterwards that did amount to a Countermand of this Promiſe, or any thing interpoſed to interrupt it, that this Agreement was not performed, perhaps the Caſe might not be Murder, but ſtill it is Evidence ſo far as your Lordſhips may judge upon the Circumſtances that attend it, whether it be Murder or no. But to declare a further Opinion, as this Caſe is put, truly I cannot.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I do upon this Caſe humbly conceive, there is a little Difference from the former, only there it is put poſitively, but here as Evidence. Now, my Lords, I do humbly conceive that in common Diſcourſe, I will ſtand by my Friend, is, I will aſſiſt my Friend. If my Friend ſhould ſay, I will kill ſuch a Man, or I will do any other Act, and I ſay I will ſtand by him, I think the Import of the Words is, I will aſſiſt him in it.

My Lords, As to the latter Part, as this Caſe is put, for I can go no further, it doth not appear, whether when the Man was killed, he came by Accident, or in purſuance of his Agreement, knowing of the Deſign. Now that is but Matter of Evidence, if he came by Accident it will not be Murder, but if he came with Deſign, no doubt it is Murder in one as well as in the other.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. If any of my Lords deſire that the reſt of the Judges ſhould give their Opinion, it is fit they ſhould be heard; but if no Lord doth deſire it, and they ſay they are of the ſame Opinion without any more to do, becauſe it may ſave a great deal of Time; I deſire your Grace may only ask them, Whether they agree in their Opinions with thoſe that went before?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I humbly deſire the Judges may all ſpeak.

Lords. Go on then.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I humbly conceive this is a Queſtion of Fact, and not of Law, and it is a very ſtrong Evidence, if a Man hear anothey ſay he will ſtab ſuch a Man, and he ſaith he will ſtand by his Friend, and accompanieth him at the Time when the Fact is done, it is a ſtrong Evidence, that he came with a murderous Intent with his Friend; and doth as much manifeſt his Intention to commit Murder, as if he had actually given the Wound, and a great Evidence to involve him in the Crime, as much as the Perſon that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lords, and my Brothers that have ſpoken before me; my Lords, I confeſs I do not think it cometh up ſo cloſe to the Matter as the Queſtion that was put laſt before; for this, as my Brother Eyres ſaith, is rather a Queſtion of Fact and Evidence, than Law. But certainly a very ſtrong Evidence it is of the Intention of that Party that was preſent when the other ſaid he would ſtab the third Perſon, and his going away preſently, and accompanying him when the Stab was given, and Murder done, I ſay his Preſence after this Determination is a very great Evidence, that it was done in Purſuance of that Agreement: It is a Matter of Fact which your Lordſhips will determine, according as the Circumſtances appear before you, which may vary the Reſolution one way or other.

Mr. B. Powell. My Lords, I am of Opinion as this Caſe is put, that it may be Murder or not Murder, according to the concomitant Circumſtances. If a Man ſay, I will ſtab ſuch a one, and another ſay he will ſtand by him, and afterwards when he is with his Friend, the Man is ſtabbed, if that is at ſome Diſtance of Time from the Words ſpeaking, and the Meeting be accidental, or other Facts happen that may alter the Caſe, it may receive another Determination. But if after this is ſaid, there be any immediate going to look after this Man, or they be near the way where this Man is to come, and then he is killed; this is a mighty ſtrong Evidence that ſomething was done in Purſuance of this Reſolution, and that the one went along with the other to countenance him in the Action.

L. H. Stew. Have any of my Lords any other Queſtions to propoſe?

Lords. No.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords, If there had been any other Queſtions propoſed by any other Lords, I would have ſtaid till they had all been over; but I ſee their Lordſhips are at an End with their Queſtions: I have one which I think is nearer the Caſe than any has been yet, and of more Importance to the Matter in Hand, and more fit for the Council to inform you in, and for your Lordſhips to ask, and the Judges to anſwer. The Queſtion is this:

If A accompanieth B in an unlawful Action, in which C is not concerned, and C happeneth to come in the Way of B, after the firſt Action is fully over, and happened to be killed by B, without the Aſſiſtance of A; Whether A is guilty of that Man's Murder?

This Queſtion was handed to the Table, read by the Clerk, and Copies given as before.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you to it, Gentlemen, who are of Council for the Priſoner?

Sir Thomas Powis. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I will not trouble your Lordſhips with the repeating of the Caſe again, becauſe my Copy is agreeable with what was read at the Table: Nor ſhall I trouble your Lordſhips with many Words upon this Caſe, becauſe I take it, the Law is very plain.

If two Perſons accompany each other to do an unlawful Act, and in the Execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth go beyond what was firſt deſigned, and a third Man is killed whilſt they are in Execution of that Act, tho' the one did the Fact, and the other did not immediately contribute thereto, yet he being joined with him in the unlawful Action, upon which this doth enſue, he is anſwerable for all the ill Conſequences of it; the Law herein is clear according to the Caſe that was put at firſt of two Perſons going together to rob a Park and ſteal Deer.

But if that unlawful Action be executed, or the two Perſons who joined in the Deſign have totally deſiſted from it, or are diſappointed in it, if afterwards when they are together upon ſome other Occaſion, it happeneth that one of them killeth another Man, but his Friend no way aided him or aſſiſted him in the doing of it, your Lordſhips and the Law will ſeparate theſe Perſons who were at firſt joined together for another Purpoſe; and will diſtinguiſh between them in this new Matter that is ſubſequent to the former Agreement, tho' they were in Company together.

Becauſe in the firſt Caſe, he that is joined in an ill Action muſt look to himſelf, and be anſwerable for all that followeth thereon: In the ſecond Caſe, he is in no Fault at all, it is only his Misfortune to be in ill Company if he had no Hand in the Fact. This the Law is very plain in, and therefore I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips further with ſpeaking to it.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I would only add one ſhort Word; There is but this one Difference between an Acceſſory and a Principal; The Principal is always preſent, the Acceſſory is always abſent; and I would only put you one Caſe of an Acceſſory in Felony out of my Lord Coke; he ſaith, It muſt be the ſame numerical Thing in which they are joined, and therefore, if A bid B rob the Vintner's Boy of Plate as he cometh to a Gentleman's Chamber to bring Wine, but B doth not purſue the Inſtructions, but breaketh into the Vintner's Houſe, and ſtealeth the Plate there; this is a different Matter, it is not the ſame Thing wherein A and B agreed at firſt, and A is no way concerned in it.

The ſame Law is, if A and B agree to kill C, and B killeth D; tho' A be preſent, it will not be Murder in A; for the Agreement was for the killing of C, and not of D.

My Lords, as this Caſe is put, they did agree in the unlawful Act, but that Matter was over, and there is no Agreement as to the other Matter, nor is that purſuant to the Matter agreed upon; and therefore the Preſence of the Party that agreed to the unlawful Act doth not make him guilty of Murder, unleſs he agree to that too.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but one Word on the ſame Side. I take it, that when a Man is doing an unlawful Act, there is an inſeparable Incident that doth attend it, which is Malice implyed. And this is ſo inſeparable, that when his ill Deſign is at an End, his Malice is at an End too, and hath no Being, and therefore if he entereth upon an ill Deſign afterwards, tho' another be preſent that was joined with him in the former ill Deſign, yet his Malice who was ſo joined, being coupled with the ill Deſign that is over, muſt be gone too; and there is no Malice in his being barely preſent. And therefore for that Reaſon, he that was aiding and aſſiſting before, cannot be Principal in ſuch a ſudden Act as this new one is, and conſequently cannot be guilty of Murder, or of Manſlaughter.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, Do you or any of the King's Council think fit to ſay any thing to this Queſtion?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Council do not think we have any Occaſion to be heard to this Queſtion.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lords the Judges, what ſay you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will again repeat the Queſtion; it is this:

If A accompanieth B in an unlawful Action, in which C is not concerned, and C happeneth to come in the way of B, after the firſt Action (that is, the unlawful Action, I ſuppoſe) is fully over, and happeneth to be killed by B, without the Aſſiſtance of A; whether A is guilty of that Man's Murder?

And I do humbly conceive with great Clearneſs, That A is not guilty at all. For here is no Relation to the firſt unlawful Act that he was engaged in, but that is all over and determined; and then C cometh in the Preſence of B, who killeth him, and of A who had no Knowledge of any Malice between them, or any Deſign of his Death. This is meerly accidental, and doth not depend upon the firſt unlawful Action; and therefore A is not guilty.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I think there can be no Difference of Opinions in this Caſe: For it is plain there was an unlawful Action in which they did agree, (as a Riot or Aſſault to beat or wound a Man or the like) and if Death had enſued, they both had been guilty of Murder, as well he that looked on, as he that gave the mortal Wound. But then the Queſtion addeth further, That the Action to which they agreed was fully over, and there only happeneth to be a Continuance of their Preſence together; and there being an old Grudge between one of the Parties and a third Man, and the Party who had that old Grudge, meeting with his Enemy, executeth it then upon him, and murdereth him; this doth in no Sort affect the other that was preſent, and had joined in the former unlawful Action that was over. In the former, he did join and concur, and therefore if Death had enſued, they had been both guilty: In the latter, he did not join and concur; and therefore though Murder did happen in his Preſence and Company, he is not guilty, but only the Party that actually killed is.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If you are all of the ſame Opinion, I think you need ſay no more.

Judges. We are all of the ſame Opinion, my Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, all the Judges are of the ſame Opinion; and now I think it is your Lordſhips Reſolution to adjourn to the Houſe.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. This Court is Adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

And then the Lords returned to their Houſe in the ſame Order, and there preſently Adjourned till the next Morning.

Die Sabbati Quarto Februarii 1692.

ABout four of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Lords came from their Houſe in the former Order into the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall: and being ſeated on their Benches, and his Grace the Lord High-Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamation was made for Silence; and the Judgment of the Peers was demanded, and delivered in this Manner.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, Your Lordſhips have now heard all the Evidence both againſt the Priſoner and for him: The next Thing is your Lordſhips Judgment, and for that the Method is this, Your Lordſhips Opinions are to be delivered in the Abſence of the Priſoner. The Queſtion that your Lordſhips are to deliver your Opinion about will be this:

Whether my Lord Mohun be guilty of the Murder of William Mountford, whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not guilty?

The Order of delivering your Opinions muſt be, to begin with the youngeſt Baron, and ſo upwards; and therefore I muſt deſire your Lordſhips to allow me to take your Judgments diſtinctly, and that I may write them down.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Lemſter, is my Lord Mohun guilty of the Murder whereof he ſtandeth indicted, or not guilty.

The Lord Lemſter ſtood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right-hand on his Breaſt, pronounced his Judgment thus:

L. Lemſter. Not guilty upon my Honour.

The ſame Queſtion was ſeverally asked of all the Lords, who in the ſame Form delivered their Opinions as followeth:

L. Capel. Guilty upon my Honour.

Duke of Somerſet. Not guilty upon my Honour.
Duke of Norfolk. Not guilty upon my Honour.
L. H. Stew. My Lord Privy Seal, &c.
Earl of Pembroke. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Then his Grace the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncovered, and laying his Right Hand on his Breaſt, pronounced his Grace's own Judgment thus:

L. H. Stew. My Opinion is, That my Lord Mohun is not guilty upon my Honour.

Then his Grace ſeated himſelf again in the Chair, and numbered up the Opinions of the Peers.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I have carefully taken your Lordſhips Opinions, and find the Numbers to be thus: My Lords that have found my Lord Mohun to be Guilty are Fourteen; my Lords that have found him Not guilty are Sixty-nine. Call for the Priſoner.

Proclamation was made for the Chief Governor of the Tower to bring forth the Body of the Priſoner, and he was brought to the Bar as before: And Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, you have been indicted for the Murder of William Mountford; upon your Arraignment you have pleaded Not guilty, and have put your ſelf upon the Judgment of your Peers; and your Peers have conſidered what hath been ſaid both for and againſt you, and the Judgment of my Lords is this, That your Lordſhip is Not guilty: Your Lordſhip is therefore diſcharged. Make Proclamation for diſſolving the Commiſſion.

Cl. of Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. Again.
Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. Again.
Serjeant. O Yes.

Cl. of Crown. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace, doth ſtraightly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons who have given their Attendance here, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen; for his Grace the Lord High Steward of England intendeth to diſſolve his Commiſſion.

Which the Serjeant at Arms repeated, and at the End of it, his Grace ſtanding up, and holding the White-Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, by which his Commiſſion was diſſolved.

Marq. of Carmarthen. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to Adjourn to your own Houſe?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Marq. of Carmarthen. This Houſe is Adjourned into the Houſe of Lords.

And then the Peers returned to their own Houſe in the ſame Order.

CLII. Proceedings between the King and Thomas Kendall and Richard Roe, in the King's Bench, on an Habeas Corpus upon a Commitment for High Treaſon. Mich. 7 Gull. III. Octob. 31. 1695.

ON Thurſday October the 31*ſt*. 1695, the Priſoners being brought up into Court on the Habeas Corpus, the Keeper of Newgate, to whom the Writ was directed, returned the Cauſe of their Detainer to be a Warrant under the Hand and Seal of Sir William Trumball, Knight, one of His Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, and principal Secretary of State, directed to the Keeper of Newgate, or his Deputy, prout ſequitur, "Theſe are in his Majeſty's Name to authorize "and require you, to receive into your Cuſtody "the Bodies of Thomas Kendall and Richard Roe, "herewith ſent you, they being charged with "High Treaſon, in being privy to, and aſſiſting "the Eſcape of Sir James Montgomery, out of "the Cuſtody of William Sutton, one of His Ma"jeſty's Meſſengers in Ordinary, and charged "with High Treaſon. You are to keep them "in ſafe and cloſe Cuſtody, until they ſhall be "delivered by due courſe of Law: And for ſo "doing this ſhall be your Warrant. Given at the "Court at Whitehall the 24*th* Day of Oct. 1695."

Sir Bartholomew Shower moved that the Return might be read, and then that it might be filed: And Mr. Attorney owning that he had been attended with a Copy of it, and having nothing to ſay againſt it, the ſame was accordingly filed.

Then Sir Bartholomew Shower took Exceptions to the Return.

Sir Bart. Shower. My Lord, I am of Council for theſe two Priſoners; and what we deſire at preſent is only that they may be bailed, though perhaps we might preſs to have them diſcharged, and that upon good Reaſon.

To induce your Lordſhip to bail them, I muſt beg your Lordſhip's Pardon, and I hope Mr. Attorney will hold me excuſed, if I make a Queſtion whether the Perſon committing hath any Authority for ſuch a Purpoſe; it is for my Clients, who think themſelves aggrieved by this Impriſonment; and in Truth they ſay, That they are ſomewhat hardly dealt withal in this Caſe; for the Information againſt them is only for being privy to and aſſiſting the Eſcape of the Centinels, who were privy to Sir James Montgomery's Eſcape: But this is Fact, of which the Court will not take Notice, and therefore I ſhall confine my ſelf to the Return, as it appears before your Lordſhip.

With Submiſſion I muſt inſiſt upon it, that a Secretary of State, quatenus Secretary, cannot commit for Treaſon or Felony; he is not an Officer for ſuch a Purpoſe in common Parlance. The Word Secretary imports only a Writer of Letters or other Eſcripts for a Superior; and as Spelman explains the Word, this is the Senſe of it, with the Addition of Secrecy, of Privacy; and ſo is his Gloſſary upon that Word. He is not a Privy Counſellor quatenus a Secretary, nor is he a Juſtice; and though perhaps in Fact he may be in the Commiſſion, yet unleſs he hath taken the Oath of that Office upon a Dedimus, he cannot act as ſuch: And I have ſeen five or ſix Privy Counſellors at a Time appearing at a Seſſions of the Peace for this County, in the Caſe of the Duke of Bedford's Power as Cuſtos Rotulorum, to remove the Clerk of the Peace; and when Intimation was made to them of the Juſtices Oath, which they had not taken, they refuſed to vote, and did thereupon withdraw. Here Sir William Trumball cannot be preſumed or intended to be a Juſtice of the Peace, becauſe the Commitment by him is as Secretary, and not as Juſtice; and ſo is the Return: And upon the Return, the Authority by which he commits ought to appear, otherwiſe the Return is vicious; and here doth appear none but that of Secretary. Now if the Office of Secretary doth not imply and carry in it a Power of Committing, then this Commitment is erroneous.

Our Conſtitution hath diſtributed the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, both in criminal and civil Cauſes, into ſeveral Courts, and hath appointed ſeveral Officers for ſeveral Purpoſes, ſome for civil, ſome for criminal Matters; and in Criminals ſome are to examine and commit, others to obey and carry, others to receive and keep; ſome to try and ſentence, others to execute; each hath his proper Province: And of thoſe your Lordſhip will take Notice, as alſo of their ſeveral Duties and Powers, and ſo do our Law Books. But a Secretary is a Court Officer of State, not relating to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice.

You take Notice, as do our Books, of Headboroughs, Conſtables, Sheriffs, Coroners, Eſcheators, and the like: But neither Coke, Crompton, Fitzherbert, Smith, or any Book which treats of the Juriſdiction of Courts, the Pleas of the Crown, or the Officers of Juſtice, do ever mention a Secretary of State; his Office rather relates to foreign Negotiations than domeſtick; and if any home Affairs fall under his Cognizance, it is rather as an Intelligencer, than with any Relation to Criminals, Priſons, or Gaolers, &c. In all the Debates about the Liberty of the Subjects, and wrongful Commitments, which were in Parliament in 4 Car. I. or 1628, and amongſt all the Precedents mentioned there upon each Side, which are Multitudes, there is none by a a Secretary: It is true, there are divers per mandatum Dom' Regis, by Warrant from the Lords of the Council. I have peruſed Dr. Franklins Annals of King James the 1*ſt*. fol. 261. and Ruſhworth, Vol. I. 458. and can find none by a Warrant from a Secretary. I have read Coke's, Selden's, and Littleton's Arguments upon that Subject, but ſee nothing of a Secretary's Commitment. And it ſeems very ſtrange, if ſuch a Power were lodged in this State Officer, that there ſhould be no Precedents for it in thoſe Times, when extrajudicial and general Warrants were ſo frequent, that they became a Grievance to the People, and ſuch a one as laid the Foundation for the Petition of Rights.

I ſhall not controvert the Power of the Council at preſent, becauſe it doth not concern the preſent Queſtion: All that I can obſerve in the Caſe is, that it firſt began to be practiſed in Sir Lionel Jenkyns's Time; and yet even in 1678, when the Popiſh Plot had increaſed the Number of Priſoners to a wonderful Degree, it is notoriouſly known, that the Chief Juſtice Scroggs was frequently and often ſent for to Whitehall to examine, and commit, and grant Warrants. And ſome time ſince the Secretaries of State have thrown that Burden off from themſelves upon their Secretaries under them, who have been ſworn Juſtices of the Peace; and Mr. Bridgeman hath accordingly executed the Office of a Juſtice of Peace at Whitehall, and that frequently. It hath been a Queſtion, Whether a Chancellor or Keeper of the Great Seal can commit; and the better Opinion hath been that he cannot: And it ſeems to be agreed by Glanvill's and other Caſes in Moore's Reports, 839, &c. that his Commitment is illegal, unleſs for a Cauſe within his Juriſdiction, as a Court of Equity: and the Matters muſt ſo appear. I muſt agree, that any Man may apprehend another for Felony or Treaſon; but there is a vaſt Difference between an arreſting of a Traytor or Felon upon Suſpicion or Knowledge, and a formal Commitment to Priſon, with a Charge of Treaſon. And I am ſure Mr. Attorney General will not inſiſt upon this Reaſon; for then the Conſequence will be, that any Man may commit as well as a Secretary: And I ſuppoſe that Doctrine will ſcarce be allowed, though I think that any Man may as well as he. The Reaſon of an Apprehenſion upon Suſpicion, or Hue and Cry, or the like, is not to detain, but to carry to a Conſtable or Juſtice, as in 3 Inſt. 52. Then here the Gaoler doth not return that he detains him, becauſe he is guilty or ſuſpected, but becauſe by virtue of a Warrant he is committed to his Cuſtody.

Beſides, the Reaſon of our Law is againſt it; for a Secretary cannot adminiſter an Oath. Now the Law requires that no Man ſhould be committed by an extrajudicial Warrant, unleſs upon Oath. If there be but a Suſpicion, there ought to be Oath of the Cauſe of that Suſpicion; for the Perſon committing cannot commit upon another's Suſpicion, unleſs there be Oath of ſome reaſonable Cauſe for it. He cannot take Bail for any Perſon accuſed, he cannot take a Recognizance to proſecute: And I may very well challenge any Man living to ſhew me any one Recognizance ever returned into any Court, that was taken by a Secretary, either for Appearance of a Criminal, or for the Proſecution of one: And the Practice is always otherwiſe; for they have often taken Bonds to the King, with Condition to appear here. And your Lordſhip and the Court hath often had much Trouble in that Matter; for tho' they were bound to appear here, the Court hath refuſed to record their Appearance, becauſe no Recognizance returned or taken, whereupon to found ſuch an Appearance.

Now it ſeems ſtrange, nay abſurd, that our Conſtitution, which we admire for its Wiſdom, ſhould appoint an Officer who ſhould commit, and yet cannot give an Oath whereon to found a Commitment, that cannot bail, that cannot take any Recognizance to proſecute: This is to make the Liberty of the Subject very precarious, notwithſtanding the many Laws and Sayings of Judges in favour of it.

A Secretary is not obliged within the Statutes that require Juſtices to return the Informations and Examinations of the Perſons accuſed, and Witneſſes; which is a Method preſcribed by the Wiſdom of our Anceſtors, both for the Service of our King and the Subject; and may upon ſeveral Occaſions prove uſeful to each.

This I may ſay, that Mr. Secretary Coventry did ſcruple it, and upon good Advice, even from Sir William Jones, he took the Oath of a Juſtice of Peace. Now, my Lord, I think that thoſe Exceptions to this Power of a Secretary may very well be thought to render it ſo far a doubtful Queſtion, as to induce Mr. Attorney not to oppoſe our being bailed, to avoid any further mention of this or any other Queſtion.

But ſuppoſing that a Secretary can commit, yet in this Caſe the Parties ought to be bailed according to the Habeas Corpus Act;* for the Act commands, that they ſhall be forthwith bailed, unleſs they be committed for Treaſon or Felony, ſpecially mentioned and expreſſed in the Warrant; and if it be ſpecially expreſſed, then upon Prayer, if not indicted, they are to be bailed the laſt Day, &c. Now here the Commitment of a Perſon charged with Treaſon, if it goes no further, then unqueſtionably the Parties ought to be admitted to Bail, becauſe that the High Treaſon is not ſpecially expreſſed; ſo a Commitment for Felony generally would bring a Man within the Benefit of the Act to be bailed, becauſe the Species of the Felony is not expreſſed. This is plain, and cannot be denied. Then I muſt further argue, that if the Facts mentioned after the Word High Treaſon be not, or cannot be Treaſon, it muſt be allowed to me, that it is the ſame as if it had been for High Treaſon generally, and without more Words: For if there be not a Species of Treaſon expreſſed, then we are ſtill admiſſible to Bail; this muſt be acknowledged.

Now that the ſubſequent Matter expreſſed after the Word Treaſon is not any Species of Treaſon, I ſhall endeavour to make out thus: A being privy to, and aſſiſting the Eſcape of Sir James Montgomery, out of the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, and charged with High Treaſon, is not any Species of Treaſon, it is not Treaſon.

Firſt, I may with a great deal of Colour make a Queſtion whether the reſcuing or helping the Eſcape of one in Cuſtody for Treaſon, be Treaſon, or only Felony: If the latter, then the Commitment is erroneous.

At the Common Law the helping any Priſoner to eſcape was Felony, and ſo is, 2 Inſt. 589. Now the Law in this Reſpect is not altered otherwiſe than by 1 Edw. 2. de frangentibus priſonam, and that Statute was rather to make it leſs penal than more; and if to promote the Eſcape of one impriſoned for Treaſon, was at the Common Law but Felony, then this Statute ſeems not to make it a greater Offence; for it is in the Negative, that none ſhall undergo Judgment of Life or Member for the breaking of Priſon, unleſs, the Cauſe, for which the Impriſonment was, did require ſuch a Judgment, if the Party were convicted.

The Lord Hale, in his Pleas of the Crown, ſaith, that Breach of Priſon turns into Felony only, though the Party were committed for Treaſon; though in another Place he ſeems to be of another Opinion. Now my Argument to make this a Doubt is this: By 2 Hen. 6. Cap. ult. to break Priſon when committed for Treaſon, is declared to be Treaſon; which would be needleſs, if it had been Treaſon before. By 25 Edw. 3. nothing is to be Treaſon, but what is is there declared to be ſuch; and by 1 Mar. all Treaſons and Declarations of Treaſons made by any Act of Parliament ſince 25 Edw. 3. are repealed. So that by this way of arguing ſuch Eſcape was only Felony.

* 31. Car. II. cap. 2. §. 7.

There is one Caſe, viz. Beuſted's, 16 Car. 1. Jones Rep. 415. upon an Inſurrection in Surrey, where it is held, that if a Man be committed for Treaſon, and another breaks the Priſon, and by that Means the Traitor eſcapes, this was Treaſon in the Reſcuer, and there was one accordingly indicted and arraigned; but I find that he was acquitted; and though the Books ſay it was for want of full Evidence, yet it is more than probable, that it was the beſt Ingredient in his Caſe, that the Judges doubted what Offence it was, whether Treaſon or Felony. Now that Caſe is founded upon Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, 32. and all that is in Stamford is a Quotation of a Caſe in the Year Book, viz. in 1 Hen. 6. 5. that the Eſcape of a Traitor impriſoned was held Treaſon: But there it is put with a quod nota, as a ſtrange Thing, and ſome call it Petit Treaſon: But however, it was a ſtrange Thing, ſince we find in 2 Hen. 6. an Act of Parliament made to declare it Treaſon; which is improbable that ſuch a Law ſhould be made, if the Judges had the Year before juſtly condemned the poor Reſcuer. So that either they doubted the Law of that Caſe, or that Caſe had ſome other Ingredient in it, than the Book informs us of.

This is not for receiving, aiding, and comforting a Traitor, knowing him to be ſuch, as was the Caſe of Abington, who aided Henry Garnet the Superior of the Jeſuites in 3 Inſt. 138. but this is only for aſſiſting the Eſcape: But ſuppoſing that ſuch an Aſſiſtance to eſcape, or reſcue of one committed for Treaſon, were Treaſon, and not Felony, yet in this Caſe, as this Warrant is, it is neither Felony nor Treaſon; for,

Secondly, Here is no legal Commitment of Sir James Montgomery; and conſequently the helping him to eſcape is not Treaſon. My Lord Coke 3 Inſt. 70. on 1 Edw. 2. ſays, that a voluntary Eſcape of a Priſoner can be no Felony, unleſs the Priſoner be under lawful Cuſtody by a lawful Warrant expreſſing the Offence. Now there can be no Pretence, but that the ſame Rules muſt hold in Caſe of a Traitor's eſcape, as to the Warrant of Commitment, and lawfulneſs of Cuſtody, as doth in Caſe of Felony. Now if the Party commanded to receive, or the Party to whoſe Cuſtody he is committed, were no lawful Officer, then ſuch Cuſtody cannot make the Reſcuer guilty of any capital Offence. Co. 2. Inſt. 550. ſaith, that falſe Impriſonment is not within the Law in this Caſe; now there can be no lawful Warrant in this Caſe, becauſe the Officer was not a lawful one. This is not the Caſe of one carrying to Priſon, for then it would have been ſo expreſſed; but here it is under the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, and charged with Treaſon, which ſuppoſes it a Cuſtody with a Charge by way of Commitment. Then my Lord Coke explains what is a lawful Warrant, and that is twofold; either when the Offence appeareth by Matter of Record, as a Capias upon an Indictment, Inquiſition, or Preſentment; or when it doth not appear ſo, but only upon Oath, that a Felony is committed, and the Party is committed for the ſame to Gaol. And he tells us, that there is a great diverſity between them; for in the firſt, the breaking of Priſon is Felony, though there were none committed; but in the other Caſe, where there is no Record of an Accuſation to found a Commitment on, if there be no Felony committed by him, who is committed to Priſon for a ſuppoſed Felony, the breach of Priſon is no Felony. Now this makes another good Exception to the Return, that here doth not appear, that there was either an Indictment or Appeal, or that there was a Felony or Treaſon committed; and one of them is neceſſary.

There muſt be a Felony done at the time of the Commitment; for a Relation, which is a Fiction in Law, ſhall never make a third Perſon a Felon; as Plowd. 401. if there be a Stroke or Wound one Day, and Death enſues upon another Day, this is Murder in the Party from the firſt Stroke; but the reſcuing of ſuch a Criminal before the Death is no Felony; which further ſhews, that a Felony done is neceſſary to make the Eſcape a capital Offence.

In 2 Inſt. 591. Coke ſaith two or three times in four Pages, that the Weight of the Buſineſs depends upon the Lawfulneſs of the Warrant, or Mittimus; and he ſaith, that it muſt be in Writing, in the Name, and under the Seal of him that makes the ſame, expreſſing his Place, Office, and Authority, by force whereof he makes the Mittimus, as is to be directed to the Gaoler; and it muſt contain the Cauſe more eſpecially, and with more Certainty, than a Writ of Capias need to do, becauſe the latter is founded upon a Record, unto which a Reſort may be had. Then he ſaith, that if a Warrant be not lawful, it is no Felony in the Gaoler to ſuffer him to eſcape. Now here, we ſay, it doth not appear what the Warrant was, upon which Sir James was in Cuſtody; and a Meſſenger is not a lawful Gaoler; he is merely a Conveyancer of a Meſſage, Notice, or Summons; and the Practice of making their ſeveral Houſes Priſons is but of late date; our Law-Books do take no notice of him as any legal Officer.

Gaolers have Fees, are ſubject to Proſecutions for Extortion; a Meſſenger is not within the Laws concerning it; for he cannot take Fees colore Officii, who hath no Office; he is, at moſt, but a Gentleman Porter. I have often heard this Method of Commitments to the Cuſtody of Meſſengers ſeverely cenſured; and though any Man may be ordered to carry another to a Priſon, yet he cannot therefore become a Gaoler to detain him, as ſome Meſſengers have done, for Nine or Eleven Months, or more. How long Sir James was in Cuſtody, I cannot tell; but ſurely the Law, which requires Commitments to the County Gaols, is ſufficient Evidence of the Inſufficiency of a Meſſenger's Power to detain; and if he could not legally detain, the Conſequence muſt be, that the Eſcape or Reſcue is no Treaſon.

Beſides, here it doth not appear, that Sir James was in Cuſtody for Treaſon; it is ſaid, that he was in Cuſtody, and charged with Treaſon: The laſt might be upon Accuſation by Oath, or by an Indictment, and yet not charged in Cuſtody with Treaſon.

Then it is not ſaid with what Treaſon Sir James was charged; it might be for ſuch a Treaſon, wherein the receiving or helping to eſcape was not Treaſon; and it might be for Treaſon generally, and then Sir James was bailable; and it will be hard to exclude the Reſcuer from Bail, when the Perſon reſcued might challenge it.

Then further, though the Warrant be lawful, and in particular for Felony, and the Gaoler do willingly ſuffer him to eſcape, yet till the Priſoner is attainted, the Gaoler ſhall not anſwer to the Eſcape, though the Priſoner be indicted; and there is a very good Reaſon aſſigned for it, becauſe the Felony of the Priſoner ſhall not be tried between the King and the Gaoler, for that he is a Stranger to it. Now a Reſcuer or Aſſiſtant of an Eſcape is the ſame with a Gaoler in this Caſe, and ſhall not be in a worſe Condition. It is true, the Party himſelf, if he breaks Priſon, may be indicted for the Eſcape before he be tried for the Felony: Now the Reaſon of this holds for our being bailed, for that it is impoſſible that we can be tried in this Caſe, becauſe Sir James Montgomery is dead, and was never attainted, or ſo much as indicted. Lord Hale agrees with this too, that if the Priſoner break Priſon, he may be arraigned of it before he be convict of the firſt Felony; but the Gaoler permitting a voluntary Eſcape, ſhall not be arraigned till the Priſoner be firſt attaint; for if the Priſoner be acquit, the Gaoler is diſpuniſhable as to any Capital Offence, or if the Priſoner die before Attainder, the Reſcuer ſhall only be fined and impriſoned.

Now ſuppoſing the aſſiſting the Eſcape of one committed for Treaſon, as ſome Books ſeem to ſay, ſhall make the Reſcuer partake of the ſame Crime, for which the Party reſcued was committed; yet if a Secretary cannot commit, or if a Meſſenger's Houſe be not a lawful Priſon *, or if Sir James Montgomery's Offence be not ſpecially enough expreſſed, or if by reaſon of his Death the Eſcape be only finable, then theſe Priſoners ought to be bailed.

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr. Attorney General, e contra, ſaid, that they ought not to be bailed, becauſe committed for Treaſon ſpecially expreſſed; that harbouring a Traitor, knowing him to be ſuch, was Treaſon; that there were no Acceſſaries, but all Principals in Treaſon; that reſcuing him was a comforting of him; that to reſcue a Felon, was Felony; to reſcue a Traitor, was Treaſon; that a Meſſenger was a lawful Officer, and that any Man might impriſon a Traytor; that Sir James Montgomery's Death was Matter of Evidence upon the Trial; that they need not ſet forth a Treaſon committed, or an Attainder, though perhaps it would be neceſſary to prove it when the Priſoners came to be tried; that the Power of a Secretary to commit had been ſettled (but he could not ſay when) that there were many Precedents, which he doubted not to produce, and therefore prayed time to look into it.

Sir J. Hawles. Mr. Solicitor ſpoke much to the ſame effect, with this further, That the Priſoner's Council admitted, that the Privy Council might commit, and a Secretary of State was much more antient; that as to the Meſſenger, a Gaoler de facto was within the Law; that thoſe Perſons were wrong doers, and that they could not take advantage of their own wrong; and therefore the Inſufficiency of Sir James Montgomery's Commitment was not material; and that this Warrant need not be ſo certain and ſpecial as an Indictment, which muſt have Time and Place; and that if Commitments be good in Subſtance, the ſame was enough; and therefore prayed that they might be remanded.

Sir Bartholomew Shower replied, That the Commitment of a Secretary was never yet allowed; that the ſame was always complained of; that though it were Treaſon to reſcue one committed for Treaſon, yet here it did not appear to be ſo; that though in Treſpaſſes a Man cannot take Advantage of his own Wrong, yet that was not the Queſtion; becauſe if Sir James was not legally in Cuſtody, then this Fact was not Treaſon; that the Inſufficiency of his Commitment was an Advantage allowable, eſpecially in favorem vitæ; that though Sir James's Death did not appear upon the Return, yet it was a Reaſon to induce the Court to bail, ſince they might bail in Caſes of High Treaſon ſpecially expreſſed; and if the Court were informed that they could not be tried, it would be hard to detain them in Cuſtody.

Lord Chief Juſtice Holt. How were the Commitments at Common Law before Juſtices of Peace were inſtituted? It is true, my Lord Coke ſaith, that none could be impriſoned till Indictment, but that deſerves Conſideration. If you were to enquire, and ſearch in the Tower, undoubtedly you will find Commitments there by Secretaries of State; look into the Reſolutions in Anderſon.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. I can ſee no reaſon upon the whole matter, why they ſhould not be bailed; but ſince Mr. Attorney is not prepared, and has had ſo little Notice, it is fit he ſhould have time. Accordingly Wedneſday next was appointed.

Then Sir Bartholomew Shower moved, that they might have their Wives and Friends, and a Solicitor come to them, for that hitherto they had been kept cloſe Priſoners. Which was granted accordingly.

Upon Wedneſday the ſixth of November the Priſoners were brought up by Rule of Court; and Sir Bartholomew Shower moved again, that they might be bailed, and that if Mr. Attorney thought fit to oppoſe it, he prayed to be further heard, for that he had more matter to alledge to juſtify the former Exceptions to the Return.

Then Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor and Sir William Williams came into Court.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Mr. Attorney, here are Kendall and Rowe brought up by Rule, and their Counſel deſire to know whether you oppoſe their being bailed; for if you do, they deſire to be further heard to the Return; you had beſt conſider of it.

Mr. Attorney General. I ſhould not have ſo much oppoſed it, but that ſeveral Queſtions have been made and argued here at the Bar; as, that a Secretary hath not power to commit, that this Eſcape is not Treaſon, that a Meſſenger is not a legal Officer; and ſince theſe thing have been ſtarted, I muſt inſiſt upon it that this is a good Return, and that they ought to be remanded.

L. C. Juſtice. Then we muſt hear them again.

Sir Barth. Shower. My Lord, we do with Submiſſion inſiſt upon it, as I did the other day, that a Secretary is not ſuch an Officer, as hath a Power of committing for Felony or Treaſon: I have further looked into it, and do find ſomewhat in the Books concerning it, more than the King's Counſel did laſt time urge, but not enough to warrant ſuch a Power in the Office of a Secretary, and a great deal more againſt it. What I find I ſhall offer to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, as it appears upon the Words of the Books, and ſubmit it to your Judgment.

My Lord, I have peruſed the Reſolutions of the Judges in 34 Eliz. 1 Anderſon 297, 298. and

* See Proceedings againſt Biſhop Atterbury, &c. N°. 91. p. 338.

I muſt own that it is there ſaid, that one or more of the Lords of the Council may commit; how far that is Law, I ſhall endeavour to examine preſently: But now I have named it, I would beg your Lordſhip to obſerve another of thoſe Reſolves; though it would be more proper anon, yet I will juſt mention it here, and that is, that there is a Reſolution which condemns this Return, it deſtroys the Power of a Meſſenger's Office, and, if it be Law, my Clients ought to be bailed; it complains that divers Perſons were againſt Law committed to Priſon in private Places, and not to any common or ordinary Priſons, or lawful Officers, as the Sheriff or other Perſon lawfully authorized to have or keep a Gaol: ſo that upon Complaint made, the Queen's Courts could not learn to whom to direct her Majeſty's Writs, and by this means Juſtice could not be done. Now this ſeems directly calculated for the 42 domeſtick Priſoners, at the Pleaſure of the Meſſengers; and if Mr. Attorney will allow theſe Reſolutions to be of any Authority in one part, he muſt agree it to be the ſame in the others.

But I ſhall not need it in reſpect of the Meſſengers Franchiſes, and therefore ſhall offer ſome things to your Conſideration againſt thoſe Reſolutions.

In the firſt place they are extrajudicial, and not the Opinion of Judges upon their Oaths in any Matter before them; and I am ſure my Lord Coke did refuſe to ſubſcribe his Opinion upon ſuch Occaſions. They are ſuch Opinions, as the Judges may and often have varied from, when the Point hath come judicially in Queſtion before them. Several of the Judges did ſo in the Caſe of the Ship-Money; and if they were not binding to the Judges, who gave the Opinions, much leſs can they be binding to their Succeſſors, as legal Reſolutions; and if they be Law, yet they do not relate to the Office of Secretary, but only to that of a Privy Counſellor. Now we do, without any Diſreſpect to Authority, for our Clients, inſiſt upon it, that that Reſolution is not Law, that one ſingle Privy Councellor may commit for Treaſon.

In the firſt place, what is there ſaid, can never be reconciled to the Rules of Law, that Perſons committed by them ought not to be delivered; for thoſe general Commitments were illegal at Common Law; and ſo it is affirmed in the Petition of Right; and very great Opinions have been, that there is nothing in the Habeas Corpus Act, but the Penalties and Times, that was not Common Law, and that it is affirmative in ſubſtance of the antient Law of this Realm, which makes that Reſolution to be ſuſpicious; for if what is affirmed by it in expreſs Terms (viz. That ſuch Perſons as they ſhall commit, ought not to be delivered) be not Law, then what is implied, that one Privy Counſellor may commit, is more doubtful ſtill.

I ſhall not inquire into the Occaſion of thoſe Reſolutions, nor meddle with what our Hiſtories tell us of that Time, and the then Jealouſies between ſome great Men; but, as I ſaid before, thoſe are not judicial Opinions, but only a written Certificate delivered to the then Chancellor and Treaſurer: Beſides, there is not one Objection, which can be made againſt the Power of a Secretary in this Matter, but ſtands as firm and forcible againſt that of one Lord of the Council; we find no Authority for him to adminiſter an Oath, or take a Recognizance, and there is no Precedent of either. And, as I ſaid the other Day, it looks abſurd, that a ſingle Perſon ſhould be an Officer to commit, and yet cannot do that which is neceſſary in order to it; he ought to have a Power to examine, and that upon Oath; and if upon Examination of Witneſſes it appears that the Party deſerves not to be committed, he ought to have Power to take Bail, as alſo a Recognizance to proſecute. A Juſtice of Peace is fineable by the Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery, if he misbehave himſelf, or be guilty of a wilful Irregularity therein; but it will ſcarce be ſaid, that a Lord of the Council is in thoſe Circumſtances. My Lord Coke ſaith, that a Lord of the Council is made by ſummons and taking the Oath, and that continues during the King's Life: It is true he may be diſcharged, and generally it is by forbearing to ſummon him; ſuppoſe then it be omitted, and afterward he is ſummoned again, doth he take a new Oath? When doth this Authority begin? How doth it continue or end? Our Law Books take no Notice of it.

Then further, the King himſelf cannot arreſt a Man for Treaſon or Felony, nor can he command one in his Preſence to be arreſted for Felony or Treaſon; ſo ſaid Sir John Markham to Edw. 4. and 2 Inſt. 186. per mandat. del Roy is by Writ, or by Order or Rule of ſome Court of Juſtice; now what Judge is a Lord of the Council? He is to adviſe the King, and is ſworn to it, and to withſtand all Traitors, and to diſcover all traiterous Conſpiracies, and ſo is every Subject by his Oath of Allegiance, but the Oath of a Privy Counſellor contains nothing relating to Commitments.

At Common Law, extrajudicial Commitments were Rarities; the uſual Practice was to indict, and then to take them upon a Writ of Capias; the antient Law was tender of a Man's Liberty, and then were the Writs framed in the Regiſter de odio & atia, & de tradendo in Ballium, and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.

By Magna Charta 19 Hen. 3. cap. 29. which hath been confirmed forty times by ſubſequent Acts of Parliament, it is enacted, that nullus liber homo impriſonetur niſi per legem terræ, which I ſhall explain anon. This was made upon a Grievance then complained of, viz. illegal Commitments: What could thoſe be in that Age, but taking Mens Perſons without a Record to found a Charge or Accuſation? and that it was ſo, appears by Coke in his Comment upon thoſe antient Statutes: He ſays, that there is no Invaſion upon this Law till Edward 3*d*'s Time, and then the People quickly reſented it; for in 5 Edw. 3. cap. 9. the great Charter is confirmed; but then in 25 Edw. 3. cap. 9. it is fully and more at large expreſſed, and recited, that whereas it is contained in the great Charter of the Franchiſes of England, that none ſhall be impriſoned, unleſs it ſhall be by the Law of the Land; it is awarded, aſſerted, and eſtabliſhed, that from thenceforth none ſhall be taken by Petition, or Suggeſtion made to our Lord the King, or to the Lords of his Council, unleſs it be by Indictment or Preſentment of his good and lawful People of the Neighbourhood, though Magna Charta, and the reſt of the ſeven Statutes mention'd in the Petition of Right uſually quoted upon theſe Occaſions, be in the General, and have ambiguous Words in them, or Words made ambiguous by the King's Council in moſt Ages, yet this is plain and expreſs, and needs no Strain on our Side. And I cannot find it ever pretended to on the other Side to be a Strain, they are ſo plain that the Inference is eaſy, and hard to be avoided. I will not, I muſt not ſay, that they are Authorities againſt the Commitment by a Privy Council, but methinks they are ſtrong againſt an extrajudicial Commitment by a ſingle Lord of the Council, unleſs Mr. Attorney will argue, that the Council cannot commit by reaſon of this Law, but a ſingle Privy Councellor is out of the Words of the Act; and when I hear that, he may expect another Anſwer.

Now for the Words per legem terræ: In Magna Charta in 2 Inſt. 51. my Lord Coke doth indeed ſay, that in ſome Caſes a Man may be taken and arreſted before Indictment or Preſentment; and one Caſe which he mentions is, by lawful Warrant, where there is a Witneſs againſt an Offender: Upon Suſpicion there may be an Apprehenſion, but there cannot be a Commitment, with a Charge of an Offence, unleſs there be an Indictment or Preſentment, or a Witneſs againſt the Offender; now there can be no Witneſs, but there muſt be an Oath: So it is by all Laws, a Man cannot be a Witneſs, though he may be an Informer, unleſs he be ſworn, and by our Law, even Peers, if they are Witneſſes, muſt be ſworn. Now that a ſingle Privy Counſellor can give an Oath, I can find no Law or Precedent for it; it is true, the Privy Council may adminiſter an Oath, and have done ſo for a long time, but that every ſingle Member can do ſo, doth not follow, it is no more a Conſequence, than that becauſe the Houſe of Peers can give an Oath, therefore every Peer may at home do the ſame. He is one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, and that is all; and that is only (as I may with Reſpect ſay) when they are capitulariter congregati.

Further, my Lord Coke ſaith, that to make a Commitment lawful, the firſt Requiſite is, that he, or they, who do commit, have lawful Authority; now whether a particular Lord of the Council hath ſuch a lawful Authority, I muſt ſubmit to your Judgment.

In antient Times the Practice was for the Privy Council not to ſend for Men in Cuſtody, but to iſſue Citations and Summons, and that by their Meſſengers, as doth the Court Chriſtian by their Purſuivants, who cannot arreſt or impriſon, as in 12 Co. Rep. 49. In all the Records cited by Coke in his Juriſdiction of Courts, cap. Privy Council, or Prynn's Animadverſions upon that Book, 46. there is no Precedent mentioned of impriſoning, or bringing Men into Cuſtody, but only Summons and Citations to appear; and there are many of them.

I ſhall not meddle with their Power of committing for a Contempt, or refuſal to anſwer, or queſtion the Authority of the Counteſs of Shrewsbury's Caſe, 12 Co. Rep. 93. but I urge this only to ſhew the Improbability, that our Law ſhould veſt ſuch an Authority in each Member of the Privy Council.

In Prynn's Animadverſions on 4 Inſt. it is in his Comment upon Coke's Epilogue, pag. 422. is a very notable Record. Rot. Parl. Anno 28 Hen. 6. num. 56. where there is an Impeachment of Talbois, for a notable Riot upon ſeveral Lords of the Council met within the Palace at Weſtminſter; and it is prayed, that he may be ſent to the Tower of London, to be kept without Bail or Mainprize for twelve Months, to anſwer all Indictments for that and other Riots, before the King and his Juſtices in his Bench within that Time; and if the Conſtable of the Tower ſhould ſuffer him to eſcape, or go at large, he ſhould forfeit One thouſand Pounds; to which Article of the Commons Petition and Bill the King aſſenteth, ſo that here was an Act of Parliament (for ſuch it is, though in form of a Petition granted, as was the antient Form) to inforce a Commitment to the Tower for any Affront to the Lords of the Council: Now I would beg leave to obſerve, that it was not by way of Puniſhment for the Offence, but to ſecure the Parties to be forth coming to anſwer an Indictment, the Puniſhment muſt be Fine and Impriſonment: Now it ſeems ſtrange, that an Act of Parliament ſhould be made to ſecure a Man, in order to anſwer an Indictment for an Aſſault and Riot upon the Lords of the Council, when any one Lord of the Council might have committed him, and he might have been indicted next Term; for the Fact was done at Weſtminſter in Middleſex.

I find a Caſe in 1 Leon. 70, 71. it is Newell's Caſe, he was committed per mandatum Franciſci Walſingham, Militis, Principalis Secretarii, & unius de privato concilio Dominæ Reginæ, and the Return was held inſufficient. I muſt agree, that the Book ſays it was, becauſe the Cauſe for which he was committed was not alledged, and they amended the Return, and then they made it ex ſententia & mandato totius concilii privati, ita quod corpus ejus paratum habere non poſſimus; it is true, that at laſt the Court took Exceptions to it, becauſe the Body was not brought, and there was a very wiſe Diſtinction made by the Court, That where one is committed by one of the Privy Council, there the Cauſe ought to be returned; but where the whole Council do commit, there need no Cauſe to be alledged. Now it is plain, that this was a Diſtinction without a Difference, for by the Petition of Right, and the ſeven old Statutes, and all the Records and Law of old Time, no Engliſhman ought to be deprived of his Liberty by an extrajudicial Commitment or Warrant, unleſs the Cauſe be ſhewn; and I would infer, that the then King's or Queen's Council thought a Commitment by one Lord of the Council was not legal, and therefore they added ex ſententia & mandato totius privati concilii; as it ſeems to me, that the Court did ſlide over that Queſtion, by inſiſting upon the other Exception: However, at the moſt, though it make againſt the Novelty of the Commitments, yet it can never make for the Legality of them, when the whole is conſidered.

Upon theſe Conſiderations, I hope it will appear to your Lordſhip and the Court, to be a doubtful Point, whether a Secretary of State may commit; and the Conſequence of that is, that the Priſoner ought to be bailed according to Buſhel's Caſe, Vaughan 157. that the King's Bench may bail in any Caſe of Treaſon, if they think fit, but the Common Bench muſt remand, if the Cauſe of the Impriſonment returned be juſt, and well returned; but then there is this Diſtinction; if it ſhall appear to the Court, that the Party was impriſoned againſt the Law of the Land, they ought, by Force of Magna Charta, to deliver him; but if it be doubtful, and under Conſideration, then he ought to be bailed: And this hath been the Practice upon Convictions by Juſtices of the Peace; and the Excuſe of the Judges in 4 Car. for their Remittitur, &c. that it was quouſque, &c. i. e. till further Conſideration, was never allowed as a wiſe or legal one. Now I hope I have ſaid enough to make it doubtful.

Then for Meſſengers, I have further matter to urge; the Reaſon why Commitments are required to be to the County Gaol, by 5 Hen. 4. cap 10. is mentioned in 2 Inſt. 43. and 9 Co. Rep. 119. that they may have their Trial at the next Gaol Delivery, or Seſſions of the Peace; and my Lord Coke ſaith, that at Common Law the committing to Priſon is only to this end, that the Party may be forth coming to be duly tried according to the Law and Cuſtom of the Realm: And the Abbots of St. Alban and Crowland loſt their Franchiſes of having Gaols, becauſe they detained Men in Priſon, for a long time, without making a Deliverance; and all this doth in Reaſon argue againſt Meſſengers Power to make their Houſes Priſons.

My Lord Coke ſaith, in 2 Inſt. 43. that the Statute 5 Hen. 4. extendeth to all Judges and Juſtices for two Reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe this Act is declarative of the Common Law; and ſecondly, ubi lex eſt ſpecialis, & ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda eſt; and if ſo, this was a falſe Impriſonment of Sir James Montgomery, and then the Conſequence is what I urged the other Day.

I find further, in 2 Inſt. 705. that by the Parliament Roll, 51 Edw. 3. numb. 68. it appears, that Gaols were anciently to be repaired at the King's Charge; and by Lord Coke upon 23 Hen. 8. cap. 2. concerning the new erecting of Gaols, his Opinion is, that the ſame cannot be done without Act of Parliament; and I cannot find any Act of Parliament for making the forty two Houſes of the Meſſengers to be lawful Priſons: If there be any ſuch, I ſuppoſe the King's Counſel will ſhew them to your Lordſhip; nay, I cannot find any Grant of ſuch a Franchiſe to them.

Beſides, the Reaſon of the Law is with us. Out of the County Gaols you have at every Seſſions of Gaol Delivery, Calendars of the Priſoners that are in Cuſtody there, but of the Priſoners in Cuſtody of Meſſengers you can have no Notice; and this is no ſmall Miſchief in reſpect of the Subjects Liberty; for at a Gaol Delivery the Calendar is to be called over, and by the Calendars in former times were the Executions made without any ſpecial Warrant from the Judge or Recorder, which is but a late Practice.

Beſides, according to 3 Inſt. 209. a Man regularly before the Habeas Corpus Act, if committed for Treaſon or Felony by a Perſon having Authority to commit, was not to be diſcharged until he was inquired of, and either indicted or acquitted, or an Ignoramus found, and delivered by Proclamation; now how this could be practiſed of a Meſſenger's Ward, is to me unaccountable.

I will in this Caſe offer to your Lordſhip what I find in this Matter, with Sincerity, and ſubmit it to your Judgment. There is in 12 Co. Rep. 129. a Caſe cited out of the Year Books, viz. 22 Aſſize pl. 49. One was beheaded for killing Adam Walton, nuncii Domini Regis, miſſi ad mandatum ejus exequend' which is there taken for Petit Treaſon: This is all that I can find of antient Authority, which mentions ſuch a Creature as a Meſſenger; but nothing can be inferred from hence to prove the Meſſengers in Ordinary to be Keepers of Gaols, for the receipt of Felons and Traitors.

Nay, I find further a Caſe, which ſeems to overthrow the Commitment to any other Priſon than the County Gaol: I will but name it, and ſubmit its Conſideration to your Lordſhip's Judgment; it is in St. John's Argument at a Conference concerning the Attainder of the Earl of Strafford (it is fol. 46 of the 4*to* Print of that Argument) the Caſe of Sir John Mortimer, who was drawn, hanged, and quartered for breaking the Priſon of the Tower, having been committed thither upon Suſpicion of Treaſon: But this was in 2 Hen. 6. and upon an Attainder by Bill in Parliament, and ſo it is in Cotton's Abridgment of the Records, pag. 368. and there it is mentioned as a ſtrange Thing to be done in Times of Peace, and when the Realm was in quiet, for a Man to be condemned without Trial or Arraignment. Now I might infer from hence, that if the Law had been undoubtedly plain concerning an Eſcape out of the Tower, as a legal Priſon, there had been no need of an Act of Parliament to attaint him; but however, it may argue thus much, that if a Bill were neceſſary for ſuch an Eſcape, that an Act of Parliament is certainly neceſſary to make a Reſcuer of one ſuſpected of Treaſon out of the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger to be guilty of Treaſon; but all theſe I ſubmit to your Lord's Conſideration. All that I contend for is to make it a doubtful Queſtion to the Court, whether upon this Return, taking it for true, it is poſſible to indict and convict theſe Priſoners for Treaſon? for if not, they ought to be bailed.

Then there is another Exception, which I juſt mentioned the laſt time, and that is, that it is not mentioned in this Warrant, what the Species of Treaſon was, for which Sir James Montgomery was committed. I ſhall, as I have already, avoid the Repetition of any thing, which I then offered; there are ſeveral Treaſons at this Day, where the receiving, comforting, and relieving of them afterwards, knowing them to be ſuch, may not be Treaſon; and then in ſuch Caſe the helping him to eſcape will not be ſo, and conſequently it ought to have been alledged in the Warrant, what the Treaſon was for which Sir James Montgomery was committed. Now it is no Treaſon to receive and comfort a Counterfeiter of the Great Seal, it is only Miſpriſion, for there are no Acceſſaries in Treaſon, and Principal he is is not, becauſe he did not know of it at the Time; to this effect are the Words of the Book, 12 Co. Rep. 81. ſo it is of the receiving and comforting a Jeſuit, or other Engliſhman taking Orders abroad, and returning into England; for by 26 Eliz. that is made Felony; which Statute would never have been made, if it had been Treaſon, Dyer 296, 297. Corrier's Caſe. If I know that one hath made falſe Money, and receive, comfort, and abett him, this is only Miſpriſion: How far theſe are Law I am not to argue, but I ſuggeſt the Words or Effect of the Authority, and ſubmit them. Sure I am of this, that if your Lordſhip and the Court be ſatisfied that they cannot be attainted of Treaſon, if the Fact be as this Return is, then you will not remand them.

Mr. Solicitor was pleaſed to argue, that theſe are Niceties too ſubtle for a Return upon a Habeas Corpus; but according to Vaughan, 136. the Writ of a Habeas Corpus is now the moſt uſual Remedy, by which a Man may be reſtored to his Liberty, if he have been againſt Law deprived of it; and therefore it is, that the Writ doth command to know, whether it be according to Law, or againſt Law; and therefore the Cauſe of the Impriſonment ought by the Return to appear, as ſpecially and certainly to be judged by the Court, where the Return is made, as it did appear to the Court or Perſon authorized to commit, elſe the Return is inſufficient. Now the Reaſon of adjudging that Return in Buſhell's Caſe to be inſufficient, was becauſe it was only ſaid, that their Verdict was againſt full and manifeſt Evidence, and did not ſay what; by the ſame Reaſon Sir

James

James Montgomery's Treaſon ought to have been ſet forth in this Caſe; and as to Credence, no more ought to be given to a Perſon committing, when a Habeas Corpus is brought, than there is to a Court giving a Judgment, when a Writ of Error is brought to examine it, in order to Affirmance or Reverſal; for an Habeas Corpus is brought in like manner to examine the Cauſe of the Party's Impriſonment, either to bail or diſcharge, or elſe to remand him, which is to affirm the Commitment to be legal, and upon good Cauſe.

I have modern Authority to juſtify much nicer Exceptions to Commitments, than thoſe I have mentioned; ſuch Authority as Mr. Solicitor will not deny to be good. Complaint hath been of a Warrant of Commitment, that it did not appear in whoſe Reign the Treaſon was committed, whether in the late King's, or the former King's; it is obſerved in the Remarks upon Corniſh's Trial, and I am ſure Mr. Solicitor muſt own that to be much nicer than what I have offered upon this; I do not juſtify that, but my Exceptions to the Return.

Mr. Serjeant Levintz argued on the ſame Side, that the Return was ill, becauſe the Commitment was to a Meſſenger; it ought to have been to a County Gaol, that the Cuſtody upon an Apprehenſion ought to be but twenty four Hours, Britton 19. Cuſtomer of Normandy 456. Hil. 22 Edw. 4. pl. 4. thoſe Meſſengers exacted Fees, viz. 6 s. 8 d. or 10 s. per diem. It is in effect to fine the Party before he is convicted. Then he ſaid, that all thoſe Queſtions might have been ſpared, if Mr. Attorney would conſent to their being bailed.

Lord Chief Juſtice. In truth moſt of them might have been ſpared, for they have been argued more for Pleaſure than Neceſſity.

Then Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Solicitor, inſiſted, that the reſcue of one in Cuſtody upon Suſpicion of Treaſon, was Treaſon; that the ſetting forth the Overt Act was more for the Advantage of the Priſoner, than barely alledging the Species of Treaſon: That as to the Secretary's Commitment, it was owned now not to be ſuch a Novelty as was pretended the laſt Time: That it was very ancient; that the Caſe in 11 Leon. is very flat to that Purpoſe; that in the Tower they found a Commitment in 1660, by Secretary Morris, and that many more had been ſince, but that Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who had the Papers, was now in Ireland; that it was not needful, that he who commits, ſhould be able to give an Oath; that the Houſe of Commons could not give an Oath, and yet could commit; and more to the like Effect.

Sir Bartholomew Shower replied, that he was glad to hear there were ſo few Precedents for a Secretary's Power; that if there had been more, Mr. Attorney would have ſhewn them; that the Houſe of Commons Power was an Inſtance not fit for him to anſwer; that he did deſire no more of Mr. Attorney, than that a Secretary could not give an Oath, and then he hoped the Conſequence would be plain; and ſo ſubmitted it to the Court.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I did always give Credit to the Reſolutions of the Judges in Anderſon, and it is Part of a Privy Counſellor's Oath to take care of the King's Perſon againſt all Traitors, &c. was there not a Gaol Delivery at Common Law? And are not the Commiſſioners by their Commiſſion to inquire of the Priſoners in that Gaol, and a Grand Jury to be Impanelled? And conſequently, doth not the Law ſuppoſe ſome to have been committed thither before? And then, by whom were they committed ?* Though a Meſſenger be not a proper Officer, yet any Perſon may be ordered to receive for convenient Time for Examination, † &c. Bird, 19, 92. Commitments regularly ought to be to the County Gaols, and I wiſh the Juſtices of the Peace, who commit to New Priſon, and the Gate-houſe, were here to hear this. But, Mr. Attorney, the Queſtion is, whether you ought not to have ſpecified theſe two Things in your Warrants, for what Treaſon Sir James was committed; and my Reaſon is, becauſe the Eſcape will be the ſame Species of Treaſon with that, for which the Party reſcued was committed; and ſecondly, that he had done a Treaſon, that Sir James was guilty. But, Mr. Attorney, will you further conſider of it, though I think we muſt bail them in the mean time, an Habeas Corpus being feſtinum remedium; but I would hear my Brothers Opinion.

J. Rokeby. Sir Barth. Shower, I am glad to ſee that you have rectified a Miſtake you were in about a Secretary's Commitment: It was long before Sir Lionel Jenkins's time: Walſingham committed near Two hundred Years ago; and there is another Precedent in 2 Leon. 175. Hilleyard's Caſe, I think, that a Conſervator pacis at the Common Law may commit, and ſo may a Conſtable; it is incident to his Power of committing, that he may give an Oath, and take a Recognizance, and (quod mirum) one of the Council may commit. I would not have the Students go away with the Notion of the Novelty of it: I take Secretaries of State to be great Officers; they are Centinels to watch for the Preſervation of the King, and the common Peace of the Realm: And for Meſſengers, for any thing appears, he might be only carrying to Gaol; but yet I think they ought to be bailed, becauſe it is not expreſſed in the Warrant, what the Species of Treaſon was for which Sir James Montgomery was committed.

J. Eyre, There may be a Difference between carrying to Priſon, and a Commitment with a Charge upon them; and there may be a difference between ſpecifying and not ſpecifying Sir James's Treaſon. Upon the whole, I think they ought to be bailed.

J. Gregory was abſent.

Accordingly they were bailed to appear the laſt Day of Term, to anſwer ſuch Matters as ſhould then be objected againſt them.

* Juſtices of the Peace are not by Common Law, but appointed by Statutes, the firſt of which was 1 Edw. 3. cap. 16. By Common Law there were only Conſervators of the Peace, whoſe Power was very ſhort of a Juſtice's now a days. See Cromptun's and Dalton's Juſtice.

† This is at moſt but for three Days, Cro. Eliz. 830.

CLIII. The Trials of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, at the Old-Baily, for High Treaſon, March 11. 1695. 8 Will. III.

THIS Day the Trial of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, who were indicted at Hickes's-Hall on this Day ſeven-night, upon a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer for High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing the Death of the King by a barbarous Aſſaſſination, in order to further and aſſiſt an Invaſion into this Kingdom from France, and Subverſion of the Government, were proceeded upon in Manner following.

After opening the Court, at which were preſent a great many of the Nobility, Members of Parliament, and other Perſons of Quality, the petty Jury returned by the Sheriff of Middleſex to try the Priſoners, were all called over, being in Number above Eight-ſcore, and conſiſting of Baronets, Knights, Eſquires, and Gentlemen, and the Appearances of thoſe who anſwered to the Call were recorded; and ſix of the Judges, viz. The Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Juſtice Nevil, Mr. Juſtice Powell, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby, being upon the Bench, the Priſoners were called for to the Bar, and there arraigned upon the ſaid Indictments.

Clerk of Arraignments. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand (Which he did): Edward King, hold up thy Hand (Which he did): Thomas Keyes, hold up thy Hand (Which he did): You ſtand Indicted in the County of Middleſex by the Names of Robert Charnock, late of the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes in the County of Middleſex, Gent. Edward King of the ſaid Pariſh and County, Gent. and Thomas Keyes of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman, for that You the Fear of GOD in your Hearts not having, nor the Duty of your Allegiance weighing, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of GOD, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. your Supreme, True, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord, the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh, intending and contriving, and with all your Strength purpoſing, deſigning and conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England under him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is of Right happily and duly eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change and alter; as alſo our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring, his faithful Subjects and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England into intolerable and miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King to ſubdue and ſubject, the tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe, deſign and intend our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to ſlay, kill, and murder, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Faithful Subjects of our Lord the King throughout this whole Kingdom of England to make and cauſe. And the ſame moſt abominable, wicked and deviliſh Treaſons and traiterous Contrivances, Intentions and Purpoſes of yours aforeſaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, you the ſaid Robert Charnock, Edward King and Thomas Keyes, and very many others falſe Traytors to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſaid tenth Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, clandeſtinely, traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, &c. did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent and agree our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King by lying in wait, to aſſaſſinate, kill and murder: And that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing the ſooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day, Year and Place laſt mentioned, traiterouſly did treat, propoſe, and conſult of the Ways, Manner and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what Manner our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, by lying in wait the more eaſily you ſhould kill, and did conſent, agree and aſſent, that forty Horſemen or thereabouts, of you the ſaid Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, and the ſaid other Traitors unknown, and others by them to be hired, procured and paid, with Guns, Carbines and Piſtols with Gun-powder and leaden Bullets charged, and with Swords and other Arms armed, ſhould lie in Wait, and be in Ambuſh, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King in his Coach being when he ſhould go abroad, to ſet upon, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed upon the Guards of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King then and there attending upon him, and being with him, ſhould attack, and ſhould overcome and ſubdue them, whilſt others of the ſaid Men ſo armed our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ſhould Aſſaſſinate, Kill, Slay and Murder: And alſo that You the ſaid Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, your Treaſons and traiterous Intentions, Deſigns and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, fulfil, and fully to bring to Effect afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid at the Pariſh aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, warlike Matters, and military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly and traiterouſly did obtain and buy, collect and procure, and cauſe to be bought, obtained, collected and procured with that Intention, the ſame in and about the deteſtable, horrid and execrable Aſſaſſination, killing and murdering of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King as aforeſaid, to be uſed, employed, and beſtowed, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as alſo againſt the Form of the Statutes in ſuch Caſes made and provided.

How ſay you, Robert Charnock, are you guilty of the High Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or Nor Guilty?

Charnock. My Lord, I deſire, I may have a Copy of this Indictment; that I may adviſe with Council upon it before I plead.

* L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Charnock, will you ſpeak out, that we may hear what you ſay.

* Sir John Holt.

Charnock. My Lord, I find here is a very bad Crime that is laid to my Charge; I deſire that I may have a Copy of the Indictment, to adviſe with Council upon. And that I may have Council to aſſiſt me in my Tryal, and to direct me, who am an ignorant Man in theſe Matters, how to manage myſelf according to the new Act made this Seſſions of Parliament, for regulating Tryals in Caſes of High Treaſon.

L. C. J. Have you not had Council already to adviſe and direct you, Mr. Charnock?

Char. My Lord, I had Notice on Wedneſday that I ſhould be tried this Day, and it was Saturday laſt before I could get my Council to come to me.

L. C. J. And what did your Council adviſe you? Did they tell you, you were to have a Copy of your Indictment, by Virtue of the late Act of Parliament?

Char. My Lord, tho' the Act does not take Force as to ſome Things till the 25th of this Month, yet the Equity of that Act, it being now reduced into a Law, is conceiv'd to reach to Caſes of the like Nature before the 25th, and I deſire the Act may be read.

L. C. J. You ſhall have it read if you will, but of what Avail or Benefit it will be to you I cannot tell; for you yourſelf take Notice that it is an Act of Parliament made this Seſſion, and is not to take Effect until the 25th of this Month. You now here ſtand indicted before the 25th, and for a Treaſon committed before, and therefore you can't claim, nor have any Benefit or Advantage by this Act; but you are to be proceeded againſt according to the Law before, and the Practice uſed in all Proceedings againſt other Perſons in your Circumſtances. And it is the known Practice and received for Law, in all Times before this new Act was made, That no Copy of an Indictment for High-Treaſon ſhould be granted, nor Council aſſigned, or permitted to aſſiſt the Priſoner in making his Defence: True it is, a Copy of the Indictment has been often deſired, but as true that it has as often been denied.

Charn. My Lord, the Equity of this Act (it being now an Act of Parliament) is now in Force, as much before the 25th of this Month as after.

L. C. J. Equity is nothing in theſe Caſes: You are here tried by the Law, and we are bound to go in all ſuch Caſes according to the Rules of Law, and are not to be guided by any equitable Conſideration, further than the Law itſelf does allow us.

Char. But, my Lord, the Ground of that Act, which is the Reaſonableneſs and Equity that all Priſoners ſhould be made capable of fairly defending themſelves, is now in Force, I ſay: And I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will look upon it to be reaſonable that I ſhould have the Benefit of that Equity.

L. C. J. I tell you we are not here in a Court of Equity, but muſt proceed according to the Rules of Law; and the Law you now ſpeak of doee not yet commence.

Char. My Lord, I am informed, for I am very ignorant in theſe Matters myſelf, that there is nothing that I now deſire which is contained in this Act, but what was Law before the making of this Act, tho' the Practice may have been otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Then I muſt tell you, Mr. Charnock, you have been very much miſinformed; for if all that is contained in this Act of Parliament that you mention was Common Law before, there would have been no Occaſion for the making a new Act of Parliament.

Char. My Lord, I do not ſay that all Things in this Act of Parliament were Law before, becauſe there are ſeveral Things in it that have not been Law before. But, my Lord, there are ſeveral Things beſides; and particularly thoſe two Things which I now deſire, a Copy of the Indictment and Council to aſſiſt me, were Things that were agreeable to Law before; and I muſt take the Liberty to appeal to a Judge that I ſee upon the Bench, my Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, as to his own Opinion, and deſire he would pleaſe to declare, whether formerly in a Conference between the Lords and the Commons he did not deliver his Opinion, That it was the Common Law, that a Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment, and Council to aſſiſt him.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, you had beſt to apply yourſelf to him for his Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray, Sir, What is your Queſtion you would ask me?

Char. My Lord, I am here for my Life, and muſt take all the Advantages that I can; I am here Arraigned for a very grievous Offence; I deſire I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and Council to aſſiſt me in my Defence. Here is an Act of Parliament, out of the Equity of which I apprehend, I ought to have ſome Advantage; for I am informed that what I deſire was Common Law before the making of the Act; and particularly that your Lordſhip's Opinion, in a Conference between the two Houſes, was, that the Priſoner ought to have thoſe Advantages by the Common Law.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, Sir, I take your Queſtion to be this: You would have my Opinion to be declared, That this Act which was lately paſs'd for regulating Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon, and all the Particulars in that Act, were Common Law before.

Char. No, my Lord, I do not ſay that all the Particulars in the Act were Common Law before.

L. C. J. Treby. Then pray, Sir, name your Particulars, and I will endeavour to give you an Anſwer.

Char. My Lord, the Particulars that I do ask are theſe, Firſt, that I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and Council to adviſe me, becauſe it is a grievous Crime I ſtand here accuſed of, and that

that I may have them to aſſiſt me at my Trial in Court: This I do inſiſt upon from the Equity of the Act of Parliament and your Lordſhip's Opinion at the Conference that it was Common Law before.

L. C. J. Treby. As to my Opinion about the having a Copy or Council, I do not think or believe, that I ever ſaid that it was Common Law.

Char. My Lord, I beg your Pardon; I was informed your Lordſhip had delivered ſuch an Opinion, at a Conference between the Lords and the Commons: But I deſire the Aſſiſtance of Council, becauſe I myſelf am ignorant of the Law; and particularly as to this Point, whether I am not intitled to the Equity of this Act of Parliament; for it now having paſs'd both Houſes of Parliament, and had the Royal Aſſent, it is a good Law; and though it be to take its Commencement on the 25th of this Month, yet that which is the Law of all Laws, the Reaſon and Equity of it, is, and always will be, the ſame.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Charnock, that does not follow, that becauſe the Wiſdom of the Law-makers has thought it to be equitable de futuro, therefore it ſhould be Law now; which, as I told you before, is the Rule that we are to go by; it is Equity and Juſtice, that the Proceedings be according to this Act of Parliament, from and after the 25th of this Month; but it is not Juſtice that ſuch Proceedings ſhould be till then, becauſe not according to Law.

Char. My Lord, the Ground of all Laws is Equity; and certainly it cannot be Equity, that a Priſoner ſhould make his Defence againſt an Accuſation in Writing, without having a Copy of it.

L. C. J. The Time of the Court muſt not be ſpent in this Manner; you have been already told, that by Law you are not to have a Copy of the Indictment; but you are to plead without having any Copy; for there is no Law now in being that allows the giving of ſuch a Copy, and 'tis but a ſhort Queſtion that you are asked in order to your Trial; viz. Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Char. My Lord, it is impoſſible for me to go to Trial preſently, and without the Aſſiſtance of my Council.

L. C. J. Why, had you not Notice of your Trial?

Char. My Lord, I confeſs I had Notice, upon Wedneſday laſt.

L. C. J. Had you not your Council with you ſince that?

Char. Yes, my Lord, I had on Saturday laſt; but from that Time I have not been able to prepare myſelf, as I think I ought; and I cannot conceive but that I ſhould have the Aſſiſtance of ſome Council to direct me in my Trial; for here is a very great Crime, and heinous Charge laid againſt me in this Indictment, and I am very ignorant in all Law Proceedings.

L. C. J. It is very reaſonable that there ſhould be convenient Notice given to all Perſons in your Circumſtances; and truly this Day Seven-night, is a very convenient Notice; eſpecially you having had, by your own Confeſſion and Acknowledgment, Council with you in the mean Time.

Char. But, my Lord, what is the Advantage of having Notice, if one have not Privilege of Pen, Ink and Paper, and one's Council and Friends coming to them, and Privacy, without the Preſence of the Jaylor?

L. C. J. What ſay you that are of the King's Council; Was there Council allow'd to come to them?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, there was Order given, that their own Council that they deſired ſhould come to them. Sir Thomas Trevor.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, as ſoon as ever they deſired Council there was an Order for it, and left with the Jailor, that he ſhould permit the Council to come to them, and be with them in private.

L. C. J. Then tho' you had not your Council come to you till Saturday, it was your own Fault, for you had an Order for Council as ſoon as you deſired it; and even from Saturday, is a reaſonable Time enough to prepare for anſwering the Queſtion, whether Guilty or Not Guilty.

Char. I ſuppoſe Mr. Bale is in Court, who gave Notice on Wedneſday, and I acknowledge he came upon the Thurſday, and asked if I would have any Body come to me; and he took then the Names of the Council that I deſired might come to me; and told me he would carry them to Mr. Attorney General, and ſee what his Opinion was of them; I ſuppoſe he did ſo: For upon Friday he came again, and brought me an Order for it; but when that Order was brought, the Council that was deſired was not to be had, or at leaſt with very great Difficulty, becauſe it was the Time of the Aſſizes, or very near it, and Council were gone or going out of Town; ſo that we could not have the Advantage of the Order for Council.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, We think you have had convenient Notice, with Liberty of conſulting whom you had a mind to; if you have neglected your Opportunity of conſulting them, you muſt blame yourſelf, and no Body elſe; we muſt go on according to Law.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they had the Liberty of naming their own Council, and the Names were brought to me, and as ſoon as ever they were ſo brought, thoſe that were named had Leave to go to the Priſon to them, and they had a further Order than the firſt, which was, that their Friends ſhould be permitted to come to them; but that was not, as it was not convenient to be, in private; but the other Order was, that the Council ſhould ſpeak with them in private, and not in the Preſence of the Jailor.

L. C. J. Pray hear what Mr. Attorney ſays, that your Council was ordered to be with you in private.

Char. But there was no Order, my Lord, for my Solicitor to be with me in the Abſence of the Jailor, who is the only proper Perſon for the conſulting with, and for going about to ſummon the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. We think you have had convenient Notice, and all the Allowances that can be in ſuch a Caſe. Ask him to plead.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Charnock, Are you guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Char. My Lord, I hope you will give me ſome more Time to get my Witneſſes, that are now abſent; ſeveral of them are ten Miles out of Town; and therefore, I would beg your Lordſhip to give me ſome Time.

L. C. J. Why, is ten Miles ſuch a Diſtance, that you could not have your Witneſſes between this Day ſeven-night and this Day? but beſides, Mr. Charnock, what you now urge is out of Time, you ſpeak too ſoon to put off the Trial, for there can be no Trial till Iſſue joined; and that cannot be till Plea pleaded.

Char.

Ch. My Lord, I was never inſtructed in Querks of Law, nor bred up to the Law; and I hope your Lordſhips will take care that I be not hurt for Want of Knowledge in the Forms of Law.

L. C. J. You may aſſure yourſelf, Mr. Charnock, you ſhall not be hurt by your Ignorance in the Law. All the Harm you will receive will be for having done contrary to the Law, and there is none of your Council, if they have been faithful to you, but muſt tell you the ſame Things we tell you now.

Char. My Lord, if I am to have no Council, I muſt deſire that the Court would be pleaſed to take the greater Care of me: For, as I have been informed, that was the Reaſon of the Practice of denying Council, that the Court ſhould be of Council for the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Mr. Hardeſty, ask him whether he be guilty, or not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Charnock, are you guilty, or not guilty?

Char. Not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how will you be try'd?

Char. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance. Edward King, How ſay you, Are you guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or not guilty?

King. My Lord, I beg the ſame Favour that Mr. Charnock has done, that I may have ſome more Time to prepare for my Trial, and a Copy of the Indictment, and Council aſſigned.

L. C. J. But you hear what has been ſaid to Mr. Charnock upon thoſe Points, and the ſame Rule that was given in his Caſe, you muſt expect will be in your Caſe.

Cl. of Ar. What ſay you, are you guilty or not guilty?

King. Not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how wilt thou be try'd?

King. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. Thomas Keyes, are you guilty of the ſame High-Treaſon, or not guilty?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Council at all.

L. C. J. But you might have had if you would; you had an Order for it as well as the others.

Keyes. My Lord, I was a Servant to Captain Porter; I was not able to fee any Council.

L. C. J. But you can tell whether you are guilty, or not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Art thou guilty, or not guilty?

Keyes. Not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Keyes. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Charnock. My Lord, I deſire I may have the Favour of Pen, Ink and Paper, upon my Trial.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you ſhall have it; and if you have a Mind to it, you ſhall have the Indictment read to you in Latin.

Char. My Lord, my Ignorance in Forms of Law made me not ask that before, becauſe I did not know whether I ſhould properly ask it or not: And I do not know whether I ſhould ask it properly now.

L. C. J. Yes, it is a very proper time to ask it, and you ſhall have it, if you have a mind to it.

Char. My Lord, I do really deſire it, if it be a proper Time for me to have it.

L. C. J. Read the Indictment in Latin.

Char. And now, my Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe that I ſhall have Pen, Ink and Paper, that I may make the beſt Obſervations I can, ſince I cannot have a Copy.

Char. What Word was that laſt, Sir?

Clark of Ar. Murdrare.

Char. That is an odd Word, I can't underſtand what it means.

L. C. J. It is a Term of Art, the Signification of it is to murder: —Go on, Mr. Hardeſty.

Char. My Lord, I deſire the Indictment may be read again, for there is ſo great a Noiſe in the Court, and that Gentleman hath not the moſt perfect Delivery; he is more uſed to Law-Latin than to any other. But I beg I may have it read again, that I may as perfectly as I can underſtand it.

The Indictment was read again in Latin.

L. C. J. Look ye, you that are the Priſoners, every one of you has the Liberty to challenge 35 of thoſe that are returned to ſerve upon the Jury that is to try you, without ſhewing any Cauſe; now if you will all join in the ſame Challenge, then we can try you all together, as ye are all together jointly in the Indictment; and ſave the Time and Trouble that will otherwiſe be unavoidable. But if you will not join in the ſame Challenge, but every Man challenge for himſelf, as by Law he has Liberty to do, we muſt be forced to try you ſingle, and therefore we would know of you, whether you deſign to join in your Challenge or not?

Char. My Lord, I hope the Court will give me leave to have my Sollicitor by me during my Trial, that I may be inſtructed in ſome meaſure how to manage myſelf, and when it is proper for me to ſpeak, and what.

L. C. J. No, we can order no ſuch Thing, you muſt ſpeak for yourſelf.

Char. My Lord, I am ignorant of the Methods of Law, and may make a great many Miſtakes and Slips, and omit what may be material to be obſerved for my Defence, and therefore ſhall the more need a Friend or Sollicitor to be by me, to mind me of it.

L. C. J. No, we cannot direct any ſuch Thing by Law. What ſay you as to your Challenges?

Char. As to the Jury, I had not a Copy of the Pannel till Yeſterday, and I have been informed, that it is uſual to have a Copy of the Pannel ten Days before the Trial; they are Gentlemen that I have no Knowledge of, nor can come at any Account of their Qualifications, ſo as to make proper Challenges.

L. C. J. You have the ſame Privilege that is ordinarily given to Perſons in your Condition.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was Order given for a Copy of the Pannel to be delivered.

L. C. J. That was not of Right, but of Favour; and it is a Practice that has of late obtained; but for what you talk of ten Days, that never was in any Caſe, nor is it practicable; you have the ſame Favour ſhewn you, that all other Priſoners have, and you can expect no more: But you do not anſwer the Queſtion, whether you will join in your Challenges or not?

Char. It is an indifferent Thing to me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you agree to it, Mr. King?

King. My Lord, I do not well underſtand it, I am ready to do any Thing I ſhould.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Keyes?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Council at all, to adviſe me about any Thing.

L. C. J. I tell you what the Law is in ſuch Caſes; You may every Man of you challenge 35 peremptorily without Cauſe, but if you do not all agree in the ſame Challenges, ye cannot be tried together by the ſame Jury: But the Court muſt ſeparate you, and try you every one ſingle.

Char. My Lord, I have got a Copy of the Pannel, if theſe Gentlemen that are by me do agree to join in the Challenge, I am very well content; it is indifferent to me.

L. C. J. Do you underſtand what is ſaid to you, Mr. King, and Mr. Keyes? Every one of you may, without ſhewing any Cauſe, except againſt 35 of thoſe that are returned of the Jury which are to try you, if you have no mind that thoſe ſhould be ſworn; but then if each of you do ſeverally challenge 35, ye cannot be tried by the ſame Jury.

Char. I hope, my Lord, if I do challenge, as I do not know how I ſhall be enabled without knowing their Qualifications, the Court will put me in mind when I come near the Number, that my challenging may not injure me; becauſe I am ignorant in the Law, and perhaps may ſlip in point of Number; and therefore, I would beg that your Lordſhips would allow me a Sollicitor to aſſiſt me, and put me in Mind, that I may not run into Errors.

L. C. J. You have been told over and over, that we cannot do that; the Court will take care that you be informed in Time, that you do not exceed in challenging a greater Number than you ought: What ſay you, Mr. King? Do you agree that one ſhall make Challenges for you all?

King. I do agree, that whatſoever Exception Mr. Charnock makes, I will abide by.

Char. My Lord, I cannot but think it hard, that I have not either Council or Sollicitor; my Council that I had are out of Town.

L. C. J. Why, was there no Council but thoſe that are gone the Circuit?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he had Order firſt for one Council, and then for another, and whomſoever he named he had Order for.

L. C. J. If you will chuſe none but thoſe you cannot have, that is your own Fault; You, Mr. Keyes, will you join in the Challenge?

Keyes. Yes, with all my Heart.

Cl. of Ar. Then you the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Trial of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Then thoſe of the Pannel that had appeared were called, and the Priſoners challeng'd 33. And the Names of thoſe that were ſworn are as follow.

Samuel Harwer,
Jonas Morley,
Anthony Nurſe,
Jaſper Hodgsden,
William Farnborough,
William Bird,
Simon Smith,
Thomas Dunck,
Richard Heath,
John Mills,
James Ketwich, and Chriſtopher Redknap.

Then Proclamation for Information, and the Witneſſes appearing, was made in uſual Form.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Charnock, Hold up thy Hand, (Which he did): Edward King, Hold up thy Hand, (Which he did): Thomas Keyes, Hold up thy Hand, (Which he did): You Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Cauſe; They ſtand indicted by the Names of, &c. (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis) —— And againſt the Form of the Statutes in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themſelves upon God and their Country, which County you are: Your Charge is to enquire of them, and every of them, whether they be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof they ſtand indicted, in Manner and Form as they ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find them or any of them Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince. If you find them, or any of them, Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether they fled for it; if you find that they, or any of them, fled for it, you are to inquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them Guilty; if you find them Not Guilty, nor that they did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury; The Record that has been now read unto you, is an Indictment of High-Treaſon, which charges the Three Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, with a Traiterous Conſpiracy, and Deſign to ſubvert the Government of this Kingdom, and to murder the King, and to bring the Subjects and Freemen of this Kingdom into Slavery and Subjection to the French King; and to this End the Indictment ſets forth; That upon the Tenth of February laſt, and diverſe other Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes, in the County of Middleſex, theſe three Priſoners at the Bar, with diverſe other Traytors unknown, did Conſult and Agree, to Aſſaſſinate the Perſon of our Sovereign Lord the King, as he was riding in his Coach; and did likewiſe agree, that Forty Horſemen, of which they themſelves were to be part of the Number, ſhould lie in Ambuſh, and ſet upon the King, ſo being in his Coach, and upon the Guards that were to attend him: And it likewiſe charges them with buying Horſes and Arms, for the Execution of this Wicked and Villainous Intention: To this they have pleaded Not guilty. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove this Matter upon them; and then we doubt not, but you, Gentlemen, will do Juſtice according to your Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe Gentlemen at the Bar ſtand indicted for a moſt Horrid and Barbarous Conſpiracy, to Aſſaſſinate and Murder his Majeſty's Royal Perſon: Gentlemen, this Aſſaſſination was to be ſeconded with an Invaſion from France, where Troops lay ready at Calais, as ſoon as the diſmal Stroke was given, to have landed upon our Coaſts; which if it had taken Effect we had not only ſuffered that moſt unſpeakable Loſs of the King, but it would have made an End of all our Liberties and Laws at once.

Gentlemen, This Offence in its Nature, is ſo Horrid and Barbarous, that as it needs no Aggravation, ſo it is incapable of having any, by any Words that can be uſed; for the very Naming of an Aſſaſſination of a King, carries ſuch Horror and Deteſtation in its ſelf, to all honeſt People, that it is impoſſible to aggravate it by any Expreſſions that can be uſed about it. But there is this peculiar Conſideration to be had, by all Engliſhmen, who love their Country, that this deſigned Aſſaſſination upon the Perſon of His Preſent Majeſty, was to take away the Life of a King, who every Body knows firſt ventured his own Life, to reſtore our Religion, Laws and Liberties, when they were juſt expiring under the Oppreſſion of Popery and Tyranny. And as he ventured his Life firſt to reſtore 'em, ſo he has ſince, upon all Occaſions, with the utmoſt Hazard, expoſed his Royal Perſon to the moſt imminent Dangers, for the preſerving and maintaining our Religion, Laws and Liberties, againſt the Power and Violence of the common Enemy: This Conſideration to all true Engliſhmen muſt have a very great Weight, and create the greateſt Horror and Deteſtation, both of the barbarous Deſign, and of all thoſe who had any Concern or Hand in it, to attempt upon the Life, not only of a King, but of ſuch a King.

Gentlemen, when you hear the Evidence that we ſhall offer to you, to prove this bloody Conſpiracy againſt theſe Priſoners, I doubt not but that there will be enough, and more than enough, to ſatisfy all true-heated Engliſh Subjects, and all People that have a Deſire to preſerve our Conſtitution and Government, in what Danger we and our Poſterity were of being utterly ruined, and involved in a common Deſtruction. I ſhall not detain you longer with any Diſcourſe about the Heinouſneſs of this Offence, becauſe every Man's own Thoughts cannot but ſuggeſt to him, how diſmal the Conſequences muſt have been, if ſo fatal a Stroke had been given.

But, Gentlemen, I muſt crave leave to take up ſo much of your Time as to open how this bloody execrable Conſpiracy was firſt framed, and afterwards carried on by the Priſoners at the Bar, together with others, till it was very near putting in Execution, had not the infinite Mercy of God prevented it, by a timely Diſcovery.

Gentlemen, this Conſpiracy was firſt framed and conſulted upon the laſt Year; there were ſeveral Conſultations and Meetings, at ſeveral Places about the Town, for this Purpoſe; then and at thoſe Conſultations and Meetings, there were preſent Capt. Porter, the Priſoners, and others of whom you will have an Account from the Witneſſes; and at that Time they had an Expectation of Commiſſions from the late King, to authorize the Deſign; that not coming, they yet reſolved to put it in Execution before the King went away. But becauſe the French Troops were then not in a Readineſs to come over hither, to protect them, after the Execution of the bloody Deſign, it was neceſſary for them to fly thither for Shelter; and therefore they endeavoured to procure a Veſſel to be ready to carry them over to France. But they could not get a Veſſel time enough; and then the King's going over into Flanders quickly after, prevented the Execution of the Deſign for that Time, and ſo Matters reſted till the King's Return.

About two or three Months ago, Sir George Barcley, who is an Officer in the late King James's Guards in France; and ſome other Officers, with Sixteen or Eighteen Troopers in thoſe Guards, privately came over from France to put this Deſign in Execution; and he did acquaint Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock with the Deſign, knowing that they had been engaged in the Matter before, and ſo could not but expect that they would readily aſſiſt. This Deſign was treated and conſulted of between them at ſeveral Times, and in ſeveral Places, at Captain Porter's, and Mr. Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-ſtreet; at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Nags-head Tavern at St. James's, and ſeveral other Places; ſeveral Conſultations and Meetings were had between the Priſoners at the Bar, and others, whom you will hear named at theſe Meetings; ſeveral Ways and Methods were propoſed, how it ſhould be beſt effected; it was propoſed by ſome, that it ſhould be done by Ambuſcaſe, that ſhould be laid near the King's Houſe at Richmond, ſuch a Number on Foot were to lie in the Wood, there ready to attack the King as he came by, and the reſt of the Conſpirators at the ſame Time to fall on the Guards. But this Method was not ſo well approved of, as that which was afterwards propoſed and agreed to: That is, there were to be three Parties of them, and the Place was the Lane, lying between Brentford and Turnham-Green, at the End next Turnham-Green, which the King uſed to paſs thro', upon his Return from Richmond: The Order and Method of the Deſign was this; Sir George Barcley, with Eight or Ten more, was to attack the Coach, and by firing into it, to have killed the King, and all in it, and the reſt were to attack the Guards, in two Parties, on each Side of the Lane, whereof Mr. Charnock and Porter were to command one, and Brigadier Rookwood the other. In order to ſee how feaſible this Deſign might be, the Priſoner King, Capt. Porter, and Knightly, were to go and ſurvey the Place; and the next Day after that Conſultation, they went to view the Ground, and did very carefully do it, both on this Side the Water, and on the other Sid the Water; and they came back and met the reſt of the Company at the Nagg's-Head Tavern late at Night, to give an Account what they had done in order to this Enterprize. It was agreed the Number ſhould be about Forty; Sir George Barcley was to make up about Twenty, Mr. Charnock was to furniſh Eight, Capt. Porter Seven, and ſo in other Proportions, in all to make up the Number of Forty; which they thought were enough to effect and accompliſh the Deſign.

In order to make this Matter the more ſure, they did appoint Two to lodge and wait at Kenſington, near the Guards; who were to give Notice, when the King went abroad: And they had their ſeveral Perſons aſſigned to whom they ſhould give Notice, who thereupon were to ſend Orders to the ſeveral Parties; one of which was Chambers, who was to give Notice to the Priſoner at the Bar Mr. Charnock, and there was one Durance, who was to give Notice to Sir George Barcley; and when ſuch Notice was given, then they were to ſend Orders to the ſeveral Perſons, who were to be concerned in this bloody Buſineſs, to come at the Time appointed, to be diſpoſed of into their ſeveral Poſts.

Gentlemen, in order to the furthering of this Deſign, they did likewiſe ſend Durance to go and view, and give them an Account of the moſt convenient Inns at Brentford, and Turnham-Green, and the Places adjacent; which were leaſt liable to Obſervation, where the Men might be the moſt conveniently diſpoſed of, to lie ready againſt the Time, when they were to execute this barbarous Aſſaſſination; accordingly he went, and took an Account of the ſeveral Inns within that Compaſs, and they were to be billetted by Two or Three in an Inn, ſo as not to be obſerved; Sir George Barcley and his Party at Turnham-Green, and the reſt at Brentford.

Gentlemen, after they had thus laid the Deſign, Saturday the 15th of February was the firſt Time pitched upon for the putting it in Execution, if the King went abroad, as he uſed to do, upon Saturdays, to Richmond to hunt; and if they had Notice from Durance and Chambers, that he was ſo to do, which Notice they had; and every Thing was prepared in order to have perpetrated this villainous Deſign; but it happened that the King went not abroad that Day, of which they had Notice about Noon from Chambers to Charnock, and Charnock ſent Word ſo to Porter's Lodgings, and then the Order for their getting together was countermanded, and the Note, by which Charnock ſent Word, was ſubſcribed with the Name of Robinſon; which you will hear is a Name he goes by, as well as by that of Charnock.

Thus they were diſappointed at that Time, but they were not diſcouraged from purſuing this inhuman Enterprize; but reſolved to go on the next Opportunity that ſhould be given. And to omit ſeveral Things that intervened, which the Witneſſes will give you an Account of, on the Friday following they met again, to have every Thing ready againſt the next Day, which was Saturday the 22d of February; when they expected the King would go abroad, as he uſually did on that Day of the Week; and that Meeting was at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and there were preſent Capt. Porter, Sir William Perkins, Sir George Barcley and Mr. Charnock; and at that Time there was a Diſcourſe amongſt them about the Diſappointment, which they had had the Week before, and ſome of them had a Jealouſy that a Diſcovery had been made of their Deſign: But then, upon further Conſideration, They concluded, If it had been ſo, they ſhould not have met there, but ſhould have been taken up: And therefore they concluded the King's ſtaying at Home that Day was but Accidental, and ſo reſolved to put their Conſpiracy in Execution the next Day.

While they were there, ſeveral Perſons for whom whom Capt. Porter had undertaken, that is, one Cranborne, Kenrick, and Keyes the Priſoner at the Bar, came to Porter; theſe were carried into another Room, and commanded all to be ready the next Day, when it was reſolved to put the Aſſaſſination in Execution: And then Capt. Porter asked Kenrick for Sherborne, who it ſeems had been undertaken for; but it was anſwered, That he asked ſo many Queſtions about the Matter, that he did not think fit to truſt him.

The next Morning they met again at Captain Porter's Lodgings; and there met, as the Witneſſes will tell you, amongſt others, Mr. Pendergraſs, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. King; King brought a Meſſage to Capt. Porter from Sir George Barcley, to know the Names of thoſe that were concerned, and upon that Meſſage Capt. Porter writ down the Names of his Men, who were for his Quota, and ſent the Liſt by Cranborne to Mr. Charnock, to add his Liſt to it of the Men he was to have under him; Cranborne afterwards came back, and brought the Liſt that Capt. Porter ſent, with the additional Liſt ſent by Mr. Charnock, written with his own Hand, and ſubſcribed R. C. and Cranborne told them that Chambers had ſent Word, that the King would go out that Morning: At the Hearing of which there was much Joy amongſt them; for they hoped then their wicked Deſign would be put in Execution that Day. There was a Diſcourſe then likewiſe, that Porter had a Piece which carried Six Bullets; and this, it was ordered, ſhould be put into the Hands of Pendergraſs, who was to be one of Sir George Barcley's Men, to attack and fire into the King's Coach.

This was upon Saturday the 22d of February, when they had News that the King was to go abroad, and every Thing was to be put in Execution at his Return from Richmond. From Captain Porter's Lodgings they went to the Blue Poſts in Spring Garden; but about 12 o'Clock there came News from Chambers, one of the orderly Men at Kenſington, that the King did not go abroad that Day: This put them into a very great Confuſion; they then thought ſome Diſcovery muſt needs be made becauſe of the Diſappointment two Saturdays together; and Keyes, the Priſoner at the Bar, came up and told them, that the Guards were all come back in a Foam, and the King's Coaches were brought back to the Meuſe: And this confirmed them in their former Jealouſy that the Matter was diſcovered; upon which Captain Porter, Mr. Pendergraſs and Mr. Keyes went together to lie hid ſome Time; but they ſaid they would ſend Keyes to Mr. Charnock, to let him know where they might be heard of; and if the Matter was not diſcovered, they would ſtill go on to put it in Execution: But they could not part without drinking ſome Traiterous Healths, which the Witneſſes will tell you of, to the Reſtoring of the late King and his Queen, and the Prince of Wales; and after all, one of the Company taking an Orange in his Hand, began a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange; and in this Manner it was drunk by all of them before they parted, tho' they were under the Apprehenſion at that Time of being diſcovered already.

This is the Beginning and Progreſs of the ſeveral Conſultations that were had for the Carrying on this execrable Traiterous Conſpiracy. I have opened it ſhortly to you, but you will hear it much fuller in its ſeveral Parts by the Witneſſes. By what I have opened, you cannot but obſerve, that it was very near coming to be executed, if there had not been a Diſcovery of it Time enough, thro' the Providence of Almighty God, to prevent it. They had agreed, after the intended Aſſaſſination, to keep together, till they came near the Town, and then they were to lie hid till the French Troops landed, which they were aſſured of were ready upon the leaſt Intimation of the Succeſs of this Conſpiracy.

Gentlemen, every Body may gueſs at the diſmal Conſequences that would have follow'd, had this bloody Deſign taken Effect; and I am ſure, as we and our Poſterity could not have expected any Thing leſs than the perpetual Yoke and Burden of Slavery and Popery, if it had pleaſed God to permit this Conſpiracy to take Effect; ſo I hope we ſhall always remember the merciful Hand of Providence, that has detected and diſappointed it.

Gentlemen, I ſhall not detain you any longer; I have opened unto you Part of that which will more fully be made out by the Witneſſes; only I would obſerve, that the Providence of God has not only made a Diſcovery to prevent the Execution of this abominable Villainy, but hath brought this Conſpiracy ſo far to light, by ſuch unqueſtionable Teſtimony, that no Man can doubt of the Reality of it, which I hope will raiſe in every honeſt Man's Mind an Abhorrence and Deteſtation of thoſe Principles, upon which ſo villainous and barbarous a Deſign was founded; and I think I may ſay, that after the Evidence you will hear this Day, no one will pretend any Doubt of the Truth thereof, but either ſuch as are ſorry for the Diſcovery, or ſuch as knew too much of the Conſpiracy before. I ſhall trouble you no further, but call our Witneſſes, who will give you a clear and full Account of this Conſpiracy. Swear Capt. Porter. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain Porter, Sir John Hawles. I would not lead you with any Queſtion, but pray will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know concerning any Conſpiracy about aſſaſſinating the King, and when it was to be done, and where, and how, and by whom; and particularly what relates as to that Matter to the Priſoners at the Bar.

Char. My Lord, there are two Things that I muſt beg of the Court, in Relation to the Witneſſes that are to be produced and the Evidence that is to be given againſt me at this Time: And the firſt is, That before any of the Witneſſes give any Evidence againſt me, the reſt that are to be ſworn and produced, may be kept out of Court, till they that are called have ſeverally given their Evidence, that one may not hear what the other ſays; That I ſuppoſe is but reaſonable in a Caſe of this Nature, and what was never denied, but always allow'd, as I have been informed.

L. C. J. There is but one Witneſs ſworn, and I believe, that there are none of the reſt here.

Char. Yes, my Lord, here is one Gentleman in Court whom I ſuppoſe to be an Evidence, and that is Mr. De la Rue.

L. C. J. If there be any others of the Witneſſes, let them withdraw till they be called for; let there be ſome Body to look after them and attend them. (Which was accordingly done.)

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, you have your Deſire as to this Matter, all the reſt of the Witneſſes are withdrawn.

Char.

Char. My Lord, there is another Thing that I have to beg of the Court, and that is, in relation to the Evidence in general, That if there be any Thing prov'd to be ſpoken in Company, and talked of by Way of common Diſcourſe, or only in Jollity in ordinary Converſation, that may not be interpreted as a Proof of any ſettled Deſign or Practice.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, who can tell what the Evidence will be until it be given? you will hear what is depoſed by the Witneſſes, and you have Pen and Ink, and may make ſuch Obſervations as you think fit: When the Witneſſes are heard, you will have all the Advantage that can be allowed you, and you may then propoſe your Objections to the Matter of their Evidence; which, no doubt, will have their juſt Weight with the Court: In the mean time, have you any Exception to this Man's being a Witneſs? If you have no Exception againſt him, then he muſt give his Evidence; and after he has deliver'd himſelf, and the King's Council have done with him, you are at Liberty to ask him what Queſtions you think fit.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain Porter, I deſire you will acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of any Conſpiracy to take away the Life of his Majeſty, when it began, in what Manner it was carried on, how far it proceeded, how it came to be diſappointed, who were concerned in it, and what relates to the Priſoners at the Bar, as to their Share therein.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I am unfortunately ingaged in this Matter, and have made a frank Diſcovery, to make the King all the Atonement I can, for having been concerned in ſuch a Deſign. Some Weeks before this Conſpiracy for Aſſaſſinating the King was in Hand, there came to my Lodging——

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, I would not interrupt you, but to put it into a Method, and Order of Time, will you pleaſe to recollect your ſelf, and give the Court and the Jury an Account of your Knowledge about the firſt Beginning of this Conſpiracy the laſt Year; I would not lead you, and therefore I ask you the general, and no particular Queſtion.

Char. My Lord, I ſuppoſe that any Queſtion about what was done the laſt Year is not at all to the Purpoſe in this Caſe, for there is nothing mention'd in the Indictment of the laſt Year.

L. C. J. It is in the Indictment diverſe Days and Times, as well before as after.

Char. The Crime for which we are accuſed is laid to be the 10th Day of February, 1695.

L. C. J. The Day is not material, but only a Circumſtance, but in Form, ſome Day before the Indictment preferred, muſt be laid; and tho' the Day mentioned in the Indictment is the 10th of February, yet it is alſo ſaid, that the Things contained in the Indictment, of which you are accuſed, were done likewiſe at diverſe Days and Times, as well before as after, and ſo the Indictment comprehends even what might be done the laſt Year as well as this.

Char. I beg the Favour of the Court in this Matter, for ſure the 10th of February laſt can no way be ſuppoſed to be in the laſt Year.

L. C. J. I told you before, the Day is not material, nor are the Witneſſes nor the King's Council tyed up either to the particular Time or Place mention'd in the Indictment, ſo it be within the County, and before the Indictment preferred. All that is to be regarded is, that no Evidence be given or admitted of any other Species of Treaſon, but what is contained in the Indictment; for a Man may certainly be indicted for a Treaſon committed this Year, and upon his Trial Evidence may be given of the ſame Treaſon committed the Year before.

Char. But then how can a Man prepare for his Defence?

Mr. Att. Gen. The Time is but a Circumſtance, it may certainly be proved at another Day than what is laid in the Indictment, and yet very good Proof; and ſo it is in all other Caſes, as well Civil as Criminal.

Char. Mr. Attorney General has ſaid enough I think to confute himſelf; for if one Year may be put in the Indictment, and nother Year brought in in the Evidence, how ſhall any Man be able to apply himſelf to his Defence, whoſe Thoughts run only upon the Time laid in the Indictment? I hope neither the Court nor the King's Council will come ſo hard upon us, as to put our Thoughts quite out of all Order, that when we apprehend we are only to defend ourſelves againſt what is ſaid to be done this Year, we muſt afreſh prepare ourſelves to anſwer what was done the laſt Year.

L. C. J. It is always ſo; for Form Sake, there is a particular Time laid in the Indictment, but the Proof is not to be tyed up to that Time; but if it be proved at any Time before or after, ſo it be before the Indictment preferred, it is well enough: And not without great Reaſon, for the Treaſon conſiſting in imagining and compaſſing the King's Death, which may be manifeſted by diverſe Overt Acts, ſome before, ſome on, and others ſince, the Tenth of February, yet they are Evidences of one Treaſon, which is the Compaſſing the King's Death.

Char. Then we may be under an Obligation to give an Account of all the Tranſactions of our Lives, if that be the Rule.

L. C. J. No, not ſo neither, for that very Treaſon aſſigned in the Indictment muſt be proved, and therefore you are only to give an Anſwer to that, and nothing elſe.

Char. But, my Lord, it may give a very great Looſe, and much hinder our Defence; for as it is now deſired that Proof may be given, of what was done laſt Year, at the ſame Rate, they [as well before and after] may ſignify ſeven Years ago.

L. C. J. And ſo it may if your Conſpiracy reach'd ſo far, or did then begin, and was afterwards purſued; this is not any Thing that is unuſual, but the Common Law is plain in it. Well, what ſay you, Mr. Porter?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I will give you an Account, if your Lordſhip pleaſeth, of what was done this Year? and if any Queſtions afterwards be thought fit by the King's Council to be now asked me, about what paſſed before, I will anſwer them very readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then go on your own way, we will reſerve ourſelves till afterwards.

Capt. Porter. Some Weeks before this Deſign was on Foot, for aſſaſſinating the King, Sir William Perkins when he was in Town, was at the ſame Place where Mr. Charnock and I did lodge; it was about the latter End of January: He asked Mr. Charnock where he would be at Night; and I told them, if they were not about private Buſineſs, I would would meet them. He told me, there were ſome Friends come from France, and that ſomething was a doing that would be for the Service of the King: I told them, if any Thing of that Nature was a doing, I would readily engage in it; and they told me I ſhould know it very ſoon. A little after I fell ſick of the Gout, and could not ſtir from my Chamber: But then Mr. Charnock did acquaint me, that Sir George Barcley, and thoſe that came from France, had brought a Commiſſion to raiſe and levy War upon the Perſon of King William; and he asked me how many I could bring to join with them, if the King landed; I deſired to conſider of it, and he told me Sir George Barcley would come to him about it. Accordingly, he and Holmes came to the Houſe where we lodged, in Norfolk-ſtreet, and there they were in private with Mr. Charnock; and afterwards, becauſe I was lame, and could not ſtir, they came into my Room, and Sir George Barcley told me, he was glad to ſee me in good Health, but ſorry to find me lame, but he hoped to ſee me abroad in a little Time; and I told him, I hoped ſo too. They ſaid, they were going then to ſome Company, and they hoped to ſee me afterwards. After that there were ſeveral Meetings that we had, particularly at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Naggs-Head at St. James-ſtreet, and the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and in all theſe Places we did conſult together, which was the beſt Way, and where was the beſt Place to aſſaſſinate the King, when he came from Hunting. Sir George Barcley told us he had ſome Money to buy Horſes, but not much, he had as much as would furniſh about Forty. Capt. Charnock ſaid, he would bring ſix or ſeven Men, that ſhould come out of the Country. Sir William Perkins ſaid he would lend five Horſes, there to be mounted by Men of his own, the other two by ſuch as ſhould be provided. I promiſed to bring ſeven Men with Horſes, and Sir George Barcley ſaid, that Lowick and others that came over with him from France, would engage in the Deſign, and make up the Number. I deſired very much to ſee the Commiſſion that came from the late King, and asked Mr. Charnock about it; he ſaid he never ſaw it, but Sir William Perkins told me, he had ſeen it, and that it was all writ with King James his own Hand, and ſigned by himſelf. All this was agreed to, and then there were Conſultations in what Method it was to be done. Several Propoſals there were; one was to ſet upon him as he came from Richmond by the Road, others when he was on Horſe-back at Cue. Sir George Barcley was for having it done by Ambuſcade in the Park by Richmond, and therefore deſired me to go with Mr. Knightly, and view the ſeveral Places and Ground thereabouts, to find out which was the moſt convenient Place. The Day before we were to go, Capt. King came to me, and would know if we were to go about ſuch a Matter, and proffered to go with us. I told him I had never a Horſe, but he ſaid, he would get one. We went that Night to the Swan at Knights-bridge, and there we lay, and went the next Day to view the Ground, and came the next Evening to the Company, to give an Account what we had done; and upon the Account that we gave, Sir George Barcley's Mind was altered, and it was agreed to do it in the Lane coming from Brentford to Turnham Green, and the particular Manner was agreed on too. There was one Rookwood that was to command one Party of Sir George Barcley's Men, to attack the Guard; he told us, he had bought twenty Horſes which were to be employed in this Expedition; they were to be divided in three Parties, and Sir George Barcley was to have four out of each of the other Parties, and to ſeize upon the King's Coach, and to ſhoot into it, and kill the King, and all thoſe that were with him: And this was to be done on the 15th of February, which was a Saturday, and the King uſually went to Richmond on Saturdays. We had two orderly Men (as they were called) who were to lie at Kenſington, to give Intelligence when the King and the Guards went out, the one was Chambers, and the other one Durant, a Flemming, I think, or I do not well know what Country-man he was; and Durant was to bring an Account when the Guard went out, and Chambers when the King went out, and when we had Notice that the King was gone, we were to go by three or four in a Party to prevent Suſpicion, and we were to be diſperſed in the ſeveral Inns about Brentford and Turnham Green. Sir George Barcley was to be at the King of Bohemia's Head; and we ordered a Man to give Notice to him when the King landed, and then he was to give Notice to us, and ſo we were to form our ſelves into our ſeveral Bodies, to take our ſeveral Poſts as were agreed upon. I asked him, what he thought to do when the Matter was over, how we ſhould diſpoſe of our ſelves? He told me, we need not fear any Thing, but might go to Town and lie ſtill, and that there would come a ſufficient Number from Abroad ready to aſſiſt us. That 4 or 5000 French were to divert in Scotland, and the King would be near the French Shore with a ſufficient Army. On Friday before the 22d, when it was to have been executed again, we met at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand; and there diſcourſed, for a matter of half an Hour, about the former Diſappointment, and ſeveral in the Company were afraid the Deſign was diſcovered; but then I told them, if it had been ſo, ſure we ſhould have been taken up before now; upon which it was agreed, Then let us reſolve upon it again to Morrow, and ſo it was reſolved upon. Capt. Charnock ſaid, he could not ſtay, becauſe he ſhould want ſome Men that were come up out of the Country on purpoſe. I ſaid, I was afraid my Horſes were ſick, and could not be uſed in the Service, and Sir William Perkins thereupon undertook to furniſh me, and told Mr. Charnock and me he had ſent to Mr. Lewis, that belongs to the Earl of Feverſham, to procure ſome, having, as he ſaid, promiſed ſo to do. I ſent the next Morning to have a Note for two, by Mr. Cranburne, and he ſent me a Note back again by Cranburne, that he had ſent to Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Lewis ſaid, he would help him to three Horſes, with Saddles, Holſters and Piſtols, and deſired the Liſt of my Men, which I ſent him, and he ſent it me back again with the Liſt of his own, and then I ſhewed it to Mr. De la Rue, and we were preparing all Things for the Execution of this Deſign, and preſently after News came, that the King did not go out that Day neither; upon which I ſaid I would go out of Town, and I asked Capt. Pendergraſs to go with me, and we ſent Keyes to bring Linnen unto us, but he did not come until the Wedneſday, and upon the Thurſday we were taken.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, you mention ſeveral Conſultations, at ſeveral Times and Places; who were preſent at any, and which of them? Were any of the Priſoners at the Bar there, and which?

Capt. Porter. There was Mr. Charnock, and Mr. King, at all of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you ſay about Keyes? What was he?

Capt. Porter. He was my Servant a Year and a Half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he acquainted with the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was, and was preſent at moſt of the Conſultations. He hired Horſes for me to be employed in the Buſineſs. On the firſt Saturday, he hired two, I gave him Money for them, and he did know upon what Account they were hired.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he preſent when News was brought of the Diſappointment?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was both Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are ſure he was preſent then?

Capt. Porter. Yes, the ſecond Time he ſaid, that he met the King's Guards that were come back all in a Foam, and that he had ſpoke to one of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, and that ſomething was mutter'd, upon which he feared a Diſcovery.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Keyes agree to be one of the Men, that ſhould be concerned and act in this Buſineſs?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Quality is he of? What is his Profeſſion?

Capt. Porter. He uſed formerly to help to dreſs me, and he was to look after my Linnen and Equipage.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he not been a Trumpeter? Was not that his Profeſſion?

Capt. Porter. He was a Trumpeter, and uſed ſometimes to entertain us with his Trumpet.

Mr. Conyers. You ſpeak of a Meeting at the Sun Tavern in the Strand upon Friday the 21ſt of February where it was reſolved to execute this Attempt upon the next Day.

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was ſuch a Meeting.

Mr. Conyers. Was Keyes there at that Time?

Capt. Porter. He was not in the Room where we were, but he was in another Room in the ſame Houſe, where I went out to him, and there was he, Cranburne and Kenrick.

Mr. Conyers. Pray what did you go to them for?

Capt. Porter. I went to acquaint them what was reſolved upon; and I told them they were reſolved to do it the next Day, to which they agreed, but that I thought my Horſes would not be ready, but I hoped I ſhould get ſome other.

Mr. Con. Pray, what other Diſcourſe had you in that Company: With whom, and about what?

Capt. Porter. Mr. Kenrick came to me with his Arm in a String; either he had broke his Arm, or pretended ſo to have done. I then asked him for Mr. Sherbourn, whom he had mentioned before to me, as one that was likely to be concerned: He told me Mr. Sherbourn asked a great many Queſtions about the Deſign, which he did not think fit to anſwer; I thanked him for telling me ſo, and ſaid I would not ſend to him.

Mr. Cooper. Pray, Captain Porter, give me leave to ask you one Queſtion, Can you remember what Number of Men Charnock was to provide for this Enterprize?

Capt. Porter. He promiſed ſeven or eight Men, ſome of which ſhould bring their Horſes out of the Country, others he would borrow or hire for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, was there any Body ſent to take an Account of the Inns about the Place where this Aſſaſſination was to have been executed?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Mr. Durant was, and he did bring us an Account of the ſeveral Inns about Brentford and Turnham Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. As to the Liſt of Men, which you ſay you ſent to Charnock, and he ſent you back with a Liſt of his Men, pray can you tell whoſe Hand that Liſt of his Men was in?

Capt. Porter. I know Captain Charnock's Hand very well, and, to the beſt of my Knowledge, it was his own Hand, and ſubſcribed R. C.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, you have given an Account of the Meeting the 22d at your Lodging.

Charnock. I was not there he ſays.

Mr. Att. Gen. Firſt let me ask you, how came it that it was not put in Execution the 15th; for that you did not tell us before?

Capt. Porter. I tell you, Sir, it was becauſe the King did not go out that Day, according as we had Notice, that he intended to do: Durant wrote firſt Word that the Guards were gone before, upon which I went for my Men, and about Noon I received a Note from Mr. Charnock that the King did not go out that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Name was ſubſcribed to that Note?

Capt. Porter. R. Robinſon, which was a Name he uſed to go by ſometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And pray in whoſe Hand was that Note?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Knowledge it was Captain Charnock's, I know his Hand very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if the Priſoners will ask him any Queſtions, they may.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Char. My Lord, in the firſt Place I deſire the Judgment of the Court, whether he be a legal Evidence or no. I conceive he is not, and I hope your Lordſhips will think ſo too: For he makes himſelf a Criminal by his own Confeſſion, and that of a very heinous Crime, and it is equal in my Judgment (and as I have been adviſed, who I muſt ſtill ſay am ignorant in theſe Matters) as if he had confeſs'd it upon an Indictment, and then the Law can take no Notice of him as a good Witneſs. And if he were no legal Witneſs then, I take it by the ſame Reaſon he is no legal Witneſs now: For the Crime is the ſame, and it is an Acknowledgment in open Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, if it had been a Confeſſion upon an Indictment, it would have been a Conviction, which would have had quite another Operation; but it not being upon an Indictment, it is no Conviction, and therefore he is a legal Witneſs, though he does acknowledge himſelf to be guilty of the Crime.

Char. Then, my Lord, he is looked upon as no good Evidence, in my Judgment, becauſe he is a Criminal.

L. C. J. He is a legal Evidence, tho' he does confeſs himſelf guilty of the Crime.

Char. He owns himſelf a Partner in a bloody Deſign,

Deſign, and to convict me, he ſwears to take away my Life, to ſave his own. I cannot imagine why he ſhould be accounted a legal Witneſs, that is a Party by his own Confeſſion in ſuch a Matter.

L. C. J. Pray, who can tell better what was intended and done in ſuch a Conſpiracy than he that was a Party in it?

Char. My Lord, he has forfeited his Life by his own Confeſſion, and now he would by Swearing againſt me take away my Life to ſave his own.

L. C. J. Whatſoever Objections you have againſt the Credit of his Teſtimony, you may make what Uſe of them you can in the proper Time; but for any thing that yet appears, he is a legal Witneſs.

Charnock. My Lord, I know not how far he is a legal Witneſs, therein I muſt be governed by the Judgment of the Court; but ſure it will take away from the Credibility of his Teſtimony, his own Acknowledgment of his being guilty of ſuch a Crime. Tho' he may be a legal Witneſs, he cannot be a good one. And I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider of it, when a Man comes to take away other Mens Lives to ſave his own, by accuſing them of Crimes which he acknowledgeth himſelf to be guilty of.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, for that matter, it is ſo in all Caſes of this Nature, not only in Caſes of High-Treaſon, but of Robberies and Burglaries, and the like, where the Parties concerned are and always have been allow'd to be good Witneſſes againſt their Accomplices in thoſe Crimes. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Mr. Charnock?

Charnock. My Lord, here is another Thing, which, I apprehend, I have Reaſon to object againſt the Teſtimony of this Witneſs; he does not only ſwear to ſave his own Life, and take away another's to deſerve the ſaving of his own, but there is in this Caſe Swearing to get a Reward, for there is a Reward of 1000 l. apiece promiſed by Proclamation, for the Apprehenſion of this Man and others. And not only a Pardon but the 1000 l. to any of thoſe in the Proclamation who ſhall diſcover and take any of the proſcribed Perſons. Now, where a Man ſtands accuſed by Proclamation, and his own Life is thereby concerned, and a Reward is propos'd for any of the Conſpirators diſcovering and apprehending the others, it is a hard Matter to admit any one that acknowledgeth himſelf guilty of ſuch a Crime, to prove a Priſoner guilty of that Crime under thoſe Circumſtances. Beſides, my Lord, I have known this Gentleman, and tho' he may have had an Eſtate, yet ſince I have Reaſon to ſuſpect, and perhaps it may be very well known, that the Fortune he had is laviſhed away; to make up that Damage, he may be tempted to undertake this Way of Swearing. So I think he cannot be a good Evidence, and I hope your Lordſhip will think ſo too, and that he is to receive no Credit or Countenance before an honeſt Jury, as I doubt not theſe Gentlemen are that are to try us.

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, do not miſtake yourſelf, he is to have no Reward by the Proclamation unleſs he had come in voluntarily, and apprehended one of the others; for only thoſe that apprehend any of the Perſons named in the Proclamation, are to receive any Part of the Reward, not any of the Witneſſes againſt any of them; the Reward is for the Apprehenſion, whether they be found guilty or not guilty.

Char. But ſtill, my Lord, he cannot be a good Witneſs, for it looks as if he was a Man that was willing to have become an Evidence, becauſe we, whom he has accuſed, particularly my ſelf, were permitted to be taken, and then in the mean while he ſeems to withdraw, only that he might be taken as a Colour. For my Part, I know not but that it may be a Contrivance of his own, to be colourably taken up, becauſe he is ſo willingly an Evidence, as the Jury may perceive he is.

L. C. J. It is certainly a very hard Matter, if not impoſſible, to diſcover Crimes of this Nature, if the Accomplices in thoſe Crimes ſhall not be allowed to be good Witneſſes againſt their Fellow-Conſpirators.

Char. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit to the Judgment of the Court that he is a legal Witneſs. But tho' I ſhall not preſs upon the Legality, yet I muſt ſay he is not a good Witneſs for all the Reaſons that I have urged.

L. C. J. Nay, he is a very good Witneſs, if he be a legal Witneſs; but the Credit of what he ſays, as in all other Caſes, muſt be left to the Jury, who are Judges of the Matter of Fact, and the Credibility of the Witneſſes.

Char. My Lord, when Perſons will own themſelves guilty of joining in ſo barbarous a Crime as we ſtand indicted for, and accuſed of, ſure there will be little Credit due to their Teſtimony.

L. C. J. His Credit muſt be left to the Jury, who are the Judges of it; now if you will ask no Queſtions, I muſt ſpeak to the reſt; Mr. King will you ask him any Queſtions?

Char. I ſpeak this only in general; but I have ſome Remarks that I have made upon the Evidence that has been given, out of which, when I have told you of them, Queſtions may ariſe, which it may be fit for me to propoſe, and I ſhall deſire your Lordſhip's Leave accordingly.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, you ſhall be heard all that you have to ſay, when your Time comes for your Defence, and to make what Obſervations upon the Evidence you pleaſe. But the Matter is now, whether you will think fit to croſs-examine the Witneſſes that are produced for the King, or to ask them any Queſtions?

Char. My Lord, I have taken ſome Notes of what has been ſaid, and I deſire I may make the beſt Uſe of them that I can.

L. C. J. You may make what uſe you will of your Notes, and make what Obſervation you will to make any Queſtion you ask intelligible.

Char. My Lord, Capt. Porter in his Evidence hath ſaid that this Conſpiracy was in the latter End of February. Now I apprehend his Oath is not valuable upon this Indictment, becauſe the Offence is laid the Tenth of February, and ſo his Conſpiracy that he talks of, was after the Time laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. I believe you miſtake him, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he pleaſes to ask him, I ſuppoſe he will find himſelf miſtaken.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I ſay the latter End of January; if I ſaid February I miſtook.

L. C. J. And ſo it muſt be; for the two and twentieth of February, was to have been the ſecond Time for the Execution of the Deſign, and ſeveral of the Conſpirators were taken the next Day.

Char. My Lord, I deſire Capt. Porter may be asked, where it was, and when, that I brought Sir George Barcley and Mr. Holmes into his Company?

Capt. Porter. It was the Beginning of February, at my Chamber in the ſame Houſe where Mr. Charnock lodged, and I was then ſick of the Gout.

Char. My Lord, I declare it, I know nothing of it. Then he ſays we had ſeveral Meetings, particularly at three ſeveral Taverns; by what I can obſerve, there is no Time at all, nor at any of thoſe three Places that there was any Sort of Conſpiracy for the Aſſaſſinating of the King.

L. C. J. Yes, he ſays, that you met at thoſe Places, where you did conſult about Aſſaſſinating of the King, and the Ways and Methods how it ſhould be carried on, and that you was at thoſe Conſults; for Mr. Attorney asked him particularly, Whether you that are the Priſoners were there? and he ſays, Ay.

Char. He ſays, that we met at the Nagg's-head Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet, where it was agreed that he and Knightly ſhould go and view the Ground, to ſee which would be the moſt convenient Place; and that they came the next Night to give an Account according to our Deſire. Now, my Lord, I was there at Dinner, and Capt. Porter did come in at Night; and if you do remember, Captain, you could not pull off your Boots well, and complained of the Gout, and was very peeviſh; and ſaid you had been at Mortlack, and had met with a Friend there; That is all that I know. There was Capt. King and Mr. Knightly indeed; who ſent for ſome other Cloaths, but it cannot be pretended that there was any Crime tranſacted at that Time; for you cannot imagine, that I would have to do in any ſuch Matter amongſt Porters and Meſſengers that were to go on common Errands.

L. C. J. I will only put you in a right Method; You may ask what Queſtions you will now; but you are not to make your Obſervations upon the Witneſſes to the Jury till the King's Evidence be given, for then your Time will come for your Defence.

Char. My Lord, it may be I may forget then what may be proper for me to inſiſt upon. If your Lordſhip will pleaſe to allow me a Sollicitor to put me in Mind, I ſhould be the better able to manage my ſelf.

L. C. J. You may be helped by your Notes; but you have been told over and over, we can allow no Sollicitor.

Char. My Lord, Capt. Porter ſays, I told him there was ſuch a Commiſſion brought by Sir George Barcley from King James; he ſays indeed, I told him I never ſaw it; and I do not know how I could, becauſe I do not believe there ever was any ſuch, and it is improbable there ſhould be any ſuch.

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, I would not hinder you from ſaying any Thing that would be proper for your Defence, nor will interrupt you when your proper Time comes.

Char. My Lord, what I ſay is as to what Captain Porter has evidenced, and I will make Obſervations upon one Part of the Evidence after another, as it is given.

L. C. J. But that is not regular, according to the Courſe of Evidence, and will introduce a Confuſion. You may ask any Queſtions of the particular Witneſſes, as they are in Order, if you will; but your Obſervations, as to your own Defence, you muſt defer, till the Witneſſes are heard, that ſo the Evidence may be intire, and your Defence intire; therefore if you will ask him any Queſtions, ſay ſo.

Char. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Mr. King, will you ask him any Queſtions?

King. Capt. Porter, Did I mention any Thing, or was there any Diſcourſe when you and I, and Mr. Knightly, as you ſay, went out to view the Ground, about killing the King?

Capt. Porter. The Day before we went, we dined together, and it was at the Nagg's-head, and he asked if I was to meet Knightly, and go and view the Ground, in order to ſettling the Deſign, which was then talked of, and conſulted about; and Captain King deſired to go with us, and we lay at Knights-bridge; and when we were about it, we diſcourſed ſeveral Times of the Nature of the Place; and Captain King did not approve of the Place on this Side the Water, but liked the Ambuſcade better which was to have been on the other ſide the Water.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

King. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well then, What ſays the other Man, Keyes? Will he ask him any Queſtions?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Body to adviſe me, no Council; I was only a Servant to Captain Porter.

Mr. Att. Gen. If then they have done with him, before he goes, I deſire to ask him one Queſtion. What Diſcourſe, or Treaty, or Conſultation about this, or ſuch like a Matter, there was the laſt Winter, and between whom?

Capt. Porter. There were ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations the laſt Winter between Capt. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and myſelf, about ſuch a Thing; and we thought that the quickeſt Way to bring in the King, and reſtore him to his Crown, was by knocking King William on the Head; and there were ſeveral Meetings about the Ways of doing it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who elſe were there at thoſe Meetings?

Capt. Porter. There were ſeveral others in Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. But the Meaning of my Queſtion is, who of the Priſoners?

Capt. Porter. I cannot remember any but Capt. Charnock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint us with the Reaſon why it was not done at that time.

Capt. Porter. We wanted a Commiſſion from France, which we thought was a neceſſary Authority for us to act by.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſpeak of a Liſt that was brought you again from Charnock, with the Addition of thoſe Names that were his Men; pray at that time was there no Diſcourſe about a particular Gun that was ſomebody's, and that one in the Company was to have, to be employed in this Service?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I ſaid, I had a Muſquetoon that carried 6 or 8 Bullets, that Capt. Pendergraſs, who was one of the Four out of my Quota, that was to go with Sir George Barcley, ſhould have if he pleaſed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Capt. Porter, I would not lead you, but were there any particular Directions given, and what, touching the particular Imployment of that Gun?

Capt. Porter. I remember I told Capt. Pendergraſs, if the Coach made any great haſte to get away, he might eaſily hinder that, by killing or laming one of the Horſes with that Gun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray recollect yourſelf, Sir, was King, the Priſoner at the Bar, preſent at that Diſcourſe?

Capt.

Capt. Porter. Capt. King was then in my Room in Maiden-lane, where I then lay, being removed from my Lodging at Norfolk-ſtreet.

King. Do you ſay that I heard any ſuch Diſcourſe?

Capt. Porter. I cannot ſay you heard it, but you was preſent then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there not ſome Diſcourſe about a Defect of the Numbers that were appointed, and expected to join in this Thing?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I told you I wanted a Man, and that was Kenrick, who had his Arm in a String; and Mr. De la Rue brought one that I knew not, and ſome of the Company went to the Blue-Poſts to tarry there whilſt I came to them, and Capt. King was preſent when the News was brought us of the Diſappointment, and then I reſolved to go out of Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witneſs, my Lord, that we call is Mr. De la Rue, and we deſire he may be ſworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. De la Rue, we would deſire you to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you know of any Deſign or Conſpiracy to Aſſaſſinate the King, when it began, how it was carry'd on, and by whom, and by what Methods?

Mr. De la Rue. My Lord, this Conſpiracy hath been carrying on a great while, for ſome Years: And it originally came from Col. Parker, eſpecially as to my Knowledge of it; and that was five or ſix Years ago, at St. Germains, when I was there: He propoſed it to me, and ſaid he would propoſe it to my Lord Melfort, who was King James's Secretary in France. Two Years after, he came over into England, it was a little before the Buſineſs of La Hogue, and he would have had me come over into England with him; upon which I applied myſelf to my Lord Melfort, to know whether I ſhould come over hither yea or no: My Lord Melfort adviſed me to ſtay there awhile; for, ſaid he, you will find there is ſomething a doing which will pleaſe you. But nothing being done, after that I came to England, and ſuffered a very tedious Confinement here. I became acquainted with Mr. Charnock and Capt. King abroad; I have been with Mr. Charnock, Mr. King, Mr. Porter, Mr. Goodman and Col. Parker, here in Town ſeveral Times, and at ſeveral Places. And now I come to what was a doing the laſt Year. In the Months of January, February, and March, till the King's going to Flanders, there were ſeveral Conferences, and Conſultations about this Matter, between Sir William Perkins, Capt. Porter, and others; I cannot ſay that ever I was in Company with Goodman at that Time, when we talked of any Thing of this Nature. But Capt. Charnock carried me to Sir William Perkins, whom I had never ſeen before, to the Mitre-Tavern in St. James's Market, and there I was asked, if I would be concerned in the Eaſing us from the Yoke that then lay upon us. I asked which way it was to be done, for I could not underſtand what was meant, but the taking off the King, and therefore I asked which Way it was to be done. Then they asked me, whether I knew where Capt. Stow lived; and they imployed me to go to his Lodgings, and appointed me to meet them at the Star-Tavern in White-Friars. They were there before me, when I had met with the Captain, and brought him thither; but that they thought not a fit Place to conſult in, and therefore they went to Bromfield's Coffee-houſe, and there they did talk ſomething of it, but they took one another aſide, and talked privately amongſt themſelves, which I took ſome Obſervation and Notice of; and upon Enquiry I was told it was becauſe there was an old Gentleman in the Company, whom they did not care to acquaint with any Thing of the Matter, becauſe he was too Old to have any Hand in it, and they would acquaint none with their Reſolutions, but thoſe that were to be Actors in the Deſign. My Lord, I was not often in their Company after that, but I heard from Time to Time, how Matters went on, and I heard from Capt. Porter particularly, that they had been at Turnham Green and liked the Place very well, and that the Deſign was to take the King off, or elſe to hurry him away to Rumney-Marſh alive, and carry him into France.

Charnock. Surely this is not any Evidence, becauſe Captain Porter only ſpoke of it, and it is by Hear-ſay, and we are not concern'd what other People talk of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who was in the Room, when the Propoſals were made?

De la Rue. What Propoſals do you mean, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. At the Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet.

De la Rue. At the Coffee-houſe there was a little Talk of it between themſelves; but they would not talk much, they ſaid, becauſe there was an old Gentleman there, who was too old to engage, and they would have none but Actors; that I underſtood to be the Reaſon why they talked one with another ſo: But I taking notice of their Privacy, whenever I asked Charnock of it, he referr'd me to Captain Porter. But withal he told me ſeveral times, that he believed it would come to nothing. The Deſign was to carry the King alive into France, if they could; if they could not take him alive, then to aſſaſſinate him, and pretend it was done by a Random Shot. He told me alſo, they had ſent to King James for a Commiſſion to execute this Matter, and to authorize them to carry the King into France, if they could take him; and then if they could not, they agreed to excuſe themſelves, as I ſaid, by pretending that he was killed by a Random Shot. It ſhould ſeem, (as I underſtood) the Commiſſion was delay'd a long Time, and then they reſolved to execute the Deſign without a Commiſſion; and within a few Days before the King was to go to Flanders, I was told, all was ready. But then they wanted a Ship to carry him off when they had taken him; and there met at the Roſe Tavern, as I remember, Captain Porter and Sir William Perkins; but I cannot tell whether Mr. Charnock was there or not. I asked them if they had concluded upon the Matter; they told me, it was concluded upon, and, as I remember, they told me Captain Charnock, or Robinſon (for he went by both Names) was to have a Recommendation to ſome Body at Deal; and there they were to hire a Veſſel, and I was asked whether I would go with him: I told them, I would. But then the King went a little after for Flanders; and they had no Time to compleat the whole Affair, and ſo the Buſineſs was put off, till the King's Return this laſt Winter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, What ſay you to any Thing ſince?

De la Rue. This Year in the Months of November and December, Mr. King, the Priſoner at the Bar, told me, that there would be a Major General come over from France, and that there was a Man of Quality about the Town, that offered to diſburſe two or three Thouſand Pounds, if King James would give Order for it: And this was, as I ſuppoſe, to buy Horſes to be engaged in this Matter, and he would tell me more a while after. A Month or two after, he told me he was out of Money about it, which could not be had: I was brought in by Capt. Porter, and they communicated this to me, about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of the Month of February; they told me there was a Major-General come over from France, and there were a great many People come over beſides; and there would be ſomething ſpeedily put in Execution, which would be for the King's Service.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

De la Rue. Captain King. The next Time I ſaw him, he told me he wanted a Saddle with Holſters, it was the 7th of February, on Friday Night, for he was to go out of Town with ſome Friends, about ſomething in order to this Affair; he deſired me to lend him one; but I had none, I told him, but I would write to Captain Porter, to procure one for him; and he told me he was to go with Knightly, Durant, and others, to ſee whether the King went to Richmond or to Hounſlow; becauſe they were told the King had altered his Journey from Richmond to Hounſlow. He afterwards told me, he went out with his Friends, and the Sunday Morning he comes to me, and told me, there was the rareſt Place for the Execution of the Deſign againſt the King, that was poſſible to be thought of; if they ſhould have ſtudied never ſo long, and deſired a convenient Place, they could not have had ſuch another. It was within a Quarter of a Mile of the King's Houſe at Richmond, in a Lane that leads to the Houſe, and ſo narrow, that the Officers and the Guard could go but very few a-breaſt, hardly broad enough for a-breaſt; and there was to be an Ambuſcade behind the Park Pales, and the other Side was the River; and, ſays he, he will have all the Pales ſawed ſo far, that when the King's Coach comes into the Place, the Pales ſhall be broke down, and we will have a Parcel of Horſe ready, that ſhall be ſure to do the Work with the Guards; and when we fire, they ſhall take Notice to make their Attack. Durant deſires to command this Party; and they were to be dreſſed in Country-Mens Habits, that they might the leſs be taken Notice of: And he ſaid 10 or 12 Men on the other Side would beat 100 of the Guards in that Conſternation, eſpecially we having the Park Pales before us to defend us. He asked me if I would be one of the Ambuſcade. I told him, I had rather be one of thoſe on Horſeback to ſecure the Retreat, and I would rather attack the Guards. It was late, and ſo King and I went Home; and the next Day I went to ſee Captain Porter, when he was ill of the Gout. This was Sunday, the 9th of February; we did go to Porter, and he was in his Chamber, and two or three more, and they were talking of indifferent Things: He asked for Captain Charnock, and they ſaid he was gone out; but he takes out Capt. Porter into the Yard to talk with him by himſelf; and what he ſaid to him, I ſuppoſe was to tell him what he had told me before: Says Captain Porter to him, I have taken care of a Horſe for you; we will ride out on Tueſday next to ſee the Place. Mr. Porter, and Mr. King, and, as I was told, Mr. Knightly, went to Knightsbridge, and lay there all Night; and the next Day they went out of Town to view the Place. I was at Porter's Lodging on the Monday, but I was told there by Keyes and his Landlady, that he lay that Night at the Swan at Knightsbridge, and was to go out the next Day. On the Tueſday Morning I was coming back from Kenſington, which was the 11th of February, and when I was coming along the Street I met with Keyes, and ask'd him where he was going? Says he, I am going to Sir William Perkins with a Lerrying Trumpet; for it ſeems he was raiſing a Troop of Horſe, as Porter told me afterwards; and within a little Time afterwards, I ſaw Captain Porter at the End of Norfolk-ſtreet, and he told me they would all be together at the Nagg's-head about 7 or 8 a Clock. I went, and expected to be admitted, and asked if Captain Porter was there; they told me he was above, but there were ſeveral other Perſons with him; and there was a Coach at the Door which had brought two Scotch Gentlemen, of which I thought Sir George Barcley was one, whom I heard to be in Town. I deſired to ſpeak with Captain Porter; they told me he was buſy above in Company, and could not be ſpoke with; by which I ſaw they were not willing that I ſhould come there amonſt them, which I took very ill. Captain King came out to me, and was talking with me at the Door, and Captain Charnock comes with another to the Door in a Coach: I ſaw him, but when, I ſuppoſe, he perceived me, he pulls himſelf back into the Coach, as if he had no Mind to be ſeen; but finding he could not avoid it, he comes out, and asks me if I would not go up Stairs into the Company? I told him, No, I hear they are buſy, and becauſe I was not invited up at firſt, I would not trouble them. I was then thinking of going to my Lord Shrewsbury's Office immediately, to get ſome Meſſengers immediately to apprehend them; but then I thought I had not enough to diſcover their Intentions, and make it out againſt them, but I ſhould have one Time or another. I did not ſee Captain King till Saturday afterwards at 12 a Clock, and I was then at Charnock's Lodging, to ſee whether he was gone out, that I might be able to give the King the better Account; they told me, he was at the Blue Poſts in Spring Garden: I would not go and dine there, but went home, and afterwards went thither; and King, told me, the King did not go out that Day; I told him that I heard ſo, and would come and ſee them after Dinner. At this Meeting at Spring Garden I ſaw Keyes was one, and Kenrick, and Sherbourn, and Bryerly, and two that I did not know. This was Saturday the 15th. On Sunday the 16th, I met Mr. King at St. James's-ſtreet, and we went thence to the Dog Tavern, and there we ſupped together, and he told me Sir George Barcley had brought over Sixteen of the Guards, and two Officers, and a Brigadier, and a Sub-Brigagier; and he told me the Day before, that he knew ſome of them, and was going to meet them; for they were en Cachet, as he called it in French, and did not ſtir abroad without Leave, and were ſubſiſted at the Rate of 4 s. a Day, as the Guards were here. He told me, he had been lately with them a drinking. I asked him whether they went; he told me, to the Bear Tavern in the Strand; and he told me Mr. Charnock and Captain Porter had ſeveral Conferences with them to contrive how to take off his Majeſty, to Murder and to Aſſaſſinate him. And he told me ——

Charnock. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd whether he was at the Bear Tavern with theſe Men.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What he ſays about this Matter, is what King told him.

Char. That is not Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is true, not to affect you, but only Mr. King.

De la Rue. Captain King told me beſides, that Mr. Charnock did not argue like a Soldier, and reflected upon him for it; for he ſaid, he ſeemed to deſire to have his Poſt in as little Danger as was poſſible. And for Mr. Porter, he did not approve of him; for he told me he had as much Fat in his Brains, as he had in his Body. I remember thoſe Words he ſaid; and that what he and Durant had propoſed, was rejected, that was about the Ambuſcade: For it was ſaid, that after all their Conſideration, Sir George Barcley was not ſure of Horſe enough to carry them off afterwards; wherefore they reſolved to Aſſaſſinate his Majeſty in the Lane coming from Brentford to Turnham-Green; and Sir George Barcley was to command Eight Perſons to aſſault the King, and thoſe that were in the Coach; and Mr. Charnock was to attack the Guards in the Rear; and one Rookwood, with a Party that came from France, and Captain Porter, in two Wings, were to attack the two Sides of the Guards. I remember on Sunday Night I asked him if he had a good Sword, for I wanted one; and I ſaid to him, Where is your Sword-Cutler? He told me, On the other Side of the Way; and he was ſent for to bring a good Sword, and I choſe one that was but a little Blade, which he thought would do beſt, and was ridiculing Captain Charnock's Sword, as being too broad, and of three or four Finger's Breadth. I liked his Sword, and ſpake to the Man to get me one like his; and he ſaid a Tueſday, that he had ſent him to my Lodging, but I had not ſeen him. On Tueſday, the 18th of February, I went to him, and asked him, whether I ſhould ſee him in the Afternoon? He told me, No; for he was to go out with Knightly to buy Arms. Shall I ſee you then at Night? ſaid I. I cannot tell whether you can or no, ſaid he. I cannot remember any Thing more that paſſed upon the 18th. But I ſpoke to Mr. Charnock, whom I met near his Lodging in Norfolk-ſtreet, and deſired to have a Word with him towards the Water-ſide: I asked him, how the Matter in Hand went; Says he, I find People that were ſanguine, and hot, and forward, are now grown cold: I believe the King has Notice of it, and the Thing has taken Air; for he has not been abroad a good while. He was not abroad on Saturday, as he uſually does go: and I hear that upon Friday Night it was agreed in Council, to take up ſeveral People. Said I, Does the Buſineſs go on? No, ſays he, I believe it is off, becauſe we apprehend the Thing has taken Air; beſides Things of ſuch a Nature are not to be communicated to ſo many, nor delayed, both which are very dangerous; not above Three People ſhould know of it. Said I, How then would they get enough for the Execution? If they be not acquainted with the Deſign, they will never engage. Well, ſaid he, I believe they are quite off of the Thoughts of it; but you may depend upon the main Buſineſs, that will be very ſpeedily, which was the Landing of King James. While I was talking, comes Bryerly from Captain Porter; and after him, came Captain King in a Coach, and asked me, if I would go Home with him? I told him, No, I was not going Home, but was going into White-Fryers, and I took my Leave of them; and nothing paſs'd more, that I remember, at that Time. On Wedneſday Morning I went to Capt. Charnock's, thinking to learn ſomething how Matters went on; but he was cloſer, and more reſerv'd than before. I asked him to lend me a good Sword. He ſaid he had none, but Mr. Porter had a good broad flaming Sword, which I thought to be the Sword that Capt. King mentioned to be his: And we had little Talk that Day; for I had Buſineſs to do, and I left him pretty ſoon on the Wedneſday. Next Day after, I went to Captain Porter's Lodging, who was removed from Norfolk-ſtreet into Maiden-head-lane, to one Brown a Surgeon's, and very few People knew where he was, but thoſe that were of the Party in this Buſineſs; and I went into another Room, into the Dining-room, becauſe his Room had not a Fire, and he came in to us, and I told him what I had heard from Mr. Charnock, that the Thing was quite off. He told me, he heard nothing of it, but found all People that were concerned, as reſolute for the Execution of it, as ever they were.

Char. My Lord, he ſpeaks of what Captain Porter told him; that is nothing to me.

L. C. J. No, it is not, nor will it ever be urged againſt you; it is but Hear-ſay from another. Go on, Sir.

De lay Rue. I ſtayed there but a ſhort Time: But, Capt. Charnock, ſince you ſpeak of this Matter, I only ſay, I told Captain Porter what you told me, that you thought they were off of the Buſineſs, and that it had taken Air; and I asked him what he thought: Says he, I know nothing of any Alteration; I believe they are as reſolute as ever they were: For they fully purpoſe, that if the King goes abroad on Saturday Morning, we will have all ready. And he told me how it was to be done. He deſired me to lie with him on Friday Night, that we might prepare every thing againſt the next Day: But I could not do that; and therefore he bid me ſend at Nine, or thereabouts. I told him I would be at my Lodging about that Time, if he would ſend to me, to be ſure about ſeven or eight a Clock in the Morning. About that Time in the Morning Captain Porter ſends to me again; a Servant-Maid came to me, for the Black that uſed to attend him, uſed only to go abroad at Nights, and was not ſeen to go in and out a-Days, for Fear of being taken Notice of; becauſe, as I ſaid, none but thoſe that were of the Party knew that he lodged there. I dreſs'd myſelf, and went to Captain Porter's Lodging. He was in Bed, but preſently he riſes, and told me in French, Toutes Parties ſont preſts; All Things are ready: And when he was up, he put on his Boots; and by and by, in comes Mr. Kenrick; and after him, in comes Mr. Keyes; and after him, Mr. King and Mr. Pendergraſs: and Captain King takes Mr. Porter into another Room, and there they were whiſpering a while, but I did not hear what they ſaid; but King told me afterwards, he did not obſerve that I was in the other Room. The Queſtion then was asked of Cranbourne, When he ſaw Sir George Barcley? He ſaid, he juſt came from him: And then Captain Porter takes a Pen and Ink, and writes down a Liſt of the Perſons that he was ſure of, and puts me down firſt. What, ſays Mr. Pendergraſs, are you the Captain? I told him, I believed I was in before the reſt of the Company that were there. Then Capt. Porter ſends Mr. Cranbourne with the

Liſt

Liſt to Captain Charnock's Lodgings; and in the mean Time when Mr. Cranbourne was gone, Capt. Porter told me, that Mr. Pendergraſs was to be one of the Eight under Sir George Barcley, that were to Aſſaſſinate the King; And now, ſays he, I am going to lend him a Gun that will carry ſix or eight Bullets. Says Captain King thereupon to him, I hope you will not fear to break the Glaſs Windows. No, ſays he, I will have a Hand or a Finger in the Buſineſs. By and by came in News, that Chambers, one of the orderly Men, as they called them that lay at Kenſington to give Intelligence, had ſent Word that the King was to go abroad, and the Guards were gone out. Durant was to ſtay laſt, to ſee when the King went out. Chambers had been there all the Week. Mr. Cranbourne came back, and told Captain Porter, that Chambers had ſent to Captain Charnock, that the King would go out that Day. At which all the Company ſeemed joyful. Captain Porter told me likewiſe of ſeveral Diſappointments that they had, both as to Time, and as to Men; particularly that one Major Lowick had engaged to bring two Men, and that one of them had told his Wife, that he was to mount for King James's Service; and ſhe went and cried after him when he went to the Coffee-houſe; and ſo he was forced to abſcond, and ſo we loſt three: And alſo told me, that Kenrick ſaid he had broke his Arm; and when Captain Porter asked for Sherbourne whom Kenrick had talked of, he ſaid he asked ſo many Queſtions that he durſt not truſt him: ſo that they had loſt Five or Six in the whole: And there was one Plowden that they were diſappointed of beſides, whom they had very much reckon'd upon. When Mr. Cranbourne brought back the Liſt that Captain Porter ſent to Captain Charnock, there were added to it ſeveral Names, which Captain Porter ſaid were the Names of the Men that were to be under Captain Charnock, and that it was his Hand; and at the Bottom there were the Letters R. C. which I thought ſtood for Robert Charnock. The Names made up about ſeventeen or eighteen: I told him, I thought there had been more. He told me, there would have been more, but that they were under ſome Diſappointments, as I told you before. He asked me to get him ſome Men to ſupply the Defect, and I propoſed ſome Names, to make him believe I was hearty in the Buſineſs: We agreed to go to the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, and I went under Pretence to get the Men, and came and told them, I had got them, and I found Mr. Pendergraſs there, and I took Mr. Keyes thither, and Mr. Porter ſent Mr. Cranbourne to Captain Charnock ſeveral times; by and by Word was brought that Chambers had ſent Word, the King would not go abroad that Day; upon which they all look'd very blank: And Keyes came two or three times in, and went out again; he was ſeveral times up and down, at laſt he came and told us, the Guards were returned from Richmond foaming; and he went down again to learn further Intelligence, and within a little Time came and told us, the King's Coach was returned to the Mews Gate, and the People very much wondred what ſhould be the Reaſon that the King did not go a Hunting for two Saturdays together as he uſed to do. They ſeemed to be in a very great Conſternation at this News, and Captain Porter ſaid he reſolved to go out of Town, and asked me if I would go: I told him, No; I had a Suit in Doctors Commons, and I would go to my Proctor and Lawyers to conſult about it. Then he asked Mr. Pendergraſs to go with him, which he agreed to do; and Captain Porter ſent Keyes up to give the reſt of the Company an Account, that there was no Occaſion for them then, and ſo they diſperſed.

Charnock. Did I go out of Town, can you tell?

Mr. De la Rue. Now you put me in Mind, Mr. Cranbourne brought a Meſſage from you about that Time to Captain Porter, that Sir George Barcley deſired to ſpeak with him at his Lodgings. Captain Porter was then apprehenſive of Bailiffs meeting with him; and, ſays he, he know this, I wonder he would not come to me. But he did not go to him, but reſolved ſpeedily to go out of Town; and Keyes was to give an Account where he was in the Country, that if Occaſion was, he might be ſent for. This is all I can at preſent recollect, only, I beg your Pardon, I remember, there were ſeveral diſloyal Healths drunk in the Company, at ſeveral Times, as the Reſtoring the late King, the Health of the Prince of Wales, the late Queen, and the French King; and particularly, I remember, when the News of the Diſappointment was, Mr. Porter took an Orange in his Hand, and ſqueezed it, and gave it into the Hand of the next Perſon to him, whom he drank to, and began a Health to the ſqueezing the rotten Orange; and ſaid, Though we are diſappointed one Day, I hope to have another: And Keyes was at Dinner with them all the Time, and every Body drank it, I did not ſee any Body refuſe it, but it went from one to another quite round.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who were there at that Time?

De la Rue. All the Company pledged the Health, and Mr. Keyes was there.

Charnock. Pray was I there?

De la Rue. No.

King. Was I there?

De la Rue. No, there was none of the Priſoners, but Mr. Keyes, who belonged to Mr. Porter's Party; Mr. King for his Part belong'd to Sir George Barcley's Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before we go to another Witneſs, I deſire to know whether the Priſoners will ask this Witneſs any Queſtions.

Char. You ſay, there was a Note of Names ſent by me to Captain Porter; Pray, do you know my Hand-writing?

De la Rue. I cannot ſay I have ſeen you write, or that I ſaw you write that; but I have ſeen your Writing ſeveral Times, and I believe it to be your Hand.

Char. Why ſo, have you any of my Writing?

De la Rue. I have received ſeveral Notes from you, which I believe are your Writing.

Char. But you do not ſwear, that they were my Writing, or that this was my Writing.

De la Rue. I tell you, you have ſent ſeveral Notes to me at ſeveral Times, and you have owned the Meſſages came from you, and I do believe it was your Hand-writing, becauſe it was like the reſt: and Captain Porter told me, it was your Hand-writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did Mr. Keyes uſe to ſit down at Table with Mr. Porter?

De la Rue. Yes, in all Companies he was treated as familiarly as a Companion, and no ways as a Servant; and dined and ſupped at the ſame Table with the reſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was done after that the News

News was brought of the King's not going abroad, and Captain Porter reſolving to go into the Country?

De la Rue. When Captain Porter was gone, the Company broke up; and away goes I to Captain Charnock, to ſee him, about four of the Clock in the Afternoon. When I came there, his Landlady told me there was a great deal of Company: But I deſired her to go in, and tell him that I was there. She did ſo; and he ſent and deſired me to come in. I did ſo, and I ſaw ſeveral Perſons there. There was one Douglas, and one Trevor, and four Troopers of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, and a Trumpeter that was his Servant in Ireland, when he was a Captain in Parker's Regiment; I know Captain Charnock was a great Croney of Parker's, and he ſent Letters by me to him: I have ſeen ſome of the Letters that Parker ſent; and they were drinking the ſame Healths as were drunk before at the Blue Poſts, to the reſtoring King James, the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Grand Monarch (as they called him) the French King.

L. C. J. Who was in Company then?

De la Rue. Mr. Douglas, Mr. Trevor, four Troopers of my Lord Oxford's Regiment, one White, one Lowthorp, and one Maſon, whom I know when I ſee very well; Mr. Charnock, one Day in the Summer, asked me to go and drink a Bowl of Punch, which I was unwilling to do; but he muſt needs preſs me, and he carries me where Maſon and Lowthorp were, at the George Inn in Piccadilly; whence we went to the Prince of Orange's Head, and Captain Charnock ſpent in Wine and other Liquors upon them a great deal of Money. This was half a Year ago in the Summer Time, but I do not remember that I ſaw thoſe two, Lowthorp and Maſon, afterwards, till the 22d of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all that you can ſay as to the Priſoners?

De la Rue. This is all at preſent that I can recollect.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then for the Satisfaction of the Court and Jury, give us an Account when you firſt made a Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy, and in what Manner, and to whom.

De la Rue. The laſt Year I had diſcovered it if it had come to a Head, and been ripe enough to have been put in Execution; I did then deſign to acquaint the King with it; but it coming to no Head then, I deferr'd troubling the King with it: And now this Year I deſigned (had the King gone out the 15th of February) to have prevented any Miſchief, but they had Notice that he was not to go: But my Way was, to have put them all into the King's Hands, by getting two or three General Officers to be acquainted with it; and dividing ſome of the Guards into ſeveral Parties in the Lanes between Brentford and Turnham Green, and ſo have ſurprized them and their Horſes in their ſeveral Inns that they were quartered in. But upon Monday the 17th of February, leſt they ſhould alter their Reſolution, and I ſhould happen not to be acquainted how it was to be done, I went to a General Officer of my Acquaintance, that is, Brigadier Lewſon, to acquaint him with the Matter; but he was gone out of Town with Colonel Fitz Patrick and another: I went then to Durant's Lodgings for a Colour, and it was told me, he had been out all Night. I went again to Brigadier Lewſon's, but he was not in Town, and I left Word for him, that the next Day I would wait upon him, and deſired he would not go out till I came to him. I went, he was not then at home, but I afterwards met with him, and acquaints him with this Buſineſs, and begs of him to acquaint the King with it that Day, which he told me he would. He asked me which Way I purpoſed to put them into the King's Hands. I told him the beſt Way and ſafeſt for me, was for his Majeſty to go out on the 22d, for the Party that was to execute this Deſign, were not to go out of Town till the Afternoon, to be at Brentford, when the King came back from Hunting, and that they ſhould have two or three Troops of Horſe by Parties to have ſeized them and their Horſes in the ſeveral Inns and Publick-Houſes, where they were diſperſed. He ſaid, it was not ſafe to run that Hazard, but he would offer it to the King, and let me know his Mind. He ſent to me the next Day, and told me, he had acquainted the King with it, who deſired to know who they were that were concerned in it; then I gave him the Names of thoſe that I knew, and where they lived. I dined with him on Thurſday, and told him what had paſſed on the Wedneſday Morning between Captain Charnock and I, and what Porter ſaid about it on Wedneſday Night; and after Dinner he ſaid he would go again to the King and acquaint him with it; and that I ſhould come to him on Friday Night, which was the Reaſon I was not there with Captain Porter, where Sir George Barcley and they were together; for I went to the Play to paſs away the Time. When I came home to my Lodging, I found there were a Couple of Letters from the Brigadier, to whom I went, and he told me, the King was deſirous to ſee me: I told him I would wait on him to the King with all my Heart. I went with him to Kenſington, and was introduced to the King by my Lord Portland, where I think I told the King what I have told the Court now.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day do you ſay it was you diſcover'd it to the King?

De la Rue. Brigadier Lewſon acquainted the King upon the Tueſday Night before, and that had been done the Day before, if I could have met with him; but it was Friday Night that I was with the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will they ask him any Queſtions?

Char. No, my Lord, I do not think that any Thing he ſays againſt me is material at all.

De la Rue. My Lord, I remember one thing more; that upon Tueſday Night Mr. King told me he had my blue Coat on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any thing more to ſay as to Keyes?

De la Rue. Keyes was the only Man that told me of the Meetings.

Char. Where was it that you ſay I pull'd myſelf back in the Coach?

De la Rue. It was at the Nagg's-head in St. James's-ſtreet, and he came out of the Coach and asked me to go up; but I took it ill to be refuſed before, and becauſe I was not invited up at firſt, I refuſed, and ſaid, I had Buſineſs elſewhere, and went away.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Char. No; yet I think I would ask him one Queſtion more. You ſay, Sir, I carry'd you once to the George Inn in Piccadilly, where there where Lowthorpe and Maſon: Are you ſure it was the George Inn?

De la Rue. Yes, ſure.

Char.

Char. Are you poſitive it was the George Inn?

De la Rue. I believe ſo, I took it to be that Inn.

Char. You did ſwear it poſitively, that it was the George Inn before.

De la Rue. I ſaw thoſe two Men ſince, which was on Sunday the 23d, at Kenſington, and they ſaid they did quarter at the Inn in Piccadilly, where you carried me to them.

Char. Pray, where-abouts is the George Inn in Piccadilly?

De la Rue. The Inn that I ſpeak of is about the Middle of Piccadilly, upon the Left-hand.

Char. There is but one George Inn in all Piccadilly that ever I heard of, and that is at the further End, there is no ſuch Sign in the Middle.

L. C. J. He is not poſitive as to the Sign, but as to the Place.

Char. I appeal to every Body, if he did not ſwear before poſitively, that it was the George Inn in Piccadilly.

De la Rue. I do ſay, it was to an Inn in Piccadilly; and Lowthorpe told me on Sunday the 23d at Kenſington, they were quarter'd at an Inn in Piccadilly, I take it to be the George Inn, if it be not the George, I know not what Sign it is; but I think it is not very material what the Sign was.

Char. Yes, it is all material to us; and I think it is very material for every Man to take care how he forſwears himſelf.

L. C. J. No, it is not forſwearing himſelf, when he is not poſitive as to the Sign.

Char. But I hope every Body conſiders, that he did ſwear it was the George Inn, and there is no ſuch Inn there.

De la Rue. This I did not think of, to take ſo much Notice of it then, as to mind what the Sign was; 'twas you carried me thither.

Char. It was your Intereſt to mind every Particular; for, according to your own Words, you have been a Trapanner half a Year before.

De la Rue. I have told you already, I intended never to have been an Evidence; but to put you into the King's Hands, and prevent the Execution of the Deſign, and I begg'd of the Council to be excuſed from given any Evidence, but I could not by any Means get myſelf excuſed.

L. C. J. Will Mr. King ask any Queſtions?

King. No.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you, Keyes, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Keyes. My Lord, he ſays I drank the Health to the Squeezing of the Orange, and the other Healths: I was not in the Room while any ſuch Healths were drunk, nor did I ſit down while I was there, nor do I know any thing of the Horſes, upon my Word, that he ſpeaks of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then if they have done with him, there is a noble Lord, whom he has mention'd, as being preſent when he diſcover'd this to the King, who we deſire may be examined touching that Matter: We muſt humbly pray my Lord Portland, that he will pleaſe to be ſworn.

L. C. J. Hold my Lord the Book, and ſwear him. (Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly ask your Lordſhip this one Queſtion, whether Mr. De la Rue did make any Diſcovery of this Matter in your Preſence to his Majeſty, on Friday the 21ſt of February.

E. of Portland. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip has heard what he ſaid now: Was it to the ſame Purpoſe?

E. of Portl. Yes, to the very ſame Purpoſe, and he did it before he went in to the King to me, being brought to me by his own Deſire: It was all the ſame in Subſtance as he has told you now; and afterwards he was brought to the King on Friday Night, and there he ſaid the ſame Things.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This Gentleman did it not to ſave his own Life, but the King's. Our next Witneſs, my Lord, is Mr. Pendergraſs.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. But before we go on to another Evidence, I would ask Mr. Porter one Queſtion, and that is, What is become of the Liſt which you ſpoke of?

Capt. Porter. I burnt that Liſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why did you ſo?

Capt. Porter. Becauſe I thought the Thing was diſcover'd, and it was not fit to have ſuch a Paper remain.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Pendergraſs, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know about this Matter, how you came to be acquainted with it, who were concerned it it, and when and how it was to be done.

Capt. Pendergraſs. My Lord, about the 11th of February laſt, I was ſent to by Captain Porter, where I was in the Country, to come to Town; the 13th of February I met him at the Blue Poſts in Spring Garden; we dined there, and he told me of a Deſign that was on Foot, to take away the King's Life, and that Sir George Barcley, and other Officers, were come on purpoſe out of France, in order to execute the ſame. I was very uneaſy when he told me of the Thing, but I ſaid nothing till I had an Opportunity of waiting upon my Lord Portland, which I did as ſoon as I could, and acquainted him with the whole Matter of the Deſign, and deſired him to acquaint the King: This was upon the Friday Night, which was the 14th, and he told me the King had a mind to ſpeak with me; and afterwards my Lord Portland carried me into the King's Cloſet, where the King ask'd me ſome Queſtions. I told him what I knew of the Deſign, but deſir'd to be excus'd from naming any Perſons, becauſe my Intention was only to prevent ſuch a barbarous Action, and I was reſolved not to be a Witneſs. The King promiſed me I ſhould be ſafe, and preſs'd me to name them, and aſſur'd me I ſhould not be forc'd to come in as an Evidence; upon which I did tell all that I knew, and went out of Town with Mr. Porter as reſolving not to be an Evidence; but being ſatisfied, after we were taken, that Mr. Porter, who had engaged me in it, had himſelf diſcover'd, and accus'd me, I thought myſelf diſcharged from any Obligation of Honour in concealing it, and am willing to give an Account of any thing that I know.

Mr. Att. Gen. We know you do it voluntarily, as you did it at firſt honourably, and therefore, Sir, we deſire you would pleaſe to give an Account of your Knowledge in the Matter.

Capt. Pendergraſs. My Lord, as I told you before, the 11th of February I was ſent to by Capt. Porter into the Country, where I was with Mr. Bryerly, to come to Town; accordingly the 13th, which was the Thurſday, I came to Town with Mr. Bryerly, and found Capt. Porter at the Blue-Poſts in Spring Garden, and we dined there. There was Keyes, and Bryerly, and Porter, and I in Company, where he acquainted me with the Deſign. We had no further Diſcourſe that Day; the next Day we dined at the Roſe Tavern in Covent Garden, where where there was King, Bryerly, Cranbourne, Porter, and I dined together.

King. Pray, was it by way of Rendezvous or set Meeting?

L. C. J Holt. Look you, you must stay your Time before you ask any Questions of the Witnesses; you shall be heard, when your Time comes, as fully as you desire. Go on, Sir.

Capt. Penderg. This was Friday the 14th of February, we had some Discourse about the Matter; Captain King and Captain Porter went away, and then I went to my Lord Portland's, and was by him introduced to the King. The 15th I came to Captain Porter's Lodgings, and he was getting ready, in Expectation of Notice whether they should execute the Design that Day or no. While he was getting ready, I goes to the Blue Posts, where was Kenrick and Sherbourne, and Mr. Bryerly, and there we were drinking a Glass of Wine, and in comes Durant, who was an orderly Man that lay at Kensington to give Intelligence; and Bryerly, directed him to Capt. Porter's Lodgings to carry the Intelligence which he brought that the King intended to go out that Day; upon that he went away to his Lodging, and Capt. Porter came a little time after, booted, to the Blue Posts, and there he din'd; within an Hour or two after Capt. Porter came in, Mr. Charnock sent a Note to Capt. Porter, to tell him, the King did not go that Day, and so there must be Counter Orders; Capt. Porter told me it was his Hand; the Note was signed R. Robinson, and he shewed me the Note, and acquainted me and the rest of the Company, that they were disappointed that Day, since the King did not go; there we dined, and drank a Bottle of Wine. The next time we met, there was Mr. King and Mr. Keyes, and Mr. De la Rue, at Mr. Porter's Lodgings; this was Saturday the 22d in the Morning, there we had some Discourse of the Matter; and Capt. Porter, upon Notice from Capt. Charnock of the King's intending to go abroad, had sent a List of his Men, and receiv'd back a List of Capt. Charnock's, and Capt. Porter, and De la Rue, and we went to the Blue Posts to dine, where we had an Account afterwards, that the King did not go, and so there was another Disappointment; and a little after Keyes came in, and said, the Guards were come home all in a Foam, and the King's Coaches come back to the Mews. Capt. Porter then thought all was discover'd, and say he, I will go into the Country; Mr. Pendergrass, will you go with me? With all my Heart, said I; so we sent Keyes to get our Horses ready; we lay at Epsom that Night, and from thence to another Place we sent the next Day, where we lay 'till Thursday Morning, when Capt. Porter, Mr. Keyes and I was taken together, the Place was called Leatherhead, in Surry, whence we were brought up to Town; and have remained Prisoners ever since.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which of the Prisoners were there present upon the Saturday the 22d at Capt. Porter's Lodgings.

Capt. Pendergrass. There was Capt. King and Mr. Keyes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray was there any Discourse about a Gun, and who was to have it?

Capt. Pend. Capt. Porter told me there was a Musquetoon that he had would carry 6 or 8 Bullets, and I should have it, being to join with Sir George Barcley to set upon the King's Coach, and directed me to be sure to shoot some of the Horses to stop their Course if they seemed to drive furiously away; and Mr. Cranbourne was the Person that carried the Messages from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you remember, Sir, that Keyes said the Guards were come back?

Capt. Pendergrass. Yes, and that they were all in a Foam, and the Coaches were come back to the Mews Gate, and one of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment told him there was something extraordinary mutter'd among the People, upon which they concluded it was discovered.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will the Prisoners ask him any Questions?

Char. King, and Keyes. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I must beg the Favour of my Lord Portland to give himself the further Trouble of acquainting the Court how this Gentleman behaved himself in reference to this Discovery.

E. of Portland. My Lord, it was, as he has acquainted you. This Gentlemen came to me upon the Friday Night, and told me of it; and then upon the same Friday Night, which was the 14th, I think the Night before the first time that it was to have been executed, and declared his Abhorrence of such a barbarous Business: And he told me his Design of coming into it, and keeping Company with them, was to save the King's Life by acquainting me with it, and discovering it, which he would do upon a Promise that he should not be used as an Evidenee, nor pressed so much as to name Names, which Promise I made him, and the same Promises were made him that Day seven-night, when I carried him to the King. But the King pressing him to name their Names, assuring him he should be safe and not forced to be an Evidence, he did then name the Names under that Promise from the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray my Lord, who was by then besides your Lordship?

E. of Port. My Lord Cuts.

Mr. Att. Gen. We must desire my Lord Cuts will please to be sworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you please to acquaint the Court and the Jury what happen'd at that time.

L. Cuts. My Lords, I was in the King's Closet that same Friday Night when Mr. Pendergrass was brought in there: 'Twas, as near as I can remember, between 12 and 1 a Clock at Night; no Body was present but my self, with the King, when my Lord Portland came in with this Gentleman: All that he said to the King at first was, that he had a Discovery to make of a Design to assassinate his Person, if that his Name might not be made use of, nor he forced to be an Accuser or a Witness. And therefore desired to be excused if he said no more; then desiring the King not to go out the next Day, but to take care of himself, because there were some Persons had resolved to assassinate him coming home; but begg'd to be excus'd from naming Names, for he said he would rather die than betray his Friend, and he thought it enough that he had saved his Majesty's Life. It was above half an Hour before the King could perswade him to name Names, and he would not 'till the King had given him his Word and Honour that he should not be obliged to be a Witness, and then he did name the Names. Afterwards when Captain Porter and Mr. Pendergrass were taken, as my Station obliged me to give Orders, and require Intelligence, and aſſiſt at the ſecuring and Examination of the Conſpirators, I happen'd to ſee them before they were carried into the Council, and preſently knew Mr. Pendergraſs to be the Perſon that was with the King that Friday Night; I had a great Compaſſion to ſee Gentlemen and Officers, whom I had ſome Knowledge of before, in ſuch a Condition, and I told them naturally what my Opinion was: Mr. Porter did ſeem ſorry for what he had done, and inclin'd to make the King that Atonement for his Fault which he has now done. When I came out and told Mr. Pendergraſs this, and that Mr. Porter had named him, and owned the whole Matter, I only gave him my Opinion upon it, that I thought he was diſcharged from any Obligation of Friendſhip: And he ſeemed then inclined to do the ſame likewiſe that Mr. Porter had done.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Swear Thomas Bertham. [Which was done.] Pray do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account how long you have known Mr. Charnock to be engaged in this Conſpiracy: Tell your whole Knowledge as to him.

Mr. Berth. The 8th or 9th of February laſt I was croſſing Covent-Garden, I lit upon one Mr. Trevor, who is now in Newgate, and he told me he was going down to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, and that he heard him ſay he wanted to ſpeak with me; I told him he had no Buſineſs with me nor I with him that I knew of: But he prevailed upon me to go with him, and when we came to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, he met me in the Entry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did?

Mr. Berth. Mr. Charnock did. He told me he wanted to ſpeak with me, and took me into a back Room, becauſe he had Company in his own; and he told me the King, that is, King James, was a coming, and there was a Piece of Service to be done before he could come, and if I would aſſiſt in it, it would anſwer my Expectation. I asked him what was to be done? He anſwered, you muſt only go abroad to take the Air, you will ſee ſeveral of your Acquaintance there. I deſired to know what was to be done? He ſaid it was to cut off this Spark or to take off this Spark, I can't tell which, and then the King will come home quietly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were to cut him off?

Mr. Berth. The Party that I was to meet when we rode out to take the Air.

L. C. J. Who did they ſay they were to take off?

M. Berth. He ſaid we muſt take off this Spark, or cut off this Spark, I can't tell which, which I underſtood to be the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long had you known Charnock?

Mr. Berth. By Times, ſeven Years.

Mr. Cooper. How came you acquainted with him?

Mr. Berth. We were in the Army together; he was a Lieutenant in Col. Parker's Regiment, and I was a Trooper there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Diſcourſe was there between you and Charnock after you heard there were Warrants out?

Mr. Berth. Sir, I have not yet done with what paſt at his Lodgings. He asked me if I would accept of being one in the Buſineſs? I told him I could not engage in it, for I had diſpoſed of myſelf otherwiſe. So we came out of that little Room, and he deſired me to come into his Room and drink a Glaſs of Wine: There were three or four Gentlemen that I did not know; and then there was one Mr. Chambers and Mr. Trevor, and Mr. Lee, which Mr. Chambers fetch'd afterwards in there.

Mr. Att. Gen. He would not be engaged there becauſe he had otherwiſe diſpoſed of himſelf: Indeed, he was engaged with Sir William Perkins.

Mr. Berth. After I came in I obſerved great Whiſperings among the Company, and frequent calling out of Mr. Charnock for private Diſcourſe; but there was no other particular Diſcourſe about this Matter that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray when did you ſee Mr. Charnock again, and where?

Mr Berth. At another time, which was the 22d of February, I met him at Lincoln's-Inn back Gate; and meeting me here, he called me aſide, and took me within the Inn upon the Pav'd-ſtones; we took a Turn there: He told me Warrants were out againſt us, as he heard, and we had as good, if I would come to his Lodging, go out to Kenſington and do the Work at once and take him off, and then we ſhall be quiet, and have the King peaceably here. I am ſure he cannot ſay that I do him a Word of Wrong in what I have ſaid, he knows it all to be true.

Mr. Cooper. Has any Body elſe engaged you in this Matter? Do you know one Lowick?

Mr. Berth. If that be neceſſary I will tell it. But this is all that I know of any thing of the Priſoners; only Mr. Charnock did ask me as to Mr. Trevor, what I thought of him, whether he might truſt him? I told him he might do what he pleaſed.

L. C. J. H. Mr. Charnock will you ask him any Queſtions? for his Evidence relates only to you.

Char. No, I think not. Pray did I ſend for you?

Mr. Berth. I met Mr. Trevor, and he told me, he was coming to your Lodgings, and that you deſired to ſpeak with me: And when I came, you told me your ſelf you wanted to ſpeak with me: Indeed I knew no Buſineſs you had with me, or I with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have one more Witneſs, and that is one Mr. Boyſe. (Who was ſworn)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Boyſe, will you give an Account when you were ſpoke to about this Deſign, and by whom?

Mr. Boyſe. On Friday the 14th of February I went to viſit Mr. King, and he was the firſt that ever told me of the Buſineſs; it was in his own Chamber, he told me there was a great Undertaking in Hand, and he had put my Name into the Liſt, and if I would make one, I ſhould have a Horſe; and he asked me if I had any Boots? I ſaid No. He deſired me to ſee if I could get any, and to meet him in the Afternoon at the Roſe-Tavern in Covent-Garden; but in the mean time he bid me go to Mr. Knightley and he would inform me further. I went to Mr. Knightley, and I came to Mr. King again in the Afternoon at the Roſe-Tavern, and he deſired me not to be out of the way the next Day, but to be at my Lodging, and he would come or ſend for me; and I had Twenty Shillings of him to buy Boots, and he ſtill refer'd me to Mr. Knightley: When I came to Mr. Knightley I was told there was nothing to be done that Day: But I was deſired to be always in the way, for the Buſineſs would ſoon be over. This is all the Diſcourſe that Day. After that I met Mr. King ſeveral times, who ſtill referr'd me to Mr. Knightley, and when I asked him for my Horſe, he told me I ſhould have one allotted for me time enough; and when this Thing was done we ſhould be happy: But he never told me it was to take off the King.

is

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what did you underſtand was to be done?

Mr. Boyſe. I did believe I ſhould know further of it; for I would not have engaged till I did know. But he did not tell me it was to take off the King, or what it was. This, to the beſt of my Memory, is what I know of the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when did you come from France?

Mr. Boyſe. He told me indeed ſeveral were come from France, and that the King would land very ſpeedily.

Mr. Att. Gen. But when did you come?

Mr. Boyſe. I came the Beginning of June laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember nothing about Sir George Barcley?

Mr. Boyſe. Yes, he told me Sir George Barcley would command the Party, and that there were about forty or forty-five, that were concerned in the Deſign.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you remember nothing elſe?

Mr. Boyſe. No truly, I do not remember any thing more concerning Mr. King.

L. C. J. H. Mr. King, will you ask him any Queſtions? for what he ſays relates only to you.

King. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we have done, my Lord; we reſt it here till we hear what they can ſay.

L. C. J. H. Mr. Charnock, The King's Council have done all the Evidence they deſign to give, and now is your Time to make your Defence.

Charnock. My Lord, I have taken ſome Notes of the Evidence, and made ſome Remarks, which muſt be my Defence; and I ſhall take them in Order of Time as they were given: The firſt is Capt. Porter; and the main Evidence he hath given againſt me, is my informing him that Sir George Barcley was come from France, with a Commiſſion all written with King James's own Hand, thereby authorizing us to raiſe War againſt the Perſon of King William. But then he ſays at the ſame time, I told him I never ſaw it; and I know not how I ſhould? for it is impoſſible to ſee a Thing that is inviſible, a Thing that never was in being, and to ſuppoſe that ever there ſhould be ſuch a Commiſſion under the King's own Hand, and writ with his own Hand, is ſuch a Contradiction to all Senſe and Reaſon, that no rational Man can be guilty of; and therefore I hope the Court and the Jury will conſider of it, and reject it all as a fooliſh, idle, nonſenſical Fiction and Story. It is very well known that King James has always had, and ſtill has, notwithſtanding his preſent Sufferings and Circumſtances, his Miniſters of State about him, in how ſlender a Condition ſoever, they may be, or be repreſented to be. He has my Lord Middleton as his Secretary of State, he has been all along with him, and it is not ſuppoſable that he ſhould put himſelf to the Trouble of Writing any Commiſſions with his own Hand, when there were others enough to do it for him, and he need only ſign the Top of it James R. much leſs is it ſuppoſable, that he ſhould give any ſuch Commiſſion as this that they ſpeak of, and writ it all with his own Hand, and that Sir George Barcley ſhould bring it over. This is ſuch a nonſenſical ridiculous Story as ought to be rejected with Scorn and Contempt, and is only fit to be laughed at: I hope every body will look upon it as ſuch, and think that ſuch Evidence is very incredible.

My Lord, Another Thing that I obſerve out of Capt. Porter's Evidence is this: He ſays, he and I was to command a Party; he knows what he himſelf intended to do, but I am ſure I know of no Party that I was to command. It is all a Dream, a meer Dream and a Fiction. He thinks fit to acknowledge his own Guilt of a very bad Crime, and he may accuſe himſelf as long as he will, but I think that will not make me guilty of an ſuch Thing, only becauſe he ſays ſo: He does not ſay what Men they were, or who they were; and it cannot be an Overt Act, unleſs he can tell who they were. He ſays Sir George Barcley and I met at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and at ſeveral other Places where this Matter was diſcourſed of, and a great many were ſuppoſed to be in the Aſſaſſination, to the Number of Forty; but he does not mention any thing then of its being diſcourſed who they were to be: And is it ſuppoſable when the Deſign he talks of was ſo near being put in Execution, it ſhould not be known who ſhould engage in it? For my Part, I deny that ever I was with him at any Place where Sir George Barcley, or any Body elſe, talked of any ſuch thing. When I was examined before the Council, my Lord Keeper asked me when I ſaw the Duke of Berwick? I thought it not fit to anſwer that Queſtion, becauſe I knew the Duke of Berwick was out-law'd here, and I might accuſe myſelf if I acknowledged having been in his Company, tho' it were at St. Germains. But I ſaid I never believed he was in London, and I do not believe he was. I heard that Colonel Parker was in England, but I did not ſee him; and as to the Major-General and other Officers, they talk of, it is all a Jeſt to me, and it is no way at all to be believed or credited; that becauſe other Men have Notions of Caſtles in the Air, I muſt be ſo fooliſh as to believe ſuch Impertinencies too. He ſays I ſent him a Liſt of Men, and written with my own Hand, and ſubſcribed with the two Letters of my Name; he does not ſwear he ſaw me write it, and Similitude of Hands was never thought good in Criminal Cauſes; and I believe it was never look'd upon for Law, that it ſhould be a good Evidence for a Man to ſwear ſuch a Writing was another Man's own Hand, unleſs he ſays he ſaw him write it, and kept it in his own Cuſtody till it ſhould be produced as Evidence, and produce it in open Court, and not let it go out of his Cuſtody till then. All theſe Things I apprehend, the Law judges neceſſary to make a good Proof of a Writing to be of a Man's own Hand; but here is nothing of that here: Here is nothing produced, nor does he ſay he ſaw me write it; and ſo I think it all goes for nothing, a meer idle Invention of his own. My Lord, upon this Evidence there is not any poſitive Proof of my doing an Overt Act, by buying of Arms or Horſes, or writing Letters, or any thing of that Nature; and I hope if I ſpeak irregularly, your Lordſhip will pardon me; I am no Lawyer, and I have no Aſſiſtance but my own nonſenſical Notes to depend upon for my Defence. My Lord, he ſpeaks about Horſes that were to be provided, but there is no Proof of that; I never bought any Horſes, or borrowed any; nay, nor is there any Proof, that while this bloody Aſſaſſination that he owns himſelf to have contrived and carried on, was on foot, I had not ſo much as a Horſe any where, and that I ſhould be ſo vain to get Men to engage in ſuch an Expedition with me, and have never a Horſe myſelf, is very ſtrange. The Conſpiracy he ſays was depending a long while, and whenever it was to be put in Execution, we were to go expeditiously to work, leſt it ſhould be diſcover'd; and 'tis very ſtrange then that I ſhould never have provided the leaſt thing in the World to do it with! neither Arms, nor Horſe, nor any thing: For there is no Proof of any ſuch thing againſt me, but only Talk, as he is pleaſed to ſwear, to take my Life to ſave his own: And I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will declare to the Jury, that here is no Evidence of any Overt Act againſt me.

My Lord, there is another Thing he ſays againſt me: He ſays he had a Note from me by the Name of Robinſon, to countermand the Orders upon the 15th: My Lord, The Truth of that would depend very much upon the producing of that Note, then it would be ſeen whether it was my Hand, and what it contained, and what it related to: For my Part I utterly deny I ever ſent any ſuch Note wherein there was a Word of the King, or of any Fact of this Nature that was to be committed, or any thing relating to it, if it were true that I had written any Note to him at all; and I hope the Jury will conſider, and the Court will direct them ſo to do: For I know not that they are any more skill'd in the Law than myſelf, and therefore I hope your Lordſhip will give them ample and true Directions, what is Law and what is not Law, and what is Evidence and what is not Evidence; and this cannot be Evidence to affect me at all, there being nothing that doth appear or is produced.

My Lord, he ſays, there were four that were to go with Sir George Barcley, that were to be appointed out of each Party; he does not ſay I named any, nor does he name any himſelf; but it ſeems they knew what was to be done; and truly if any Thing was to be done, they knew it themſelves (and no Body elſe that I know of) who ſwear to ſave their Lives, and get a Reward. If the four were to be out of the Party, which he calls his own, he knows them beſt, and I believe the Party was his own, and the Plot his own too, and no Body's elſe; he does not ſay that I appointed any one, he only ſays there were four to be appointed out of a Party, which Party was in Nubibus, and ſo is the whole Deſign, unleſs it be in his Head, fram'd there by his own Invention, for it only exiſts there that I know of.

My Lord, theſe Obſervations I make upon Captain Porter's Evidence: The next Witneſs is Mr. De la Rue, and he is a very good Evidence indeed, if Hear-ſay be to be believ'd; he ſays I was very ſhy of diſcourſing with him about it, that I told him it would come to Nothing, without ſaying what would come to Nothing, not that the Plot would come to Nothing, for there was nothing at all ſpoken of any Plot, much leſs of a Deſign to Aſſaſſinate the King. This is all that he ſays, as to me, of his own Knowledge, all the reſt relating to me is but what Captain Porter told him. But to begin with the Beginning of his Evidence, he ſays one Thing which is very odd, that at the Roſe-Tavern, the laſt Year, there was a Conſultation about carrying King William away into France, in a Veſſel alive, and that Sir William Perkins ask'd him whether he would go along with me to Deal, to procure a Veſſel to carry the King over: He might as well have ask'd him to go with me to Conſtantinople, or any other Place in the World, as to Deal, and about any other Employment, as that. A pretty Sort of Thing, that I ſhould go to Deal to hire a Veſſel to carry the King over into France; I that know no Sea-Man, or any Maſter of a Veſſel at Deal, that I ſhould be employ'd to hire a Ship before the Deſign was form'd, as he ſays it was not come to an Head. If we had got the Prince of Orange into our Power: If we had King William in our Power, how was it poſſible we ſhould ever have carry'd him to Deal? I cannot but think any one would believe us Madmen to entertain ſuch a Chimera in our Heads. What nonſenſical Stories are all theſe, that we ſhould carry King William to Deal, and I hire a Ship to tranſport him to France! I hope the Jury, and all that hear it, will conſider what ridiculous Stuff theſe Men talk of, as Evidence againſt Men for their Lives. Then he talks of my coming in a Coach to the Nagg's-head Door, where I was very ſhy of letting him ſee me, and afterwards, when I came out, ask'd him to go into the Company; but he was angry that they had deny'd to admit him before, and ſo would not go up: What a ſtrange Sort of a contradictory Story is all this? here was a Conference it ſeems, appointed the Night before to be at that Place, when Captain Porter, and Captain King, and Mr. Knightley were juſt come from viewing the Ground, and were to make their Report, and Porter told him of it, and yet they would not admit him, and I was ſhy of him, and yet ask'd him to go up: What contradictory Nonſenſe is this? it muſt needs be look'd upon as improbable or impoſſible to be True, that I ſhould ask him to go up into ſuch a Company, where ſuch a mighty Conference was to be had about ſuch a great Tranſaction, when I had ſhewn my ſelf apparently ſhy of him, by falling back in the Coach, as being unwilling to let him ſee me; I hope the Jury will conſider the ſelf Contradictorineſs and Improbability of ſuch Evidence. Then there is another Thing, and that is, what he ſays Captain King ſaid he did not believe it would come to any Thing, becauſe he did not like me as being no Soldier, for I was for keeping out of Danger, and having an eaſy Poſt: If he means I had no Mind to be in a Plot, he was in the Right of it; for no Man in his Senſes, would ever be engaged in any ſuch deſperate Deſigns, where there is ſuch apparent Deſtruction in view: ſo I cannot apprehend what there is in that of any Objection againſt me, or any Proof that I had a Hand in this Plot, becauſe I deſired to keep out of Danger. It was ſaid that I was to have attacked the King, with Sir George Barcley; but Captain Porter ſays, we were to be together, to attack the Guards; and both can't be true, nor indeed is either of them true, but a Figment and Invention of their own: Then he ſays he ask'd Keyes for a good Sword, and he told me I had a very good one: 'Tis true, I had a Sword, I always wore one, but it does not follow that that was to be employ'd upon such an Enterprize as this. And then he tells you a Story again of Captain Porter's having a broad flaming two-edg'd Sword. But what is all this to the Purpose? Does this prove any Thing against me, that I consented to, or was angaged in any such bloody Design, as this. He saith that on Wednesday he came to me, and ask'd me of the Affair, how it went on; he doth not say what the Affair was, nor he doth not say it was about killing the King; nor indeed is it probable it should be, for he says I was always shy of him, and that he could never get any Intelligence but from Captain Porter. He saith I told him it was a Thing would not admit of being delay'd, and that only three People should know such a Thing; but still he doth not tell you what this Thing was, and therefore I do not apprehend how this should affect me, as Evidence of my intending to Assassinate the King. He saith he had it from Captain Porter, that Mr. Chambers was an orderly Man, a Word I do not understand, to convey Intelligence to me; and that Durant was an orderly Man, to convey Intelligence elsewhere: Still this is all but what Captain Porter told him, and there is no Proof that I sent Mr. Chambers any where; Chambers, I acknowledge I know, he is a poor Man, and my Lord Chief Justice Treby, I suppose, cannot but remember that he was in Prison, and try'd before him, upon the Account of Piracy; I must needs say, I thought him an honest Man because he had serv'd with me in Ireland: I knew he was in great want, and therefore I gave him his Diet and Lodging; there is no Proof that I furnished him with Money, but I acknowledge I did with Bread and Drink, to keep him from Starving; that I think was an Act of Charity, but it cannot be interpreted, nor is there any Proof to warrant it, that it was with any ill Design, or that I gave it him to hire him or engage him to any such Purpose. My Lord, they would make it as if the Persons that were intended to be employ'd in this pretended Plot, were to be regular Troops, and to have Courts of Guard, and to be dispos'd of into Quarters, and this was to be done by these orderly Men: I profess I know not what to make of it, it is such a Medley, a Fancy, and a Chimera, that it is perfectly Unintelligible, whether these were to be General Officers, or Private Centinels, or what. Then, my Lord, he saith Cranbourne brought a List from me to Captain Porter, with R. C. at the Bottom: First, that he does not prove that it was my List, nor doth that R. C. being at the Bottom of the List make me a Partner in this Conspiracy. Then he saith that Cranbourne came to the Blue-Posts, as from me, to acquaint them of the Disappointment, because the King did not go out that Day: Surely, my Lord, I need not trouble you with saying any thing to this, for it is all, as to me, but Hearsay; and what am I concern'd in that which other People talk amongst themselves? tho' they do use my Name, how can I help that? My Lord, he saith himself that he intended to discover this Conspiracy a Year ago, but the Thing failing then, which how ridiculous it was I observed before, he let it alone for that Time; but when I met him at the Nagg's-head Door, and he was so angry for their not admitting him into their Company, which was three Weeks before this Design they talk of was to be executed, he had a Mind to go to the Secretary's, and get Warrants and Messengers to apprehend us; and he saith he hath often come to me, to ask about the Affair, as he calls it, but I was still reserv'd and shy, and told him nothing would come of it. From all this I would observe that I have very good Reason to look upon him to be no Evidence, not only for the same Reason that I objected against Mr. Porter, that by his own Acknowledgment he is Particeps Criminis, but his coming to me after he resolved to discover, plainly declares, that he set himself to be a Trapanner, and no Trapanner can, in the Judgment of any honest or understanding Man, be a credible Person as an Evidence to take away any Man's Life: I am sure what he saith of my Shyness to converse with him, and his own frequent Attempts to converse with me, shews plainly, he was willing to trapan me, for so he himself saith. He came to me several Times, and took me aside, to ask how the Affair went on, but he did it only to enable himself, to make the better Discovery, which makes him ten thousand times worse, than if he had only gone at first and told what he pretends he knew, and afterwards forbore the Company. Besides, my Lord, as to trapanning, I have read in a Book of Sir Robert Atkins, that to be Particeps Criminis, proves a Person to be a bad Man, and consequently not so Credible, especially if it can appear the Witness has trapann'd the Prisoner into the committing the Crime; then the Witness will appear to be guilty of a far more higher Crime than the Prisoner, and therefore ought not to be believ'd as a credible Witness against the Prisoner, for he is a credible Witness that has the Credit of being a good and honest Man, which a Trapanner cannot have; and this Trapanning proves withal that the Trapanner did bear a Spight and Malice against the Person trapanned, and intended to do him a Mischief, and design'd to take away his Life: Shall such a one, says he, be a credible Witness, and be believed against him? God forbid!

My Lord, as to Mr. Pendergrass, who is the next Witness, I do not take myself to be much concerned in all he saith. I think I have seen him but once of a great while, and that was on the Wednesday or Thursday before I was taken up; but, my Lord, I have this to say to his Evidence, I desire your Lordship to observe I was not in the Proclamation, though he was: They took Occasion to have me secured as a Colour, or to save Expences, I suppose, while they themselves went out of the Way, to have their Names put into the Proclamation; that some Body might colourably take them, and get the King's Money. All that he saith of me, is, that Cranbourne brought Messages from me: One Time I writ a Note, sign'd R. Robinson; another Time I sent a List subscribed R. C. and that Porter shew'd him them both; but all this is but Hear-say still out of the Mouth of Porter, and can be no Proof at all against me. He saith, upon the Disappointment he and they went to Epsom, which to me seems a very remarkable Thing; for if he say true, it is plain, this was before by him discover'd at Court; and to me it shews, that he had a strong Design of getting Money, and taking away People's Lives upon that Account; and that Capt. Porter was in the same Design: For De la Rue saith, Captain Porter ask'd him to go with them, as well as Pendergrass. Now can

can it be ſuppoſed, that theſe three ſhould agree to go together, unleſs they were in a Combination, as it appears they now are? And I cannot but think, the Court and the Jury will think it reaſonable to believe: For if I was in a Plot of ſuch a Nature as this, and ſhould hurry out of Town after I had diſcover'd it, with three or four of the People that were concern'd in it, and ſome of them afterwards pretend to be Diſcoverers too, nobody in the World can believe but they contriv'd the Thing amongſt themſelves, and went out of Town only for a Colour, that they might be put in the Proclamation, and pretend to be taken, to entitle themſelves to the Reward.

L. C. J. Really, Mr. Charnock, I am loth to interrupt you in any Part of your Defence, but I do not underſtand what you mean by this, and I very willingly would underſtand you if I could.

Mr. Char. My Lord, I ſay, I look upon it, that they were all combin'd together in a Deſign to get the King's Money, and take away our Lives; that Porter ſhould deſire them to go with him, into the Country, and particularly Mr. Pendergraſs, who diſcover'd this to the King, and then that he ſhould agree to go with him.

L. C. J. Truly, I do not underſtand the Force of your Argument; that becauſe upon the ſuppoſed Diſcovery, Capt. Porter went to Epſom, and Mr. Pendergraſs went with him, therefore this muſt be a Deſign between them to get the King's Money, I cannot any way ſee how that muſt follow.

Char. Pray, my Lord, to what End ſhould he run out of Town, upon the Apprehenſion of the Diſcovery, and with Captain Porter too, when he actually had got the King's Promiſe that he ſhould be ſafe, and not be a Witneſs, unleſs it were a Combination between them, in order to ſet up as Witneſſes againſt us, to get the King's Money?

L. C. J. I'll tell you why he was willing to go with Captain Porter; becauſe he had not a Mind that the Diſcovery he had made, ſhould be any Way known to have come from him; for you ſee how unwilling he was to name Names, and ſo kept Captain Porter Company ſtill, as his Friend, reſolving not to be an Evidence againſt him.

Char. Well, my Lord, after all, I hope, what he ſaith cannot be look'd upon as any Evidence againſt me; becauſe whatſoever he ſaith relating to me, is about the Notes and Meſſages that he ſaith were brought to Captain Porter, and all of it can amount at the utmoſt to Hear-ſay from other Peoples Mouths. My Lord, the laſt Evidence that I apprehend relates any Way to me, is that of Mr. Bertram, and he talks of what I ſhould ſay to him upon the ninth of February, that I ſhould take him into a back Room into my Lodgings, and there tell him, That there was ſomething in Hand for the Reſtoring King James, but there was ſomewhat to be done firſt to take off the Spark, or I do not know what, nor do I believe any Body elſe doth know how to make any thing of it. It is a very improbable Thing, that this Matter which was to be ſo great a Secret, and which I ſhould ſay, was not fit to be communicated to above three People at once, I ſhould ſend for a private Trooper, for he was no otherwiſe, to communicate ſo great a Matter to him; beſides that, I cannot, nor, I believe, can any Body elſe tell what to make of the Words, Taking off the Spark, how to conſtrue that to make it an Evidence of an Intention to kill the King. It might be probable I might ſay there was a Noiſe that King James would come, for it hath been in the Gazettes and the publick Prints, that there was ſuch an Expectation, and Preparation for it on the Coaſt of France; but it is not probable, I am ſure it is not true, that I ſhould ſay there was ſomething to be done firſt, for the taking off the Spark. Evidence of a Thing of this Nature ought to be plain and clear, and diſtinct: He doth ſay nothing that I talk'd to him of killing the King, or of Aſſaſſinating him, or of my asking him to be one in any ſuch Thing, and that I furniſh'd him with Arms, and an Horſe on any ſuch Deſign, but only that he might ride out, and take the Air, and there he ſhould meet with ſome of his Acquaintance: What unaccountable looſe Stuff is all this? It is very ſtrange, my Lord, that if I liked the Man ſo well, as I muſt do if I would ſend for him to communicate a thing of this Nature to him, that I ſhould not put it into a Method, that he might be one with us in the Execution of it: But there cannot be any Thing inferred of that Nature, for which we ſtand accuſed, from any Words that he ſaith were ſpoken. My Lord, he doth ſay indeed that he told me, that he had diſpoſed of himſelf otherwiſe; but that is no more certain, nor can be referred to any particular Thing, than the reſt. He might diſpoſe of himſelf to a Friend, he might diſpoſe of himſelf to his Wife; but what is all that to this Purpoſe? And he might indeed, if King James came, diſpoſe of himſelf to aſſiſt him, or to oppoſe him, or to let it alone; but all this is nothing to the Buſineſs for which we are here to be try'd; it's all looſe, idle, impertinent Talk, and not at all to the Purpoſe. And then he ſaith, that afterwards, I met him at Linclon's-Inn back Gate, and took him into Linclon's-Inn, and told him, there were Warrants out, and we had as good do the Buſineſs preſently. My Lord, I do remember I met him at Linclon's-Inn Gate, and it was upon Saturday the Day before I was taken up, and it was about twelve a Clock at Noon, and I did hear there were Warrants out, but there never was that Intimacy between him and me, that I ſhould deſire him to come to my Lodging, or that I ſhould ſupport him in any Sort. My Lord, I have made a few Remarks to your Lordſhip and the Jury, upon the Evidence; I am ſenſible I have given the Court a deal of Trouble, but I hope you will conſider it is for my Life, and my All, and I hope you will be of Opinion, that the Evidence produced againſt me is frivolous and weak, and that the Witneſſes have a very bad Cauſe of it, ſince all that they talk of, if it were true, is only a Diſcourſe, and they are forced to ſupply in Words, what they want in Fact.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay, Sir?

Char. Yes, my Lord, I deſire to take Notice to the Court and the Jury, that the Buſineſs of bare Words was never look'd upon in Law as an Overt Act to prove a Man guilty of High-Treaſon, nor that ſeveral Perſons met together doth prove a Conſpiracy. Theſe Perſons proving that I met with them doth not prove that I was concerned in the Aſſaſſination, nor that I conſented to any ſuch Thing; beſides, my Lord, I am taxed in the Indictment with buying Arms and Horſes for this Buſineſs; but there is not one Word of it proved, or of my riding out to view the Ground, nor any thing, that I was to be concern'd about this villainous villainous Act. My Lord, if I had bought any Arms, that had not been an Overt Act of itſelf; it muſt be proved firſt that I bought them with ſuch an Intent to employ them about ſuch a Buſineſs; and it neither is, nor can be proved, that I furniſh'd any Body with Horſes or Arms: And therefore the bare Buying of Arms of itſelf, as far as I am informed of the Law, would be no Proof of an Overt Act. To prove an Overt Act of Treaſon by the buying of Arms it muſt be prov'd that I declar'd ſome way that I bought them with ſuch an Intent, or elſe it is no Proof at all; but now if you have no Evidence that I bought any Arms at all, I look upon it, that there is no Poſſibility to make that an Overt Act. If you pleaſe, my Lord, to bear with me to give you the Trouble of reading ſome ſhort Notes, which I have taken out of ſome Law-Books about Overt Acts.

L. C. J. No, the Court won't think it any Trouble: Make your Defence as well as you can, and take your own Way.

Char. My Lord, I hope you will allow what hath been collected out of the Books of Law as to Overt Acts: There is Hales's Pleas of the Crown is poſitive in it, That an Overt Act muſt be alledged in every Indictment, and proved; That compaſſing the Death of the King by bare Words, is no Overt Act. Now if bare Words be no Overt Act, why then all the Conſpiracy that is here proved, ſuppoſing all to be true that is ſaid, it is no Overt Act; for it is all but Words ſtill. And bare Conſpiring is no Overt Act, according to my Lord Coke's Opinion in his Third Inſtitutes; and the utmoſt of all that any of them prove againſt me is, that I did ſay ſo and ſo, which is but bare Conſpiring. Pray, my Lord, let me know upon what Law it is that I am indicted and try'd, I ſuppoſe it is upon 25 Edw. 3.

L. C. J. Yes, you are, and only upon that Statute.

Char. My Lord Coke, in his Third Inſtitutes, ſaith, The open Act muſt be manifeſtly proved. If divers conſpire the Death of the King, and the Manner how, and thereupon provide Weapons, Powder, Poiſon, ſend Letters, or the like, for the Execution of the Conſpiracy, or Preparation be made by ſome Overt Act to depoſe the King, or take him by Force, or by ſtrong Hand, or impriſon him; theſe are ſufficient Overt Acts, to prove the Compaſſing the King's Death. But by this it is plain, that bare Conſpiring is not Treaſon, as wanting a ſufficient Overt Act to declare the Intention. Now, my Lord, I ſay, that in all this Evidence that hath been given againſt me, there is not one Overt Act proved of my providing Arms, or ſending Letters, or the like. And the ſame Page of the ſame Book, the Third Inſtitutes, Chap. High-Treaſon, upon the Words proveable Attaint, it muſt be by Overt Act, it muſt be upon direct and manifeſt Proof, not upon conjectural Preſumptions or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: So that the ſtrongeſt Preſumptions upon the whole Earth will never be able to make any Overt Act, without plain and manifeſt Proof. And, my Lord, I do inſiſt, here is not plain and manifeſt Proof, or any Overt Act, but only Preſumptions in the whole Scene of the Thing. I muſt beg the Favour of the Court as to one particular Thing: Your Lordſhip, no doubt, knows the Law very well. I am here an ignorant Man, unable to defend myſelf by the Forms of Law; but I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will not let me ſuffer any Damage upon that Account. You are always preſumed to be of Council for the Priſoners; and I look upon it as aſſured, that you will do that Juſtice to Perſons in our Circumſtances, as truly to inſtruct the Jury how they ſhall behave themſelves in Relation to this Matter that is now upon Enquiry before them. Particularly, my Lord, I deſire they may be told plainly and truly, what is Proof of an Overt Act, and what is not; and when your Lordſhip ſums up the Evidence, you will tell the Jury directly and plainly, what is Legal Evidence, and what is not: and then what is ſufficient Proof of any one Overt Act or Species of Treaſon; and that you would not leave it to the Apprehenſion of the Jury, what they do believe, but inform them really and truly what is Legal Evidence, and what of that Sort hath been given to Day. My Lord, here is a ſtrange Sort of Thing, a Conſpiracy, which, conſider'd in the general, hath neither Head nor Tail; how many there were to be is uncertain. In the Indictment is ſaid, there were forty Men to do this Fact upon the King in his Coach, and for attacking the Guards. Can it be ſuppoſed, that any Man in his Senſes would do ſuch an Act as this, without Reſpect to have Security for himſelf and his Family, or thoſe he is concerned for? I know not how great Wits theſe People be in other Things, but I am ſure they ſhew no Wit in this, I look upon it to be ſo deſperate a Thing. The Guards are at leaſt treble the Number, and better appointed; and that forty ſhould go to aſſault treble the Number, and in divided Bodies too, that were only to mix Fury and Malice with Reſolution, to be torn in Pieces by the Mob upon an apparent viſible Diſappointment. And when we had done this, and made this Attempt, where were we to go? We had no Aſylum that we can hear of, nor Caſtle or Fort to retire to, nor none that were to back or aſſiſt us; and I am ſure no Man in his Wits would undertake a deſperate Attempt without Aſſurance of a Retreat. If I was reſolved to kill any Man, I would propoſe to myſelf ſome Place, to which I might repair for Shelter and Safety when I had done. If then we were in our Senſes, it cannot be imagined we ſhould ever engage in ſo apparently deſtructive a Deſign. We ought rather to have been confin'd to Bedlam, than any other Place, if we could be thought guilty of ſo much Raſhneſs and Folly. My Lord, I pretend not to make any particular Reflections upon theſe Gentlemen that have given Evidence here; but only I muſt take leave to ſay in general, that there are none of them, but that if they have had any Fortunes in the World, their Circumſtances as to that Matter are now much altered; and if any Perſons will be Evidence againſt others for their Lives in Hopes to repair thoſe Fortunes, and concerning Matters in which they were engaged themſelves in, as they do acknowledge, and if it be true, it muſt be thro' the Deſperateneſs of their Fortunes, it is the moſt barbarous and inhuman Sort of Evidence that ever was given by any that ever had any Senſe of Honour, and muſt be a baſe Reflection upon any who pretend themſelves to be Gentlemen: And I hope the King will think them upon that Account very little deſerving Credit. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to conſider, that what I have offer'd is but what my own ſudden Thoughts could ſuggeſt to me out of the confuſed little Remarks marks I have been able to make upon the Evidence; and it is the more confuſed and immethodical, becauſe I could have no Council to aſſiſt me. I would only put your Lordſhip in Mind once more, of what I earneſtly deſire and inſiſt upon from your Lordſhip, that you would tell the Jury plainly and truly what Evidence it is the Law requires to convict any Perſon of the Crime for which I ſtand accuſed; what Things are neceſſary to make up that Evidence, what is a Legal Proof of an Overt Act, and what Overt Acts have been plainly and manifeſtly proved againſt me in this Caſe, and not leave the Conſtruction of the Evidence to the Apprehenſion or Inclination of the Jury. This is all the Favour that I have to beg of the Court, and I hope I need not doubt the Juſtice of the Jury.

L. C. J. Have you done, Sir?

Char. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then what ſay you, Mr. King?

King. My Lord, I muſt inſiſt upon a great many Things that Mr. Charnock hath ſaid. But as to what relates to myſelf, Captain Porter ſaith, I went with him and Mr. Knightley to view the Ground where this Deſign was to be executed. Truly, my Lord, I did go abroad with Captain Porter and Mr. Knightley; but it was meerly to take the Air, and no other Thing. Truly, my Lord, I have not taken any Notes of the Evidence, nor have I had any Council to aſſiſt me, and ſo I am not very capable of making any Defence.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to ſay?

King. As to Mr. De la Rue, he doth not pretend to ſay, I did ever tell him of any thing of a Deſign of deſtroying the King: And as to the Sword he ſpeaks of, he knows I always wore one, and ever had one.

L. C. J. Well, is this all you have to ſay?

King. And as to Mr. Pendergraſs, he ſaith, he ſaw me at the Roſe-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where we diſcourſed ſomething of the Matter; but he tells you not what that Matter was, nor what the Diſcourſe was. And as to Mr. Boyſe, he doth not tax me with any Deſign of killing the King: Nay, he ſaith, I did not mention any ſuch Thing to him. And as to the Matter of an Overt Act, what is an Overt Act and what not, and what is good Proof of it, and what not, I muſt refer to your Lordſhip and the Court.

Char. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, there is one thing I forgot to offer to your Lordſhip; there is no Place laid in the Indictment, nor no ſet Number of Men aſcertained.

L. C. J. At preſent you are out of Time, for that you might have ſpoke to it before the Evidence was given, or you may ſpeak to it after the Verdict is brought in, if there be Occaſion.

Char. My Lord, I am ignorant in the Forms of Law.

L. C. J. If you will obſerve any thing out of the Evidence, you may; now is the Time.

Char. My Lord, I think the Evidence is inconſiſtent with the Indictment: for the Indictment doth ſay poſitively, that there were Horſes and Arms bought and provided. Now if this be an eſſential Overt Act, as I apprehend it is, according to my Lord Coke, to prove the compaſſing the King's Death, then there hath been no Evidence to ſupport this Indictment; for there is no Proof of the buying of any Horſes or Arms.

L. C. J. They tell you there were forty provided.

Char. My Lord, I have taken ſome Notes, as well as I could, upon reading of the Indictment; and in the firſt place it is ſaid, that it was agreed there ſhould be forty Horſemen armed of us, Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes; which I take to be Nonſenſe and impoſſible.

Mr. Att. Gen. But there is, And others in the Indictment too.

Char. It is Quadraginti Homines equeſtres de ipſo Roberto Charnock.

L. C. J. And divers others, to the Jurors unknown. May not they make forty? thirty-ſeven and you three will make forty.

Char. That divers others is ſo uncertain, that no one can tell whether it be five or five thouſand; and I know not what will make an Indictment void, if Uncertainty will not.

L. C. J. But your Time of Exceptions to the Validity of the Indictment is not now; we are now only upon the Trial of the Fact.

Char. My Lord, I was advis'd by my Council that if I could find a Flaw in the Indictment, I muſt mention it, and take the Advantage of it before the Summing up.

L. C. J. You were not well adviſed; for after the Jury is ſworn, we are only to have Regard to the Fact, and we are now upon the Trial of the Fact; and the only Thing we have under Conſideration upon the Fact and the Evidence is, Whether upon this Evidence that hath been given, you are guilty or not of the Fact that is charged upon you in the Indictment?

Char. My Lord, I crave your Pardon, and I hope you will take no Advantage of my Ignorance, not being uſe to theſe Proceedings.

L. C. J. As to what you ſaid at firſt, that there was an Overt Act proved becauſe there is no Proof of buying Horſes or Arms; it is true, that is one Overt Act laid in the Indictment, and there is ſome Evidence given of it; but what that Evidence will amount unto will be a farther Conſideration by and by.

Char. There was another Obſervation, my Lord, that I have made upon the Indictment, that it is uncertain upon the Word tunc; there is no Time aſſigned, nor no Place: Pray what Time doth this tunc refer to?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the King went out.

L. C. J. But theſe things are not proper now, I tell you we are upon the Fact. Mr. King, have you any more to ſay? becauſe Mr. Charnock interrupted you.

King. My Lord, if there be any Objection that Mr. Charnock hath made, would be of any Advantage to me, I hope you will let me be heard by my Council, that I may have the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. I tell you, that is not proper now; you may have the Benefit of any Objection of that Nature, if there be an Occaſion, after the Verdict: Now we are only conſidering the Evidence upon the Iſſue, Guilty or not Guilty; and you are now to apply yourſelves to that.

King. My Lord, I think I have anſwered all the Evidence.

L. C. J. Well then, Mr. Keyes, What have you to ſay for yourſelf?

Keyes. My Lord, all that I have to ſay is, I was a Servant to Captain Porter, and I did nothing but by his Order.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to ſay?

Keyes. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then I muſt tell you, no Man is ſuch a Servant that the Commands of his Maſter can excuſe him for committing High-Treaſon.

Keyes. I did but obey his Commands.

L. C. J. But I tell you again, no Man is ſo much under the Command of his Maſter, as that he ought to obey him, if he command him to commit High-Treaſon. It is proved you bought Horſes, and he told you upon what Deſign, and you engaged in it.

Keyes. I did not hear any thing of it, my Lord. My Maſter was pleaſed to jeſt with me ſeveral times, and he might ſay a great many things that I did not much regard.

L. C. J. You were by when your Maſter, as you call him, promiſed Mr. Pendergraſs his Muſquetoon, and Mr. King told Pendergraſs, he hoped he would not fear breaking the Glaſs Windows.

Keyes. Indeed I do not remember any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. And there are ſeveral other Particulars ſworn againſt you: But have you any thing more to ſay?

Keyes. Nothing, but that I did what my Maſter order'd me to do.

L. C. J. Have you all done then? If you have any more to ſay, you muſt ſpeak it now, becauſe you cannot ſpeak after the King's Council have ſummed up; they muſt have the laſt Word: Have you any Witneſſes to call, or any Thing more to ſay?

Char. No, my Lord, we have nothing more to ſay, but leave it to your Lordſhip entirely.

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, and I think the Matter hath been fully proved as Mr. Attorney at firſt opened it; that there was a Deſign of an Invaſion on this Kingdom from France, and of an Inſurrection within this Kingdom, to abet that Invaſion, and as an Inducement to both, of a barbarous and abominable Aſſaſſination upon the Perſon of the King, and that the Priſoners at the Bar had an Hand in this Conſpiracy.

Now, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, that for the two firſt Parts of this Deſign, the Invaſion and the Inſurrection, we have given you no other Evidence now, but ſome ſhort Hints, that ſuch a Thing was intended; and we did it purpoſely for this Reaſon becauſe the Priſoners, tho' they were concerned too in thoſe other Parts of this Plot, yet they are not now indicted for that Matter, but only for a direct Conſpiracy to murder and aſſaſſinate the King: We have abundance of Witneſſes to prove the other Parts at ſeveral Times againſt a great many as well as them; but we confine ourſelves now to this Particular, as it ſtands charged againſt theſe Perſons in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, There is an Overt Act alledged in the Indictment, as it by Law is neceſſary to do, to prove the Treaſon; which is, Compaſſing the Death of the King; and it is by Law a good Overt Act, That they did at ſuch a Place, that is to ſay, the Pariſh of St. Clements in the County of Middleſex, on the tenth of February laſt, conſult and agree to carry on ſuch a Deſign: Now it is not material, as my Lords and Judges will tell you, in Point of Law, to prove all the ſeveral Conſultations to be in that Pariſh, nor to have been upon the Day alledged in the Indictment; for if it be any Day before or after the Times ſpecified in the Indictment, ſo it be before the Indictment preferr'd, and if it be at any Place within the County wherein the Indictment is laid, it is ſufficient; the thing that is material to be proved, is, Whether they did meet upon ſuch a Deſign before the Indictment, within this County.

This Deſign, Gentlemen, we in Law call High-Treaſon; the higheſt Crime that our Law, or the Law of any other Government, takes Notice of: And it very well deſerves to go under that Name; for it tends to ſubvert the very Foundations of the Government, without which no Subject is ſafe, and to bring all into Confuſion and Deſolation, by taking away the Life of the King, who is the Head of this Government; which Life the Law makes ſacred above all others, becauſe without that be ſafe, there can be no Safety to any particular Perſon.

Gentlemen, We have proved this bloody Conſpiracy moſt fully againſt all the Priſoners at the Bar: I will not take up ſo much of your Time, as to repeat every Particular of the Evidence that hath been given; but only ſhortly remind you of what hath been materially ſaid againſt each of them by the Witneſſes that have been produced.

Againſt Mr. Charnock, there is firſt Mr. Porter, who hath ſworn, That he and others met, and conſulted about this Deſign, agreed upon it, and on the Ways and Methods for carrying it on; and he names the Places where, and the Times when thoſe Conſultations were had: Then there is Mr. De la Rue, who ſaith, he ask'd Mr. Charnock, how the Affair went on? and he anſwered, he was afraid it would come to nothing; that ſhews he was willing it ſhould come to ſomething, though perhaps he might be fearful whether it would take Place or no. Mr. Pendergraſs ſaith, Mr. Charnock ſent a Note to Mr. Porter to countermand the Orders for the 15th, ſubſcribed by the Name of Robinſon; but that is only a concurring Evidence to that of Captain Porter, who ſaid before, he had ſuch a Note; but Bertram tells you, That he ask'd him if he would be one in the Deſign to take off the Spark? And that after he heard Warrants were out, he would have had him joined in the putting it in immediate Execution, and aſſured him there would be Safety in ſo doing.

Againſt Mr. King, there are the ſame Witneſſes, Mr. Porter, and Mr. De la Rue, who tell you of the Diſcourſes at Captain Porter's Lodgings, where Mr. Pendergraſs was likewiſe, who tells you the Times, viz. the 15th and 22d of February laſt, the Days when this wicked Deſign was to have been put in Execution, and there they conſulted about carrying it on. Mr. Boyſe likewiſe tells you of the Diſcourſe he had with King; he would not indeed directly tell him, what the Deſign was, but Mr. Boyſe did ſuſpect what it might be; for Mr. King told him Sir George Barcley was come, and Mr. Boyſe ſhould have a Horſe, and make one, and it would ſoon be over.

Then for Keyes, there are three poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; there's his Maſter, as he calls him, Captain Porter, who ſwears, That Keyes knew of it, and conſented to it. Mr. Pendergraſs ſaith, Keyes was one that met at Captain Porter's the 15th of February, to put the Deſign in Execution that Day. De la Rue tells you, Keyes was in the Chamber at that Time, and in other Places conſulting about it, and ſo muſt needs know of it, and conſent to it. So that, Gentlemen, if you believe theſe Witneſſes, as I ſee no Reaſon offered to the contrary, we have moſt manifeſtly proved upon them all three, the Matters charged in the Indictment.

As to what they ſpeak of the Witneſſes being Trapanners, and ſwearing them out of their Lives to ſave their own; it is plain the Priſoners deſigned to trapan the King out of his Life, and ſome the Priſoners wonld have trapann'd to have join'd with them in that Deſign, who honeſtly and honourably diſcover'd it, and now the Priſoners Danger is a Safety to the Nation.

Gentlemen, They argue againſt the Belief of this Conſpiracy, from the Improbability that any Perſon ſhould be ſo deſperate to engage in ſo wicked a Deſign. Truly had this been a Matter that had been only talked and diſcourſed of once, that might have been the better alledged; but when there have been ſo many Meetings at ſeveral Times and Places, and ſuch Methods taken for the putting this Conſpiracy in Execution, and after a Diſappointment one Day, put off to another; nay, and as it hath been prov'd, it hath been a Project that hath been tranſacting for ſeveral Years, from one Year to another, and all this made as manifeſtly evident, as Proof by Teſtimony can make it; the Objection of Improbability will ſoon vaniſh into nothing; and I hope you will think, as I believe all the World doth, or will after this Trial, That there hath been ſuch a barbarous, bloody Conſpiracy, as in the Indictment is alledg'd, and that theſe Perſons are guilty of it, and that you will give your Verdict accordingly.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, I would only add to what Mr. Sollicitor hath ſaid, ſome few Obſervations that have been omitted of the Evidence that hath been given againſt the Priſoners.

The Treaſon charged, is a Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King's Perſon, the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment are ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations in order to the bringing it to effect, and the providing Men and Horſes to put it in Execution.

This Charge we have fully proved againſt the ſeveral Priſoners at the Bar, by two Witneſſes at the leaſt, and it is manifeſt that they were all concern'd in the ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations for the carrying on that Deſign.

As for Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter's Evidence is very full as to his providing Arms and Horſes; and there is beſides, Mr. De la Rue, who though he met him at the Tavern, and not being admitted at firſt, took it ill, yet afterwards at two Meeting he did diſcourſe with him about it; and Bertram gives an Account, how he would engage him in it.

As to Mr. King, there is not only Captain Porter, who teſtifies, that he dined with him the 14th of February, where they did diſcourſe of this intended Aſſaſſination, but De la Rue likewiſe, that ſaid, there was a Meeting appointed for Porter and King, and another, to go and take a View of the Ground; and the Priſoner himſelf owns he did ride out with them, but he would have it only to take the Air; Captain Porter tells you, it was to ſee which was the moſt convenient Place, and that the Place pitch'd upon was the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green.

And for Keyes, there are two poſitive Witneſſes Capt. Porter and Mr. De la Rue, that he was at the Blue Poſts, and at Mr. Porter's Lodgings when this Matter was conſulted of, and particularly that he came and gave an Account of the Diſappointment the ſecond Day, upon the Guards coming back.

Beſides, Mr. Porter gives an Account in general, of ſeveral that were to provide Arms, Horſes, and Men; and Mr. Bertram proves that Mr. Charnock told him, the Deſign was to take off the Spark, and then the Time would come, that King James would come back quietly Mr. Boyſe ſwears, King told him on the 14th of February, that he was to go out upon a Deſign the next Day, and that he ſhould have a Horſe provided, which next Day, the 15th, is by all the Witneſſes agreed to be the firſt Time appointed for the Aſſaſſination; and Mr. Bertram adds that he met with Charnock the 22d, who told him Warrants were out, and it was beſt to go and do the Buſineſs preſently, and deſired him to come to his Lodgings, and he went to his Lodgings, and found ſeveral Perſons there--

Char. He does ſay no ſuch thing, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. He does ſay that Mr. Charnock deſir'd him to come to his Lodgings.

Mr. Conyers. As I apprehend him, he ſays, he went thither in the Evening on the 22d.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays, Mr. Charnock would have had him come, but he did not; the Time that he was at his Lodging, was before.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, if I miſtake, I beg Pardon of the Court, and of the Priſoner too.

L. C. J. As I take it, there is no coming to his Lodging at all, but the 9th or 10th of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays the ninth of February he met with Trevor, who carry'd him to Charnock's Lodgings, and than he would have engaged him in the Deſign of Taking off the Spark; the Meeting of the 22d was afterwards in Lincoln's Inn, and there was no going to the Lodging that Day.

Mr. Cooper. My Lord, I am very loth to take up any of your Time; but I would beg the Favour to obſerve two or three Paſſages relating to this Matter, which have not been obſerved yet; and ſhall only mention ſo much as I think has been omitted.

The Defence that has been made, has been principally by Mr. Charnock; and upon his Defence, it ſeems, the reſt do depend; therefore I would beg Leave to make ſome few Remarks upon the Defence that he hath made. He ſays, That all the Evidence is but Hearſay, as to him, and no Overt Act of his own proved; but, my Lord, I queſtion not, if the Evidence be looked into, it will appear ſufficient not only to prove him guilty beyond Contradiction, of all that is charg'd upon him in the Indictment; but particularly, that he was the principal Agent (under Sir George Barcley) in carrying on this whole Conſpiracy.

For Captain Porter tells you, That Charnock firſt acquainted him with Sir George Barcley's coming ing over with the Commiſſion; that Charnock brought Sir George Barcley to the Lodgings, where they both lay; that they had ſeveral Meetings, at which he was always preſent, and a main Promoter of the Deſign; That he agreed to find a principal Quota of the Perſons that were to be concerned; particularly, That he was to find eight Men, and ſeem'd always moſt zealous for the Execution of it.

Then as to Mr. King, it is plain, that Knightley, and Captain Porter, and he, went to view the Ground; and Mr. De la Rue tells you, what Report King made of that View; that with great Joy King acquainted him, they had found the rareſt Place in the World for the Execution of their Deſign, a Wood hard by the King's Houſe at Richmond; and then he opens the whole Manner of the Ambuſcade, and the Deſign.

Charnock. It is at the Liberty of any Body to ſwear what they pleaſe; but I hope the Jury will conſider the Nature of the Evidence.

Mr. Cowp. Mr. De la Rue tells you further, ſomething more than Hearſay, as to Mr. Charnock; that he ask'd Mr. Charnock about the Matter, what was like to come of it? And he anſwered him, that he feared the Succeſs of it; for that a Thing of ſuch a Nature was not to be truſted to above three. Which could not refer to the intended Invaſion and the Inſurrection; for as to that, it is plain from the Nature of the Thing itſelf, that it muſt be communicated to a great many, or elſe they could not be ready to aſſiſt in it: And therefore it is evident, it was the Aſſaſſination which he was in haſte to have executed, ſaying, it had been delay'd too long, and that was as dangerous as communicating it to too many.

My Lord, I ſhall make my Words good to you, and rather than take up your time in making Repetition of what has been ſaid, I will chuſe to break my Method, and omit what might be further obſerved: It is true, it was a Miſtake of the Day as to Bertram's Evidence of his going to Charnock's Lodging, but that is not material; for it is in Proof he did go to his Lodgings, the 8th or 9th of February, and there Charnock told him that King James was a coming; but there was a Service to be done firſt, to take off the Spark, and then the King would come in quietly; if that Deſign took Effect, it would anſwer his Expectation: He was to ride out to take the Air, and meet ſome of his Acquaintance, and after all was over, we ſhould be very happy. The Words indeed were ſomething dark, but yet the Intent and Meaning of them are pretty manifeſt, not only from the Words to take off the Spark, but becauſe this Action, whatever it was, was to precede the Invaſion of King James with the French Forces, and was to be done in order to it, and therefore could not be meant of it, nor of joining with it.

My Lord, I ſhall trouble you no further but ſubmit to your Direction.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe three Priſoners at the Bar (viz.) Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes ſtand indicted of High-Treaſon, for conſpiring, compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King, and that in a very bloody and barbarous Manner, by Way of Aſſaſſination; and the Indictment charges them, that they did meet and conſult with divers other Traitors unknown to the Jurors, and there did reſolve upon this Aſſaſſination, and Horſes and Arms were prepared and provided for the Execution of it.

The Queſtion, Gentlemen, that you are to try is, Whether theſe Perſons who ſtand now thus accuſed, are guilty of this Crime or not? And you have heard a very long Evidence; Five Witneſſes have been produced, and they have given upon this Occaſion a very large Account of the whole Tranſaction, which I will obſerve to you as briefly as I can.

In the firſt Place, Gentlemen, you are told, how there had been a Deſign forming, even for ſome Years, for the Reſtoring of the late King James, and the Depriving and Depoſing of this King; it ſeems it was a Deſign before the Buſineſs of Cape la Hogue, which you remember very well was in the Year 1692. about the Time of the burning a great Part of the French Fleet by Admiral Ruſſel; but this Deſign, though it met with ſeveral Diſappointments, yet did not die, it had its Ebbings and its Flowings, ſometimes it was higher, and at other times lower; and in Winter was twelve Months it began to be more vigorouſly proſecuted than at any time before, ſince the La Hogue Buſineſs, and then there was a Reſolution fram'd of attempting the Perſon and Life of the King, which appears by Captain Porter's and Mr. De la Rue's Teſtimony. And great Hopes were conceiv'd amongſt them, that it might be effected before the King went over into Flanders; but it ſeems they wanted a Commiſſion from abroad, (which they thought neceſſary as an Authority for them to act under) which not coming in time, the King went over to Flanders, and ſo for that time the Execution of it was deferred.

Gentlemen, after the King's Return from Flanders, the Proſecution of this Deſign was reſumed, and Intimation was given, that a Commiſſion was brought over by Sir George Barcley from King James, which was to make War upon the Perſon of King William, who was called therein, as you may ſuppoſe, the Prince of Orange: and you are told by Captain Porter, that at that time, he and Mr. Charnock lodged together in one Houſe in Norfolk-ſtreet, and that Mr. Charnock told him Sir George Barcley was come with ſuch a Commiſſion from King James, and imparted to him the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating and Murdering the King, and that would be the readieſt Way to bring Home King James: He asked Captain Porter, whether he would engage himſelf in the Matter. It ſeems Mr. Porter did freely and readily engage in it, and was in good earneſt; and therefore there were ſeveral Meetings at ſeveral Places, in order to conſult and contrive how they might bring it to paſs.

Gentlemen, you are further informed, that there were ſeveral Meetings at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, another at the Nagg's-head in St. James's-ſtreet in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and that two of the Priſoners at the Bar, Mr. Charnock and Mr. King, with divers others, were at thoſe Meetings, and Keyes was at ſeveral of them, and there it was agreed and reſolved, that the King ſhould be murdered, as the beſt Way to bring in the late King.

This being ſettled and reſolved upon as fit to be done, the next Conſideration was, in what manner it might be effected, and two Ways were propoſed, one by way of Ambuſcade on the other Side of the Water near the King's Houſe at Richmond, the other in the Lane that leads from Brentford to Turnham-Green, upon the King's Return from Richmond, ſome Evening; for it ſeems it is uſual for the King to go to a Houſe he has on the other Side of the Water, to divert himſelf once a Week upon the Saturday, and to return in the Evening.

Theſe two Places being propoſed, the one on this, the other on the other Side of the Water, there was a Difference in Opinion among the Conſpirators, which of the Places would be the beſt and moſt proper: And in order to ſettle that Matter, it was reſolved upon, that ſome Perſons ſhould be ſent to view the Ground in both Places, and make their Report to the reſt; and the Men agreed upon, were Captain Porter and Mr. Knightley, to whom Mr. King added himſelf, and accordingly they did go out of Town together to take a View of theſe Places.

Here the Court was interrupted by Mrs. King, the Priſoner's Mother, who in a very outragious violent Manner, got into the Court; but being removed, the Lord Chief Juſtice proceeded.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I was ſaying that this View was taken by thoſe Perſons that undertook it; and the Night of that Day they had viewed the Places, upon their Return, they made a Report to their Accomplices, and thereupon it was reſolved to relinquiſh the Ambuſcade, and that the Attack ſhould be made in the Lane that leads from Brentford to Turnham-Green.

The Time that was fix'd upon for this Execution was Saturday the 15th of February: There were two Men that were appointed to lodge at Kenſington, whom they called orderly Men, a Title that they gave them: theſe were to give Notice at what time the King and the Guards went out, the one was to give Notice firſt of the Guards going, the other was to give Notice when the King went: When Notice was brought them that the King was gone abroad, the Conſpirators were to be ready to go after in ſmall Numbers, and were to be quartered and diſperſed in the ſeveral Inns about Brentford and Turnham-Green, to be gathered into the ſeveral Bodies, upon Notice of the King's Return; when the King came over, then they were to make the Attack in this Manner. Captain Porter and Mr. Charnock, with one Rookwood were to attack the Guards, and Sir George Barcley, and his Party, were to come up to the King's Coach, and fire into it, and kill the King, and every one that was in it; and of that Party Mr. Pendergraſs was deſigned to be one, and he was to have had a Muſquetoon from Captain Porter, that would carry ſeven or eight Bullets: Theſe Conſpirators, and the Perſons that were to be concerned, were in all forty, or ſome few more in Number.

But, by great Providence, this bloody Deſign was diſcovered, as was told you, by one of the Witneſſes, Mr. Pendergraſs, a Day or two before it ſhould have been put in Execution; and ſo his Majeſty did forbear going out that Saturday the 15th. But they having Notice that the Guards were gone, and after that receiving an Account that the King did not go, it very much alarm'd theſe Conſpirators; but notwithſtanding this, as you have been told, they were reſolved not to lay aſide the Proſecution of this Deſign, but were rather bent upon executing it the next Opportunity that ſhould offer itſelf, for which purpoſe diverſe of the Conſpirators did meet together, and did conſult whether it was fit further to proceed, particularly upon the Friday the 21ſt Day of February at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, divers of them met, and there they had Diſcourſe of the Matter, and were troubled at the Diſappointment, and were reſolved to purſue it, and for that purpoſe, agreed to be in a Readineſs upon the next Day, and as ſoon as they ſhould have Notice that the King was gone from Kenſington, they would proſecute it in the ſame Manner, in which they had formerly agreed.

It ſhould ſeem, ſome of the Men that they had engaged were gone off, and others were provided in their ſtead, but there was another full Diſcovery made, before that, by Mr. De la Rue, by which their wicked Purpoſe was a ſecond Time diſappointed.

Gentlemen, upon the Diſcovery of this Deſign, it was thought very fitting to take all poſſible Care, for preventing ſuch a diſmal Stroke, and for puniſhing ſuch heinous Offenders; there was a Proclamation iſſued for the Apprehenſion of a great many of them that abſconded, which had a very good Effect, by the taking of ſeveral of them, beſides thoſe that were taken up by Warrants before; and theſe three Priſoners now at the Bar, are indicted for this horrid and traiterous Conſpiracy, and for purſuing this wicked Deſign, and are now upon their Trial for it.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence, which you are to conſider of in relation to theſe Priſoners, and how far they are affected by it. I muſt tell you, that Captain Porter, gives a very full Evidence againſt all three; he tells you how and in what Manner they were all engaged, and what Parts they had all in the Proſecution of this bloody Enterprize. As for Mr. Charnock, he ſeems to have been a remarkable Perſon in almoſt all the Parts of it, a great Carrier-on and Promoter of it, was to be an Actor in it, and provide his Number of Men: and it ſeems he was a Perſon much truſted by Sir George Barcley, and he ſpoke to Mr. Porter, of a Commiſſion that Sir George Barcley brought with him from King James, which was to levy War upon the Perſon of King William, which it ſeems was underſtood, to authorize them to Aſſaſſinate the King. Mr. King went to view the Ground, and Charnock and he were at the ſeveral Conſultations, and Keyes was at Porter's Lodgings, and at divers other Conſults, when the carrying on of this Deſign of aſſaſſinating the King, was debated and reſolved upon. Mr. Porter's Evidence you have heard at large, and I doubt not you take good Notice of it, and the King's Counſel have repeated the moſt material Parts of it, therefore I need not do it again. And as to Mr. Charnock, you have heard what Evidence is given by De la Rue and Bertram; for tho' Mr. Charnock, ſays all that is teſtified by the other Witneſſes, is only Talk and Diſcourſe, and that bare Words are not High-Treaſon, but there muſt be ſome Overt Act; therefore you are here to conſider particularly what the other Witneſſes ſay againſt him, and whether another Overt Act is not proved. De la Rue (who was one of the Diſcoverers, and (as he tells you) he reſolved ſo to be ſo ſoon as he could get a perfect Knowledge of the whole Deſign) does inform you, that between the 15th and 22d of February, he met Mr. Charnock, and enquired of him how the Buſineſs went, to which Charnock returned anſwer, That the Deſign did languiſh, ſaying, that People were not ſo warm as formerly, and did believe the King had Notice, for that he had not been abroad on Saturday; that too many were acquainted with it, and therefore thought it might come to nothing: But the main Buſineſs, which was the landing of King James, would be ſpeedy; and though the Diſcourſe may be reckon'd only Words, yet they do import, at leaſt acknowledge, to the carrying on this Deſign before that time.

(as

But then conſider what you are told by Bertram, another of the Witneſſes, that he being inform'd by Trevor, that Mr. Charnock would ſpeak with him, he thereupon went to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, where Charnock took him aſide into a back Room, and told him that King James was a coming, and there were great Hopes of reſtoring him; but there was ſomething to be done to facilitate it, which he would do well to joyn in: And when he asked what it was, Charnock told him, he muſt go abroad and take the Air, where he would meet with ſome of his Acquaintance; and there was no way to effect it, but by taking off the Spark; and by doing that Thing, it would moſt probably be brought about that King James ſhould be reſtored. Now, though it was not directly ſaid, they were to kill the King, yet it is manifeſt what was meant by it: For the Taking off no one Perſon in England, beſides King William, could conduce to the Return of the late King. And for his Encouragement, he told him further, that if Bertram would undertake the doing of it, it would anſwer his Expectations. And then you are told again by Bertram, that he met Charnock, at Lincoln's-Inn-Gate, upon that very Day that it was laſt to have been executed, which was the 22d of February, where Charnock told him he ſuſpected a Diſcovery was made, and that there were Warrants out againſt them; and that therefore the beſt Way was, to go immediately and take him off, and then all would be well.

Now I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, that what he ſays, that bare Words are not Treaſon, is very true in ſome Caſes; for looſe Words ſpoken, without Relation to any Act or Deſign, are not Treaſon or an Overt Act; but Arguments, and Words of Perſuaſion, to engage in ſuch a Deſign or Reſolution, and directing or propoſing the beſt Way for effecting it, are Overt Acts of High Treaſon, as much as if two agree together to kill the King, though the Agreement be Verbal only, and not reduced to Writing: Likewiſe, conſulting together for ſuch a Purpoſe, is an Overt Act of Treaſon. For it is the Imagination, the Compaſſing and Deſigning the Death of the King, that is the Treaſon. For the Law is very careful of the Perſon of the King, and hath fully provided for his Safety; and this Treaſon is the firſt Species mention'd in the Statute. But there is no Way of diſcovering thoſe Compaſſings or Imaginations, in order to puniſh a Traitor, but by ſome external Act, that may be ſufficient to manifeſt ſuch an Intention and Purpoſe; and that which is a ſufficient Manifeſtation of ſuch a Deſign, is another Overt Act: But there have been proved ſeveral Meetings, and Conſultations and Propoſals at thoſe Meetings, about the Ways and Methods for bringing about the Deſign of Aſſaſſination. And it was never yet doubted, but to meet and conſult how to kill the King, was an Overt Act of High Treaſon. Beſides, Mr. Charnock's endeavouring to engage Bertram in this Enterprize, and the Argument he uſed to perſuade him to it, that it was a means to reſtore the late King, and telling him it would anſwer his Expectation, is another Overt Act. And therefore, how far Mr. Charnock is Guilty of the Charge in the Indictment, you are to determine when you have well conſider'd the Nature of the Evidence, and what Anſwer Mr. Charnock hath made to it; which ſhall be open'd to you by and by.

Then, Gentlemen, concerning Mr. King, who is the next Man, he has theſe Witneſſes againſt him: Captain Porter ſays, that he was very frequently at the Meetings, and Conſultations, and that he came to him when he and Knightley were to view the Ground, and deſir'd to be one of them, and they went together, and did view the Ground; this was ſome Time before the 15th of February, in the ſame Week.

And you may alſo remember the Evidence given by Mr. De la Rue, That Mr. King told him about November or December, that a Major-General would come from France, and that Money was to be advanced; and that after Captain Porter and Mr. King told him, that the Major-General was come. On Friday the 7th of February, King ſaid he was to go out of Town with Knightley and Durant, to know whether the King went to Richmond or Hounſlow. Being inform'd the King had a Deſign to go to Hounſlow; and be return'd, on the Sunday following, Mr. King did ſay they had found out the rareſt Place, and the fitteſt that could be for that Purpoſe, within a quarter of a Mile of the King's Houſe at Richmond; and that there was to be an Ambuſcade, and asked the Witneſs whether he would be one in the Ambuſcade; but he liked it not, but had rather attack the Guards. He had been at the Dog-Tavern with Mr. King, and diſcourſing about this Undertaking, Mr. King the Priſoner had told this Witneſs, that ſeveral of the Guards were come from France, and that ſeveral Conferences were had about taking off the King; and he did not approve of Mr. Charnock, in regard he did not talk like a Soldier, and was for an eaſy Poſt without Danger; and as for Captain Porter, he had another Objection againſt him, he had as much Fat in his Brains as he had in his Body; and ſo the one wanted Skill, and the other Wit. But ſtill Mr. King owned his being concerned in the carrying on of this Deſign of Aſſaſſination: for after the Deſign of the Ambuſcade was diſapprov'd of, and agreed that the Guards ſhould be attacked, and the King in his Coach, at Turnham-Green; he by Diſcourſe with De la Rue, expreſſes his Conſent to it; beſides, he told Pendergraſs, who was to be one, and to have Porter's Gun to ſhoot the King, he hoped Pendergraſs would not be afraid to break the Glaſs Windows.

Mr. Keyes ſtands upon it, for his Part, that he was only a Servant to Captain Porter, and if he had done any Thing amiſs, it was no more than what his Maſter bid him do; and that he knew of no Deſign; and that it was a hard Thing that he ſhould be troubled in this Matter; for if a Maſter

Maſter ſend his Servant to buy Horſes or Arms, if he does not know how they are to be imployed, afterwards it doth appear they are to be imployed in Aſſaſſinating the King, that the Servant ſhould be puniſh'd for obeying his Maſter. But the Queſtion is, whether Keyes knew what the Deſign was: Captain Porter ſays he did know when he hired the Horſes, for what Purpoſe they were to be uſed. And he ſays further, that he was with them at many of the Conſults at the Globe-Tavern and other Places, where he did eat and drink with them, and was privy to the Deſign, and concerned in it.

Then, Gentlemen, by the other Evidence it is proved, that he was in Company ſeveral times when the Deſign was diſcourſed of, and that he was uſed as a Companion to Captain Porter, and uſed to ſit and eat and drink with him and the reſt of them at the ſame Table; and when they drank to the Reſtoration of the late King, and to the Squeezing of the rotten Orange, Keyes was there, and pledged the Health, which ſhews the Intention of the Man; and this was upon Saturday the 22d, and when News was brought that the Deſign was diſappointed by the King's not going abroad that Day, he went out, to get Intelligence, and brought in Word that the Guards were come home, and that all their Horſes were in a Foam, and the King's Coaches returned to the Mews; all which is Evidence that he knew of the Deſign and conſented to it. So that I muſt leave it to you upon the whole, though there be a great deal more Evidence than I have mentioned; you are the Judges how far it amounts to prove them Guilty.

But then, Gentlemen, as to what they ſay, that the Witneſſes do teſtify by Hearſay, that's not Evidence; but what they know themſelves, or heard from the Priſoners; and ſo Mr. Charnock inſiſts upon it, that what Mr. De la Rue ſays againſt him, is moſtly what Captain Porter told him, and therefore cannot make a Proof, by two: It is true, and therefore I did omit repeating a great Part of what De la Rue ſaid, becauſe as to him it was for the moſt part Hearſay: But whatſoever Evidence has been given of any Fact done within the Witneſs's own Knowledge, or of any Conſult or Diſcourſe of the Priſoners themſelves, that you are to take Notice of as good Evidence, and conſider of it.

But then there is another thing that is objected againſt the Evidence, and that is, as to the Fairneſs and Credibility of it, becauſe the Witneſſes, eſpecially Mr. Porter, by their own Acknowledgment, are involved in the ſame Crime, and therefore cannot be good Witneſſes againſt others. Now as to that Objection, I muſt tell you, firſt, that Priſoners under thoſe Circumſtances are good legal Witneſſes, but their Credits, as in all other Caſes, are left to your Conſideration. But, Secondly, as to the Weight of this Objection againſt their Credit, you may conſider that traiterous Conſpiracies are Deeds of Darkneſs as well as Wickedneſs, the Diſcovery whereof can properly come only from the Conſpirators themſelves; ſuch Evidence has always been allow'd as good Proof in all Ages; and they are the moſt proper Witneſſes, for otherwiſe 'tis hardly poſſible if not altogether impoſſible, to have a full Proof of ſuch ſecret Contrivances; ſuch Diſcoveries are to be encouraged in all Governments, without which there can be no Safety: And though Men have been guilty of ſuch heinous Offences, in being Partakers or Promoters in ſuch Deſigns, yet if they come in and repent, and give Teſtimonies thereof by diſcovering the Truth, great Credit ought to be given to them, for ſuch Evidence was ever accounted good. Beſides, as to two of them, De la Rue and Pendergraſs, which were the firſt that diſcovered, before they were apprehended, or ſuſpected themſelves to be in Danger, and therefore do not ſwear to ſave their own Lives, but reſolved upon it to ſave the Life of the King. And Mr. Pendergraſs had not any Deſign to be an Evidence, who, tho' he diſcover'd it almoſt as early as he knew it, yet refuſed to tell the Names, upon a Principle of Honour, till he had the King's Word that he ſhould not be preſs'd to come in as a Witneſs; and he tells you himſelf the Reaſon why he refuſed then, and why he comes in now, becauſe Captain Porter was his Friend, to whom he was obliged, and he never intended at firſt to diſcover his Name, nor afterwards to be Evidence againſt him; but upon Captain Porter's being taken, and diſcovering himſelf and his Witneſs, he thought the he was abſolved from all that Obligation, and therefore reſolved to appear as a Witneſs againſt the reſt: And this does not depend only upon the Credit of Pendergraſs, but alſo upon the Teſtimony of my Lord Portland, and my Lord Cutts, who have given you a full Account of the Manner of it.

And Mr. De la Rue tells you, That it was his Deſign at firſt, even a Year ago, if the Conſpiracy had ſo far proceeded, as to be ready to be put in Execution, he would have endeavoured to have prevented the Miſchief, by acquainting the King with it; and he gives you an Account how he revealed it to Brigadier Lewſon, and to my Lord Portland, and after to the King, which is confirmed by my Lord Portland; ſo that theſe are Witneſſes beyond all Exception, and if ſuch Evidence as this be not allowed to be good, the Government can never be ſecure againſt ſuch villainous Enterprizes and wicked Machinations.

Gentlemen, This is not trapanning, for it doth not appear by any Evidence, nor have I heard the Priſoners pretend that theſe Perſons did go about to ſeduce them into the Deſign, but indeed were endeavoured to be ſeduced into it themſelves; and though they kept them Company afterwards, yet it was only with a Purpoſe to acquaint themſelves with the real Intentions of theſe wicked Men, which is Lawful and Juſt in order to the making a full Diſcovery of their ſo dangerous a Villainy; and therefore they ought to receive all Countenance for doing ſo great a Service to the Government, without undergoing the Imputation of being Trapanners.

Gentlemen, there is no more occurs to me at preſent that is material to be obſerved or taken Notice of; I leave it to you, you have heard what the Witneſſes ſay againſt the Priſoners, you have heard what the Priſoners have ſaid for themſelves, you are the Judges of this Fact; if you are not ſatisfied that here has been ſufficient Evidence given to prove them Guilty, you will acquit them; but if you are ſatisfied, that upon the Evidence and all the Circumſtances of this Caſe, that they are Guilty, I ſuppoſe you will diſcharge your Conſciences, and give your Verdict accordingly.

Then

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of the Evidence, and in leſs than half an Hour returned, and found all the three Priſoners guilty of the High-Treaſon for which they were Indicted, and the Court adjourned 'till ſix a Clock that Evening.

Poſt Meridiem eodem Die.

ABout Seven a Clock the Lord Mayor, and the Common Serjeant, with as many of the Court as would make a Quorum, came upon the Bench, and by Proclamation in uſual Form, the Court was reſumed, and the Priſoners called to the Bar to their Judgment.

Cl. of Arraignments. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand (Which he did) You ſtand convicted of High Treaſon, for Conſpiring the Death of our Sovereign Lord the King by Aſſaſſination, What can you ſay for yourſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment upon you to die according to the Law?

The Jaylor firſt made him to kneel; and then, when he roſe up, he ſpoke as follows.

Charnock. Sir, I have a great deal to ſay, if I knew when was the proper Time to apply myſelf to the ſaying what I have to ſay.

Mr. Com. Serj. You are now called to, to know what you have to ſay.

Charnock. Sir, I would put this Queſtion, becauſe I am ignorant in Forms of Law, Whether it be practicable for me to ſay any thing before Judgment or not? For I have no Pardon to plead to hinder the Judgment; and therefore I would know, if it be practicable to ſay any thing before Judgment?

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes, Sir, it muſt be before Judgmenl; becauſe what you are called to, and asked now, is what you have to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment.

Char. I have many Things to ſay as to Obſervations I made out of the Indictment, and upon my Trial, if this be my Time to offer them.

Mr. C. Serj. Yes, Sir, it is your only Time.

Char. Then, Sir, I think the Fact is ill laid: We are indicted here for High Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, and no Overt Act is proved againſt me; I ſpeak for myſelf, I ſuppoſe theſe Gentlemen will ſpeak for themſelves.

Mr. C. Serj. At preſent you are the only Perſon that is asked the Queſtion; therefore pray go on, and ſay what you have to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment. You ſay the Indictment is ill laid, wherein is it ſo?

Char. I do find fault with the Indictment, becauſe it is laid for Aſſaſſinating the King; and all that is proved againſt me, was, That I was in Company where ſuch a Thing was diſcours'd of: Now I am adviſed, and my own Reaſon tells me, that being in Company is no Proof of my giving my Conſent to the Thing; and without my Conſenting, there can be no Overt Act to make me guilty of the Treaſon. It is ſaid, that I and my Accomplices, though there are none named but us Three, did meet together, and conſult of this Matter, and that we bought and provided Horſes and Arms: Which I take to be the only Overt Act. And of all theſe Things, there is not one Tittle proved; and therefore, with Submiſſion to the Court, the Indictment is naught in that reſpect. And this, I think, I may ſpeak, not only for my own Sake, but for the Sake of theſe Gentlemen that ſtand by me; if there be nothing proved againſt us of an Overt Act, as laid in the Indictment, we ought not to be condemned.

Mr. Com. Serj. Look you, Mr. Charnock, you move nothing againſt the Indictments, but only run into the Proof: That Matter is quite at an End, and we cannot enter into any Debate about it; you have had a fair and a legal Trial, and upon that Trial the Jury has found you Guilty.

Charnock. I have not had a fair, and an equal Trial, Sir.

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes, you have had both a fair and a legal, and an equal Trial.

Char. If you pleaſe to leave out the Word Legal, becauſe it perhaps may be according to the ſtrict Forms of Law: But I ſay it was not a fair and an equal Trial, becauſe in the laſt Act of Parliament, which was made for regulating Trials in Caſes of Treaſon, the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of a Priſoner's having that which was denied me, that is, a Copy of the Indictment, and Council, is laid down as the Ground and Reaſon of making the Act; and without that it had never been made: It is in the Preamble of the Act, which I have look'd upon ſince I went out of the Court; and though as to the Time of the Commencement, there is a certain Day prefix'd, yet the Equity of the Act is always the ſame, and that Equity I take myſelf to be intitled unto; and therefore being denied the Benefit of it, I think I had not an equal and a fair Trial.

Mr. Com. Serj. Sir, you have very unreaſonably objected this Matter of this Act of Parliament at your Arraignment, and upon your Trial, and now; but your Objection is of no Moment or Validity in the World: For the Act is to commence in futuro, and you are tried according to the Courſe of Common-Law before that Act can take Place; and it is the Common-Law only that this Court can proceed by, and you be tried by.

Char. Sir, I inſiſt not upon the Law itſelf, but only upon the Equity of it, and the Reaſonableneſs of the thing.

Mr. Com. Serj. Courts of Juſtice are to go according to Rules of Law, and that is equal that is according to thoſe Rules: I ſay again, Sir, you have had a fair, a legal, and an equal Trial, and have been treated with all the Candor and Temper, that I believe was ever ſhewn to any Perſons in your Condition.

Char. I had not Council allowed me to aſſiſt me.

Mr. C. Serj. The Law allows it you not; if it had, you ſhould have had it.

Char. Then my Council were ignorant People, to inſtruct and adviſe me, that by the Equity of this Act I ought to have it.

Mr. Com.

Mr. Com. Serj. It was never practicable before, nor can be, 'till the Time that this Act takes Place.

Char. Sir, I cannot argue with the Court in Matters of Law; but as to the Evidence, I ſay, it did not come up to the Indictment.

Mr. Com. Serj. If you have any thing to except againſt the Indictment, that is very proper for you to do, and if you will propoſe it, we will hear you.

Char. Sir, I find fault with the Indictment in ſeveral Particulars; all the Facts are laid in the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes, and there is not one Fact proved to be done there.

Mr. C. Serj. It is not material that the Facts ſhould be proved to be done in the particular Pariſh laid in the Indictment; it is ſufficient, if they be proved to be done in the County.

Char. There is not one Fact proved to be done in that Pariſh.

Mr. C. Serj. All that is againſt the Evidence, which we cannot at all take Notice of after the Verdict.

Char. I inſiſted upon ſeveral Things, whereby it was impoſſible that the Evidence could be true, and mentioned ſeveral Things, wherein the Indictment was erroneous, and the Evidence not conſiſtent with it, or at leaſt not of ſuch Validity as to affect me; all which Things, if I might have had Council to argue for me in Point of Law, (and I look upon it as a very great Hardſhip that it was denied me,) as likewiſe that my Lord Chief Juſtice over-rul'd what I offer'd about Trapanners, as I take theſe Witneſſes to be, out of Sir Robert Atkins's Book, and what I quoted out of my Lord Hales's Pleas of the Crown, and Coke's Inſtitutes.

Mr. C. Serj. Mr. Charnock, If you pleaſe to offer any Point of Law to the Court to ſtop Judgment, we are ready to hear it; but you ought not to reflect upon the Court.

Char. Where a Man is dying, ſure he may have Leave to take Notice of what Hardſhips he has lain under.

Mr. C. Serj. Pray, Sir, hear me; No Men that ever ſtood in your Place have had more Indulgence and Favour ſhew'd them, nor, I believe, ſo much neither. Thoſe of us that are here, and were at your Trial, do think you do very much amiſs, to make any Reflections upon the Court, after you were ſo fairly dealt with. If you have any thing that is material to offer in Arreſt of Judgment, pray let us hear it: But we muſt over-rule all Diſcourſes of this Nature, it is a vain ſort of Diſcourſe, and will be of no Uſe or Service to you at all.

Char. Truly, I know not what it is poſſible for me to urge which you will think to be material, if I cannot urge falſe Latin and Inconſiſtencies. There have been heretofore Arreſts of Judgment, and that muſt ſure have been upon ſome Error or other.

Mr. C. Serj. It is true, but you aſſign none; you abound in Words, but will not offer any thing that is fit for you to offer.

Char. Sir, I aſſign this particularly as an Error, and if it be not, I cannot tell what is: I am upon my laſt Legs, and ſtand here for my Life, and ought to be allowed all legal Advantages. One particular thing is this, Whether the Scene of the Fact being laid to be at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes there ought not to be Proof that ſuch Facts were done there; and if ſo, Whether it be not an Error, that there was no Proof of any one Fact done there? And then the next thing is, we are charged to have bought Horſes and Arms in the Indictment, and there was no Proof of any Horſes or Arms bought; I am ſure as to me there was not.

Mr. C. Serj. I told you before, all this is to no Purpoſe, you enter into the Evidence, which is Matter of Fact, which is all over, and we cannot enter into any Conſideration of it, therefore pray do not ſpend our Time; but if you have any thing that is an Objection to the Frame of the Indictment, let us hear it.

Char. Then I think that the Indictment is uncertain; it ſays, quadraginta Homines equeſtres aut circiter de ipſis Roberto Charnock, Edwardo King, & Thoma Keyes; this is either not true, or it is Nonſenſe: For if there be forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, that cannot be true, for they can't make forty; and if you take in the aliis Proditoribus ignotis, that will make it uncertain, and that Uncertainty will make the Indictment void.

Mr. C. Serj. I thought my Lord Chief Juſtice had ſatisfied you as to that Objection; you repeat but part of the Sentence: It is ſaid, de ipſis Roberto Charnock, & prædictis aliis Proditoribus ignotis, ac aliis, that is certain enough, I thought we ſhould have heard no more of that frivolous Objection, but you had been ſatisfied with the Judge's Anſwer to it.

Char. I am ſatisfied in Point of Fact that they conſtrued it ſo; but theſe are the Words of the Indictment as they were read to me.

Mr. C. Serj. You ſhall have the Words read to you again. Read them.

Cl. of Arraignments. Quod quadraginta Homines Equeſtres aut eo circiter de ipſis Roberto Charnock, Edwardo King, & Thoma, Keyes, & prædictis aliis Proditoribus ignotis, ac aliis.

Mr. C. Serj. You took but Part of the Sentence, or elſe you could never have made that Objection.

Char. Then, Sir, here is tunc & ibidem, what is that;

Mr. C. Serj. You can eaſily tell that ſure; it is then and there.

Char. What, ibidiem? What Word is that?

Mr. C. Serj. It is the beſt Word that could be uſed; what Word would you have had?

Char. Tunc & ibi, is then and there.

Mr. C. Serj. No, ibidem is a better Word, and is always uſed in our Pleadings at Law.

Char. Then I have only this in general to ſay; Whether it be poſſible for a Man that is ignorant in Forms of Law to defend himſelf without Council? I muſt deſire Council to look into the Indictment and to aſſiſt me.

Mr. C. Serj. That is what we cannot allow by Law, unleſs you offer ſomething that may be ſuch an Objection, as the Court ſhall think fit to have argued by Council.

Char. But how ſhall I that am ignorant in the Law, know how to offer you that which you will think fit to hear Council to?

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer any thing that you think is an Exception, and the Court will conſider of it; for I think it is my Duty, and every

Man's

Man's that has the Honour to ſit here by the King's Commiſſion, to lay as much Weight upon any Objection that the Priſoner does offer, as it will bear; but if nothing be offer'd that is of the leaſt Weight or Moment, we being to do our Duty equally between the King and the Priſoner, we cannot allow Council when there is nothing before us to allow it upon.

Char. You will not, it ſeems, let me have ſuch Aſſiſtance as I may offer you ſomething material.

Mr. C. Serj. You know well enough we cannot do it; pray do not ſpend our Time to no Purpoſe.

Char. Nay, Sir, if you be in haſte, I will not trouble you any longer.

Mr. C. Serj. You have no Reaſon to ſay we are in haſte; I am ſure you have had all the Indulgence and Patience that could be; you are at Liberty to offer any Thing that you can, but to ſpend the Time of the Court in bare Words is not reaſonable.

Char. The Law was never my Practice, Sir, nor Study: I perceive whatſoever I offer ſignifies nothing; therefore I beg your Pardon for the Trouble I have given you; I ſhall not attempt to offer any thing farther.

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer what you will, we will hear you.

Char. Sir, I perceive whatſoever I ſay is unacceptable, and ſo I had as good let it alone.

Mr. C. Serj. You ſhall be heard to ſay whatever you think is for your Intereſt to ſay.

Char. I thought theſe Things were for my Intereſt to offer; but I ſee it is to no Purpoſe; therefore I have no more to ſay; I have done.

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer what you will, and you ſhall be heard with all the Patience and Candour imaginable.

Char. I ſee it is impoſſible for me to offer any thing that the Court will think material; therefore it is in vain for me to ſpeak, and trouble my ſelf and the Court with what will be of no Uſe to me.

Cl. of Arraignments. Edward King, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) You ſtand convicted of the ſame High Treaſon; What can you ſay for yourſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment upon you to die according to Law?

(Then he was made to kneel, and riſe up again.)

King. What Mr. Charnock has ſaid, all of it I do imagine to be material; and ſince he is not to be heard, I have done; I can ſay no more.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Keyes, hold up your Hand; you are in the ſame Caſe with the Priſoner that went laſt before you: What can you ſay for yourſelf why the Court ſhould not give Judgment upon you to die according to the Law?

(He was made to kneel, and riſe again.)

Keyes. Sir, I have had no Council, nor no Aſſiſtance ſince I have been in Priſon.

Mr. C. Serj. That you alledged upon your Trial, and you were then told you might have had Council if you had thought fit; for you had an Order for it, and you come too late to offer any Thing of that Nature now. But the Queſtion that is now ask'd you is, what have you to ſay for yourſelf, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you?

Keyes. I was only a Servant.

Mr. C. Serj. You have been told that will not excuſe a Man in ſuch a Caſe.

Keyes. I cannot help it, Sir, I have done; I hope you will take care of my Wife and Children when I am gone.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, whilſt Judgment was in giving; which the common Serjeant, ſitting down upon the Bench, pronounced thus:

Mr. C. Serj. Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, the Priſoners at the Bar; You have been ſeverally indicted for High-Treaſon; you have pleaded not guilty, and put yourſelves, for your Trial, upon the Country, which Country have found you Guilty: You have had the Benefit of a fair, lawful, indifferent, and equal Trial, according to the Laws of this Land; thoſe very Laws, which you are charged in this Indictment to have conſpired to ſubvert. It is a Crime of the higheſt Nature that the Law knows: You are Gentlemen of liberal Education, and I hope this will bring you to ſome Reflection, both upon the State of your own Caſe, and the Blackneſs of your Offence, in the Time you have to live, which I fear is but ſhort: It is certainly the heinouſeſt Crime that any Perſons can be guilty of; the Murdering of a Prince in cold Blood, and involving your Country in Slaughter and Confuſion. I have nothing more to do, but to pronounce the Judgment that the Law has provided for ſuch Offenders, and which the Court doth award:

That you go from hence to the Place from whence you came; and that from thence you be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are ſeverally to be Hanged by the Neck, and cut down alive; your Bowels and Privy Members to be cut out from your Bodies, and to be Burnt in your View; your Heads to be cut off, your Bodies reſpectively to be divided into Four Parts; which Heads and Quarters are to be at the King's Diſpoſal: And God have Mercy upon your Souls.

Char. Sir, I deſire we may have the Favour to have our Friends and Relations come to us while we are in Priſon.

Mr. C. Serj. You ſhall have all the Liberty of your Friends and Relations coming to you, that you can reaſonably deſire.

Char. And I hope we ſhall have no hard Uſage in Priſon.

Mr. C. Serj. No, God forbid you ſhould; you may aſſure yourſelf you ſhall have none.

Then the Seſſions of Peace for London, and of Gaol-Delivery of Newgate for London and Middleſex, were adjourn'd unto Saturday the 21*ſt of* March following.

Accordingly on Wedneſday the 18th of March, 169⅘ they were all three drawn from Newgate to Tyburn on Sledges, were they deliver'd the following Papers to the Sheriff.

Mr. CHARNOCK's Paper.

THAT I might avoid Diſtractions, and be compos'd as much as is poſſible at the Time of my Execution, I thought it much more proper to communicate this to the Sheriffs, than to give myſelf the Uneaſineſs of ſpeaking, leaving it to them to publiſh (if they ſhould think convenient) for the Satisfaction of the World; and in what I have to ſay, I have taken as much Care as I could to be ſhort, that I might not loſe time in my greateſt Concern.

As concerning an Invaſion intended by King James upon England, there was certain Intelligence of it from abroad, I preſume every Body was ſatisfy'd, and to the facilitating of which, I own that myſelf and ſome others did agree upon the Undertaking to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards, for which I am now to ſuffer; but I think myſelf obliged, by all the Ties imaginable, both of Conſcience and Honour, to declare, that as for any Order or Commiſſion of King James's, for aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange, I never ſaw nor knew of any, but have had frequent Aſſurances of his having rejected ſuch Propoſals when they have been offer'd.

I confeſs, I did hear that there was a Commiſſion arrived for levying of War; and which was natural to believe, if the King was in ſuch a Readineſs to come over as was reported; but if there was any ſuch Authority as that, I declare I never ſaw it.

As to what regards the Body of the Roman Catholicks, I muſt do them this Juſtice, and which I dare be poſitive in, that they had no manner of Knowledge of this Deſign; nor do I believe it was communicated to any other Party of ſuch as are reputed the King's Friends, but carried on merely by a ſmall Number, without the Advice, Conſent or Privity, of any Parties whatſoever.

I ask Forgiveneſs of all the World for what Offences or Injuries I have done to them; and I am (I bleſs Almighty God) in perfect Charity with all Mankind.

ROBERT CHARNOCK.

Mr. KING's Paper.

I Am now, within a few Moments of Eternity, brought to this Place by the juſt Hand of God, in Puniſhment of all my Crimes, but particularly of that of which I have been lately arraign'd, and for which I ſtand here condemned; but I hope that Goodneſs of God, which has given me a Senſe of my Wickedneſs, will accept my Repentance, and ſhew Mercy on me; which I hope to obtain, through the Paſſion and Merits of my Redeemer, upon whom I entirely caſt myſelf.

And that I may find his Mercy, I think myſelf obliged to do Juſtice to my Neighbour, that ſo none may ſuffer wrongfully on my Account. And, therefore, as I am ſoon to anſwer the Truth of what I ſay before the Tribunal of God, Firſt, I declare, that I never ſaw any Order or Commiſſion for King James's promoting the Aſſaſſination, for which I am condemned; neither do I know of any ſuch Order or Commiſſion.

Secondly, That this Deſign was not undertaken with any general Knowledge or Approbation of any Body of Men, either Catholick or Proteſtant.

Laſtly, That I did not engage in it on Preſumption of any King-killing Principles that could juſtify ſuch an Undertaking, but was drawn into it by my own Raſhneſs and Paſſion; for which, and all other Sins, I heartily beſeech God to forgive me.

And I hope, that ſuch who think the Misfortune of their Impriſonment or Trouble is derived from my having been engag'd in this Enterprize, or ſuch to whom it has any ways given Scandal, that they will admit me to their Pardon, as I freely and heartily forgive all Mankind. In this Diſpoſition of a ſincere Repentance, and true Charity, I commend my Soul into the Hands of God, and hope to find Mercy from him. And for this I beg all your Prayers.

EDWARD KING.

Mr. KEYES's Paper.

I Am going to appear before the living God; I truſt in his Mercy that he will forgive all my Sins committed to this laſt Moment of my Life. God is juſt in all his Judgments, and I accept of this Death as the Puniſhment of my Iniquities. I forgive all my Enemies, and hope, through a hearty Repentance, and the Merits of my Saviour to obtain Mercy.

Have Mercy on me, O Father of Mercy, and thro' thy only Son forgive me all my Sins.

THOMAS KEYES.

After which they were executed as Traitors, and their Quarters expos'd about the City.

CLIV. The Trial of Sir JOHN FREIND, Knight, at the Old-Baily, for High Treaſon, March 23. 1695. 8 WILL. III.

Monday, March 23. 1695.

At the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, this Day came on the Trial of Sir John Freind, Knight, for High Treaſon, upon an Indictment found by the Grand Jury for the City of London, upon the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, on Saturday the 21ſt Inſtant.

Clerk of Arraignments.

CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez, All Manner of Perſons that have any thing more to do at this general Seſſions of the Peace, Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London, and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middleſex, adjourned over to this Day; Draw near, and give your Attendance, for now they will proceed to the Pleas of the Crown for the ſaid City, and County; and God ſave King William.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation again.

Cryer. Oyez, You good Men of the City of London, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that is to be at the Bar; anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called every Man at the firſt Call, upon Pain and Peril that will fall thereon.

Then the Petty Jury were all called over, and the Appearances of thoſe that anſwered to the Call were recorded.

About Ten a Clock the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, Mr. Juſtice Nevill, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby, came into the Court; and there being a great Confluence of the Nobility and Gentry there preſent, the Priſoner was order'd to be brought to the Bar: Which was done accordingly.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand.

Freind. My Lord, I humbly move that I may have one William Courtney (who is to be a principal Witneſs for me at my Trial, and is now a Priſoner in the Gatehouſe) ſent for.

* Sir John Holt. * L. C. Juſt. Is he your Witneſs, Sir John?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, William Courtney is his Name.

L. C. J. Sir John, why did not you ſend, and deſire this before?

Freind. My Lord, I did not hear of him while laſt Night; and I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, that you will pleaſe to let him be ſent for.

The Judges conſulted among themſelves.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John Freind, I'll tell, if you'll appoint your Agent to come hither, you ſhall have an Habeas Corpus ad teſtificandum: But indeed you might have ſent this Morning, and then the Writ might have been got ready.

Freind. My Lord, I did not know ſo much; for it was laſt Night before I underſtood that he was to be a Witneſs.

L. C. J. You might have ſent laſt Night, or this Morning, and you ſhould have had a Warrant for the Writ.

Freind. I aſſure your Lordſhip, I did not know ſo much.

L. C. J. Well, ſend your Agent, or your Sollicitor, and you ſhall have a Warrant for the Writ.

Freind. I beſeech your Lordſhip, that he may be ſent for, and that the Meſſenger may make haſte.

L. C. J. Let your Sollicitor come to my Clerk, and he ſhall have it.

Freind. My Lord, if you pleaſe to give a Rule of Court for it, I ſuppoſe it may he done preſently.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir John, it muſt be by Writ, the Keeper of the Gatehouſe elſe cannot bring him.

Fr. My Lord, that will be a long time before it can be done, I deſire nothing but that I may have him here to give his Evidence for me.

L. C. J. It will be got ready preſently; I believe he will be here Time enough for you to make uſe of his Teſtimony.

Fr. But, my Lord, ſuppoſe he ſhould not be here: It would be a great Hindrance to me, and a greater Injury to my Trial.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir John, you need not fear any thing of that Nature, we are not in ſuch Haſte; we will not ſpur you on: But the Warrant ſhall be made; and do you make what Haſte you can to get the Writ, and your Witneſs brought.

The Lord Chief Juſtice gave order to Mr. Maſon his Clerk, to prepare a Warrant for an Habeas Corpus, directed for the Keeper of the Gatehouſe, to bring William Courtney immediately hither to give Evidence.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

You ſtand indicted in London by the Name of Sir John Freind, late of London, Kt. for that, Whereas there had been for a long time, and yet is, an open, and notoriouſly publick, and moſt ſharp, and cruel War by Land, and by Sea, had, carried on, and proſecuted by Lewis the French King, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. All which time the ſaid Lewis the French King, and his Subjects were, and yet are Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and his Subjects. You the ſaid Sir John Freind, a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, of this Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premiſes, not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traitor againſt the ſaid moſt Serene, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our ſaid Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, &c. your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord; the cordial Love, and the true, and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and intending utterly to extinguiſh, and contriving, and with all your Strength, purpoſing, deſigning, and endeavouring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is of Right, duly, happily, and very well Eſtabliſhed, altogether to Subvert, Change, and Alter, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery to the aforeſaid French King to ſubdue and bring, the firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well as before as after, at London, in the Pariſh of St. Peter Cornhill, in the Ward of Lime-ſtreet, falſly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe, and intend our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, and Lawful Sovereign Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Command, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depoſe, caſt down, and utterly to deprive; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put, and bring, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, by his Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, overcome, and ſubdue, to move, incite, procure, and help, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Faithful Subjects of him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cauſe; and that you the ſaid Sir John Freind to the aforeſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, then, and there during the War aforeſaid, Traiterouſly were adhering and aſſiſting; and the ſame your moſt impious, wicked and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Intentions, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect; and in Proſecution, Performance, and Execution of that traiterous Adheſion, you the ſaid Sir John Freind, as ſuch a falſe Traitor, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, and divers other Days, and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in London aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, &c. with one Robert Charnock (late of High-Treaſon, in contriving, and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted) and with divers other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree to procure from the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then and yet Enemies of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, great Numbers of Soldiers and armed Men this Kingdom of England to invade and fight with, and to levy, procure, and prepare great Numbers of armed Men, and Troops and Legions againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to riſe up and be formed, and with thoſe Enemies at and upon ſuch their Invaſion and Entry into this Kingdom of England, to join and unite, Rebellion and War againſt him our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and wage, him our ſaid Lord the King ſo as aforeſaid to depoſe, and him to kill and murder; and moreover with the ſaid falſe Traitors, the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London, aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, Traiterouſly you did conſult, conſent, and agree to ſend the aforeſaid Robert Charnock as a Meſſenger from you the ſaid Sir John Freind, and the ſame other Traitors unknown, unto and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, unto James the Second, late King of England, to propoſe to him, and deſire of him to obtain of the aforeſaid French King, the Soldiers and armed Men aforeſaid, for the Invaſion aforeſaid to be made; and Intelligence and Notice of ſuch their traiterous Intentions, and Adheſions, and all the Premiſes unto the ſaid late King James the Second, and the ſaid other Enemies and their Adherents, to give and exhibit; and them to inform of other particular Things and Circumſtances thereunto relating; as alſo Intelligence from them of the ſaid intended Invaſion, and other Things and Circumſtances concerning the Premiſes, to receive, and the ſame to you the ſaid Sir John Freind, and the ſaid other Traitors in this Kingdom of England, to ſignify, report and declare, in Aſſiſtance, Animation, and Aid of the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, in the War aforeſaid, and to incite and procure thoſe Enemies the more readily and boldly to invade this Kingdom of England; and the Treaſons and traiterous Contrivances, Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes of you the ſaid Sir John Freind aforeſaid, to perfect and fulfil, and all the Premiſes the ſooner to execute, manage and perform, you the ſaid Sir John Freind, during the War aforeſaid, ſo as aforeſaid continued, to wit, the ſame firſt Day of July, in the aboveſaid ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſly and traiterouſly did procure and obtain to your ſelf, and did receive and accept of a certain Commiſſion or Writing purporting itſelf to be a Commiſſion, under and from the aforeſaid James the Second, late King of England, to conſtitute you the ſaid Sir John Freind to be a Collonel of Horſe in the Army by you and the other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, within this Kingdom of England to be levied and formed; and in purſuance of the ſaid pretended Commiſſion by you the ſaid Sir John Freind ſo obtained and accepted of and your Treaſons and all your traiterous Intentions aforeſaid, the ſooner to execute, perform, fulfil, and perfect, you the ſaid Sir John Freind afterwards, to wit the ſame firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, Falſly, Maliciouſly, Adviſedly, Secretly, and Traiterouſly, divers Soldiers, and armed Men, and ready to be armed, with Force and Arms, &c. to raiſe, and Liſt, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to make and wage; and to and with the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, Foreigners and Strangers, Subjects and Soldiers of the ſaid Lewis the French King, being about to invade this Kingdom of England, at and upon their Invaſion and Entry into this ſame Kingdom, then ſhortly expected to be made, themſelves together with you the ſaid Sir John Freind to join and unite, and in Troops and Legions to form, did raiſe, liſt, and retain, and did procure to be raiſed, liſted, and retained; And divers Sums of Money, in and about the raiſing, liſting, and retaining of the aforeſaid Soldiers, and Men armed, and ready to be armed upon the Account aforeſaid, upon the aforeſaid firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, did give and pay, and cauſe to be paid; and thoſe Soldiers and Men, for the Treaſons, Intentions, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, then and there, and long after you had in readineſs. As alſo the ſame firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Carbines, Piſtols, Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlick Things, and military Inſtruments, falſly, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly you did obtain, buy, gather, and procure, and cauſe to be bought, gathered, obtained and procured, and in your Cuſtody had and detained, to that Intent to uſe the ſame in the ſaid Invaſion, War and Rebellion, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, Him our ſaid Lord the King of and from the Regal State, Crown and Command of this Kingdom of England to depoſe, caſt down and deprive, and him to kill and murder, and all the Treaſons, Intentions, Contrivances and Purpoſes of you the ſaid Sir John Freind, as aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and fully to bring to effect; againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity; as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided.

What ſay'ſt thou, Sir John Freind, Art thou guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Friend. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Friend. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Freind. I don't know any thing of it, I am as Innocent as the Child unborn.

The Warrant for the Habeas Corpus was ſigned by the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, and delivered to the Priſoner, who ſent it away to the Crown-Office by his Sollicitor, to get the Writ ſealed.

Freind. My Lord, I have ſomething to move, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to hear me, and the reſt of my Lords the Judges; That if any Matter of Law doth ariſe upon my Trial, I may be heard by my Council, that you may not deſtroy me without Law.

L. C. Juſt. Look you, Sir John Freind, if any Matter of Law do ariſe at your Trial, and you will tell us what that Matter of Law is, and the Court ſee that it is a Matter of Doubt, we can, and ought, and no queſtion ſhall aſſign you Council; but that is time enough when ſuch Matter does ariſe.

Freind. My Lord, It is well known to your Lordſhip, and all the Court, that I am not a Lawyer; but, I hope, as you are of Council for the King as Judges of Law, ſo you will be of Council for me; for I am not a Lawyer, and cannot know whether any Matter that ariſes be Law or no; and therefore I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to be ſo juſt and kind, as to tell me whether it be Law or not Law, and I ſubmit myſelf to your Lordſhip's Direction.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, We are bound to tell you when any thing of that Nature appears before us, and to let you have all the Benefit of the Law that poſſibly you can have; for we are obliged to be indifferent between the King and you.

Freind. My Lord, I don't queſtion it. I deſire alſo I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. Juſt. Yes, yes, by all means.

(And he had them.)

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez: You good Men of the City of London, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that is at the Bar, who have been called, and made Default, anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Iſſues.

Then the Defaulters were call'd over.

Cl. of Arr. You the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that you ſhall hear call'd, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Cryer. Call Thomas Clark.

Freind. Pray, Sir, how many may I challenge?

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John, you may challenge, that is, except againſt 35, without ſhewing any Cauſe: If you don't like them to be of the Jury, you may refuſe them; and as many others, as you have Cauſe to except againſt.

Fr. My Lord, I humbly beſeech you, that becauſe perhaps I may miſtake in numbering, that I may have timely Notice before the 35 be excepted againſt, or elſe it may occaſion me a great deal of Prejudice.

L. C. J. Sir, the Clerk ſhall take care of that, he ſhall inform you how many you challenge, and you ſhall receive no Prejudice of that Kind, or by any Slip in Point of Form.

Cl. of Ar.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, call Thomas Clark.
(Who appeared.)

Fr. Pray, Sir, muſt I not ſee the Gentleman?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all Means.
(He was ſhewn to him.)

Fr. You may ſwear Mr. Clark; I do not except againſt him. I deſire but honeſt Gentlemen, and I ſhall come off I warrant you: I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

L. C. J. Swear Mr. Clark.

Cl. of Ar. Hold him the Book; (which was done) look upon the Priſoner; You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Nathan Green.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Emms.

Fr. I accept of him for a Juryman, I have nothing to object againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Francis Byer.

Fr. Pray let me ſee him (he was ſhewn to him) I do except againſt him, I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Dry.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. James Demew.

Fr. I accept him, I have nothing to ſay againſt him, I would have him to be a Juryman.

Mr. Demew. My Lord, I am not a Freeholder.

L. C. J. Sir John, do you challenge him peremptorily, or do you challenge him for Cauſe?

Fr. My Lord, I do not challenge him at all, I accept of him.

* Sir Thomas Trevor.

* Mr. Att. Gen. If he have no Freehold, we that are for the King will except againſt him; for I would not have any Body that is not a Freeholder ſerve upon the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Henry Hunter.

Fr. Pray, my Lord, is this Gentleman that was called before laid aſide? He is not one that I challenge.

L. C. J. No, no, he is challeng'd by the King's Council, as no Freeholder.

Fr. Then he is only ſet aſide, I ſuppoſe; I ſpeak it for this Reaſon I would not be miſtaken in my Number.

L. C. J. Care ſhall be taken of all that, he is not to be reckoned as one that you challenged, he is challenged for want of Freehold by the King's Council.

Cl. of Ar. What ſay you to Mr. Hunter?

Fr. I accept of Mr. Hunter, let him be ſwore.
(Which was done.)

Cl. of Ar. John Cox.

Mr. Cox. My Lord, I have no Freehold in London.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then let him be ſet aſide.

Cl. of Ar. George Bodington.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. John Hedges.

Fr. I except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. You challenge him, Sir, do you?

Fr. Yes, yes, I do.

Cl. of Ar. John James.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Poole.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Peter Parker.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. George Grove.

Fr. I except againſt him, for I have him not in my Pannel.

L. C. J. How comes that?

Fr. I can't tell, my Lord, I have been kept alone while Saturday laſt, only that worthy Gentleman (bowing to Mr. Baker, the Proſecutor for the King) was with me to give me Notice of my Trial before.

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Wyerſdale.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Blewitt.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolfe.

Fr. Sir, I do aſſure you I have him not in my Pannel, upon my Word. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Jackſon.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Long.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Richard Chiſwell.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. George Child.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. William Walker.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Wills.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Hibbert.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Pettit.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Robinſon.

Fr. Sir, he is not in my Pannel upon my Word.

Cl. of Ar. He is in the Original Pannel.

Mr. Sheriff Buckingham. My Lord, here is the Original Pannel, and here's his Name here; and there is not a Perſon in this Pannel, but what was originally put in, except it be about five or ſix at the End, and this is none of them.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Hollis. [He did not appear.]

L. C. J. Pray, Sir John, who had you that Copy from? Who gave it you?

Fr. My Sollicitor.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, he had none from me I am ſure: I received the Pannel from the Sheriff, but no Body, from Sir John, was ever with me for a Copy.

Fr. My Lord, my Sollicitor brought it to me on Saturday Night.

L. C. J. Who is your Sollicitor, that gave you that Copy?

Fr. His Name is Mr. Burleigh, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is he? Let's ſee this Mr. Burleigh.

Fr. My Lord, he is gone to the Crown Office it ſeems, for the Habeas Corpus.

Mr. Juſtice Rokeby. It is your own Sollicitor that has put the Abuſe on you, if it be ſo.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Hollis. (He did not appear.)

L. C. J. Pray, Sir John Freind, how many have you in all?

Fr. In Number, my Lord? would you have me tell you how many I have in Number?

L. C. J. Aye, in Number in your Copy of the Pannel.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. In the Pannel there are above Fourſcore.

Fr. I have Seventy one, my Lord.
[Then Thomas Hollis appeared.]

Cl. of Ar. Do you challenge him, Sir?

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. Pray let the Secondary produce his Pannel that he had from my Brother and me, and I am ſure the Court will find they were all named in that Pannel.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, I have the Pannel, but they never came to me for a Copy, as I expected: I had got one ready; if Sir John Freind, or any Perſon for him, had ſent to me, they might have had it.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. And theſe People that are not in Sir John Freind's Pannel, are none of the half Dozen that were added, when we came to the Knowledge of them, that they were Freeholders.

L. C. J. When were they added, Sir?

Mr. Sh. Buck. They were added on Friday in the Afternoon, and it ſeems he never came for the Pannel to the proper Officer, and thoſe that he objects againſt were not added, but are in the original Pannel.

L. C. J. Truly I can't ſee any Body is to blame in this Matter but your own Sollicitor.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, I aſſure you I had made a Copy, and wondered I did not hear of them: I do not know where he got this Copy.

L. C. J. Treby. In Truth if you would not ſend to the proper Officer for a Copy, when you might have had it, you muſt be content with what you have; for no Body is bound to give you a Copy unleſs you ask for it.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to Thomas Hollis?

Fr. I challenge him, my Lord, for he is not in my Pannel.

Cl. of Ar. John Sherbrook.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. James Blackwell.

Fr. He is not in my Pannel, upon my Word, my Lord.

L. C. J. I can't help it, he is in the Sheriff's Pannel that is returned here.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Gardner.

Fr. I accept of him.

Mr. Gardner. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in the City.

Mr. Juſtice Rokeby. Mr. Gardner, have you not lately conveyed away your Freehold?

Mr. Gard. No, indeed, my Lord, I never had any.

Cl. of Ar. William Prince.

Fr. I accept of him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Simons.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Robert White.

Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Joſeph Morewood.

Fr. I accept him; his Name is John I ſuppoſe, for ſo it is in my Pannel.

Cl. of Ar. No, it is Joſeph.

Mr. Morewood. My Name is Joſeph.

Fr. Well, Sir I accept of you, I don't queſtion but you are an honeſt Man. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, countez. Thomas Clark.

Cryer. One, &c. (So of the reſt to the laſt.)

Cl. of Ar. Joſeph Morewood.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Jury were theſe.

Thomas Clark,	Nathaniel Long,
Thomas Emms,	George Child,
Henry Hunter,	William Walker,
Thomas Poole,	John Sherbrook,
Peter Parker,	William Prince, and
Samuel Jackſon,	Joſeph Morewood.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of the High-Treaſon whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance; and all Jury-men of London, that have been called, and have appeared, and are not ſworn, may depart the Court.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge: He ſtands indicted by the Name of Sir John Freind, late of London, Knight, (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis.) And againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereupon hath pleaded Not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God, and the Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, Whether he be Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince; if you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire if he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment of High-Treaſon, that is brought againſt Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar, for aſſociating with, and aiding the King's Enemies, with a Deſign to procure an Invaſion from France, and to raiſe a Rebellion within this Kingdom, and this was to depoſe the King, and to reſtore the late King James; and in order to the effecting theſe his wicked Purpoſes, the Indictment ſets forth, That the firſt of July laſt, he did meet, and conſult, and agree with one Mr. Charnock (a Gentleman ſince tried, convicted and attainted of High-Treaſon) how they ſhould procure an Army from France, to come and invade this Kingdom: And ſhould raiſe a ſufficient Number of Men, to facilitate the Landing of the French; and the Indictment particularly charges the Priſoner at the Bar, with ſending Mr. Charnock into France, to the late King James, to acquaint him with the Deſign, and to deſire him to procure a great Number of Forces from the French King, to come here, and land within this Kingdom: And the Indictment does likewiſe charge him with procuring and receiving a Commiſſion from the late King James to conſtitute him, the Priſoner at the Bar, a Colonel of Horſe; and likewiſe with laying out, and expending, and paying ſeveral Sums of Money in liſting and keeping Soldiers and Men in pay under him, which were to be in his Regiment; and with laying out ſeveral Sums of Money in buying Arms and Horſes for this Invaſion and Rebellion that was thus deſigned to be made, and raiſed within in this Kingdom. To this, Gentlemen, he has pleaded Not Guilty; we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove the Fact, and we do not doubt but you will find him ſo.

Freind. Prove this if you can; it cannot be.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon, in compaſſing, and imagining the Death of the King, and likewiſe in adhering to the King's Enemies.

Gentlemen, the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment to prove this Treaſon, are theſe:

That the Priſoner at the Bar did accept a Commiſſion from the late King James, to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe in this Kingdom, in order to join with the French, when they invaded it; and there were ſeveral Meetings, and Conſultations between him, and ſeveral others whom you will hear named by the Witneſſes, upon which it was reſolved to ſend a Meſſenger, one Charnock into France, to deſire the late King James to prevail with the French King to get a Number of Men, in all 10000, with an Aſſurance, that they would aſſiſt him with a Number of Horſe when he came: And in Purſuance of this Deſign, the Priſoner at the Bar did raiſe Men, and pay ſome Sums of Money for their Subſiſtence, and liſted, and had them in Readineſs; and provided Horſes and Arms. Theſe are the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment; the Evidence that will be produc'd to you, to prove this Treaſon, and theſe Overt Acts, will be in this Manner.

Gentlemen, you will ſee by the Evidence, that there has been a Deſign and Conſpiracy on Foot for ſeveral Years, to aſſaſſinate the King's Perſon, and to have an Invaſion from France at that Time, by armed Force here to ſubdue this Kingdom. The Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, I think about two Years ago had a Commiſſion ſent him from the late King James, to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe: There was ſeveral other Commiſſions ſent likewiſe, but one was ſent to the Priſoner, which he accepted of; and in Purſuance of it, he appointed ſeveral Officers, and liſted ſeveral Men for that Purpoſe, and expended ſeveral Sums of Money for the raiſing, and ſubſiſting of them.

Gentlemen, you will hear that his Lieutenant-Colonel was to be one Blaire, and his Major was to be one Slater; and this Slater's Father was a Clergyman, and he undertook to bring in a Troop of Clergymen that had refuſed to take the Oaths. One of his Captains was one Evans; one Richardſon was another; and there were ſeveral other Officers whom you will hear named by the Witneſſes, that were appointed, and ingag'd to make up the Regiment.

Gentlemen, you will hear further by the Witneſſes, that about May or June laſt, they having raiſed a conſiderable Number of Men, there were ſeveral Meetings had between the Priſoner at the Bar, and ſeveral other Perſons, in order to ſend ſome Perſon over to get Forces from France, to invade this Kingdom. The firſt Meeting, that you will hear of, was at the Old King's-Head Tavern in Leadenhall-Street, and there were preſent the Priſoner at the Bar, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, (who was lately condemned and executed for the Deſign of murdering the King) Mr. Porter, and one Cook. At that Meeting you will hear what their Debates were, and what their Reſolutions: After ſeveral Debates, who they ſhould ſend, they reſolved to ſend Mr. Charnock, to go into France, to deſire the late King James to get 10000 Men of the French Troops, to land upon our Coaſts about 8000 Foot and the reſt Horſe and Dragoons: And they did impower him in their Names, to aſſure the late King James, that they would, whenever he landed with his French Troops, be ready to aſſiſt him with near Two thouſand Horſe among them.

Upon this, Gentlemen, Mr. Charnock undertook to go upon this Meſſage: But about a Week after they met again, for he was unwilling to go upon ſuch an Errand, without having a full Reſolution and Aſſurance from theſe Gentlemen that were thus engaged, that he might ſatisfy the late King what they would certainly do. So they met again about a Week after, and that was at a Tavern in St. James's-Street, near Sir John Fenwick's Lodgings, one Mrs. Montjoy's; there was the Priſoner at the Bar, my Lord of Aylesbury, and moſt of the ſame Company that were at the Meeting before: And Mr. Charnock deſired to know, if they did agree to what had been propoſed and reſolv'd on before; for he was unwilling, and did not care to go without a full Aſſurance of the Performance. They did all agree, and deſired that he would go with all Speed, and that he ſhould aſſure King James, they would be ready to meet him, if they had Notice where he would land.

Pray, Gentlemen, obſerve the Time when theſe Meetings were. It was in May or June laſt, ſoon after the King was gone to Flanders; and they thought this a fit Opportunity, when the King's Forces were drawn out of England into Flanders, for carrying on the Campaign, then was the proper Time, according as they diſcourſed the Matter, the People being as they ſaid, generall diſſatisfied, and but few Forces in England to oppoſe them.

Mr. Charnock accordingly went over into France, and about a Month after return'd again, and acquainted them that he had told King James their Reſolution, and how they would aſſiſt him, and what they deſired of him, and, in Short, had delivered his Meſſage: But what King James told him, he thank'd them very much for their Kindneſs and Readineſs to aſſiſt him; but at that Time the French King could not ſpare any Forces, nor could it be all that Summer, and ſo there was nothing to be done; and thereupon it reſted 'till the laſt Winter.

Then, Gentlemen, you will hear, that the laſt Winter the Deſign was renewed again, about January laſt: For Sir George Barcley came over from the late King, being a Lieutenant in his Guards there, and then they entered into a Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate the King; and that was to be done firſt, to facilitate the Invaſion, which was to follow immediately upon the Execution of the Aſſaſſination: For they thought they could have no Aſſurance of Succeſs in their Invaſion, as long as the King lived; and I hope every one will take Notice, how precious that Life is to us, when it is ſo apparent to all the World, that our Enemies cannot hope for

for any Succeſs to their Enterprizes and Deſigns to deſtroy us, but by taking that Life away.

Gentlemen, this very Conſpiracy, you will hear the Priſoner at the Bar was acquainted with, and privy to, even this Aſſaſſination; tho' indeed you will hear he did not much approve of it, becauſe he thought it would be a Diſſervice to the late King's Affairs; but he was at ſeveral Meetings with Mr. Porter, and Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Perkins, and ſeveral others that were Conſpirators in that Deſign, and was acquainted with it, as you will hear by the Evidence.

Gentlemen, you will hear further, that about January laſt, the Invaſion being intended to be quickly made, the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, had frequent Meetings with Blair, that was Lieutenant-Colonel, and other Officers, to conſider and prepare how to be in a Readineſs. About that Time the Priſoner at the Bar, Captain Blair, and one Captain Ridley, met at a Place in Exchange-Alley, and there they diſcourſed among one another; and there Ridley ſaid, there was a conſiderable Roman-Catholick that was ſent to King James, and he would bring the laſt Orders; and Sir John Freind ſaid he knew of it very well, it was ſo, and he hoped he ſhou'd have them brought very quickly.

At another Time, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Blair his Lieutenant-Colonel, met at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe, and the Priſoner took him up in his Coach, and carried him along with him, and there they had a great Diſcourſe of the Affairs of the Regiment. The Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, told Blair they muſt be very good Husbands of their Money: For if the Invaſion ſhould miſcarry, he ſhould not have Money enough to carry on his Trade, but he would take Care about ſome Officers that had not Money to mount themſelves; but a great many were to prepare for themſelves at their own Charges, and for thoſe that were to be under them. They had likewiſe then ſome Diſcourſe about the Thoulon Fleet coming about, and that he thought it not adviſeable 'till the Thoulon Fleet came round. He ſaid he would not put a Foot in the Stirrup 'till that were done; and that he would keep out of the Way 'till all was in a Readineſs, and adviſed Captain Blair to do ſo too.

Gentlemen, you will find it further proved, that about May laſt, the Priſoner at the Bar paid 20 l. to this Captain Blair, who had laid out Monies in the Affairs of the Regiment, and this was to reimburſe him what he had ſo laid out; and it was in this Manner: You have all heard, I ſuppoſe, of one Colonel Parker, who being taken upon his coming over from France, was a Priſoner in the Tower, but made his Eſcape from thence, to which Eſcape the Priſoner at the Bar was privy. This Eſcape coſt 300 l. as you will hear, and the Priſoner laid down 100 l. of it. But this was to be repay'd him again: But how was it? There was one Johnſon a Prieſt, a Conſpirator likewiſe in this Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, and he undertook and promiſed, that the late King ſhould pay this 100 l. And accordingly one Piggott went over into France, and had this 100 l. paid him by King James, to repay it to Sir John Freind: But he thought fit to keep the Money, and Sir John Freind cou'd not get it of him, and he durſt not ask it, becauſe he knew the Conſideration was not fit to be made publick. But he told Captain Blair, I cannot pay you the Money out of my own Pocket; but Piggott ought to pay me, who has receiv'd this Money of mine. If you will prevail with Johnſon, who got this Money from the late King to be paid to Piggott, to perſuade Piggott to pay 20 l. I will allow it in Part of the Money he is to pay me, and you ſhall have it. Captain Blair did prevail with Johnſon to perſuade Piggott to pay this 20 l. and Captain Blair did receive it, and Sir John Freind did agree to allow it to Piggott out of the 100 l. due to him.

Gentlemen, at another Time, about Chriſtmas laſt, there was another 20 l. paid by Sir John Freind's Order and Direction, by Piggott to Blair upon the ſame Account, by the Mediation of Johnſon the Prieſt; and this was paid and allow'd, as being laid out in the Affairs of the Regiment before, he being intruſted as Lieutenant Colonel, to look after the Regiment.

Gentlemen, I have now open'd the Subſtance of the Evidence; the Particulars you will hear from the Witneſſes themſelves. If I have open'd it amiſs, you will take Care, when the Witneſſes are produced, to obſerve what they ſay, who will tell you what really was done, and will rectify any Miſtake of mine: For I would have no ſuch Miſtake do the Priſoner at the Bar any Prejudice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. [Sir John Hawles.] Gentlemen, Mr. Attorney has open'd the Nature and Courſe of our Evidence ſo fully, that I ſhall make no Repetition of any of the Particulars; but call our Witneſſes and prove it in Order as it hath been open'd. And firſt, we call Captain George Porter.

(Who came in.)

Freind. My Lord, before Mr. Porter is ſworn, I deſire to know whether he is a Roman Catholick, or a Proteſtant?

L. C. J. Why do you deſire that? Is not a Roman Catholick a Witneſs? Though he be a Roman Catholick, that's no Objection to his being a Witneſs.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire to ask him the Queſtion, whether he be a Roman Catholick or no?

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, it is not a proper Queſtion.

Freind. My Lord, a Man ought to know what Profeſſion they are of, that are Witneſſes againſt him for his Life.

L. C. J. Will you ask him whether he be a Chriſtian or no?

Freind. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he be a Papiſt or a Proteſtant.

Mr. At. Gen. If Mr. Porter be willing to tell you, he may; but it is not a proper Queſtion.

L. C. J. Eſpecially before he is ſworn; he is not intitled to ask any Queſtions whatever, till he be ſworn.

Freind. My Lord, I beſeech you let me have the Queſtion anſwered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sure you don't conſider, that the Anſwer to that Queſtion is to accuſe himſelf; you don't conſider the Conſequences of it.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Right.

L. C. J. The Queſtion is whether it is your Right or no.

Freind. My Lord, I would not trouble the Court if I could help it, but my Life and All is at Stake, and I muſt make the beſt Defence I can.

L. C. J. Indeed your Queſtion is improper in itſelf; but if he have a Mind to tell you, and anſwer voluntarily, he may.

Freind. I humbly beg your Lordſhip that he may anſwer the Queſtion.

L. C. J. I cannot ſee you have a Right to have this Queſtion anſwered you.

Freind. Mr. Porter, you are a Gentleman, and I deſire you will anſwer whether you be a Roman Catholick or not?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before he does anſwer, I deſire he may be acquainted with the Danger: He was bred a Proteſtant, no doubt, and then turning Roman Catholick, he ſubjects himſelf to a very ſevere Penalty.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, I told you your Queſtion was not proper to be ask'd.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, let him anſwer the Queſtion, it will be of great Uſe to me in my Tryal; pray let me have my Right.

L. C. J. You ſhall have all the Right done you that can be; but in the firſt Place, if a Man be a Roman Catholick, notwithſtanding his Religion, he is a good Witneſs: And beſides that, it may be, his anſwering the Queſtion may ſubject him to ſeveral Penalties; at leaſt he is liable to Proſecution upon ſeveral Acts of Parliament that are very penal; and therefore it is by no Means to be ask'd.

Freind. My Lord, I pray only that he may anſwer the Queſtion.

L. C. J. No Man is bound to anſwer any Queſtion that tends to make him accuſe himſelf, or ſubject him to any Penalties.

Fr. My Lord, I do with Submiſſion deſire it, and it is no great Matter for him to ſay whether he be Papiſt or Proteſtant.

L. C. J. If it be no great Matter, then why do you inſiſt upon it? But perhaps it may be a great Matter in the Conſequence of it to him; a Man therefore is not obliged to anſwer any ſuch Queſtions.

Fr. I beſeech your Lordſhip, let him anſwer the Queſtion.

L. C. J. You have my Opinion; if you will, you ſhall have the Opinions of the reſt of the Judges: My Opinion is, That the Queſtion ought not to be anſwer'd.

L. C. J. Treby. Since your Lordſhip's Pleaſure is, That we ſhould deliver our Opinions upon this Point, I muſt declare, I am of the ſame Opinion, That no Man is bound to anſwer any Queſtions that will ſubject him to a Penalty, or to Infamy. If you ſhould ask him, whether he were a Deer-ſtealer, or whether he were a Vagabond, or any other Thing that will ſubject him to Puniſhment, either by Statute or by Common-Law, whether he be guilty of a Petty Larceny, or the like, the Law does not oblige him to anſwer any ſuch Queſtions.

Fr. Well; I hope the Jury will conſider it, that he will not anſwer the Queſtion; and therefore they are to take it for granted that he is ſo.

L. C. J. Treby. And now to this preſent Purpoſe, to ask a Man whether he be a Popiſh Recuſant, is to ſubject him to Danger: For when you ask him that Queſtion, if he were not bred up in that Religion, then for him to own himſelf of that Religion now, is to own as great a Crime as that you are charged with. If it were not ſo, but he was always bred in that Religion, yet there are very great Penalties that he is ſubject to, as, the Confiſcation of two third Parts of his Eſtate, and ſeveral other Things that he may be liable to, if he ſhould diſcloſe that upon his Anſwer to the Queſtion, which without this Diſcovery could not be prov'd perhaps. We muſt keep the Law ſteady and even between the Priſoner and the Witneſs.

Mr. Juſtice Nevil. I am of the ſame Opinion, it does ſubject him to a Penalty; and unleſs he will voluntarily anſwer it of himſelf, I think it cannot be demanded of him: For he may ſubject himſelf to a Proſecution by it.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. I think, it is not a Queſtion that can of Right be impoſed upon him; he may anſwer it, if he will; but he is under no Obligation to anſwer it, becauſe it may tend to accuſe himſelf of a Crime for which he may be proſecuted, and likewiſe will ſubject him to other Penalties, which the Law cannot compel him to ſubject himſelf to.

(Then Captain Porter was ſworn.)

Freind. I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you'll conſider this.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Porter, do you know Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray then will you give my Lords and the Jury an Account what Meetings you have had with him, where thoſe Meetings were, and when, and what paſs'd between you, about inviting the French over hither, or for a Riſing here.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, about the latter End of May laſt or the Beginning of June, we had two Meetings, one was at the King's-head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, the other at Mrs. Mountjoy's in St. James's-ſtreet. At the firſt Meeting there were preſent my Lord of Aileſbury, my Lord of Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Mr. Cook, Captain Charnock, and myſelf; after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in: Now at both thoſe Meetings it was conſulted of, and agreed, to ſend Captain Charnock into France to King James, to deſire him to borrow of the French King 10000 Men to come over hither, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons. Captain Charnock ſaid, he did not care to go upon a fooliſh Meſſage, and therefore deſired to know what they would have him to acquaint King James with, and aſſure him of. They all agreed to meet the King whenever they had Notice of his Landing, with a Body of 2000 Horſe; of which every one in particular was to bring their Quota where-ever he would appoint.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. When was the ſecond Meeting?

Capt. Porter. That was at Mrs. Mountjoy's.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I ask you when it was? how long after the firſt?

Capt. Port. I believe it was about a Fortnight after, or ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Meeting for?

Capt. Port. The ſecond Meeting was to confirm the firſt. Captain Charnock informed me, that he was to go within three or four Days, and therefore deſired to have a Meeting before he went.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe was there at that that ſecond Meeting? What Occaſion was there for it?

Capt. Port. Capt. Charnock deſired the Meeting once more before he went, to ſee whether we all kept our Reſolution.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, what do you know of Sir John Freind's agreeing to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe?

Captain Port. I know nothing of that Matter, but what I have heard ſeveral People talk; but I have heard him ſay he would be as ready as any Man, whenever the King came; and I have heard from Capt. Charnock, and from Sir William Perkins, that he had a Commiſſion to be a Colonel of Horſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon that ſecond Meeting, who were preſent?

Capt. Port. I told you, Sir, the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent at both Meetings.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who elſe were there?

Capt. Port. My Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Perkins, Capt. Charnock, and I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery and Mr. Goodman were there; Mr. Cook and myſelf were there, but the Priſoner at the Bar I am ſure was there.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, Capt. Porter, will you remember and recollect yourſelf, who were at the firſt Meeting?

Capt. Port. I have named them already, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Name them again then.

Capt. Port. My Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook; and myſelf; we dined there, and after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did you ſee Mr. Charnock after this, and what Diſcourſe had you with him about his Journey and the Succeſs of it?

Capt. Porter. I never ſaw him till 3 or 4 Days after our Riot Buſineſs in Drury-lane, upon the Account of which I had been a Priſoner in Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, and what did he ſay to you?

Capt. Porter. He told me that he had been in France, but that King James told him, the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year; and withal, that he had been with Sir John Freind, and the ſeveral other Perſons, with Meſſages from the King, but I do not know whether he had been there or no, only as he told me, that he had been, and brought that Anſwer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray now tell us, what other Meetings you have had about this Matter this Winter.

Capt. Porter. I was once with Sir George Barcley and Sir John Freind, at the Nagg's-head in St. James's-ſtreet; I cannot tell what Diſcourſe they had, they whiſpered among themſelves.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who elſe was there?

Capt. Port. There was Sir George Barcley, Sir William Perkins, myſelf, Mr. Ferguſon, and one Humes.

L. C. J. Where was that, do you ſay?

Capt. Port. At the Nagg's-head in St. James's-ſtreet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Body elſe there that you can remember?

Capt. Port. Capt. Charnock came in after Dinner, but I cannot ſay he din'd there.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who elſe do you remember?

Capt. Port. There came in one Harriſon after Dinner; he is a reputed Romiſh Prieſt, and goes by the Name of Johnſon.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, Capt. Porter, what was that Meeting for?

Capt. Port. They had ſeveral Whiſperings among themſelves, but what they diſcourſed of I cannot tell.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, did Sir John Freind ſay any Thing that you heard at that Meeting.

Capt. Port. Sir George Barcley did ſay, that ſome People that were not ſo violent had written over into France to ſtop this Buſineſs; upon which, ſaid I, I hope you will have no Letter to Night. Upon which Sir John Freind ſaid, is there any thing that is hid behind the Curtain? If there be, I am not fairly dealt withal; I will proceed no further.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Sir John Freind has a mind to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

L. C. J. Pray, Capt. Porter let me ask you this Queſtion, Did all that were preſent at the firſt Meeting, at the King's-head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, agree to ſend Mr. Charnock into France to the late King?

Capt. Port. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. All of them?

Capt. Port. Yes; we deſir'd Captain Charnock to anſwer to the King for us that we would meet him at the Head of 2000 Horſe.

L. C. J. Did Sir John Freind agree to it?

Capt. Port. Yes, I do poſitively affirm he did.

L. C. J. Then the ſecond Meeting, which, you ſay, was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, what was ſaid then?

Capt. Port. We did agree all, That Capt. Charnock ſhould go on with the Meſſage that was reſolved upon at the firſt Meeting; and we would go on with the Buſineſs, and he ſaid he would go away in two or three Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will Sir John Freind ask him any Queſtions?

Fr. I will only ask him, if they have done, whether he has any thing more to ſay.

Capt. Port. No, Sir.

L. C. J. The King's Council have done with him.

Fr. Then, my Lord, I will hear all they can ſay, and when I have heard the whole Evidence, I ſhall know how to anſwer to it.

L. C. J. Before you go, Captain Porter, I would ask you, What Anſwer Mr. Charnock brought back from France?

Capt. Port. I ſay, I did not meet with Captain Charnock, 'till after I came out of Newgate for the Riot Buſineſs, and then he told me, he had been there, and he had acquainted the ſeveral Gentlemen with the Meſſages he had brought from King James, who thank'd them for their Kindneſſes, but the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then the next that we call is Brice Blair, (who was ſworn.) Pray, Sir, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind?

Capt. Blair. Yes, my Lord; and I am very ſorry to come on ſuch an Account as I do now againſt him. I am ſorry for it with all my Heart ——

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, pray will you give an Account what you know of Sir John Freind's having a Commiſſion from the late King to be a Colonel of Horſe, and when it was, and how; pray tell my Lord and the Jury the whole Matter.

Capt. Blair. All that I can ſay to this Buſineſs is written in my Paper, and I refer to my Paper.

Mr. At. Gen. You muſt not refer to your Paper, Sir, you muſt tell all what you know.

L. C. J. He may look upon any Paper to refreſh his Memory.

Capt. Bl. I did ſee the Commiſſion, Sir, and I did read it.

Mr. At. Gen. What Commiſſion was it, Sir?

Capt. Bl. It was a Commiſſion from King James, to Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you ſee it, Sir?

Capt. Bl. I ſaw it in his Lodgings at the Strand, when he lived near the Strand in Surrey-ſtreet.

Mr. At. Gen. Who ſhew'd it you?

Capt. Bl. He ſhew'd it me himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it for?

Capt. Bl. It was for raiſing a Regiment of Horſe.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it that you did ſee it? How long ago was it?

Capt. Bl. It is well near two Years ago, or thereabouts, as I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was to have been Colonel of that Regiment?

Capt. Bl. He was nominated to be Colonel of it himſelf in the Commiſſion.

L. C. J. Who was the Commiſſion directed to?

Capt. Bl. It was directed to him, to Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Well, and what was done upon it? who were to be the Officers?

Capt. Bl. He promiſed me to be his Lieutenant Colonel; and I had the ſame from Mr. Harriſon, and there were ſeveral Letters that I ſaw, that came from my Lord Melford and Secretary Caroll, who were with King James.

Mr. At. Gen. What other Officers were there appointed?

Capt. Bl. There was one Richardſon was to be one of his Captains, and there was one Mr. Fiſher was to be another, and one Hall another; Fiſher was to be his eldeſt Captain, and one Capt. Evans was to be his Captain Lieutenant, and one Captain Vernatti was to be another.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember who was to be his Major?

Capt. Bl. No, Sir, I think I cannot be poſitive as to that. I ſpoke to Capt. Barneſley, that had been a Lieutenant in King James's Service, to be a Lieutenant, and ſometimes he accepted, and ſometimes he refuſed it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what did you do as Lieutenant Colonel upon this Matter?

Capt. Bl. I endeavour'd all I could to get Officers for them; and to raiſe Troops. I endeavour'd to get what Men I could myſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what did you do? what Officers did you procure for him?

Capt. Bl. I told you Vernatti and Fiſher, and one Mr. Hall that lives at Deal.

Mr. At. Gen. What Troops did you get under you? Did you engage any to ſerve under you?

Capt. Bl. What? I my ſelf, Sir, do you mean?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, I do.

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you name any of them?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, if I make uſe of my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may make uſe of your Paper to refreſh your Memory.

Capt. Bl. There is a Paper of Names that I gave in before the Council.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, have you his Paper there? let him ſee it to refreſh his Memory.

Mr. Baker. I have none of the Papers, my Lord; they are all ſent before the Council.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, can you tell who was to have been your Lieutenant in your Troop?

Capt. Bl. One Mr. Bertram.

Mr. Mountague. You ſay, Sir, you were conſtituted Lieutenant Colonel; pray, who conſtituted you, and made you ſo?

Capt. Bl. I had only a Promiſe of it from Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you lay out any Monies for Sir John Freind? or did he ever pay you any Money afterwards?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I have had ſeveral ſmall Sums of Money from Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what was it for?

Capt. Bl. It was to drink with the Men that belonged to the Regiment, and encourage them.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did Mr. Piggott pay you any Sums of Money? and by whoſe Order?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he paid me firſt 20 l. and afterwards he paid me another 20 l.

Mr. At. Gen. By whoſe Order was that, Sir?

Capt. Bl. It was by the Order of Sir John Freind.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, how do you know that Sir John Freind order'd him to pay it you?

Capt. Bl. Becauſe it was the Money that Piggott had received to repay Sir John Freind, what he had advanced for the furthering of Parker's Eſcape out of the Tower.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you know that he advanced any Money for procuring Parker's Eſcape?

Capt. Bl. He told me ſo himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. How much did Sir John Freind ſay he advanced for that Purpoſe?

Capt. Bl. He told me 100 l.

Mr. At. Gen. How did he tell you he was to be paid it again?

Capt. Bl. He told me that King James ordered the Payment of it at France, when Piggott went over, which was immediately afterwards; and I had of that, firſt 20 l. and afterwards 20 l. by the Order of Sir John Freind.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, did Sir John Freind tell you what Piggott had received in France?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he ſaid Piggott had received 100 l. in France; and he did not pay it him, but if I could get 20 l. of him, he would allow it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray about what Time was it that the firſt 20 l. was received?

Capt. Bl. I have ſet it down in my Paper; there it is.

Mr. At. Gen. But can't you tell about what Time it was?

Capt. Bl. It was about laſt May or June, the firſt 20 l. was paid.

Mr. At. Gen. When was the laſt 20 l. paid?

Capt. Bl. It was after I was ſick, about Michaelmas.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Sir, who was by when the laſt 20 l. was paid?

Capt. Bl. Mr. Piggott paid me the laſt 5 l. of it, (for I received it at ſeveral Payments from Mr. Piggott) Piggott) but the laſt 5 l. was before Sir John Freind, at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, do you know any thing of Sir John Freind's Receiving any Letter from King James?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he told me he had a Letter from King James?

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long ago was that?

Capt. Bl. Truly, I cannot tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I don't ask you the preciſe Day, but was it within a Twelvemonth?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I believe it might be thereabouts.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire he may ſpeak out; for I don't hear half he ſays.

L. C. J. Repeat it to him again.

Capt. Bl. Sir, you told me you had received a Letter from King James.

Freind. My Lord, I ſhall anſwer to all this afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, had you at any Time any Diſcourſe with Sir John Freind about one Slater?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what that was.

Capt. Bl. He told me he was to bring him in ſeveral Officers; and that he had intended to make two Lieutenant-Colonels, whereof Captain Slater was to be one; but when he ſaw I was not ſatisfied with that, he ſaid he ſhould command a Troop of non-ſwearing Parſons, and they ſhould be an independent Troop.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay that Slater was to command that Troop.

Capt. Bl. Yes, and it was to be an independent Troop.

Mr. At. Gen. I think you ſay that he and you met at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe.

Capt. Bl. Yes, we did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Diſcourſe had you there?

Capt. Bl. I called him aſide and deſired to ſpeak to him; and it was when Mr. Fiſher told me of this Plot, and deſired me to ſpeak to him, a little before this horrible Conſpiracy broke out. And I told him what I heard from Fiſher, and from Harriſon the Prieſt about it; and he told me that he had heard of it, and he was afraid it would ruin King James, and his Affairs.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it that you told him you had heard.

Capt. Bl. This laſt horrid Thing, the Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life.

Mr. Cowper. Was it before it broke out that he told you he knew of it?

Capt. Bl. Yes, it was ſhortly before it broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you meet with him again? And did he carry you in his Coach at any Time?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he did, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you then, when you was with him in the Coach?

Capt. Bl. He took me in his Coach to St. Martin's le grand, and, ſays he, I will do nothing 'till the Thoulon Fleet meet with the Breſt Fleet; at that Time, perhaps, we ſhall be all taken up; but, ſays he, you may ſculk about the Town better than I can; and therefore I'll keep myſelf private; and we muſt be as good Husbands of our Money as we can; for Money will be very ſcarce. What do you think you ſhall need, ſays he? Truly, Sir, ſays I, I can't tell; that muſt be according as I am mounted. For I found I had a few indigent Officers at that Time.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what were you to do?

Capt. Bl. We were to ſculk up and down; and when he asked me what Money I ſhould need, I told him I could not tell; for there were ſeveral indigent Officers, moſt of which begg'd at that Time; and here is a Letter that I had from Sir John Freind, to confirm my receiving Money from him.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that Sir John Freind's own Hand?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, it is.

Mr. At. Gen. Then put it in, give it hither.

(It was delivered in to the Attorney General.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what have you heard Sir John Freind ſay of Sir John Fenwick's being concerned in this Matter?

Capt. Bl. I heard him ſay, that he believed, that he ſhould command the Party that he was engaged in, and that Sir John Fenwick had Four Troops of Horſe, that lay near Reading, to be employ'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpoſe?

Capt. Bl. To be in Readineſs upon the Deſcent.

Freind. Gentlemen of the Jury, I can't hear a Word, I hope you hear.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, look upon that Letter; you ſay you had that Letter from Sir John Freind, pray, who is that H. mentioned in it?

Capt. Bl. It means Harriſon, alias Johnſon, the Prieſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what was that Letter written for?

Capt. Bl. It was about the laſt 20 l. that I was to receive from Piggott.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that Sir John Freind's Hand?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I think ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ſeen Sir John Freind write?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I have ſeen him write, and I think it is the ſame Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we deſire it may be read.

Then a Juryman deſired he might be asked, Whether he ſaw Sir John Freind write that Letter?

L. C. J. What ſay you, did you ſee him write that Letter?

Capt. Bl. No, my Lord; it came to my Lodging.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ever own to you he had writ you ſuch a Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, let it be read; read it all, for it is but ſhort.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads.)

For Captain Blair, Theſe.

SIR, Tueſday Morning.

YOU may much wonder you have not received an Anſwer of yours before now: I have been afflicted with the Gout in my Hand and Foot, that I have not been able to put Pen to Paper; (I thank God) I am ſomewhat better, and do hope to be in London a Thurſday next, about the Hour of Twelve, at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe, if the Weather do not prevent me; if it do, I ſhall not come before Monday following: I do deſire you for to meet me about that Hour; for it is not convenient for to write a Note to Mr. H. for ſome Reaſons I ſhall give you, when I ſee you. I wiſh you good Health. I am,

SIR,

Your affectionate Friend and Servant,

JOHN FREIND.

Juryman. Pray, Sir, what Date is it of?

Cl. of Ar. It has no Date but Tueſday Morning.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Sir John Freind meet you on the Thurſday, according to this Letter?

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, How this Letter came to him, whether by the Penny Poſt, or how?

Capt. Bl. I don't know, I believe it was by a Porter: It came firſt to me when I was in Bed, and my Wife brought it up to me.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, anſwer my Queſtion. Did Sir John Freind afterwards meet you at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe, according to this Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, he did.

Mr. At. Gen. And did you there ſpeak about the Buſineſs that's contained in that Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, and accordingly I had the Order.

Mr. At. Gen. What Order?

Capt. Bl. An Order for the 20 l.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain Blair, do you remember that you dined with Sir John Freind, near the Exchange, in January laſt?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I think I did, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Diſcourſe was there between you then? Who was with you beſides you Two?

Capt. Bl. I muſt refer that to my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well then, what Diſcourſe was between you and Sir John Freind there?

Capt. Bl. It is down in my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know one Capt. Ridley?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he at any Time preſent when you and the Priſoner at the Bar were together.

Freind. My Lord, I cannot hear a Word he ſays.

L. C. J. Here is a great Noiſe indeed, and he, it ſeems, is not well, and ſpeaks but low; pray, order Silence in the Court.

(Which was done by Proclamation.)

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, he ſpeaks of a Letter that you ſent to him that bears Date ſome Tueſday Morning, that you would be in Town, and meet him at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe upon Thurſday following, at Twelve a Clock; and that Letter was read, and he ſays he met you accordingly, and there was Order taken for the Payment of the laſt 20 l. This is that he ſays; Did you hear it?

Freind. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. That is what he ſaid. Then go on: You ſay he met you at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe according to that Letter.

Capt. Bl. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was done there, when you met?

Capt. Bl. Nothing but the Order.

L. C. J. Who did he give the Order to?

Capt. Bl. He gave the Order to Harriſon.

L. C. J. Why, was Harriſon there?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he came there before I came away.

L. C. J. But you ſay he gave the Order to Harriſon?

Capt. Bl. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was the Order for?

Capt. Bl. It was to pay me that Money.

L. C. J. What Money was that?

Capt. Bl. It was the laſt 20 l.

Mr. At. Gen. Was the 20 l. paid you afterwards?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Who paid it?

Capt. Bl. Mr. Piggott; he paid me the laſt 5 l. of it before Sir John Freind's Face.

L. C. J. Was this the firſt 20 l. or the laſt, do you ſay?

Capt. Bl. It was the laſt.

L. C. J. What was this Money paid for?

Capt. Bl. I believe it was to ſupport me to go about the Buſineſs of the Regiment.

L. C. J. You believe; that's not enough: But are you ſure it was ſo?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I am ſure it was for that.

L. C. J. Had you ever demanded Money of him before?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. For what was that Money that you demanded?

Capt. Bl. It was to drink with the Men that were brought in; to cheriſh, and keep them together.

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe were thoſe Men kept together?

Capt. Bl. They were for his Regiment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, had Sir John Freind any Occaſion to pay you any Money upon any other Account?

Capt. Bl. No, Sir, not out of that 100 l.

Mr. Cowper. You do not underſtand the Queſtion. Had you any Dealings with Sir John Freind, but about this Matter concerning the Regiment?

Capt. Bl. No, never in all my Life.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, Sir, do you remember your meeting with Sir John Freind when one Ridley was there?

Capt. Bl. Yes, it was at the Chop-houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Give an Account what paſs'd there.

Capt. Bl. Mr. Ridley ſaid, A Gentleman was lately gone over to France, about Ten Days before; and Mr. Ridley ſaid, he was a very ſenſible Gentleman, a Roman-Catholick, an ancient Man, about Threeſcore Years of Age, what he was, I can't tell: He ſaid, he believed he ſhould bring the laſt Orders.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Sir John Freind ſay?

Capt. Bl. Sir John Freind ſaid, He knew of it; but he named no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Effect of thoſe Orders, as you underſtood?

Capt. Bl. I cannot tell that, Sir, indeed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Charnock?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of his going to France?

Capt. Bl. I met him upon the Exchange the laſt Summer, and I told him, I expected not to have ſeen him here at that Time, I thought he had been abroad; he told me he was come from France, but who ſent him I cannot tell, I do not know upon my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what has Sir John Freind ſaid to you about Ferguſon? Whether was not he to have been an Officer in his Regiment?

Capt. Bl. No; but Sir John Freind ſaid, he would join, and Mr. Ferguſon himſelf has told me ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he tell you ſo?

Capt. Bl. A good while ago.

Mr. At. Gen. How long ago?

Capt.

Capt. Bl. Two Years ago, and above.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Sir John Freind tell you any thing about Ferguſon, that he would bring in any Men?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he ſaid he would bring in a great many.

Mr. At. Gen. Will the Priſoner ask him any Queſtions?

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, I ſhall by and by, if they have done with him.

L. C. J. Yes, they have done with him.

(Then he pauſed, and peruſed his Papers.)

Freind. Firſt, as to the Commiſſion you charge me with, that I ſhould receive a Commiſſion from King James; I deſire to know, whether it was ſigned, or ſealed, and what Date it was?

Capt. Bl. I cannot tell the Date, indeed, Sir John; for I never thought to come here upon ſuch an Account as this: But I think it was in Paper, ſigned above James Rex, and below, By his Majeſty's Command, Melford; and a little Seal upon the Margin.

Freind. This is the hardeſt Thing in the World upon a Man; here you have charg'd me with Money to ſubſiſt and encourage Soldiers.

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Freind. I would only ſay this; you were recommended to me for a very honeſt Man, and you have come to me ſeveral Times, and told me, Sir, my Neceſſities are very great, I am ready to ſtarve, I have a great Charge; for God's Sake will you be pleaſed to beſtow ſomething upon me, to relieve my Neceſſities? It's true, I have given you Money ſeveral Times, but I never gave it for any other Uſe but Charity; God knows my Heart. I deſire you, to conder with yourſelf and anſwer it. There is a God above where you muſt give an Account as well as I, and I hope you will conſider of it. Pray declare the Truth, Whether you have not writ thoſe Lines to me ſeveral Times, that you were ready to ſtarve, and begg'd of me to relieve your Neceſſities?

Capt. B. I have ſo, Sir, I acknowledge it.

Freind. Pray take me right, and was not that Money I gave you, only upon pure Charity?

Capt. B. Yes, you did give me Charity, but I had expended ſo much Money in your Buſineſs, that reduced me to that, God knows my Heart. I have laid out many a Pound upon this Affair.

Freind. It is the hardeſt Thing in the World; this is a Roman Catholick too.

Capt. B. I am ſure it coſt me many a Pound more than ever I had of you.

Freind. You ſay you liſted a great many Men, who were the Men? What are their Names? who were they For?

Capt. B. I have given a Liſt of them to the Council.

Freind. Who are they? for God knows, I know nothing of them.

L. C. J. You have a Liſt there, let it be produc'd.

Capt. B. I gave it to the Council; and, Sir John, I brought in ſeveral Officers to you.

Mr. At. Gen. Remember, and name as many as you can.

Capt. B. I have named the Officers already.

Mr. At. Gen. Name them again.

Capt. B. Did not I bring Captain Fiſher to you? and did not you promiſe to make him your eldeſt Captain?

Freind. No, you never did.

L. C. J. Theſe are Queſtions of your own asking, ſo you muſt hear him.

Capt. B. I brought Captain Fiſher to you, and accordingly we dined at Captain Simons's, and there was Captain Ridley, Mr. Richardſon, and Mr. Fiſher and you talked together, and you liſtned to him, and in my own Hearing you promiſed he ſhould be eldeſt Captain, upon Condition, that he would bring in a Troop; and this is true, ſo help me God.

Freind. Pray, where are your Men? and what are your Men that you liſted?

Capt. B. I never ſpoke of Liſting, I only ſpoke of Encouraging?

Freind. Did not you ſay you had liſted a great many Men for to be of my Regiment?

Capt. B. No, Sir, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. I think you do miſtake, Sir John, he did not ſay Liſt.

Capt. B. I had Money from you upon the Account of Encouraging, and Treating, and Drinking with a great many of the Men: And you ſaid it was impoſſible to keep them together, but that I muſt have Money to treat them, and drink with them; but you deſired me to be as good a Husband as I could.

Freind. I never ſaid ſo; theſe are very hard Things upon me.

Capt. B. Did not I bring Captain Cole and Captain Neale to you, and his Brother-in-Law Mr. Robinſon, and Mr. Gellibrand? and did not we dine together?

Fr. I know nothing of all this, I declare to you.

L. C. J. If you will ask him any more Queſtions, do.

Capt. B. I brought thoſe three Gentlemen, and we dined together.

L. C. J. Where did you dine then?

Capt. B. At Hackney, when Sir John lived there, at his own Houſe.

Freind. When was it?

Capt. B. It is above a Year ago. Pray, Sir John, don't think to daſh me out of Countenance, tho' I am very Ill; I ſpeak nothing but the Truth, and therefore I will not be daſh'd out of Countenance. You know what I ſay to be true; you then drank a Glaſs of Wine to Capt. Cole: And did not you promiſe him, becauſe he was one of your Mother's Name, that he ſhould have a Place in the Exciſe next one of the Commiſſioners. Says I, Sir John, what will you give me? O, ſays he, you ſhall have the Regiment, Man. This was before Robinſon, his Mother-in-Law, and Mr. Gellibrand.

L.C.J. Who was to have the Place in the Exciſe?

Capt. B. Captain Cole.

Freind. I know not a Word of all this.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Capt. Blair, be not daſh'd, but ſpeak the Truth, and you need fear nothing.

Capt. B. This, I ſay, was before Mr. Robinſon and Mr. Gellibrand.

Fr. I don't know Gellibrand, nor none of them.

L. C. J. Was that Cole to be any thing in the Regiment?

Capt. B. Yes, he was to have been a Captain, and to bring in a Troop.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir John, will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Freind. No, I muſt depend upon the Jury, for I cannot remember half what he has ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Diſcourſe between between you and him, about ſome brisk Men that were to follow him?

L. C. J. But before you ask him, Mr. Sollicitor, we muſt know whether he will ask him any more Queſtions, for he is now his Witneſs. Do you ask him any more Queſtions, Sir John?

Freind. I can ask about no more than what I hear.

L. C. J. But ask him what you will.

Freind. My Lord, I have not heard half what he has ſaid, I hope the Jury will take Care in it.

L. C. J. Some Part of it was twice repeated to you.

Freind. As to that, my Lord, I would ask him a Queſtion or Two. Was that my Letter?

Capt. B. Yes, it was.

Freind. Did you ſee me write it?

Capt. B. No, it came to my Hands by a Porter, as I believe, when I was in Bed, my Wife brought it up to me.

Freind. What was that Letter for?

Capt. B. In order to pay the laſt 20 l. and I did ſee a Return of a Letter that you writ to King James.

Mr. At. Gen. Who ſhewed you that Letter to King James?

Capt. B. He ſhewed it me himſelf.

L. C. Juſt. How long ago is that?

Capt. B. A Year and a half ago, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. Did he ſay any Thing of an Anſwer he had to it?

Capt. B. Yes, but I cannot remember what it it was directly.

Juryman. He was pleaſed to ſay he ſaw a Letter from King James.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir, it was a Letter to King James.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd, if he knows the Contents of that Letter?

L. C. J. Did you ſee him write the Letter, or did he ſhew you the Letter he had writ?

Capt. Bl. I did not ſee him write the Letter, I ſee his Hand to the Letter, and he ſhewed me the Letter, that he ſaid he had written to King James; and there is this particular Paſſage to confirm it, it was at Mr. Piggott's Mother's Houſe; I dined with him there that Day, and when he ſhewed me the Letter, I told him I was ſo well pleaſed with the penning it, that I believed Mr. Ferguſon had a Hand in it; and he was very angry, that I ſhould think, he was not able to write, and did not write the Letter himſelf.

Juryman. My Lord, ſince it ſeems he peruſed the Letter, I deſire he may be asked, whether he can remember the Contents of that Letter, or any of it?

Capt. B. Really, my Lord, I cannot tell that particularly: But I am apt to think it was about the Buſineſs of the King, and about the Regiment.

L. C. J. Can you tell truly any of the Contents of it?

Capt. B. That it was about the Affairs of the Regiment, I am poſitive.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, before he goes away (that the Jury may not go away with a Miſtake,) I deſire it may be obſerved, he does not ſay, he ſaw Sir John Freind write the Letter.

L. C. Juſt. No, no, but that he ſhewed it him himſelf.

Freind. When was that Letter writ that I ſhewed to you?

Capt. B. It was about a Year and a Half ago.

Freind. I declare in the Preſence of God, I never writ one.

Juryman. He ſays you ſhew'd him the Letter, therefore it is very fit we ſhould ſee it.

L. C. J. Nay, Sir, you muſt not talk to the Priſoner; if you have any Queſtions to ask, you muſt propoſe them to the Court.

Freind. I declare in the Preſence of God, I never writ any ſuch Letter, as this he now charges me with.

Capt. B. And I do declare in the Preſence of God you ſhewed me ſuch a Letter.

Freind. Yes, you may, but I am a Proteſtant, you are a Papiſt, you may do any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. You may ask any Queſtions of him, Sir John, but you muſt not rail at the Witneſs.

Freind. But when you charge me with the writing of a Letter to King James, I ought to ſpeak to it. It ſeems I am not to ask whether he is a Papiſt.

Mr. Att. G. He ſays, you ſhew'd him a Letter, that you ſaid you had written to King James, which he read, and liked the Penning of it ſo well, that he thought Ferguſon had a Hand in it; at which you were offended that he ſhould think you could not write ſuch a Letter yourſelf.

Freind. I declare in the Preſence of God I never writ any ſuch Letter.

Mr. A.G. I ſuppoſe you'll diſprove him by and by.

Freind. I can have no Witneſſes to this Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. And you can't expect your own Denial ſhould go for Proof. If you will ask him no more Queſtions, let him go down and eaſe himſelf.

Freind. He muſt not be asked whether he is a Papiſt, but I hope you will take Notice, Countrymen, that theſe Witneſſes are Papiſts, and they think they merit Heaven by ſwearing againſt Proteſtants, whom they call Hereticks.

L. C. J. Indeed Sir John, I don't hear you: Pray ſpeak ſo loud that the Court may hear what you ſay.

Freind. I will my Lord; I ſay he is a Roman Catholick, and I have Witneſſes to ſwear he is ſo, and deſire I may prove that he is a Roman Catholick, and therefore he is not to be heard againſt a Proteſtant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Witneſs we call is Mr. Bertram. (Who was ſworn.)

Freind. But I have not done with Mr. Porter.

L. C. J. Well, you ſhall have him by and by, let the King's Council go on in their Method.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Bertram, do you know Captain Blair that was here juſt now?

Bertram. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him?

Bertram. About Eight or Nine Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe have you had with him about any Regiment that was to be raiſed for the late King James?

Bertram. Captain Blair had told me for two Years laſt paſt, that Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment of Horſe, that were to be raiſed, and lie poſted about the Town, and Captain Blair was to be Lieutenant Colonel to the Regiment, and I was to be Lieutenant to Captain Blair in his Troop.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we only call him to confirm what Captain Blair has ſaid, that he was to be his Lieutenant, and that this was talked of two Years before. Did he tell you Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment of Horſe?

Bert. Yes, Sir, and he obliged me to bring in as many Men and Horſes as I could into this Regiment, and he told me Capt. Fiſher, Capt. Vernatti, and Capt. Cole were to be Captains in the Regiment.

L. C. J. And what were you to be?

Bertram. A Lieutenant.

L. C. J. To whom?

Bertram. To Captain Blair; he has told me ſo ſeveral Times, and talked to me about the Affairs of the Regiment a great deal, that I cannot now remember, relating to that Purpoſe.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence againſt Sir John Freind; he is only called to confirm the Teſtimony of Captain Blair; that Blair ſpoke of it long before he gave his Evidence, and ſo it is not a new thing now invented by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir John Freind did ask what Men he had engaged, and among others he named this Mr. Bertram to be his own Lieutenant, and he now tells you Blair promiſed him ſo to be two Years ago, and then told him Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment.

Freind. Do you know me, Sir?

Bertram. No, Sir, I never was in your Company in my Life; I only tell you what I have heard from Captain Blair; I do not know that ever I ſaw your Face.

L. C. J. His Evidence, Sir John Freind, hurts you not, as to any particular Thing that he knows againſt you; he is only brought to confirm what Captain Blair ſaid, that he was to be his Lieutenant in his Troop.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, the King's Council have done, and now you may ſpeak, and ſay what you have a Mind to ſay in your own Defence.

Mr. J. Rokeby. And call what Witneſſes you have a Mind to call.

Freind. My Lord, in the firſt Place, I deſire to know whether Mr. Courtney is come.

L. C. J. Your Sollicitor can beſt tell that.

Freind. I perceive he is not come.

L. C. J. Well, go on: I ſuppoſe he will not be long before he comes, we will ſtay for him.

Freind. My Lord, I muſt wait for my Witneſs: But in the mean Time, as to Mr. Porter's Evidence, I own I was at the Meeting at the King's Head in Leadenhall-Street; I declare I was at that Place, and there were ſome Gentlemen there, but how many or whom I cannot ſay; but I declare there was not one Word ſpoken there of any raiſing of Men, nor any thing of that Nature, that he ſpeaks of, but only we were drinking a Glaſs of Wine, and eating a Diſh of Meat together, and Sir John Fenwick at that Time coming in, ſaid to us, I deſire you to come to our End of the Town, and take a Diſh of Meat with us. And there was nothing ſpoke of any Thing relating to the Government. Gentlemen, theſe are Papiſts, and I am a Proteſtant, they don't care what they ſay, for they think they merit Heaven by deſtroying Proteſtants; and they are not to be believed: and that is the Reaſon that I was not to ask them the Queſtion, for by Law they are not Witneſſes, and for that I appeal to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. H. Why are they not Witneſſes?

Freind. Nay, I appeal to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. H. Truly I think they are Witneſſes, I know nothing to the contrary.

Freind. My Lord, Papiſts are not good Witneſſes againſt Proteſtants for this Reaſon that I ſhall tell you; I am adviſed, my Lord, that a Papiſt is not a good Witneſs to prove a Proteſtant a Traytor within the Stat. of 25 of Ed. 3.

L. C. J. H. Who ſays ſo?

Freind. My Lord, I deſire to know whether there is ſuch a Statute?

L. C. J. H. Yes, no doubt of it, there is ſuch a Statute as that of the 25 Ed. 3. about Treaſons.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, does not that make it ſo?

L. C. J. H. No indeed, I know no ſuch Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That cannot be, my Lord, that any ſuch Thing ſhould be, for all were Papiſts then, there was no ſuch Thing as a Proteſtant in the Time of Ed. 3.

Freind. My Lord, there is the Statute of the Third of James the Firſt, Cap. 4th. and other Statutes made in the Time of King Charles the Second, particularly in the 30th Year of his Reign Cap. 2d. whereby it is plain they are not to be believed againſt Proteſtants, becauſe they believe them Guilty of damnable Hereſy; and by thoſe Statutes they are reputed Infamous.

L. C. J. Where is your Statute?

Freind. My Lord, I have no Statute-Book, I deſire it may be inquired into, this Advice was given me by my Lawyer; I am no Lawyer myſelf: there is the Statute of 3 James the Firſt, Cap. 4. and the next is 30 Car. 2. Cap. 2.

L. C. J. Well the Statute-Book ſhall be looked into.

Freind. My Lord, the Perſon is not come, who is to give Evidence againſt Captain Blair, the principal Witneſs, he is a Priſoner at the Gate-houſe, and your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay you would have Patience till he came.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we will ſtay a while.

Freind. I pray my Lord do, for it will be very material for me.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you any thing to fill up the Time with in the mean Time?

(Then William Courtney appeared.)

L. C. J. Is your Sollicitor returned with this Habeas Corpus?

Freind. I believe he is in or about the Court, but I cannot get him to me the Croud is ſo great.

(After much ado Courtney came in.)

L. C. J. Is this the Witneſs you would have?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Then what do you ſay to him?

Freind. My Lord, muſt I ask him the Queſtions?

L. C. J. Yes, you muſt propoſe your Queſtions to the Court, and they will ask them of the Witneſſes. If this be the Perſon you ſpeak of, you had beſt examine him.

Freind. Mr. Courtney, I deſire you would ſpeak what you know of Captain Blair.

Courtney. Gentlemen, I have been a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe about a Month, and while I was there Captain Blair at the ſame Time came in as a Priſoner, as mentioned in the Proclamation; being my old Acquaintance, (I was in Bed, being in upon ſome other Accounts) and when they told me Captain Blair was brought in, I deſired him to come into my Chamber. I told him I was ſorry to ſee him there; I told him I hoped he was none of thoſe concerned in this Plot; he ſaid he was in the Proclamation, but that he was innocent, and knew nothing of the Plot, nor of the Aſſaſſination, nor any thing like it; there were ſeveral other Perſons in that Place at the ſame

Time, and he ſaid he was as innocent as the Child unborn.

Freind. Did he mention any thing of me then?

Courtney. At that Time he ſaid nothing of you.

Freind. Pray, Sir, do you believe he is a Roman Catholick?

Courtney. I do not know his Religion indeed.

Freind. But don't you know him to be a Roman Catholick?

Courtney. He bore the Character of one, but I never ſaw him at any Church.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Pray, Sir, how long have you known Captain Blair?

Courtney. By ſight, I have known him 6 or 7 Years.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Pray, upon what Account did you call him Captain?

Courtney. It was a common Name among all the Company: He was called ſo.

L. C. J. What all the Time that you knew him?

Courtney. Yes, all the Time that I knew him, I knew no other Name that he had.

Freind. But did not you hear that he was reputed to be a Roman Catholick?

Courtney. I have heard that Character of him among thoſe that I have known, but I have very little Knowledge of his Religion.

L. C. J. Is this what you can ſay?

Courtney. There are ſeveral others that were Witneſſes of this, as well as I; I never ſaw you, Sir John Freind, before in my Life, to my Knowledge, nor ever ſpoke to you.

Freind. Sir, a Note was ſent to me, that you could do me ſome Service, and that was the Reaſon I ſent for you. I deſire Mr. Carpenter, Mr. King, and Mr. Payne may be called.

L. C. J. Have you done with this Man then?

Freind. Do you know Captain Porter, Sir?

Courtney. Yes, I do, Sir.

Fr. Sir, do you know him to be a Roman Catholick?

Courtney. Sir, I have heard that he has ſuch a Character.

L. C. J. What Character has he?

Courtney. That he is a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. That's only by Hear-ſay.

Freind. My Lord, I have done with this Man.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, then the Keeper may carry him back again.

Courtney. Sir, I have ſomething elſe to ſay.

Fr. My Lord, he ſays he has ſomething elſe to ſay.

L. C. J. Then ſet him up again: (which was done.) Well, Sir, what is it you have more to ſay?

Courtney. Two or three Days after that Time, there was a Priſoner then in the Gate-houſe, who was an Enſign in the Army, was reading the Flying-Poſt in my Chamber, and in that Flying-Poſt, there was News that Capt. Blair was making a great Diſcovery, and that he had accus'd Sir John Freind, for having receiv'd a Commiſſion for a Regiment in which he was to be Lieutenant Colonel, and ſaid a great deal about that Regiment, how he had received Subſiſtence Money for them from Sir John Freind. A little after Captain Blair came into the Room, and ask'd me if I had got the News; I told him yes; and Captain Blair then ask'd what was the Import of it? I told him it was there, that he was making a great Diſcovery, and particularly, that he was to be Lieutenant-Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had receiv'd Subſiſtence Money from Sir John Freind for the Men of the Regiment. Captain Blair anſwer'd; that they might put what they would in the News, but he knew nothing of it, nor did not receive any Money; and this was a great Surprize upon me, and upon thoſe others that heard him, when we were told he was to be the main Evidence againſt Sir John Friend.

Freind. Well, Sir, do you know any thing elſe?

Courtney. Captain Blair was bemoaning himſelf afterwards, that he went againſt his Conſcience in this Thing, and his Wife told me that he was very much concerned, becauſe he was going to do this againſt his Conſcience, and ſhe was ſure it would break his Heart.

Fr. Do you know any thing more?

Courtney. And he told me in his Chamber upon Friday Night laſt, about Nine a-Clock I came to ſee him, he lay upon his Bed very ill, and his Wife was with him; I ask'd him how he did, and he clapt his Hands, and ſaid he was very ill. Pray, ſaid I, what ails you? Sure you have gotten ſome very great Cold. Oh! no, ſays he, Life is ſweet, I don't know what it is I ail, but were it not for Life, I ſhould never do what I do.

L. C. J. Did he tell you, he went againſt his Conſcience?

Courtney. His Wife and he ſpoke at firſt, that he went againſt his Conſcience, and he believed his Conſcience was in a miſerable State, and this I ſpoke innocently among ſome of the Priſoners, and I did not know that it was taken Notice of, but it ſeems ſome Body has acquainted Sir John Freind, and ſo I am brought here; I know nothing of being a Witneſs, I aſſure you.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. Pray, who were preſent when this Diſcourſe was between you and Blair? You ſay there were two other Perſons preſent when this Diſcourſe was between you, and Capt. Blair and his Wife, who were thoſe two Perſons?

Courtney. What Diſcourſe do you ſpeak of, my Lord?

L. C. J. You ſaid there were two Perſons in your Chamber.

Courtney. Does your Lordſhip mean at the Reading of the Flying-Poſt?

L. C. J. Yes.

Courtney. My Lord, this Gentleman that I was ſpeaking of was lying down upon the Bed, and Captain Blair came into my Room juſt after the News was read, and ask'd me, if I had got the News, I told him yes, he ask'd what was the Import of it? I told him, they ſaid he was making a great Diſcovery, and particularly againſt Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Well, and who were there then?

Courtney. This Enſign that is now a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe, who I ſuppoſe can ſay the ſame Thing.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let Mr. Blair be call'd while he is here, and let him know what this Witneſs ſays, that the Court and Jury may know what he has to ſay to it.

L. C. J. Yes, pray let Mr. Blair be brought in again (which was done.)

L. C. J. Treby. Now, let Mr. Courtney repeat what he ſaid now before about Captain Blair's Declarations to him.

Courtney. My Lord, I tell your Lordſhip, there was one Tooley a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe; when he heard the Flying-Poſt cry'd, bought it, or it was order'd to be bought, and it being brought into my Chamber, I deſir'd him to read it, and I was

was walking about the Room: In the mean Time Capt Blair came in, and ask'd if we had got the News? we ſaid yes; and he ask'd what News there was in it? I reply'd, It is ſaid that you are making a great Diſcovery, that you were to be Lieutenant Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had receiv'd a gread deal of Subſiſtence Money for the Regiment: Says he, They may put what they will in their News, but I know of no Regiment, nor any Subſiſtence, nor of any Commiſſion. The Man that read the Book, will ſay the ſame that I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When was this?

Courtney. This was one Day when the Flying-Poſt came out, the laſt Saturday but one I think.

L. C. J. But you talk'd of ſomething he ſhould ſay to you of going againſt his Conſcience?

Courtney. That was upon Friday Night laſt, I came to ſee Capt. Blair, and his Wife was with him, and Captain Blair was very ill, and clapping his Hands, and groaning, and moving himſelf, and in a very miſerable Condition, truly I thought he was giving up the Ghoſt. I ask'd him upon what Account he was ſo ſad, and told him I thought he had got ſome great Cold; he told me No. Well, ſaid I, Captain Blair, I underſtand you are going to morrow to Hicks's-Hall, and I pray God direct you. Says he ſeveral Times, I pray God direct us all; Life is ſweet. Oh! ſays his Wife, dear Sir, he would never do it, but to ſave his Life; but it goes againſt his Conſcience: So ſaid I to him, you have had the Character of an honeſt Gentleman; I hope you will ſhew yourſelf ſuch, and I pray God direct you: I wiſh no Man's Blood may lie at your Door. Says he, I am an unfortunate Man, that is the thing that troubles me, or ſomething to that Purpoſe; which ſhewed all the Remorſe of Conſcience which could be in the World. I ſpoke of this innocently among the Priſoners, and it ſeems, it was communicated to Sir John Freind, and ſo I am brought here to teſtify it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what ſay you to this, Capt. Blair? you hear what he ſays; do you give an Account what you know of it.

L. C. J. You hear what Diſcourſe he ſays he had with you, what ſay you to it?

Capt. Bl. My Lord, this Gentleman crouded himſelf in upon me, my Wife was with me, and he told me he had a Cup of Brandy, which would be good for me if I had a Cold. God knows my Heart, I deſired no Company might come to me. Says he, Capt. Blair, I have heard you have been an honeſt Gentleman all along, and you are going to Hicks's-Hall to-morrow, and a great deal of ſuch Diſcourſe as that, and I pray God Almighty direct you: That's all that I know paſs'd. I was very ill, very ſick, as I am far from being well now; but as for any thing of Remorſe of Conſcience, as I hope for Mercy and Salvation, I never expreſſed any ſuch thing to him.

L. C. J. Did your Wife ſay, that you were troubled, that you were going to do that which went againſt Conſcience, and you would not do it but to ſave your Life?

Capt. Bl. No, I am ſure ſhe did not.

L. C. J. Did that Gentleman thruſt himſelf into your Company, or did you deſire him for to come to you?

Capt. Bl. No, he thruſt himſelf into the Room.

Courtney. The Sink was hard by, and I heard Captain Blair groan, and ſo I went in to ſee him; every Body had Acceſs to him.

Capt. Bl. Pray, where is the Keeper?

Keeper. Here I am, Sir.

Capt. Bl. Did not I beg of you for God's Sake, that no one ſhould come to me but my Wife?

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Keeper of the Gate-houſe be there, pray ſwear him.

(The Keeper of the Gate-houſe was ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you ſay as to Captain Blair's deſiring that no Body ſhould come to him, but his Wife?

Keeper. No Body was to come to him unleſs they forced themſelves upon him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of that Man's coming to him?

Keeper. No, Sir, I know nothing of it.

Capt. Bl. I always deſir'd to have the Door lockt with the Key on the Inſide, that no Body might come to me but whom I had a Mind to.

Keeper. He did ſo, becauſe he was ill, and no Body did come to him that I know of.

Capt. Bl. My Wife being with me came to me to the Bedſide, while this Man was with me, and I was lying upon my Back; and ſaid ſhe, for Chriſt Jeſus's Sake, dear Blair, do not ſpeak any thing.

L. C. J. When was this?

Capt. Bl. When this Gentleman was with me, ſhe deſired me not to ſay any thing before him; becauſe ſaid ſhe, I do not know but he may be a Trepan.

Courtney. Upon the Word of an honeſt Man, and my Reputation is as dear to me, as yours is to you, ſhe ſaid nothing of that. She told me, you were going to do that which was againſt your Conſcience, and you would not do it but to ſave your Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what is this Man committed for, you Keeper?

Keep. He is committed for Suſpicion of Treaſon.

Courtney. I have been taken up five times upon Suſpicion, and this laſt Time I was committed to the Gatehouſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you live, Sir?

Courtney. In Old Southampton Buildings.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you lived there?

Courtney. I have lodged there about four Years and an half; there are ſeveral Perſons can come and give a Teſtimony of me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you, Sir, to be brought as a Witneſs here?

Courtney. I was ſurpriz'd at it: for my part what I did was by way of Pity, ſeeing him in ſuch a Condition; I pitied your Soul, becauſe you and your Wife both ſhewed ſo much Trouble and Remorſe of Conſcience: As for Sir John Freind, I never ſaw him till to Day in all my Life, that I know of.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Countryman are you Sir?

Courtney. I am an Iriſhman born.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any Eſtate in Ireland?

Courtdey. No, Sir, I have not.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, How came you to go to Mr. Blair?

Court. I have known him a long time; I have been often in his Company at the Coffee-houſe; I cannot ſay I am intimately acquainted with Capt. Blair, but only as I have ſeen him in the Coffee-houſe a great many Times.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But I ask you how you came to go to him; becauſe it ſeems he deſir'd no Body ſhould come to him but his Wife?

Courtney. He may ſay what he pleaſes; for he lay firſt in one Room, and then in another, and he could never go to the neceſſary Houſe, but he muſt go thorow my Room; but if you pleaſe to ſend for Mr. Tooley and Capt. Courtney, they will ſay and ſwear that theſe things paſs'd in their Preſence, or to the ſame Purpoſe, except what paſs'd between him and me in his own Chamber. Enſign Tooley did read the Paper of the Flying Poſt; and as for what he ſaid of his knowing nothing of the Plot, it was talked of up and down in the Priſon, and ſo it came to me; and I invited him into my Chamber, as my old Acquaintance; though I was not very familiar with him; and as he declared, he knew nothing of the Matter.

L. C. J. You hear what he ſays; Capt. Blair, did you tell him you knew nothing of the Plot?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I believe I might at firſt; as we were talking when I firſt came in, and I told him the Truth: For I was innocent as to the Aſſaſſination, for indeed I was ſo, and as to the Invaſion there was only ſome general Diſcourſe, and I was not willing to explain myſelf among ſuch People as they were, when they asked me any Queſtions about it: I had to do with the King and Council.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, have you any more Witneſſes to examine?

Friend. Yes, my Lord, I deſire Mr. King may be called. [Which was done, and he appeared.]

L. C. J. There he is, Sir, what would you ask him?

Fr. I deſire to know of him, whether he does not know Captain Blair and Captain Porter to be Roman Catholicks, and whether he does not know me to be a Proteſtant.

King. I am of Opinion Mr. Porter is a Papiſt; he was always taken to be ſo at Epſom, where I uſed to go, and where he uſed to go, and he was never look'd upon as a Proteſtant.

L. C. J. And what do you take Sir John Friend to be?

King. I take Sir John Freind to be a Proteſtant; ſo he is, and ſo he ever was.

Fr. But when you have been in my Company, and they have been ſpeaking of the Government, what have I ſaid or done?

King. Whenever they ſtarted any reflecting Words upon the Government, he was uſed to ſay, Forbear, I do not admit of any ſuch Diſcourſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him?

King. He has been my Acquaintance this fifteen Years, and married a Relation of my Wife's Huſband. (At which there was very great Laughing.)

King. I mean her former Husband.

L. C. J. He has reconcil'd the Matter very well for this Point; for he tells you he meant her firſt Husband.

Freind. Ay, my Lord, no doubt of it, he will recover it; it was her former Husband. Mr. King don't you mean it was her former Husband?

King. Yes, Sir, I have told you it was ſo; her former Husband's Name was Thomas Caſe.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, you are to look upon two Statutes, the one is 3 Jac. 1. Cap. 4. and the 30th Car. 2. Cap. 2.

King. My Lord I have heard him ſay, if I had not taken the Oaths to King James, which Oaths are binding to my Conſcience I could as freely take the Oaths to the preſent Government, as any Man in England; but I will live peaceably and quietly under the Government: but becauſe I do not take the Oaths, I am double taxed, and I will pay it.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire Capt. Kaines may be call'd, [Who appeared.]

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Sir?

Fr. Capt. Kaines, I deſire to know of you, whether Mr. Porter and Mr. Blair are Roman Catholicks; and I deſire you to ſpeak as to myſelf, what I am.

Kaines. They are ſo reputed to be at Epſom; it was always ſo reported there; and I have been acquainted with Sir John Freind ſeveral Years, being concern'd together in the Train'd-bands of the Tower-Hamlets, and I have been in his Company ſeveral times ſince the King came in, and never heard him give any reflecting Language againſt the Government in my Life.

L. C. J. Have you done with him, Sir?

Fr. My Lord, I did not hear him; but I ſuppoſe he has declar'd, as to Capt. Porter and Capt. Blair, that they are Catholicks.

L. C. J. He ſays, Porter and Blair are reputed Papiſts; and he has known you a long time, and been concern'd with you in the Train'd-bands, and never heard you reflect upon the Government ſince the King came in.

Fr. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether he believes me to be a Proteſtant?

Kaines. I did always take Sir John Freind to be a Proteſtant.

Fr. Then, next, I deſire Mr. Carpenter may be call'd. [Who appeared.]

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Sir?

Fr. I deſire, Mr. Carpenter, that you will acquaint the Court, whether you know Capt. Porter to be a Roman Catholick, and what you know of me.

Carpenter. I have been at Epſom ſeveral Summers, and uſually am there in Summer-time, and he was ſo reputed there: But as to Sir John Freind, I have known him above theſe twenty Years; I keep a Brew-houſe, as he does, and we have been concerned together, and have had ſeveral Occaſions, upon the Account of Trade, to meet him upon Particulars of Appraiſement, when any Partners came in, and I never knew him but very orderly and civil; I never heard him reflect any thing upon the Government but was always peaceable and quiet: He was always looked upon as a Proteſtant, and went to Church. That's all that I can ſay.

Freind. My Lord, as to the Statute-Book, will your Lordſhip pleaſe that the Statute-Book be ſent for?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we do not forget it. Have you any more Witneſſes? Call all your Witneſſes, and we will conſider of that afterwards.

Fr. I deſire Mr. Hawkins may be called.

[Who appeared.

L. C. J. What ſay you to this Gentleman?

Fr. I deſire you, Mr. Hawkins, to give an Account what I am; whether you know me to be a Roman Catholick or a Proteſtant?

Hawkins. I have known Sir John Freind theſe twenty odd Years, and have had Dealings with him many times before the Change of Government, and ſince, I never heard him reflect upon the Government; nor never heard him to ſpeak ſlightly of it: And as to his being of the Proteſtant Religion, I do know as much as any Man, as much as another; I alway believed him to be a Proteſtant of the Church of England, as good as any Man alive; he always went to Church.

L. C. J. What, ſince the Revolution?

Hawkins. I have not been ſo converſant with him ſince that, becauſe I went out of Town, and liv'd out of Town; but I believe there are thoſe at Hackney, that can give an Account of that Matter.

Fr. I desire Major Mould may be called?

L. C. J. Then I suppose you have done with Mr. Hawkins?

Fr. Yes. (Then Major Mould stood up.)

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Sir?

Mould. My Lord, I have known Sir John Freind many Years, above these twenty Years, and I always look'd upon him as a sincere Protestant; and I have often been in his Company since the Revolution, and I never heard him speak diminishingly of the Government. I believe him to be as good a Protestant as any in England.

L. C. J. How! as any in England? That's a great Character.

Fr. Then, I desire Dr. Hollingsworth may be called? [But he did not appear.]

Fr. Then, my Lord, I desire Mr. Lupton may be called.

L. C. J. There is Mr. Lupton, what would you have with him?

Fr. I desire he will give an Account what he knows of me, what Religion I am of.

Lupton. My Lord, as to Sir John Freind, I have known him this ten Years; he was pleased to employ me as a Chaplain in his House a considerable Time, both before and after the Revolution; and after the Revolution we always used the Prayers according to the Church of England, and we did always pray for the present King, and the late Queen Mary, at which Sir John was many times present.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long is it since you left him?

Lupton. About four or five Years, as I remember: Then Sir John's Family lessened; he was pleased to say to me, Mr. Lupton, I am going to Tunbridge, and my Family lessens, (this is about five or six Years ago,) and I shall have no Occasion for you at present; but if ever I make use of a Chaplain again, I will make use of you: This he was pleased to say.

L. C. J. How long is it, do you say, that you have left him?

Lupton. About five Years; and as to any Objection of his being a Papist, I have often discoursed with Sir John Freind about the Popish Religion, and he has often spoken with Detestation of the Principles of the Papists.

Freind. What have you heard me speak of the French; and about any thing of an Invasion, how I would venture my Life for the Protestant Religion, or any thing of that?

Lupton. I have often heard you say, as to the present Government, that though you could not comply with it, yet you would live peaceably under it. When we have been talking of these Things, you said you never would be in a Plot; and tho' you could not comply with the present Government, yet you would never concern yourself in any Design against it. For my part, my Lord, I know nothing by him, but that he is an honest and a worthy Gentleman, tho' he be so unfortunate to be under this Accusation.

Fr. I desire Mr. Hoadley may be called.

[Who appeared.]

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Sir?

Fr. Pray, Mr. Hoadley, will you give an Account to the Court what you know of my being a Protestant, and of my Life and Conversation?

Hoadley. I believe Sir John Freind is a very settled Protestant in the Church of England; and I have Reason to believe so, because I have frequently discoursed with him, because I have had a Couple of Children that were his Nephews, upon whose Account I have been forced several times to wait upon him; and he has often said he never would be in any Plot, and his Words that he used to me were really very remarkable, Catch me in the Corn, and put me in the Pound.

L. C. J. What were his Words, Sir?

Hoadley. He used to say he would never be in any Plot; for, says he, Catch me in the Corn, and put me in the Pound: and I have heard him express himself with a great deal of Detestation of King-killing, and those Principles of the Papists, the Assassinating of any crowned Head.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, how came you to discourse with Sir John Freind about King-killing and Plots? You are a Schoolmaster it seems, how happen'd this Sort of Discourse between you?

Hoadley. There will be Discourses about these Things sometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, pray, how was the Discourse introduced? What was the Occasion of the Discourse? Sure there was some Occasion extraordinary for him to express himself to you.

Hoadley. I cannot remember the particular Occasion, but such Discourse there was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how long ago is this time that this Discourse was?

Hoadley. I believe it was five or six times within these two Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, have you had the same Discourse five or six times one after another?

Hoadley. I cannot say that; but those used to be his Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. What in common Discourse?

Hoadley. He said he would never be in any Plot.

Freind. My Lord, I can bring a great many more Witnesses of this kind, and I believe I could have a thousand to prove me a Protestant.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Sir John, we will hear them.

Fr. My Lord, I am very loth to trouble you.

Mr. Justice Rokeby. No, it will not be reckoned any Trouble, we will hear all your Evidence.

Freind. There is one Mr. Willis and one Mr. Hemings; but I desire it may not be forgotten as to the Acts of Parliament, for they are very material for me, as I shall shew by and by.

(Mr. Willis appeared.)

L. C. J. Well, what say you to this Gentleman?

Fr. Mr. Willis, I desire you'd give an Account to their Lordships, what you think of me, as to my being a Protestant, and how I have behaved myself in every Respect all along.

Willis. My Lord, I have always taken it for granted, that those that come to Church are Protestants; and I did always take Sir John Freind to be a Protestant. The Acquaintance I had with him was since he lived in the Parish of Hackney, and we have had some Converse together; and there have past friendly Visits between us; and I do not remember any Discourse while I was there that tended to the Government one Way or another. I was never very often with him, but his Discourse was always very obliging, discreet, and prudent, whenever I was there.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, when did you see him at Church?

Willis. Truly, my Lord, I cannot call to mind when it was.

L. C. J. Cannot you name any time?

Willis.

Willis. He may be at Church ſometimes, and I not ſee him; our Seats are at a Diſtance from one another, and there are Pillars between, that one can't ſee every Body; and I cannot call to mind when I did ſee him laſt at Church.

L. C. J. Has he been there within this Year or two?

Willis. He has been gone from Hackney a Year and above.

Mr. Mountague. Pray can you ſay you have ſeen him at Church within theſe four Years?

Willis. Truly I cannot call to mind whether I have or no.

Freind. I deſire Mr. Hemings may be called. I could call a great many more, but they are much to the ſame Effect as theſe are.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Sir John, if you think fit to call them, we will hear them.

Fr. Being they are not here, I will not trouble you farther; it is all to the ſame Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Well, take your own Courſe; if you'll call them, the Court will be ſure to hear them.

Fr. But, my Lord, here is one Thing that I muſt deſire your Lordſhip's Direction in: If theſe Gentlemen, my Lord, Capt. Porter and Capt. Blair, who are the two Witneſſes, and none but thoſe two, againſt me, if they are Papiſts, they are not good Witneſſes againſt a Proteſtant, to prove him a Traitor within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. For the Statute ſays, He that is indicted muſt be proveably attainted; which cannot be by the Evidence of Papiſts, and thoſe that refuſe to take the Oaths of Obedience, which are required to be taken: And therefore I humbly beſeech you, that you will pleaſe to tender them the Oaths, for there is a Statute in the 3 Jac. I. Cap. 4. which appoints the tendering of the Oaths to them.

L. C. J. That is not our Buſineſs at this Time.

Fr. Then I muſt beg your Pardon that they are not ſubſtantial Witneſſes; for this is the Law, as I am inform'd. I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhip, whether this be not the Law. I only ſpeak it to know whether it be convenient for me to rehearſe it. I ask'd the Queſtion before they were ſworn. I know not whether it be convenient for me to move it now.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, it is very convenient now; now is the proper Time.

Freind. Before ever they were ſwore I would have ask'd them the Queſtion, whether they were Papiſts or not, but it was not allowed, it was over-rul'd: Now, my Lord, there is ſuch a Statute, and I humbly beſeech you to tender them the Oaths, and that would be a Demonſtration, that they were Papiſts, and then they could be no good Witneſſes.

L. C. J. You ſay well, if we could find ſuch a Statute, that no Papiſt ſhould be a Witneſs; but there is no ſuch.

Freind. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, and I hope you will not take it amiſs; I offer what I am advis'd to offer.

L. C. J. No, no, by no Means, there will be nothing taken amiſs.

Freind. For the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, and that of the 30th of King Charles the Second, and that of the 3d of King James the Firſt, Cap. 4. here it is plainly demonſtrable, that Papiſts are not to be believ'd againſt any Proteſtant, who is with them eſteem'd a damnable Heretick; and then they believe the Pope and their Prieſts can abſolve them from all Oaths, and they are declared to be given to Evaſions, and Equivocations, and mental Reſervations, and can have Diſpenſations for all their Villanies; and therefore they are not to be credited: Their Evidence is of no Value, unleſs they will in this Manner upon their Oaths renounce theſe Principles: Therefore I humbly beg they may have the Oaths tender'd them.

L. C. J. That is not our Buſineſs now.

Freind. And, my Lord, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to promiſe me that if any Matter of Law did ariſe, my Council ſhould be heard.

L. C. J. Firſt, let us know, whether there be any ſuch Law as this you mention, or to any ſuch Purpoſe.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire my Council may come in, and ſpeak to it: For my Life is in Danger, and ſo is every honeſt Gentleman's Life every Day. I am as clear as the Child unborn, I have no Witneſſes to prove any thing, and therefore I deſire my Council may be heard.

L. C. J. If the Court did think there were any Colour in this Objection that you make, we would let you have Council: We would do it; nay, we are deſirous to do it if it could.

Freind. What, my Lord?

L. C. J. To allow you Council, if there were any Colour in this Objection in Relation to Papiſts not being Witneſſes. I would be glad to ſee the Council that would own this Objection; but indeed, I ſee no Colour in it: The Statute ſhall be produced that you quote, and then we ſhall ſee, whether there be any thing like it in that Statute. Pray will you read thoſe Words that you ſay are in that Statute to that Purpoſe.

Freind. I am not ſo expert to know the Words before and after; and therefore I think it is requiſite I ſhould have Council.

L. C. J. It is ſuppoſed you have had Council, and I ſuppoſe your Council that have adviſed you to make this Objection, have inſtructed you whereabouts in the Statute it is.

Fr. My Lord, I deſire my Council may be call'd in and heard to it.

L. C. J. I tell you, that by Law we cannot hear Council to any ſuch Matter that has no Colour of Objection in Law in it; tho' for my Part, I wiſh we could, becauſe I would fain hear what any Council can ſay to make out ſuch an Objection, that Papiſts are not good Witneſſes.

Fr. My Lord, I wiſh you would hear my Council to it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, you have deſir'd that this Statute may be turned to, and you deſire to have them read, and they ſhall be all read from the Beginning to the End.

Fr. I deſire the Statutes of the 25th of Edward the Third, the 3d of K. James the Firſt, Chap. 4. and the 30th of K. Charles the Second, may be read.

L. C. J. What Chapter is that of the 30th of K. Charles the Second.

Fr. Really it is not put down in my Paper.

L. C. J. Then look out the Chapter, while he is reading the other. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir John Freind does deſire the Statute of the 25th of Edward 3. may be read, which is the Statute about Treaſons, and the Statute upon which he is indicted, and it ſhall be read, therefore pray hearken to it.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads it.) This is made in the 25th Year of King Edward the Third. A Declaration which Offences ſhall be judged Treaſon. Item, Whereas divers Opinions have been before this Time, in what Caſes Treaſons ſhall be laid, and what not.

Fr. My Lord, I beg the Favour I may ſpeak one Word before it go on to be read.

L. C. J. Yes, with all my Heart.

Fr. I ſpeak it, my Lord, becauſe it will be to the very Thing now in Queſtion; I am adviſed that Conſultation to levy War is no Treaſon, without Rebellion and Inſurrection; and inviting Men to come from beyond Sea is no Treaſon, unleſs a Foreign Prince be invited to come with his own Subjects; for Engliſh, Scotch, and Iriſh are not Enemies, but Rebels, and to be dealt with otherwiſe; therefore I leave it to your Lordſhips, for I am no Lawyer, only I am adviſed to inſiſt upon theſe Things.

Then the Statute of the 25th of Edward 3. about Treaſons was read throughout, only about the middle the Priſoner made ſome Interruption.

Fr. I believe this Statute is not the Statute I go upon; that which I mainly inſiſt upon, is the Statute of the Third of King James the Firſt, Cap. 4.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. This is the ſame Statute you are indicted upon, the great Statute for Treaſons; and as to your Objection laſt mentioned, what is Treaſon and what is not, he is not yet come to that Part.

Fr. Well then, let him go on with it.

(It was read to the End.)

L. C. J. Now it has been read, is this the Statute you would have?

Freind. There muſt needs be a Miſtake as to the Chapter, it is ſet down the 25th of Edward 3. but there is no Chapter.

L. C. J. Yes, this muſt be the Statute, it relates to Treaſons, and it has thoſe Words in it, that what you read out of your Papers relates to. Well, that we may go on in Order of Time, what Statute of King James is it that you mention?

Fr. It is the 3d of King James 1. Capt. 5. it is upon Account of tendering the Oaths appointed to be taken by that Statute, and (reading out of a Paper) to tell the Court that they ought to have the Oaths tendered them.

L. C. J. That is the Buſineſs of another Time; read the Statute.

Cl. of Ar. An Act for the Diſcovering and Repreſſing Popiſh Recuſants. What Part is it?

Fr. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell.

L. C. J. It is a long Statute, but if he'll have it read, it muſt be read all.

Fr. My Lord, I would not give the Court any Trouble, but it is about having the Oaths tender'd to them.

Cl. of Ar. I believe this is the Paragraph, And for the better Trial how his Majeſty's Subjects ſtand affected in Point of their Loyalty and due Obedience, &c.

(A great Part of the Statute was read, relating to that Matter.)

L. C. J. What elſe would you have read, Sir John Freind?

Fr. I only gather from thence, that no Roman Catholick is capable of Swearing againſt a Proteſtant, becauſe the Pope and the Prieſts can abſolve them from their Oaths.

L. C. J. Well, what have you more to ſay?

Fr. My Lord, I only ſpeak this as to Roman Catholicks, they do not regard an Oath againſt a Proteſtant, becauſe they have their Prieſts that can abſolve them, and therefore how ſuch a Man's Oath can weigh any thing, I cannot apprehend; therefore if I have omitted any thing, I hope your Lordſhip will ſupply it, as you are my Council; for you are a Council for me, as well as the King.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, I would help you in any thing I could.

Fr. My Lord, I thank you, I deſire you to help me, for I am as innocent as the Child unborn, whatſoever theſe Men have ſworn: Theſe are hard Things that are laid upon a Gentleman, and no Man is ſafe at this Rate, they being ſworn by two Papiſts, who will ſwear any thing againſt Proteſtants.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, have you any Witneſſes to produce, that theſe two Men have any Diſpleaſure or Malice againſt you, that they ſhould accuſe you falſely?

Fr. My Lord, I am ſorry I have not my Witneſſes; I have been ſo kept up, that I had not Time for People to come to me; I had not my Council come to me before Saturday.

L. C. J. How happen'd that?

Fr. My Lord, there was a Miſtake in that, I think it was Friday, either Friday or Saturday; I had them not till Friday in the Afternoon: I was kept ſo cloſe that none were permitted to come at me: On Thurſday I had an Order, but there was a Miſtake in the Order, and I deſired to get another Order, but I could not get any Body to get another Order for me, to have my Friends to go and enquire into Things, or elſe I ſhould have found out enough Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am ſure he had an Order for Council, at the ſame Time that Notice was given him of his Trial.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Att. Gen. On Tueſday, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Baker?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I did attend Sir John Freind on Tueſday laſt, to give him Notice of his Trial as this Day; and I at the ſame Time told him if he would name his Council to me, I would procure an Order for them to come to him. The next Morning he was pleaſed to name to me Sir Bartholomew Shower; I took the Liberty to tell him, that he being ſo concerned at the Houſe of Lords, and at the Committee about Parliamentary Buſineſs, ſome other Perſons that had named him of their Council, notwithſtanding Orders were procured for him to go to them as their Council, yet by that Means they were diſappointed of him, and great Delay was given to the Priſoners; and therefore I deſir'd him to conſider of it, and to ſend to Sir Bartholomew Shower, and any other Council that he had a Mind to, and know their Pleaſures, whether they would attend him; and if he would ſend me Word, I would procure an Order for him. But not hearing from him, I went on Wedneſday to him again, and he ſaid he had ſent to Mr. Northey, but he would not come to him till he had ſpoke with Sir Bartholomew Shower, but he would ſend me Word that Night, yet he did not. But the next Day came Mr. Burleigh to me to the Duke of Shrewsbury's Office, and brought me the Names of the Perſons that he would have aſſign'd him of Council, and immediately I procured an Order for it, and away he went with it. This was upon the Thurſday; Mr. Welden, and Mr. Creſſet, or one of them were named in the Order, I am not poſitive which, and Mr. Underhill, and Mr. Burleigh were to be admitted mitted to him. Mr. Burleigh had the Order, if he did not carry it to him I can't help that.

L. C. J. When was that Order for the Council?

Mr. Baker. It was upon Thurſday, my Lord.

Fr. My Lord, may I ſpeak?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, what you will.

Fr. My Lord, the Reaſon why I had not my Witneſſes was this: There was a Gentleman, one Colonel Caſh, Lieutenant to my Lord Lucas, he undertook to go, and put in his Name, and three more, one John Neale, and one Phillips to have an Order to go about to look after my Witneſſes; but they did not put in any one of their Names, but they took up and ſecured my Kinſman Caſh, and put him into the Meſſenger's Hands, and would not ſuffer me to have any of his Aſſiſtance; therefore I ſaw what a Deſign there was upon me.

Mr. At. Gen. As for Mr. Caſh, there was very good Reaſon for it, he was ſecured for Suſpicion of Treaſon.

L. C. J. If you had wanted any Witneſſes, and had not been ſo fully prepared as you expected to be, you ſhould have moved before the Trial came on to put it off.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. But my Lord put a Queſtion to you before, Can you ſhew any Reaſon why theſe Perſons ſhould have any Malice againſt you?

Freind. My Lord, I was not ſo much a Lawyer as to know theſe Things; but it's a hard thing, that a Man that's innocent muſt ſuffer at this Rate: I have been diſappointed in every thing; for theſe Gentlemen have not been permitted to anſwer, whether they are Roman-Catholicks or no.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Nor have your Witneſſes prov'd that they are Roman-Catholicks, but only that they are reputed ſo.

L. C. J. Well, I can't tell what Avail that would have been of, if they had been proved ſo. Have you any more to ſay, Sir John Freind?

Fr. No, my Lord, I leave it to God, and you, and the Jury to conſider of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King, againſt Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar; and it comes to my Turn to ſum up the Evidence that has been given. Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar, cannot but own, that he hath hitherto had a very fair Trial, and he ſhall have no Reaſon to complain, that I do him any Injury in my Part. I am ſure both he, and you, and all of us, very well remember, when Perſons of as good Quality as he is, or better, had not the ſame Uſage or Liberty of Defence, in ſuch Caſes as this Gentleman has had: And though all Things are very well now, yet the Time was, within all our Memories, when Innocency was no Safety for a Man's Life, much leſs for his Liberty; and when thoſe two are taken away, and are invaded, Property ſignifies nothing. The Time was, when the Proteſtant Religion, and the Church of England, of which the Priſoner boaſts himſelf to be, (and for a very good Reaſon, becauſe it is the beſt of Religions,) I ſay, the Time was, when that was in Danger; and when Popery (for which he now reflects upon the Witneſſes) was like to have over-run both us and it; and if his Majeſty, with the Hazard of his Life, and at a great Expence, had not reſcued us, there is nobody doubts, but that all that we feared at that Time, would have been made good upon us ere now. And it is a melancholy thing to conſider, that there ſhould be a ſort of People amongſt us, ſo in Love with what we then dreaded, as to be continually endeavouring to bring it about again. And it is an ungrateful thing, when his Majeſty ventured his Life then, and has done it ſeveral Times ſince to defend us, and does all that he can to keep our Enemies at a Diſtance, there ſhould be a Party of Men, that do what they can to invade their Country, to deſtroy his Majeſty's Subjects, and to fall upon himſelf, when he is preſent amongſt us. I will not accuſe the Priſoner at the Bar particularly, though it is plain he knew of it.

Fr. Know of it? I declare before God, and the World, I know nothing of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This, if it were among Equals, were certainly a moſt ungrateful thing, when another Perſon is fighting in my Defence, that I ſhould deſign againſt his Life, or when he does what he can to protect my Eſtate, I ſhould be invading and ſpoiling his.

Gentlemen, if the Priſoner at the Bar is not Guilty of what he is accuſed of, and what you have heard the Witneſs give Evidence of, then nothing of this doth relate to him: But if what has been given in Evidence againſt him is true, then the Priſoner at the Bar is one of thoſe Perſons, that has done all he can to make this Country, which has been the Place of Retreat for all Proteſtants to fly to, from Perſecution in their own Countries; I ſay, to make it as unſafe for them, as that from which they came.

Gentlemen, The Evidence againſt him is, firſt, Mr. Porter, and he gives it in Evidence, that at the Old King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, there was a Meeting of the Priſoner, and Porter, and ſeveral others, in order to conſider the beſt Means, how to bring back the late King James; and they concluded at laſt, that the beſt Means would be to ſend ſome body into France, to adviſe the late King James to borrow of the French King 10000 Men, 1000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot, and that he ſhould make what Speed he could to land with them here; and to encourage and invite him to do ſo, they promiſed him their Aſſiſtance, and they did not doubt, but to be ready to meet him with 2000 Horſe at his Landing.

Gentlemen, The Perſon that was pitched upon to go upon this Errand, was Mr. Charnock, a Perſon lately executed for the Treaſons of which he was attainted. Mr. Charnock was diffident whether this was the Effect of ſober Conſideration, and therefore would not undertake to carry this Meſſage, 'till there had been another Meeting of the ſame Perſons; to ſee whether they continued in the ſame Mind. Another Meeting accordingly was appointed, and agreed upon, and that was at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern at St. James's, and there, he ſays, there were almoſt all the Perſons that were in Leadenhall-ſtreet; and at that Meeting the Queſtion being ask'd, Whether they were of the ſame Opinion, that Mr. Charnock ſhould go to France to the late King upon that Meſſage, that I told you of before, they did all agree to abide by the old Reſolution; that he ſhould go, and make as ſpeedy a Return as he could, and bring back the late King's Anſwer.

Captain

Captain Porter tells you, that Mr. Charnock did go to France, and comes and brings Word back, that the French King could not at that Time ſpare that Force that was then deſir'd; and ſo it was delay'd at that Time, becauſe the French King was not at Leiſure then to employ his Men in this Service; but it was likely to have taken Place, but very lately, if the Providence of God had not prevented it.

Gentlemen, our next Witneſs is Captain Blair, and he tells you, That about Two Years ago, Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhew'd him a Commiſſion that he had received from the late King James, to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, of which he was to be Colonel; that this was ſigned James Rex at the Top, and counterſigned by my Lord Melford, and it was in Paper. And that there was a great many Conſultations between Sir John Freind, himſelf, and others, about the Raiſing of this Regiment, and providing Officers for it. He tells you he was to have been Lieutenant Colonel, and was to procure as many Officers and Troopers as he could; and he tells you, he did procure ſeveral Officers; and he names them; one Fiſher was to be eldeſt Captain, one Vernatte, and one Hall, and one Bertram, and that Bertram was to be Lieutenant to Blair in his own Troop.

Gentlemen, a great deal of the Evidence which Captain Blair has given, is indeed out of Sir John Freind's own Mouth, and that is as ſtrong an Evidence as poſſibly can be given; and he does for that Purpoſe tell ye, that he ſaid one Evans was to be a Captain of Horſe, and one Colonel Slater was grown ſo much in Sir John Freind's Favour, that he rivalled Captain Blair, in the Opinion of Sir John Freind; and Sir John Freind for that Reaſon would have two Lieutenant Colonels, whereof Slater was to be one. Captain Blair ſays, he took that amiſs, that any one beſides himſelf ſhould be in that Poſt, and reſented it to Sir John Freind; and therefore Sir John Freind found out another Office for Slater; and that was to be a Captain of a Troop of Horſe, that ſhould conſiſt of Non-ſwearing Parſons, and which were to be an independent Troop.

Gentlemen, He tells you that he did liſt ſeveral Men, but the particular Perſons, tho' he has named the Officers, he did not ſo diſtinctly remember, but they are in the Paper that he delivered to the Council, which he has not about him: He tells you, that Sir John Freind told him, that one Richardſon was another Captain of Horſe, and the like of one Mr. Cole, that he was to be a Captain likewiſe.

He alſo acquainted you, Gentlemen, that he did receive from Sir John Freind ſeveral Sums of Money, and he acquaints you in particular with the Manner how; he ſays that Sir John Freind had expended 100 l. towards the 300 l. that was paid for the Eſcape of Colonel Parker out of the Tower; and that Sir John Freind was to be reimburſed by Monies that were to be tranſmitted from King James at St. Germains. He tells you that Piggott had received the Money, but did not deal with Sir John Friend ſo fairly as to pay it to him; but when Captain Blair was preſſing on Sir John Freind for ſome Money, Sir John Freind was contented that he ſhould have 20 l. provided he got it from Piggott out of this 100 l. Captain Blair had not Intereſt enough it ſeems to get it himſelf from Piggott, but he applies himſelf to one Harriſon or Johnſon, (for it ſeems he goes by both thoſe Names) a Prieſt, who had an Intereſt in Piggott, by which Means he got 20 l. of Piggott, and this he ſays was in June or July laſt.

Then, Gentlemen, he tells you afterwards, he was preſſing upon Sir John Freind to have another 20 l. and Sir John Freind was contented he ſhould have it, provided he had it from Piggott, and he produces ye a Letter that was from that very Perſon, the Priſoner at the Bar, which is to that Purpoſe; excuſing himſelf that Captain Blair had not heard from him, but that he would meet him at ſuch a Time, and at ſuch a Coffee-houſe. The Matter indeed is not directly expreſs'd in Words, but at the Time and Place the Priſoner did meet Blair, and there was Harriſon and this Piggott, and there 5 l. of the laſt 20 l. was paid him; and the other 15 l. was paid him afterwards; and he ſwears theſe Two Twenty Pounds were paid to him by Sir John Freind, upon Account of the Charge that Blair had been at in drinking with and treating thoſe Men who were to be engaged with Sir John Freind in his Regiment.

Gentlemen, he tells you likewiſe, that Sir John Freind told him he had written a Letter to King James, and he ſhewed him this Letter, and this was at that Piggott's Mother's Houſe; and when Blair read it, he tells you he thought it was ſo well penned, that he did apprehend Ferguſon muſt have a Hand in it, and that it was none of Sir John Freind's own; and that upon this Sir John Freind was angry, that he ſhould ſuſpect that Sir John was not the Writer of this Letter; all this ſhews an Intelligence with King James, and makes out all the reſt of the intended Invaſion by King James, and a French Force here.

Captain Blair likewiſe tells you, Gentlemen, that Sir John Fenwick had Four Troops of Horſe, as Sir John Freind told him, by way of Encouragement, which were all ready for the Service; and that Ferguſon undertook to bring a Number of Men, and was to be one himſelf in that Party; and all this was to be put in Practice when the Thoulon Fleet came about, and join'd the Breſt Fleet. And laſtly he tells you, when he went in the Coach with Sir John Freind, Sir John told him they muſt act very warily, and be very good Husbands, for in truth it had coſt him ſo much, that if the Fleet did not come ſoon, or the Deſign ſhould miſcarry, he ſhould want Money to carry on his Trade. All this poſitive Evidence is of the Witneſſes own Knowledge, from the Priſoner's own Mouth.

Againſt this Evidence, Gentlemen, he takes Exception; that the Two Witneſſes are Roman Catholicks; but this is no Exception to their Evidence at all; for it was never yet allowed, or indeed objected, that I know of, before, that Roman Catholicks were not good Witneſſes. A Roman Catholick may be an honeſt Man, notwithſtanding his Religion: But, I think, that every body knows that Men who have been ill in other Things, tho' Roman Catholicks, may, as to thoſe particular Things, be good Witneſſes. Nay, not long ago, but on Wedneſday laſt we produced ſome Witneſſes, who were Roman Catholicks, and yet allowed for good Evidence, tho' ingaged in that horrid Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King; and if any thing would have taken off their Evidence, certainly the Guilt of ſuch a Crime would do it, more than the Pretence of any particular Perſuaſion of Religion. Nay, I muſt crave Leave to ſay farther, that this Argument is ſo far from making him no Witneſs, that it makes it the more likely he does ſpeak the Truth, and therefore is a good Witneſs. For tho' Roman Catholicks may be honeſt Men, yet they are more likely to engage in ſuch a Deſign than any other Men. And I think I may very ſafely add, Sir John Freind would not have found ſo many that he could ingage in ſuch a Buſineſs as this, that were of any Religion but the Roman Catholick, and therefore he applied himſelf to theſe Perſons, as moſt likely to imbark with him on ſuch a Bottom.

Gentlemen, as to what Courtney, that was brought from the Gate-houſe, ſays about his Diſcourſe with Captain Blair in the Priſon; Captain Blair has upon his Oath declared, that he did not go ſo far as to ſay, he did any thing againſt his Conſcience, but only Courtney bid him take care what he ſwore, and preſs'd him no farther. He pretends he came caſually into Blair's Chamber, but it is plain he intruded into his Room; for it is ſworn by the Jaylor, and Blair himſelf, that he had given Directions none ſhould come into his Room but his Wife, ſo that does not diſcountenance the Evidence of Blair at all, and if you do believe what our Witneſſes have ſaid, Captain Porter and Captain Blair, then Sir John Freind is guilty of all the Crimes that are charged upon him in this Indictment, and I hope you'll be ſo juſt to your Prince, to your Country, and to yourſelves, as to find him Guilty accordingly.

Mr. Cowper. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, ſpare me a Word on the ſame Side. My Lord, I do not trouble your Lordſhip out of an Apprehenſion that there is any thing neceſſary to be ſaid to the Court in this Matter, or for the Satisfaction of the Jury, but, if poſſible, that we might convince the Priſoner at the Bar, that he has had no hard Meaſure, in this Proſecution, meeted to him, but that he is proved Guilty of the Crime of which he ſtands accuſed, and that really there is no Weight at all, in the Defence which he has made.

The firſt Part of it goes to diſcredit one of our Evidences, Captain Blair, from ſome Diſcourſe that he would object to have paſs'd between him and the Perſon here produced, in the Priſon of the Gate-houſe. And the firſt Part of that Diſcourſe was, upon Blair's firſt coming into the Priſon; and as to that Time, the Objection amounts to no more than this; that Captain Blair would not confeſs, when he was pump'd by a Fellow Priſoner, that he was engaged in ſo horrid a Deſign: What Weight there is in ſuch an Objection, truly I cannot ſee, but will leave it to any Man's Judgment to conſider, That a Man, when he is freſhly taken upon ſuch an Occaſion, does not immediately confeſs his Guilt to every Body that meets him, nay, to Perſons that would not have lik'd him for making ſuch a Confeſſion, but perhaps would have deſtroy'd him in Priſon for ſo doing.

The other Diſcourſe was upon Friday, the next Day, I think, before Captain Blair went to Hick's-Hall, to his Examination; and then he intrudes himſelf into Blair's Chamber, when he lay very ill upon the Bed, accoſts him with a Cup of Brandy in his Hand, and with good Advice at the ſame Time, that he ſhould take great Care in what he ſhould ſay at Hicks's-Hall, and the like: And then Captain Blair, it ſeems, did expreſs ſome Reluctancy in the Thing he was going about, as if it were againſt his Mind and Inclination. If that were true, (though Captain Blair denies it poſitively upon his Oath) yet it was no more than, I am willing to obſerve for the Priſoner, Captain Blair did expreſs here, when he firſt came into Court; and it is no more than what is natural, ſince the Priſoner had been his Friend and Intimate, and he was going to depoſe that againſt him, which was likely to prove fatal to him.

My Lord, As to another Part of his Defence, it conſiſts chiefly in this: The Evidence brought to prove, that the King's Witneſſes are reputed Roman Catholicks, and that the Priſoner is a reputed Proteſtant of the Church of England. If that be true too, all that can be rationally and fairly collected from thence is this, that they (the Witneſſes I mean) when they engaged in ſuch a black and execrable Deſign, might be very good Papiſts; but I am ſure it will be agreed, That the Priſoner in ſo doing was a very bad Proteſtant.

My Lord, he objects to their Evidence this likewiſe, That, if they be Papiſts, they may be abſolv'd by the Pope, or their Prieſts, though they ſhould ſwear falſely. Poſſibly that may be ſo, for ought I know; I confeſs, I am not very well acquainted with the Principles of that Religion: But this I dare ſay, that every one, who has heard what has been ſworn by them, will think it ſo great a Diſſervice to the Popiſh Cauſe and Intereſt, that it will be one of the laſt Things their Prieſts will ever abſolve them of.

My Lord, there's another Matter the Priſoner has thought fit to inſiſt upon; he has brought two or three Clergymen to depoſe, that when ever he diſcourſed with them (it ſeems at all Times) he was talking about being in a Plot, and very readily told his Reſolution not to be in any. It ſeems it ſtill ſwam uppermoſt; his Profeſſions were made very cauſeleſly: For they all ſay nothing introduc'd them; but of his own meer Motion he was always declaring he was not then in a Plot, nor ever would be. I have heard, that one Way, weak Men and Children often diſcover their Knowledge of a Secret intruſted to them, is, by a repeated and unneceſſary declaring, that they know nothing of the Matter.

My Lord, in the next Place for his Defence, he juſt offered a Point of Law; but the Court ſo well ſatisfied him in that, that I think he waved it. He alledged, that a bare Conſpiracy to levy War is not Treaſon; and the Court did him right in declaring (as God forbid but they ſhould) that it is not Treaſon: But I deſire the Gentlemen of the Jury would conſider that the Priſoner at the Bar is not accus'd barely of a Conſpiracy to levy War, but you are told to what End that War was to be levied, to join the late King upon his Deſcent into this Kingdom with a French Power, in order to drive his Majeſty out of the Kingdom, and to depoſe him from the Crown; which is a Killing him in the Eye of the Law: And that is High-Treaſon by whatever Means they intended to effect it; whether by War or a Stab, or any other Manner, it is indifferent

In the next Place, my Lord, I would not take Notice of another Part of his Defence, which had been better let alone, wherein he admits that he was preſent at the two Meetings he is accuſed to have been at by Porter; but he only differs in one Point, that there was nothing talked then but general and indifferent Diſcourſe. The Witneſſes have ſworn what the Diſcourſe was, and you will weigh the one againſt the other; his Affirmation of a Thing unlikely in Defence of himſelf, and what is depoſed upon Oath by the King's Witneſſes to the contrary.

My Lord, there is one thing more I would take Notice of, and that is the Evidence of Mr. Bertram, which we do not produce as a direct Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, but as a Confirmation of what was ſworn by Blair. And it does ſhew that the Matter ſworn by Blair, was not of late deviſed out of Malice, or otherwiſe, to deſtroy the Priſoner; for that Blair acquainted Bertram with, and diſcourſed him about the principal Matters of Fact, that are now ſworn, at leaſt Two Years ago; and beſides his Evidence and the Evidence of Blair concur in this Particular, that he was to be Lieutenant in Blair's Troop.

My Lord, ſuch a Concurrence of Evidence and other Circumſtances in this Matter, greatly increaſe the Weight of the Proof againſt the Priſoner, eſpecially when there is nothing material alledged by him in his Defence, and therefore I ſhall trouble your Lordſhip no further.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir John Freind, the Priſoner at the Bar is indicted for High-Treaſon. The Treaſon that is mentioned in the Indictment is Conſpiring, Compaſſing, and Imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King. To prove the Conſpiracy and Deſign of the King's Death, there are two principal Overt-Acts that are mainly inſiſted upon. The one is the Conſulting and agreeing with divers others to ſend Mr. Charnock into France to King James, to deſire him to perſuade the French King to ſend over Forces here to aſſiſt them; who were to furniſh other Forces for the raiſing of a War within this Kingdom, in order to depoſe the King; and accordingly Mr. Charnock was ſent upon that Deſign. The other Overt-Act is the Priſoner's having a Commiſſion from the late King, and preparing and directing Men to be levied, and to be ready to be in a Regiment, of which Sir John Freind was by that Commiſſion to be Colonel, and this was always to aſſiſt in the Reſtitution of King James, and in order thereunto in the Depoſing and Expulſion of King William.

Theſe Gentlemen, I tell you, are the two Overt-Acts that are principally inſiſted upon; and to prove Sir John Freind guilty of theſe there are two Witneſſes that have been produced, the one is Capt. Porter, who ſpeaks to the firſt, the other is Capt. Blair, who ſpeaks to the ſecond.

Captain Porter tells you, that the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June laſt, that he and Sir John Freind, and others that he mentioned, were at the King's-head Tavern in Leadenhall-ſtreet, and there they entered into a Diſcourſe about the Returning of the late King James; and they did conſider among themſelves which was the moſt effectual Way, and what were the moſt probable Means to have him reſtored: And thereupon it was agreed among them, that they would ſend a Meſſenger into France to him, to deſire him that he would ſollicit the French King to furniſh him with 10000 Men, to be ſent into England, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; and they did agree, that when theſe Forces were ſent, conſiſting of this Number of Men, then they would be ready to meet and join them with 2000 Horſe, every one of them was to furniſh his Quota; to which Sir John Freind did expreſsly agree. The Meſſenger that they agreed to ſend was with them in Company, and heard the Conſult, which was Mr. Charnock, who was lately tried and ſince executed.

This being at that Time determined, Mr. Charnock intended to go upon the Execution of that Deſign, and made ready for his Journey: But before he went, he had a Deſire to meet with the Company again, and have a further Diſcourſe upon this Matter, to ſee whether they did perſevere in the Reſolution they had ſo taken. There was another Meeting about a Week or a Fotnight after, which was at Mr. Mountjoy's, a Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet, where met Sir John Friend, Captain Porter, and divers others of the Company that were before at the King's-head. And there they entered into a Debate of the Matter again; the Queſtion there was, whether Mr. Charnock, ſhould be ſent into France, as it was formerly agreed, and there it was again determined he ſhould go, to which he agreed, and Capt. Porter ſays, that he did go about two or three Days after.

Mr. Porter tells you farther, that about the time that Mr. Charnock came back, Mr. Porter was in Priſon, and he did not ſee him upon his firſt Return, but afterwards he met and ſpoke with him, and asked him what was the Effect of his Negotiation, and Mr. Charnock told him, that he had done as he was directed; that he had been with King James, and he had ſpoke to the French King, but the Anſwer returned was this, That the French King had Occaſion for his Forces that Year to be otherways imployed, and therefore he could not afford ſuch a Number of Men that Year; and Mr. Porter ask'd him whether he had been with the reſt of the Gentlemen, and acquainted them therewith; and he ſaid he had. This is the Subſtance of Mr. Porter's Evidence; whereby you may perceive what the Meetings were for, what Reſolutions were there taking, and what was the Iſſue and Effect of them.

The next Witneſs is Capt. Blair, and his Evidence goes to the other Part, that is, to Sir John Friend's having a Commiſſion from the late King James, and engaging him and others to be in his Regiment, whereof Sir John was to be Colonel, and the providing of Officers. And for that the Evidence ſtands thus.

Captain Blair tells ye, that about two or three Years ago, he was with Sir John Freind at his Lodgings in Surrey-ſtreet, and there he did produce a Commiſſion that he had from King James to be Colonel of a Regiment of Horſe; he was to raiſe it himſelf, and was to appoint, and provide what Officers he thought fit. He ſays, he read the Commiſſion and it was ſigned at the Top James Rex, and counterſigned at the Bottom Melfort; this he is poſitive in, and farther that Sir John Friend did promiſe that he ſhould be Lieutenant-Colonel of this Regiment, and alſo deſired that Captain Blair would get as many Men as he could, and that there were other Officers that were appointed in that Regiment, and particularly one Fiſher was brought to Sir John Freind by Captain Blair, to be his firſt Captain, and one Colonel Slater, who was much in Favour with Sir John Freind, was to have been another Lieutenant Colonel; for, ſaid Sir John Freind, I have a mind to him to be my Lieutenant Colonel, and though you are ſo too, yet it is no Matter if we have two in this Regiment; at which Blair took very great Offence, and expreſſed as much to Sir John Freind, whereupon Sir John Freind told him, it ſhould not be ſo, but ſaid he would make another Proviſion for Mr. Slater; that he ſhould be a Captain of an independent Troop, that ſhould be compoſed of Non-Swearing Parſons, and that ſhall ſatisfy him.

And Sir John Freind did intruſt Captain Blair with the providing of Men and managing of them. And Captain Blair tells you, he was at a great deal of Charge, and laid out diverſe Sums to careſs them, and keep them together, and wanting Money to proceed in that Affair, he came to Sir John Freind, and made great Complaints, that he wanted Money to carry on the Deſign, by obliging the Men to keep together, and therefore preſſed to Sir John Freind to furniſh him with ſome Money; ſays Sir John, There is 100 l. due to me, becauſe I laid down 100 l. to further the Eſcape of Colonel Parker, and Piggott has received it, and had Directions to pay it me, but I cannot yet get it. You ſhall have 20 l. out of that 100 l. if you can get it. Well, but how is that 20 l. to be had? It ſeems there was one Harriſon or Johnſon a Prieſt, who had ſome Intereſt in this Piggott, and he was to help him to it; and thereupon the 20 l. was actually paid the latter End of June or the Beginning of July laſt. This 20 l. he ſwears he did receive upon that Account, by the Direction of Sir John Freind, to be ſo imployed as you have been told.

Then Captain Blair had Occaſion for more Money, which was ſome time after Michaelmas laſt, which was to be employed as the former was: and he was very importunate to obtain it of Sir John Freind; at length he did obtain it, as he tells you, and the Manner how. He produces a Letter under Sir John Freind's own Hand, which ſeems to be an Anſwer to a Letter that Capt. Blair had ſent to him before, he thinks it to be his own Hand, for he is acquainted with his Hand-writing. But that is not all to prove it his Hand, for the Contents of the Letter are remarkable, which are about the Payment of Money to Blair: The Letter bears Date on a Tueſday Morning, and is directed to Captain Blair; and a Porter brought it, as he thinks, to his Houſe; and thereby it was appointed they ſhould meet on Thurſday next at Jonathan's Coffee-houſe about the Hour of Twelve. And accordingly Captain Blair came to Jonathan's Coffee-houſe, where he accordingly met with Sir John Freind, and there was Harriſon the Prieſt, and Piggot, and there he does receive a Sum of Money upon the ſame Account: So that now the Proof of this Letter does not depend barely upon the Knowledge of the Hand, but the Contents of it, and the ſubſequent Meeting at the Time and Place mentioned in the Letter, is a great Evidence that it was Sir John Freind's Hand-writing, and more Money is proved to be actually paid in the Preſence of Sir John Freind, which is the moſt material Part of the Evidence. And you are told further, that as Sir John Freind and Captain Blair were going together in a Coach, from Jonathan's Coffee-houſe to St. Martins le grand, there was a Diſcourſe between them; and Sir John Freind ſaid, For his part he would not ſtir till ſuch time as the Thoulon Fleet was come about, and joined with the Breſt Fleet. That he did think he was in Danger of being apprehended when it came about, and therefore Captain Blair was to ſculk till then, as he himſelf told him he would do, but yet he ſhould get what Men he could. And this is a great Argument of his being concerned in the intended Invaſion, and that his making Preparation for his Regiment, had Relation to the French Invaſion which was expected.

It ſeems two Years ago, there being a great Intimacy between Blair and Sir John Freind, as appears by all the Evidence, Blair was acquainted with this Deſign. For you are told of the Letter that was writ by him to King James, which he ſhewed to Captain Blair, and it was concerning his Regiment; he ſays, that Sir John Freind own'd he writ that Letter himſelf, that Blair did read the Letter and finding it ſo well penn'd, he ſaid, that he thought Ferguſon had a Hand in it, at which Sir John Freind was angry; but Blair ſays, the Letter was concerning the Regiment of which Sir John Freind was Colonel.

Then, Gentlemen, you have Bertram called to prove, that Blair did tell him, that he was to be his Lieutenant Colonel, which was long before there was any Thoughts of any Diſcovery of this intended Invaſion, and before the Diſcovery of the Plot of Aſſaſſination, which Sir John Freind did own he had ſome Knowledge of, but he diſliked it, and ſaid it would ruin King James's Affairs. So that, Gentlemen, I think this is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that has been given upon this Occaſion againſt Sir John Freind, to induce you to believe him to be guilty of this Crime with which he now ſtands charged.

But now you are to conſider what Sir John Freind ſays on behalf of himſelf. In the firſt place, he makes an Objection againſt the Credit of all theſe Witneſſes, that they are not to be believed, becauſe, ſays he, they are known or reputed to be Roman Catholicks and Papiſts, and their Conſciences and their Oaths are large, eſpecially when they think they can do an Injury to any Proteſtant; and therefore they are not to be allowed as Witneſſes, at leaſt their Credit is not ſufficient to induce a Jury to believe them. At firſt indeed, he urged there was a Statute and a Law that did diſable them from being Witneſſes; but I muſt tell you there is no ſuch Statute, nor indeed is their being Papiſts any Diminution at all to the Credit of their Teſtimony: For Papiſts are legal Witneſſes, and though there are ſevere Laws to puniſh them for their Non-conformity to the Church of England, and for other their Popiſh Practices; yet I know of no Law that renders them infamous, or incapable of being Witneſſes. For you are to conſider Papiſts are Chriſtians, and ſwear by the ſame Evangeliſts that Proteſtants do; and as for that Suppoſition, that they look upon Proteſtants as Hereticks, and can have a Diſpenſation for any Oaths that they take againſt them; you are to conſider, as it has been very well obſerved by the King's Council, that they are never like to obtain any Diſpenſation or Pardon, if they ſhould forſwear themſelves to defeat the Deſigns of the Popiſh Party; and therefore it is a very inconſiderable Objection, and in this Caſe hath no Weight.

But then he does inſiſt upon it, that Captain Blair is not to be believed; and there are two Objections he makes againſt him. Firſt, That he did deny that he knew any thing of the Plot. For Blair being upon this Occaſion brought Priſoner to the Gate-houſe, and afterwards upon a Diſcourſe of ſome News in the Flying Poſt, wherein it was mentioned, that Captain Blair had confeſs'd all, and made a full Diſcovery, and thereupon he ſhould ſay, He was innocent of the Plot, and knew nothing of it. You, Gentlemen, are to conſider the Weight of this Objection. Firſt, Suppoſe he had ſaid ſo, it might be, he was not willing (as he was not oblig'd) to own it, and would not confeſs it at that time, and to thoſe Perſons. It was not his Intereſt and Prudence to be too open; and therefore it does not follow, but becauſe a Man would not truſt others with his Confeſſion, but deny'd his Knowledge of a Plot when there was no Occaſion for him to own it, that now he ſwears it poſitively, therefore he ſhould ſwear falſely.

But Secondly, Captain Blair, who was called for the Vindication of himſelf, and his Teſtimony, has upon his Oath declared to you, that he did not ſay he knew not any thing of the Plot, but did deny any Concern in, or Knowledge of the Aſſaſſination. Now this Buſineſs, for which Sir John Freind is tried, is not for being a Party in the deſigned Aſſaſſination, but of a Deſign with Force to depoſe the King, and reſtore King James.

Then as to the other Matter that was upon Friday Night laſt; Courtney the Writneſs ſays, that he came to Captain Blair's Chamber, and took Notice of his being to be a Witneſs at Hicks's-Hall the next Day, and ſaid, I pray God direct you; and he ſays his Wife, then preſent, ſaid it was againſt his Conſcience, and he ſeemed to be in very great Trouble about it, and owned as much. But now Captain Blair himſelf, being examined upon his Oath, does deny poſitively, that either he or ſhe ſaid any ſuch thing as that it was againſt his Conſcience: He ſays, that Courtney got in to him on Purpoſe to ſurprize him, and he was aware of it, and his Deſign being to keep himſelf free from all Company, he gave Directions to the Keeper (as the Keeper himſelf ſwears) to let no Body come to him but his Wife; and Mr. Courtney intruded himſelf upon him.

Beſides, Gentlemen, you are to conſider the Probability of that which Mr. Courtney ſaith: When a Man is to be a Witneſs the next Day upon a Bill of Indictment before a Grand Jury, that he ſhould be ſo indiſcreet, as to tell any Body he was going to ſwear againſt his Conſcience, is ſtrange and very unaccountable. You are therefore to conſider of this whole Matter, what Evidence Captain Blair has given, and the Import of it, and the Weight and Credibility of that Evidence which is given againſt him.

Then Sir John Freind inſiſts upon another Matter: Says he, I am a Proteſtant, and it is not likely, that I that am a Proteſtant ſhould conſpire with Papiſts againſt Proteſtants; and for that he has called eight Witneſſes, who tell you they have known him, ſome twenty Years, ſome more, others ten, and that they have frequently converſed with him, and never knew that he was ever popiſhly affected, and they have been frequently in his Company ſince the Revolution, and they never knew that at any time he reflected upon the Government; nay, I think one ſaid, that once he did reprove a Man for talking undecently of the Government; that he uſed conſtantly to go to Church four or five Years ago (though there is no Account of that ſince). And particularly there is one Mr. Lupton that was his Chaplain, and he tells you he was in his Houſe; and there he read the Common-Prayer in the Family ſince the Revolution, and pray'd for the King and the late Queen, and Sir John Freind was often preſent at the Prayers, and particularly when he prayed for the preſent King, and the late Queen; but he ſays he himſelf has been gone thence five Years, and has been little converſant with him ſince.

There is another Witneſs tells you, he has been in Sir John Freind's Company divers times, whom he believes to be a Proteſtant of the Church of England, and hath had a Diſcourſe concerning the preſent Government; and that Sir John Freind ſaid, that tho' he could not take the Oaths, and thereby conform to the Government, yet he was reſolved to live quietly under it; and would not engage in any Manner of Plot; for he that catched him in the Corn ſhould put him in the Pound.

This is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence on both Sides; and you, Gentlemen, are to conſider the Weight of this Part of his Defence too; whether it be a ſufficient Anſwer to the Evidence given againſt him, and has Weight enough to outballance what the Witneſſes for the King have ſworn? For although he was a Proteſtant, yet it is plain he had no great Liking to the Government; and therefore would not take the Oaths; and though he was preſent at the Common-Prayer, when the King and Queen were prayed for, yet whether he joined in thoſe Prayers is very uncertain. There are a great many, who are not very well affected to the preſent Government, that come to Church, and are preſent at the publick Prayers; but it may be a very great Doubt whether they join in their Prapers for the preſent Government or no; his Conſcience that ſcruples the taking the Oaths, might ſcruple that too; but whether Sir John Freind's being a Proteſtant, and his Declaring he would never be in a Plot, be a ſufficient Proof, that therefore he never was in one; and that his former Diſcourſe of that Kind ſhould diſcredit theſe Witneſſes, that have ſworn he has been ſo much concerned in a Plot, you are to conſider; and comparing the Weight and Nature of the Evidence on the one Side, and the other, it muſt be left to your Determination.

Then there is another Thing that he did inſiſt upon, and that is Matter of Law. The Statute of the 25th Ed. 3. was read, which is the great Statute about Treaſons; and that does contain divers Species of Treaſon, and declares what ſhall be Treaſon. One Treaſon is the Compaſſing, and imagining the Death of the King; another is the levying War: Now, ſays he, here is no War actually levied; and a bare Conſpiracy or Deſign to levy War, does not come within this Law againſt Treaſon. Now for that, I muſt tell you, if there be only a Conſpiracy to levy War, it is not Treaſon: But if the Deſign and Conſpiracy be either to kill the King, or to depoſe him, or impriſon him, or put any Force or Reſtraint upon him, and the Way and Method of effecting of theſe, is by levying a War, there the Conſulta-tion

tion, and the Conſpiracy to levy a War for that Purpoſe, is High Treaſon, tho' no War be levied: For ſuch Conſultation and Conſpiracy is an Overt-Act, proving the Compaſſing the Death of the King, which is the firſt Treaſon mentioned in the Statute of the 25th of Ed. 3. For the Words of that Statute are; That if any Man ſhall compaſs, or imagine the Death of the King. Now becauſe a Man deſigns the Death, Depoſition, or Deſtruction of the King, and to that Deſign, agrees and conſults to levy War, that this ſhould not be High-Treaſon, if a War be not actually levied, is very ſtrange Doctrine, and the contrary has always been held to be Law. There may a War be levied without any Deſign upon the King's Perſon, or endangering of it; which, if actually levied, is High-Treaſon; but a bare Deſigning to levy War, without more, will not be Treaſon. As for Example*; if Perſons do aſſemble themſelves, and act with Force in Oppoſition to ſome Law, which they think inconvenient, and hope thereby to get it repealed; this is levying a War and Treaſon, though purpoſing and deſigning it is not ſo: So when they endeavour in great Numbers with Force to make ſome Reformation, of their own Heads, without purſuing the Methods of the Law, that is a levying of War, and Treaſon, but the Purpoſing and Deſigning it, is not ſo.

* Riſing with Force to pull down all Incloſures, to expell Strangers, to pull down Bawdy-Houſes, is levying of War, and Treaſon; but a bare Purpoſing and Deſigning to raiſe ſuch a Force, for ſuch a Purpoſe, is not Treaſon.

But if there be, as I told you, a Purpoſe and Deſign to deſtroy the King, and to depoſe him from his Throne, or to reſtrain him, or have any Power over him, which is propoſed or deſigned to be effected by War that is to be levied, ſuch a Conſpiracy and Conſultation to levy War for the bringing this to paſs, is an Overt-Act of High-Treaſon. So that, Gentlemen, as to that Objection, that he makes in Point of Law, it is of no Force, if there be Evidence ſufficient to convince you, that he did conſpire to levy War for ſuch an End.

Gentlemen, the Evidence you have heard what it is, you may conſider the Weight of it, and the Circumſtances that do attend it; and likewiſe the Anſwers that have been given by the Priſoner to invalidate that Evidence, and to prove the Improbability of what they have teſtified againſt him. You have heard, I ſay, the Evidence on the one Side, and the other; if you are not ſatisfied, that what the Witneſſes have ſworn is true, that Sir John Freind did engage in ſuch a Deſign for ſuch a Purpoſe, then you are to acquit him; but on the other Side, if you believe that Sir John Freind is guilty of what the Witneſſes have depoſed againſt him, then you are to find him Guilty.

Juryman. My Lord, we deſire we may have that Letter with us that was produced here.

L. C. J. No, no, you cannot have it by Law.

Juryman. May it not be left with the Foreman, my Lord?

L. C. J. No; but you may look upon it in Court before you go away, if you will.

Then the Letter was handed to the Jury, and one of them handed it to the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Why do you do ſo? You ſhould not give the Priſoner the Letter.

Juryman. It was done to ſee whether it was his Hand; and we deſire, if there be any Body here that knows his Hand-writing, or that ſaw him write it, may be produced.

L. C. J. Why? Did not he own the Letter to the Witneſs afterwards? It was ſworn to you he did; and that he met according to the Appointment in the Letter, and that Money was paid.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and an Officer was ſworn to keep them according to Law, till agreed; and about Quarter of an Hour afterwards they returned into Court, and the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, Anſwer to your Names. Thomas Clark——

Mr. Clark. Here.

(And ſo did all the reſt of the Twelve.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) Look upon the Priſoner: How ſay ye, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

L. C. J. Jaylor, look to him, he is found Guilty of High-Treaſon.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Sir John Freind is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, nor Chattels, Lands, nor Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge.

L. C. J. Diſcharge the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, the Court diſcharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

L. C. J. Then we had beſt to adjourn the Court till to-morrow Morning.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez: All Manner of Perſons that have any thing more to do, at this General Seſſions of the Peace, Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London; and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middleſex, may depart hence for this Time, and give their Attendance here again, to-morrow Morning at ſeven of the Clock, and God ſave the King.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate, and was brought the next Day to the Bar to offer what he had to ſay for Stay of Judgment; and afterwards received Sentence of Death, as a Traytor.

CLV. The Trial of Sir WILLIAM PARKYNS, Knight, at the Old Baily, for High-Treaſon, March 24. 1695. 8 W. III.

Tueſday, March 24. 1695.

This Day the Trial of Sir William Parkyns, Knt. came on at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, for High Treaſon.

Clerk of the Arraignments.

CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez. All Manner of Perſons that have any thing more to do at this General Seſſions of the Peace, Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London; and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middleſex, and were adjourned over to this Day, draw near, and give your Attendance, for now they will proceed to the Pleas of the Crown for the ſame City, and County; and God ſave the King.

Cl. of Ar. Middleſex. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, You good Men of the County of Middleſex, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that ſhall be at the Bar, anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called, every Man at the firſt Call, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fail thereupon.

Then the Jury that were returned in the Pannel, were all called over and the Appearances of thoſe who anſwered to the Call, were recorded.

About ten of the Clock the Judges (to wit) the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby came into the Court.

Cl. of Ar. Set Sir William Parkyns to the Bar. (Which was done.) Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand.

Parkyns. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I humbly beg the Favour of one Word before I am arraigned. My Wife coming to ſee me in my Diſtreſs, ſent up a Trunk of Linnen for our Uſe, and the Sheriffs of London have ſeized it, and do detain it. It has Linnen in it, and all her neceſſary Things, and all Things have been torn from me, ſince I was apprehended, but what is there; I have nothing to ſubſiſt upon but what is there; for no Money can I get from any Body, no Body will pay us a Farthing.

Mr. Sheriff Buckingham. My Lord, we were ſent for to Mr. Secretary Trumball's Office, and when we came there, there was a Trunk that had been ſeized, as belonging to Sir William Parkyns; and when we came thither it was opened, and there was in it ſome Houſhold Linnen, and ſome Plate? and Mr. Secretary Trumball was pleaſed, after having ſearched the Trunk, to ſeal it up, and deliver it to my Brother and me, to be kept; and this is all we know of it.

* L. C. J. Where was this Trunk ſeized? * Sir John Holt.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. We found it in the Secretary's Office, and it was delivered to us there, and we gave a Receipt for it to bring it down again when called for? we did not ſeize it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, your Trunk was ſeized I ſuppoſe in order to ſearch for Papers.

Parkyns. Yes, I believe it was; but I hope it ſhall be delivered back now they have found nothing in it, and I have nothing elſe to ſubſiſt upon but what is there.

L. C. J. Is there any Plate there? What is there in the Trunk?

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. There is ſome Diaper and Damask Linnen, a Carpet, and ſome Pieces of Plate, two or three hundred Ounces of Plate, for ought I know. We had it from the Secretary's Office; we did not ſeize it.

[Then the Judges conſulted among themſelves.]

L. C. J. He ought to have his Plate to ſell, to ſupport him that he may have Bread.

Parkyns. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to direct the Sheriff to deliver it back.

L. C. J. Well, ſome Care or other ſhall be taken in it.

Parkyns. My Lord, I have nothing to ſubſiſt upon, unleſs I can make ſomething of what is there; I have a Wife and four Children, and nothing to ſubſiſt upon.

L. C. J. Let your Wife make Application for it at the Secretary's, it cannot now be done here. Why did you not make Complaint of it before? If you had, Care had been taken in it.

Park. I was told there was a Petition; for, my Lord, I was a cloſe Priſoner, and they told me there was a Petition; but my Wife never mentioned any thing of it to me while afterwards; and they talk'd of an Order of Council that they had for the Sheriff's ſeizing it; but when I came to enquire into it, there was no Order about it, but only to ſearch and examine it.

L. C. J. Well, ſome Order ſhall be taken about it.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. My Lord, we have given a Receipt to the Secretary for it.

L. C. J. But he muſt have wherewithal to ſubſiſt and buy him Bread while he is in Priſon.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. My Lord, I ſee Mr. Burleigh there, who was Sir John Freind's Sollicitor; I would humbly move your Lordſhip, that it may be inquired into, how he came by the Pannel of the Jury yeſterday? For it ſeems to reflect upon us, as if we had given the Priſoner a wrong Pannel.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. No, I think there can be no Reflection upon you; but I think it would be very proper to have the Matter examined.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Ay, let Burleigh come in; [which he did.] Pray, how came you by the Pannel which you gave to Sir John Freind?

Burleigh. My Lord, I had three ſeveral Copies ſent me by Sir John Freind's Friends, to the Horn Tavern about three or four a Clock, and I deliver'd one of them to Sir John Freind; but he had one before I delivered mine.

L. C. J. Who ſent them to you, or brought them to you?

Burleigh. I had them brought to me by a Porter.

Mr. Baker. You know you might have had it from the proper Officer, for asking.

Burl. I had them brought me from Sir John Freind's Freinds.

L. C. J. Can you tell who had it from the Sheriff?

Burl. My Lord, I know not: I had three Copies ſent me in a Quarter of an Hour's Time; whence they came I know not; the Sheriff knows me, and every Body elſe.

Mr. Sh. Buck. I do know you, and would have you be fair in your Practice.

Mr. Baker. The Inquiry is made, becauſe a falſe Copy is put upon him; you might have had a true Copy, if you had applied yourſelf right.

Burl. I ſent to Mr. Farringdon for it.

L. C. J. The Sheriff delivered it the Secondary, who is the proper Officer.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Sir John Freind ſaid he had it from him yeſterday.

Burl. But he had one before; how he came by it, I can't tell; nor whence thoſe came that were brought to me.

Mr. J. Rokeby. If you will not take care to go to the right Place, it is no Body's Fault but your own, if you ſuffer by it.

Burl. I was with my Lady, and delivered a Petition for this Trunk.

L. C. J. But it ſeems it was under the Conuzance of the Secretary, and Direction was given to go thither; ſome Care or other muſt be taken in it, and ſhall; but go on now to Arraign the Priſoner.

Cl. of Arr. Hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt indicted in Middleſex, by the Name of Sir William Parkyns, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Kt. For that, Whereas an open, and notoriouſly publick, and moſt ſharp, and cruel War, for a long time hath been, and yet is, by Sea and by Land had, carried on, and proſecuted by Lewis the French King, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. During all which Time, the ſaid Lewis the French King, and his Subjects were, and yet are Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and his Subjects, You the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, a Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is of this Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premiſes, nor having the Fear of God in your Heart, not weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traitor againſt the ſaid moſt Serene, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our ſaid Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, &c. your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord; the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh, intending and contriving, and with all your Strength purpoſing, deſigning and endeavouring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily and very well eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change and alter; as alſo the ſame our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring; and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery, to the aforeſaid French King, to ſubdue and bring; the firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe, deſign and intend our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then your Supreme, true, natural, rightful and lawful Sovereign Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Command, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depoſe, caſt down, and utterly to deprive; and the ſame our Sovereign Lord the King, to kill, ſlay, and murder; and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, by his Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, conquer, and ſubdue, to move, ſtir up, procure and aid; and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King throughout all this whole Kingdom of England; to make and cauſe; and that you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, to the aforeſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, then and there, during the War aforeſaid, traiterouſly were adhering and aiding; and the ſame moſt abominable, wicked and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, Intentions, and Purpoſes of yours aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect and bring to effect; and in Proſecution, Performance, and Execution of the traiterous Adheſion aforeſaid, you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, as ſuch a falſe Traitor, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame firſt Day of June in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, with one Robert Charnock, (late of High-Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, duly convicted and attainted) and with divers other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, to procure from the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then and yet Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, great Numbers of Soldiers and armed Men, this Kingdom of England to invade and fight with, and to levy, procure and prepare great Numbers of armed Men, and Troops, and Legions againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to riſe up and be formed; and with thoſe Enemies at

at and upon ſuch their Invaſion and Entrance into this Kingdom of England, to join and unite; Rebellion and War againſt him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and wage; and the ſame our Sovereign Lord the King ſo as aforeſaid to depoſe, and him to kill and murder. And further, with the ſaid falſe Traitors, the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, traiterouſly you did conſult, conſent, and agree to ſend the aforeſaid Robert Charnock as a Meſſenger from you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, and the ſame other Traitors unknown, as far as, and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, to James the ſecond, late King of England, to propoſe to him, and deſire of him to obtain of the aforeſaid French King, the Soldiers and armed Men aforeſaid, for the Invaſion aforeſaid to be made; and Intelligence and Notice of ſuch their traiterous Intentions, and Adheſions, and all the Premiſes to the ſaid late King James, and the ſaid other Enemies and their Adherents, to give and exhibit; and them to inform of the ſaid Things, Particulars, and Circumſtances thereunto relating; as alſo Intelligence from them of the late intended Invaſion, and other Things and Circumſtances concerning the Premiſes, to receive, and them to you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, and the ſaid other Traitors in this Kingdom of England, to ſignify, report and declare, in Aſſiſtance, Animation, and Aid of the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, in the War aforeſaid, and to ſtir up and procure thoſe Enemies the more readily and boldly this Kingdom of England to invade, the Treaſons and traiterous Contrivances, Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes of you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns aforeſaid, to perfect and fulfil, and all the Premiſes the ſooner to execute, manage and perform, and the Invaſion aforeſaid to render and make the more eaſy, you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns afterwards, to wit, the 10th Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, traiterouſly and with Force and Arms, with the aforeſaid Robert Charnock, and very many other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent and agree, him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and deceit, to aſſaſſinate, kill and murder; and that execrable, abominable and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing the ſooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, there traiterouſly you did treat, propoſe and conſult with thoſe Traitors, of the Ways, Methods, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, which Way, and how our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait, the ſooner might be killed and ſlain, and did conſent, agree and aſſent with the ſame Traitors, that forty Horſemen or thereabouts of thoſe Traitors, and others by them and you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, to be hired, procured and paid, with Guns, Carbines and Piſtols, with Gun-Powder and Leaden-Bullets charged, and with Swords, Rapiers and other Weapons armed, ſhould lie in wait and be in Ambuſh our ſaid Lord the King in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad, to attack, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed, ſhould ſet upon the Guards of our ſaid Lord the King then and there attending him, and being with him, and ſhould over-power and fight with them, whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo Armed, him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould kill, ſlay, and murder; and that you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, then and there, did take upon you to provide five Horſes for thoſe Men which ſhould ſo kill and murder our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King; and alſo that you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, your Treaſons, and all your traiterous Intentions, Deſigns and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil and bring to Effect, afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Carbines, Rapiers and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition and Warlike Things, and Military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather, and procure, and to be bought, obtained, gathered, and procured did cauſe, and in your Cuſtody had and detained with that Intention them in and about the deteſtable, abominable and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King, and the Invaſion aforeſaid, as aforeſaid, to uſe, employ and beſtow; and alſo your Treaſons and all your traiterous Intentions, Purpoſes, and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil and fully bring to Effect; you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year laſt aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly and traiterouſly, divers Soldiers and Men Armed, and ready to be Armed, after the ſaid deteſtable, abominable and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſo as aforeſaid ſhould be done, perpetrated and committed, to riſe, and muſter, and War and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to make and wage, and with the Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, Foreigners and Strangers, Subjects and Soldiers of the ſaid Lewis the French King, being about to invade this Kingdom of England, at and upon their Invaſion and Enterance into this Kingdom then expected to be ſhortly made, themſelves, together with you the ſaid Sir William Parkyns, to join and unite, and into Troops and Legions to form, you did levy, liſt, and retain, and did procure to be levied, liſted, and retained, and thoſe Soldiers and Men for the Treaſons, Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid, then and there, and afterwards in Readineſs you had, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, His Crown and Dignity; as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided.

How ſay'ſt thou, Sir William Parkyns, Art thou Guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Parkyns. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit. How wilt thou be Tryed?

Parkyns. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Parkyns. My Lord, If your Lordſhip pleaſes to favour me with a Word or two.

L. C. J. Aye, What ſay you Sir?

Parkyns. My Lord, I have been kept in hard Priſon ever ſince I was committed, no Body has been been ſuffer'd to come to me till Friday laſt, then my Council came to me; and being charged with many Facts as I ſee in this Indictment, it will be neceſſary to have divers Witneſſes to clear myſelf of theſe Particulars; they are diſpers'd up and down, and I have had no Time to look after them, and therefore I beg your Lordſhip to put off my Trial till another Day.

L. C. J. When had you firſt Notice of your Trial?

Parkyns. The firſt Notice of my Trial was on Wedneſday laſt, in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. That is a ſufficient Time of Notice, ſure you might have provided your Witneſſes, and prepar'd for it by this Time.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, being kept ſo cloſe Priſoner, I had no Opportunity for it; for it was not poſſible for me to get any Body to come to me, till Friday Noon, not ſo much as my Council, and then there was but two Days, Saturday and Monday, (for Sunday is no Day for any Buſineſs) and it is impoſſible for me to be ready in the Manner that I ought to be. It is a perfect Diſtreſs, and Hardſhip upon me, to be put ſo ſoon upon my Trial, without my Witneſſes, and what ſhould enable me to make my Defence; therefore I humbly intreat your Lordſhip to put it off till another Day.

L. C. J. What Witneſs do you want, Sir William?

Parkyns. I have divers Witneſſes, my Lord, that can give an Account where I was from time to time, but they are many of them out of Town, and I have ſent about every Way, but cannot get them together in ſo ſhort a Time.

L. C. J. When had he Notice of his Trial?

Mr. Baker. On Wedneſday I told him, that he muſt expect to be try'd this Day, and withal, that if he would name me any Council, that he would have come to him, he ſhould have an Order next Morning for them.

L. C. J. You were told, it ſeems, on Wedneſday that you might have what Council you would.

Mr. Baker. And he had an Order upon Thurſday Morning for his Council.

Parkyns. I could not have it without Application to the Court at White-Hall, and could have no Body come to me till Thurſday, and it was Friday before I could get my Council to me.

L. C. J. You might have ſent for your Witneſſes on Thurſday, and imploy'd ſome body about that Matter then.

Parkyns. The Sollicitor that I employ'd, was imploy'd otherways, and I could not employ any Body elſe.

L. C. J. Yes, you might have employed any other about that Buſineſs.

Parkyns. I had no Body to ſend, I was kept cloſe, and no Body permitted to come to me.

L. C. J. Your Sollicitor you deſir'd had Leave to come to you.

Mr. Baker. You know that thoſe you ſent for, you had an Order for.

Parkyns. I could not get him till Thurſday to me, I had no Meſſengers to ſend till then.

Mr. Baker. I gave the Keeper Direction, to let him have Perſons come to him to ſend on any Errand.

L. C. J. The Keeper had Orders, it ſeems, to let any Meſſenger come to you, and he would have help'd you to ſome Body to ſend of this Errand to be ſure.

Keeper. I always did it, as ſoon as I know they have Notice of their Trial.

Parkyns. But the Keeper is not always in the Way, and beſides, when I had Notice given me of my Trial, it was Execution Day, and he was not at home that Day.

L. C. J. He names no Witneſſes, only he ſays he has divers Witneſſes, neither is there any Oath made of any Witneſſes: Pray how long is it ſince you were committed?

Parkyns. I was committed this Day Fortnight.

L. C. J. Your Commitment charged you with High-Treaſon, and therefore you knew what you ſtood accus'd of; were you not committed for High-Treaſon?

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, I believe I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. (Sir John Hawles,) my Lord, he had a very fair Time to prepare for his Defence, for he ſaw his Name in the Proclamation a good while before he was taken, and there it is declar'd, what he ſtands charg'd with.

L. C. J. You might have had a Copy of your Commitment, you had a Right to have it, and thereby you might have ſeen what you were accuſed of.

Keeper. We never do deny it, if it be demanded.

L. C. J. You cannot deny it, you know what Penalty you are under if you do.

Parkyns. No Body was permitted to come to me.

L. C. J. You might have ask'd for a Copy, or any Body elſe, for you had Notice of your Trial ſo long ago as Wedneſday laſt.

Mr. Baker. I gave him Notice of his Trial on Wedneſday, and then told him he muſt prepare for it againſt this Day; he ſaid he would endeavour to petition for a longer Time, I told him it would be in vain, for he muſt prepare for his Trial to Day, and could have no longer Time.

L. C. J. Sir William, truly we do not ſee any Reaſon to put off the Trial upon theſe Suggeſtions.

Parkyns. My Lord, it is very hard; then I humbly beg I may have the Favour, that I may have Council allow'd me, I have no Skill in Indictments.

L. C. J. We cannot allow Council.

Parkyns. My Lord, if I have no Council, I do not underſtand theſe Matters, nor what Advantage may be proper for me to take in theſe Caſes.

L. C. J. You are not ignorant, Sir William, that Council has been always refuſed when deſired in ſuch Caſes.

Parkyns. My Lord, there is a new Act of Parliament that is lately made, which allows Council.

L. C. J. But that does not commence yet, Sir William.

Parkyns. My Lord, it wants but one Day.

L. C. J. That is as much as if it were a much longer Time: For we are to proceed according to what the Law is, and not what it will be.

Parkyns. But it is declarative of the Common Law, becauſe it ſays it was always juſt and reaſonable.

L. C. J. We cannot alter the Law till Lawmakers do it.

Parkyns. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to let it be read?

L. C. J. Ay, if you have a Mind to it, it ſhall be read.

Parkyns. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads.) An Act for Regulating of Trials in Caſes of Treaſon, and Miſpriſion of Treaſon. ——

All the firſt Paragraph of the new Act was read.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, this Law has not taken any Effect as yet; but the Law ſtands as it did before the making of this Act.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, the Law ſays it's juſt and reaſonable that it ſhould be ſo.

L. C. J. We go according to the Law as we find it is.

Parkyns. And, my Lord, what is juſt and reaſonable to Morrow, ſure is juſt and reaſonable to Day, and your Lordſhip may indulge me in this Caſe, eſpecially when you ſee how ſtreight Notice I have had, and what a little Time has been allowed me, that I am not able to make any Defence.

L. C. J. We cannot make a Law, we muſt go according to the Law, that muſt be our Rule and Direction.

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, but what is juſt and reaſonable, ſure is Law: the Law is grounded upon Reaſon.

L. C. J. The Parliament has thought fit to make ſuch a Law, which is to commence from the 25th of this Month: It is not a Law till the Time comes, that the Parliament hath appointed for its being a Law.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, if my Notice had been a convenient Notice, I had been within the Time limited by the Act of Parliament; and no one can want the Advantage of that Act from henceforward, nor ſuffer for ſuch Want but my ſelf, which is a particular Hardſhip upon me.

L. C. J. We cannot alter the Law, we are bound by our Oaths to proceed according to the Law, as it is at preſent.

Parkyns. Pray, my Lord, let the Trial be put off till another Day then.

L. C. J. You ſhew no Reaſon for it; you name no Witneſſes that you want, nor have we any Oath as we ought to have in ſuch a Caſe.

Parkyns. I will do both if your Lordſhip will oblige me to it.

L. C. J. There ought to be an Oath certainly, but we think you have had fair and convenient Notice: For you have had as much Notice as Sir John Freind had, who was tried Yeſterday.

Parkyns. As I am inform'd he was charged with ſingle Facts about the Town, but I am charged with many particular Things more than he was.

L. C. J. The Act of Parliament ſays nothing of Notice of Trial; that ſtill continues as it was before; and you have had very convenient Notice: Go on, Mr. Hardeſty, to ſwear the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkyns, you the Priſoner at the Bar, Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them or any of them, you are to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Parkyns. I hope your Lordſhip will be of Council for me then.

L. C. J. So we will; we will do you all the Right we can. Look ye, you know you may challenge 35 without Cauſe, and as many as you will with Cauſe, but no more than 35 without Cauſe.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Goddard Nelthorp.

(He was ſworn.)

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, you have challenged two, and have aſſign'd the Cauſe of your Challenge, that is, Hancock and another, and the Reaſon of your Challenge is, becauſe they are the King's Servants. I am to acquaint you, that is no Cauſe of Challenge; but however, the King's Council do not intend to inſiſt upon it, if there are enough beſides. They are willing to go on with the Pannel; and I ſpeak this, becauſe I would not have it go for a Precedent, nor have it underſtood that the Cauſe you aſſign is a good Cauſe: But however, they will not ſtand with you, if there be enough to ſerve.

Par. My Lord, I ſubmit to it; the Jury is full, I think.

Cl. of Ar. No, there are but Eleven ſworn yet.

Par. But how far have I gone in my Challenges?

Cl. of Ar. There are Four, which you may challenge more.

Par. There are Two allow'd me, tho' it be not a Precedent: Are there Four ſtill?

Cl. of Ar. Yes, you may challenge Four more, and no more, Edward Thompſon.

Par. I challenge him.
Cl. of Ar. Nicholas Rufford.
Par. I have no Exception of him.
(He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, countez. William Northey.

Cryer. One, &c. (and ſo the reſt 'till the Twelve.)

Cl. of Ar. Nicholas Rufford.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of the High-Treaſon whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance. And all Jury-Men of Middleſex that halle appear'd, and are not ſworn, may depart the Court.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn were theſe;

William Northey, Eſq;	Thomas Edling, Gent.
Edward Gold, Eſq;	Robert Sanderſon, Gent.
Daniel Thomas, Eſq;	Ralph Marſh, Gent.
Henry Whitchcot, Eſq;	John Whiſton, Gent.
Robert Bampton, Gent.	Thomas Heams, Gt. and
Thomas Sutton, Gent.	Nicholas Rufford, Gent.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.) You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe: He ſtands indicted by the Name of Sir William Parkyns, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Knight, that whereas (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis,) and againſt the Form of the Statute made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements, he had at the Time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Parkyns. My Lord, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay, you would be my Council. I am ignorant in Matters of Indictments, I beg if there be any Fault in it, you will let me know it.

L. C. J. Truly I have obſerv'd no Fault in it; I do not know of any.

Mr. Mountague. Gentlemen, this Indictment does contain as heavy an Accuſation, as can be laid upon any Man, for it not only charges the Priſoner with a traiterous Deſign of ſubverting the Government, and raiſing War and Rebellion within this Kingdom; which was to be done by adhering to the King's Enemies, and promoting a Foreign Invaſion, but likewiſe with a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King, which was to have been taken away by a bloody Aſſaſſination.

Gentlemen, the Indictment ſets forth, That Sir William Parkyns, the Priſoner at the Bar, did meet ſeveral Times with Charnock, and other falſe Traitors; and there it was conſulted, and agreed how they ſhould procure French Forces to land within this Kingdom, and then they were to raiſe Rebellion amongſt his Majeſty's Subjects, to join with the Invaders. Mr. Charnock was ſent from the Priſoner at the Bar, and the reſt, as a Meſſenger into France, unto the late King James, to acquaint him with this bloody Deſign, and to deſire him to borrow of the French King as many Troops as he could ſpare, to make a Deſcent upon this Kingdom, and they at the ſame Time were to facilitate the Deſcent, by getting as many Men as they could to make the Aſſaſſination; and the Number of Forty was pitched upon, who were to be provided for that Purpoſe, of which the Priſoner at the Bar was to find Five, who were to lie in wait with the reſt, and ſet upon the King as he came along in his Coach, upon his Return from Hunting. Some were to aſſault and attack the Guards, while others were barbarouſly to aſſaſſinate and murder the King in his Coach: and particularly it charges the Priſoner with undertaking to procure and provide Five Horſes, and Arms that were to be imploy'd in this bloody Aſſaſſination; and alſo with gathering together great Quantities of Arms and Ammunition that were to be uſed in the Inſurrection. To this Indictment the Priſoner has pleaded Not Guilty; if he be not guilty, God forbid he ſhould be convicted: But if he be guilty, and we prove the Fact, the Nation expects that you will do Juſtice to the King and Kingdom, and find him ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Sir Thomas Trevor.) May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing the Death of his Majeſty, and Adhering to his Majeſty's Enemies; and the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment to prove this Treaſon are, That he with others had ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations about this Deſign, and ſent a Meſſenger over to France to the late King James, to procure French Forces to invade the Kingdom, to depoſe the King, and ſubject the Kingdom to a French Power: And likewiſe that he did enter into a Conſpiracy with ſeveral Perſons for the Aſſaſſination of his Majeſty's Royal Perſon. Theſe are the Overt Acts mentioned in the Indictment, to prove this Charge of Treaſon againſt the Priſoner.

Gentlemen, the Evidence to prove theſe Overt Acts, and which we ſhall produce, will be in this Manner. It will appear that the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, has had a Commiſſion from King James to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, and about May laſt, he with ſeveral others had a Meeting at the Old King's Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, where were preſent my Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter, and one Mr. Cook; and Goodman came in to them after Dinner. And at that Meeting it was conſulted and concerted among them, how they ſhould bring back the late King James, and depoſe his preſent Majeſty; and in order to that, they did reſolve to ſend Mr. Charnock as a Meſſenger to the late King James, to deſire him to obtain from the French King 10000 Men to invade this Kingdom; 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; and to encourage the late King to this, they did aſſure him by the ſame Meſſenger, that they would meet him with 2000 Horſe upon his Landing; and they did all undertake and agree that they would do it; and Mr. Charnock undertook to go of this Meſſage.

Gentlemen, about a Week after this Meeting, Mr. Charnock not being willing to go upon this Errand without a good Aſſurance, that they intended to perform what they had reſolved upon, they therefore had another Meeting of moſt of the ſame Perſons that were at the former, and particularly the Priſoner at the Bar was one; and that was at Mrs. Mountjoy's a Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet. And at that Meeting they did all agree, as formerly, and continued in their former Reſolution, to ſend Mr. Charnock to aſſure the late King, that they would meet him, according as they had promiſed, if he would give them Notice where he was to land, and he ſhould not fail of their Aſſiſtance. And at theſe Meetings they did take Notice, that then was the moſt proper Time for ſuch an Invaſion: For the King was gone to Flanders, moſt of the Forces were drawn thither, and the People were diſſatisfy'd, and ſo it would be the fitteſt Opportunity to accompliſh their Deſign. And they deſired Mr. Charnock to make haſte to carry this Meſſage, and to intreat King James that he would be ſpeedy and expeditious in his Coming, that they might not loſe this Seaſon.

Gentlemen, after theſe Meetings, Mr. Charnock did within a few Days go over into France, and did deliver his Meſſage to the late King James, who took it very kindly, but ſaid that the French King could not ſpare ſo many Forces that Year, having other Work to imploy them about: Upon which, within a Month's Time, or leſs, he came back again, and brought an Account of his Meſſage to thoſe Gentlemen who ſent him. This was in May or June laſt, and ſo the further Proſecution of the Deſign ceaſed at that Time.

But Gentlemen, the laſt Winter it was revived again, and attempted, and carried on very near to the obtaining a fatal Succeſs. And you will hear that the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, has had too great a Hand, and been a very great Inſtrument in both the Parts of this wicked Conſpiracy and Treaſon; not only in the Invaſion, which he with others ſent the Meſſenger over to procure; but alſo in the other Part, the blackeſt Part, even the Aſſaſſination of the King's Perſon.

About January laſt Sir George Barcley, a Lieutenant of the Guards to King James in France, was ſent over into England to engage Perſons to join in the Conſpiracy and Aſſaſſination; and for his Aſſiſtance there were ſent over with him, and before and after him, ſome 20 Troopers of the late King's, that were his Guards in France. And

Sir

Sir George Barcley, to encourage the Perſons that were to join, and whom he had brought over with him, pretended an Authority to juſtify it, that is, a Commiſſion from the late King James, and he communicates this Deſign to Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter, and ſeveral others, and amongſt the reſt to the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, having a great Confidence in him, and did acquaint him he had ſuch a Commiſſion, and he ſhewed it him, and that Commiſſion was to levy War againſt the King's Perſon; which they took to be a ſufficient Authority for them to aſſaſſinate the King's Perſon.

Gentlemen, in order to the accompliſhing this horrid Conſpiracy, there were ſeveral Meetings, and Conſultations had, at which the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, and very active. Sometimes they met at Captain Porter's Lodgings, at another Time at the Nagg's Head in Covent-Garden, at another Time at the Sun in the Strand, and another Time at the Globe in Hatton-Garden, in order to accompliſh this Deſign: And at theſe Meetings you will hear, they did propoſe ſeveral Ways and Methods for the Execution of it; and ſeveral Perſons, particularly one of them that have ſuffered the Puniſhment of the Law for this, were appointed to go and view the Ground, where the King's Perſon might moſt conveniently be aſſaulted. Mr. King, that was executed for it, was one, Captain Porter was another, and one Knightley was the third; and theſe did go to ſee the Ground. And the Day before they went, there was a Meeting, at which was preſent the Priſoner at the Bar, and others, wherein 'twas concluded upon, that they ſhould go; and they went accordingly to ſee the moſt convenient Place for it. They went to Brentford, and afterwards to the other Side of the Water to Richmond, and ſurvey'd all the Ground, and the Place they pitched upon as the moſt proper for their Purpoſe, was, when his Majeſty ſhould return from Hunting, to do it in the Lane betwixt Brentford and Turnham-Green. And accordingly, when they return'd in the Evening, they came by Appointment to the Place where the reſt of the Accomplices were to meet, at the Nagg's Head Tavern in St. James's, and gave an Account of their Proceedings; and at that Meeting likewiſe was Sir William Parkyns, the Priſoner at Bar, Mr. Charnock, and ſeveral others, and upon the Report of Captain Porter and Mr. King's Expedition, they did reſolve the Thing ſhould be done in that Place, and that it ſhould be done in this Manner.

Sir George Barcley with about Eight or Ten in his Party, who were to be choſen out of all the other Parties, were to aſſault the King's Coach, and endeavour to kill the King, and all the reſt that were in the Coach with him, whilſt the others in two Parties, were to attack the Guards; and the Number in all was to be about 40. This was fully agreed upon.

And, Gentlemen, the firſt Time that they reſolved to put this traiterous Deſign in Execution, was the Fifteenth of February, which was a Saturday, the uſual Day that the King was wont to go a Hunting on; but it happened by great Providence that the King did not go abroad that Day.

They had contrived further, to make the Thing ſure, that there ſhould be two Perſons, whom they called orderly Men, who ſhould be placed at Kenſington, to give Notice when the King went abroad; and Chambers was one, and Durance that was a Fleming was another; and Durance was likewiſe employ'd to view the Inns about Turnham-Green and Brentford, for the Lodging of their Men, who were to be placed Two or Three in an Inn, that they might not be obſerved.

Gentlemen, the firſt Day appointed for the accompliſhing this Deſign, which was the 15th of February, being over, and they diſappointed; yet they did afterwards reſolve to go on and execute it. And the next Saturday, which was the 22d of February, was pitched upon for the Time of Execution; and accordingly on Friday the 21ſt of February, the Day before, there was a Meeting at the Nagg's Head in Covent-Garden; and there was preſent Sir George Barcley, Capt. Porter, and ſeveral others, and amongſt the reſt the Priſoner at the Bar was there: They had at firſt ſome Diſcourſe among them that they were in doubt, becauſe of the firſt Diſappointment, whether there had not been ſome Diſcovery, but that Doubt was ſoon over; for it was ſaid, it could not be ſo, for then they ſhould not have been there together. That ſeemed probable, and the Diſappointment was imputed to ſome Accident, and that gave them new Aſſurance to go on, and they were reſolved to do it in the ſame Manner, as they had formerly reſolv'd, on the next Day, which was Saturday.

Gentlemen, at that Meeting Mr. Porter acquainted them, that he had the Misfortune to have ſome of his Horſes fallen ſick or lame, and he acquainted the Priſoner with it; and Sir William Parkyns was careful to ſupply him with other Horſes, and told him, he could get a Note from one Lewis, who I think is Major of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, to get three Horſes, and accordingly he did ſend a Note for three Horſes to Mr. Lewis.

Upon the 22d of February in the Morning, which was the Time for the Execution of this bloody Conſpiracy, they had met together, and reſolved to go on with it, and put it in Execution; and that they had Notice from Chambers, that the King did go a hunting that Day, and there was great Joy among them all, thinking themſelves ſure; and ſo they order'd all Things to be got ready. But afterwards, about One a Clock, there came other News, that the King did not go abroad, but the Guards were all come back in great Haſte, their Horſes being all of a Foam, and the King's Coaches were ſent back to the Mews; then they began to be in a great Conſternation, and they thought the Thing had taken Air, and was diſcovered. This, Gentlemen, is a ſhort Account, how it will appear upon the Evidence, as to the Conſpiracy of Aſſaſſinating the King, and the ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations about it; at which the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, was preſent.

But, Gentlemen, there will be a little more Evidence, if it be neceſſary to confirm this former Evidence, and to ſhew the Part that the Priſoner at the Bar had in this treaſonable, this barbarous Conſpiracy: For it will appear, that, as the Priſoner had a Commiſſion from the late King James to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, and and had ſent a Meſſenger into France, to invite the late King over, with 10000 French; ſo he had made great Preparation of Arms to be ready for that Purpoſe. About Michaelmas laſt the Priſoner at the Bar ſent a Parcel of Goods, as he called them, which were put into Caſes, I think they were about eight ſmall Boxes, put into very large Caſes, and ſent down by his Order into the Country, unto one Haywood. It ſeems this Haywood had married Mr. Charnock's Siſter, and Charnock writ a Letter to him, and deſired that he would give Sir William Parkyns Leave to lodge ſome Goods there, which were of great Value, and he durſt not truſt them at his own Houſe in Warwickſhire, becauſe his Servants were not there to look after them, and accordingly upon that Letter Mr. Haywood did give Leave that the Goods ſhould be carried thither, and they were ſo, and there they were lock'd up privately, and kept till this barbarous Conſpiracy was diſcovered; then you will find the Priſoner at the Bar ſent his own Servant down, the Tueſday after the Diſcovery, and gave him Orders immediately (his Name is Eubank, and he is the Groom, and looks after his Horſes) to go down to Warwickſhire to one Evans, who carried the Goods, and deſire him with all Speed to remove thoſe Goods, and to take Care to remove them privately, and to ſecure them, and to hide them. And Accordingly on Wedneſday he came there, which was Aſh-Wedneſday; and acquainted Evans with what Sir William had ordered him, and they went that very Night with a Cart to Mr. Haywood's; and though it was late, and they were deſired to ſtay till the next Morning, they would not; they ſaid they could ſtay no longer, but would remove the Goods immediately; and accordingly they were carried from thence that Night, to Sir William Parkyns's own Houſe in Warwickſhire; and there they were buried in the Garden. Theſe Goods that were of this great Value were put into the Ground to preſerve them. But after this Diſcovery, Sir William Parkyns being accuſed, and his Name put in the Proclamation, and a Search being ordered to be made at his Houſe, theſe Goods that lay hid at Haywood's, and upon the Removal thence were thus buried in the Ground, came to be diſcovered, and the Caſes were broke open, and then they did appear to be Goods of an extraordinary Nature indeed, for you will find they were Horſe Arms for Troopers; there were two and thirty Carbines, five and twenty Caſes of Piſtols, and about forty odd Swords without Hilts upon them, but the Hilts lay looſe by them; ſo that this will make it apparent, without Diſpute, how far the Priſoner at the Bar has engag'd in this Conſpiracy, and what Preparations he had made for the Execution of it.

Gentlemen, it will appear farther againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, that he hath had a conſiderable Number of Horſes, that have frequently been brought up from his Houſe in Hartfordſhire, to the George-Inn in Holbourn.

But before we come to that, I would acquaint you with another particular Part of our Evidence, that is precedent in Point of Time. About Chriſtmas laſt, the Priſoner did acquaint one Sweet, who is an Officer in the Exciſe, (and I am very ſorry that we ſhould have any ſuch Officers, that ſhould be thought fit to be intruſted with Secrets of this Nature) Sir William Parkyns acquainted this Sweet, and gave him an Account that he had long had an Aſſurance that King James would land, but now he had it under his own Hand, that he would land very ſpeedily, and that he had made Preparations for that Purpoſe to meet him. That great Things were expected from him; that his own Troop was ready, and it conſiſted chiefly of old Soldiers; and that ſeveral Perſons who had been Officers would be Volunteers under him. He ſaid he intended to go into Leiceſterſhire, and there he was to meet ſeveral Gentlemen from the North, and from the Weſt, to conſider, and ſettle a Correſpondence how to meet the late King upon his Landing; and accordingly Sir William Parkyns did go, and you will have an Account that he came to Leiceſter on Friday Night, one Scudamore went along with him, there he ſtaid all Saturday, and a good Part of Sunday. There came ſeveral Perſons to him while he was at Leiceſter, particularly one Captain Yarborough, the Son of Sir Thomas Yarborough, and a Parſon, who ſaid they came as far as from York to meet Sir William Parkyns at Leiceſter; and there was great Reſort thither at that Time, as you will hear from the Witneſſes. Sir William Parkyns came back again from Leiceſter to Brick-hill that Night, and returned to his own Houſe on Monday Night; and after his Return, he acquainted this Sweet, that he had been his Journey to Leiceſter; that he met with ſeveral Gentlemen there from the North, and other Places, and had ſettled a Correſpondency, and had found them all fully engaged, and well inclined, all went well, and there was no Danger of any Miſcarriage at all; and this was about January laſt, that this Expedition was made by the Priſoner.

And now Gentlemen, as to that Particular about the Horſes, which were ſo frequently brought up this laſt Winter from his Houſe in Hartfordſhire, to the George-Inn in Holbourn, there is one very unfortunate Circumſtance that attends this Matter; that is, that theſe Horſes were brought to Town juſt the ſeveral Nights before the King was to be aſſaſſinated; for upon Thurſday the 13th of February, he being in Town, ſent Directions to his Groom, to bring up three of his Horſes on Friday, which was the 14th in the Afternoon, and all theſe Horſes were furniſh'd with Piſtols and Furniture for Troopers; according to thoſe Directions his Servant brought up the three Horſes, and he came and acquainted his Maſter that they were brought up according to his Order; Sir William Parkyns was then at his Lodgings, which were in the ſame Houſe where Mr. Charnock did lodge; when his Man had told him the Horſes were come, he pretended at firſt that he had ſome Thoughts of going out of Town that Evening, but that he had changed his Mind, and would go in the Morning, and he would have the Horſes ready againſt the next Morning, which was Saturday the 15th, the firſt Day upon which the Aſſaſſination was intended to be put in Execution.

The next Morning when his Man came to him again, he had changed his Mind, and he would not go out of Town in the Morning, but he would go in the Afternoon; and it will appear that he did not go out of Town that Day, nor the next Day, nor till Monday; and then the Deſign had miſcarried by the King's not going abroad a Saturday, and the Horſes were carried back; and when he went out of Town upon Monday, one Holmes went along with him, and he went with

with him to his Houſe in Hartfordſhire; and there he ſtaid until Friday after, which was the Day before the next Time that was appointed for the Execution of the Aſſaſſination. And upon the Friday they came up again, and then there were more Horſes, four or five, that were brought up that Day; and all of them with Piſtols, and Jack-Boots, and other Furniture and Accoutrements for Troopers; and theſe came to the George-Inn, where Sir William Parkyns gave his Man Eubank particular Orders, to be very early the next Morning at Kenſington; that was the 22d, and he was to go, as he told him, to one Brown, that he ſaid was concerned in the King's Kitchin, and liv'd two Doors off the Gate that turns up to the King's Houſe, and he was to tell him he was Sir William Parkyns's Servant, but that he came from a Man that lodg'd at a Confectioner's Houſe over-againſt Gray's-Inn; in which Place, by the Deſcription of the Perſon, you will find Sir George Barcley lodged.

The Man went accordingly at Eight a-Clock in the Morning to Kenſington, and inquired out this Brown, and met with him, and told him he was Sir William Parkyns's Servant, but came from the Gentleman that lodg'd at the Confectioner's in Holbourn. Brown ſaid he had nothing to ſay to him, but bid him give him his Almanack, and he writ in it, that he would be in Town in two Hours himſelf, and wait upon him: And bid him carry that to the Man that lodg'd at the Confectioner's, and this Brown by the Circumſtances of the whole, muſt probably be one of the orderly Men who lodg'd at Kenſington, to give Notice when the King, and the Guards went out.

Sir William Parkyns's Servant came back to the Confectioner's Houſe, and there he met with a Man that went by the Name of Rogers; he'll tell you he was a Scotch Man, for he ſpoke broad Scotch, and he'll give you a particular Deſcription of the Man, by which I believe it will appear that it was Sir George Barcley. Sir William Parkyns's Servant, after he had deliver'd his Meſſage to this Rogers, came back to his Maſter, and told him he had done his Errand according as he was order'd, and Sir William Parkyns ask'd him what Rogers ſaid, and he told him that he bid him tell his Maſter, if he would come to him he would be ready at home for him. This was upon Saturday Morning the 22d of February.

About Eleven a-Clock that Day Sir William Parkyns, and this Lewis that we ſpoke of before, came to the George-Inn, and there Sir William Parkyns ask'd his Servant whether he had receiv'd any more than two Saddles, for there were two Saddles ſent in thither, according to an Order that had been given, to furniſh two other Horſes that ſtood there at the George-Inn, and which Sir William Parkyns told his Groom belonged to two Friends of his, and bid him be ſure to take care of them, and to ſee them well fed, and order'd two Saddles to be bought for them. Lewis ſaid he did think they had more than two, but you will ſee by the Evidence that this ſame Lewis had provided thirty Saddles for Sir William Parkyns; but there ſeem'd to be a Controverſy between them at that Time how many had really been ſent in, and Lewis affirm'd there was twenty-four, but Sir William Parkyns ſaid, I have had but twenty two of the thirty yet, for I have but two brought in here, and I had twenty before. This you will hear fully proved, and I think it is impoſſible for any Body to believe, but that all this Preparation of Saddles, Piſtols, Boots, and other Things, muſt convince any Body of the Priſoner's being ſo far engaged in this Deſign, that he can never anſwer it without giving you a very good Account, what this Preparation was for.

Gentlemen, a great Part of this will be prov'd to you by one that acted in it, as a Servant to Sir William Parkyns, that is, as to the coming up of the Horſes, Jack-boots, Piſtols, and other Arms at that Time; and that when on the laſt Saturday it was diſappointed, all the Horſes, not only thoſe Sir William Parkyns brought, but the other two went away in a great Hurry and Confuſion, and nothing was ever heard of them more; and that will be prov'd by the Servants in the very Inn.

Gentlemen, I have now open'd to you the Nature and State of the Evidence, we will call our Witneſſes, and make it out very undeniably, and ſubſtantially, and therefore I will not give you any farther Trouble.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Porter (who was ſworn.) Mr. Porter, pray will you give the Court and the Jury an Account of the Meeting at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet; and who was there, and what Reſolutions, and Agreements they came to?

Capt. Porter. About the latter End of May laſt, or the Beginning of June, there were two Meetings had, the one was at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, the other was at Mrs. Mountjoy's near Sir John Fenwick's. At the firſt Meeting there was my Lord of Aleſbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir John Fenwick, Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and my ſelf. Mr. Goodman came in after Dinner, and there we conſulted which was the beſt Way for King James's coming in, and we all reſolv'd to ſend a Meſſenger to him, to invite him over, and to deſire him to interpoſe with the French King for the getting 10000 Men, to come over with him, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons. It was then conſider'd who ſhould be ſent, and all the Company agreed Mr. Charnock was the propereſt Perſon. Says Mr. Charnock, if you ſend me, pray tell me what Errand I ſhall go upon: We did likewiſe then agree, that he ſhould aſſure the King, if he would come over, at ſuch a Time, we would meet him with a Body of 2000 Horſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Charnock undertake to go upon that Meſſage?

Capt. Port. Yes, he did, and to propoſe this Matter to him, that he might propoſe it to the French King for the getting of the Men.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you go away, I deſire to ask of you one Thing, did Sir William Parkyns, the Priſoner at the Bar, agree to the Meſſage?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any other Meeting about this Buſineſs, and when was it, and who was there?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, Capt. Charnock ſaid at firſt he would not go of a fooliſh Meſſage, and thereupon we all agreed to be at the Head of 2000 Men to meet King James at his Landing, and every one ſhould bring his Quota.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the ſecond Meeting, and where was it, and who were there, and what was agreed upon?

Capt. Por. The ſecond Meeting was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, where Captain Charnock deſired us once more to meet, before he went away to know whether

whether we kept to our firſt Reſolution, and we did agree to what was reſolved upon at firſt, and he ſaid he would go in two or three Days time.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the Company agree to it then?

Capt. Port. Yes, they did, Sir, all that met at that Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray name them over again, who they were.

Capt. P. Sir William Parkyns was actually there, and my Lord of Ailesbury, and Sir John Freind, and Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and myſelf; I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery was there, or Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when did you ſee Capt. Charnock, or ſpeak with him, after that?

Capt. P. It was when I was in Priſon about the Riot, and he told me he had been there; but there would be nothing done in that Matter at preſent, for King James ſaid, the French King could not then ſpare ſo many Men, though he thanked us for our kind Offer; And he ſaid he had been with my Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Parkyns, and the ſeveral other People of Quality, which he did not name, and had carried them the particular Meſſages that he had in command from the King to carry to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, pray tell us, what you know about the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, and what Hand the Priſoner at the Bar was to have in it.

Capt. P. About ſome Weeks before I heard of the Aſſaſſination, I came to lodge in the Houſe in Norfolk-ſtreet, where Captain Charnock lodged; and where Sir William Parkyns lodged when he came to Town. Moſt commonly we uſed to go in the Evening to the Tavern, or drink a Bottle of Wine at our own Lodgings; and one Morning I ask'd Mr. Charnock, if I ſhould ſee him at Night? he ſaid he was engaged in private Company for that Night, and he could not go with me to the Tavern. For, ſays he, there are ſome Gentlemen that are lately come from France, and there is ſomething to be done for the King's Service. If there be ſo, ſays I, pray let me be concerned; Says he, they are but newly come, and they will ſee no Body elſe but me at preſent. A little after I fell ſick of a Fit of the Gout, and Mr. Charnock came to viſit me, and we fell into Diſcourſe, and I asked him about thoſe Gentlemen that were come from France, what they came about? he told me it was Sir G. Barcley that came from France, and ſeveral other Officers with him, and that he had a Commiſſion from the late King James to levy War againſt the Perſon of King William, or the Prince of Orange, as I think it was named in the Commiſſion.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

Capt. P. It was Capt. Charnock: he deſired to know how many Men I could bring. I deſir'd a little Time to conſider, but I ſaid there would be a great many would join if the King landed, whom I did not think fit to truſt with a Thing of this Nature before-hand. Some few Days after, Capt. Charnock came into my Chamber, and brought Sir George Barcley and Major Holmes that ſaid he was come from France; and there we had little more but a general Diſcourſe: But a little after that I got well of the Gout, and we had ſeveral Meetings at ſeveral Places; at the Globe Tavern in Hatton Garden, at the Nagg's-head in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun in the Strand, where Sir William Parkyns was always preſent. And there we did conſult of the beſt Ways to aſſaſſinate the King, as he came from Richmond after Hunting. Sir George Barcley ſaid, he had received 800 l. from King James's Secretary towards the buying of Horſes, and furniſhing both Horſes and Men for the Expedition; and it was conſider'd of how many Men it would be neceſſary to bring. The Number agreed upon was about Forty, of which Sir George Barcley was to provide Twenty, I promiſed to bring Seven or Eight, Sir William Parkyns engaged to bring Five, whereof three ſhould be mounted, with his own Men, and the other two my Men were to mount upon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the Names of thoſe People that he was to mount?

Capt. P. I never had the Names myſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what was done after theſe Conſultations?

Capt. P. I asked Captain Charnock one time, if I might not ſee the Commiſſion that King James had given; he ſaid he had never ſeen it himſelf, but Sir William Parkyns had. I asked Sir William Parkyns, one Evening as we were ſmoaking a Pipe by the Fire ſide, whether he had ſeen the Commiſſion: He ſaid, he had; and that becauſe King James would not truſt any of his Miniſters, it was written and ſigned with the King's own Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did he tell you what it was for?

Capt. P. He ſaid it was for raiſing, and levying War upon the Perſon of the King, but I do not know whether he called him King William, or the Prince of Orange; but I ſuppoſe it was the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray then give us an Account of your going to view the Ground, where it was moſt convenient to do the Buſineſs.

Capt. P. There were ſeveral Propoſitions about the Place where it was to be done, one was to be on the other Side of the Water by Ambuſcade in Richmond Park, the other was to be on this ſide of the Water after the King was landed. Sir G. Barcley was for that that was upon the other ſide of the Water; I thought that it would take up too much time to go over thither, that it was better to be done on this ſide; but becauſe there was Difference of Opinions, it was reſolved upon that ſome Body ſhould be appointed to view the Ground; and I was appointed for one, Mr. Knightley for another, and Mr. King would needs go with us for a Third; and we three did go. We lay all Night at Knightsbridge, and the next Day went, and viewed the Grounds on both Sides the River; and came back that Evening to the Nagg's-head according to Appointment, where was Sir William Parkyns the Priſoner, and Sir George Barcley, and Mr. Charnock, and we gave an Account that we had view'd both Places: And upon our Report it was reſolved, that it ſhould be done on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you ſure Sir William Parkyns, the Priſoner at the Bar, was there, at that Meeting at the Nagg's-head?

Capt. P. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he agree to that Reſolution?

Capt. P. It was in general agreed to by all that were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Capt. Porter, then give us an Account of the Days that were fixed for the Execution of this Deſign.

Capt. P. There was Saturday the 15th, and Saturday the 22d, becauſe Saturday was the Day the King uſed to go a Hunting and Shooting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Men at Kenſington, to give you Notice when the King went abroad?

Capt. P. There were two Men that had a Lodging at Kenſington, the one was one Chambers, who belonged to Captain Charnock, and the other was a Fleming, one Durance, who came over with Sir G. Barcley, and he went every Day, and thruſt himſelf among the Guards to bring Intelligence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Reaſon the Deſign was not executed?

Capt. P. The firſt Day Durance brought Notice in the Morning, that the Guards were gone abroad; and afterwards there came Notice, that the King would not go abroad that Day, for which Reaſon we adjourned it to the next Saturday.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Method you was to take in the Execution?

Capt. P. The Method agreed upon was this: There was one Rookwood that came from France upon this Expedition, he was to command one Party, and Captain Charnock and myſelf were to command another Party, to attack the Guards, and Sir George Barcley was to have four Men out of each Party to attack the Coach, while we attacked the Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, you ſay the firſt Day you was diſappointed by the King's not going, when was the next Meeting?

Capt. P. The next Meeting was upon Friday the Day before the 22d. I was ſick all the Week, and I do not know whether I lay a Bed all the Week, or no; but upon Friday they met, and it was at the Sun Tavern in the Strand: There was none but Sir George Barcley, Capt. Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, and myſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe was there then?

Capt. P. Sir George Barcley came in, and ſaid, he was afraid the Thing was diſcovered; I told him I fancied not, for if it had, we ſhould not have been in that Houſe at that time. Then, ſays he, let us go on, and try another Day. Sir William Parkyns was asked if his Horſes were come to Town: He ſaid they were come to Town that Night. Said I, I have had a Misfortune with my Horſes, two of them are fallen lame, and won't be fit for Service. Says he, if I had known that, I could have brought more Horſes out of the Country: But, ſays he, I will ſend to Mr. Lewis, who was Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, and I believe he can help us to more Horſes; he will be with me to-morrow Morning, and I'll get a Note from him for two more. In the Morning I ſent to him, and he ſent me a Note for two Horſes, to mount my Men, and he ſent me Word Mr. Lewis could help me to two or three others, that they were all three ſaddled, and one was accoutred with Holſters and Piſtols, but the other two had only Saddles. I did not ſee Sir William Parkyns on Saturday the 22d, but I met ſome of my Friends, who were to go along with me upon this Enterprize, and we had firſt Notice that the Guards were gone abroad, and that the King would go, at which all were very glad: But when we had Notice that the King did not go, we were afraid the Thing was diſcovered, and I went out of Town, and I did not ſee any of them afterwards, till they were taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Capt. Porter, have you heard any thing from Sir William Parkyns of his having a Commiſſion from King James?

Capt. P. I have heard Captain Charnock ask Sir William Parkyns, why he did not go along with us in this Expedition? he ſaid he did not go, becauſe he could not go.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he not to be one in the Number that was to act in the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. P. No, he ſaid he had other Buſineſs to do, he had a Regiment to look after.

L. C. J. How many Horſes had you from Lewis?

Capt. P. I had never a one, only Sir William Parkyns ſent me Word, if I wanted I might have three, for I had told him I would not ſend for them, till I heard whether the King went abroad, and then I had Notice that the King did not go.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you a Note for them?

Capt. P. Not for thoſe three Horſes, but Cranbourn ſaid he had a Note for two Horſes.

Parkyns. Did he ſay he had a Note from me?

Capt. P. No, I don't ſay ſo, Sir William; Cranbourn told me, he had a Note whither to go for them.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Sir William?

Par. No, my Lord.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether at any of thoſe Meetings there was any Diſcourſe of the Aſſaſſination before Sir William Parkyns?

L. C. J. What ſay you to that, Captain Porter?

Capt. P. Yes, he was at all the Meetings and Conſultations.

Jurym. Pray my Lord, I deſire to know, whether Sir William Parkyns diſcourſed of it himſelf, and what he did ſay about it?

Capt. P. I cannot ſay exactly, what he did ſay in particular, only he agreed to it, and was to furniſh five Horſes for it, and ſaid it was neceſſary to be done; for it would bring the King in more eaſily, though he could not perſonally engage in it himſelf, becauſe he had other Buſineſs, he was to look after his Regiment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Sir William Parkyns will ask Captain Porter no Queſtions, we will go on to our next Witneſs, which is one Abraham Sweet, whom Mr. Attorney mentioned.

(He was brought in and ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sweet, will you give the Court and Jury an Account, what Sir William Parkyns ſaid to you about King James's Landing?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account what Diſcourſe you had with Sir William Parkyns, the Priſoner at the Bar, about King James's returning and landing with French Forces?

Sweet. Sir William Parkyns did tell me, that he did expect King James's Landing, and he ſaid his own Troop was compoſed of old Soldiers.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known Sir William Parkyns?

Sweet. This three Years.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Time when this Diſcourſe was, about what Time was it?

Sweet. This was ſince Chriſtmas, about Chriſtmas laſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it that you had this Diſcourſe?

Sweet. It was about his own Houſe.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe?

Sweet. We were talking about King James's coming.

L. C. J. Who told you that King James was coming?

Sweet. Sir William Parkyns.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay?

Sweet. He ſaid he had bought a great many Saddles, thirty Saddles; and that his own Troop was compoſed of all old Soldiers.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you of any Aſſurance that he had of King James's Landing?

Sweet. Yes, he ſaid he had the King's Word for it.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe between you about any Journey that Sir William was to take?

Sweet. Yes, he did tell me he was to go into Leiceſterſhire, and was to meet ſeveral Gentlemen in Leiceſterſhire; and he did go, and after he came back again, he ſaid he had met his Friends, and all was well, and that the Weſt was as much inclin'd to King James's Intereſt as the North, and that a Lord's Brother was concerned.

Mr. At. Gen. What other Diſcourſe had you about this Matter?

Sweet. Nothing elſe, as to Particulars, that I can remember.

Mr. At. Gen. What Orders had you to come up to Town in February, and when, and from whom?

Sweet. Sir William Parkyns ſent for me, and he ſent me a Letter about the 11th of February that I ſhould come to him the next Day, and I did come the next Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you come? Where did you find him?

Sweet. At his Lodgings in Norfolk-ſtreet, at the Houſe where Mr. Charnock lodged; and after I had ſpoken with Sir William Parkyns about the Letter which he had ſent me to come up, he told me, that the Buſineſs that he had deſigned for me, he did not think fit I ſhould do, becauſe of my Family.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what Directions had you from him, what you were to do when you went into the Country?

Sweet. When I went into the Country, he order'd me to go to his Houſe, and ſend up three of the ſtrongeſt Horſes.

Mr. At. Gen. When was this, do you ſay?

Sweet. It was in February.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time in February?

Sweet. The Eleventh or Twelfth, which was Wedneſday; and at my going away, he told me if I had not a Letter from him, the Friday following I ſhould come to Town again. I did come to Town again, and then he asked me, if I had made Proviſion for my Family? I told him, no; then he asked me, why I came up to Town? he told me I might go into the Country again on the morrow Morning.

L. C. J. What did he tell you?

Sweet. He ſaid I might go back again into the Country. I came upon the Saturday Morning to him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what Day was that Saturday?

Sweet. I believe it was the 13th or 14th of February.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay, Wedneſday was the 12th.

Sweet. Yes, I believe Wedneſday was the 12th, and I came to Town the Friday after that 12th, that was the 14th, and on the Saturday I went home again.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay you came to him on the Saturday Morning, what paſſed between you then?

Sweet. I went the next Morning to Sir William Parkyns's Lodgings, but he was gone out, and had left Word, that I muſt come again about Eleven of the Clock: I did go about that Time, and he was not come in, and there I met one Mr. Chambers, and one Mr. Lee, whom I had ſeen there the Night before.

Mr. At. Gen. And what Diſcourſe had you then with them?

Sweet. We had little Diſcourſe, for I had only ſeen them the Night before; but I think Chambers told me he had been at Kenſington, and I deſired to know what News there; and he told me William kept as cloſe as a Fox; and he ſhew'd me his Wounds, and ſaid thoſe Wounds wanted Revenge.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he ſay he received thoſe Wounds?

Sweet. At the Boyne.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Sweet, did he tell you for what Uſe his Troop was?

Sweet. He did not tell me poſitively; but I underſtood it to be to join King James when he landed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, where did you dine that Saturday?

Sweet. With Sir William Parkyns, and Mr. Charnock, and Chambers, and one or two more that I did not know.

Mr. At. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Sir William?

Parkyns. Did I tell you, Mr. Sweet, that I had a Troop of Horſe?

Sweet. I will tell you your own Words, and no other: You ſaid, Your own Troop was compos'd of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you one Queſtion: How many Horſes were you to bid the Man to bring up to Town?

Sweet. Three, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. And were they not his ſtrongeſt Horſes?

Sweet. Yes, my Lord, they were.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſay any thing to you about Volunteers?

Sweet. Yes, he ſaid there were ſome Gentlemen that were Captains and old Officers, that would be Volunteers under him.

Parkyns. Pray, where were thoſe Words ſpoken?

Sweet. Either in your Houſe or in the Garden, I can't tell directly which, but ſome where about your Houſe it was.

Par. Where is that Houſe?

Sweet. In Hertfordſhire.

Par. Then I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether Words ſpoken in Hertfordſhire can be an Evidence of a Treaſon acted here in Middleſex?

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, if there be a Deſign to kill the King, and there are ſeveral Overt-Acts to prove that Deſign, and one is in one County, and another is in another County, the Party may be indicted in either of the Counties, and Evidence may be given of both thoſe Overt-Acts, though in ſeveral Counties. It is true, you being indicted in Middleſex, makes it neceſſary that ſome Evidence ſhould be given of ſome Things done in Middleſex, as there is; as your Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoy's, and at the Nag's Head in Covent-Garden, and the Sun in the Strand, where were ſeveral Conſults, which are Overt-Acts of the ſame Treaſon; and if Treaſon be committed in ſeveral Counties, the Party may be indicted in any one, and the Evidence may be given of Facts done in all.

Par. Then, Mr. Sweet, you do not ſay that I had raiſed a Troop, or would raiſe a Troop.

Sweet. I told you your own Words, that your Troop was made up of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. But yet I muſt tell you further, Sir William Parkyns, if I remember right there is Evidence given of a Diſcourſe you had in Norfolk-ſtreet, where you lodg'd, and that is in Middleſex.

Par. My Lord, I did not obſerve that he ſaid any thing of me about Norfolk-ſtreet.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, this is what he ſays: You told him you had thought of a Buſineſs for him, but you would not engage him in it, becauſe of his Family.

Par. Pray, Mr. Sweet, did I tell you any thing what you were to do?

Sweet. No, Sir, you did not.

Parkyns. I hope the Jury will take Notice of that: I did not tell him any thing that he was to do.

L. C. J. Well, that was no great Matter. Will you ask him any more Queſtions, Sir?

Par. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is James Eubank.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know Sir William Parkyns?

Eubank. Yes, he is my Maſter.

Mr. At. Gen. What Servant was you to him?

Eubank. I was Groom to him.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you been his Groom?

Eubank. Not a Twelvemonth yet.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, firſt give an Account what Journey you took with him.

Eub. I went into Leiceſterſhire with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell us what you know of that Matter.

Eub. Yes, my Lord, we went from our own Houſe to Stony-Stratford, and there we lay all Night.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time was this?

Eub. I cannot tell the Day of the Month, it was in January.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Eub. It was on a Thurſday.

Mr. At. Gen. And where did you go from Stony-Stratford?

Eub. We came the next Day to Leiceſter.

Mr. At. Gen. Who went with him?

Eub. One Captain Scudamore.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did you tarry at Leiceſter?

Eub. When we came the next Day to Leiceſter, we ſtaid there till Sunday Morning.

Mr. At. Gen. What Company came to your Maſter when he was at Leiceſter?

Eub. Sir, I am a Stranger, I know none of them, I was never there before.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember whether there was one Yarborough there?

Eub. There was one that ſaid his Name was Yarborough.

Mr. At. Gen. Whence did he come?

Eub. He ſaid he came out of Yorkſhire.

Mr. At. Gen. Who came with him?

Eub. There was a Gentleman in black Cloaths, that ſaid he was a Miniſter.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve any others that came thither to your Maſter?

Eub. It was Market Day, and I had my Horſes to look after; there were a great many People went up and down Stairs, but whether they went to him, or no, I can't tell.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you come back again?

Eub. We ſtaid there till Sunday Morning, and then we came away.

Mr. At. Gen. To what Place did you go that Night?

Eub. To a Town call'd Brickhill, and the Night following we came home.

Mr. At. Gen. Who came back with him?

Eub. None but Captain Scudamore, who went with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you go the next Day?

Eub. We came to Buſhy about 8 a-Clock a Monday Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, after this, did you bring up any Horſes to the George-Inn to your Maſter, and when?

Eub. Yes, three Horſes.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, when?

Eub. I cannot tell the Day.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Eub. Upon a Friday.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month was it in?

Eub. Indeed, I can't ſay that.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Valentine's Day?

Eub. Yes, it was upon that Day.

Mr. At. Gen. That is the 14th of February, a remarkable Day, and was then of a Friday, the Day before the Aſſaſſination was to have been executed. Whither did you bring them?

Eub. To the George-Inn.

Mr. At. Gen. How were they furniſh'd? Were there Piſtols upon them?

Eub. No, the Piſtols were in Town, and the Horſes were ſent after my Maſter.

Mr. At. Gen. Where were the Piſtols left?

Eub. Indeed, I don't know.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, when you came to Town, did you go to your Maſter, and acquaint him with it?

Eub. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what did he then ſay to you?

Eub. He ſaid he thought he ſhould go home that Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he change his Mind?

Eub. Yes, for he did not go till Monday.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you he ſhould go a Saturday?

Eub. Yes, he ſaid he thought he ſhould.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you come to him to know his Mind, and what did he ſay?

Eub. He ſaid in the Morning, he would go in the Afternoon, but he did not.

Mr. At. Gen. Afterwards when did he go?

Eub. Upon Monday.

Mr. At. Gen. Who went with him that Monday?

Eub. One Holmes, a fat, thick Man.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, pray when did you come to Town again?

Eub. Upon the Friday following.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Horſes did you bring up then?

Eub. On the Friday following we brought up Four; my Maſter himſelf came up with them.

Mr. At. Gen. Who came with him?

Eub. Mr. Holmes, and I, and another Servant.

Mr. At. Gen. How were the Horſes furniſh'd?

Eub. Every Horſe had Piſtols.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you bring beſide? were there any Boots?

Eub. None but what we rid in.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you leave thoſe Horſes.

Eub. At the George Inn in Holborn.

Mr. At. Gen. What Directions did your Maſter give you that Night for going the next Morning upon an Errand, and whither?

Eub. I had no Meſſage from him, but there was a Note that I was to carry to Kenſington to one Brown, and I was ordered to go to the Gentleman that lives within a Door or two next the Going into the King's Gate, I forget his Name, but this Man where Brown lodged belonged to the Court, ſome Officer in the Kitchen to the King; either Confectioner, or Cook, or ſomething, and this Man lay there.

Mr. At. Gen. What was your Meſſage to him?

Eub. I was to tell him, that I came to ſpeak with one Brown, and that I came from a Gentleman that lay at the Confectioner's in Holborn over-againſt Gray's-Inn. I know the Gentleman by Face again if I ſee him.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, what did he ſay to you?

Eub. He bid me ſet my Horſe at the Red Lion, and he would come to me preſently; and ſo he did. Says he, I have no Buſineſs that I need to ſend; but I'll write in your Almanack, and you may carry it back and ſhew it him, that I will come to Town betwixt nine and ten o'Clock. I did go back and tell that Gentleman at the Confectioner's.

Mr. At. Gen. What kind of Gentleman was it?

Eub. A luſty Man, with a great Noſe, and a black Wig, he ſpeaks broad Scotch, and he was a ſwarthy colour'd Man, and he had a wide Mouth.

Mr. At. Gen. What Age was he of?

Eub. A middle-aged Man.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what did he ſay to you?

Eub. He ask'd me if I had ſeen the Gentleman. I told him, Yes. He ask'd me what the Gentleman return'd for Anſwer. I told him, he had writ in my Almanack, which I had ſhewn him, that he would be in Town between nine and ten o'Clock. He ask'd me then where I was going. I ſaid, to my Maſter. Says he, tell your Maſter that I will be in my Chamber ready for him.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you go to your Maſter, and tell him ſo?

Eub. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. And what did he ſay to you?

Eub. He ſaid he deſigned to go home in the Afternoon, and therefore bid me go to the Inn, and make ready the Horſes, and know what was to pay for them, and he would come by and by thither.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he afterwards come to the Inn?

Eub. Yes, Sir, about three or four o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, who came with Sir William Parkyns?

Eub. One Lewis.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know him?

Eub. I have ſeen him before with my Maſter.

Mr. At. Gen. What is he?

Eub. They ſay he is my Lord Feverſham's Gentleman.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay to you about any Saddles?

Eubank. They ask'd me what Saddles, and how many had been ſent in there; and I ſaid but two.

Mr. At. Gen. What ſaid Mr. Lewis.

Eub. Mr. Lewis ſaid there muſt be a Miſtake, becauſe my Maſter ſaid he had but twenty-two, for he reckoned he had more, there ſhould be twenty-four in all.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſay ſo, or Sir William Parkyns?

Eub. It was Mr. Lewis that ſaid there were twenty-four, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. At. Gen. Where were they ſent?

Eub. Indeed I know not, I never ſaw any of them but thoſe two.

Mr. At. Gen. Who delivered thoſe two to you?

Eub. My Maſter, Sir William Parkyns.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were thoſe Saddles for?

Eub. They were for two Gentlemens Horſes that were there.

Mr. At. Gen. Whoſe Horſes were they?

Eub. They were not my Maſter's, but they ſtood at that Place.

Mr. At. Gen. Did your Maſter ever ſpeak to you about them, to look after them?

Eub. He ſaid, if at any time I was there, I ſhould ſee that the Hoſtler gave them their Corn.

Mr. At. Gen. Were they your Maſter's Horſes, or not?

Eub. Not that I know of.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time did you go out of Town?

Eub. I went out of Town with them about four o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you hear from your Maſter after that?

Eubank. Upon Monday I had a Letter from him?

Mr. At. Gen. What was that Letter for?

Eub. It was to go to my Maſter's Houſe in Warwickſhire, to one Richard Evans that was his Servant, to whom he ſent a Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. What were the Contents of that Letter?

Eubank. I did not ſee what they were, it was ſealed.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you carry that Letter to Evans?

Eub. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time did you come thither?

Eub. I came there a Tueſday at four o'Clock.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Evans and you do after you had read the Letter?

Eub.

Eub. We went to fetch ſome Boxes that my Maſter had order'd Evans to fetch home. It was about two Miles, or more from Home, at a Tradeſman's.

Mr. At. Gen. What was his Name, was it Haywood?

Eub. Yes, I think it was ſomething like that Name.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you go with Evans to fetch the Boxes from thence?

Eub. They had a Man that drove the Team to fetch them?

Mr. At. Gen. Were they carried in a Team then?

Eub. Yes, they were.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you there when the Goods were brought back?

Eub. Yes, I was at my Maſter's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they do with them?

Eub. They buried them in the Garden, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What, in the Boxes?

Eub. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Boxes was there?

Eub. Five or ſix, I think, I know not what was in them.

Mr. At. Gen. You help'd to bury them, did you not?

Eub. No; but I was there, I ſaw them buried.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Evans tell you what they were?

Eub. Evans told me they were choice Goods.

Mr. At. Gen. Evans told you ſo, did he?

Eub. Yes.

L. C. J. What Time of the Day or Night were they fetch'd Home?

Eub. They went away about four o'Clock in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. How far is it from Sir William Parkyns's Houſe to Haywood's.

Eub. I think about three or four Miles, I can't tell how far exactly.

L. C. J. What Time did they return?

Eub. About ten or eleven o'Clock at Night.

Juryman. My Lord, I underſtand he ſays they buried them immediately, was he there, and did he help to bury them?

Eub. No, I did not help to bury them; but I ſaw Earth put upon them.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Eubank, let me ask you one Queſtion: The Perſon that lay at the Confectioner's, did you obſerve whether he had a lame Arm, or no?

Eub. No, I did not take Notice of any ſuch thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will Sir William Parkyns ask him any Queſtions?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir William, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Park. You ſay one Holmes went out of Town with me, pray give an Account what Holmes that is?

Eubank. It is Fat Mr. Holmes, if it pleaſe your Honour, he lives at the Golden Key in Holbourn.

Park. My Lord, I obſerve this to diſtinguiſh it that it was not, as Mr. Attorney opened it, Major Holmes that is in the Proclamation; it was one that us'd to be at my Houſe frequently; he was at my Houſe all the Summer.

Mr. At. Gen. You did well to ask him that Queſtion to explain it.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Par. No, my Lord,

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is one Thomas Hipwell; (who was ſworn.)

Mr. At. Gen. Where do you live?

Hipwell. At in Warwickſhire.

Mr. At. Gen. With whom do you live?

Hip. I live of myſelf, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know of any Goods that were carried from Mr. Haywood's Houſe to Sir William Parkyns's Houſe?

Hip. I came from Litchfield Fair upon Aſh-Wedneſday, where I had been to carry Goods for my Maſter ——

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you ſay you lived of your ſelf? I ask'd you before, who you liv'd with; who is your Maſter?

Hip. Mr. Haywood.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſaid before, you had no Maſter.

Hip. That is, when he pleaſes to employ me, I work for him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell what you carry'd from Haywood's Houſe, and who came for them.

Hip. There were, to the beſt of my Remembrance, either ſeven or eight Boxes.

Mr. At. Gen. Who came for them?

Hip. There was one of Sir William Parkyns's Men, one Richard Evans, that was his Servant, and one Wetſtone, that was Tenant to Sir William.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, how did they come, and what did they do?

Hipwell. They brought a Waggon and Two Mares.

Mr. At. Gen. About what Time was it?

Hip. It was about nine or ten o'Clock at Night when they went away.

Mr. At. Gen. What Orders had you from your Maſter?

Hip. It was near upon ſeven o'Clock, when the Waggon came, and my Maſter wiſh'd me to go to borrow a Mare of at I did ſo, and I brought the Mare I had borrowed with me home.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that Mare borrowed for?

Hip. I know not.

Mr. At. Gen. What Uſe was ſhe put to afterwards? What did you ſee more?

Hip. Why, before the Team came (about a Quarter of an Hour before) to fetch theſe Goods, my Maſter told me, that Sir William Parkyns's Men were to come to fetch ſome Bedding and other Goods, what they were he knew not, and he order'd me, when they knock'd at the Gate, to let them in; and I did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, Friend, did they carry away any Goods, and what were they?

Hip. They were in Boxes, at firſt in three Boxes; and then Sir William Parkyns's Servant did knock off the outſide Lining, which was a Deal Board, and he drew the Nails, and took out of two Boxes three Boxes a-piece, and two out of another: to the beſt of my Remembrance I think there were eight, but I am not ſure whether there were ſeven or eight.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they carry them away that Night?

Hip. Yes, Sir William Parkyns's Man Richard and the Tenant carry'd them to the Waggon,

and

and I lighted them down with a Lanthorn, according to my Master's Order.

Mr. At. Gen. When, what Day was this?

Hip. It was Ash-Wednesday at Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Then set up Mr. Haywood. (Who was sworn before.) Pray give my Lord an Account, when Sir William Parkyns's Goods were brought to your House, who brought them, and what Directions were given about the careful Keeping of them.

Haywood. My Lord, about Michaelmas last, Sir William Parkyns's Man came to me with a Letter from one Mr. Charnock, and the Effect of the Letter, was to desire the Favour of me to lodge some Goods of Sir William Parkyns at my House; for he was taking his Servants from his House, and he was loth to leave his Goods in an empty House, and he desired me to let them lie at my House, which I did.

Mr. At. Gen. How were they put up?

Haywood. I think in three Chests, pretty big Chests, nailed up and tack'd; and there was a Bed, and Bedding, and a Piece of Tapestry or two.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did that Letter come from Mr. Charnock?

Haywood. Yes, Evans, Sir William Parkyns's Man brought it me.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, how are you related to that Mr. Charnock? What Kin is he to you?

Haywood. I married his Sister.

L. C. J. You took the Goods into your Custody upon that Letter from Charnock?

Hayw. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account, whether you were in Town before this Discovery, and had any Discourse with Mr. Charnock or Sir William Parkyns about these Goods? When did you see Mr. Charnock afterwards?

Hayw. I came up to London the 16th Day, and I was in London the 17th, 18th, and 19th; I think those three Days; and I went to see Mr. Charnock at his Lodgings, but I was hardly with him a Quarter of an Hour: I told him Sir William Parkyns had sent some Goods to my House, and I desired to know when he would fetch them away. Says he, I can't say when I shall see him again. Said I, I shall have some Business at the Temple, and I will meet you at the Temple Coffee-House. Says he, I will meet; And bring Sir William Parkyns with you if you can, said I: He came about Eight or Nine o'Clock on Tuesday Morning; says he, Sir William Parkyns is at my Lodgings, just a going out of Town, and would desire to see you. So I went up, and Sir William Parkyns was ready to go out of Town: I told him I had some Goods of his at my House, and I desired to know how he would dispose of them; what he would do with them: He would take them away, he said, the first Opportunity, or to that Effect.

L. C. J. When was this, what Month?

Hayw. It was in February last.

L. C. J. What Day.

Hayw. I think it might be about the eighteenth Day.

L. C. J. It was you that desired to have them taken away, it seems, was it not?

Hayw. I asked him when he would take them away, or what he would do with them.

L. C. J. And what Answer did he make?

Hayw. He said he would take them away the first Opportunity, as soon as he could dispose of them, or to that Effect.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, when you came home, tell us who came for those Goods, and when?

Hayw. I think it was upon a Shrove-Tuesday that I came home, and my Wife said Sir William Parkyns had sent for his Goods, and desired to have them away, but that she had made Answer, I was not at home, but should be at home soon, and then he might have them away. The next Day I came home from Litchfield Fair, about Five or Six o'Clock at Night: It was Ash-Wednesday at Night when I came home, and the Man came to me between Six and Seven, and told me his Master desired to have the Goods away. I told him he might have them when he would; he said he would have them away that Night. I told him it was an unseasonable Time: But, says he, the Waggon is a coming, and I desire you would give me leave to take them away; which I did: Then he said he had but two Horses, and he desired me to lend him a Horse, which I did, and he took the Goods, and went away with them; but for what he did afterwards with 'em, I know nothing at all of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. Whetstone.

(Which was done.)

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir, do you give an Account when you went with Evans to Haywood's House, and what happened.

Whetstone. His Man came to me——

Mr. At. Gen. Whose Man?

Whetstone. Sir William Parkyns's Man, to desire me to go to Mr. Haywood's to fetch some Goods of Sir William Parkyns, some Bedding, and some odd Things, which I did; and, said he, I will go the next Way to the House, and I will meet you before you can get thither; and he did meet me half a Mile off the House, and told me I must stay, and not come to the House 'till it was Night, 'till it was later.

L. C. J. Who told you so?

Whetstone. Sir William Parkyns's Man told me so; so he went forwards to the Gate, and then came back, and called me to come in; then we went to the House, and loaded the Waggon with Boxes and Bedding that was there.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Boxes were there?

Whetstone. I cannot tell whether there were seven or eight.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you carry them?

Whetstone. We carried them to Sir William Parkyns's House.

Mr. At. Gen. What was done with them?

Whetstone. There they were put into the Ground by the Wall Side, where they were found.

Mr. At. Gen. Why; was you present when they were found?

Whetstone. Yes, I saw them dug up.

Mr. At. Gen. Then you can give us an Account of them; What were they?

Whetstone. They were Arms.

Mr. At. Gen. How many were there? what Quantity?

Whetstone. Truly, I cannot tell.

Mr. Baker. Where is the Constable Thomas Watts?

Watts. Here am I. (He was sworn.)

Mr. At. Gen. Are you the Constable?

Watts. Yes, Sir, I am the Constable, and search'd Sir William Parkyns's House, and upon searching in the Garden I found some Arms there.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Quantity of Arms did you find there?

Watts. Four Dozen of Swords, thirty-two Carbines, twenty-five Brace of Piſtols.

Mr. At. Gen. What kind of Swords were they?

Watts. They were broad Swords, two-edged Swords.

Mr. At. Gen. Were there any Hilts to the Swords?

Watts. No, but there was a Box of Hilts that I ſuppoſe was prepared for them.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you find them?

Watts. In a Border under the Wall by the Wall Side.

Juryman. Did you ſee the Boxes broke open, Sir?

Watts. Yes, Sir, I took them and broke them open my own ſelf.

Juryman. Was Whetſtone by, pray Sir, when they were broke open?

Watts. He was not there by at the firſt, when we dug them up; but I brought them to my own Houſe, and there I broke them open, and there we ſaw them.

Mr. At. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Sir William?

Parkyns. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol Gen. Then call Turton, Freeman, Fielding. (Who were all ſworn.)

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſet up Mr. Freeman.

(Which was done.)

Mr. At. Gen. Where do you live?

Freeman. At the George Inn in Holborn.

Mr. At. Gen. What are you?

Freeman. I am Hoſtler there.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray do you give an Account what Horſes were kept there of Sir William Parkyns, and how many?

Freeman. He was a Gueſt to the Houſe all this laſt Summer, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſs.

Mr. At. Gen. How was it laſt Winter about February laſt, how many Horſes had he then?

Freem. He had ſometimes three came in, ſometimes four, the moſt that ever he had was five.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was that that he had five, pray?

Freeman. To my beſt Memory it was juſt the Week before the Diſturbance, before the Plot broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. Before the Proclamation you mean?

Freeman. Yes, before the Proclamation.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it, what Day of the Week was it?

Freeman. They came in on Friday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. What; did five come in then?

Freeman. Yes, I think ſo.

L. C. J. H. Who was with him?

Freeman. I only ſaw his Groom and another Servant.

Mr. At. Gen. How were they accoutred?

Freeman. Four with Holſters and ſmall Piſtols, one was a led Mare with a Portmanteau; and in a Horſe-cloth wrapp'd up there was one or two Pair of Jack Boots, and, I think, a Collar in one, I cannot tell whether there was one Bridle or two.

Mr. At. Gen. When did they go away?

Freeman. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve any Perſons to come there on Saturday Morning?

Freeman. There were two Men that were there that rid out between two and three Hours; they rid out between Nine and Ten, and they came in again between Twelve and One; where they had been I cannot tell, but they had rid pretty hard for the Time they were out, for the Horſes came in in a Sweat.

Mr. At. Gen. Before this Time that you now ſpeak of, what Horſes came up? can you remember how many Horſes came up the Week before?

Freeman. The Week before there were ſome, but how many I cannot remember; they very rarely ſtay'd above a Night.

Mr. At. Gen. What do you know of any other Horſes that were left there?

Freeman. There were three Horſes that were at our Houſe a Week, that were very good Horſes, but I do not know whoſe Horſes they were, nor the Names of the Gentlemen that owned them. The Gentlemen that brought them in paid for the Horſes, only the Groom told me his Maſter, Sir William Parkyns, had ordered him to ſee the Horſes fed. I never received a Farthing of Sir William Parkyns, but always of the Groom.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you obſerve any particular Horſe that was brought in there, a Roan Horſe?

Freeman. Yes there was one Horſe brought in.

Mr. At. Gen. From whence did that Horſe come?

Freeman. As was told me, from Montague Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. I believe you miſtake the Place, recollect your ſelf a little.

Freeman. Somerſet Houſe, I mean; a Porter brought it.

Mr. At. Gen. Are you ſure it was Somerſet Houſe?

Freeman. Yes, it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know one Lewis?

Freeman. I do not know him, perhaps the Tapſter does.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Horſes came from Somerſet Houſe?

Freeman. Only the Roan Gelding, and a very fat Man mounted him, and rid out with Sir William Parkyns.

Par. Pray, Sir, what ſort of Horſe was that Bay Gelding that you ſay the fat Man rid upon?

Freeman. I ſay he rid upon a little Roan Gelding about fourteen Hands high.

Par. But the Bay Gelding, how high was that?

Freeman. About fourteen Hand high.

Par. There's your mighty Horſe for Service!

Freeman. They were no great ſized Horſes none of them.

Par. And have not you known theſe Horſes to have been mine a great while?

Freeman. Yes, I have known them to be yours a good while.

L. C. J. H. What; was the Roan Gelding Sir William Parkyns's?

Freeman. No, not the Roan, but the others; they were no ſtrange Horſes, they were frequently there all laſt Summer; there was no new ſtrange Horſe but the Roan.

L. C. J. H. Will you ask him any more Queſtion?

Par. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſet up Mr. Turton.

(Which was done.)

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you give an Account what you know of Horſes that were ſtanding at the George Inn in Holborn?

Turton. I have known Sir William Parkyns to have uſed the Inn this four or five Years, ever ſince the Inn was built; and in laſt February he came to Town with three Horſes the firſt Time.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month was that?

Turton. I cannot ſay what Day of the Month, but it was about the Week before his laſt coming there, which was juſt before the Diſcovery of the Plot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what Day of the Week it was?

Turton. No, truly I do not, for I keep no Account of Horſes going in or out. The laſt time of his coming was with about four or five Horſes, to the beſt of my Knowledge, and that was upon the Friday before the Plot broke out; and then upon that Friday, Sir William Parkyns gave order to his Groom to get the Horſes ready againſt Saturday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he go out with his Horſes on Saturday Morning?

Turton. He did not go out with all the Horſes according as he had given order; but two Gentlemen rid out with two of the Horſes, and ſtaid out about two or three Hours, and came in again, as if they had rid pretty hard, the Horſes being in a Sweat; and in the Afternoon they all went fairly out of Town, and gave out that they expected to be in Town on Sunday or Monday following, but they did not return; but then came down one Mr. Lewis, I know not that that is his Name, only when I formerly belonged to my Lord of Oxford, I knew him to be Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, but I did not know his Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you not ſeen him there before? What time did he come?

Turton. I do not know that I ever ſaw him there before; he was on Saturday in our Yard.

L. C. J. H. You are asked when Lewis came?

Turton. The firſt time I ſee him was on Saturday, in the Yard asking for Sir William Parkyns.

L. C. J. H. What time on Saturday was that?

Turton. It might be three of the Clock in the Afternoon, about an Hour or thereabouts before Sir William Parkyns's Horſes went away; and asking for Sir William Parkyns, and he not being there, he returned back again; and after they were gone, he came again, and I told him they were gone, but the Groom had acquainted me, and given me an Account, that he would be there again on Sunday or Monday. On Sunday in the Afternoon about five or ſix, Mr. Lewis came to enquire if Sir William Parkyns's Horſes were come to Town; I told him no; and ſo he came again upon Monday Morning betwixt eight and nine of the Clock, and asked me if I heard nothing of his coming to Town; I told him no, I did not hear of his coming again.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Horſes that came up on Friday Night, how were they accoutred?

Tur. Two or three of them had Holſters; I cannot ſay but for Piſtols they had four or five Caſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had they no Carbines?

Turton. No, but only Horſe-Piſtols.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not obſerve any other Arms, or other Furniture?

Turton. I did ſee a Pair or two of Jack-Boots that they rid in, but I did not ſee any more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any that were wrapt up in a Horſe-Cloth?

Turton. No, I did not ſee any, they were not brought into the Houſe.

Mr. Cowper. Do you know what time the Horſes were ſaddled that Day?

Turton. No, I did not.

Parkyns. You obſerved, and ſaid there were two or three Caſes of Piſtols, did not I always ride with Piſtols?

Turton. Yes, you ſeldom came without two or three Pair when you came with Servants.

Parkyns. And as to the Jack-Boots, you ſaid we rid in them.

Turton. I ſuppoſe ſo.

Parkyns. We alighted at Mr. John's Houſe, and ſo our Boots were ſent thither: And theſe were ſmall Horſes all of them; pray will you tell the Court what ſiz'd Horſes they were, was there ever a great Horſe among them?

Turton. Never a one, I believe, that exceeded above fourteen Hands and a half, ſome under fourteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee the Roan Gelding? what Size was that?

Turton. A ſmall Pad that might be about thirteen and a half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſee him come with ſo many Horſes before?

Turton. I have ſeen more at the Sword and Buckler, when I lived there; and he uſed to inn there.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many have you ſeen at the Sword and Buckler?

Turton. I have ſeen four or five at a Time, but this is many Years ago, ſeven or eight Years ago, when he uſed to keep his Coach and four Horſes, and come up with ſeveral ſaddle Horſes with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you lived at the George Inn?

Turton. About two Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any other Horſes that ſtood there?

Turton. There were two that were pretty ſizeable Horſes, larger than any of Sir William's own.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe were they?

Turton. I cannot tell.

Mr. Gtt. Gen. Did any Body own them?

Turton. I don't know who owned them, there was one that paid for their Meat, and took them away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who is that?

Turton. Truly, Sir, I cannot tell, I do not know who he was; I never ſaw him in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has Sir William Parkyns, any more Queſtions to ask him?

Parkyns. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we ſhall call no more Witneſſes, unleſs he gives further Occaſion, we leave it here till we hear what he ſays to it.

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Attorney General, and the King's Council have done; now is your time to make your Defence.

Parkyns. My Lord, I rely upon your Lordſhip for my Defence; for I am ignorant of theſe Proceedings; I rely wholly upon your Lordſhip, to give a true Account of them to the Jury: I hope your Lordſhip is ſo juſt, that you will repeat the Evidence to the Jury as it is, and no otherwiſe. But I do not obſerve, that as to the Aſſaſſination there is more than one Witneſs, and that is Captain Porter: There is not a Tittle more! and as to that, I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip will declare to the Jury, that I was not concerned in it; and Captain Porter declares, I was to have no Hand in it, only I was to furniſh five Horſes, and accidentally I was at ſome Meetings, but he does not declare that I was to do any thing in particular.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you agreed upon the Debates to the ſeveral Reſolutions of Aſſaſſinating the King, and ſaid, that it was neceſſary and fit to take him off.

Parkyns. Still, that is but one Witneſs, I deny it utterly, and the Law ſays poſitively there ſhall be two Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Not to every Overt Act, there is no Law ſays ſo.

Parkyns. As to the Aſſaſſination there is but one, no other but he; and ſo as to the Regiment he did not ſay that I was to raiſe a Regiment; but that he was told by a Gentleman that I had been deſired to be in the Matter, but I would not, becauſe I had engaged in another Buſineſs, about a Regiment; but this was all but hear-ſay.

L. C. J. Yes, he ſaid you owned you had a Regiment. Beſides, it is ſaid, you owned you had your Saddles, and your Troop conſiſted of old Soldiers.

Parkyns. No, Captain Porter never ſaid ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was Sweet.

L. C. J. You told Porter, you had a Regiment to look after.

Parkyns. Capt. Porter is here, I deſire he would explain himſelf.

L. C. J. Yes, and you told Sweet, that your Troop conſiſted of old Soldiers, and that you had bought thirty Saddles.

Parkyns. My Troop, aye! But ſtill there was nothing of a Regiment; nor did they ſay I had raiſed a Regiment, or a Troop, or was to raiſe a Regiment.

Sweet. You told me your Troop conſiſted of old Soldiers. I did not ſay that you ſaid you had raiſed or wou'd raiſe, but it did conſiſt of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. He ſays that which makes it plain, that you were to have a Troop, or had a Troop, conſiſting of old Soldiers, beſides Volunteers that had been Officers: and that you had bought a great many Saddles, thirty Saddles; and you were to go into Leiceſterſhire, and accordingly you did go, and upon your Return, you did give an Account that all was well, and the Weſt was as well inclined to King James's Intereſt as the North.

Parkyns. That I went into Leiceſterſhire, and met ſeveral Gentlemen, and that they were all well inclined; I hope that is no Evidence of Treaſon againſt me: every Body ought to be well inclined.

L. C. J. Aye! but they were all well diſpoſed or inclined to King James's Intereſt.

Parkyns. He did not ſay ſo; if your Lordſhip pleaſes to call him again.

L. C. J. Call him again.

(Sweet was ſet up again.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Sir William Parkyns tell you of his Journey into Leiceſterſhire?

Sweet. He ſaid he had been there, and had met his Friends, and all was well.

L. C. J. What did he ſay? Did he name King James?

Sweet. He did not name King James to me at that time.

L. C. J. What was the Diſcourſe about, that they were all well inclined to?

Sweet. He always named it the King's Intereſt, and did not name King James, but I underſtood it, and always took it to be King James he meant.

Mr. Mountague. What did he ſay of the North and Weſt?

Sweet. He ſaid that the Weſt was as well inclin'd to the King's Intereſt as the North.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay before he went?

Sweet. He told me he was to go into Leiceſterſhire, to meet ſome of the King's Friends.

Parkyns. Pray, recollect yourſelf, and conſider what you ſay.

Sweet. He ſaid ſome Gentlemen rid as far to him, as he did to meet them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the Time he talked about the Troop?

Sweet. No, that was before this Time. I cannot remember the particular Time; it was at his own Houſe, and Captain Scudamore was with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the Diſcourſe about King James's Landing?

Sweet. He told me that he believed now that King James wou'd land, he ſaid he had his own Word for it, it was about Chriſtmas.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay about Preparation for it?

Sweet. He ſaid his own Troop was to conſiſt of all old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Did he tell you he had a Troop?

Sweet. I ſpeak his own Words; he ſaid, My Troop conſiſts of all old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Was it conſiſts, or will conſiſt, though I think there may be no great Matter of Difference in this Caſe?

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, but there is a great deal, ſure, for will conſiſt ſhews nothing yet done, and all is but Words.

L. C. J. Sweet, Anſwer to Sir William Parkyns's Queſtion.

Sweet. I tell your Lordſhip, I repeat his own Words, my Troop conſiſts or is compoſed of all old Soldiers.

Mr. Cowper. What did he ſay of Volunteers?

Sweet. He ſaid, there were ſome Gentlemen that would go along with him as Volunteers, that had been old Officers.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, let me ask another Queſtion? when he diſcourſed of the preſent King, by what Name did he uſe to ſpeak of him?

Sweet. He called him by the Name of the Prince of Orange.

Parkyns. Pray, recollect yourſelf, Mr. Sweet, and think of what you ſay, ſince he was declared King, did I ever call him Prince of Orange? I am upon my Life, and pray ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Conſider, and anſwer the Queſtion, what did he uſe to call him?

Sweet. Truly, my Lord, I am not poſitive as to that, I underſtood it ſo. I never knew that he allowed him to be King of England.

Parkyns. Did you ever hear me call him Prince of Orange, ſince he was King?

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir, how long have you been acquainted with him?

Sweet. About three Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, that is long ſince his Majeſty was declared King; have you ever heard Sir William Parkyns call this King Prince of Orange?

Sweet. I am not poſitive in that, but I underſtood he did not allow him to be King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You frequently diſcourſed with him about the Government it ſeems; pray what did he uſe to call him?

Sweet. I have heard him call him King William, and the little Gentleman.

Parkyns.

Parkyns. When ever did you hear me call him the little Gentleman? Mr. Sweet, pray, when you are upon your Oath conſider well, and recollect yourſelf, and don't anſwer raſhly and ſuddenly, but think of what you ſay. I always expreſs'd myſelf, when I had occaſion to ſpeak of him, and called him King William, as other People uſe to do, I never uſed the Words, little Gentleman, nor Prince of Orange neither.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him call him otherwiſe than King William?

(He pauſed a while.)

L. C. J. Pray ſpeak the Truth, and no more.

Sweet. I have heard him call him Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. But you have heard him call him King William too?

Mr. Sweet. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. But pray, when he ſpoke of the King, what King did you underſtand by it?

Sweet. I uſed to underſtand King James.

Parkyns. What is that to me what he underſtood?

L. C. J. But I would obſerve to you one thing, when you came from Leiceſterſhire, you talked how well diſpoſed they were to the King's Intereſt; he ſays, he underſtood that King to be King James, and you ſaid the Weſt was as well diſpoſed as the North; pray now were you imployed by King William to ſee how the Gentlemen ſtood affected to him?

Parkyns. No, nor by King James neither.

L. C. J. Why then ſhould you concern yourſelf for the King's Friends, in the Weſt and the North?

Parkyns. I never was in the Weſt in my Life, and therefore I can't tell why I ſhould tell him any thing about the Weſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when was it that Sir William Parkyns ſpoke about the King's landing?

Sweet. It was about Chriſtmas, he ſaid he believed he would land.

Parkyns. Did I tell you poſitively it would be ſo then?

Mr. Att. Gen. He tells you he ſaid you did believe it, for you had it from his own Mouth.

Parkyns. That ſhews it is not probable I ſhould tell him ſo, that I ſhould have it from his own Mouth, carries ſuch an Improbability with it, that the Evidence is Felo de ſe, it deſtroys itſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not ſay you had it from his own Mouth, but that you had his Word for it, and this being about Chriſtmas, long after our King was returned, it could mean no other King but King James.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir William Parkyns, there is another thing I would obſerve, why did you ſend your Man to Kenſington to one Brown? Who is that Brown, and what was the Man that lodged at the Confectioner's in Holborn?

Parkyns. I cannot tell who it was, I know neither Brown nor the other Man, but I ſent my Man at the Requeſt of Mr. Charnock, who lodged in the ſame Houſe with me; he deſired he might go upon an Errand for him to Kenſington, and I directed him to go upon ſuch an Errand, for he was formerly Mr. Charnock's Servant, and I deſired him to go of the Errand if he requeſted it. Who theſe Men were, I know not, neither of them, nor any of their Buſineſs.

L. C. J. But he was bid by the Man that lodged at the Confectioner's to tell his Maſter that he would ſtay within for him.

Parkyns. That might be Mr. Charnock, for he was his Servant once.

L. C. J. But he ſays he carried the Meſſage to you, and you received it. Well, have you any more to ſay?

Parkyns. My Lord, I think there is but one poſitive Evidence of any one Overt Act.

L. C. J. Yes, what do you think of the Deſign of bringing in King James, and conſulting about it, and aſſiſting in the Invaſion, and preparing a Troop, and providing Arms and Horſes? Are not theſe Overt Acts? Do you think your having a Troop of old Soldiers is no Overt Act?

Parkyns. There is no poſitive Proof of any Troop or any Arms.

L. C. J. It is proved there were Arms ſent by you at Michaelmas laſt to Mr. Haywood's, Charnock's Brother in Law, and theſe lay there till Aſh-Wedneſday laſt, after your Name was in the Proclamation, and then they were removed in the Night, and buried at your Houſe, and were taken up there, and here is an Account given what Arms they were, four Dozen of Swords, twenty-five Pair of Piſtols, thirty-two Carbines.

Parkyns. Firſt it does not appear when theſe Arms were bought, nor for what Intent they were brought from Haywood's.

L. C. J. But what Uſe had you, a private Man, for ſo many Arms? and then your going into Leiceſterſhire to meet ſome Gentlemen, and your giving an Account how they ſtood affected to the King's Intereſt, whether that be underſtood for the Intereſt of King James, I muſt leave to the Jury, ſince you give no Account that you were imployed by King William.

Parkyns. My Lord, I went upon my private Occaſions, and then talked of News as other People do.

L. C. J. But when you returned back again, you declared all was well, and gave an Account how Perſons were diſpoſed in the Weſt and North.

Parkyns. Is there any Perſons named, or Particulars? Can it be an Overt Act of Treaſon for me to diſcover my Acquaintance?

L. C. J. But your going with that Deſign to engage in an Intereſt againſt the King and for the late King.

Parkyns. He does not ſay diſcovered my Deſign. I went to meet with ſome Friends of my own.

L. C. J. Did he not tell you he was to go into Leiceſterſhire?

Sweet. Yes, he did ſo.

L. C. J. Did he tell you to what purpoſe?

Sweet. He ſaid he was to go to meet ſome of the King's Friends.

Parkyns. Did I tell you who?

Sweet. No.

L. C. J. But there was a Lord's Brother, what did he tell you of that?

Sweet. He ſaid all Things were well, and the Weſt was as well inclined as the North.

L. C. J. To what?

Sweet. To the King's Intereſt.

L. C. J. Treby. You ſpoke of a Lord's Brother that was concerned?

Sweet. He ſaid ſeveral Perſons of Quality in the Weſt were concerned, and a Lord's Brother was among them.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, when he ſaid the King would land, what King he meant, whether he named the late King, or King James.

L. C. J. Well, Anſwer that? when he diſcourſed to you of the King's landing, did he name the late King James? or did he ſay the late King James?

Jurym. Was he mentioned in the Diſcourſe?

Sweet. He never uſed to mention King James to me, but only the King, which I underſtood always of King James.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what time was it that he ſpoke of the King's landing?

Sweet. It was about Chriſtmas.

Mr. Att. Gen. Therefore no other King could be meant but King James, for there was no other King to land at that time; and he ſaid he had the King's Word for it. I ſuppoſe he can't pretend he had King William's Word for it.

Parkyns. I hope, to talk of the King's landing is no Treaſon; it is but Words: If I tell an idle Story of what I think may come to paſs, ſhall that be reckoned Treaſon? Then for him to ſay, I had it from the King's own Mouth, it is impoſſible to be true, and is no Overt Act, being only Words, and cannot be reputed Treaſon. And then as to the other two Parts of the Charge, the Conſultations with my Lord of Ailesbury, and thoſe other Perſons, there is but one Witneſs; no Body but Porter; neither is there any more but he for the Aſſaſſination; his Evidence is but a ſingle Proof, and there ought to be two poſitive Witneſſes, by the Law, to each Overt Act.

L. C. J. Holt. No: There ought to be two Witneſſes to each Species of Treaſon, that's all.

Parkyns. There ought to be two Witneſſes to both theſe Parts of the Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. I muſt tell you, Sir William Parkyns, if any Perſon does deſign and contrive that the Realm ſhould be invaded, or the King depoſed, and another ſet upon the Throne, that conſpiring to invade the Realm, or depoſe the King, are Overt Acts of High-Treaſon, within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. and the ſame Species of Treaſon as deſigning to aſſaſſinate him is. It is compaſſing, deſigning, imagining his Death and Deſtruction. Now the Queſtion is, whether there is not another Witneſs, beſides Captain Porter, to prove another Overt Act of this Deſign?

Parkyns. I don't find there is, for all the reſt is only Diſcourſe.

L. P. J. Holt. Yes, for what, do you think providing Arms for that Purpoſe, is only Diſcourſe?

Parkyns. The Witneſſes don't ſay for what Purpoſe the Arms were bought.

L. C. J. H. Nor do you tell us of any other Purpoſe.

Parkyns. My Lord, it does not appear when they were bought.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, but what Occaſion had you for ſuch a Quantity of Arms?

Parkyns. My Lord, I did not buy them after all. I found them. If I had had Liberty to have ſent down for Witneſſes, I could have proved that theſe Arms were in Boxes all ruſty in my Houſe when I firſt came to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay: But why were they buried, juſt at the Time when the Plot was broke out, and the whole Deſign diſcovered?

Parkyns. I can't tell, my Lord, how to help it, if they will make an ill Interpretation.

L. C. J. Holt. What Interpretation would you have us make?

Parkyns. My Lord, it is very eaſy to imagine, People don't care to be found with Arms at ſuch a Time; but, however, the Having of Arms is no Treaſon. They are as much a Commodity as any thing elſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. And then the Horſe coming to Town juſt at ſuch a Time, and the Saddles.

Parkyns. I have not bought a Horſe this two Years, and I travelled in no other Manner than I uſed to do. So the Groom tells ye, I uſed to come to Town with three or four Horſes always. I never kept leſs than ſix or ſeven Horſes this twenty Years; ſometimes a great many more; and they were very little Horſes, Pads, no Way fit for the Service they are preſumed to be for.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more to ſay, Sir?

Parkyns. I hope, my Lord, as to the Aſſaſſination I am clear: Perhaps the World would imagine, I have had ſome Inclinations to King James's Service, and perhaps they may not think amiſs; but I never did any thing, nor had an Opportunity to do.

L. C. J. Holt. God be thanked you had no Opportunity.

Parkyns. And I hope my Life ſhall not be taken away without Proof; I hope it will be rather thought, that every one ſhould be taken to be innocent; and it would better pleaſe the King, that I ſhould be acquitted, than to let me be found guilty upon ſlight Grounds, and Imaginations, of which little or nothing can be made.

L. C. J. Holt. No queſtion of it: It will pleaſe the King and every Body elſe, that you ſhould be found innocent.

Parkyns. Then, I hope, my Lord, you will not ſtrain the Law to take away my Life; according to the Rule, That it is better five guilty Men ſhould eſcape, than one innocent Man ſuffer: For the Blood of a Man may lie upon every Body, if it be cauſeleſly ſhed; and it is very ſevere to ſtrain the Law to take away any Man's Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, I muſt tell you, you may be under a very great Miſtake: You may think it neceſſary to have two Witneſſes to every Overt Act, but that is not ſo; for if there be one Witneſs to one Overt Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon, that is all that the Law requires.

Parkyns. Here are two Species of Treaſon, levying War is one Species, and Aſſaſſination is another.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Deſign was, originally, the reſtoring of King James, and in order to that the dethroning of King William.

Parkyns. That appears but by one Witneſs, which is not according to Law, which requires two.

L. C. J. Holt. One Way of effecting your Deſign was by Aſſaſſination, the other by Invaſion, or by Force.

Parkyns. Still, my Lord, here is the ſame Witneſs, and that is but one.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, there are two.

Parkyns. None but Capt. Porter.

L. C. J. Holt. What, not as to the Reſtoring of King James, which tends to the Dethroning King William?

Parkyns. In what Particulars, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Your providing Arms, and going to Leiceſterſhire, and ſending Charnock on that Errand into France. As to the Aſſaſſination, indeed, deed, there is but one poſitive Witneſs, beſides other Circumſtances, which have their Weight; but as to the other, you ſaid the King would come——

Parkyns. It was my Opinion, that's all.

L. C. J. But you ſaid you had his Word for it.

Parkyns. Does not that anſwer it ſelf, my Lord? Is it poſſible it ſhould be true, that I who was in England, ſhould have the Word of one that is at ſuch a Diſtance beyond Sea?

L. C. J. And then your buying of Saddles, for what Purpoſe were they?

Parkyns. My Lord, does he ſay it was in order to it? I am ſure he does not, and I hope I ſhall not be preſumed out of my Life.

L. C. J. When you talk'd of the King's Landing, and ſaid, you had his Word for it; you likewiſe ſaid, your Troop was made up of old Soldiers, beſides Volunteers that had been Officers.

Par. Still there is nothing done; he does not ſay there was one Man raiſed.

L. C. J. And your going into Leiceſterſhire upon ſuch an Errand, as you told him you went upon.

Par. Well, my Lord, I muſt leave it to your Lordſhip. I hope you will conſider well of it.

L. C. J. We muſt do that which is right between the King and his Subjects.

Par. And, I hope, my Lord, the Converſion of Subjects is more acceptable than the Deſtruction of them; and the Government is more concern'd to ſave the Innocent, than to ſtretch the Law to puniſh the Guilty.

L. C. J. It will be more acceptable, and indeed, the King and Kingdom are very much concerned in this Matter, and at this Time, Sir William; and the Government ought to take Care to preſerve itſelf. Have you any more to ſay, Sir? if you have pray ſpeak it.

Par. I have no more. I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip: I think there is but none Witneſs, and all the other is but Conjecture and Nonſenſe; and one Witneſs is not ſufficient, by the Law of England, for by the Statute there muſt be two.

L. C. J. I have told you my Opinion.

Par. Beſides, your Lordſhip has known me this many Years, and you know that my Education was not to War, and Fighting, but the Gown; and your Lordſhip knows how peaceably I have lived.

L. C. J. I have known you heretofore, Sir William, while you kept your Profeſſion and your Gown.

Par. And now in my old Age, my Lord, I am grown lame, and have loſt the Uſe of my Hands with the Gout, and ſcarce able almoſt to go on my Feet. Therefore it cannot in Reaſon be thought probable, that I ſhould engage in ſuch a Buſineſs as this; and therefore I hope you will interpret all Things in a milder Senſe, in Favour of Life, rather than for the Deſtruction of it, and the Ruin of a Man's Fortune and Family.

L. C. J. I tell you, You have had my Opinion concerning the Number of Witneſſes. I ſuppoſe my Lord and Brother will declare theirs.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lord Chief Juſtice, it ſeems, does pleaſe to have us deliver our Opinions; I think we ought to be very tender in a Caſe of Blood: I think the Life of Sir William Parkyns is at Stake, and we ought to be careful that he have no Wrong done him. But I think in the Caſes of Treaſon, eſpecially of this Nature, the Life of the King, and the Lives of all the innocent People of the Kingdom are alſo at Stake; and we muſt be indifferent in this Caſe, and by the Grace of God we will be ſo. The Queſtion that Sir William Parkyns propoſes, is, Whether there are two Witneſſes upon this Evidence, to this Matter of which he is indicted, which is, the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death. One Witneſs, at leaſt, does poſitively prove, That you Sir William Parkyns did agree to the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King's Perſon, and promiſe to provide and contribute Horſes and Arms to that Purpoſe. Now ſuppoſe this is prov'd but by one Witneſs, and the Evidence had gone no farther, then your Objection would have had a very good Ground, that this could not be a legal Proof of Treaſon; but I muſt tell you, That this Treaſon of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death may be made evident by other Overt Acts, beſides that of Aſſaſſination: To conſpire with a Foreign Prince, to invade the Realm, to provide Arms, to join with Invaders, and to make an Inſurrection againſt the King, theſe are Overt Acts of Imagining the King's Death. For it cannot be ſuppoſed, but that he that would have an Invaſion and an Inſurrection againſt the King's Perſon, does intend the Deſtruction of the King; he that would take away all his Defence, which he might have by the Aſſiſtance of his Subjects, and leave him expoſed to his mortal Enemies, cannot but be preſumed to deſign the King's Ruin and Murder. Therefore, Sir William, ſuch Things being in their Nature a Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death; your providing Arms and a Troop are Evidences and Overt Acts of this Treaſon; and ſo will your going up and down and meeting People in order to riſe, if that were your Buſineſs in Leiceſterſhire, &c. as it ſeems by the Evidence it was.

Par. But that is not ſaid, my Lord, I humbly beg your Pardon for interrupting you; it is not ſaid, That I met them to riſe, by no Evidence whatſoever; and therefore, pray my Lord, do not inforce it beyond what the Evidence has proved; he ſaid, I went to meet my Friends: Was there any thing ſaid it was in order to a Riſing?

L. C. J. Treby. I think you miſtake your own Words, as you ſpoke them to the Witneſs, if I did take them, as I think I did, right, for they were ſeveral Times repeated. I will do you no Wrong, Sir William, I aſſure you. You went into Leiceſterſhire, and you ſay, It was to meet your Friends; the Witneſs ſays, It was to meet the King's Friends; by the King, it is very plain, you meant not King William, but King James; for you ſpoke before of the King's Landing, which was at Chriſtmas laſt, when every body knows King William was in England. Theſe coupled together——

Par. I beg your Pardon, my Lord; thoſe two Things are not both to be join'd together, the Diſcourſe of the King's Landing was at Chriſtmas, as he ſays, the other thing, my Journey into Leiceſterſhire, was a Month afterwards, and therefore they cannot be coupled together.

L. C. J. Treby. The Coupling of them, that I meant, was only to ſhew who was underſtood to be ſpoken of by you, when you named the King; ſo the Queſtion is, Whether you did not mean the ſame Perſon in January that you meant in December, by the Word King, eſpecially ſince as a Diſcovery you had made, you ſaid farther, that the the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt as the North, and a Lord's Brother was concerned in it. If by the King you had meant King William; how impertinent and inſenſible had been all this Diſcourſe, that the Weſt was as well inclined as the North, and that a Lord's Brother was concerned in it; concerned in what? In being inclined to King William; to what Purpoſe could that be ſaid?

Par. It may as well be interpreted that Way as the other.

L. C. J. Treby. I muſt leave that to the Jury. And I confeſs, if there was not ſomewhat more in the Caſe, you might the better argue upon this, as to the Interpretation. But laying aſide the Conſideration of your Riding into Leiceſterſhire, &c. here is this Providing of Arms, proved by four or five Witneſſes, and the Serving of them in that Manner; and there is no Account given by you, that they were provided for the Service of the Government, or that you were employ'd ſo to do. Certainly it is not lawful to provide Arms, eſpecially for a whole Troop, as for ought I perceive here was, though indeed I am not skilful enough in thoſe Buſineſſes, to know how many make up a Troop; but it's plain here was an Inſurrection intended, when the Invaſion was made; and that is an Evidence, that theſe Arms were to be employ'd upon that Account, for no other Uſe was to be made of them, nor is pretended. If you had found thoſe Arms in your Houſe (as you ſay) it had been your Duty to have deliver'd them up, or diſpoſed of them to the Uſe and Service of the Government, which Service too, could only be when you had a Commiſſion from the Government, and not of your own Head. And then, beſides all this, you acknowledg'd that you had a Troop of old Soldiers.

Par. It is but ſlidingly that, for he only tells you, that a Troop would be compoſed of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Treby. How can that be? when he ſays, he repeats your own Words, My Troop conſiſts of old Soldiers; can any Body ſay, that his Troop conſiſts of old Soldiers, without having a Troop?

Par. Pray, Mr. Sweet, ſpeak; my Life is at Stake, Did I ſay to you, it did conſiſt, or it was to conſiſt? recollect your ſelf, and conſider well before you ſpeak.

L. C. J. What was it that he did ſay? it did conſiſt, or it would conſiſt?

Sweet. He ſaid, his Troop was compoſed all of old Soldiers.

Par. But does it appear by any Evidence, that I had a Troop; if I had, who were they? none of theſe Men do appear. Does this Troop conſiſt of Men in the Air? that I ſhould liſt Men that are all in Nubibus, and not one of them to be known. Suppoſe I ſhould tell him a Lye, or make ſome Brags, is this Treaſon? here is no Perſon proved to be liſted or named.

L. C. J. But Arms were found in your Houſe for a Troop.

Par. But where they were bought, and when they were bought, and made ready, it does not appear; and I affirm to your Lordſhip, if you would give me but one Day's Time, I would prove, that they were at my Houſe in Warwickſhire, when I firſt came down thither, which is two Years ago. And I'll fully make it out to your Satisfaction, or I'll be crucify'd, or any thing in the World. I can prove it by a great many Witneſſes, by my Friends, and all the Servants that belonged to me, they were there long before this Diſcourſe was had or thought of.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. If your Lordſhip expects that I ſhould deliver my Opinion, I am ready to do it. As to this Matter of Law that Sir William Parkyns has propoſed, he ſays, There are not two Witneſſes to the ſame Overt Act, and therefore no Evidence of Treaſon; truly, I take it, and always did, that the Law is, there need not be two Witneſſes, to the ſame Overt Act; but if there be two Witneſſes, one whereof ſpeaks to one Overt Act, and another to another Overt Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon, theſe are two Witneſſes within the Law. Now, I think, there are two Overt Acts in the Indictment of this Treaſon. The Treaſon is Compaſſing the Death of the King; the Overt Acts are firſt, the particular Deſign of the Aſſaſſination upon his Perſon, and the other is, the bringing in of a foreign Force, and preparing Horſes and Arms to meet that foreign Force here: All to the ſame Intent and Purpoſe, the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death. Now beſides that of the Aſſaſſination, there are a great many Witneſſes that prove there were Arms prepared; for there were found a great Quantity, when they opened the Boxes, which Boxes, it is plain, he himſelf ſent down to Haywood's Houſe: For tho' Charnock writ a Letter, yet it was by his Direction, as he own'd to Haywood, when he was here in Town. And then his Servant fetched them away from this Place, and this I take to be another Overt Act, and proved by ſeveral Witneſſes. Sir William Parkyns ſpeaks of his being a Gown-Man, but I do not know what a Gown-Man has to do with ſuch a Quantity of Arms.

Par. If you will give me Leave to ſend for ſome People, I will demonſtrate it to you as clear as the Sun, that they were in the Houſe two Years ago, when I came firſt thither.

Mr. Juſt Rokeby. There were Preparations two Years ago, it appears, for the Deſtruction of the King and Kingdom; however, the Men that were accuſed of it, had the Luck to eſcape and be acquitted.

Par. My Lord, I hope I ſhall not be interpreted out of my Life, I deſire the Statute may be read.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. What Statute do you mean?

Par. The 25th of Edw. III. and the new Statute too, let them both be read to the Jury, that they may conſider of it.

The Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. was read.

Par. There is nothing of two Witneſſes there.

L. C. J. No, but there is another Statute of the 5th of Edw. VI. cap. 11. that may be more for your Advantage; Will you have that read?

Par. Yes, if you pleaſe, I know there is another Statute that does direct it, and I expected to have found it in this Statute.

Cl. of Ar. This is an Act made in the 5th and 6th Years of King Edw. VI.

The Statute was read to theſe Words, Unleſs without Trial he ſhall confeſs the ſame.

Par. There's enough.

L. C. J. You have heard the Statute read, would you infer any thing from it?

Parkyns. I infer that there ought to be two Witneſſes, and here is but one.

L. C. J. There are two Witneſſes.

Park. Not direct to the ſame Thing.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. I ſhall leave it to the Jury, whether this Evidence does not prove an Overt-Act, to demonſtrate a Deſign againſt the King; if the Deſign be to depoſe him, and that's manifeſted by two Overt-Acts, undoubtedly that is Treaſon within the Statute of 25 of Edw. 3.

Par. That I agree, but yet there muſt be two Witneſſes of it.

L. C. J. Suppoſe Dethroning the King be the main Deſign that ſtrikes at his Life, and you reſolve it ſhall be done one Way or other. One Way by Aſſaſſination, the other by Inſurrection; or by Invaſion and joining with a foreign Army.

Par. My Lord, I conceive there ought to be two Witneſſes for each.

L. C. J. No, no; for that very laſt Act that is to take Effect in a few Days, declares it is ſufficient, if there be one to one Overt-Act, and another to another; but ſtill it muſt be of the ſame Head or Species of Treaſon; and depoſing the King and aſſaſſinating of him, and preparing to raiſe an Army againſt him, or to excite an Invaſion, are but one Sort of Treaſon.

Par. It may be ſo, if they were Overt-Acts of one Sort of Treaſon; but riſing in Arms, and Aſſaſſination are as different Things as can be in the World, and therefore there ought to be two Witneſſes to each of them.

Mr. J. Rokeby. That which I deliver'd as my Opinion was, that one Witneſs proving one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs proving another Overt-Act of the ſame Sort of Treaſon, are two good Witneſſes, according as the Law requires. And I am the more fully confirm'd in it, by the Clauſe that is in this new Act of Parliament, made for Trials in Caſes of Treaſon, that a Man ſhall not be convicted of Treaſon, but by and upon the Oaths and Teſtimony of two lawful Witneſſes, either both of them to the ſame Overt-Act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt-Act of the ſame Treaſon.

Par. Of the ſame Treaſon, aye.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. And here it is the imagining the Death of the King, that is the Treaſon.

Par. Then you may ſay every Thing elſe is ſo; but if you pleaſe to let the whole Statute be read.

L. C. J. You ſhall have it read if you will; but this is all that is in it concerning this Matter. Now a Deſign to depoſe the King, which is manifeſted by ſome Overt-Act, is an Overt-Act to prove the Deſign of the Death of the King.

Par. Then it muſt be manifeſt, and not by Interpretation; and all theſe Things are by Interpretation, except it be what Porter ſwears.

L. C. J. If by Overt-Act it be proved, that you deſigned his Depoſition, that is an Overt-Act to prove your Deſign of his Death.

Par. They are very different Things, Death and Depoſitions. We have ſeen a King depoſed, and yet he is alive.

L. C. J. Treby. I am ſure we have ſeen a King agreed to be aſſaſſinated, and yet, God be thanked, he is ſtill alive.

L. C. J. It is not the Succeeding in the Deſign, but the Deſign itſelf that is the Treaſon. God forbid that it ſhould have Succeſs to make it Treaſon.

L. C. J. Treby. But whenever People will agree together to bring in foreign Forces, or to prepare Men and Arms againſt the King that is in Poſſeſſion, this is reckoned an Overt-Act of a Deſign againſt his Life, and has always been reckoned ſo by my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales, my Lord Chief Juſtice Coke, and by all thoſe Men that have been reputed the moſt tender in Caſes of this Nature: For any Act that expreſſes an Intent of dethroning the King, by Means of an Invaſion by a foreign Force, and an Inſurrection againſt the King, is a proper Proof of a Deſign of his Deſtruction; and if not, then agreeing to ſhoot him is not an Overt-Act. Men may ſay alſo, that there need be actual Shooting to make out the Overt Act in that Caſe.

Par. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to have the Act read, I ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment.

L. C. J. Let it be read.

Par. If you pleaſe to read the Act, the Preamble of it.

Cl. of Ar. This is an Act made in the 7th Year of our Sovereign Lord the King: Is that the Act? It is an Act for Regulating of Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon, and Miſpriſion of Treaſon. Is that the Act?

Par. Yes, yes. (The Act was read.)

Mr. J. Rokeby. I believe if you look into the great Caſe in Parliament, the Caſe of my Lord Stafford, you'll find it was declar'd for Law, that one Witneſs to one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt-Act of the ſame Treaſon, they were two Witneſſes within the Law, and this was a ſolemn Reſolution in Parliament in the Houſe of Lords.

Par. I believe it has been done; but here is a beneficial Law made, which if my Trial had been put off a few Days, I ſhould have had the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. It would have been the ſame Thing as to this Matter, for this Act declares the very ſame Thing, as to the two Witneſſes.

Par. And then, my Lord, I could have had Witneſſes to have taken off a great Part of this Evidence, and the Law comes to take Effect within one Day, and it turns here upon this Matter of Sweet, who is not a good Evidence; for it is manifeſt he has contradicted himſelf, and it is manifeſt he has ſworn what cannot be true.

L. C. J. Wherein?

Par. That I ſhould ſay the King would land here, for I had his Word for it.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. You might have his Word, and not delivered by his own Mouth; there are other Ways to convey a Man's Word beſides ſpeaking.

Par. But then we don't call it his Word, that's Hearſay.

Mr. Juſt. Rokeby. If a Man write his Note that he will do ſuch a Thing, we may very well ſay, we have his Word for it.

L. C. J. It is not impoſſible but that you might ſpeak with him.

Par. It is impoſſible I ſhould ſpeak from hence to France.

L. C. J. You might have been over with him, I believe a great many others have, and it's proved Mr. Charnock went over.

Mr. J. Rokeby. If any Man ſhould have ſaid at the latter End of the laſt Month, I believe that there was an Aſſaſſination intended againſt the King, becauſe I have his Word for it, meerly from reading his Speech to the Parliament, wherein he affirms that he had ſeveral Proofs of it, that had been a proper Expreſſion, though he did not hear the King ſpeak it.

Par. Yes, if he had the Speech to produce.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Then if it come by Letter, or Meſſage, or common Fame, he might ſend you Word by particular Meſſenger.

Par. Yes, if there was any ſuch Authority as that it were true. But he has manifeſtly contradicted himſelf, and Capt. Porter ſwears for his own Life, and I muſt leave it to you, whether they are to be believed.

Mr.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Capt. Porter's Teſtimony has been ſufficiently confirm'd by the Acknowledgment of dying Perſons.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to ſay, Sir William Parkyns?

Parkyns. No, my Lord, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Direction.

L. C. J. Then what ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney, or Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King in this Matter, and it is my Turn to ſum up the Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: He ſtands indicted for compaſſing the Death of the King, for deſigning to depoſe the King, for promoting a foreign Invaſion, for intending an Inſurrection here at home, and for aiding and abetting the King's Enemies, and for doing what he could to procure the Subjection of his own Country to Foreigners and Strangers.

Gentlemen, ſome of theſe Crimes run into one another; deſigning the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, and deſigning to depoſe the King, amount to one and the ſame Thing with compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King.

My Lords the Judges have given you their Opinion in that Point of Law, and I think it is agreeable to all the Reſolutions that have been ſince the Making of the Statute of 25 of Edw. 3d. I think that it has been explained ſo in the Time of Richard the Second; but this I am ſure of, that it was ſo reſolv'd in the Time of Harry the Fourth, when there was a Deſign to ſet up Richard the Second again, and it was adjudged to be High-Treaſon in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. For depoſing the King, is deſtroying him in his politick Capacity, as much as Aſſaſſination and Murdering of him is deſtroying him in his natural Capacity, and the Conſpirators in ſuch Caſes know what the great End is they aim at, to ſubvert the Government as it is eſtabliſhed by Law, whereby every Man enjoys his own Property, and the Freedom of his Perſon, and thoſe that will be quiet may have their Liberty and Property preſerved entire to them; but ſome People are ſo very impatient of ſubmitting to the Law, that they cannot be content to be in Servitude themſelves, but they muſt needs do all they can, to bring it upon their Fellow-Subjects. And it were very well if that thoſe who are in Love with Slavery, would but go to ſome other Places, where they may have enough of it, and not bring it upon thoſe who are ſo little deſirous of ſuch a Thing, as we are, and I hope always ſhall be.

Gentlemen, to prove Sir William Parkyns Guilty of this Treaſon, whereof he ſtands indicted, we have produced ſeveral Witneſſes; and firſt there is Mr. Porter, and he tells you Sir William Parkyns told him he had ſeen a Commiſſion from K. James, written with his own Hand, for making War againſt the Perſon of K. William.

Parkyns. Sir, I beg your Pardon for interrupting you, but there was not one Word of that ſaid; here is Mr. Porter, pray ask him, if ever I ſaw a Commiſſion from King James.

L. C. J. Porter did ſay ſo, if I remember any Thing Porter ſaid, you told him you had read the Commiſſion, and it was written with his own Hand.

Par. All that I heard of it was, that when I was deſired to make one in the Aſſaſſination, I refuſed it becauſe I ſaid I was buſy about the Matter of my Regiment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray call Porter again. (Capt. Porter came in.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Capt. Porter, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you heard Sir William Parkyns ſay about the Commiſſion that came from King James?

Capt. Porter. I ask'd Mr. Charnock why I might not ſee the Commiſſion, and he told me he had never ſeen it himſelf, but Sir William Parkyns had. I did ask Sir William Parkyns, whether he had ſeen it, and he told me he did ſee it, and read it, and it was to raiſe War againſt the Perſon of the Prince of Orange.

Mr. At. Gen. Whoſe Hand was it in, did he ſay?

Capt. Porter. It was written with K. James's own Hand.

Par. This was my Miſtake, I thought he had ſaid I told him I had a Commiſſion for a Regiment.

Mr. Mountague. Did he give any Reaſon, why it was written with King James's own Hand?

Capt. Porter. We uſed to ſay amongſt ourſelves, it was, becauſe he would not truſt any of his Miniſters with it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would not do Sir William Parkyns any Wrong, but only ſum up what is material in the Evidence given againſt him. I remember very well Mr. Porter ſaid, Mr. Charnock told him Sir William Parkyns had ſeen the Commiſſion, but I would not offer that as Evidence againſt the Priſoner what another told him, but he ſays beſides that Sir William Parkyns told him himſelf, that he had ſeen it, and that it was written with King James's own Hand. He ſays that they had ſeveral Meetings together, Sir William Parkyns, and a great many others; and he names the Places, the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden; he tells you particularly, that it was agreed that King (who was executed) and Knightley, and himſelf ſhould go and view a Place that ſhould be proper for the Aſſaſſination, and to give a Report to the Priſoner, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, what they thought the moſt proper Place; and that accordingly they did view the Place, and came home at Night, and met the Company, whereof Sir William Parkyns was one; and they gave an Account how the Place was viewed, and which was thought moſt proper, and then all the Company agreed to it. He ſays indeed, that Sir William Parkyns was not one that was to execute it in his own Perſon, but one Scudamore was to be the Man imployed by him, and he did ſay it was a Thing that was very neceſſary to be done, and would facilitate the Introduction of King James, and the bringing him back again: And there is likewiſe this concurring Evidence of Mr. Porter's with what I ſhall obſerve by and by, that Sir William Parkyns was to procure five Horſes, three whereof he was to mount himſelf, and two he was to ſend Captain Porter to mount, and if there were further Occaſion he could procure more from Mr. Lewis, Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham, and accordingly we have produced to you two Witneſſes, Freeman and Turton, the one a Tapſter, the other an Hoſtler that lived at the George-Inn in Holbourn, who give you an Account that upon Friday before the firſt Day that was deſigned for the Aſſaſſination, there did come three Horſes to Town, for Sir William Parkyns, but it being put off upon the Diſappointment, they were ſent out of Town again. Upon the Friday afterwards, the Day before the Diſcovery, then there were four Horſes brought to Town, and a 5th was of Mr. Lewis, which was a Roan Gelding.

Parkyns.

Parkyns. Pray, Sir, will you please to observe what Sort of Horses they were; and particularly the Heighth of them, that it may be known how fit they were for this Business.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will do you no wrong Sir William, if I can help it. The Jury have heard the Evidence; and by and by they will hear my Lord's Directions: But they do say there were 4 brought to Town, and a 5th was sent, a Roan Gelding; first the Witness said the Horse came from Mountague House, but then presently he recollected himself, and acknowledged the Mistake; and afterwards said it was from Somerset-House. So there were the 5 Horses, 3 whereof Sir William Parkyns was to mount, and 2 Captain Porter, as he himself says; and these Facts I instance in as making a concurring Evidence, and very near to two Witnesses to prove this Part of the Conspiracy.

Then, Gentlemen, Captain Porter goes further, and says, that he had heard (but Sir William Parkyns did not tell him so himself) that Sir William Parkyns had a Commission to raise a Regiment of Horse, and was preparing so to do, against the Time of the Invasion, to join with the Forces that were to come from abroad. To confirm which, we have called Mr. Sweet to give you an Account that he had been acquainted with Sir William Parkyns for three Years, and that he had often talkt with him about the King, that is his present Majesty, whom he called the Prince of Orange, and the little Gentleman; and about King James, whom he used to call always King; and he said the King was to land very speedily, and that he had a Troop which consisted of old Soldiers, and that there were several Volunteers that were Officers; he said he was to take a Journey into Leicestershire, and accordingly he went; and when he returned back again he said, the West and the North were very well inclined to the King's Interest, or to that Purpose. And to strengthen his Evidence we prove, that he did go accordingly into Leicestershire, and we prove it by his Servant that went with him, where he met with several Persons, particularly one Yarborough, and a Parson; what they did transact the Servant cannot prove, but he is a concurring Witness to prove, that he went into Leicestershire; and we have all the Reason in the World to believe that he went on that Errand that he spoke of before, that is to meet the King's Friends, as he called King James. And then there is a further concurring Evidence of his having a Regiment, or a Troop, it is not material, whether it be one or the other; and that is the Matter of the Arms, 4 Dozen of Swords, 32 Carbines, 35 Cases of Pistols, that were hid in the Garden of his House: And these Arms we have traced further, he sent them from his House to Haywood's House, there he thought they would not lie safe, and therefore Sir William Parkyns sends for them privately; they were to come away at Night, and be brought back to his House, and they were accordingly brought back in the Night to his House, and there they were buried; and the same Person saw them taken up afterwards, which brought them to Sir William Parkyns's House, and proves they were the same Boxes that were buried, and which upon Opening proved to be these Arms, that were first sent to Haywood's, and afterwards brought back to his own House.

So that this, Gentlemen, is a concurring Evidence both to what Sweet says, and to what Porter says, and those are the Two Witnesses to this Part of the Treason, that there was a Provision of Arms and Men for this Purpose, which he said he had a Commission for.

Now, Gentlemen, against all this he makes but a very small Objection. As to the Matter of two Witnesses to every Overt-Act, that has been overruled by the Court; and as to the Arms, he says he found them at his House when he first came to it; and then they were old rusty Arms, but of this he gives you no Manner of Evidence. But if they were there when he came to the House, how came he at this Time of Day to hide them, and secrete them? Why might they not be as publick now as they were before he came, which he has had Time enough to prepare to prove since the Finding of them? And he does not give you so much as any colourable Reason why he so secreted them. And therefore 'tis a most just and violent Suspicion, that they were for the Purposes that the Witnesses have given you an Account of; and you have Reason to believe they were provided for to arm that Number of Men, which he was to raise to assist the French when they came to land here. So that if you believe what the Witnesses have sworn, you cannot say but that he is guilty of the Treason charged upon him; and we doubt not you'll find him so.

Mr. Cowper. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of the same Side of Council for the King. Sir William Parkyns has given us a good Caution, which I shall take care to observe: And that is, not to strain either Fact, or Law, to his Prejudice. But, my Lord, When such a Matter as this, a Crime of this Nature, is so far proved against the Prisoner at the Bar, that no Body can in his private Judgment reasonably acquit him; then I think it a good Piece of Service to the Publick to make the Matter so plain, that it may be put beyond all Manner of Doubt, both for the Ease of the Jurors, and for the Satisfaction of all others that hear this Trial.

My Lord, Sir William Parkyns has truly divided his Indictment into two Parts, the one that accuses him of being concerned in the Assassination, and the other that accuses him of being concerned in Inviting the French into the Kingdom, and Ingaging to meet them with an armed Force.

My Lord, As to the first Part, I must do Sir William Parkyns that Right, that there is but one positive Evidence as to the Assassination; but that Evidence tells ye he agreed to it at several Meetings; nay, that he was one who said it was necessary to be done, in order to the other Design he was ingaged in, the facilitating the Landing of the French, and King James his Descent and Restauration. There is, I say indeed, but one Witness of that Matter, but the Evidence of that one Witness is confirmed by many concurring Circumstances; by his sending for Horses to Town the Day before the first Saturday, when this execrable Treason was to have been executed; by sending them out of Town again that Day upon the Disappointment; by sending for them again the Friday before the second Saturday that the King was to have been assassinated; by his having more Horses than were usual with him that Day; by his taking care then of three Horses that were none of his own, and one of them brought very suspiciously from Somerset-House; and that all these eight Horses should be immediately hurried and carried away upon the Disappointment the second Saturday, and nothing ever heard of them afterwards. I ſay one of them was brought very ſuſpiciouſly; for, my Lord, you obſerve it came from Somerſet-Houſe, and was ſent by Lewis according to the Priſoner's Promiſe to Capt. Porter, which Lewis, it is apparent by all the Witneſſes of this Matter, was privy to this Deſign.

My Lord, There is another Circumſtance beſides this, which, I think, has not been obſerved; and that is, his ſending for Sweet up to Town before the ſecond time that the King was to have been Aſſaſſinated; he came up indeed before both the times: The firſt time he was told by the Priſoner, he had once deſigned to have uſed him in a Buſineſs; but upon ſecond Thoughts he had Compaſſion for his Family. And when he came the ſecond time, he was firſt ask'd what Condition he had left his Family in, whether he had provided them Money. He ſaid, No; and thereupon he was chid: And the Priſoner ſaid, he might then as well have ſtaid at home. All theſe Circumſtances, beſides the one poſitive Evidence, ſavour ſtrongly of his having a great Hand in the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King.

But then, my Lord, As to the other Part; his Inviting the French, and preparing to meet them, that is poſitively proved by two Witneſſes. Capt. Porter tells you, That the Priſoner was at the two Meetings in Leadenhall-ſtreet, and St. James's-ſtreet, where it was expreſsly reſolved by all that were preſent, and the Priſoner among the reſt, to ſend Charnock over to invite the French to invade this Kingdom, and to promiſe to meet King James at his Landing with Two thouſand Horſe. He ſwears, That Sir William Parkyns did particularly agree to what was ſo reſolved upon at both the Conſults. And Sweet tells you that he had prepared for the ſame Deſign; for that Sir William Parkyns told him, the King would land, he had his Word for it; and he himſelf had a Troop of old Soldiers. My Troop does conſiſt (he ſpoke it in the preſent Tenſe; for it being a Doubt, Sir William Parkyns did himſelf that Right as to examine the Witneſs again, and he repeated it as his Words, My Troop conſiſts of old Soldiers, or is compoſed of old Soldiers. And he was to have ſeveral Volunteers that had been Officers.

My Lord, Theſe two poſitive Witneſſes are Evidence that goes to the ſame Species of Treaſon, nay to the ſame Deſign, the raiſing a Rebellion, and the Depoſing the King, which is Killing him in his politick Capacity; I ſay, theſe Two go home to the ſame Deſign.

And, my Lord, This Evidence upon this Branch of the Indictment, is corroborated too by very ſtrong Circumſtances. There is a Journey to Leiceſter, which Sweet ſpeaks of, that Sir William Parkyns told him he would undertake: This Journey it is proved by his Servant that he did undertake; that he met there with ſeveral Perſons, and came back and made his Report to Sweet of the Succeſs of his Journey, and how well diſpoſed the King's Friends were, by which Name he always meant King James; for when he ſpoke of our preſent King, he called him the Little Gentleman, or ſometimes King William, and ſometimes, as the Witneſs at laſt ſaid poſitively, the Prince of Orange: But when he ſpoke of the King, without any thing elſe, he always meant King James; and beſides, he ſpoke of a King that was beyond Sea at Chriſtmas laſt, which could not be King William, who was then, and had been in England ſo long before.

My Lord, the Priſoner in his Defence ſays, That this Servant of his that went with him into Leiceſterſhire, had been formerly Charnock's Servant, and was ſent by Charnock with the Meſſage to Kenſington, and not by him. Yet I muſt obſerve, that the Evidence ſwore poſitively he was ſent by Sir William Parkyns, his Maſter, and brought the Note in the Almanack back to the Perſon to whom he was directed to carry it, who lodged at the Confectioner's Houſe; and when he had ſo done, that the Perſon that lodged at the Confectioner's did not remit him to Charnock, but to his Maſter Sir William Parkyns, with a Meſſage that he would be at Home, and ſtay there ready, whenever he ſhould have Occaſion for him; and this was upon the very Saturday the King was to have been aſſaſſinated.

My Lord, Sir William Parkyns has complained, that if he could have had his Evidence here, he could have proved the Arms had been two Years in his Houſe, and that he found them there when he came thither firſt. If we ſhould admit that Matter, we might confeſs, and avoid it; for it is apparent, that theſe Arms were on this Occaſion put up in a ſuſpicious Manner in Boxes, and ſent to Haywood's, (who is a ſuſpicious Perſon, by Reaſon of his Relation to Charnock, upon whoſe Letter and Recommendation they were received) and concealed till the Plot was diſappointed; and then they were carried away from that Place, and buried in Sir William Parkyns's own Garden. This was juſt after the Breaking out of the Plot; and they were buried for the better ſecuring them as choice Goods. And whereas the Priſoner ſays they were old and ruſty when he found them, it now appears they were clean and new-furbiſhed Arms, and the Hilts were off the Swords, and packed together.

My Lord, he has Recourſe to another Argument in the laſt Place, the moſt moving, I muſt confeſs of all, and that is the Argument of Pity: He has ſpoke of his Education in the Profeſſion of the Gown, of his Infirmities, his Age, and his Family. Arguments of Pity I am very unfit to give an Anſwer to, and ſhould be very unwilling to extinguiſh any Motions of it; but this I muſt obſerve even by Way of Anſwer to that Argument, That the Time was when he ſhould have pitied himſelf, and not engaged in ſuch an abominable and mercileſs a Deſign; That he ſhould have had Pity upon his Country, which he plotted to bring under the greateſt Confuſion and Deſolation; That he ſhould have had Pity upon the beſt of Kings, and the beſt of Men; but then there was no Pity, when they thought they had laid their Deſigns ſo that they had him in their Power, but they reſolved barbarouſly to murder him, and perſiſted in the Reſolution of Aſſaſſinating him after they were once diſappointed; That, it ſeems, did not diſcourage them, but they undertook it a ſecond Time, and it does not appear that they ever had any Remorſe at laſt for it; but the Plot broke out, and ſo their whole Deſign was fruſtrated.

My Lord, This is the Sum, I think, of his Defence; I have as well as I was able given an Anſwer to the Objections made to it, and I muſt now leave it with you, Gentlemen of the Jury: And tho' theſe Conſiderations that I have mentioned may not quite remove all Compaſſion, yet they may ſerve to confirm you in a Reſolution of doing the King, and Kingdom, and yourſelves Juſtice; and that is all we ask of you. L. C. J.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir William Parkyns is indicted of High-Treaſon, for Deſigning, Imagining, and Compaſſing the Death of the preſent King. There have been ſeveral Witneſſes produced that have given Evidence upon this Indictment; the firſt of them is Mr. Porter, who has been a Witneſs heretofore againſt ſeveral upon the like Occaſion; and he gives you this Account, That about the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June laſt, there was a Meeting of divers Perſons at the Old King's Head Tavern in Leadenhall-ſtreet in the City, where they dined together, and there was Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter himſelf, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, and divers others that he has mentioned to you. At that Meeting they did conſult together, which Way the late King James might be reſtored, and it was thought very neceſſary that there ſhould be a French Force ſent over hither to join with others for his Reſtoration. And they did among themſelves agree, and determine what Number of Forces might be convenient for that Purpoſe, they did propoſe 10000, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons: And that a Meſſage ſhould be ſent over to King James, to perſuade him to ſollicit the French King, to furniſh him with ſuch a Number of Men to be ſent over into England. Mr. Charnock, that was then in the Company, was the Perſon agreed upon among them to be the Meſſenger to be ſent upon this Errand, which Employment he did undertake, upon their Promiſe, that they would raiſe among themſelves 2000 Horſe for to meet the late King at his Landing.

This being at that Time determined, and Mr. Charnock having accepted this Employment, he did make Preparation to go upon this Errand. In ſome Time after, (a Week or a Fortnight, or thereabouts) there was another Meeting at which were ſeveral of the ſame Perſons, that were preſent at the former, and among them Sir William Parkyns was one: And this Meeting was at one Mrs. Mountjoy's, that keeps a Tavern in St. James's-ſtreet, where they did diſcourſe of what they had formerly agreed upon, and did again conſider whether they ſhould proceed to ſend Mr. Charnock with that Meſſage; to which they all agreed, that Mr. Charnock ſhould go, and he accordingly went; and Captain Porter met him about five or ſix Weeks after the Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoy's, and Charnock told him he had been in France, and that ſince his Return he had been with the ſeveral Perſons who had ſent him, and had acquainted them with the Anſwer of K. James, which was, That at that Juncture of Time the French King had ſuch Occaſion for his Forces, that he could not ſpare them, or furniſh him with ſo many to come over here. This is the firſt Matter that Porter gives you an Account of.

But then Captain Porter tells you farther, how the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King was ſet on Foot about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February laſt. About which Time Sir George Barcley was ſent over with a Commiſſion from the late King James; which ſeems to have given great Encouragement to that Party of Men: For Sir George Barcley, Captain Porter, and Sir William Parkyns, with divers others, had ſeveral Meetings at the Globe Tavern in Hatton Garden, the Nagg's-Head Tavern in Covent Garden, the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and other Places. And at theſe Meetings they entred into Conſideration, what was the beſt Way to reſtore the late King James to the Throne; and it was agreed among them, that the beſt Means for the Effecting that Reſtoration, would be to kill King William, which they reſolved to undertake; and at theſe Debates and Reſolutions, Sir William Parkyns, the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent. Captain Porter being asked whether Sir William Parkyns, at theſe Conſults, did conſent to the King's Murther, he ſaid they did all agree to the Aſſaſſination of the King, and Sir William Parkyns ſaid, he thought it was very neceſſary to be done, to facilitate the Reſtoration of the late King.

Gentlemen, This Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King being thus reſolved upon, the next Thing conſidered among them was, how it might be effected; there were ſeveral ways propoſed: One was by an Ambuſcade; for the King having a Houſe in the Country by Richmond, his Majeſty uſed to go once a Week a Hunting thereabout, and to return at Night; and therefore an Ambuſcade on that ſide of the Water, near the Houſe, was propoſed. Then another Propoſal was made to fall upon the Guards on this ſide the Water, and at the ſame Time that the King's Coach was to be ſet upon. And theſe two Places being propoſed, there was ſome Difference of Opinion among them, whereupon it was agreed that ſome Perſons ſhould be ſent to view the Ground on both ſides the Water, which Perſons were Captain Porter, King that was executed, and one Knightley; and ſo ſome Days before the 15th of February they did go on both ſides the Water; and viewed the Ground, and returned in the Evening to the Nagg's-Head Tavern, according to Agreement, where were met together Sir George Barcley, Mr. Charnock, and the Priſoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns. And there they made their Report of their View of the Ground, upon which both the Propoſals were debated, and at laſt they did all agree that the Attack ſhould be made upon the King on this ſide of the Water, in a Lane that was between Brentford and Turnham Green; and the Attack upon the Guards was likewiſe to be made thereabouts.

Sir William Parkyns was to furniſh five Horſes, whereof three of them were to be mounted by Men of his own providing, the other two were to be mounted by Men of Captain Porter's providing; Mr. Porter, Mr. Charnock, and one Rookwood, were to be principally ingaged in Attacking the Guards. The Number of Men agreed upon for the whole, were about Forty or few more, and Sir George Barcley was to have a Party out of them all, of about Eight, and as thoſe others went to fall upon, and charge the Guards, Sir George Barcley, with his Party of Men, was to attack the King in his Coach, and by ſhooting into the Coach to kill the King and all that were with him.

The Time agreed upon for putting this Deſign in Execution was on Saturday the 15th of February. That Day it was expected the King would go a Hunting. And two Men were planted at Kenſington to give Notice when the King went, and upon ſuch Notice, theſe Men were to march out in ſmall Parties, and to lodge in the Inns, and publick Houſes about Brentford, and Turnham Green, upon Notice of the King's Return from the other ſide of the Water, and Sir George Barcley was to be in Readineſs to ſet upon the Coach in the Lane; and the other Party to attack the Guards.

But this horrid Deſign was very happily diſcovered, which prevented the King's going Abroad on that Day; and though they were diſappointed for that Time, yet the Deſign was not at an End: But their Reſolutions continue to make the like Attempt when they could have another Opportunity. And for that Purpoſe there was another Meeting, as Captain Porter tells you, upon the Friday following at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, at which Sir William Parkyns, Sir George Barcley, Rookwood, and Charnock, and Captain Porter, were preſent, and they did agree to attack the King and the Guards, the next Day, in the ſame Place and Manner that they had formerly agreed upon. But by good Providence the King had Notice of it, ſo that he did forbear to go Abroad that Day, whereby theſe Conſpirators were totally diſappointed of their barbarous and villainous Deſign which they had reſolved upon, and had made ſuch Preparations to compaſs.

It is true, Captain Porter does tell you, Sir William Parkyns was not to be one that ſhould be actually preſent at the Aſſaſſination; but he was to furniſh five Horſes, three of them to be mounted by Men of his own Providing, and two by Men that Captain Porter was to provide. And you are told poſitively that Captain Porter, at this laſt Meeting, did complain that two of his Horſes were fallen lame, and acquainted Sir William Parkyns with it, and he promiſed to help him to two more by the means of one Lewis that was Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Feverſham.

Then you are told, that Sir William Parkyns ſent to Sweet to come to Town the 11th of February, and Sweet comes to Town accordingly, on Wedneſday the 12th of February, and then he had Diſcourſe with Sir William Parkyns at his Lodgings, where Sir William told him, that becauſe of his Family, he would not imploy him in the Buſineſs he intended for him, and therefore bid him go home again; and withall, directed him to return to Town the Friday following, and order his Groom to bring his Horſes to Town; he mentioned three Horſes which ſhould be the ſtrongeſt he had; the Groom brought up the three Horſes, and Sweet came to Town with him, and ſtaid till Saturday. Sir William Parkyns ſaid he thought to go out of Town in the Afternoon, but did not, but ſtayed till Monday, when he went out of Town.

But upon the Friday following, the Horſes of Sir William Parkyns were brought to Town again, which now were Four, and were ſet up at the George Inn in Holbourn; and it appears that Mr. Lewis furniſhed one Horſe, for there were five Horſes upon the Account of Sir William Parkyns, of which a Roan Horſe was one which came from Somerſet-Houſe. This is proved by the Hoſtler; and that Lewis himſelf came in on Saturday in the Afternoon to inquire for Sir William Parkyns, but he was gone and the Horſes were taken away, and he once came with Sir William Parkyns to the Inn. Theſe are Circumſtances that do concur with, and confirm Captain Porter's Evidence concerning the providing Horſes for this Deſign.

Then there is another Particular of Captain Porter's Evidence concerning the Commiſſion from King James, which is remarkable: It was told you, that he askt Charnock whether he had ſeen the Commiſſion: He ſaid, No, but Sir William Parkyns had: And Sir William Parkyns was askt by Porter, as they were ſitting by the Fire-ſide, whether he had ſeen the Commiſſion; and Sir William Parkyns anſwered, that he had ſeen it, and had read it, and it was written with King James's own Hand; and that the Subſtance of it was to make War upon the Perſon of the Preſent King, who was called in the Commiſſion, as you may ſuppoſe, the Prince of Orange. So that, Gentlemen, as to the Deſign of the Aſſaſſinating the King, and of this Commiſſion which was underſtood by them to be for that Purpoſe, this is the Sum and Subſtance of Porter's Evidence ſo attended with, and confirmed by theſe Circumſtances, as you have heard.

Beſides the other Witneſs, Sweet, who was a great Acquaintance of Sir William Parkyns, tells you, That about Chriſtmas laſt, he was informed by Sir William Parkyns, that the King would come, which he underſtood to be meant of King James. He asked Sir William Parkyns how he knew it? and he ſaid, He had his Word for it; and that his Troop conſiſted of Old Soldiers, and he had thirty Saddles; and beſides, there would be ſome Volunteers, which were Old Officers. Then he ſaid, He was to go into Leiceſterſhire, and he did go with one Scudamore; and this was in January, about the latter End, as I remember. They lay that Night at Stony-Stratford, and the next Night at Leiceſter, and Scudamore went with him; and afterwards one Yarborough, and a Parſon, came to him out of Yorkſhire: And when he came back he ſaid, He found all there to be very well; and the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt, as the North; and a Lord's Brother was concerned.

Then in the next Place you are told, That at Michaelmas laſt, Mr. Charnock did write a Letter to one Haywood, who had married his Siſter, and lived near Sir William Parkyns in Warwickſhire, to deſire him to receive ſome Goods into his Houſe that were to come from Sir William Parkyns's, and lay them up very carefully; for they were choice Goods, which Sir William durſt not leave in his own Houſe, becauſe he had left it. And accordingly there were theſe Boxes and Cheſts ſent to Haywood's, and received by him into his Houſe, where they continued till the latter End of February. Haywood about this Time, when the Deſign of the Aſſaſſination was on foot, met with Sir William Parkyns in Town, and asked him how he would diſpoſe of thoſe Goods? Thereupon Sir William Parkyns ſent his Servant into the Country; and Notice was given on Aſh-Wedneſday, the Wedneſday after the firſt Proclamation that iſſued upon the Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy, that theſe Goods ſhould be removed: And a Man, in the Evening, went to Haywood's Houſe with a Cart and Horſes, and removed theſe Cheſts; they were three in Number; and thoſe being opened, there were eight leſſer ones taken out, and carried away about Nine or Ten a Clock at Night, to Sir William Parkyns's Houſe in Warwickſhire, where they were buried in the Garden, and afterward were dug up, which was at the Searching Sir William's Houſe upon the Breaking out of the Plot; and when they were opened, it did appear what ſort of Goods they were: They were Arms, a conſiderable Quantity of them; Four Dozen of Swords without Hilts, Twenty-five Pair of Piſtols, and a great Number of Carbines, Thirty-two as I remember, and a Parcel of Hilts pack'd up in a Box by themſelves. This, Gentlemen, is ſworn to you by the Perſons that were preſent at the Digging them up, and Opening the Boxes.

Then, Gentlemen, you are told, That though Sir William Parkyns pretends they were Arms that he he found in the Houſe when he came thither, yet they were not old ruſty Arms, as he pretends, but they were very bright, and fit for Uſe and Service.

There is one Circumſtance more that ſeems to affect Sir William Parkyns, about the Buſineſs of the Aſſaſſination; and that is proved by Eubank, Sir William's own Servant. There was a Note ſent upon Saturday, the 22d of February in the Morning, to one Brown at Kenſington, by Sir William Parkyns's Man; and this Brown writ in the Servant's Almanack, that he would be in Town himſelf in a little Time, and bid him carry it to a Man that lodged at a Confectioner's over-againſt Grays-Inn Gate in Holbourn: Sir William Parkyns's Man accordingly goes to this Confectioner's, and ſpeaks with the Perſon there that he was directed to go to; and he ſays he was a Scotch Man, and talked broad like a Scotch Man, and he bid him go and tell his Maſter, That he would ſtay within for him till he came; and he did accordingly.

Gentlemen, This is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that is given againſt Sir William Parkyns. Now you are to conſider what Sir William ſays for himſelf: He does admit, and agree, That what Porter ſays is very poſitive and full; but that is but the Evidence of one Witneſs: For, ſays he, by the Law no Perſon ought to be convicted of High-Treaſon, upon the Teſtimony of one Witneſs. As to the Matter of Law he is in the right; No Man ought to be convicted of Treaſon upon the Teſtimony of a ſingle Witneſs. Now firſt ſuppoſe the Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King had not been proved; conſider then whether there be not Two Witneſſes beſides. Porter proves, That Charnock was ſent into France, by Sir William Parkyns, and others, upon that Errand; to which, if you add the Teſtimony of Sweet, that ſwears, That Sir William Parkyns told him the King would come, and he had a Troop, and had bought Saddles; and what is ſaid concerning his going into Leiceſterſhire, and his having a Quantity of Arms: If all which be underſtood in Purſuance of the Deſign againſt his preſent Majeſty, then there are at leaſt Two Witneſſes of ſeveral Overt Acts of the ſame Treaſon.

For, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, tho' there had been no Evidence of a Deſign to Aſſaſſinate the King, but the Deſign and Purpoſe had been to Depoſe him, and ſet the late King upon the Throne, or join with a Force to invade the Realm, that is High-Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. the Third, as being a Deſigning the Death and Deſtruction of the King. There hath been a full Proof by Two Witneſſes, if what Sweet, and the other Witneſſes beſides Porter ſay, to prove Sir William Parkyns to be concerned in that Deſign, which ſhall be conſidered further of by and by.

But in the next Place, ſuppoſe that the Meetings at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-Street, and at Mountjoy's, had not been proved; but the Deſign to Aſſaſſinate the King is proved by one Witneſs, and the providing Men and Arms to fight againſt him is proved by one other Witneſs; this is a Proof of the ſame Treaſon: For though the Overt Acts be ſeveral, yet they both tend to the ſame End, the Deſtruction of the King, though in a different Manner; and though the Law requires two Witneſſes to the ſame Sort of Treaſon, yet it does not require two Witneſſes to any one Overt Act. For if one Witneſs prove one Overt Act at one Time, and another Witneſs prove another Overt Act at another Time, theſe are two Witneſſes within the Meaning of the Law; and ſo it has been always practiſed, and never denied to be Law that I know of.

Beſides it is obſervable upon this Point, which my Brother has mentioned, That this new Act of Parliament, which does not yet take Effect, provides, that there ſhall be either two Witneſſes to one Overt Act, or one Witneſs to one, and another to another of the ſame Species of Treaſon; and you have had the Opinion of all of us now that are here, that theſe are Overt Acts of one and the ſame Species of Treaſon.

But then Sir William Parkyns objects, That Sweet does not prove any Overt Act. Now for that, you are to conſider the Force of Sweet's Evidence, who tells you the Diſcourſe of Sir William Parkyns, about Chriſtmas laſt, of the King's Coming, of his Saddles, and of his Troop conſiſting of old Soldiers, and Volunteers that were old Officers, But ſays Sir W. Parkyns, this is only Words, and Words are not Treaſon. But then conſider, that they are Words that relate to Acts and Things. You hear he had a great Quantity of Arms, beyond what he, as a private Man, could have Occaſion for, or would uſe. He does not give you any Account what he was to do with thoſe Arms, or to what Purpoſe he ſhould keep them, nor why he cauſed them to be removed in the Night, after they had lain privately in Haywood's Houſe, and cauſed them to be carried back to his own Houſe, and buried them in the Ground, and at ſuch a Time when there was a Plot, and after the Plot was diſcovered, and a Proclamation out for his own Apprehenſion.

Sir William Parkyns's Diſcourſe with Sweet, of King James's Coming, and his Troop conſiſting of ſuch Men, plainly ſhews what thoſe Arms were for. For, Gentlemen, Men's Diſcourſes and their Words explain their Actions; and an indifferent Action in itſelf may be ſo explained by Words, that it will be unlawful. It is lawful for a Man to buy a Piſtol; but if it can be plainly proved from his Words or his Speeches, that the Deſign of Buying it was to uſe it againſt the Perſon or Life of the King, that will be an Overt Act. Now when Sir William Parkyns ſaid, The late King would come, and that he had a Troop which conſiſted of ſuch Soldiers; then theſe Arms being found in that Manner, I muſt leave to your Conſideration whether it is not a Proof, for what Purpoſe he did provide them, and to what Uſe he intended to put them; eſpecially ſince he gives you no Account, what Uſe or Occaſion he had for them. He ſays, indeed, he found them in the Houſe two Years ago, how probable that is, you may conſider.

Then there is another Thing, his Going into Leiceſterſhire with Scudamore, and his Meeting there with Yarborough, and other People in that private and haſty Manner. He went out on the Thurſday, and came Home again upon Monday Night; and then he meets with Sweet, and tells him that all was well; and the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt as the North. What King muſt he mean? he had no Commiſſion from King William to go into Leiceſterſhire to diſcourſe with People, to ſee how they ſtood affected to his Intereſt. Sweet comes and tells you, that when Sir

William

William Parkyns ſpoke of the King, he underſtood he meant King James. I muſt leave it to your Conſideration, how you will interpret theſe Words.

It is true, Gentlemen, it is not fit there ſhould be any ſtrained or forced Conſtruction put upon a Man's Words or Actions, when he is tried for his Life. You ought to have a full and ſatisfactory Evidence to convince you, that he is Guilty, before you pronounce him ſo; but however, you are to conſider the Nature of Things, and the Circumſtances that attend them. If you can ſuppoſe that he went into Leiceſterſhire to King William's Friends, and that he was of Opinion, the Weſt was as well Affected to King William, as the North; then you make a different Conſtruction from Sweet, who tells you, that always when he ſpake of the King, he underſtood it of King James; and at Chriſtmas, when he ſpoke of the King's Coming, it muſt be meant King James; for King William was here before, and he pretends not he had any Authority to raiſe a Troop for King William.

So that, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you upon the whole Matter; if you are ſatisfied, that Sir William Parkyns is guilty of the Matters of which he ſtands charged, you will find him guilty; you have heard the Evidence, and will conſider of it; and if, upon the Whole, you are not ſatisfied, that he is guilty of the Matters charged in this Indictment, then you are to acquit him.

Then an Officer being ſworn to keep the Jury according to Cuſtom, they withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and in leſs than Half an Hour, returned into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, Anſwer to your Names. William Northey,——

Mr. Northey. Here.

(And ſo of the Reſt.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay ye, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

L. C. J. Jaylor, look to him, he is found Guilty of High-Treaſon.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Sir William Parkyns is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, the Court diſcharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

While the Jury was withdrawn to conſider of the Verdict, Sir John Freind was brought from Newgate to the Bar, in order to his being called to Judgment, and after the Verdict, he addreſs'd himſelf to the Court thus,

Freind. My Lord, I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to give me leave to read this Paper.

(To which the Court gave no Anſwer.)

Freind. My Lord, will your Lordſhip give me Leave to read it.

L. C. J. Ay, if you will.

(Reads.)

Freind. My Lord, I humbly move in Arreſt of Judgment, that I am not convicted of Treaſon by Two Witneſſes, as I ought to have been within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third: For Mr. Porter ſwears, That I, with others, in May or June laſt, ſent to the French King to invade England; he is the only Witneſs to that Matter. Mr. Blair ſwears, That I ſhewed him a Commiſſion in Surrey-ſtreet, about two Years ſince, ſign'd by King James, and counterſign'd Melford, to be a Colonel of Horſe, and that I gave him ſome Moneys for the Cheriſhing of the Men. My Lord, here is no Levying of War, ſworn by Mr. Blair; and Conſpiring to levy War not being Treaſon, I am convicted by one Witneſs, and therefore I pray Council may be aſſigned me, to plead this Matter.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, that which you move now, is not in Arreſt of Judgment, it is Matter that does ariſe upon the Evidence, and what you now ſay, arraigns the Verdict, and the Proceedings upon your Trial. There were Two Witneſſes againſt you, that is plain. You were not indicted for Levying War, but for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; and we told you the Deſign of the Invaſion, and Conſpiring to depoſe the preſent King, and reſtore the late King, was an Overt Act of that High-Treaſon. The Commiſſion was not ſo much ſtood upon, but the Advancing Moneys upon this Account, to Blair your Lieutenant Colonel, to give to the Men, that was a plain Overt Act, and ſo there were certainly Two Witneſſes againſt you.

Freind. My Lord, I hope, I can clear my ſelf: I thank God, I am as Innocent as the Child unborn, of the Aſſaſſination of the King. I would not have the People think, that I am ſuch a Man.

L. C. J. But you remember, it was ſworn you knew of it, and we have told you, that the Deſign of Reſtoring the late King by Force, and Depoſing the King, are Overt Acts of imagining his Death, if ſuch an Intention be proved, as it was in your Caſe, and the Jury have found it ſo.

Freind. My Lord, I humbly beſeech you, becauſe I do not underſtand Matter of Law, and am adviſ'd to move this in Arreſt of Judgment; I deſire my Council may be heard to it.

L. C. J. We cannot hear Council, but upon a Matter that ariſes upon the Record itſelf, that is, the Indictment. We cannot enter into any Examination of this Matter, that you now ſpeak of, you had a long Trial Yeſterday.

Freind. My Lord, I am ſorry to give your Lordſhip anyOccaſion of Trouble; but I humbly beſeech you, if it may be, that I may be heard by my Council, for the Satisfaction of the World; pray, my Lord, hear what they can ſay.

L. C. J. They cannot ſay any Thing; no Council in the World that underſtand themſelves, can argue any Thing againſt what has been ſo often ſettled and always practiſed.

Freind.

Freind. My Lord, if it be to be granted, I beſeech your Lordſhip to grant it.

L. C. J. It cannot be granted; beſides the Matter you now move upon, is improper; it was all conſidered upon your Trial. It was told you, we did all agree, that a Conſpiracy to levy War to depoſe the King is Treaſon, or to invade the Realm is Treaſon. All this was conſider'd at your Trial, and that is now over.

Parkyns. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I deſire I may have the Liberty of ſome Friends and Relations, and a Miniſter to come to me.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all Means.

Parkyns. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, that they may come and be private with me, and pray let me have a Rule of Court for it, otherwiſe I ſhall not have any Benefit of it.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, it is very fit you ſhould have it; there ſhall be an Order of Court for it: See that the Keeper take Care it be done with Safety.

Freind. My Lord, I deſire the ſame Liberty of a Miniſter, and my Relations and Friends to come to me; that for what Time I have to to live, I may make the beſt Uſe I can of it for my Soul, which I hope God will enable me to do.

Then the Court was adjourned until Five a Clock on the Afternoon, and about Six the Juſtices returned, and the Court was reſumed.

Cl of Arr. Set Sir John Freind to the Bar: (Which was done.) Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt convicted of High Treaſon, for traiterouſly Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of our Sovereign Lord King William the Third. What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment according to the Law?

(Then being made to kneel, he afterwards ſtood up.)

Freind. I have ſaid already, what I have to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. Com. Serjeant. Sir, you have heard the Judgment of the Court, as to what you have ſaid; if you have nothing elſe to offer, the Court muſt proceed to Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. for Middleſex. Sir William Parkyns. hold up thy Hand; (which he did) Thou ſtandeſt convicted of High Treaſon in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies. What canſt thou ſay for thyſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die, according to the Law?

(He was made to kneel, and riſe up again.)

Parkyns. I have nothing more to offer.

Cl. of Arr. Then Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes; all Manner of Perſons are commanded to keep Silence, while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Which Proclamation was made on both Sides the Court; and then Mr. Common Serjeant ſitting with the Reſt of the Court upon the Bench, pronounced the Sentence.

Mr. Com. Serj. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, you have been indicted for High Treaſon, in Compaſſing the Death and Deſtruction of the King: For your Trial, you have put your ſelves upon the Country, which Country has found you Guilty. The Offence is the greateſt in the Judgment of the Law, that a Man can commit; and it is juſtly and reaſonably ſo. For Robbery and Murder are Injuries to private Perſons, but Compaſſing the Death of the King, is Compaſſing the Deſtruction of the Father of your Country, and letting in Rapine, Death, and Deſolation upon Thouſands of People. And even this, the heinouſeſt of Offences, is capable of Aggravation; for there have been always Excuſes, and ſometimes Juſtifications for Rebellion: And as to Murder and private Revenge, there may be ſomewhat ſaid in Mitigation from the Violence of Men's Paſſions. But to ſit, and conſpire, and conſult, and debate the Deſtruction of a Prince; no Man yet ever had the Confidence to make an Excuſe for it. I would not add to your Affliction; I am ſenſible of the ſevere Judgment that is to follow, and which you have brought upon your ſelves, and cannot but pity you for the great Burden of Guilt, that you have laid your ſelves under. I only ſay this to offer it to your ſerious Conſideration, in the few Moments you have to prepare for another World, and another Judgment. All that remains for me, is to pronounce the Judgment of the Law in theſe Caſes, and the Court does Award it.

That you, and each of you, go back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence be drawn on a Hurdle, to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally Hanged up by the Neck, and cut down alive; your Bodies ſhall be ript open, your Privy-Members cut off, your Bowels taken out, and Burnt before your Faces; your Heads ſhall be ſevered from your Bodies, your Bodies reſpectively to be divided into Four Quarters, and your Heads and Quarters are to be at the Diſpoſal of the King: And the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Priſoners were carried back the Newgate.

On Fridry April 3. 1696. Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns were drawn on Sledges from Newgate to Tyburn, where they deliver'd the following Papers to the Sheriffs.

Sir JOHN FREIND'S Paper.

KNowing that I muſt immediately give an Account to God of all my Actions, and that I ought to be eſpecially careful of what I ſay in theſe laſt Hours, I do ſolemnly profeſs, that what I here deliver is from my very Soul, with all the Heartineſs and Sincerity of a dying Chriſtian.

The Cauſe I am brought hither to ſuffer for, I do firmly believe to be the Cauſe of God and true Religion, and, to the beſt and utmoſt of my Knowledge and Information, agreeable to the Laws of the Land, which I have evermore heard do require a firm Duty and Allegiance to our Sovereign; and that as no foreign, ſo neither any domeſtick Power can alienate our Allegiance. For it is altogether new and unintelligible to me, that the the King's Subjects can depoſe and dethrone him on any Account, or conſtitute any that have not an immediate Right in his Place. We ought, I think, not to do this; and ſurely, when it is done, to aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Right, is juſtifiable, and our Duty. And however Things may ſeem at preſent, I do believe, I am ſure I heartily pray, that he ſhall be one Day reſtored to his rightful Throne and Dominions.

As for any ſudden Deſcent of his Majeſty upon theſe his Dominions, in order to the Recovery of them, I declare I had no certain Knowledge of it; nor can I tell what Grounds there was to believe it, ſo little Reaſon had I to be in a preſent Preparation for it. I ſuppoſe it is not expected I ſhould here endeavour to clear myſelf of the Aſſaſſination, which was not the Thing alledged againſt me; however, it was mention'd, through what Means I know not. As it was inſinuated to my Diſadvantage, I forgive ſuch as were therein inſtrumental; and I do alſo, from the very Bottom of my Soul, freely forgive, and beg of God to do ſo too, ſuch as were any ways acceſſary towards the taking away my Life, which I really look upon to be their Misfortune more than mine.

I profeſs myſelf, and I thank God I am ſo, a Member of the Church of England, though, God knows, a moſt unworthy and unprofitable Part of it; of that Church which ſuffers ſo much at preſent for a ſtrict Adherence to Loyalty, the Laws and Chriſtian Principles; For this I ſuffer, and for this I die.

Tho' I have a perfect Charity for People of all Profeſſions, and do heartily wiſh well, and would endeavour to do ſo to all my Fellow-Subjects, of what Perſuaſion ſoever. And indeed I have met with a great deal of Uprightneſs and Sincerity among ſome People of very different Opinions in religious Matters.

And I hope and deſire it may not be taken as an uncharitable Cenſure, or undue Reflection, that I objected to the Legality of Popiſh Evidence, being adviſ'd ſo to do for my better Security, upon the Foundation of a Statute-Law.

Having owned myſelf a Member of the Church of England, I muſt take this Opportunity, and I do it for God's Glory, to apply myſelf to you that are Royaliſts of that Church, and of the ſame Faith and Principles with myſelf: And I beg of you, for God's ſake, and the Love of your Souls, to be very conſtant and ſerious in all religious Offices, and holy Duties, of divine Worſhip and Service, which I have too much neglected, as I own to my great Sorrow: Let no Excuſe, no Dangers, prevent or hinder you in theſe moſt neceſſary and ſerious Matters; and be, I beſeech you, very careful and circumſpect in all your Actions, Behaviour, and Converſation, as I earneſtly exhorted all that came to me.

I have, I thank God, a great deal of Satisfaction in my preſent Sufferings, and have found it ſo ever ſince I have been under them: And bleſſed be God it doth continually increaſe upon me. And I do now lay down my Life with all Chearfulneſs and Reſignation, in ſure and certain Hope of a Reſurrection to eternal Life, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; through whoſe Merits alone I hope for the Pardon of my Sins, and the Salvation of my Soul.

And ſo, O Lord! into thy Hands I commend my Spirit; for thou haſt redeemed me, O Lord! thou God of Truth.

JOHN FRIEND.

Sir WILLIAM PARKYNS's Paper.

IT hath not been my Cuſtom to uſe many Words, and I ſhall not be long upon this Occaſion, having Buſineſs of much greater Conſequence to employ my Thoughts upon. I thank God I am now in a full Diſpoſition to Charity, and therefore ſhall make no Complaints, either of the Hardſhips of my Trial, or any other Rigours put upon me. However, one Circumſtance I think myſelf oblig'd to mention. It was ſworn againſt me by Mr. Porter, That I had own'd to him that I had ſeen and read a Commiſſion from the King to levy War upon the Perſon of the Prince of Orange. Now, I muſt declare, that the Tenour of the King's Commiſſion, which I ſaw, was general, and directed to all his loving Subjects, to raiſe and levy War againſt the Prince of Orange, and his Adherents; and to ſeize all Forts, Caſtles, &c. which, I ſuppoſe, may be a cuſtomary Form of giving Authority to make War; but I muſt confeſs I am not much acquainted with Matters of that Nature: But as for any Commiſſion particularly levell'd againſt the Perſon of the Prince of Orange, I neither ſaw nor heard of any ſuch.

It's true, I was privy to the Deſign upon the Prince, but was not to act in it; and am fully ſatisfied that very few, or none, knew of it but thoſe who undertook to do it.

I freely acknowledge, and think it for my Honour to ſay, that I was entirely in the Intereſt of the King, being always firmly perſuaded of the Juſtice of his Cauſe; and I look'd upon it as my Duty, both as a Subject, and an Engliſhman, to aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Throne, which I believe him to be depriv'd of contrary to all Right and Juſtice; taking the Laws and Conſtitutions of my County for my Guide.

As for Religion, I die in the Communion of the Church of England, in which I was educated.

And as I freely forgive all the World, ſo whoever I may any ways have injur'd, I heartily ask them Pardon.

WILLIAM PARKYNS.

Jeremy Collier, a Nonjuring Miniſter, publickly abſolv'd them at the Gallows.

After which they were executed according to their Sentence.

CLV. The

CLVI. The Trial of AMBROSE ROOKWOOD, for High-Treaſon, the 21ſt of April, 8 Will. III. 1696. At the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Middleſex ſitting in the Court of King's-Bench at Weſtminſter.

THE Court being ſat, at which were preſent the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, Mr. Juſtice Nevil, Mr. Juſtice Powell, and Mr. Juſtice Eyre; the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez: All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do, at this Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the County of Middleſex, draw near and give your Attendance. God ſave the King.

Then the Grand Jury were called over, and the Appearances marked, and Witneſſes being ſworn in Court, to give Evidence to them upon a Bill of Indictment againſt Alexander Knightley, they in a little Time after withdrew to hear the Evidence.

Then the Keeper of Newgate was order'd to bring his Priſoners to the Bar; (which he did.) to wit, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne; who were thus arraigned.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.)

Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (which he did.)

Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. (which he did)

You ſtand indicted in the County of Middleſex, by the Names of Robert Lowick of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman; Ambroſe Rookwood of the ſame Pariſh, Gentleman, and Charles Cranburne of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman; for that you, together with one Chriſtopher Knightley, of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, not yet taken; not having the Fear of GOD in your Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt ſerene, moſt illuſtrious, moſt clement, and moſt excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. your ſupreme, true, rightful, lawful, and undoubted Lord, the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh intending and contriving, and with all your Strength reſolving, deſigning, and conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and well eſtabliſh'd, altogether to ſubvert, change, and alter, as alſo our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Servitude to Lewis the French King to ſubjugate and inthral, the 10th Day of February, in the ſeventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid ſovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, and contrive, reſolve, deſign, and intend, our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to kill, ſlay, and murther, and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cauſe, and the ſame your moſt impious, wicked, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, together with the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, and very many other falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſame 10th Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, Falſely, Maliciouſly, Adviſedly, Secretly, Traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, did Meet, Propoſe, Treat, Conſult, Conſent, and Agree, him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait, and Guile, to Aſſaſſinate, Kill and Murder; and that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination, and Killing the ſooner to execute, and perpetrate, afterwards (to wit) the ſame Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Traiterouſly did Treat, Propoſe, and Conſult, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place, where, when, how, and in what Manner, our ſaid Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait, the more eaſily you might kill; and did conſent, agree, and aſſent, that forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, whereof the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, ſhould be four; and every one of you traiterouſly took upon himſelf to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, charged with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, being Armed, ſhould lie in wait, and lie in Ambuſh, our ſaid Lord the King in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad, to invade, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men, ſo armed, ſhould ſet upon the Guards of our ſaid

Lord the King then attending him, and being with him, and ſhould fight with them, and overcome them, whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo armed, our ſaid Lord the King ſhould aſſaſſinate, ſlay, kill, and murther; and you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, together with the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, the Treaſon, and all the traiterous Intentions, Deſigns, and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to Effect, afterwards (to wit) the aforeſaid Tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlike Things, and military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and cauſe to be bought, obtained, gathered together, and procured with that Intention, then in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, as aforeſaid to be uſed, employed, and beſtow'd; and the ſame Premiſſes the more ſafely and certainly to execute, do, and perform, the aforeſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, with one Edward King, late of High-Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Conſent and Agreement of divers of the Traytors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the ſaid Tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, went and came to the Place propoſed, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King by lying in wait, ſhould be done, performed, and committed, to ſee, view, and obſerve the Convenience and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, Aſſaſſination, and Killing, there to be done, performed, and committed: And that Place being ſo viewed and obſerved, afterwards (to wit) the ſame Day and Year, their Obſervations thereof to ſeveral of the ſaid Traytors and Conſpirators did relate and impart, (to wit) at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid: And you the aforeſaid Charles Cranburne, the ſame Day and Year there, in order the ſaid execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination, and Killing of our ſaid Lord the King, by the Traytors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perform, and commit, adviſedly, knowingly, and traiterouſly did bring and carry between divers of thoſe Traytors and Conſpirators, forward and backward, from ſome to others of them, a Liſt of the Names of divers Men of thoſe who were deſigned and appointed our ſaid Lord the King ſo as aforeſaid by lying in wait to kill and murder; againſt the Duty of the Allegiance of the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, you the ſaid Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided.

How ſay'ſt thou, Robert Lowick, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Lowick. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Lowick. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

How ſay'ſt thou, Ambroſe Rookwood, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not Guilty?

Rookwood. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Rookwood. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Charles Cranburne, How ſay'ſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Cranburne. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Cranburne. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee good Deliverance.

Cranburne. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip would grant me the Favour for my Wife to come to me in private, and that I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Sir John Holt.

L. C. J. Pen, Ink, and Paper, you muſt have; but as to the other, we muſt conſider of it. Keeper of Newgate, What has been uſual in thoſe Caſes?

Keeper. My Lord, we let no Body come to them in private, but their Council.

L. C. J. That's provided for by the Act that allows them Council: But has it been uſual heretofore to permit any Body elſe to be with them in private; the Wife, or any other Relations?

Keeper. It has not.

L. C. J. It is very dangerous if it ſhould; therefore let him have his Wife come to him in the preſence of the Keeper.

Cranburne. And Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, that you ſhall have.

Cranburne. You don't deny me, my Lord, that I may have my Wife come to me?

L. C. J. No, we don't, but ſhe muſt not be in private with you, for fear of an Eſcape.

Rookwood. I beg the ſame Favour, my Lord, to have my Brother come to me, and Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. You ſhall have the ſame Rule; but you, Keeper, muſt have eſpecial Care whom you do permit to come to them, and be private with them; for it is ſtill at your Peril if any ill Accident happens by your Indulgence to them: And yet it is fit they ſhould have all that is reaſonable for preparing for their Defence at their Trials.

Lowick. And I deſire, my Lord, I may have my Siſter come to me, and the Liberty of her being in private with me.

L. C. J. Your Friends may come to you at ſeaſonable Times, in the preſence of the Keeper; you ſhall have any thing that is reaſonable, but the Safety of the Government muſt be look'd after. Therefore, Keeper of Newgate, take back your Priſoners, and bring them here this Day ſevennight at ſeven a Clock in the Morning, without any other Order.

They ſtaid at the Bar about half an Hour, the Judges conſulting among themſelves about the Precept for the Petty Jury upon a late Act of Parliament which has appointed ſix Days for the Jury to be ſummon'd before they appear to try any Cauſe, and upon the laſt Act in Regulating Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon; which requires that the Priſoner ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury duly return'd, at leaſt two Days before his Trial.

Then

Then the Priſoners were carried away, and the Grand Jury withdrew to conſider of the Evidence againſt Knightley, and in a Quarter of an Hour came back, and being called over, delivered in a Bill to the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, you are content the Court ſhall amend Matter of Form, or falſe Latin in this Indictment, without altering any Matter of Subſtance without your Privity.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Then, Gentlemen, you may go for this Time; and you are to take Notice if there be Occaſion at any Time to call you together, you ſhall have ſufficient Warning given to you beforehand. This is Billa Vera againſt Alexander Knightley for High-Treaſon.

Then the Judges reſumed the Debate among themſelves, and at laſt reſolved that there ſhould go three ſeveral Venires for the Petty Jury, returnable this Day ſevennight; one to try between the King and Robert Lowick, the ſecond to try between the King and Ambroſe Rookwood, and a third between the King and Charles Cranburne; becauſe, though the Indictment be againſt them jointly, yet it was a ſeveral Offence in every one of them, and they might ſever in their Challenges, and that would be troubleſome, and therefore it was thought beſt to ſever them in their Trials; and therefore the Court adjourned for an Hour or ſomething more, while the Precepts for the Jury were preparing, and according to the Adjournment met, and ſigned and ſealed the Precepts, and then adjourned the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer until this Day ſevennight, at Seven in the Morning.

Die Martis Vicеſimo primo Aprilis, Anno Regni Regis Willielmi Tertii Octavo, Annoq; Dom. 1696.

THE Court ſat about Eight a Clock, at which were preſent a great Number of Noblemen, and Perſons of Quality, who were in the Commiſſion, and Seven of the Judges; to wit, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Juſtice Neval, Mr. Juſtice Powel, Mr. Juſtice Eyre, and Mr. Baron Powis.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes. All Manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do at this Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, adjourned over to this Day, draw near and give your Attendance. And God ſave the King.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, Sheriffs for the County of Middleſex, return the Precepts to you directed, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

The Under-Sheriff returned the Precept.

Cl. of Arr. Mr. Baker, pray, Whom do you intend to begin with?

Mr. Baker. With Ambroſe Rookwood.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, You good Men of the County of Middleſex, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoners that are, and ſhall be at the Bar, anſwer to your Names, as you ſhall be called, every one at the firſt Call, and ſave your Iſſues.

The whole Pannel was called over, and the Appearances of thoſe that anſwered recorded; and the Defaulters were again called over.

Cl. of Arr. Keeper of Newgate, ſet Ambroſe Rookwood to the Bar. (Which was done.) You the Priſoner at the Bar, Ambroſe Rookwood, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, We have a Doubt or two to propoſe to Your Lordſhip, in reſpect of the Trial this Day: But before I offer it, we beg Your Favour for a Word in behalf our ſelves.

My Lord, We are aſſigned of Council, in Purſuance of an Act of Parliament, and we hope that nothing which we ſhall ſay in Defence of our Clients, ſhall be imputed to our ſelves. I thought it would have been a Reflection upon the Government and Your Lordſhip's Juſtice, if being aſſigned we ſhould have refuſed to appear; 'twould have been a Publication to the World, That we diſtruſted Your Candour towards us in our future Practice upon other Occaſions. But, my Lord, there can be no Reaſon for ſuch a Fear; I am ſure I have none; for we muſt acknowledge, we who have been Practiſers, at this Bar eſpecially, that there was never a Reign or Government within the Memory of Man, wherein ſuch Indulgence, ſuch Eaſineſs of Temper, hath been ſhewn from the Court to the Council, as there always hath been in this. Never was there ſuch Freedom and Liberty of Debate and Argument allowed to the Bar, and we thank Your Lordſhip for the ſame.

My Lord, We come not here to countenance the Practices for which the Priſoner ſtands accuſed, nor the Principles upon which ſuch Practices may be preſumed to be founded; for we know of none, either Religious or Civil, that can warrant or excuſe them. But the Act of Parliament having warranted the appearing of Council for Perſons accuſed to make Defence for them, we hope Your Lordſhip will give us Leave to make what Objections we can on their Behalf.

L. C. J. Holt. Look ye, Sir B. Shower, go on with your Objections; let us hear what you have to ſay.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, It appears to be a Doubt to us, upon this Act of Parliament, whether this Cauſe can be tried this Day: And if it be a Doubt, we hope, though it ſhould not have that Weight with the Court, that we apprehend it has; yet Your Lordſhip will excuſe us, and ſettle it according to your Judgment. The Act requires, That all that ſhall be Accuſed and Indicted for High-Treaſon, whereby any Corruption of Blood may, or ſhall be made to any ſuch Offender or Offenders, or to any the Heir or Heirs of any ſuch Offender or Offenders, or for Miſpriſion of ſuch Treaſon, ſhall have a true Copy of the whole Indictment; and afterwards ſhall have Copies of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff and delivered unto them. And every of them ſo Accuſed and Indicted reſpectively two Days at the leaſt before he or they ſhall be Tried for the ſame. Now if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to caſt your Eye upon this Venire facias, and it will appear to be returned but this Day, and that is not according to the Intent of this Law. And it is impoſſible then, if it be as we apprehend it, and put it, that this Trial ſhould go on at this Time; and that this Conſtruction ſhould be ſo as we ſay, not only the Words, but as we take it, the Intent and Meaning of the Act of Parliament too are for us, that there ought to have been a Copy of the Pannel after the Return two Days before the Trial. For in the firſt Place, My Lord, the Words are plain: It muſt be a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff. Now though it be a Copy of the Array of the Pannel which we have delivered to us, yet it is not a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors returned; for it is no Return till it come into Court. And the King's Council muſt admit, that in the Caſe of all Writs returnable, it cannot be ſaid that there is a Return, where there is a Writing upon the back, or a Label annexed, till it be actually returned into Court. As in the Caſe of a Fieri Facias, or a Mandamus, an Action for a falſe Return cannot lie till the Writ be actually returned. For ſuch Action muſt be brought into the County of Middleſex, where the Court reſides, before whom the Return is made, and not in the County where the Sheriff lived that made the Return; for it is not a Return till filed in Court. Now here the Words of the Act are; He ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try him, duly Returned by the Sheriff two Days before the Trial. Now we humbly inſiſt that the Words duly Returned muſt be antecedent to the having the Copy, or elſe he cannot be ſaid to have a Copy of the Pannel duly Returned. The Act of Parliament does not ſay which ſhall be duly Returned; and therefore there does ariſe a Doubt, whether your Lordſhip will not direct us to have a Copy after the Return made, which is but this Day.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſpare me a Word of the ſame ſide: We take it, that by this Act of Parliament the Jury muſt be duly returned before the Pannel is delivered to us. Now the Return is the Anſwer that is Indorſed upon the Writ with the Pannel annexed, and deliver'd into Court; for the Return is to the Court, and till it be delivered into Court, it cannot properly be ſaid to be a Return. We acknowledge the Copy of this Pannel has been delivered unto us, two or three Days ago. But the Venire being not returned till to Day, we think we have not a Copy of the Pannel within the Intent of, and according to the Act of Parliament. And I deſire to put your Lordſhip this Caſe: This Act of Parliament does likewiſe provide, that the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment five Days before his Trial, to enable him to conſult with his Council how to plead and defend himſelf; ſuppoſe then a Copy of a Bill that is intended to be preſented to the Grand Jury, be deliver'd to the Perſon accuſed five Days before the Grand Jury are to meet, and they afterwards meet, and find it, and the Party is brought immediately, and arraign'd upon it: This is a true Copy of the Indictment, yet certainly the Intent of the Act of Parliament is not anſwered, for it was not a true Copy of the Indictment at the Time it was deliver'd. And I take this Caſe to be under the ſame Reaſon. This is not a Pannel duly returned, till now; and therefore by Conſequence we have not that Advantage that this Act of Parliament intended to give us; for which Reaſon we humbly apprehend we ought not to be tryed to Day; which we ſubmit to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. General. My Lord, with Submiſſion, this Objection will receive a very plain Anſwer. If I underſtand it aright, they ſay that they ought to have a Copy of the Pannel after it is returned, and that it cannot be ſaid to be duly delivered, according to the Proviſion in this Act of Parliament, till after the Venire facias be duly returned into the Court, and then they are to have it two Days before they are tried. They ſay the Venire facias is returned but to Day, and ſo the Copy delivered to them, is not purſuant to the Act of Parliament; and ſo they cannot be tried to Day: This I take to be the Objection. But with Submiſſion, My Lord, it will be plain both by the Words of the Act, and the Reaſon and Intention of it, that there is no Occaſion at all, nor no Neceſſity of having the Writ returned before the Copy of the Pannel be delivered. The Words of the Act of Parliament are theſe; That every Perſon and Perſons who ſhall be accuſed, indicted, and tried for Treaſon, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, after the 25th of March, 96, ſhall have Copies of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff, and delivered to them two Days before they be tried. Now, firſt, My Lord, I think it is apparent what the Meaning and Deſign of the Act of Parliament was, that the Priſoner ſhould know two Days before the Trial, who were the Jury that were to paſs upon him, that he might have an Opportunity to conſider how he ſhould make his Challenges as he thought fit, and Time to enquire into the Qualifications of them, that if there were any particular Ground of Challenge, he might not loſe that Benefit; ſo that if he has a Copy of the Pannel array'd by the Sheriff, which is afterward returned by the Sheriff into Court, and there is no Variation of that Pannel afterwards; then certainly the End and Intent of the Act is entirely purſued: For by that Means the Priſoner has the Names of all the Jury returned, and are afterwards called, and has a full Opportunity of making ſuch Challenges as he thinks fit. And as the Reaſon and Intent of the Act is anſwered by this Conſtruction, ſo the very Words of the Act are anſwered: For it is not ſaid in the Act, that he ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel after it is return'd, but it is ſaid a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff; that is, when the Sheriff has arrayed a Pannel, then he is to have a Copy of that Pannel; and if afterwards the Sheriff return the ſame Pannel into Court, is not this a Copy of the Pannel duly return'd? With Submiſſion it is, and ſufficient to anſwer both the Words and Intention of the Act of Parliament. It is true, My Lord, if the Act of Parliament had ſaid he ſhould have a Copy of the Pannel after it was return'd, then we cou'd not have ſaid but that the Objection wou'd hold. But when the Words are general, and it is moſt reaſonable to be interpreted that the Copy is to be delivered when the Array is made, becauſe that anſwers the Intent and End of the Act of Parliament,

Sir Thomas Trevor.

Parliament, which was to enable the Prisoner to make his Challenges, we take that to be sufficient; and if another Interpretation shou'd be made, it wou'd render the Trial in such Cases liable to all the Mischiefs in the World, and make it impracticable that any Person shou'd be tried; at least it wou'd introduce a new Method of Proceedings that never was practised, nor ought to be introduced, unless this Act of Parliament by express Words, had appointed and constituted such a new Method; and we suppose your Lordship will never make any such Construction, that the Act intended a new Method, unless expressly declared; for if it were, as they would have it, that the Copy of the Pannel was not to be delivered till after the Return of the Writ, then the Prisoner cannot be tried upon the Return of the Writ; for upon the Return of the Writ, the Jury must be brought to the Bar, the Prisoner must be brought to be Bar, and adjourned over to a further Time, that in the mean Time a Copy may be deliver'd to them. I believe that they can never shew any Precedent that there was such an Adjournment of a Jury of Life and Death, over to another Day, for a Person to have a Copy of the Pannel, to enable him to his Challenges; and either that must be the Consquence, or else the Jury must not come upon the Return of the Venire facias, but there must go a Habeas Corpora, and the Prisoner tried upon that Habeas Corpora: For first there must be the Return of the Writ, then the Copy of the Pannel delivered, then the Habeas Corpora returnable another Day; and upon that the Trial must be had: But I believe there can be no Instance given of a Trial for Treason upon a Habeas Corpora. Now if the Parliament had intended that they would not have the Copy of the Pannel deliver'd till after the Return of the Venire facias, they would certainly have express'd and provided how the Method of Trial should have been; that is, that either the Jury should have been adjourn'd over till another Day, or else brought to the Bar upon a Habeas Corpora; which is the only way that can be thought of. Indeed, My Lord, I do agree, that if the Sheriff should give a Copy of the Pannel, and afterwards should vary that Pannel, tho' but in one Name, that would not answer the End of the Act of Parliament, because the Prisoner is deprived of the Opportunity of knowing the Name of the Person that he so altered, in Order to his making his Challenges against him: But if the Sheriff do return the same Persons that are in that Copy delivered to the Prisoner, then we do, to all Intents and Purposes, answer the End of the Act of Parliament, and avoid the absurd Construstion that they would make of this Act for the Changing the Method of Trials, and no Body can well tell what Method shou'd be pursued: But certainly if the Act of Parliament intended a new Method shou'd be pursued, they wou'd have described and settled what it shou'd be.

Sir John Hawles. Mr. Sollicitor General, If your Lordship pleases to spare me a Word of the same side; My Lord, this is an Objection that has been foreseen, and I think has been prevented; for, with Submission, I take it, the Act has been sufficiently answered both as to the Words, and as to the Intent of it in the Prisoners having the Copy of the Pannel before the Jury be returned; there must be such a Thing as a Pannel array'd before the Jury be summon'd, and therefore it is sufficient that the Prisoner have a Copy of that Pannel so many Days before his Trial; which was only intended for that particular Reason, that he might be provided sufficiently to make his legal Challenges. Certainly within the Intent of the Act of Parliament it is well enough if he had but a Copy of the Pannel two Days before the Return of the Writ, provided the Jury was not alter'd that was array'd, nor any other Names put in but those that he had a Copy of before: Now, my Lord, I think this Act of Parliament must be taken according to the Intent and Meaning of it, or else it will bear hard upon the Prisoner, and harder sure than it was designed it should: This Act says, he shall have a Copy of his Indictment so many Days before his Trial; now I would fain know whether they would have it construed, that the Copy does not need to be be delivered till after Issue joyn'd, which must be if their Doctrine hold true, that the Act is to be construed according to the strict Letter of it, for Trial is the Trial of the Issue; what if the Indictment be delivered five Days before the Trial, tho' after Issue joyn'd, it is well enough according to such an Exposition, for the arraigning of the Prisoner is no Part of the Trial, and yet it was the Intent of the Parliament that he should have a Copy of the Indictment five Days before he was arraigned, and that for this Reason, because he might have several Pleas to plead and Objections to make before he pleaded the General Issue; he might have Pleas in Abatement, which after Plea pleaded of Not guilty he could not have the Advantage of, nor could he afterwards move to quash the Indictment, which he might otherwise have good Reason for, if he had the Copy before he was put to plead; so that I take it the Act is to be interpreted every where according to the Intention of it, and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to the Intention of the Act, has had a Copy of this Indictment five or six Days before his Arraignment, and therefore we have acted according to the Purpose and Meaning of the Parliament, and likewise he has had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors that are to try him, which is duly returned by the Sheriff, which is likewise according to the Act of Parliament. As for what they say that even a Copy of the Indictment before it be found would not be good according to this Act; that's true, but the Case is not the same, nor the Reason of the Case alike between that and the Pannel of a Jury, because it is sufficient in Law to make it a good Pannel if it be array'd by the Sheriff before the Jury be summoned, for the Sheriff must array and compleat his Pannel to let his Bailiff know who must be summoned; but in the Case of an Indictment, tho' a Bill be first form'd by the Clerk, yet it is not look'd upon as a formal Indictment in point of Law, till it be found by the Jury as their Verdict, and preferred to the Court; and it is not necessary that this Indictment should be formed for the Jury before they find it, for they are properly to make their own Presentments themselves; and the ancient Practice was, that they only presented the Fact, and the Matter was put into Form afterwards by the Court, and in many Cases it is so at this Day, as we have had some Instances lately; but as to the arraying of a Pannel it always was so, and always must be so array'd by the Sheriff before the Jury summoned, and there's the Difference between the giving a Copy of an

Indictment

Indictment and the Copy of a Pannel, the one is taken Notice of in Point of Law to be neceſſary, the other is not. This giving a Copy of the Pannel, my Lord, we ſay is within the Intent of the Act, which was only to enable Perſons accuſed to make their juſt Challenges, and that they may as well do when a Copy is delivered after it is array'd by the Sheriff, as, when it is return'd by the Sheriff, and being ſo done, with Submiſſion, it is well done within the Words, and within the Intent of this Act of Parliament.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, the Words of this Act of Parliament, are, that they ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff, and delivered to them, and this, two Days before the Trial: My Lord, that this is the Pannel of the Sheriff of the Jurors that are to try them, aſſoon as it is array'd, has been obſerv'd already; now it would be a forc'd Conſtruction to conſtrue theſe Words that follow, duly returned by the Sheriff, to be meant, that a Copy ſhould be delivered after the Jury is returned, becauſe that would be a Delay of Juſtice, and keeping off the Trial longer than was intended by this Act of Parliament, and more than will anſwer the End of this Law; for the End of it was to give the Priſoner all Benefit and Advantage of Exceptions againſt any of thoſe that were to try him, and if he has this Pannel two Days before his Trial, he has that Benefit the Law intended him. Now, my Lord, as to what has been ſaid of an Indictment, which by this Law he is to have a Copy of too, that is plainly quite another Caſe; for it is not an Indictment till it be found, and ſo anſwers not the Words nor Intention of the Act till found by the Grand Jury; till then it is not a Copy of his Charge, and therefore by no Conſtruction can it be called a Copy of the Indictment. I think I need not trouble Your Lordſhip any further in this Matter, becauſe this Objection was foreſeen, and has been already conſidered of by the Court upon the Priſoner's Arraignment.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in Anſwer to what Mr. Sollicitor has ſaid, that there is as much Reaſon to expect that the Copy of the Indictment ſhould not be delivered till after Plea pleaded, as that the Pannel ſhould not be delivered till after the Jury return'd, becauſe in the Caſe of the Indictment it is ſaid ſo many Days before the Trial, and the Trial cannot be till Iſſue joyn'd, there can be no Weight in that Objection at all; for the Words of the Act are quite differently penned in the Caſe of the Indictment, from what they are in the Caſe of the Pannel; for tho' it be ſaid it ſhould be done five Days before the Trial, yet it is added, in Order to the adviſing with Council how to plead, which muſt be before Plea pleaded, and therefore it muſt be abſolutely neceſſary to be done before the Arraignment. My Lord, I have propoſed my Doubt, it may have Conſequences on the one Side and the other, we ſubmit intirely unto your Lordſhip's Judgment; it is a new Law, and never has received any Opinion; the Words of it are, duly return'd by the Sheriff, and the Queſtion is, Whether a Copy of the Pannel upon the Array before it be return'd be a Copy of the Pannel duly return'd, tho' the ſame Pannel be afterwards duly returned.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, Mr. Attorney General owns, that the Pannel after it is arrayed may be amended and altered by the Sheriff, and it was never intended by this Act of Parliament, that any Copy of the Pannel ſhould be delivered to the Priſoner but of thoſe Men that were really returned; ſo that we take it we ought to have it two Days after the Return and before the Trial; for certainly it muſt be a Copy of the Men returned, which if the Sheriff may alter at any Time before the Return, the Intent of the Act of Parliament can never be anſwered by any Copy but what is a true Copy of the Return. Mr. Conyers would anſwer the Objection that I made about a Copy of the Indictment by this, that it is not an Indictment till it be found by the Jury; but I think it is no Anſwer to our Objection at all, though it be but a Copy of the Bill intended to be preſented to the Grand Jury, yet if the Grand Jury afterwards find it, it is as true a Copy of the Indictment, as this is a Copy of the Jury intended to be returned, and afterwards returned. As to what they ſay, that this will introduce a new Method of Trial, contrary to all Form or Proceedings, that can be no Objection neither; for if it be ſo, we can't tell how to help it, the Parliament have thought fit to have it ſo, and we muſt ſubmit to take it as the Law has made it: If there be a Neceſſity for a Habeas Corpora upon the Proviſion made in this Act, ſo it muſt be, for we muſt take the Law as it is. We ſubmit our Objection to your Lordſhip; we think we have not had the Benefit of this Law.

Mr. Cowper. Surely, my Lord, what Mr. Phipps has now ſaid has no Weight in it; that becauſe the Sheriff had it in his Power to alter the Pannel before it was returned, that therefore this is not now a true Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try the Priſoner, duly returned by the Sheriff; which are the Words in the Act. It is true, if the Sheriff had in fact altered the Pannel from what it was, and return'd it ſo altered into Court, no doubt of it the Priſoner would be very well intitled to make this Objection, that he had not a Copy of the Pannel, or the Names of the Jurors that were ſummoned to try him; but now we can aver, that we have purſued this Act of Parliament literally; for in Anſwer to their Objection, we may ask this Queſtion of them upon the Words of the Act, Have you not had a true Copy of the Names of thoſe that are to try you, and are duly returned by the Sheriff for that Purpoſe; and was not that Copy delivered unto you above two Days ago? They cannot ſay they have not had it ſo, and if they cannot ſay ſo, then both the Words and Meaning of the Act of Parliament are in every reſpect anſwered; if when the Jury come to be called the Priſoner finds the Pannel to be altered, he has Reaſon to object, and will have the Benefit of the Objection, that he has not that Advantage which the Law intended him, but till that prove to be the Fact, we think here is a full Compliance with this Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Barth. Shower miſtakes my Objections about the Copy of the Indictment; for we ſay, if the Intent of the Act of Parliament be complied with, it is ſufficient, eſpecially where the Words are any way doubtful; according to the Words of this Act of Parliament, a Copy of the Indictment need to be delivered but five Days before the Trial; but it appearing that the Intention of theſe Law-makers was, that he ſhould have a Copy of the Indictment to enable him him to plead to it if he had Cauſe, therefore tho' the Words be before the Trial, we have taken it that he ſhould have a Copy five Days before his Arraignment, and ſo we have complied with the Meaning of the Law in that point, as we have alſo in this, which was, we take it, only to enable the Priſoner to make his Challenges, and if that be done two Days before his Trial, with Submiſſion, it fully anſwers this Law.

L. C. J. Have you done Gentlemen?

Counc. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then look you, Sir B. Shower, as to this Point that you now inſiſt upon, we have had it under Conſideration heretofore; we were here this Day ſeven-night, and then we did conſider in what Method we ſhould proceed, ſo that the Priſoner might have the Benefit intended him by this Act of Parliament: The Act of Parliament does deſign in the firſt place, that every Priſoner that is to be tryed for High-Treaſon ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment, at leaſt five Days before the Trial, that I think was all that the Makers of this Act of Parliament intended at the firſt; but then there being ſubſequent Words, which ſhew the Reaſon why they gave him the Copy ſo long before the Trial; which is, that he might adviſe with his Council what to plead; theſe Words we conceive have given the Priſoner a further Time than what was originally intended, therefore we have thought it neceſſary that the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of his Indictment five Days before he be arraigned, which is five Days before he was put to plead; and your Client, the Priſoner at the Bar, has had the Benefit of this Act in that reſpect before we arraigned him; then after he has pleaded, the Queſtion was, when he was to have a Copy of the Pannel: Now the Deſign of this Act of Parliament was, That the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of the Pannel two Days before his Trial, in Order that he might conſider of the Perſons that were to try him; that he might inform himſelf of their Qualities, Tempers, and Diſpoſitions; that ſo he might make uſe of the Benefit the Law gives him of Challenging Five and Thirty, without ſhewing any Cauſe, if he did not like the Men, and as many more as he ſhould think he had good cauſe to challenge: Now in this Caſe, the whole Deſign of this Act of Parliament is anſwered, for he has had a Copy of the Pannel, as you your ſelves acknowledge, two Days before the Day of his Trial, ſo that he has the full Benefit that the Act of Parliament intended; he is by this Copy as well enabled to make his Challenges as the Law deſign'd he ſhould be, and has had the ſame Time allowed him that the Act of Parliament meant he ſhould have; then ſuppoſing the Deſign of this Act of Parliament be fully anſwered and complied with in the Caſe, The next Queſtion is, whether the Words of the Act are ſatisfied, for we would be very loth, in a Caſe of this Nature, where an Act of Parliament intends a Favour to a Priſoner that ſtands at the Bar for his Life, to abridge him of any Part of that Favour which the very Words of the Act would allow him, tho' the Intent of the Act of Parliament were anſwered otherwiſe: Now in the firſt place it is obſervable, that the Act of Parliament does not ſay, that the Priſoner ſhall have a Copy of the Return, nor does it ſay, he ſhall have a Copy from the Court, but he ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors duely returned that are to try him; now if the Sheriff array his Pannel ſeveral Days before the Trial upon the Venire facias, and does give him a Copy of that very Pannel, which Pannel is afterwards returned in Court, has not he then a Copy of the Pannel duely returned? Does not this anſwer all the Words of the Act? For you yourſelves ſay that it is not ſaid in the Words of the Act, that the Copy ſhall be delivered after the Pannel returned, nor does there need a Copy of the very Return. Surely we muſt not carry it farther than the Words, if the Meaning be complied with, and we think this anſwers both Words and Meaning: It is a Copy of the Pannel, and a Copy of that Pannel that's duely returned. Now to make another Conſtruction would indeed not only alter the uſual Courſe of Trials, but be contradictory to the very Proceſs it ſelf. We are by the Courſe of Law to award Proceſs to ſummon a Jury to appear at a certain Time, to try the Iſſue joined between the King and the Priſoner; and yet when we have done this, and the Jury thereupon are ſummoned and do appear, they may go as they came; for the Iſſue cannot be try'd, becauſe after the Return, the Priſoner muſt have a Copy of the Pannel two Days before he can be tried. I do think the Deſign of the Act of Parliament, and the very Words of the Act are fully ſatisfied in giving a Copy of the Pannel two Days before the Return. We had this Matter under our Conſideration before, and upon Debate among our ſelves, we did think fit to award the Precept returnable this Day, and reſolved to try the Priſoner this Day, unleſs better Reaſons were offered us to alter our Opinion, and we are not ſatisfied, that any ſuch better Reaſon has been given, but that this Trial ought to go on, the Priſoner having the full Benefit that was deſigned him by this Act of Parliament. And the Giving a Copy of the Pannel that is return'd, tho' before the Return, ſufficiently ſatisfies the Words of the Act: No other Conſtruction can be made without great Abſurdities: This is my Opinion.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I hope we ſhall be excuſed for our Client, we have another Doubt to propoſe to the Court.

L. C. J. You have had my Opinion upon this Point, if my Lords and Brothers are of another Opinion, they will tell you.

Judges, No my Lord, we are all of the ſame Opinion.

L. C. J. My Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, and my Brothers are all of the ſame Opinion.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we ſay we have another Doubt to propoſe upon this Act of Parliament: It is a new one, and never put in Practice till now, and therefore we hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to excuſe us, if we offer our Objections, becauſe there has yet never been a Determination about it, and we are aſſigned of Council by your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Never make Apologies, Sir Bartholomew, for it is as lawful for you to be of Council in this Caſe, as it is in any other Caſe where the Law allows Council. It is expected you ſhould do your beſt for thoſe you are aſſigned for, as it is expected in any other Caſe that you do your Duty for your Client.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, our Exception is this, we ſay that this Trial cannot go on at this Time, upon

upon this Act of Parliament, becauſe we have no true Copy of the whole Indictment; it does not appear, in the Copy we have delivered to us, before whom it was taken, or whether it was taken at all, or in what Place it was taken; it ſays only Middleſex in the Margin, and then Juratores pro Domino Rege preſentant: That might be before the Juſtices of the Peace at the Quarter-Seſſions, or it might be at the Monthly-Seſſions at Hicks's-Hall, or it might be at the Seſſions at the Old-Baily, or it might be before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, as perhaps it really was; but non conſtat where it was taken, nor how it comes hither: It might be before Your Lordſhip here, as we believe it was, but this Copy not letting us know where and how it was taken, we think we have not the Benefit of this Law; for the Party accuſed is by this Act of Parliament to have a Copy to adviſe with Council, that he may be enabled to plead. And that is the Reaſon why the Words of this Act are ſo penned, that he ſhall have a Copy of the whole Indictment, which we cannot plead to, unleſs we know where it was taken, if we ſhould have Occaſion to plead any ſpecial Matter. And beſides, My Lord, there is another Reaſon why we ſhould have the whole Indictment to enable us to plead, becauſe if we had the Caption, it might perhaps appear, that the Indictment was taken before the Time of the Fact alledged in the Indictment, and then that would make it vicious; it might be before the 9th of February, when this Treaſon is ſaid to be committed, and then we ought not to be brought to Trial. Now the Deſign of this Act of Parliament, in giving the Priſoner a Copy of the Indictment ſo long before the Trial, was not only to enable him to make his Defence upon the Trial, but alſo to adviſe with Council to plead; for ſo the Words are, the better to enable him to plead. Now we ſay to anſwer this End, it is neceſſary we ſhould have a Copy of the whole Indictment, as it ſtands before Your Lordſhip in Court. And another Reaſon is this, it is no Indictment, unleſs it be preſented by the Jury, as their Inquiſition upon Oath, unto ſome Court that has Juriſdiction of the Matter: What we have delivered to us is only a Copy of a Bill, as to be delivered to a Grand Jury, to be found; non conſtat, that it is found. Now the Intent of the Act of Parliament being to give the Priſoner this Advantage to enable him to plead, he may have ſeveral Pleas, of which he might take a legal Advantage if he had a Copy of the whole, which he knows not how to come at now; and in truth it is very neceſſary, becauſe if he be tried upon an Indictment found in another Country, then theſe Commiſſioners have not a legal Authority to try him; and if the Tryal ſhould go on, and he be acquitted, he is ſubject to be indicted and tried again, and never can relieve himſelf by the Acquittal upon ſuch an Indictment before Perſons that had no Authority to try him. I doubt he can never plead the Acquittal, becauſe he cannot make out that he was duely tried and acquitted: And for theſe Reaſons we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether we have had the Benefit of this Law, in having a Copy of the whole Indictment to enable us to plead; and if we have not, till we have that Benefit, we humbly conceive this Trial ought not to go on.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, the Queſtion is whether the Style of the Court, the Perſons before whom it was taken, and to whom the Preſentment is made, the Time when it was taken, and the Place where, ought not to appear in the Indictment. This Law requiring that the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of the whole Indictment to enable him to plead; for if it ſhould happen, that the Indictment was taken before Perſons that had no Juriſdiction, then I believe it will not be denied but that the Priſoner might plead to the Juriſdiction, and there might be ſeveral other Pleas that he might take Advantage of. I would deſire to know of the King's Council, whether ever they ſaw a Copy of an Indictment given in Evidence, or pleaded without the Caption. It is not a true Copy without it; there ought to be the Time, the Place, and the Style of the Court before whom it is taken.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think I need ſay no more to this Objection, than that it does not come at a proper Time; for with Submiſſion, if the Priſoner will upon this Act ſay he has not had a Copy of his Indictment to enable him to plead, he ought to have taken the Advantage of it before he did plead, that is the proper Time for him to object this Matter to the Court; for if, after he has had ſuch a Copy as this Priſoner has had, he does ſubmit to plead, with Submiſſion it is too late to come at his Trial and make this Objection, he cannot be received to make it after.

L. C. J. That is a full Anſwer, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. I think it is, my Lord, with Submiſſion, not that we would wave giving other Anſwers to it, if it were in a proper Time; but the Method of proceeding muſt be, and we think we have no Occaſion at this Time to ſay any Thing more to this Objection.

L. C. J. No, no, that is a full Anſwer in this Point; for look ye, you that are of Council for the Priſoner, when once you have pleaded, you admit you have had a Copy; for the Copy was given you to enable you to plead, and when you have pleaded, you have paſs'd by all Advantage that you could have from the Copy, as to any Plea that you can make: For it's taken for granted ye had a Copy to enable you to plead, and to adviſe with your Council about it; ſince you did plead, and did not inſiſt upon it at the Time of your Arraignment that you had not ſuch Copy.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we have propoſed one Doubt, and we humbly ſubmit it to the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was their own Fault that this Objection was not made in Time.

L. C. J. That Doubt of yours may ſerve at another Time, but now certainly it is quite out of Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, my Lord, even upon the Arraignment that would not ſerve their Turn neither.

L. C. J. We will not enter upon that now, pray go on to ſwear the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. You the Priſoner, look to your Challenges, as I told you before. Cryer, call Sir Jeremy Sambrook.

Cryer. Vouz avez.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Rookwood, you are to make your own Challenges.

Rookwood. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Then hold Sir Jeremy the Book.

Sir Jer. Sambrook. My Lord, I am uncapable of ſerving upon this Jury, for I have been deaf this theſe ſeveral Years, theſe Dozen Years; I cannot hear what is ſaid in Court, though I am now ſo near the Court, I could not hear what your Lordſhip ſaid; nor what was ſaid at the Bar. I have a Certificate here, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to have it read; and moſt of the Perſons of Quality here about the Court know it to be true.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I am afraid it is ſo.

L. C. J. Nay, if it be ſo, it is not fitting that he ſhould be upon the Jury, when he can't hear what's ſaid: You muſt excuſe Sir Jeremy Sambrook. Go on to the next.

Cl. of Ar. George Ford.

Cryer. Vous avez.

Cl. of Ar. Look upon the Priſoner.

Rookwood. I challenge him.

L. C. J. Mr. Ford, you muſt not go away, for you are upon another Pannel, wherein you may be employed, tho' you are now challenged.

Cl. of Ar. William Underhill.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Withers.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Powell.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. Then ſwear Mr. Powell.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner. You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Trench.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolfe.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Raymond.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Richard Marſh. (He did not appear.)

Cl. of Ar. George Haws.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Francis Barry.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Arthur Baily.

Rookwood. I except not againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Webber.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Glover.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Dormer Sheppard.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. George Tredway.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Matthew Bateman.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Timothy Thornbury.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Partherich.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Freeman.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Joſeph Blithit.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Timothy Lennoy.

Rookw. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Harris.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Billers.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Richard Bourne.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. George Carter.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Francis Chapman.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Alexander Forth.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Playſted.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Etley.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Marſh.

Rookw. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Hooper. (He did not anſwer.)

L. C. J. Did Mr. Hooper appear?

Cl. of Ar. Yes, my Lord, he is mark'd as appearing.

L. C. J. Then you ought to call him again, and ſet a Fine upon his Head.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call Samuel Hooper.

Cryer. Samuel Hooper, come into Court and give your Attendance upon Pain of ten Pound, for the Court has recorded your Appearance.

Cl. of Ar. John Hall.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Nicholas Roberts.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Partridge.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Sir B. Shower. How many has he challenged Mr. Hardeſty?

Cl. of Ar. I will tell you Sir Bartholomew,—he has challenged 24.

Sir B. Shower. Well then, go on, Sir.

Cl. of Ar. Peter Laveane.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Moody.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Richard Bealing.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Evans.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Rammage.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Edward Townſhend.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Gunſton.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Freebody.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Philip Wightman.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. There are now Thirty-two challenged. John Wyberd.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Strowd.

Rookw. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Daniel Byfeild.

Rookw. I do not except againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Noble.

Rookw. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, count them. Samuel Powell, —

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Noble.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn were theſe.

Samuel Powell,	George Carter,
Arthur Bailey,	William Atley,
John Webber,	John Marſh,
George Tredway,	Samuel Freebody,
Timothy Lennoy,	Daniel Byfeild, and
John Harris,	Benjamin Noble.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Phipps, your Objection upon the Indictment ſlipt me, and therefore I would ſpeak to it now: You ſaid it might be as well a Copy of the Indictment before it be found, as well as this a Copy of the Pannel before it be returned. Now that can't be, for an Indictment is not an Indictment till it be found, it is only a Writing prepared for the Eaſe of the Jury, and for Expedition; it is nothing till it is found, for the Jury make it an Indictment by finding it, they may alter what they pleaſe, or refuſe it abſolutely. And if the Jury, upon examining the Witneſſes, would only preſent a Matter of Fact, with Time and Place, the Court might cauſe it to be drawn up into Form, without carrying it to the Jury: Again, There needs no Billa vera; for that is only the Jury's Owning that which the Court has prepared and drawn up for them: But a Pannel is a Pannel when it is arrayed, before it be returned, and a Copy of the Pannel given before it be returned, is a Copy of the Pannel returned, if it be afterwards returned, as it muſt.

Sir Barth. Shower. But, my Lord, that Notion ſtrengthens our Objection that we laſt made, that makes it neceſſary that we ſhould have a Copy of the Caption, as well as the other Part, to make it a true Copy of the whole Indictment.

L. C. J. That's another Thing, we will talk of that another Time; but I ſpeak of this only as to his Objection which ſlipt my Memory, becauſe I would have nothing remain unanſwered.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, when the Bill is found, the Copy that we delivered before is as much a true Copy of the Indictment as our Copy of the Pannel is a Copy of the Jury returned.

L. C. J. A Pannel is a Pannel when it is arrayed, but a Bill is not an Indictment till it be found; one cannot ſay a Man indictatus exiſtit, till it be found; all that we ſay of it before it be found, is that there was quædam Billa preferred to the Grand Jury, and if the Jury bring it in Ignoramus, whereby they diſown the Preſentment, it is cancelled, and there is no Record of it, nor nothing, only a Memorandum in the Clerk's Book perhaps, that ſuch a Thing was. Well, go on.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, before this Inqueſt to be taken, of the High-Treaſon whereof Ambroſe Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

Cl. of Arr. Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Ambroſe Rookwood, of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. for that he, together with Chriſtopher Knightley, not yet taken, Robert Lowick, and Charles Cranburne, and divers others, falſe Traytors, &c. — prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis — and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and upon his Arraignment hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him not Guilty, ye are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mouutague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, this Indictment that has been read to you, does charge the Priſoner with High-Treaſon for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, for endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, and to ſubject the People of England to the Slavery of Lewis the French King; and for this End the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner at the Bar did privately meet with ſeveral falſe Traytors, to conſult how they might compaſs the Death of the King, and commit thoſe other Treaſons; and that the 10th of February, at Covent-Garden, in this County, it was agreed among them, that they ſhould get together Forty Horſemen whereof the Priſoner at the Bar was to be one, and they were to lie in Ambuſh, and ſet upon the King in his Coach upon his Return from going abroad; ſome were to attack the Coach, others to attack the Guards, and there were ſome to kill the King in the Coach: And the Indictment does likewiſe charge the Priſoner with gathering together Horſes, and providing Arms for this Purpoſe. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, he hath pleaded not Guilty; we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove the Fact, and when we have ſo done, we do not at all doubt but you'll do your Duty.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, before the Witneſſes are called we have a Doubt to propoſe to your Lordſhip upon this Act of Parliament, and that is, whether we are to take our Exceptions to this Indictment before the Evidence be opened or given?

L. C. J. It ſhould properly be before the Jury is ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. The Words of the Act, my Lord, is before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. That Act provides, That if you do not take the Advantage of it, before the Evidence given, you ſhall not move that in Arreſt of Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. It only ſays before Evidence given, and no Evidence has yet been given.

L. C. J. But you are certainly very irregular in point of Practice, no Body ever took Exceptions to an Indictment after the Jury was ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhips pleaſes to let the Words be read of the Act of Parliament, they are theſe: That no Indictment ſhall be quaſh'd, unleſs Exception be taken in the Court where the Trial ſhall be, before any Evidence given in Court upon that Indictment. Which, we ſay, ſtrongly implies that the Law-makers thought it might be done at any Time before the Evidence was given in open Court, beſides that the Law takes Notice that after Conviction it ſhould be of no Avail; it would have been a very improper Expreſſion before Evidence given in open Court, if it had meant before the Jury were ſworn and charged; for the Word Evidence ſuppoſes the Trial commenced; If they had intended it otherwiſe, that is, that it ſhould be before the Jury is ſworn, they would have expreſs'd it to be done at the Arraignment; but mentioning it to be done in the Court where the Trial is to be, before Evidence given, that ſuppoſes the Indictment to be at Iſſue before the Party needs to make his Exceptions. Therefore, my Lord, we hope we are regular in offering our Exceptions now.

L. C. J. Pray, what ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think they are no Way regular; for, with Submiſſion, I take it, that though this Act of Parliament has indulged them in ſeveral Things which were not allowable by Law before, yet as to this Part they are not allowed to take Exceptions to the Indictment, otherwiſe than they could before this Act was paſs'd: Nay, ſo far from that, that if your Lordſhip looks into the Act, you find they are reſtrain'd in this Point from an Advantage that they had before, that is, they ſhall not move any ſuch Things as are there mentioned, after Verdict, in Arreſt of Judgment: So that this Part is reſtrictive to the Priſoner, and takes away ſome Advantage that he had before; which was, moving in Arreſt of Judgment after Verdict; but it leaves the making Exceptions as to any Time before the Verdict, as it was before, which was before Plea pleaded, but not after the Jury ſworn: For it cannot be denied that in point of Practice, ſuch a Thing as this that is now offered could not have been done before the Act. I would be glad to know whether they can ſhew any Precedent of any ſuch Thing as they now contend for. They ſay, the Words of the Act are, Exception muſt be taken before Evidence given; but that muſt be taken at ſuch a Time as they might by the Courſe of Law do it before: For when the Jury is ſworn, they muſt give a Verdict, and I do not know how they can be diſcharged without giving a Verdict; therefore unleſs the Act had given Directions for a particular Manner of Proceeding in this Matter, which it has not done, your Lordſhip will not, I preſume, do it in any other Manner than as it was before the Act made; and if there be no Precedent to be ſhown of any ſuch Thing as this, of taking Exception to an Indictment after the Jury ſworn and charged with the Priſoner; then there is no Power in this Act of Parliament, given to them to take Exceptions to this Indictment at this Time; we take it the Motion is very irregular upon all Accounts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we firſt ſay, that it is not proper for them to make any ſuch Motion as this upon this Act of Parliament, till they tell us what their Exception is, that we may ſee whether it be within the Words and Meaning of this Act of Parliament. The only Thing now that is proper for us to conſider, is the Iſſue joined, and the Inquiry whether the Priſoner at the Bar is Guilty of the High-Treaſon of which he is Indicted, to which Indictment he has pleaded not Guilty: That's the Thing that is now before your Lordſhip to be tried, they have Room for Exceptions to the Indictment afterwards, for ſome Exceptions I mean, (I do not know what their Exceptions are) but if they be ſuch as may be taken after the Verdict, then I am ſure they are irregular now in their Motion, and they can ſhew no Precedent, when it was done after Plea pleaded and Iſſue joined, as it is in this Caſe.

Mr. Conyers. The Advantage that the Act gives the Priſoner, of having a Copy of his Indictment ſo long before Trial, is to enable him to plead, or to take Exceptions to quaſh it; but I never heard a Motion to quaſh an Indictment after a Jury is charged to hear the Evidence. Certainly they ought to do it before Plea pleaded, and not now to come to make a Motion to quaſh the Indictment, after they have pleaded, and the Jury ſworn: Therefore we ſubmit it, upon the conſtant Practice in like Caſes, to the Judgment of the Court.

Sir B. Shower. In Anſwer to that which Mr. Attorney has ſaid, That it is an improper Time; I thought truly I had moved it for the Advantage and Eaſe of the King's Council, that they might not proceed upon this Trial, when perhaps after all their Trouble, the Foundation, which is the Indictment, may fail. I have a great many Exceptions to the Indictment; they ſay we ſhould name what our Exceptions are: I will acquaint them with them, as faſt as I can, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, the Indictment is very looſe and uncertain.

L. C. J. Certainly the Motion is irregular in point of Practice.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we were afraid we ſhould be excluded from taking theſe Exceptions after the Evidence given.

L. C. J. So you are by the expreſs Words of the Act.

Sir B. Shower. Then certainly we may do it before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. But the Act does not ſay, Ye ſhall do it any Time before the Evidence given, eſpecially in ſuch an irregular Manner, after Iſſue joined, and the Jury ſworn. Suppoſe Mr. Attorney had given ſome Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, I agree we had been without the Words; therefore I now move it before the Evidence, becauſe the Act of Parliament has given me a Liberty to do it before the Evidence given: For the Law having given this Liberty to the Priſoner, to make ſuch Exceptions within ſuch a Time, your Lordſhip will not reſtrain us from making Uſe of that Liberty further than the Law has reſtrained, but we may make Uſe of our Exceptions before the Evidence given, either to induce your Lordſhip to quaſh the Indictment, or the Jury to find us not Guilty, as we hope your Lordſhip will direct them to do: For what is more common upon Indictments after the Jury are ſworn, than if Facts appear upon the Record not to be ſufficiently alledged, the Court will direct the Jury to find the Party not Guilty. We think this Act does give us this Liberty, otherwiſe I know not to what Purpoſe it was made, the very Meaning ſeems to be, that the Exceptions of the Council for the Priſoner might be of Prejudice to the King; and therefore it ſays, After the King's Evidence given, and the Fact diſcovered, no ſuch Exception ſhall be made: Therefore we muſt make it before the Evidence given, otherwiſe this Act of Parliament that was deſigned in Favour of the Priſoner, will prove a very great Hardſhip upon him, eſpecially in Caſe of an imperfect Indictment, as we apprehend this is, and he will be in a worſe Condition than ever he was; he muſt take his Exceptions now or not at all. The Act ſays, He is not to take it after Evidence given; and by Conſtruction the King's Council would have it, That he ſhould not give it before: And conſequently he has no Time at all to give it.

L. C. J. Have not you had Time to do it before now, Sir Bartholomew Shower, certainly you had? You had Time this Day Seven-night, when you were arraign'd; you have had your Opportunity if you would have taken it; the Jury are now charg'd, the Indictment is opened, they have been told what they are to enquire of, and now you would break in and take Exceptions to the Indictment.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, This is a new Act of Parliament, it ſays we ſhall take our Exceptions before the Evidence given; which we take it, is any Time before the Evidence given; and if your Lordſhip will not allow us to do it now, it may be we may loſe the Benefit of it abſolutely.

L. C. J. It is one Queſtion whether we ſhall allow it or no, and another Queſtion whether you can claim it or no: Certainly it is an irregular Motion, and the like of it was never offered in any Caſe before, be it Criminal or Civil: For if it be a Criminal Caſe that is not Felony or Treaſon, when the Iſſue comes to Trial upon an Indictment, Did you ever know any Exception taken to the Indictment after the Jury were charged? Certainly it is contrary to all Practice; and it is not fair, the Court is not well dealt with, you have had an Opportunity before, and will you now put the Court and the Jury to ſo great deal of Trouble, to ſtay till the Jury be called over; the Priſoner called to his Challenges, he has challenged Thirty-four, the Jury is ſworn, the Indictment is read to them, the Charge given them, the Council have opened the Indictment, and now when the Buſineſs is only to try the Iſſue with which the Jury are charg'd, you come to turn us quite round, by taking Exceptions to the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, We take it the Act gives us this Time to do it in.

L. C. J. You know you had another Time more proper to do it in.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, If we have not Time now, then this Clauſe, with humble Submiſſion, ſignifies nothing at all.

L. C. J. The Clauſe was made in this Reſpect, to your Diſadvantage, becauſe you ſhould have a Copy of the Indictment, whereby you might have an Opportunity to adviſe with Council, that they might inſtruct you how to plead, and to take any manner of Exception before Plea pleaded, it ought to be before the Trial, and now becauſe of this Advantage, it provides that you ſhall take your Exceptions before the Trial, and not move them in Arreſt of Judgment; that is the Meaning of the Act.

Mr. Phipps. Then, my Lord, there needed no Time at all to be mentioned in the Act, but have left it as it was at Common-Law.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, there did need a Time to be limited, for this Clauſe was made I ſay in your Diſadvantage, in depriving the Priſoner of the Benefit of ſuch kind of Exceptions in Arreſt of Judgment, becauſe of the Advantage that was given in the former Part of the Act, where you had Time given you to make your Exceptions, for which End you are to have a Copy of the Indictment five Days before you are called to plead.

Sir B. Shower. We could not come before, my Lord, as we apprehend, becauſe the Words of the Act are before Evidence given.

L. C. J. But I tell you, this Clauſe was not for your Benefit, but for your Diſadvantage.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, What we preſs, ariſes from the very Words of the Act of Parliament, if the Meaning of the Law-makers was as the King's Council now contend to have it; they would never have uſed thoſe Words before Evidence given in open Court, but have ſaid they ſhould have had no Advantage of the Exception, unleſs it were before Plea pleaded; it does not ſay it ſhall be after the Verdict, or before the Verdict, but before the Evidence given: Now if they had meant what theſe Gentlemen ſay, they would have appointed it to be before the Verdict, which would have included the Trial; becauſe then it had been like the Penning of other Acts of Parliament, the Statutes of Jeofailes and the like, which ſay, That after a Verdict, ſuch and ſuch Exceptions ſhall not Arreſt a Judgment: But if they can ſhew me any Statute that is penn'd like this, they give me an Anſwer: All thoſe Statutes are, That no Judgment ſhall be arreſted or delay'd upon ſuch or ſuch Exceptions after a Verdict: But here it ſays, They ſhall not arreſt Judgment, unleſs the Exception be taken before Evidence given in open Court. My Lord, We ſubmit it to you, we think the Law-makers did intend ſomewhat by that particular Way of Expreſſion, different from all other Acts of Parliament; and truly if it be not as we offer to your Lordſhip, we think it can have no Meaning at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we think it is very plain what the Parliament meant, by this Clauſe in this Act; the Deſign was, to reſtrain the Priſoner from moving in Arreſt of Judgment, for Miſ-ſpelling, or falſe Latin, or little Matters of Form, if he did not move it in a proper Time, having ſuch a Liberty allow'd him, as to have a Copy of the Indictment ſo many Days before he was compelled to plead: They inſiſt upon it, that the Words are, Before Evidence given; It is ſo: But what can be the Meaning of that? It muſt be at ſuch Time as the Law allows; it is not making a new Method of Trial; you ſhall take Exception before the Evidence, that is, before the Trial, for it can never be intended, that they they meant to alter the Courſe, and let the Council break in between the Time of the Jury's being ſworn, and the Evidence given, that by no Law could ever have been done before.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mr. Attorney, when would you have us do it?

Mr. Att. Gen. Regularly before Plea pleaded, at leaſt-wiſe before the Jury be ſworn.

L. C. J. Undoubtedly this is not regular, it is contrary to all the Courſe of Practice, it is not fair Dealing with the Court. But then there is another Conſideration in the Caſe, that I would have you think upon: If ſo be this had been at a Trial by Niſi Prius, then the Judge of Niſi Prius is only to try the Iſſue; but now here the very Record is before us, and we are Judges of the Record, as well as we are to aſſiſt the Jury in Trying the Iſſue. Now take it in any other Caſe of the like Nature, Suppoſe a Trial at the Bar in any Civil Cauſe, though this be contrary to Practice, and the Court not fairly dealt with, yet when we have the Record before us, and find an Error in the Record, cannot we quaſh the Indictment and diſcharge the Jury. That is the Queſtion, Mr. Attorney, though I muſt confeſs, I do not know that it has been practicable.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, in a Caſe of Treaſon, where the Jury are once charg'd, they are to give a Verdict, they muſt either Acquit or Convict.

Sir B. Show. It was done in Whitebread's Caſe.*

Mr. Att. Gen. But I know what has been uſually thought in that Caſe, and I believe they cannot ſhew me another.

L. C. J. Nay, that this is a very irregular Motion, is very plain.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, you muſt take it as the Law was before this Act, for this Clauſe does nothing for the Priſoner, but is againſt him.

L. C. J. I know it is not for the Advantage of the Priſoner, therefore I put it as a Caſe in an Action, or an Indictment, as the Law was before, whether this being a Trial in the ſame Court where the Indictment was found, and we find an Inſufficiency in the Record before us, whether we cannot quaſh the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordſhip mentions Civil Actions, with Submiſſion, nothing of that kind could be done after once the Cauſe came to Trial, but in Criminal Cauſes according to the Courſe of Practice, which will always be the Law till particularly altered: I believe no Body can pretend, that after Iſſue joyn'd, and a Jury charg'd, any one can move to quaſh the Indictment. I think I have heard it often ſaid in this Court, that in Capital Caſes, as High-Treaſon, you may put in a Plea in Abatement of, but not a Motion to quaſh an Indictment; I am ſure it was diſallowed where I moved to quaſh an Indictment of Murder, let them but ſhow any Precedent of this Nature.

Sir B. Shower. We will ſhow you, tho' this is the firſt Caſe upon this Act of Parliament, therefore to ſhow any Practice upon it would be very hard to require of us.

L. C. J. But can you ſhow it before this Clauſe in this Act of Parliament, which, as I told you, is not for your Advantage, it does not give that Liberty that you deſire.

Sir B. Shower. All the Clauſes in this Act of Parliament ſhow'd their Intention was this, that the Senſe of the Law-makers was, that we ſhould have this Liberty at any Time before Evidence given, for if there be ſuch Words as ſhow'd they thought it might be quaſh'd at any Time, tho' they were miſtaken in the Practice, yet we ſhall have the Liberty that they intended us, and the Wording of this Act ſhows, that the Parliament thought it might be done after the Trial begun before Evidence given, becauſe they reſtrain us from taking thoſe Exceptions after the Evidence given; and it is no Prejudice to the King at all really, it is rather for the Advantage of the Proſecution, becauſe there is none of the Evidence diſcloſed, and therefore if the Indictment ſhould be found faulty, ſtill the Evidence remains undiſcovered upon another Indictment; and I have often heard it ſaid at this Bar in Caſes of Indictments for Felony or Treaſon, as Murder, or the like; if any one did come as amicus curiæ, and acquainted the Court, that they were going to proceed upon an erroneous Record, or give an erroneous Judgment, or do any other erroneous Act, he ought to be received with Kindneſs, becauſe he would prevent a Wrong doing.

L. C. J. That is in the proper Time, not to interrupt the Trial when the Jury is once ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. We are ready to offer our Exceptions, and we hope it is no Prejudice at all to the King before the Evidence of the Fact is given.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I perceive that this Clauſe, as they would have it, is intended to prevent us from moving that in Arreſt of Judgment, which we could have moved before, and ties us up to do it before Evidence given; now I would fain know, if we could not before this Act move in Arreſt of Judgment, for miſ-ſpelling, or falſe Latin, or improper Latin.

Mr. Att. Gen. You might, no Doubt of it.

Mr. Phipps. They ſay we might; why then, if we could have a Time to move it after the Verdict, and that Time is abridg'd by the Act of Parliament, which directs that it ſhall be before Evidence given in open Court, ſure we may take any Time before the Evidence given, and ſhall not be reſtrain'd further than the Letter of the Law has reſtrain'd us; for this Act was intended for the Benefit of the Subject, and ought to be conſtrued as much in their Favour as the Letter of it will permit.

Mr. Att. Gen. No doubt of it, it is to be done before Evidence given; but the Queſtion is, at what Time it muſt be before the Evidence given, whether it muſt not be at ſuch Time as by the Courſe of Practice and Uſage of the Law it ſhould have been done before; if you will ſatisfy my Lord and the Court that ever ſuch an Exception was taken, or an Indictment quaſh'd between the Swearing of the Jury and the giving the Evidence, ye ſay ſomething; but I believe not one Inſtance of that Nature can be given, and therefore it is very irregular for them to do it.

L. C. J. They don't pretend to it, for ought I hear, for I would put them upon it, to ſhow me whether they could do it before.

Sir B. Shower. I don't queſtion, my Lord, but it might be, with Submiſſion.

Mr. Conyers. Did you ever know it before that any one undertook to inform the Court as amicus curiæ, but it was to prevent a wrong Judgment, and for that you have your proper Time either before before Plea pleaded by Motion to quaſh the Indictment, or after Verdict to arreſt a Judgment; this Act of Parliament has reſtrain'd you in particular Inſtances that are mention'd from doing it after Verdict in Arreſt of Judgment; but having given you a Copy of the Indictment before you pleaded, you have had a proper Time to make theſe Exceptions, and if you have laps'd your Time you come too late to do it now, for ſure no Body ever made a Motion to quaſh an Indictment after Iſſue joyn'd and the Jury ſworn.

* See Trial 75. Vol. II. p. 711.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would only mention one Caſe, and that was of Sir Richard Manſell, upon an Indictment of Murder, for Killing the Apothecary in Holbourn; I did my ſelf move to quaſh the Indictment, becauſe it was not expreſs'd in what Year of the King the Fact was done; but the Court was of Opinion we could not move to quaſh an Indictment for that, or any ſuch notorious Crime, till after the Fact determined.

L. C. J. No, we were always of that Opinion, never to allow Motions to quaſh Indictments for Perjury, Murder, or any great Offence, but it muſt be moved in Arreſt of Judgment afterwards.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, theſe Gentlemen ſeem to beg the Queſtion upon this Act of Parliament, as if it had appointed this to be the Time of making Exceptions to the Indictment; the Act of Parliament does not ſay you ſhall make your Exception immediately before the Evidence given in open Court, as if it had pointed out and directed to them that particular Time, that then they ſhould take their Exception and no other Time: The Act has only ſet a Bound, that they ſhall not do it afterwards, but as to the particular Time, it is left as it was before, to the regular Courſe and Method of Proceedings, which is before Plea pleaded.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, they do not anſwer my Objection; it is, it ſeems, a Reſtriction of a Liberty that we had before of moving in Arreſt of Judgment; if ſo, we ought not to be reſtrained further than we are by the Words of the Act of Parliament, which ſay, before Evidence given, that is at any Time before Evidence given, as well after as before Plea pleaded.

Sir B. Shower. I would ask theſe Gentlemen, whether the Law-makers intended that we ſhould have no Advantage of excepting againſt falſe Spelling and improper Latin.

Mr. Conyers. Yes, they did, but that you ſhould do in your proper Time.

Sir B. Shower. Then the Time for doing it muſt be that which the Words of the Law ſay, before the Evidence given in open Court, and that's now.

Mr. Conyers. No, you might have come at the Day of Arraignment, and have taken the Advantage of it then before you had pleaded.

L. C. J. Ye have had my Opinion what I think of it, my Lords and Brothers, I ſuppoſe will tell you theirs.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lord Chief Juſtice has delivered his Opinion in this Matter, and he thinks fit that we ſhould deliver ours. I think this Motion of the Priſoner's Council to quaſh this Indictment after the Jury ſworn, is irregular and quite out of Seaſon; the Intent of this Clauſe in this Act of Parliament, certainly was not in Favour of the Priſoner; it abridgeth him of a Liberty he had before, but gives him nothing: For the Law-makers did think they had given the Priſoner an extraordinary Favour in the foregoing Part of the Act, in giving him a Copy of the Indictment five Days before he ſhould plead, and a Copy of the Pannel two Days before he ſhould be tryed, and allowing him Council; and all theſe Advantages were to enable him to quaſh the Indictment, or the Proceſs returned, for the Clauſe extends to both; the Words are, That no Indictment nor Proceſs or Return thereupon, ſhall be quaſh'd on the Motion of the Priſoner or his Council for Miſ-writing, Miſ-ſpelling, falſe or improper Latin, unleſs Exception concerning the ſame be taken and made in the reſpective Court where ſuch Trial ſhall be by the Priſoner or his Council aſſign'd before any Evidence given in open Court upon ſuch Indictment, nor ſhall any ſuch Miſ-writing, &c. after Conviction be any Cauſe to ſtay Judgment: Therefore they made this extraordinary Proviſion to reſtrain the Priſoner, in Part, by this Clauſe; as much as to ſay you have an Advantage of the Copy of the Indictment, and you may make uſe of that to quaſh it by Motion, if you think fit, as you may alſo the Proceſs, but it ſhall be before Evidence given. 'Tis true, thoſe are the Words, but the uſing that Term, viz. quaſhing ſuch Indictment or Proceſs, ſhows it muſt be done in ſuch a Way and Time as is proper for quaſhing; and the very Words are, that it ſhall be upon Motion. Now we are to expound thoſe Words. And I ſay, a Motion to quaſh an Indictment, muſt be underſtood a Motion in the proper Seaſon, which I think is before Plea pleaded; but at leaſt before the Jury is ſworn. There were three Times when the Priſoner might have had the Advantage of a Fault in the Indictment before this Act: 1. By Motion to quaſh it before Plea pleaded. 2. Then afterwards in Arreſt of Judgment: And 3. After that by Writ of Error. Now this Clauſe of this Act takes away the Privilege of moving in Arreſt of Judgment for Miſ-writing, &c. but ſaves the Advantage upon a Writ of Error, and upon a Motion to quaſh the Indictment. We are to conſider what is a proper Time for a Motion to quaſh an Indictment, the Motion is to be made to the Court, and to them alone. It is not to be made to the Court and the Jury. When the Jury is ſworn, all Application is to be made to the Court, as having a Jury preſent which they are to aſſiſt in the Trial and Determination of the Fact only. What Uſe then is there of the Jury, when you make this Motion, which conſiſts only in Points of Law? They muſt ſtand by and be out of Office all the while this Motion is making: And it is not reaſonable, nor certainly ever was intended that after a Jury is ſworn to try a Matter of Fact, they ſhould ſtand idle, while you move a Thing which you ſhould have moved before they came to the Bar: Suppoſe you ſhould now move ſome Exception to the Venire, and the Return thereupon, ſhould we, when we and you alſo have admitted the Jury to be ſworn, quaſh the Proceſs whereby they are return'd? And yet we may as well do that as this. For, the Act provides in the very ſame Words concerning Quaſhing Proceſs and Indictments. But, when the Jury is ſworn, and ready to receive their Evidence, ſure, then it is out of all Seaſon to make ſuch a Motion; therefore I do not think the Parliament intended by this Clauſe (which was a kind of Exception to the Favour the Priſoner receiv'd by having the Copy of the Indictment) to inſtitute a new Method of Proceedings for Motions to quaſh Indictments, even when a Jury is at the Bar and ſworn to try the Iſſue, and there is nothing proper to be proceeded upon, but only to hear the Evidence produc'd for the Proof of that Iſſue, till the Jury is diſcharged. But ſtill this I would ſay; this is a new Caſe, and upon a new Statute. I am truly of Opinion, that the Motion is altogether unſeaſonable and irregular, and it ſhould have been made before, and you had a full Opportunity to make it this Day Seven-night before Plea pleaded, and you might likewiſe to Day before the Jury was ſworn; therefore when the Jury are now at the Bar actually enter'd into, and imploy'd upon the Service, the Court ought not to be interrupted by ſuch a Motion. Yet nevertheleſs I would propound this, that, ſeeing it is a new Caſe and upon a new Statute, the Court would forgive the Irregularity, (for I think it does need Forgiveneſs) and if the King's Council will conſent to it (to prevent any Error or any Pretence of Hardſhip upon a new Law) that we ſhould hear their Exceptions.

Sir Edward Ward. L. C. Baron. This Act of Parliament, as it has given a Benefit to the Priſoner that he had not before, in allowing him a Copy of his Indictment, in Order to his making Exceptions; ſo it has reſtrained him as to the Time of making thoſe Exceptions: That he ſhould have Time, there is no Doubt; the Time limited for it, as this Act ſays, muſt be before Evidence given, becauſe they thought it unreaſonable that there ſhould be any Quaſhing of the Indictment after ſuch Time as the King had given any Evidence whatſoever in the Caſe; for that would be a Diſcovery of the King's Evidence, and great Inconveniencies would enſue thereupon; but the Queſtion is at what Time this is to be done; Whether it may be at any Time before Evidence given or no; it did intend ſurely that the Motion to quaſh the Indictment and the Exceptions to it might have their proper Effect, and that muſt be before the Trial; for it was not the Intent of the Act to alter the Method of Proceedings, and it is to no Purpoſe after the Jury is ſworn, for then their proper Office is to determine the Fact; now if before this Act of Parliament it never was allow'd to take any ſuch Exception as this after the Jury ſworn, it will be conſiſtent with the Words of the Act of Parliament, which are, That it ſhall be done before Evidence given: If then it be in the regular Time for Motions, which is before Plea pleaded or Jury ſworn, that is, before Evidence given; for it is not ſaid, as Mr. Cowper obſerved, that it ſhould be immediately before the Evidence given, I think ſure ſuch an Expoſition as was formerly made ought to be made in this Caſe, the Time not being preciſely fix'd by this Act; if there were a certain Time determin'd when Men ſhould take their Exceptions, as we know it has been in Practice before Iſſue joyn'd, then after the Jury is ſworn it is an improper Time then, I think, to make ſuch Exceptions: I do not ſuppoſe this Act, as to the Method of Proceedings —, than it was before, but this Exception ought to be taken before Plea pleaded: Truly it is a new Act of Parliament, and this is ſo far within the Words of the Act that it is before Evidence given, as the Council for the Priſoner ſay. If this can be govern'd and ruled by Proceedings and Practice in former Times in Caſes not of Felony or Treaſon but only in Criminal Caſes: If no Body ſhould ſuffer by any Interpretation, I ſhould think it ought to bear a conformable Conſtruction to what the Practice was before, I take it you have loſt the regular Time for making your Exception, and you invert the whole Method of Proceedings upon Trials: For to what Purpoſe is it to take Exceptions to quaſh the Indictment when the Jury are once charged with it: If it be an Indictment that ought to be quaſh'd, the Jury ought not to be charged, you have had two Times, and they are both of them elaps'd, for this Matter, that is, at the Arraignment, and before the Jury ſworn; yet I would propoſe it to the King's Council as my Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas has done, it being a new Caſe, that it ſhould be better conſider'd of and agreed upon, that in theſe Caſes we may go on upon a certain Rule that it may be eſtabliſh'd for all Time to come.

Mr. J. Nevile. I would begin with the Propoſal, becauſe, I believe, I may not be ſo clear in my Opinion, otherwiſe I muſt deliver my Thoughts according to my Judgment, but I would have the King's Council conſider of the Propoſal.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, for us to conſent to that in ſuch a Caſe as this, where the Court thinks it not regular, would be pretty hard to deſire of us; if any Thing of Advantage ſhould happen on the other Side, I verily think the Council for the Priſoner will not be ſo ready to conſent to wave any ſuch Advantage, nor am I for asking them to do it; this Clauſe goes only to ſome Faults in the Indictment; Miſ-ſpelling, Miſ-writing, falſe and improper Latin, that is all that they are reſtrain'd from moving in Arreſt of Judgment; any Thing elſe, any Uncertainty or other Matter, that is not comprehended under theſe Particulars, they may take Advantage of to move in Stay of Judgment after a Verdict; this Clauſe does only abridge them from moving in Arrect of Judgment for Miſwriting, Miſ-ſpelling, falſe or improper Latin: therefore if your Lordſhip ſhould think it reaſonable we ſhould conſent to let them in to make any Exception now, it muſt be confin'd to thoſe particular Objections of falſe and improper Latin, there can be no Colour to make the Liberty larger, becauſe for any Thing elſe they are not reſtrain'd from moving it in Arreſt of Judgment, for there can be no Hardſhip in that Caſe, as I think, they have no Reaſon to complain that there has been in any other Part of the Caſe; but for thoſe Particulars that there may be no Complaint of Hardſhip, if your Lordſhip thinks it reaſonable we ſhould conſent, it may be we may be prevail'd upon to do it, though whatever Hardſhip does happen it is their own Fault, and the Priſoner may thank his own Council for that Hardſhip: If we aſſiſt them now to let them in, it ought to be taken as a great Kindneſs; and truly, my Lord, I am unwilling to do any Thing that your Lordſhip and the Court ſhould think hard upon the Priſoner. Certainly it is the Fault of their own Council, now the Law has allow'd the Priſoner Council, not to take the proper Time, and purſue the uſual Methods; and it is a Strain beyond what is uſual, that we muſt help their Faults by our Conſent; how-however, if the Court think it reaſonable, I ſhall not be againſt it, but then I am ſure the Court will take Care they ſhall be confin'd to thoſe Particulars that are mentioned in the Act.

L. C. J. No Doubt of it: Therefore Sir Bartholomew Shower, are your Exceptions for Miſſpelling, Miſ-writing, or falſe or improper Latin? for if they be ſuch Things as you may move in Arreſt of Judgment, and have that Advantage, then there is no Colour that we ſhould break through all the Rules of Proceedings to admit ſuch an irregular Motion as this.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in the Caſe of the Life of a Man I will not take upon me to ſay what is Miſ-ſpelling, Miſ-writing, or falſe or improper Latin, or what is ſubſtantial; but all that I ſay is, I have Five Exceptions, every one of them imports a Doubt, as I take it, worthy the Conſideration of the Court, and ſome of them effectual enough to quaſh the Indictment; but for me, when a Man's Life is at ſtake, and it partly depends upon me as his Council, to ſay what is proper or improper Latin, or to admit it to be Matter of Subſtance, and then to Morrow to have it come and told me, you ſhould have mov'd this to Day, then I am ſure they would have Reaſon to ſay, it was the Fault of the Priſoner's Council; for he would have choſen very ill Council, in me, I confeſs, if I ſhould conſent to put any ſuch Diſadvantage upon him. I beg the Favour that I may have the Liberty to propoſe my Objections, which I think are worth Conſidering of; it is for the Advantage of the King for us to take our Exceptions all together, becauſe, elſe if any of them prove material, the Trouble of the Trial will be but Miſpence of Time.

L. C. J. No, we cannot hear all your Objections, but thoſe that are mention'd particularly in the Act of Parliament; for ſuch as are not mentioned in the Clauſe, you have a proper Time to move them in Arreſt of Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. Then we will put thoſe that are within the Act.

Mr. At. Gen. If we do any Thing by Way of Conſent in this Matter, we muſt inſiſt upon it, that they be confin'd to the Particulars in the Act; we deſire they may open their Objections to the Court, and if the Court ſhall think they are properly under thoſe Heads, then they will conſider of them, if the Court be of another Mind, then they muſt be reſerv'd till the proper Time.

L. C. J. Do you conſent then, Mr. Attorney, that they ſhall now take thoſe Exceptions that are mentioned in the Act of Parliament?

Mr. At. Gen. If the Court think it reaſonable upon thoſe Terms, I do.

Mr. J. Powys. Let them open them if your Lordſhip pleaſe, and let us keep the Power in our own Hands to do as our Diſcretions ſhall direct.

L. C. J. Truly I do not know whether we can do any Thing in this Matter, I queſtion much whether it be Diſcretionary in us to break through all the common Method of Proceeding, and admit of ſuch Irregularities.

L. C. J. Treby. I have a great Inclination to hear them, that we may get rid of theſe pretended Exceptions, which I am apt to think will, when opened, diſappoint the Expectations that may be raiſed by this mentioning them in general; for, I have that Opinion of the Ability and Circumſpection of the Council, that I believe if they had had Exceptions ſufficient to quaſh the Indictment, we ſhould have heard of them at a Time more proper than this now between the Swearing the Jury and giving Evidence to them. But, poſſibly, the Council may think fit to make an Eſſay, and try what can be got out of this unuſual Expreſſion in this new Act.

L. C. J. No, no, I know this is a Piece of Art, and the Court is not well dealt with in it.

L. C. J. Treby. Indeed I am very willing to hear them for that Reaſon.

L. C. J. I look upon it only as meer Trick, and a Piece of Art to take the Opinion of the Court.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, it was my Miſtake then; for I take it, if the Act of Parliament had intended otherwiſe they would have expreſt it otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Does the Act of Parliament give you another Liberty, and a greater than you had before? Does it not deſign to abridge you of a Liberty that you had before? Certainly it never intended that the Court ſhould admit of any irregular Proceedings.

Mr. J. Powell. You ſhould have tim'd your Motion better, for certainly now the Jury is charg'd they muſt give a Verdict either of Acquittal or Conviction; and if you move to quaſh the Indictment, and your Exceptions are material, the Jury cannot proceed; you ſee what a Paſs your Motion has brought it to, 'tis certainly a mighty irregular Motion.

L. C. J. Treby. What Judgment would you have us give? I would ask you that: If any Exception were moved before the Jury were ſworn, and it proved material, the proper Judgment were, that the Indictment be quaſh'd; but now they are ſworn, what Judgment muſt we give? Muſt we not expect the Verdict of the Jury firſt upon the Fact? And muſt we then give Judgment upon your Exception?

Sir B. Shower. I know not whether your Lordſhip may not give Judgment firſt to quaſh the Indictment, and then diſcharge the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. And what if we do not find Cauſe to quaſh it, then you'll ſay, we muſt go on with the Evidence, as we were going before this Interfering? Are we to be doing two Things at once. I am pretty certain you can ſhow me no Precedent for any like Proceedings in any Caſe: It is confounding the Offices of the Judge and Jury.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordſhips try'd the Validity of our Exceptions, and find Occaſion to quaſh the Indictment, there will be no need of a Jury.

L. C. J. Upon the Statute of Jeofailes in a civil Cauſe, ſuppoſe at a Trial at Bar, it appears upon the Face of the Declaration, that there is ſuch a Miſtake as will be cured by the Verdict; but if the Party had demurred, and ſhown it for Cauſe, it would have been fatal. Do you think when he has wav'd the Benefit of Demurrer and pleaded to Iſſue, that you ſhall move this and help your ſelf by ſuch a Motion, becauſe it will be helpt after a Verdict?

Sir B. Shower. If this Act had been worded as that Statute of Jeofailes is, it may be we might not.

L. C. J. Why, it is not ſaid, in the Statute of Jeofailes, that it ſhall be good after Iſſue joined, before the Jury is charg'd or ſworn, but that it ſhan't be good after the Verdict.

Sir B. Shower. It is before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. Could he do ſo in any Caſe before this Act, and does the Act enlarge your Liberty or abridge it?

L. C. J. Treby. Sir Bartholomew Shower, you inſiſt upon Part of the Words of the Act of Parliament; it ſays, no Indictment or Proceſs ſhall be quaſh'd upon the Motion of the Priſoner or his Council, unleſs it be made before any Evidence, &c. Now, I ſuppoſe, the Parliament uſe that Expreſſion, upon the Motion, in the ſame Senſe as it is uſed in Law, viz. for ſuch a one as ſhould be in the Time when Motions for quaſhing the Indictments are properly to be made; now, when is that? It is plain, it was always before the Jury come to the Bar, nay before the Plea of the Party. If that be the proper Time to make ſuch a Motion, then that Expreſſion in this Act of a Motion to quaſh the Indictment will very well help to conſtrue the other Part of the Clauſe that you inſiſt upon: For if the Motion be made before Plea pleaded, it is certainly before the Evidence given in your Senſe. And I conceive, that under that Expreſſion [Evidence given] which ſignifies the main Part, the Parliament intended to comprehend the whole Proceeding to Trial, beginning, if not from the Pleading Not Guilty, at leaſt, from the Swearing the Jury. Before Evidence given in Court, may reaſonably be expounded, Before the Priſoner hath fully entred into that Conteſtation of the Fact, which is to be determined only by Evidence in Court. I attended the Court of King's-Bench a long Time, and I believe that I have heard it ſaid a hundred Times, upon Motions to quaſh Indictments of great or odious Offences: No, try it, ſays the Court, we will not quaſh it, plead to it, let the Fact be tried, you may then move it in Arreſt of Judgment. Thoſe Expreſſions ſhew'd that the proper Time for a Motion to quaſh an Indictment was before Plea, tho' they, in their Diſcretion, would not grant a Motion to quaſh, in Caſes of ſuch great Offences. But ſure they did not think that when a Jury came to the Bar, it was a tolerable Time to move to quaſh an Indictment, there was no Expectation of hearing of ſuch a Motion then. And certainly this Clauſe which is made wholly againſt the Priſoner, ſhould not be conſtrued to help him to ſuch a new extraordinary and abſurd Liberty.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, with Submiſſion, that Practice goes upon another Reaſon, the Court would not quaſh it at all upon a Motion; this Act of Parliament ſuppoſes that you will quaſh upon a Motion at any Time before Evidence given; We never heard of a Motion to quaſh an Indictment for Felony or Treaſon, but ſtill the Court would always ſay, Demur, or Plead, or move in Arreſt of Judgment, but by this Law it ſeems the Senſe of the Parliament was, that it might be quaſht upon a Motion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir B. Shower is come to what I ſaid, that in Truth there is no ſuch Thing as quaſhing an Indictment for Treaſon or Felony, as I mentioned in Sir Rich. Manſel's Caſe, and I think the Rule that was given in that Caſe will ſerve now in this Caſe; I am for conſenting if they be kept within the Limits of the Act of Parliament, but I muſt deſire the Opinion of the Court before we do conſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Aye, aye, Go on Brother Nevile.

Mr. J. Nevile. I muſt confeſs I cannot but doubt, as this Act is, there were two Times that they had Liberty of taking theſe Exceptions to Indictments; but indeed, in Murder and Treaſon they were ſeldom admitted, till they came to move in Arreſt of Judgment; but ſtill there was always a Priviledge, and a Time given to the Priſoner, be the Crime what it would, to take that Advantage which the Law gave him, to prevent Judgment againſt him. Now I agree, it is irregular and unſeaſonable to offer it now, and quite different from all former Practice; you might have done it before now, the Act ſays expreſly it muſt be done before Evidence; but you might have taken Advantage before the Jury was ſworn, nay before you had pleaded, but you have lapſed your Time. Yet truly, notwithſtanding you have lapſed your Time, I cannot ſatisfy my ſelf to take away the Liberty that the Law has given the Priſoner ſometime or other, to except againſt the Indictment. It is plain that before this Act after Verdict he might have moved in Arreſt of Judgment, now he cannot do ſo, whether the Fault be in the Council I cannot tell, but the great Prejudice is to the Perſon that is to be try'd, who will not be wholly precluded from making any Advantage of the Exceptions he has to the Indictment, becauſe by the Act he cannot move in Arreſt of Judgment. This ſeems a ſtrong Implication that the Parliament intended he muſt have ſome Time or other, but before Evidence given, to offer his Exceptions. I ſay this only to thoſe particular Things that are mentioned in the Act, Miſ-writing, Miſ-ſpelling, Falſe or Improper Latin; as to theſe four particular Things which the Party is barr'd from moving in Arreſt of Judgment, I cannot ſatisfy my ſelf but that he ſhould have one Time or another to take this Advantage before the Evidence given, and therefore I think he ſhould have it now: It is true, it is altogether irregular, the Jury being ſworn, and it ought to have been done before; but I hope if it be admitted now, it will be with ſuch Obſervation, that no Body will ever offer at it for Time to come. As this Caſe is before us, and the Act of Parliament, which perhaps may have led the Council into that Miſtake, that it might be any Time before Evidence given, tho' they know the proper Time, and the regular Method in other Caſes; yet I doubt it is hard to put ſuch a Conſtruction upon this Act on the ſudden, quite to debar the Priſoner of the Benefit of his Exceptions to the Indictment.

Mr. J. Powell. I have already declar'd my Opinion, that the Priſoner has had his proper Time for making his Exceptions, but he has lapſed that Time; but I am not againſt that Motion in a Caſe of Life, upon an Indictment for ſo great a Crime as Treaſon is, and where the Conſequence is ſo great, if it may conſiſt with the Rules of Law, and it be the Senſe of the Court, and the King's Council conſent to let them be heard, I ſubmit to it, nay I would Second or Third that Motion that they may be heard.

Mr. J. Eyres. Truly I am of the ſame Opinion, I think we ought not to alter the ancient Courſe of Law by Words of Implication, nor go any further than the Act of Parliament does expreſs. The Act appoints that a Copy of the Indictment ſhould be delivered to the Priſoner ſo many Days before, to enable him to make his Exceptions, and therefore deprives him of the Benefit of thoſe Exceptions after Conviction in Arreſt of Judgment. I ſee no Words in the Act of Parliament that do alter the Courſe of Proceedings, as to this Matter, from what it was in all Civil and Criminal Cauſes before; Perſons muſt take their Advantage of Excepting in their proper Time, but when it comes to Iſſue, the next Thing to be done is the Trial; and truly I muſt needs ſay the Council are to blame, that knew this ſo very well, that if they have any Advantage of Excepting, they did not take that Advantage ſooner, it is their Fault; but ſeeing it is ſo, I am of Opinion not to forecloſe the Priſoner, as the Caſe ſtands. I would be tender of Life, but at the ſame Time I declare my Opinion upon this Act of Parliament as the reſt of my Brothers have done, to prevent the Objection for the Time to come; yet ſeeing there is this Misfortune, and there would be a Hardſhip upon the Priſoner by the Default and Neglect of his Council in the Caſe of a Man's Life, I would be ſo tender as to indulge them to make their Objections now.

Mr. B. Powys. I am of the ſame Opinion the Priſoner has laps'd his Time, for I take it this Clauſe of this Act of Parliament has not altered the common Courſe of Proceedings; nay, I take it, it ſignifies very little in this Caſe; for certainly it was intended to diſable the Priſoner, and not enable him at all; and therefore, as the Caſe is, I think it very Irregular and Impracticable to introduce ſo great a Novelty, as to admit the Motion for quaſhing the Indictment, when the Jury is ſworn, and when the Fact is the only ſingle Point to be determin'd and every Thing elſe ought in legal Courſe to come before or after; but for us to confound Time, one Time for Pleading, another Time for Trial, and another for Arreſt of Judgment, all at once, and to have a Jury attending meerly to hear Council at the Bar moot Points of Law, which might be determin'd either before or after the Trial, is ſo very irregular, that it really introduces nothing but Confuſion, which Courts of Juſtice ought to avoid above all Things, and ought to keep to the proper Seaſons that the Law allows. Therefore, truly I think in Strictneſs of Law we ought not to allow it; but it being in a Caſe of Life, and it being a new Caſe upon a new Act of Parliament, if the King's Council thinks fit to Conſent, I ſhall be for it, if not, I think in Strictneſs of Law we cannot allow it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord I am very unwilling to deny the Priſoner any Advantage, that he might have had by this Act of Parliament, though his Council have ſlipt the proper Time; if Sir Bartholomew Shower will ſay his Exceptions are to any of the four particular Heads mentioned in this Clauſe of the Act of Parliament, for we muſt confine them to that, then we do conſent that he ſhould make them now.

L. C. J. Truly Mr. Attorney, if you do conſent that they take their Exceptions now, we may conſider of it whether it can be; but I know not how we could admit them to that Liberty otherwiſe, for if there be any Thing material, they may move it in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. At. Gen. And I believe they won't ſay their Objections are ſo ſlight, as to be only Matter of Form, they ſay they are Subſtantial, and then your Lordſhip will hear them in a proper Time.

Sir B. Shower. I don't know whether I am miſtaken in the Law, I am ſure you are miſtaken in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Well, do you conſent to let them make their Objections, as to thoſe four Heads in the Act of Parliament.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord; if it be any Matter of Subſtance, that is out of the Caſe at preſent, for the Proviſion of the Act of Parliament is only for meer Matter of Form, and I ſhould be very unwilling in any Point that is material, to make a Precedent in ſuch a Caſe as this.

L. C. J. I confeſs if you had conſented farther, I do not know how we ſhould have admitted of it.

L. C. J. Treby. I tell you how I thought it might be done, you might have committed an Irregularity, for which in a Caſe of Life, and upon a new Law, I believe and hope we ſhould have been forgiven.

L. C. J. Well, for my Part I will not commit any Irregularity upon any Account whatſoever; I cannot ſee how by Law they can take any Exceptions to the Indictment; Mr. Attorney cannot conſent, and if he did, I think it could not be, unleſs he did alſo conſent to diſcharge the Jury; but I ſee they will not offer any Objections according to your Conſent, Mr. Attorney, and therefore pray go on to open the Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Ambroſe Rookwood, ſtands Indicted for High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of his Majeſty. Gentlemen, the Overt Acts that are laid in the Indictment to prove this Treaſon, are; that He, together with divers Others, had frequent Meetings and Conſultations, in order to Aſſaſſinating His Majeſty's Royal Perſon, and did provide Horſes and Arms for that purpoſe.

Gentlemen, the Evidence that you will hear, to prove theſe Facts that are thus laid, will be of this Nature; you will hear by the Witneſs, That there has been for ſome Years a Deſign carried on to Murder the King's Perſon; that this was diſcourſed of, and ſeveral Debates and Conſultations were had about it the laſt Year, ſome Time before the King went to Flanders; there was ſeveral Meetings, where were Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, and Charnock that was Executed, and ſeveral others, and there they did conſider in what way to take off the King at that Time; and you will hear they did expect a Commiſſion to authorize it from the late King James; but then the Commiſſion did not come, they had not any ſuch at that Time; but they did think fit to put it in Execution without any ſuch Order and Authority, and therefore they endeavour'd to have got a Veſſel to have carry'd them off after they had Executed this bloody Conſpiracy; but it happen'd His Majeſty went to Flanders ſooner than they Thought, and they could not provide Themſelves of a Security for a Retreat, and ſo at that Time the Deſign was laid aſide.

But Gentlemen, you will hear this Conſpiracy was renewed, and ſet on Foot this Winter; and in Order to the Accompliſhment of it you will hear, that about Chriſtmas laſt there were ſeveral Perſons ſent from France by the late King James, on purpoſe to put this horrible Deſign in Execution. Sir George Barclay was to be at the Head of it, he was a Lieutenant in one of the late King James's Troops of Guards in France, he was ſent over with a Commiſſion, and Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, was a Brigadier in the Guards there; theſe came over, and ſeveral other Troopers of the late King James's Guards, by two or three at a Time, that they might not be obſerv'd; particularly you will hear, that when Sir George Barcley was come over, ſeveral Troopers were ſent to by King James himſelf to come to him at St. Germains, and there he told them he had a Piece of Service for them to do in England, and that they ſhould obſerve Sir George Barcley's Orders and Directions. More particularly there was one Harris and Hare, two Troopers in the Guards, were ſent for by the late King James into the late Queen's Bed-Chamber at St. Germains, where Colonel Parker was preſent; they were told by the late King, He was ſenſible they had ſerved him faithfully, and He would advance them, and he had now a Piece of Service for them to do, which would enable him to do it; He told them they muſt go over into England, and be ſure to obey Sir George Barcley's Directions, and they were order'd to endeavour to find out Sir George Barcley when they came into England; and were told by him, that they would meet Sir George Barcley twice a Week in Covent-Garden Square, in the Evening, and the Token by which they ſhou'd know him, was, he would wear a white Handkerchief out of his Pocket; this they were told by the late King, when he ſent them upon this Errand. Colonel Parker was by at the ſame Time, and being there he was ordered to go to Mr. Carol Secretary to the late Queen, who had order to furniſh them with Money, to bear the Charges of their Journey into England, and if they were detained by contrary Winds, they had Letters of Recommendation to Monſieur Latour the French King's Preſident at Calais, to furniſh them with Money, to bear their Charges over into England, and accordingly they went; but being detained at Calais for want of Wind, they were furniſhed by the French Preſident; and by the Beginning of February, they came over.

But I omitted one Thing, Gentlemen: Before they came over, the late King when they were with him took a Liſt out of his Pocket of Names, and told theſe two, Harris and Hare, what Names they ſhould go by in England; Harris was to go by the Name of Jenkins, and Hare by the Name of Guiny, and accordingly they came over in a Boat, and landed in Kent, and when they came to Town they endeavour'd to find out Sir George Barcley: The firſt Time I think they did not find him; but the ſecond Time they did find him; and he ſaluted them, and told them he was glad to ſee them come over, and he would furniſh them with Money, and he ſent Major Holmes to them, and accordingly he did come, and give them Subſiſtence Money.

Now Gentlemen, you will hear that Sir George Barcley being come over with theſe Troopers and many others, to the Number of Sixteen, that at ſeveral Times were ſent upon this Conſpiracy, I ſay, after they were come, Sir George Barcley had frequent Meetings and Conſultations with ſeveral other Perſons that were to be engaged in the ſame Deſign; and they met at ſeveral Places, ſometimes at Captain Porter's, ſometimes at the Nag's-Head in Covent-Garden, at another Time at the Sun Tavern in the Strand; and you will find by the Evidence, that the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood, was preſent at moſt of thoſe Meetings, and there they did conſult of the beſt Ways and Methods for putting this Conſpiracy in Execution; ſometimes they thought of doing it by an Ambuſh, laid on the other Side of the Water, by Perſons on Foot, in a little Wood there near Richmond, where the King was to paſs by, whilſt others on Horſe-back were to take Notice of their Firing, and then to Attack the Guards. This was propoſed, but there was another Propoſal to do it on this ſide the Water; and therefore to ſettle the Matter, one of the Conſpirators, King, was ſent to view the Ground on the other Side of the Water, and he did glory that he had found a very proper Place, and thought it a very convenient Method, but yet they were not all ſatisfied, and at the Nagg's-head Tavern in Covent-Garden they did debate the Matter again, and it was reſolved to have the Ground viewed again, and Porter, and Knightley, and King that was executed went to view the Ground on both ſides the Water, to ſee which was the moſt convenient Place; this was about the 12th of February, they did take an Account of the moſt convenient Places on either Side, and when they had done it, they came back in the Evening to give an Account what they had done, to ſeveral others of the Conſpirators, who met for that Purpoſe, and I think the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood, was preſent there at this Meeting; and you will hear, the Place agreed upon was the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford, that they thought the moſt convenient Place becauſe there were ſeveral Inns in and about Turnham-Green and Brentford, where they might place their Men by two or three in an Inn, that they might not be liable to Obſervation: This was the Place that was approved of.

Then next, the Manner of doing it was to be conſidered and adjuſted, and that was thus: That the whole Number, ſhould be divided into three Parties, one Party to be commanded by Sir George Barcley to attack the Coach, and kill the King, and all that were in it, while at the ſame Time the two other Parties to be commanded by Captain Porter, and Mr. Rookwood the Priſoner at the Bar, were to ſet upon the Guards; and the Time agreed upon to put it in Execution was the Fifteenth of February on Saturday, that being the uſual Day the King went to Richmond a Hunting, and you'll find that on Saturday Morning they met in ſeveral Parties, not all together, but under the ſeveral Heads of the Parties in order to be ready, if the King had gone out that Morning, to have Aſſaſſinated him.

Gentlemen, I ſay, you will hear of ſeveral Meetings that Day; there was one Meeting at Mr. Charnock's, where were preſent Mr. Porter, Sir William Perkins, and ſeveral others; and another Meeting you will hear of where the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, at the Lodgings of one Counter, another of King James's Friends, that came over for this purpoſe, and there was Sir George Barcley, and there was the Priſoner at the Bar; and thoſe that were to be under Sir George's Command met that Saturday Morning in order to make ready, in Caſe the King had gone abroad, to have attack'd him: You will find by the Evidence that the Priſoner was there, and Harris, that was one of the Troopers ſent over from France, was ſent for, and came in and found them in a great Hurry, for Harris was not acquainted at St. Germains with the immediate Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, but finding them in a great Hurry, he ask'd them what was the Matter? And they told him they were to make ready immediately upon the Deſign. He wonder'd at it, and ask'd what it was, and then they told him they were to go to attack the Prince of Orange to aſſaſſinate him; and Rookwood the Priſoner at the Bar told him, if he would go to Counter, he ſhould have particular Orders and Inſtructions from him what to do. Accordingly Harris went to Counter, he told him where his Horſe, and Hare's Horſe, and Hungate's Horſe were; and there Horſes happen'd to be placed in Somerſet-Houſe, by Mr. Lewis, in a Stable there recommended by him, to the Care of my Lord Feverſham's Servants, who were to take Care of them, and of two or three more that were placed there, in all, ſix of theſe Conſpirators Horſes by the Recommendation of Mr. Lewis were lodged in that Stable in Somerſet-Houſe, and look'd after by my Lord Feverſham's Men; and thither Harris, Hare, and Hungate, were directed by Counter to go for their Horſes.

But it happen'd by very good Providence, that his Majeſty did not go abroad that Day; and Durance, one of the Orderly Men that lodged at Kenſington to give Intelligence, came from thence and acquainted them, that the King did not go out that Morning, ſo there was nothing more done; but Harris was told that he ſhould have his Horſe at that Time, and take it away, and in the mean Time till they were to go upon their Deſign, they were to ride out upon their Horſes, as they had Opportunity, to make them fit for Service, or elſe it would be thought the Rider's Fault, if, at the Time of the Attack, they did not come up in good Time and Order to join with the reſt, and it would be thought Want of Courage in the Rider; and accordingly Major Holmes, another of thoſe Conſpirators, went with Harris and Hare to Somerſet-Houſe to take away their Horſes, and they carried them to a Stable in Soho; but for ſeveral Nights they had been kept at Somerſet-Houſe.

You will find, Gentlemen, that Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, was concern'd in all theſe Conſultations and Meetings, in making Preparations for the Aſſaſſination; they intended, as I ſaid, to do it on the 15th of February; but that not taking Effect at that Day, between that and the Saturday following, Mr. Harris was frequently in the Company of Mr. Rookwood, and Mr. Lowick, and others, where they did diſcourſe of this Aſſaſſination, and they did think it a very barbarous Thing; but however they reſolved they would do it, for they had Orders to obey Sir George Barcley: And this was expreſly declared by Lowick and the Priſoner, that they had Directions to obey Sir George, and what he would have them to do they would do: They muſt and would obey Orders; that was their Reſolution even upon diſcourſing of the Heinouſneſs of ſo bloody and barbarous a Deſign.

You will likewiſe hear, Gentlemen, by the Evidence, that the next Saturday being the Two and Twentieth of February, they reſolved to put it in Execution again; and accordingly there was a Meeting on the Friday before at the Sun Tavern, where were preſent Sir G. Barcley, Mr. Porter, and others; and there they did reſolve upon it, tho' they had at firſt ſome Apprehenſion the Thing was diſcovered; but they were ſoon ſatisfied there was no ſuch Thing, becauſe they ſaid among themſelves, that if it had been ſo they ſhould have been taken up, and not have been permitted to meet there: Therefore they reſolved the next Day to put it in Execution, and accordingly they met at ſeveral Places, and got ready in the Morning in Caſe the King had gone abroad; the Priſoner met that Morning at Porter's Lodging, with ſeveral other Troopers, to make ready for the Enterprize, and there the Priſoner at the Bar did, at that Time, give a Liſt of the Names that he was to command, for he was to have one Party of thoſe that were to attack the Guards, of whom Harris was one, and Hare was another, and Richardſon was another, and Blackburne was another, and his own Name was Chief, and he ordered Harris to go and ſee to get them ready, for they muſt go out that Morning: Accordingly Harris did go, and got them ready, and came back and gave an Account of it. His Majeſty did not go abroad that Day, as it happened very fortunately by Reaſon of the happy Diſcovery; ſo that News being brought back again, though they had made all Things ready, thoſe Preparations were put off, and they did nothing that Day, and quickly after the Diſcovery was fully made, and made publick by the Apprehenſion of the Conſpirators.

Gentlemen, you will have this Matter fully proved to you by ſeveral Witneſſes, that I think there can be no Room to doubt the Truth of it, that there was ſuch a Conſpiracy, and that the Priſoner was as highly concerned in it, as thoſe who have ſuffer'd the juſt Puniſhment of the Law. We will call our Witneſſes to prove this, and I believe they will be able to give you an Account of the whole Affair, better and more fully than I can do, or can pretend to open it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Harris and Mr. Porter.

Sir B. Shower. We oppoſe the Swearing Mr. Porter: I muſt beg the Favour of the Court to hear us in it; if my Inſtructions be true, we inſiſt upon it, that he is not capable of being a Witneſs, he ſtands convicted of Felony: Here we have the Record, and we deſire it may be read.

Capt. Porter. I know nothing of the Matter, that there is any ſuch Thing ſtanding out againſt me.

Sir B. Shower. Then ſure we are miſtaken in the Man. Pray let us hear it read.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads the Record.) This is an Indictment of Murther againſt George Porter, for the Killing of Sir James Hacket, Knight.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know any Thing of this, Mr. Porter?

Capt. Porter. I came off with Manſlaughter, and pleaded the King's Pardon in Court.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, read what was done upon it.

Cl. of the Crown. Here's the Jury's Verdict. Quod prædictus Georgius Porter eſt culpabilis de felonica Interfectione prædicti Jacobi Hacket, & non culp. as to the Murder. Here is a Curia adviſare vult, and I ſuppoſe there was a Pardon afterwards.

Mr. Juſtice Powell. Was he not burnt in the Hand?

Capt. Porter. No, I pleaded the King's Pardon.

L. C. J. And there are ſeveral Acts of Pardon ſince.

Mr. Cowper. See the Time when the Indictment was.

Cl.

Cl. of Ar. It is the Eighth of December in the Thirty Sixth Year of King Charles the Second.

Sir B. Shower. We agree that he did plead the King's Pardon, and then the Caſe is no more than this, a Man is convicted of Manſlaughter, and the King pardons him, he ſtill remains unqualified to be a Witneſs; we ſay, this has been the Caſe that has been much debated in Weſtminſter-Hall, and upon Debate it has been reſolved.

Mr. J. Powell. It has been ſo, but always againſt you.

Sir B. Shower. It was in the Caſe of my Lord Caſtlemaine at this Bar; one of my Lords the Judges went to the Court of Common-Pleas to ask their Opinion, and theſe Caſes were put: In Caſe a Man be out-law'd of Felony and pardon'd; in Caſe a Man be convicted of Felony and had the Benefit of his Clergy; and in Caſe a Man was convicted and not attainted, but pardoned upon the ſecond Caſe; they were of Opinion, that the Receiving the Puniſhment of Burning in the Hand, had purged the very Guilt, and did ſet him upright by the Statute of the 15th of Queen Elizabeth, they thought it did operate to that Purpoſe; but in the Caſe of a Pardon of a Man attainted or convicted, it was agreed he was not qualified to be a Witneſs; and Dangerfield, againſt whom the Objection was made, being burnt in the Hand, was received to be a Witneſs; and it was only made uſe of againſt him to take off his Credit. The Record of that Caſe is in this Court, and I looked upon the Print of the Trial this Day. We ſay, that there is a Caſe in 1 Brownlow 47. a Man attainted of Felony cannot be of an Inqueſt, though pardon'd; and we think, he that cannot be a Juryman, ſure cannot be a Witneſs; there is the ſame Exception to his being a Witneſs as there is in the Caſe of a Juryman; for the one ought to appear as free, and ſtand as clear and unſuſpected, in Reſpect of his Probity and Verity as the other, as the one is ſworn to try and determine upon Oath, ſo the other is ſworn, and his Oath is to ſway and determine the Jury, and in Conſequence it is all one, and upon theſe Reaſons we hope he is not a good Witneſs.

L. C. J. Where is that Caſe in Brownlow?

Sir B. Shower. It is 1 Brownlow 47. and then there is 11 H. IV. 41. 2 Bulſt. 154. there my Lord Cook ſays, if a Man be convicted of Felony, and pardoned, he cannot be a Juryman; for though the Puniſhment is pardoned, the Guilt remains, ſo that he is not probus & legalis Homo, and every particular Perſon has an Intereſt in it, that they have free and clear Perſons to be Jurymen and Witneſſes.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, that is the Diſtinction we go upon, which was taken in Dangerfield's Caſe, upon the Trial of my Lord Caſtlemaine, where the whole Court were of Opinion, that a Pardon from the King only, would not make him a good Witneſs; but if he were burnt in the Hand, that by the Statute of decimo octavo Elizabethæ, amounted to a Statute Pardon, and ſet him right to all Intents and Purpoſes: And there they did take Notice of that Book that Sir Bartholomew Shower cited of 11 of Hen. IV. that a Man attainted could not be a Jury-man, though pardoned by the King: It was objected he might be a Witneſs; but Mr. Juſtice Jones ſaid, it was the ſame Reaſon if he be not fit for a Jury-man, he is not fit for a Witneſs; they ought to be both probi & legales Homines, thus the Caſe ſtood there. And that other Book of Bulſtrode is the ſame, it was in the Caſe of a Prohibition for a Modus Decimandi, where the Suggeſtion is to be prov'd by two Witneſſes, it was objected he had not prov'd it by two Witneſſes, becauſe they were both attainted of Felony, and though they were Pardoned, yet that did not make them good Witneſſes in the Opinion of the Court.

L. C. J. This is quite another Caſe, it does not come up to your Point, here is no Attainder, and here is Pardon upon Pardon, by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Phipps. As to that we think the Parliament Pardon is out of the Caſe; for if the Pardon from the King be a good Pardon, there is no Guilt for the Act of Pardon to work upon.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this we think to be a good Diſtinction as to that Matter, a Man that is actually pardon'd the Puniſhment by the King's Pardon, and afterwards an Act of Pardon comes and pardons all Offences, that we ſay does nothing, for he is not a Subject of Pardon, for he was diſcharged of his Puniſhment before.

Mr. At. Gen. Sure theſe Gentlemen are not in earneſt when they make this Objection.

Sir B. Shower. When the King has once pardon'd him he is not an Offender within the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, and therefore the Act works nothing as to him, and ſo he ſtands as much diſabled from being a Witneſs, as he was before.

Mr. J. Powell. In the Caſe of Cutington in Hobbard, there it is ſaid the Pardon takes away tam Reatum quam Pœnam, &c. an Action being brought for calling a Man Thief, who had been indicted for Felony, and convicted, and pardon'd, the Court adjudged, that he ought not to be called ſo; for he was no Thief, for the Pardon had waſhed him entirely clean, and he was diſcharged both of the Guilt and the Puniſhment, and all the Conſequences of it.

L. C. J. Thoſe Caſes that have been put are no Authorities at all in this Matter; for where there is a Conviction of Manſlaughter, and the Party is pardon'd, we think that Pardon of the King works in a Way of Diſcharge as much as the Burning in the Hand. I take it, it is the ſame Thing: They admit, that will diſcharge him to all Intents and Purpoſes, and ſo we think does this as effectually; for having his Clergy, and being burnt in the Hand, works by Way of Statute Pardon: For the Caſe of a Jury-man, I take it not to be the ſame with this Caſe; but even in that Caſe, I do not think that the Party convicted, after the King hath pardoned him, is diſabled from being of a Jury; but ſuppoſing that to be ſo, yet there are many Caſes wherein a Man may be a Witneſs, that cannot be a Jury-man. It is true, the Credit of ſuch a Witneſs is left to the Jury, but it is no Objection againſt his being a legal Witneſs; and it is a very ſtrange Argument to me, that becauſe he was pardoned by the King, if that ſhould be deficient, that therefore, the Act of Pardon ſhould have no Effect. Truly, that is to ſay, that the King's Pardon works ſo, as to have nothing left for the Parliament Pardon to work upon, and certainly it ſets him ſo right, that to all Intents and Purpoſes he is as good a Witneſs as ever he was; and if any Thing remained to be done, the Act of Parliament has done it, and ſupplied the Defect; but I think the King's Pardon is ſufficient.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I ſuppoſe they do not inſiſt upon it, as thinking there is any great Weight in it, but only for Objection ſake; but we hope that notwithſtanding this Objection Mr. Porter ſhall be ſworn.

in

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, they take this Exception at an improper Time, for they ſpeak to his Credibility.

L. C. J. No, they except to his being a Witneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If ſo, your Lordſhip remembers a Caſe that was before your Lordſhip not long ſince, but in Eaſter Term laſt, when one was try'd at this Bar for Treaſon, and Aaron Smith was produced as a Witneſs, and the Priſoner took Exception againſt him as no good Witneſs, becauſe he had ſtood in the Pillory, and your Lordſhip and the Court did ſay, that the Act of Pardon did reſtore him to all Intents and Purpoſes ad liberam Legem.

Mr. Conyers. In the Caſe of the Earl of Caſtlemaine, both the Courts of King's-Bench and Common-Pleas, held Dangerfield a legal Witneſs, tho' burnt in the Hand for Felony, and ſo was the Opinion of Rolls: In Stiles Reports 388, one that hath been burnt in the Hand for Felony, may notwithſtanding be a Witneſs.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in anſwer to that Caſe that was put, that after the King's Pardon for one convicted of Felony, another Man has not the Liberty to call him Thief, that was an Objection in my Lord Caſtlemaine's Caſe, that may ſtand as good, and our Notion that we contend for, be good too; he cannot be impeach'd, or have Guilt imputed to him, when once the King has forgiven him, and yet that may not reſtore him to his entire Credit, as was my Lord Chief Juſtice Scrogg's Diſtinction in the Caſe of Dangerfield; and as to the Caſe of Aaron Smith, that was very different: The Reaſon in that Caſe was, becauſe the Crime for which Mr. Smith was indicted, did not import any ſuch ſcandalous Offence for which his Credit could be impeached.

L. C. J. No, no, we did not meddle with that, we went upon the Pardon.

Sir B. Shower. But in that Caſe, they did not inſiſt upon it that he had a Pardon antecedent to the Act of Pardon, ſo that he was Subjectum capax, for the Act to work upon, he was an Offender that needed a Pardon, whereas Mr. Porter being pardon'd before, could not be an Offender needing a Pardon, and conſequently not within the firſt Words of the Act of Indemnity, becauſe he was pardon'd by the King before, but he was not by that Pardon, ſay we, reſtor'd to his Credit to make him a good Witneſs, and the Act of Parliament did not affect him, he being not ſubjectum Materiæ, as not being an Offender.

Mr. Phipps. As to Mr. Sollicitor's Caſe of Aaron Smith, we agree the Act of Parliament did reſtore him, becauſe he never was pardon'd before by the King, ſo there remained an Offence for the Parliament Pardon to work upon.

L. C. J. Do you agree that, then you may agree the other; for the Act of Parliament pardons none but thoſe that the King can pardon generally.

Mr. Phipps. It is true, my Lord; but we ſay that an Act of Parliament Pardon, removes thoſe Diſabilities which the King's Pardon does not, for every one is in Law a Party to an Act of Parliament, and therefore no Perſon ſhall be permitted to alledge in Diſability of another, any Crime which he himſelf hath pardon'd, for that is to aver againſt his own Act, but 'tis otherwiſe in the Caſe of the King's Pardon.

L. C. J. Why, the very Parliament Pardon comes from the King; the King has a full Power of Pardoning, and where he does pardon under the Great Seal, it has the full Effect of the Parliament Pardon. A Pardon before Attainder, prevents all Corruption of Blood, ſo that tho' a Man forfeits his Goods by Conviction, yet after a Pardon he is capable of having new Goods, and ſhall hold them without any Forfeiture whatſoever, for the Pardon reſtores him to his former Capacity, and prevents any further Forfeiture. Indeed if he had been attainted whereby his Blood was corrupted, no Pardon, whether it were by the King or by the Parliament, could purge his Blood without Reverſal of the Attainder, by Writ of Error, or Act of Parliament, or expreſs Words in the Act to reſtore Blood; but either Pardon makes him a new Creature, gives him new Capacity, and makes him to all Intents and Purpoſes, from the Time of the Pardon, to be probus & legalis Homo, and a good Witneſs. Indeed this Crime might be objected againſt his Credit, but it is not to be urged againſt the Sufficiency of his Evidence, that is, his being a Witneſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we deſire he may be ſworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, Mr. Porter, do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account, what you know of this intended Aſſaſſination, how it came to your Knowledge, and what Share the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, the firſt Account that I had of this Aſſaſſination, was from Mr. Charnock, who brought to me Sir George Barcley and Major Holmes to my Lodging in Norfolk-ſtreet, where I was ſick of the Gout. Sir George Barcley did not then particularly acquaint me with the Buſineſs, but ſaid, he would leave it to Mr. Charnock to tell me what it was.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barcley; and after that we had ſeveral Meetings, at which the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, where it was conſulted of the beſt Ways and Means to aſſaſſinate the King as he came from Richmond: Some were of Opinion that it was beſt to be done on the other Side of the Water; others were of Opinion that it ſhould be done on this Side, by a Party of Men on Horſeback: Upon this Difference of Opinion, there were Perſons appointed to go and view both Places; I was appointed for one to go with Captain Knightley, and Mr. King went along with me, and we did view the Ground on both Sides, and when we came back, we gave an Account to Sir George Barcley, and thoſe that ſent us, and upon our Report, Sir George Barcley's Mind was chang'd, who was for the other Side of the Water before. And he agreed to do it in the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford. Afterwards there was a Meeting at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, and there it was agreed that the King ſhould be attack'd on Saturday the 15th of February, by Sir George Barcley and his Party; and Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, was to command a Party of Men that came over from France, who were to aſſault the Guards on one Side, and I and Mr. Charnock were to ſet upon the Guards on the other Side. Sir George Barcley, with four Men out of each Party, was to attack the King in his Coach, and to kill him and all that were there in it.

L. C. J. Who were at that Meeting?

Capt. Porter. There were Sir George Barcley, Captain Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, My ſelf, Major Holmes, Captain Rookwood, and Captain King.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Capt. Porter. At the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, upon Saturday Morning the 15th, we having two orderly Men that lay at Kenſington to give Intelligence, had Notice brought us firſt that the King would go out; Durance, who was one of them, uſed to go every Morning to Court to get us what Intelligence he could, and Sir George Barcley told me upon the Friday, that he ſhould give me an Account as ſoon as ever he could the next Morning; and the next Morning at my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet in St. James's, he came to me, and told me, the Advance Guards were gone out, and the King's Kitchen was gone, and all was preparing for the King's going abroad, and there went a great many Noblemen and Gentlemen a Horſe-back with him, and therefore he thought there would be no Opportunity of effecting the Thing; ſaid I, that's no Objection at all, nor any Reaſon for putting it off, becauſe when the Sport is over, all the Company goes away, and the King comes only in his Coach with the Guards; he ſaid, he would give Sir George Barcley an Account of it, and he came back with Sir George Barcley and Mr. Rookwood to my Lodging, and upon repeating that Objection, and my giving the ſame Anſwer, it was agreed if the King had gone out that Day to have put the Deſign in Execution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar there at that Time when that was agreed upon?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Where do you ſay was that Meeting?

Capt. Porter. At my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet.

L. C. J. Had you that Diſcourſe with Sir George Barcley, in the Preſence of the Priſoner?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir George ſaid, he doubted we could not do it, becauſe there would go ſo many with the King; but I objected againſt that, that after the Sport was over, all the Company went away, and the King came back in his Coach; then it was agreed to go on, there was Sir George Barcley, Durance, and the Priſoner at the Bar and my ſelf, in the Room.

L. C. J. This you ſay was Saturday the 15th, in the Morning.

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot ſay I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar at any Meeting after that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Method you were to take in putting this Deſign in Execution.

Capt. Porter. There were to be ſo many Horſemen armed and prepared for the Purpoſe. Sir George Barcley told me, we ſhould be about 40 or 45 Horſe-men, and they were to be divided into two Parties, and Sir George Barcley was to have four Men out of each Party, and his Buſineſs was to attack the King, and all that were with him in the Coach. Captain Rookwood was to command thoſe that were come out of France to ſerve under Sir George Barcley, and Captain Charnock and I were to command the other Party, and both Parties were to ſet upon the Guards at the ſame Time that Sir George Barcley attack'd the King's Coach.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Priſoner will ask him any Queſtions, let him.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Captain Porter, when was that firſt Meeting at the Globe-Tavern?

Capt. Porter. It was one Day in the Week before the 15th.

Sir B. Shower. Was Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, there that Day?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was.

Sir B. Shower. How long before the 15th?

Capt. Porter. One Day that Week, but I cannot tell what Day.

Sir B. Shower. He ſays it was agreed ſo, and ſo I deſire to know what Words Mr. Rookwood uttered at that Time.

Capt. Porter. It was diſcourſed by every one round, which was the beſt Way and Method. I heard Mr. Rookwood ſay, indeed, he believed it a very deſperate Thing, and he was not very willing to engage in it; but when Sir George Barcley told him he ſhould command his Party, he replied in French———

Mr. Sol. Gen. What's the Meaning of that?

Capt. Porter. There's an End of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay the Priſoner was at your Lodging Saturday the 15th, in the Morning, What Diſcourſe had you there?

Capt. Porter. He was there upon Saturday in the Morning, the 15th of February, and Durance brought an Account that the King's firſt Guards were gone, and the King's Kitchen was gone before, and it was expected that the King would go about Eleven a Clock, but it was ſaid, that there were a great many were preparing to go with him, and therefore it would not be convenient to do it that Day; ſaid I, that is no Objection at all, for the Nobility and Gentry go out of the Field as ſoon as the Sport is over, and the King uſed to go with a few People to Mr.——— Houſe at Richmond, and therefore it might be as well done at that Time, as any Time: Durance made that Objection at firſt himſelf, and when I made him that Anſwer, he went to Sir George Barcley, and he came back with Sir George Barcley, and the Priſoner was there by at the ſame Time, and Sir George Barcley made the ſame Objection; it was at my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet, and when I told them my Reaſon againſt the Objection, as I had done before, they all agreed to do it that Day.

Mr. Phipps. At that ſecond Meeting, did Mr. Rookwood make any Propoſal there?

Capt. Porter. I only ſay he came with Sir George Barcley, and what I heard, I tell you Sir George Barcley made that Objection, and I gave it that Anſwer.

Mr. Phipps. But what did he ſay?

Capt. Porter. I cannot ſay that I heard Mr. Rookwood ſay any Thing in particular, but they all agreed to do the Thing that Day.

Sir B. Shower. You remember nothing that he ſaid?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barcley ſaid, we will go and prepare, and he went away with him.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, when did Sir George Barcley come into England?

Capt. Porter. Truly, Sir, I don't know that; the firſt Time that I ſaw him after he came,

Mr.

Mr. Charnock brought him to my Lodging in Norfolk-ſtreet, but before that, Mr. Charnock told me, he was come into England.

L. C. J. Hark you, Mr. Porter, when you came back from Viewing the Ground before the firſt Saturday, and you ſaid you made your Report, and then it was agreed that it ſhould be done at ſuch a Place; Do you ſay the Priſoner was there?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, he does not ſay ſo. Do you ſay Mr. Rookwood was there at that Time?

Capt. Porter. No, my Lord, I don't ſay ſo.

Sir B. Shower. I am ſure he did not ſay ſo before; and beſides, your Lordſhip will obſerve there is no ſuch Overt Act as that laid in the Indictment againſt the Priſoner, that Mr. Porter made his Report upon the View, that only concerns Mr. Knightley.

L. C. J. No, that is not an Overt Act, I agree it; but I only ask the Queſtion, whether the Priſoner was there.

L. C. J. Trely. If it were an Overt Act laid in the Indictment, it would not affect the Priſoner, becauſe the Viewing of the Ground, and making the Report, is Captain Porter's Act, and it muſt be the Conſulting and Debating afterwards that muſt affect the Priſoner, if he be concern'd.

Mr. Conyers. The Meetings and Conſultations that are laid in the Indictment are the Overt Acts.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Well, if they have done with Captain Porter, we deſire Mr. George Harris may be ſworn.

Sir. B. Shower. My Lord, we beg Leave to oppoſe Mr. Harris's being ſworn; here was a Proclamation that did take Notice of this barbarous Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate the King, and the Proclamation did ſignify, That the King had received Information of ſeveral Perſons concerned in that Conſpiracy; and for the Encouragement of taking thoſe ſo accuſed, he did promiſe a Thouſand Pounds Reward for the taking of any of the Conſpirators; and in the Concluſion of the Proclamation there is a Clauſe, That if any of the Conſpirators ſhould diſcover or apprehend any of the other Perſons that were therein named, ſo as that they ſhould be brought to condign Puniſhment, ſuch Conſpirator ſo diſcovering ſhould receive a Thouſand Pounds Reward for any of the other Perſons apprehended, and his own Pardon. My Lord, we have a Witneſs here ready to prove that this was Mr. Harris's Caſe; he was himſelf in the Proclamation, he did actually diſcover Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner at the Bar, and was inſtrumental in the taking of him; and conſequently upon this Clauſe of the Proclamation, if he be brought to Juſtice, then is Mr. Harris intitled to this Reward and his Pardon; and conſequently he has ſuch an Intereſt and Advantage to himſelf as will prevent his being a Witneſs. It is true, indeed, where it is at the King's Suit, in a capital Caſe, it is pretty hard to ſay that a Man has an Intereſt; but we think, as this Caſe is circumſtantiated upon this Proclamation, that the ſame Objection lies againſt him as would do if this were a civil Cauſe; if we ſhew how he is to have an Advantage by the Event of this Cauſe, then he is not to be admitted a Witneſs.

L. C. J. Did he apprehend any Body upon the Proclamation?

Sir B. Shower. Yes, he apprehended Mr. Rookwood himſelf, or was the Cauſe of it, and thereby is intitled to the Reward and his Pardon.

Mr. Phipps. That upon which we ground our Objection is the different Penning of the Proclamation; for if any one that is not a Conſpirator do but diſcover and apprehend any of the Perſons named in the Proclamation, he is entitled to the Thouſand Pounds; but the Conſpirators themſelves muſt go further; for a bare Diſcovery and Apprehending any of their Accomplices will not entitle them to the Reward mentioned in the Proclamation, but they muſt diſcover and apprehend their Accomplices ſo as they be brought to Juſtice before they can be entitled to the Reward: And to be brought to Juſtice for any Crime, is in common Underſtanding to be brought to ſuch Puniſhment as the Law inflicts for the Offence. Now Mr. Harris's Caſe is this, he diſcovered Mr. Rookwood, and went with the Guards to the Compter and ſeiz'd him: And if Mr. Rookwood ben't convicted, Mr. Harris is not to have any Thing for his Pains; but if he be convicted, Mr. Harris is entitled to the Thouſand Pounds and his Pardon. And therefore ſurely Mr. Harris cannot be admitted an Evidence againſt Mr. Rookwood, ſince he is to receive ſo great a Benefit by his Conviction. Upon an Indictment for an uſurious Contract, the Perſon whoſe Deed it is cannot be a Witneſs, becauſe 'tis to avoid his own Act: So in an Indictment for Perjury, on the Stat. 5. Eliz. the Party injured by the Perjury cannot be a Witneſs, becauſe he is to have half the Forfeitures.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſuppoſe they will make out their Objection before they expect an Anſwer from us.

Sir B. Shower. I hope your Lordſhip will not put us to prove a Copy of the Proclamation from the Inrolment, but that we may have the ſame Favour as in the Caſe of the Statute-Book, that the Print of it may be allow'd for Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will not ſtand with them for that, we know they are miſtaken throughout, we conſent the Proclamation ſhould be read.

Cl. of Arr. Reads,

By the King a Proclamation.

William R.

WHereas His Majeſty has received Information upon Oath, that the Perſons herein after named, have with divers other wicked and traiterous Perſons entered into a horrid and deteſtable Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate and murder His Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, for which Cauſe ſeveral Warrants for High Treaſon have been iſſued out againſt them, but they have withdrawn themſelves from their uſual Places of Abode, and are fled from Juſtice: His Majeſty has therefore thought fit by the Advice of his Privy Council to iſſue his Royal Proclamation, and His Majeſty does hereby command and require all His loving Subjects to diſcover, take, and apprehend James Duke of Berwick, Sir George Barcley, Major Lowick, George Porter, Capt. Stow, Capt. Walbank, Capt. James Courtney, Lieutenant Sherborne, Brice, Blair, ——Dinant,——— Chambers, —— Boiſe, George Higgins, and his two Brothers, Sons to Sir Thomas Higgins, —— Davis Cardell, —— Goodman, —— Cramburne, —— Keyes, Pendergroſs, alias Prendergraſs, ———Bryerly, ——Trevor, Sir George Maxwell, ———Durance, a Fleming, Chriſtopher Knightley, Lieutenant King. ——— Holmes, Sir William Parkyns, —— Rookwood, wherever they may be found, and to carry them before the next Juſtice of Peace or chief Magiſtrate, who is hereby required to commit them to the next Gaol, there to remain until they be thence delivered by

by due Courſe of Law. And His Majeſty doth hereby require the ſaid Juſtice, or other Magiſtrate, immediately to give Notice thereof to Him or His Privy Council. And for the Prevention of the going of the ſaid Perſons, or of any other, into Ireland, or other Parts beyond the Seas, His Majeſty does require and command all His Officers of the Cuſtoms, and other His Officers and Subjects of and in the reſpective Courts and Maritime Towns and Places within His Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, that they and every of them in their reſpective Stations and Places, be careful and diligent in the Examination of all Perſons who ſhall paſs or endeavour to paſs beyond the Seas, and that they do not permit any Perſon whatſoever to go into Ireland, or other Places beyond the Seas, without a Paſs under His Majeſty's Royal Sign Manual until further Order. And if they ſhall diſcover the ſaid Perſons above-named or any of them, then to cauſe them to be apprehended and ſecured, and to give Notice as aforeſaid. And His Majeſty does hereby Publiſh and Declare to all Perſons who ſhall conceal the Perſons above-named, or any of them, or be aiding and aſſiſting in the Concealing of them, or furthering their Eſcape, That they ſhall be proceeded againſt, for ſuch their Offence, with the utmoſt Severity, according to Law. And for the Encouragement of all Perſons to be Diligent and Careful in endeavouring to Diſcover and Apprehend the ſaid Perſons, We do hereby further Declare, That whoſoever ſhall diſcover and Apprehend the Perſons above-named, or any of them, and ſhall bring them before ſome Juſtice of Peace, or chief Magiſtrate, as aforeſaid, ſhall have and receive as a Reward, the Sum of One Thouſand Pound; which ſaid Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, the Lords Commiſſioners of His Majeſty's Treaſury are hereby Required and Directed to pay accordingly. And if any of the Perſons above-named ſhall Diſcover and Apprehend any of their Accomplices, ſo as they may be brought to Juſtice, His Majeſty does hereby Declare, That every Perſon making ſuch Diſcovery, ſhall have His Majeſty's Gracious Pardon for his Offence, and ſhall receive the Reward of One Thouſand Pound, to be pay'd in ſuch manner as aforeſaid.

Given at our Court at Kenſington, the 23d Day of February, 1695-6, in the Eighth Year of our Reign.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, The different Penning of the Clauſes is not only in that Proclamation, but it is the Language of every Proclamation that has gone out for the Apprehending any of the Conſpirators.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, All that we ſay in Anſwer to this Objection, is, That Mr. Harris is not nam'd in that Proclamation.

L. C. J. What ſay you to that Sir Bartholomew Shower? He is not named in the Proclamation: And ſo if he hath diſcovered and apprehended the Priſoner, he has earn'd his Money, whether he be Convicted or not, becauſe Rookwood's Name is in the Proclamation, tho' his is not.

Mr. Phipps. Then, my Lord, with humble Submiſſion, here is another Proclamation wherein he is nam'd, we deſire that may be read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And when it is read, it will be as little to your Purpoſe as the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let them read what they pleaſe, we need ſay nothing at all to it.

L. C. J. Certainly upon this Proclamation, there's no Objection; for he is intitled to his One Thouſand Pound already, tho' Rookwood be never convicted.

Mr. Phipps. But is he not by this Proclamation which mentions his Accomplices, intitled to his Pardon? If ſo, he ſwears to ſecure himſelf.

L. C. J. By the Apprehending and Diſcovering, he's intitled to his Pardon.

Mr. Phipps. But not without he be brought to Juſtice; that is to ſay, till he be convicted; therefore he cannot be an Evidence to convict him.

L. C. J. That is, as to any that are there named, if any of them diſcover and apprehend one another, it muſt be ſo as that they be brought to Juſtice; But if any Perſon that is not named there does apprehend any that is, he is intitled to the One Thouſand Pound, barely by the Apprehenſion.

Mr. Phipps. Then there is another Proclamation where they are both named, as Mr. Rookwood tells me.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, We will ſet this Matter right; we will ſhow the other Proclamation, in which, if I am rightly inform'd, for I have not read it, Mr. Harris is nam'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you have not read it, I would adviſe you not to trouble the Court with it; for you will find the latter Part is reſtrain'd to three or four particular Perſons, of which he is none.

Rookwood. I am named in the Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but read the latter Part of it, and you will find you are not nam'd in the Clauſe that they referr'd to: You need not read the former Part of the Proclamation, we agree the Priſoner is named there; but only look towards the bottom, which is the Clauſe that they refer to.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads) And we do hereby further declare, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. They have not conſidered the Proclamation, and therefore make an Objection of they don't know what.

Sir B. Shower. We are in your Lordſhip's Judgment.

L. C. J. For what? See if you can make or ſtate a Caſe for our Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Rookwood is mention'd in the firſt Proclamation, and Harris is not, but there are the Word Accomplices: He is likewiſe mentioned in the laſt Proclamation, but not in the laſt Clauſe of it. I confeſs, if he had, it had been plain it would have taken off his Teſtimony, but now we muſt ſubmit it to you, whether he is not an intereſted Perſon, and conſequently no good Witneſs.

L. C. J. Truly I do not ſee any Colour for the Objection. Is he not as well intituled to his One Thouſand Pound, tho' Mr. Rookwood had never been try'd, by the bare Apprehending of Mr. Rookwood, as if he was convicted?

Sir B. Shower. No, my Lord; becauſe the Words are ſo as he may be brought to Juſtice.

L. C. J. That is not ſo, as to any Perſon that apprehends one mentioned in the Proclamation, if the Perſon that apprehends be not mention'd in it, and named himſelf; if any one that is not mention'd apprehend one that is mention'd, he is intituled, by the Apprehenſion, to the One thouſand Pound. If any one that is mention'd apprehend another, then he is to bring him to Juſtice; now Mr. Harris is not named in this Proclamation, and ſo as to the One thouſand Pound, he ſtands in the ſame Condition as any other Perſon ſon that diſcovered or apprehended one of the Perſons there nam'd.

Sir B. Shower. But it ſeems he was one of the Conſpirators, becauſe he is himſelf deſcribed in another Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. If it were ſo, it would not be material, nor any Manner of Objection; but as they have made their Objection upon theſe Proclamations, we think there is nothing for us to give an Anſwer to.

Mr. Cowper. Nay, my Lord, if it were ſo, will Sir Bartholomew Shower ſay his Client is not brought to Juſtice, unleſs he be convicted? I am ſure the Words Convicted or Attainted, are not in the Proclamation.

L. C. J. There is nothing in it; you muſt ſwear Mr. Harris. (Which was done accordingly.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life, from the firſt Time you were acquainted with it, and what Hand the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of the whole Thing, your Coming over, and who ſent you, and upon what Errand, and the whole that you know of this Conſpiracy.

Capt. Harris. Upon the 14th of January laſt, the French Stile, New Stile, I was at St. Germains, where I was ſent for by King James, and was ordered to wait his Dinner till it was over, and accordingly I did wait till his Dinner was over, and then I came in, and Col. Parker was with him, and one Mr. Hare, who is alſo mentioned in the Proclamation, was there alſo: The King told me he was ſenſible I had ſerved him well, and now he had an Opportunity of doing ſomething for me; he told me he would ſend me into England, where I ſhould be ſubſiſted, and I was to follow the Orders of Sir George Barcley, and accordingly he order'd me ten Lewidores to be paid by Mr. Caroll, who is Secretary to the late Queen, and Col. Parker went along with me, and Mr. Hare, to Caroll, and told him he came from the King, and we had the Lewidores, and we went to Calais, in Order to our coming over hither: But we were told if we were wind-bound, that the Money we received would not bear our Charges; there was Orders given for our further Subſiſtance at Calais, to the Preſident there. Accordingly we came to Calais, and the Wind did not ſerve us for eight or nine Days; and while I ſtay'd there, the Money that I ſpent at Calais was paid by the Preſident of Calais, Monſieur Latour. Afterwards I landed in England, near Romney Marſh, as I was told, and I came to the Houſe of one Hunt, and he provided me and my Comrade with a couple of Horſes; and coming from thence, I came in the firſt Place to one Tucker's an Apothecary in Sandway, and next from thence we came to Rocheſter, to Charles Crofts's, and from thence in a Coach to Graveſend, and from thence by Water to London: That Night we lay in Grace-Church ſtreet at an Inn, it being Night, the Night-Tide, and ſomething late. The next Day I came to a Lodging at an Acquaintance's of my Comrade's, Mr. Hare, at the Unicorn in Brownlow-ſtreet, one Mr. Wateman's. The next Night I went to look for Sir George Barcley, whom the King told me I ſhould certainly find by ſuch a Sign of a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, on Mondays and Thurſdays, in Covent-Garden, where his Walk was to be in the Evening, becauſe he was not to appear in the Day-Time openly. It happen'd that upon Monday Night after I came to Town, I went there, and did not find Sir George Barcley according to the King's Direction, which I admired at; but there was one Mr. Berkenhead, who told my Comrade, a Day or two after, That Sir George Barcley would needs ſpeak with me, and accordingly I met with him; and he asked me how the King, Queen, Prince, and Princeſs did, and I told him they were very well; I told him I was appointed to attend him, and obey his Orders. He told me he had no Money at preſent, but in two or three Days he would ſend ſome; and ſo he did, by Major Holmes. I had five Shillings a Day for Subſiſtance, and I had no Horſe; and when I had a Horſe, it was ſix Shillings a Day; after which rate I had Subſiſtance for a Month at five Shillings a Day, Guineas going then at Thirty Shillings. Major Holmes paid me the Money by Sir George Barcley's Order, as he told me, and he afterwards gave me a Guinea, and that was the firſt Saturday when the Aſſaſſination was deſign'd; for that we told him we wanted Money, and it was not reaſonable we ſhould take our Horſes out of the Stable before we paid for them: And I met Sir George Barcley ſeveral Times at Covent-Garden, and he told me it was a ſuſpicious Place, and deſired me not to come any more there; but when he had any particular Orders to give me, he would give me Notice of it where I ſhou'd meet him; and accordingly I did meet him ſeveral Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, Sir, will you tell what you know as to the Priſoner at the Bar.

Capt. Harris. As to Mr. Rookwood, the Saturday that the Aſſaſſination was deſign'd to be, the firſt Time that I knew of it, I met Mr. Rookwood, at one Mr. Burck's Lodging, where he was up, and I ſaw him in a great Hurry and ſome Conſternation, and in came M. Bernarde; I ask'd him the Meaning of it, and what they were going about; and Mr. Rookwood told me, if I wou'd go down to Captain Counter I ſhou'd know; accordingly I went, and to the beſt of my Remembrance, he gave me a little Note to Captain Counter, but that I am not poſitive in. I went to Captain Counter, and as ſoon as ever I came, he told us, We muſt be immediately ready to go to Turnham-Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was that?

Capt. Harris. At the Woolpack, that was the Sign ——— as near as I remember. Mr. Hare and I were ordered together to come there, and there was Mr. Hungate, who had been there ſome Time, and when I came in, Sir George Barcley did declare Laughing, Theſe 'are my Janiſaries: And he talk'd ſomething of bringing the Garter, and of attacking the Coach; but he went out of the Room, and afterwards he came in and declared, We were all Men of Honour, and that the Buſineſs we were going about, was to attack the Prince of Orange; but Durant came in after that, and ſaid, The Prince of Orange did not go out that Day. When he talk'd of attacking the Prince of Orange, I was very much ſtartled, not knowing any Thing of it before; and I came the next Morning to Mr. Rookwood, and ask'd him if we were to be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange, ſays Mr. Rookwood to me, I am afraid we are drawn into ſome ſuch Buſineſs; but if I had known it before I came over, I ſhould have begg'd the King's Pardon at St. Germains, and not have come over hither:

ther; and ſaid I, This is very fine, we have ſerv'd to a very good Purpoſe, to be ſent over upon ſuch an Errand and Account. After this Mr. Rookwood, and Mr. Lowick, and I, had a Meeting at Red-Lyon-Fields, where we did diſcourſe about the Matter. I did often declare againſt it, That it was ſo barbarous a Thing, that no Man of Honour almoſt would be guilty of it; but Major Lowick anſwered, That we were to obey Orders, for ſure Sir George Barcley wou'd not undertake a Thing of that Nature without Orders.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what ſaid Mr. Rookwood?

Capt. Harris. He own'd it was a barbarous Thing; but he was ſent over to obey Sir George Barcley's Orders, which he had ſeveral Times declared he was reſolved to do; upon that we parted: ſo afterwards I came to Mr. Rookwood's Lodging; it was the Saturday Morning I came to him, and ſo went to Sir George Barcley's; while he was there, Mr. Rookwood gave me a Note, naming ſo many Names, particularly Mr. Hungate, Mr. Hanford, Mr. Hare, and his own Name at Top, not the Name that he is arraigned by here; but a ſham Name that he had, as the reſt of us all had ſham Names, which at that Time we went by.

L. C. J. What was your Name?

Capt. Harris. My Name is Jenkins.

L. C. J. Who gave you that Name?

Capt. Harris. King James at St. Germains, and he gave Mr. Hare the Name of Guiney, and Mr. Rookwood's Name was Roberts. King James told us in his Bed chamber, We were to go by thoſe Names.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir, what did Rookwood ſay to you, when he gave you that Liſt?

Capt. Harris. He told me, he was to go to Turnham Green, and I was to go along with him, and ſays he to me ſmiling, You ſhall be my Aid de Camp; and get the Reſt of the Gentlemen ready, and accordingly I went to look for ſeveral of the Perſons —— particularly for Mr. Blackburne: When I came back again, I found him lying on his Bed, and that Sir George Barcley had told him the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day, and from thence we went to Dinner, where Major Lowick din'd with us, and Mr. Bernarde and Major Lowick ſeeing me in a Heat, ask'd me, Why I was in ſuch a Sweat? I told him I were getting thoſe Men ready for Mr. Rookwood, who had made me his Aid de Camp: Says Major Lowick to me, You may very well do it, for you have Six Shillings a Day allow'd you, and I have nothing; I bring two Men at my own Charge. Said I, Major Lowick, I wonder you don't apply your ſelf to Sir George Barcley, and then I believe, you may be ſubſiſted too. He anſwer'd me, He did not think it worth the while to trouble him, ſince he had never ſpoke to him of it before: and Rookwood, and Bernarde, and Lowick, and my ſelf, ſeveral Times met in Red-Lyon-Fields, and talk'd of attacking the Prince of Orange.

Mr. At. Gen. Who did?

Capt. Harris. Rookwood, Bernarde, Lowick, and my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir, let me ask you one Queſtion. Where was your Horſe at firſt?

Capt. Harris. At firſt it was at my Lord Feverſham's Stables, as they told me, in Somerſet-Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Where were the other Perſons Horſes?

Capt. Harris. There was Mr. Hungate's and Mr. Hare's Horſes in the ſame Place, at the ſame Time, as they told me.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you by your Horſe there?

Capt. Harris. Maj Holmes did deliver my Horſe, and committed it to my Care, and I carry'd it thence to another Place.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve there was any more Horſes there?

Capt. Harris. I believe there was Five or Six, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know where Rookwood was to have his Horſe?

Capt. Harris. He had a Horſe; but whence he had it I don't know.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you any Arms delivered you?

Capt. Harris. Yes, I had by Capt. Counter.

Mr. Conyers. Were you at no other Place together that Saturday Night, the 22*d* of February, becauſe you ſay you din'd together.

Capt. Harris. Yes, we were at the Bear Tavern.

Mr. Conyers. What Diſcourſe paſs'd between you there?

Capt. Harris. They were talking about the Aſſaſſination; but what any particular Perſon ſaid, I cannot tell.

Mr. Conyers. Pray who were there?

Capt. Harris. There was Mr. Knightley, Captain Rookwood, and Mr. King; and Knightley went out, and came in again, and declared, we muſt have a great deal of Cure of our ſelves, or we ſhould be taken up: and he whiſper'd at firſt, and afterwards I ask'd him what it was; and he told me, and ſaid, We muſt have a Care of our ſelves. Says Mr. King, ſtaring this Way with his Eyes, Surely God Almighty is on our Side; and ſo we parted.

L. C. J. When was this?

Capt. Harris. This was the Night of Saturday the 22d, when it was diſcover'd; for ſome of them were taken up the next Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Rookwood there at that Time at the Bear Tavern?

Capt. Harris. I cannot poſitively ſay whether he was or not.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you there?

Capt. Harris. We talk'd of Aſſaſſinating the King; but what it was in particular, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was Rookwood there?

Capt. Harris. Yes, I believe he was; but I cannot poſitively ſay.

L. C. J. You ſay it was the laſt Saturday that the King was to go abroad, that you apprehended you were diſcovered.

Capt. Harris. Yes, we apprehended we were diſcovered before that; for Mr. Lowick told me, that three or four Days before, in that Week, that his Name, and one Harriſon's, were given into the Council, and another, and another, Two or Three of them, as he told me; I think Three or Four; and upon that Account Major Lowick, went from his Lodging, and did not lie at his Lodging the Night before; and I came to Major Lowick, and he told me the ſame Thing at the King's-Arms Tavern.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember what Diſcourſe you had that Saturday Night?

Mr. Cowper. You ſay that on Saturday the 22d, Mr. Rookwood gave you the Liſt.

Capt. Harris. I do not ſay it was the 22d, for I cannot ſwear to the Day of the Month; but it was the ſecond Saturday that we were to have gone about this Buſineſs.

Mr. Cowper. You ſay he gave you a Liſt of Names: Pray, when he gave you that Liſt, what Diſcourſe happened in the Room, juſt before, or after the giving of the Liſt?

Capt. Harris. Sir, I think I told the Court that before.

Mr. Cowper. Sir, I deſire you would repeat it.

Capt. Harris. My Lord, I humbly deſire to know whether I am to anſwer that Gentleman that Queſtion?

L. C. J. Yes, you are to anſwer, being upon your Oath, and to tell the whole Truth.

Mr. Cowper. I asked him the Queſtion ſo fairly, what Diſcourſe introduced the giving of the Liſt, and what followed upon it, that I perceive this Gentleman does not know which Side I am of.

Capt. Harris. Mr. Rookwood ſaid we were to go to Turnham-Green; and he told me, that I was to be one of his Party, that we were to attack the Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. You ſay you were to be one of his Party; pray was it there that he told you, you ſhould be his Aid de Camp?

Capt. Harris. Yes, he did tell me I was to be his Aid de Camp.

Mr. Phipps. Whoſe Hand-writing was that Liſt?

Capt. Harris. I cannot tell, I had it from that Gentleman.

Mr. Phipps. But whoſe Writing was it?

Capt. Harris. Indeed I know not his Hand-writing, and therefore cannot tell whoſe it was: He is for his Life, but I believe he cannot deny any Thing that I have ſaid, I ſuppoſe not: I ſhould be very ſorry to accuſe Mr. Rookwood of any Thing that was not true.

Mr. Phipps. Pray whoſe Names were in that Liſt?

Capt. Harris. I have mention'd Mr. Hare, Mr. Hanford, Mr. Blackburne, my ſelf, and you Mr. Rookwood, had your own Name at Top.

Rookwood. What is that Blackburne?

Capt. Harris. He is a Lancaſhire Man.

Rookwood. It's a very ſtrange Thing I ſhould give you a Liſt with a Man's Name that I don't know, I declare it, I know no ſuch Perſon.

Capt. Harris. Mr. Rookwood, I believe you are very ſenſible I do not accuſe you of any Thing that is not true.

Mr. Phipps. When did you ſee that Liſt laſt?

Capt. Harris. He gave it into my Hands, and had it from me again, or I threw it away afterwards.

Rookwood. But you that were to be an Evidence ought to have kept it to juſtify your Evidence.

Capt. Harris. Truly I did not intend to have been an Evidence at that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they will ask him any Queſtions, let them.

Sir B. Shower. No, indeed, I will ask him no Queſtions.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have another Piece of Evidence which we would offer to your Lordſhip, which is not direct Evidence againſt the Priſoner, but only to prove a Circumſtance or two of what has already been ſworn: We do acknowledge, my Lord, it does not affect Mr. Rookwood, but only to ſtrengthen and confirm what they have ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. With Submiſſion we hope it will not be Evidence fit to be given as to the Priſoner at all; for becauſe a Man may ſwear true in the particular Circumſtance of a Thing, that therefore he ſwears true what he ſwears againſt the Priſoner, I think is no Conſequence in the World.

L. C. J. It is a Thing diſtinct and foreign to the Matter, as to Mr. Rookwood.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not ſay it directly affects Mr. Rookwood; but when your Lordſhip has heard it, we ſhall ſubmit it to you, how far it confirms even the Evidence given againſt him.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, we ſay the Priſoner was to have his Horſe from Somerſet-Houſe; and that there were Horſes plac'd there for that Purpoſe we are going to prove.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is one entire Conſpiracy, in which every one had his Part; one was to have his Horſes and his Party in one Place, and another in another: Now that there were at ſuch Time ſuch Horſes at Somerſet-Houſe, and thoſe Horſes were delivered out from Somerſet-Houſe, is certainly a Confirmation of the Truth of what the Witneſſes have ſaid.

L. C. J. It is ſo. If that be it you offer, it is very material.

Mr. Conyers. We ſhall prove, That upon the Diſappointment on the firſt Saturday, the 15th of February, they were to be ready againſt the 22d; and you will hear how the Horſes were diſpos'd of in the mean Time. Call Chamberlain, Maskel, and Allen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call any one of them, I believe it is enough.

Mr. Chamberlain appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord, and the Jury an Account what you know of any Horſes that were brought to Somerſet-Houſe about February laſt, and how long they ſtay'd there?

Chamberlain. There was ſix Horſes.

Mr. At. Gen. Who brought them in.

Chamberlain. They were ſent in by ſome Perſons in Mr. Lewis's Name.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you any Direction to take Care of them?

Chamb. Mr. Lewis ſent in a Note to take Care of them for a Night or two.

Mr. At. Gen. Who carried them away?

Chamb. I cannot tell: Some People came to ſee 'em that I never ſaw before, and they took care of them; I know not who they were, and I never ſaw them ſince.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time was it that they came for them?

Chamb. It was about the middle of the Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Month was it in?

Chamb. I think it was much about the latter End of February, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was it before the Plot was diſcover'd.

Chamb. It was about a Week, or a ſmall Matter, before the Plot was diſcover'd, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. At. Gen. How long ſtaid the Horſes there at Somerſet-Houſe?

Chamb. Three of them ſtaid a Night or two; but the other three of them about a Matter of a Week or ten Days.

Mr. At. Gen. Who own'd thoſe Horſes?

Chamberlain. They were ſent in, in Mr. Lewis's Name; but who own'd them I cannot tell indeed.

Mr. Conyers. Then ſwear John Allen. (Who was ſworn.)

Pray tell my Lords and the Jury, what you know concerning any Horſes about the Time of the Breaking out of the Plot.

Mr. At. Gen. We mean in Somerſet-Houſe Stable.

Allen. There was ſeven Horſes came in.

Mr. Conyers. Who brought them?

Allen. There was Six in the firſt Place; one came in afterwards in the Evening.

Mr. Conyers. By whoſe Order were they brought there?

Allen. By Mr. Lewis's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they ſtay there?

Allen. Some of them ſtaid there ſeveral Days; Three of them went away the next Day; as I think.

Mr. Conyers. Do you remember about what time thoſe Horſes were brought thither?

Allen. They were brought there, I believe, about ſeven or eight Days before the Plot broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We only call theſe Witneſſes to confirm the Teſtimony of the others, that there were ſuch Horſes there at that time, and for the preſent we reſt it here.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, what ſay you to it for the Priſoner?

Sir B. Shower. If your Lodſhip pleaſe, we are of Council for the Priſoner; and that which we are to inſiſt upon is this, which we ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment. In the firſt place, whether here be two Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner to prove this Treaſon according to the Statute of Edw. 6. which requires two Witneſſes in High-Treaſon, and lawful Ones; but that in the firſt Place we ſay there are not two Witneſſes at all, at leaſt not to any Overt-Act that is laid in this Indictment. As to what Captain Porter ſays of what paſs'd between him and Durance, the Dialogue between them where Rookwood was preſent, we are in your Lordſhip's Direction; and we doubt not but the Jury will take it into their Conſideration, how far that affects the Priſoner; that he ſhall not be concern'd in any Tranſaction between Mr. Porter and any other Perſons; none of their Declarations, none of their treaſonable Practices, can be imputed to or affect him in any way whatſoever. Now all that Captain Porter ſays of Mr. Rookwood, is, that he was once at the Globe Tavern, and there was a Diſcourſe about this Matter; and then he tells your Lordſhip of a Dialogue between him and Durance, and an Account of what paſs'd between them; but he does not ſay any Thing of Mr. Rookwood being any Ways concern'd in the Matter, but only that he dropped this Expreſſion, It was a deſperate Adventure, a dangerous Enterprize, and he ſeemed againſt it, but in the End he concluded with ſomething in French, which what they are, and what they mean, we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip and the Jury; he interprets it, when Sir George Barcley ſaid he muſt have a Share in it, then Rookwood replied, There's an End of it. But there is not one Word of Agreement ſworn to, that Mr. Rookwood ſpoke to ſhew his Conſent. There is but one Time more that Mr. Porter ſwears to, about the Priſoner at the Bar, and that is, at his Lodgings in Little Rider-ſtreet; for as to the other Conſults, Mr. Rookwood was not preſent there: It ſeems there was a Diſcourſe about the Affair, but that Rookwood ſaid nothing, but went away; there was not ſo much as the leaſt Intimation of an Agreement to any ſuch Deſign, or Approbation of what was agitated in the Company, and we inſiſt upon it as to this in Point of Law, that it amounts to no more than Miſpriſion of Treaſon at moſt. My Lord, I will not now contend about Notions, nor will I argue whether Conſulting and Agreeing be Evidence of an Overt-Act; I ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Directions, notwithſtanding the Variety and Difference of Opinions that have been.

L. C. J. Sir Bartholomew Shower, I know not what Variety of Opinions you mean; there have been ſome Diſcourſes in Pamphlets I agree, but it was always taken and held for Law, that Conſulting and Agreeing was an Overt-Act.

Sir B. Shower. Here is no Evidence of any Agreement.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear what you ſay to that.

Sir B. Shower. It is not the being preſent where Traytors do conſult and conſpire the Death of the King, unleſs they actually agree; nor is it Evidence ſufficient to guide or prevail upon a Jury's Conſcience, to affirm upon their Oaths, that ſuch a one is guilty of High-Treaſon, becauſe ſuch a one was there and ſaid nothing at all; for the not diſcovering afterwards, nor accuſing is no Evidence at all againſt Mr. Rookwood. As to Mr. Harris, he gives you an Account of a great deal that does not affect Mr. Rookwood, neither all that paſt at St. Germains, nor in their Journey into England, for all that may be true, and yet the Priſoner no way concern'd in it. As to what he affirms of the Priſoner, we ſhall ſubmit it to your Conſideration: What it amounts to, and all that his Depoſition comes up to, is, That Mr. Rookwood complain'd that he was to obey implicitly Sir George Barcley's Orders; and Harris gives an Account but of one particular Time that Mr. Rookwood undertook or did agree to be concern'd in this Matter; it was but once, and that was, when he gave him the Note of thoſe that were to go to Turnham-Green, and that he was to be his Aid de Camp: And as to that, we ſhall give you an Account by Witneſſes whom we ſhall call, that theſe two Witneſſes ought not to be believed as to what they have ſworn, tho' they do not come up to make two Witneſſes according to Law upon this Indictment: What they have ſaid as to this Man is not credible, tho' they may ſpeak true as to others; and no Doubt there was a barbarous Conſpiracy; it appears there was ſuch, beyond all Exception and Contradiction; and the Perſons that have been condemn'd as Conſpirators have acknowledg'd it: But, my Lord, that which is now before your Lordſhip and the Jury, is, to enquire whether the Priſoner is concern'd in this Affair at all, and how far; and we hope the Jury will be of Opinion he is not concern'd. The Heinouſneſs of the Crime, and the Aggravations of it, being to be abhorred by all Mankind, we think ought not to ſway with the Jury, nor Influence their Judgments to believe a Witneſs ever the ſooner in accuſing any other Perſon; it ought rather to have a contrary Allay; for the greater the Crime is, and the farther off from having any tolerable Opinion in the World, they ought to expect

expect the greater Proof; and no one is to be preſum'd guilty of ſuch an Act, without very ſufficient Evidence of it; and the greater the Crime, the Proof ought to be the more poſitive and undeniable: It is not their being plainly poſitive that is ſufficient, but whether it is ſuch that is good in Law, and about that we are ſure your Lordſhip will give true Directions in point of Law: and whether the Witneſſes be credible or no, muſt be ſubmitted and left to the Jury, after we have call'd ſome Witneſſes, who will give you an Account of their Reputation.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we humbly inſiſt there are not two Witneſſes, ſuch as the Law requires, to prove the Charge upon this Indictment againſt the Priſoner: The two Overt-Acts that touch Mr. Rookwood, are firſt Conſulting and Agreeing how to kill the King; the other is the finding Arms and Horſes for that purpoſe: But as to this latter, the finding Arms and Horſes, there is not one Evidence that comes up to it: And as to the former, the Conſultations, whether there be ſufficient Evidence that comes up to that, is very much a Queſtion with us: But we ſay, with Submiſſion, there are not two Witneſſes in that Caſe; for Mr. Porter ſays only what he was told by Sir George Barcley, that Sir George propoſed this Matter; but withal he tells you, that when Sir George Barcley propoſed it, and Mr. Rookwood was inform'd what the Deſign was, he was ſo far from Conſpiring, Conſulting, or Agreeing to do it, that he ſaid it was a barbarous Act, and he recoil'd at it. Then at laſt ſays Sir George Barcley, You muſt command a Party.

L. C. J. Well, and what ſaid Rookwood then?

Mr. Phipps. Porter ſays, he then ſaid, There's an End of it. Now, my Lord, what Evidence is this of a Conſultation and Agreement? And this is all that Porter ſays. As to what Mr. Harris ſays, we are to conſider whether the Liſt given to him be an Overt-Act; and there the Point in Queſtion is, Whether that Liſt can be given in Evidence againſt Mr. Rookwood, upon this late Act of Parliament, as an Overt-Act, it not being laid in the Indictment? There is indeed an Overt-Act of a Liſt laid in the Indictment, as given to Cranburne, but none as given to Mr. Rookwood.

L. C. J. Pray take the Evidence right: Firſt, What will you make an Overt-Act? What do you think when there is a Debate among divers Perſons about killing the King?

Sir B. Shower. With Submiſſion that will be no Overt-Act, if there be a Debate of ſuch a Matter, tho' he be preſent.

L. C. J. Aye; but when there is a Conſult, and upon Debate a Reſolution is formed, and tho' he does at firſt diſlike it, yet when he is told he muſt command a Party, he ſays he is content, or there's an End of it; What do you make of that?

Sir B. Shower. He ſaid he did not like it, it was a barbarous deſperate Deſign.

L. C. J. It's true, but when Sir George Barcley ſaid he ſhou'd command a Party, he acquieſced, and ſaid there was an End of it: There was a Diſcourſe about Cutting off the King, and that was agreed upon in the Company at that Time; and tho' at firſt he did not like it, yet he might afterwards agree to it.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, that is it which we deny; we ſay there is no Proof of his Agreement to it.

L. C. J. Capt. Porter ſays, he did declare that he ſaid he look'd upon it as a deſperate Deſign, and was averſe from being engaged in it, but afterwards did agree to it; Whether is not that ſuch an Overt-Act, as is laid in the Indictment?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, We muſt beg Leave for the Priſoner in a Caſe of this Nature, that it may be recollected what the Evidence did ſay. Mr. Porter did not take upon him to affirm that Mr. Rookwood conſented to it, but only ſaid, There was an End of it. Now we muſt leave that to the Jury, what they can make of ſuch a doubtful Expreſſion.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Porter in again.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, the firſt Meeting Mr. Porter ſpeaks of, where the Priſoner Mr. Rookwood was, is at the Globe-Tavern, where this Diſcourſe was; the next Meeting that he ſpeaks of, was on the Friday Night, before the firſt Saturday when the Buſineſs was to be done, and afterwards he met at Porter's Lodgings, on Saturday Morning, in Rider-ſtreet.

Then Capt. Porter came in again.

L. C. J. Hark ye, Mr. Porter, the firſt Time that this Matter was propoſed, when Mr. Rookwood was preſent, you ſay was at the Globe Tavern.

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. And you ſay he diſlik'd it, and did not care to be concern'd in it.

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, he did ſo.

L. C. J. Well, What ſaid Sir George Barcley?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barcley ſaid he ought to obey his Orders, for he had ſuch a Commiſſion for ſuch a Thing, and he drew out a Scheme how it was to be done; and when Sir George Barcley told Mr. Rookwood he ſhou'd command his Party, he replied in French,

There's an End of it.

L. C. J. This was at the Globe-Tavern, Was it not?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray then, Capt. Porter, let me ask you another Queſtion, Was he afterwards with you at any other Meeting, and when and where?

Capt. Porter. He was with me upon Saturday the 15th, at my Lodging in Little Rider-ſtreet, where was Sir George Barcley and others.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe happen'd then, I pray?

Capt. Porter. They did there diſcourſe the whole Matter, and Sir George Barcley was not for going at that Time, becauſe there was ſo many People that went with the King; that there wou'd not be a good Opportunity to effect the Deſign: But I told him they would go off after the Hunting was over, and ſo it was agreed upon to go on with the Undertaking.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, at that Time did Mr. Rookwood pretend to diſlike the Affair, or refuſe to be any Way at all concern'd it?

Capt. Porter. No, my Lord, I can't remember that he ſpoke one Word.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Rookwood there?

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was Mr. Rookwood, Sir George Barcley, and Mr. Durance.

Mr. At. Gen. And had you Diſcourſe at that Time about this Buſineſs?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, there was that Objection made of ſo many People going with the King, and I made that Anſwer that I tell you.

L. C. J. Why then, ſuppoſe at the Globe Tavern, ſuch an Expreſſion had not dropt from the Priſoner, but a Man is preſent at two Conſults that are held about the Death of the King, but ſays nothing either at the firſt or ſecond, What wou'd you make of that Caſe?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I confeſs this is a Caſe of a very barbarous Nature, of which I hope my Client will acquit himſelf: But I think we have the Authority of Parliament on our Side, that this does not amount to a Proof of Treaſon. It ſeems they lay a Streſs upon this, that Mr. Rookwood came to Captain Porter's Lodgings on the Saturday Morning the 15th: But then take the Caſe as it is; for ought that does appear upon the Proof, he knows not, upon what Account the Meeting is, beforehand. I think that is the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, upon which the Reverſal of his Attainder went, that the Evidence came ſhort, and that it was but Miſpriſion; for the Evidence was, That he was preſent at the ſuppoſed Declaration's reading, but ſaid nothing at all to it.

L. C. J. But I ſpeak of two Meetings; there was but one.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I do not know whether there were two Meetings or one then: But this is the Ground we go upon, there ought to be two Witneſſes: And if there be two Meetings upon ſuch a Deſign, the ſecond may be is accidental, and it does not appear to be a deſign'd Meeting; and there was no Appointment of Mr. Rookwood to be there, nor any Negotiation by way of Meſſage or otherwiſe, to that Purpoſe. Is this, my Lord, an Overt-Act? Suppoſe a Man be preſent at a Conſult about treaſonable Practices, and he uſes Words that are indifferent; it is true, in the Caſe of a Wager it amounts to an Aſſent, but it hardly will come to that when People meet by Accident, or for they don't know what.

L. C. J. How is this by Accident?

Sir B. Shower. It does not appear that it was by Deſign or Appointment.

L. C. J. They were Acquaintance.

Sir B. Shower. He had no Acquaintance with him but in Sir George Barcley's Company.

L. C. J. But beſides, there was an expreſs Conſent at the Globe Tavern, when Rookwood ſaid, There is an End of it.

Sir B. Shower. That is as much as to ſay, I will not do it, I will not go with you——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir G. Barcley was the Perſon whom they were to obey; and Harris tells you he told them what they were to do, and ſix Horſes were firſt plac'd, and three of them afterwards remov'd.

Sir B. Shower. That won't affect him what Sir George Barcley ſaid, any more than Lewis's appointing of the Horſes.

L. C. J. Then here is another Thing, Why did he give a Liſt to Mr. Harris? the Liſt that was given had Mr. Rookwood's Name at Top, as he was to command the Party, and there was Harris's Name and Hare's Name as of his Party; that is, their feign'd Names: M. Roodwook's feigned Name was Roberts that was at Top, and they were to go to Turnham-Green, and Rookwood told Harris, he ſhould be his Aid de Camp.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, for that I think we have a Point of Law, that we apprehend will turn off all that Evidence, and ſure we may take that Exception now: The Words of the Act are, That no Evidence ſhall be given of any Overt-Act that is not expreſly laid in the Indictment. Now cannot I ſhew upon this Indictment, that there is no Overt-Act in ſuch a poſitive direct Manner as they now urge about this Liſt? Will not that ſatisfy your Lordſhip's Judgment to ſet aſide all this Evidence? To make the Indictment good for Treaſon, there ought to be a Compaſſing of the Death of the King laid, and an Overt-Act laid declaring that Compaſſing; but no Evidence is to be given of any Overt-Act that is not laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You are not to take Exceptions to the Indictment now, but only to the Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. I have this one Exception more; there is never a Quodque, nor a Juratores ulterius præſentant.

L. C. J. There does not need; but that is a Fault, if any, in the Indictment, and is not to be ſtirr'd now.

Sir B. Shower. If there be not a Preſentment by the Jury, then there is no Overt-Act alledged: And if there be no Overt-Act alledged, or no ſuch Overt-Act, then we are within the Words of the Act, That no Evidence ſhall be given of any ſuch Overt-Act but what is alledg'd; and it is, if not expreſsly alledg'd, as if it were not alledg'd at all: Now here it is very looſe, &c. iidem Chriſtophorus Knightley, and ſo it goes on with the reſt, did ſo and ſo. There is a Preſentment at firſt, that they did compaſs and imagine the Death of the King; and then the Indictment comes farther, and ſays, that Forty Men ſhould do this Buſineſs, and of thoſe Forty theſe four ſhould be ſome; and then the iidem bought Horſes and Arms, and ſo it muſt go to the laſt Antecedent, and then there is no expreſs alledging of any Overt-Act, and then it is as if no Overt-Act at all was alledg'd.

L. C. J. This Exception is not to the Evidence, but to the Indictment: It begins, Juratores preſentant quod; Does not that relate to all?

Sir B. Shower. No, my Lord; and I can tell you a Reaſon why not: If it be not ſo well alledg'd as it ſhould be, it is in an Indictment as if it were never alledg'd at all; and ſo within the Words of the Act of Parliament this is not an Overt-Act alledg'd, and therefore they cannot give Evidence upon it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I can't imagine what they are doing, they are moving in Arreſt of Judgment before a Verdict given: They ſay the Overt-Act is not expreſly laid; Is that an Exception to the Evidence, or to the Indictment?

Sir B. Shower. If my Lord will pleaſe to give us the Liberty, we would ſhew there can be no Verdict given upon this Indictment.

L. C. J. Certainly this is an irregular Proceeding; this is not a Time of Exception to the Judgment.

Mr. Phipps. Then, my Lord, we are in your Judgment, as to the Proof that has been given: If a Man be preſent at a Meeting of ſeveral Perſons, and there is a treaſonable Debate about killing the King, and this Man is only preſent, but neither aſſents, nor makes the Propoſal how it ſhall be done, whether the bare being ſilent, and ſaying nothing, is ſuch an Overt-Act as ſhall convict a Man of Treaſon.

L. C. J. I tell you, Conſenting to a traiterous Deſign is an Overt-Act of High Treaſon, if that Conſent be made to appear by good Proof: Now the the Queſtion is, What is a good Proof and Evidence of this Conſent? A Man is two or three Times at a treaſonable Conſult for killing the King, and though perhaps at the firſt he did not, yet at the ſecond he did know that the Meeting was for ſuch a Deſign, (ſuppoſe for the Purpoſe there was but two Meetings) and at the ſecond it is determined to go on with the Deſign; Is not that an Overt-Act, tho' it cannot be proved that the Priſoner ſaid any Thing?

Mr. Phipps. If the firſt Meeting is not a Conſent, or an Overt-Act, neither will a ſecond or a third be, if there was no more done than at the firſt, but they are like ſo many Cyphers without a Figure.

L. C. J. The firſt Meeting poſſibly might be accidental, he might not know what it was for, though that will go a great Way if he does not diſſent or diſcover; but when he meets again with the ſame Company, knowing what they had in Deſign; Does not that prove a Conſent? That was the Caſe of Sir Everard Digby in the Powder Plot.

Mr. Phipps. But where it may be uncertain, my Lord, whether it were with a good Deſign, or a bad Deſign, that he met with that Company, it ought to be taken moſt favourably for the Priſoner: This Man might be preſent in Order to a Diſcovery.

L. C. J. But beſides, that is not this Caſe; you are mooting upon Points that are not in the Caſe. When Mr. Harris came to Mr. Rookwood, and finding them in ſome Diſorder, and being inquiſitive what was the Occaſion, he was ſent to Counter; and when he diſcovered what they were to go about, he afterwards meeting Mr. Rookwood, ſays to him, Are we ſent over to murder the Prince of Orange? ſays Rookwood, if I had known of this Deſign before I came from France, I would have begged the King's, that is, King James's Pardon, and deſir'd to have been excuſed. Hereby he expreſſes his Knowledge of the Deſign, and what he was to do; and though he diſliked, yet would obey Orders.

Mr. Phipps. There is no Doubt, my Lord, but he knew of it; but whether your Lordſhip will conſtrue his Silence as a Conſent, in Treaſon, is the Queſtion.

L. C. J. A Man is at frequent Conſults about Killing the King, and does not reveal it, it is a great Evidence of his Conſent.

Mr. Phipps. But it is not prov'd that he did actually conſent to it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether this is not totally improper and irregular at this Time; they are arguing how far the Evidence is to be believ'd, before the Time proper for ſuch an Argument comes.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they will call their Witneſſes, let them; or if they ſay they have none, then they may make their Obſervations upon the Evidence; but elſe we deſire we may be kept to the uſual Method of Proceedings.

Mr. Phipps. With Submiſſion, we thought it fit to know the Opinion of the Court firſt, if there be two Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner; for if there be not two Witneſſes, as the Law requires, we need not trouble the Court with our Evidence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then, my Lord, we muſt deſire that the Record may be read of Captain Porter's Conviction of Manſlaughter; a Man that has been guilty of doing ſuch an Act, felonioufly, maliciouſly, and voluntarily, as that is, ſure is not a competent Witneſs.

Cl. of Ar. It has been read already.

Mr. Att. Gen. I thought we had been over that Objection before.

Sir B. Shower. We think it is proper for us to move it now again; for though it is no Objection to his being a legal Witneſs, yet we hope it will influence his Reputation as to his Credit; for he that has been guilty of killing a Man in ſuch a Manner as the Indictment lays it, will find but little Credit, we hope, with a Jury of Countrymen. But ſince it has been read, and your Lordſhip and the Jury have taken Notice of it, we will call ſome other Witneſſes as to Mr. Porter's Reputation and Behaviour, we think they will prove Things as bad as an Attainder. I ſhall not open them to your Lordſhip, but beg Leave to call our Witneſſes, who will acquaint you what they have to ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, you will not think fit to let them do ſo. I deſire they would not uſher in any Thing of Evidence without acquainting the Court what they call them for: For that were the Way to let them in to call Witneſſes to Things that are not proper.

L. C. J. Nay, without doubt it is not regular to produce any Evidence, without opening it.

Mr. Att. Gen. For if it be for any Crime that a Man may be preſented for, and there is no Conviction; I think that ought not to be given in Evidence to take away a Witneſs's Credit: If it be only to his general Reputation and Behaviour, ſo far they may go, and we can't oppoſe it. Therefore I deſire Sir Bartholomew Shower will open to the Court of what Nature his Evidence is.

Sir B. Shower. Well, I will tell you then what I call them to.

L. C. J. You muſt tell us what you call them to.

Sir B. Shower. Why then, my Lord, if Robbing upon the Highway, if Clipping, if Converſing with Clippers, if Fornication, if Buggery, if any of theſe Irregularities, will take off the Credit of a Man, I have Inſtructions in my Brief, of Evidence of Crimes of this Nature, and to this Purpoſe againſt Mr. Porter; and we hope that by Law, a Priſoner ſtanding for his Life is at Liberty to give an Account of the Actions and Behaviour of the Witneſſes againſt him. I know the Objection that Mr. Attorney makes, a Witneſs does not come prepar'd to vindicate and give an Account of every Action of his Life, and it is not commonly allowed to give Evidence of particular Actions; but if thoſe Actions be repeated, and a Man lives in the Practice of them, and this Practice is continued for ſeveral Years, and this be made out by Evidence; we hope no Jury that have any Conſcience, will upon their Oaths give any Credit to the Evidence of a Perſon againſt whom ſuch a Teſtimony is given.

Mr. Phipps. We are ſpeaking only, my Lord, to the Credit of Mr Porter, and if we can ſhew by Evidence that he is ſo ill a Man as to be guilty of thoſe Crimes that we have open'd, according to the Inſtructions in our Brief; we hope the Jury will not think him fit to be a good Evidence againſt us in this Matter.

L. C. J. What ſay you to this Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they themſelves know, that this Sort of Evidence never was admitted in any Caſe, nor can be, for it muſt tend to the Overthrow of all Juſtice and legal Proceedings; for inſtead of trying the Priſoner at the Bar, they would try Mr. Porter. It has been always deny'd where it comes to a particular Crime that a Man may be proſecuted for, and this it ſeems is not one Crime or two, but ſo many and ſo long continued, as they ſay, and ſo often practis'd, that here are the whole Actions of a Man's Life to be ript up, which they can never ſhew any Precedent when it was permitted, becauſe a Man has no Opportunity to defend himſelf. Any Man in the World may by this Means be wounded in his Reputation, and Crimes laid to his Charge that he never thought of, and he can have no Opportunity of giving an Anſwer to it, becauſe he never imagined there would be any ſuch Objection: It is killing a Man in his good Name by a Side-wound, againſt which he has no Protection or Defence. My Lord, this muſt tend to the preventing all Manner of Juſtice; it is againſt all common Senſe or Reaſon, and it never was offered at by any Lawyer before, as I believe, at leaſtwiſe never ſo openly; and therefore I wonder that theſe Gentlemen ſhould do it, who acknowledge, at leaſt one of them did, that as often as it has been offer'd it has been over-rul'd; and I know not for what End it is now offer'd, but to make a Noiſe in the Court: They know that it is irregular as much as any thing that could be offer'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Indeed, my Lord, if the Priſoner at the Bar had offer'd this Matter, it had been excuſable; but, that Gentlemen of the long Robe, and who are ſo well acquainted with the Practice of the Courts of Law, ſhould pretend to do ſuch a Thing, is unaccountable. There was ſomewhat like this that was offer'd at Mancheſter, but that was by the Priſoner, to prove that one Lunt who was a Witneſs had two Wives, and they brought a Copy of an Indictment upon which there was no Proceſs; after that they endeavour'd to prove him guilty of ſeveral Robberies; but all that Sort of Evidence was refus'd. I only give them this Inſtance to ſhew, that where the Priſoner has attempted it, it has been always rejected; and I am ſure they cannot ſhew me that ever it was allowed, even to the Priſoner himſelf, to give any Thing of this Kind in Evidence; and this I muſt ſay, they can never ſhew me any one particular Inſtance, when Council ever endeavoured to do it, before this Time.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I mentioned the particular Crimes, the Faults which I had in my Inſtructions to object againſt the Credit of the Teſtimony of Capt. Porter, in Anſwer to Mr. Attorney's Deſire, that I would open the Particulars of the Evidence, that I would call my Witneſſes to the Truth of it; I was loth to repeat the Words, I think the Things themſelves ſo abominable; but we conceive with Submiſſion, we may be admitted in this Caſe to offer what we have offered. Suppoſe a Man be a common, lewd, diſorderly Fellow, one that frequently ſwears to Falſhood for his Life: We know it is a common Rule in Point of Evidence, that againſt a Witneſs you ſhall only give an Account of his Character at large, of his general Converſation; but that general Converſation ariſes from particular Actions, and if the Witneſſes give you an Account of ſuch diſorderly Actions repeated, we hope that will go to his Diſcredit, which is that we now are labouring for, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Opinion whether we may not do it.

L. C. J. Look ye, you may bring Witneſſes to give an Account of the general Tenour of his Converſation, but you don't think ſure that we will try now at this Time, whether he be guilty of Robbery or Buggery.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we will give you an Account that he uſed to have a private Lodging, and come in with his Horſe tir'd, and ſeveral other ſuch Things, as that he us'd to go out in Diſguiſes, and the like.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I cannot imagine why a Man that has been guilty of any ſuch Crimes, and is not taken, ſhould be of greater Credit than a Man that has been taken and puniſh'd.

L. C. J. What is that you ſay Mr. Phipps?

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I ſay 'tis the Crime that renders a Man infamous, and I do not know why a Man that has had the good Fortune not to be taken and puniſhed for great Crimes by him committed, ſhould be in a better Condition as to the Credit of his Teſtimony, than one that is taken and undergoes the Puniſhment of the Law.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Charnock urg'd that as far as it would go, but we are oblig'd, it ſeems, to hear Things that have been over-ruled over and over; but I deſire to know of them, whether they can ſhew he has been guilty of a greater Crime than he has confeſt himſelf guilty of in Court, I mean of the intended Aſſaſſination.

Mr. Phipps. No, we agree we can't; but pray let us prove him guilty of as many Crimes as we can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, I hope you'll keep them to the general Queſtion of the common ordinary Tenour of his Converſation.

Sir B. Shower. Call Mr. Oldfield, Mr. Nicholas, Mr. Milford, Black Will.

(Mr. Milford appeared.)

Cryer. Lay your Hand on the Book. The Evidence that you ſhall give on behalf of the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

Sir B. Shower. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you know Captain Porter, and how long you have known him.

Milford. I have known him about Four Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Reputation is he of?

Milford. I never knew any Hurt by him in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Pray what is your Name?

Milford. Frederick Milford.

Sir B. Shower. But the Name in my Brief is John Milford, that is my Man.

L. C. J. But you ſee this Man knows him.

Sir B. Shower. Call Mr. Oldfield.

(Which was done, and he appear'd accordingly.)

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Captain Porter?

Oldfield. Yes I do.

Mr. Phipps. How long have you known him?

Oldfield. I believe about Twenty Years.

Mr. Phipps. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of his Life and Converſation.

Oldfield. I can ſay nothing, he was always civil in my Company, but he was lewd in his Diſcourſe.

Sir B. Shower. What do you mean by being lewd in his Diſcourſe?

Oldfield. Why he would be talking very extravagantly.

Mr. Phipps. What do you mean in talking, was it of what he had done himſelf, Sir?

Oldfield. No otherwiſe than that he had whor'd, and thoſe kind of Things.

Sir B. Shower. What other Things beſide Whoring?

Oldfield. I know no other Part of it.

Sir B. Shower. Where is Edward Bowchey?

(He did not appear.)

Mr. Phipps. Call William O Bryan.

(He did not appear.)

Sir B. Shower. Where is Mr. Page, and Mr. Hardiman.

(None of them appeared.)

Cryer. There is not a Man of them here, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Webber, Do you know where they are, for the Court ſtays for them.

Mr. Webber. Indeed I do not, they were ſummon'd to be here.

Sir B. Shower. Where is black Will?

Cryer. Black Will.

(He appear'd, and was a Moor.)

L. C. J. Ask him if he be a Chriſtian.

Cryer. I have ask'd him, and he ſays he is a Chriſtian.

(Then he was ſworn.)

L. C. J. Well, What do you ask him?

Rookwood. Will, Pray give an Account of your Maſter, and of his Life and Converſation.

Mr. Phipps. You are ſworn to tell the Truth, Sweet-heart.

Will. I ſerved him almoſt Eight Years, and he has been a very good Maſter to me, my Lord.

Sir B. Shower. What do you know him to be guilty of?

Will. Nothing at all.

Sir B. Shower. I believe they have put in theſe Men to confirm his Reputation.

L. C. J. Indeed, I think the King's Council ſhould have called theſe Witneſſes, if there had been Occaſion.

Sir B. Shower. We ſubmit it to your Direction, how far this Evidence will affect him; there is nothing ſaid, as we apprehend that will amount to Treaſon: If the Priſoner has a Mind to ſay any Thing himſelf, we hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to hear him.

L. C. J. Ay, if he will, let him.

Rookwood. My Lord, Mr. Porter does not ſay, that I conſented to command a Party.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to ſay? Then, Gentlemen, will you ſum up?

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, we are agreed, we ſubmit to the Court on both Sides.

L. C. J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood is Indicted for High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing, Imagining, and Intending the Death and Deſtruction of the King, by a moſt barbarous and wicked Aſſaſſination; you have had an Account of this Deſign from Two Witneſſes that have been produced, the One is Captain Porter, and the Other is Mr. Harris, who ſwear they were both concerned as Actors in it.

Captain Porter tells you, about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February laſt, Sir George Barcley came over into England from France; and there was a formed Deſign to murder the King; and after ſeveral Meetings and Conferences among the Conſpirators, they came to a Reſolution that he ſhould be aſſaſſinated; but which way to effect it, admitted of a Diſpute among them; for the King, as you have heard, going frequently, about once a Week a Hunting, on the other ſide the Water near Richmond, the Deſign was firſt to aſſaſſinate him at Richmond Park, or thereabouts, as he returned from Hunting, and Preparation was made accordingly; but that not being ſo fully agreed upon, the Conveniency of the Place held ſtill ſome Debate; for ſome were of Opinion, that it was better to make the Attempt on this ſide the Water, than on the other; therefore as Mr. Porter tells you, to determine that Difficulty, there were ſeveral Men ſent, whereof he was one, Knightley another, and King a Third, to view the Ground on both ſides the Water, and to make their Report; the Ground being view'd and the Report made to ſome of their Accomplices, who to receive it met at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, which was about the Tenth or Twelfth of February laſt; it was then agreed, that the King and his Guards ſhould be attack'd on this ſide the Water about Turnham-Green.

Mr. Porter has told you, that at ſeveral Meetings for the carrying on this Deſign, the Priſoner Mr. Rookwood was preſent, more particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, where were alſo Sir George Barcley, Mr. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, himſelf, and others, and there they did enter into a Conſult how they might aſſaſſinate the King; and it being propoſed, Mr. Rookwood did not like it, as Mr. Porter ſays, but ſaid it was a deſperate Attempt, and thereupon Sir George Barcley pulled out a Scheme that he had, and ſhew'd it at that Time to Mr. Rookwood, and ſaid you are ſent over from France, and are to obey my Orders, and you are to command a Party; and then Mr. Rookwood made an Anſwer in French, there's an End of it, which, as he ſays, imports a Conſent.

Then at another Time, which was the Saturday Morning the 15th of February, they met at Captain Porter's Lodging, and there was a Diſcourſe about going on to put the Deſign in Execution; and one Durant, one of the Men that was to watch the King and the Guards going out at Kenſington, came in, and the Queſtion was, whether they ſhould go that Day upon the Deſign; they had Diſcourſe about it, and Mr. Rookwood the Priſoner was there preſent, and there did not appear any Diſſent in him to the Proſecution of the Deſign, but it ſeems it was readily agreed among them, to purſue it according to the former Determination.

Then the next Witneſs that is produc'd is Mr. Harris, who gives you a large Account of the Beginning of his Knowledge, and of his being concern'd in this Matter; he tells you he was in France, and at the Court of St. Germains, where the late King then was, and that he ſpoke with him, and where was alſo Colonel Parker, and King James took Notice of him and of his faithful Service, and told him, he always deſigned him a Kindneſs, and then had Opportunity of doing it, and ſaid he would ſend him over into England, where he ſhould be ſubſiſted, and directed him to obey the Orders of Sir George Barcley; and there being one Hare by, who was to come come over with him, King James gave them both Names of Diſguiſe, which they were to go by in England, and, as it ſeems, others that came over did alſo aſſume; for Mr. Rookwood went by the Name of Roberts, Harris was to go by the Name of Jenkins, and Hare by the Name of Guiney; they were directed to apply themſelves to Sir George Barcley, and had Directions how they ſhould find him, which were to go into Covent-Garden in the Evening, upon a Monday or a Thurſday; and if they ſaw a Perſon that had a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, they were to take Notice of him to be Sir George Barcley, and they had Ten Lewis d'Ores a-piece for their Journey's to carry them off; and you have heard from whom they had them; and they were told, that if at Calais they were kept longer than they expected, whereby their Money was ſpent, Care was taken that they ſhould be ſupplied from the Governor of Calais, the Preſident there; and it ſeems Mr. Harris and Mr. Hare went together to Calais, and lay a conſiderable Time for want of a Wind, whereby their Money fell ſhort of defaying their Expences; but they were afterwards ſupplied by the Governor of Calais, according as was promiſed at St. Germains.

Gentlemen, he tells you, that after they came into England, the firſt Time they went to ſeek Sir George Barcley, was upon the Monday Night, but they did not find him at that Time, but afterwards they met with him, and Mr. Harris had Subſiſtence-Money from him, according to King James's Promiſe, which was at the Rate of 5 s. a Day when he had no Horſe, and afterwards when he had a Horſe at 6 s. a Day; this is the Account he gives you how he came over, and of his Journey and Meeting with Sir George Barcley.

And now he comes to ſpeak particularly concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood: He tells you that on Saturday Morning the 15th of February, the firſt Day when this Aſſaſſination was deſigned to be committed, he went to the Lodging of one Burk, where Mr. Rookwood was, with others, and he found them all in a great Diſorder; and thereupon he ask'd them, What was the Matter, and what they were going to do? And Rookwood bid him go to one Counter, and he ſhould know of him what was the Matter: Accordingly he went to his Lodging, and Counter told him and thoſe who were with him, That they muſt get ready to go to Turnham-Green; and at the ſame Time and Place he met with Sir George Barcley, and after ſome Diſcourſe of attacking the Coach, Sir George Barcley at the firſt ſaid, They were his Janizaries; and afterwards going out, he came in again and ſaid, They were Men of Honour, and that they were to go abroad to attack the Prince of Orange.

The next Day, or a little Time after, Mr. Harris met with Mr. Rookwood, and enters into Diſcourſe with him to this Effect: What! are we ſent over to murder the Prince of Orange? It is a ſtrange Sort of Employment: (for it ſeems they were not informed in France what they were to do here, but they were to put themſelves under the Conduct of Sir George Barcley, and obey his Orders.) Mr. Rookwood ſaid, He was afraid the Thing was ſo, and that they were drawn in; but ſaid, If he had known of the Deſign before-hand, he would not have come over but have begg'd the King's Pardon. Which ſhews not only his Knowledge of the Deſign, but his being engaged in the Proſecution of it.

And then, Gentlemen, you are told further, That upon the Going out upon Saturday the 22d, which was the ſecond Time it was to have been put in Execution, there was a Liſt of Men that Mr. Rookwood gave to Mr. Harris of ſeveral Names that he has mentioned to you; he ſays, Mr. Rookwood's Name was at the Top, as one that was to command the Party, and the Name he went by was Roberts; and there was Harris's counterfeit Name, which was Jenkins; and Hare's counterfeit Name, which was Guiney; and they were to make ready to go to Turnham-Green. He told him, There was a Liſt, and that he and Harris was to be of his Party, that he was to attack the Prince of Orange, and that Mr. Harris ſhould be his Aid du Camp.

Gentlemen, I forgot to tell you, That between the firſt Saturday and the Second, Mr. Harris, Mr. Rookwood, and Mr. Lowick, walking in Red-Lyon-Fields, and there in Diſcourſe among themſelves, Mr. Harris and Mr. Rookwood did expreſs themſelves to be much concerned that they were to be employed upon ſuch a Deſign as this was, which they owned to be very barbarous; but Mr. Rookwood and Lowick ſaid, They were under Command, and muſt obey Orders, tho' Mr. Rookwood did not like the Deſign they were engaged in.

Gentlemen, they have told you of Horſes that were placed at Somerſet-Houſe in a Stable there, under the Care of Mr. Lewis, my Lord Feverſham's Gentleman of the Horſe, about ſix or ſeven Horſes, and thoſe ſix Horſes that were there at that Time were afterwards taken away; but that is only a Circumſtance.

So that, Gentlemen, this is now the Sum and Subſtance of this Evidence that has been given you, as far as it relates to the Priſoner: his Council in his Defence have inſiſted upon ſeveral Things; in the firſt Place, tho' it was laſt mentioned in Time, yet it ought to have the firſt Conſideration; The Council for the Priſoner have endeavoured to take off the Credit of Mr. Porter, and have opened indeed very great Crimes that he ſhould be guilty of, which muſt render him a Perſon not to be believed, but they have not proved any Thing; no Witneſs that they have called againſt Mr. Porter ſays the leaſt againſt him to invalidate his Teſtimony, or to induce you to disbelieve what he has ſaid.

Then they ſay in Point of Law, There is no Overt-Act proved of any Deſign againſt the King's Life that affects Mr. Rookwood; now that Matter you are to conſider of, Whether or no it does appear by the Teſtimony of two Witneſſes, that Mr. Rookwood was concerned in this Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King; Capt. Porter is poſitive that he was at the Conſult at the Globe Tavern, where it was propoſed, debated, and reſolved upon; but Mr. Rookwood ſays, he did diſlike it; ſo ſays Captain Porter, he did not approve of it at the firſt upon his being acquainted with it; but being ſent over to obey the Orders of Sir George Barcley, and Sir George Barcley producing a Scheme ready drawn, wherein he was to command the Party, telling him, That he muſt obey Orders. You hear what he ſaid, and the Anſwer he return'd in French, There's an End of it; Whether that does not amount to a Conſent and Agreement to be engaged in this Deſign, is left to your Conſideration, for if it do, it is plainly an Overt-Act.

Then, Gentlemen, you hear further that Harris was told by Mr. Rookwood, that he ſhould be of his Party, and be his Aid du Camp, and go to Turnham-Green, to attack the Prince of Orange, and he had a Liſt of Men given him by Rookwood, and was directed to get the reſt ready.

Rookwood. That was not in the Indictment.

L. C. J. But you were at that Meeting, which is laid in the Indictment.

Rookw. My Lord, that Liſt is not in the Indictment; the Liſt in the Indictment refers to Mr. Cranburne.

L. C. J. No, but that is an Evidence of your being in the Deſign; I hope that Liſt of Men will be ſome Evidence of the Conſent and Agreement that Mr. Rookwood was to command a Party.

Sir B. Shower. With Submiſſion, my Lord, the Words of the Act ſeems otherwiſe, and that no Overt-Act ſhould be given in Evidence, that is not expreſsly alledged.

L. C. J. But cannot there be one Act, that may be Proof of another Act which is alledged.

Sir B. Shower. Then there is no Advantage of this Law; for my Lord, the End of the Act was, That they ſhould know the particular Crimes that they were to anſwer to.

L. C. J. That could never be the End of the Law, that all particular Facts that are but Evidence of the Facts alledged ſhould be ſet forth in the Indictment; it was ſufficient before the Act, to alledge any Overt-Act, and any other Overt-Act, though not alledged, and had no Relation to the Overt-Act that was alledged, yet if it were to the ſame Sort of Treaſon, might be given in Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. The Law ſays, ye ſhall not give Evidence of any Overt-Act that is not expreſsly mentioned.

L. C. J. It is not urged as an Overt-Act, but as Evidence of an Overt-Act that is alledged; for Inſtance, the Overt-Act alledged, is, That they did meet and conſult, ſhall not they give in Evidence what was ſaid and done at thoſe Meetings, tho' not alledged? Sir George Barcley produced a Scheme at the Globe Tavern, ſhall not the producing of that Scheme be given in Evidence? if it may, why not the giving the Liſt to Harris?

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, it is plain it was Mr. Attorney's Opinion, it could not be given in Evidence, unleſs it was alledged in the Indictment; becauſe he has particularly alledged the Liſt in Cranburne's Caſe, in this very Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know not what thoſe Gentlemen mean by this Sort of Practice; certainly there never were ſo many Irregularities committed in any Trial as in this, and now particularly to break in upon the Court in the midſt of the Charge.

L. C. J Nay, nay, if there be any Miſtake, let us hear them, that it may be rectified.

L. C. J. Treby. I think we ſhould receive them, to try if they can make it out. But the Objection I do not very well underſtand yet; for, as I take the Matter to ſtand, it is alledged in the Indictment, That they had prepared Men, and Arms, and Horſes, for the Execution of this Deſign. Now is it not reaſonable, or can there be any Thing more proper, than to give in Evidence, and prove that the Priſoner had, and delivered to ſome of the Complices, a Liſt of thoſe Men that were to do it. Why it proves the very Thing alledged; but let us ſee whether it be ſo?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, there is no ſuch Thing alledged.

L. C. J. That is ſtrange. Pray ſee if it be not in the Indictment.

Clerk of Arraignment. (Reads.) Conveniebant, propoſuerunt, tractaverunt, conſultaverunt, conſenſerunt, & agreaverunt, ad ipſum Dominum Regem nunc ex Inſidiis & Dolo percutiendum, Anglice, to aſſaſſinate, interficiendum, & murdrandum; & ad execrabilem, horrendam, & deteſtabilem Aſſaſſinationem, Anglice, Aſſaſſination, & Interfectionem illam citius exequendum & perpetrandum, poſtea, ſcilicet eiſdem Die & Anno, ac diverſis aliis Diebus & Vicibus, apud Parochiam prædictam in Comitatu prædicto, proditorie tractaverunt, propoſuerunt, & conſultaverunt de Viis, Modis & Mediis, ac Tempore & Loco, ubi, quando, qualiter & quomodo dictum Dominum Regem ſic ex Inſidiis facilius interficerent; & conſenſerunt, agreaverunt & aſſenſerunt, quod quadraginta Homines equeſtres aut eo circiter, quorum iidem Chriſtophorus Knightley, Robertus Lowick, Ambroſius Rookwood & Carolus Cranburne forent quatuor, & quilibet horum proditorie ſuper ſe ſuſcepit eſſe unum, cum Bombardis, Sclopis & Sclopetis, Pulvere bombardico & Globulis plumbeis oneratis, & cum Gladiis, Enſibus & aliis Armis armati inſidiati forent, & eſſent in Subſeſſu, Anglice, in Ambuſh, ad eundem Dominum Regem in Rheda ſua, Anglice his Coach, exiſtentem, quando foris iret invadendum; quodque quidam & competens Numerus de Hominibus illis ſic armatis in Satellites, Anglice the Guards, ipſius Domini Regis cum tunc attendentes & ſecum exiſtentes aggreſſi forent, et eos expugnarent & devincerent, dum alii eorundem Hominum ſic armatorum ipſum Dominum Regem percuterent, interficerent, occiderent & murdrarent.

Mr. Conyers. And my Lord, there is Evidence of ſome of theſe Forty Men, whoſe Names were given in a Liſt by Rookwood to Harris.

Mr. Phipps. But now in Cranburne's Part, the Liſt is expreſsly alledged as an Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Never talk of Cranburne, we have not him before us now, but what do you ſay to this of the Liſt given by Rookwood to Harris.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we ſay this is not Evidence of an Overt-Act, according to this Act of Parliament; which ſays, No Evidence ſhall be given of any Overt-Act, that is not expreſsly alledged in the Indictment; now the Indictment ſays, they did agree that Forty Horſemen armed, of which the Four named were to be Four, and every one undertook to be one, who ſhould lie in wait to ſet upon the King in his Coach, and a competent Number ſhould ſet upon the Guards; and then it ſays, in order to fulfil this, they did prepare Horſes and Arms, and one of them by the Conſent of all the reſt, did carry forward and backward a Liſt, that is, Cranburne; and that particular Liſt is a particular Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment, which makes it plain, they thought it neceſſary to be particularly alledged by this Act of Parliament, or they could not give any Evidence of it; now the Liſt that Evidence is given of, is ſuppoſed to be delivered by the Priſoner to Harris. Now firſt we ſay, it is not Evidence that Forty ſhould do it, for they may do it without a Liſt; and next it is not Evidence of the Liſt that they have mentioned, for that is alledged to be carried about by Cranburne, and as the Priſoner himſelf has obſerved, this Liſt given to Harris is not in the Indictment, and therefore no Evidence can be given of it.

Mr. Conyers. It is an Evidence of that Overt-Act which is expreſly alledged in the Indictment, that they met together to conſult how to effect this Treaſon.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, we are in a very ſtrange Caſe here, if we be not very proper in this Part of our Evidence; the Overt-Act laid, is, That the Priſoner met together with others to conſult how to aſſaſſinate the King, and there the Priſoner among the reſt did agree it ſhould be done ſo and ſo. 'Tis admitted the Priſoner was there; but, ſay they, if you only prove that he ſate by, while there was a general Diſcourſe of ſuch a Matter, but do not prove that he ſaid or did any Thing, expreſſing his Aſſent, that will not amount to a Proof of the Overt-Act laid; and yet, if we go about to prove further, any Act done that manifeſts his Aſſent, then they ſay you go too far, and prove an Overt-Act that is not mentioned in the Indictment: Thus they grant, the Agreement is a ſufficient Overt-Act, but object, that being preſent barely is not a ſufficient Proof of his Agreement; then when we go to make Proof of any Thing that is a ſufficient Proof of his Agreement, they tell us it is not proper upon this Act of Parliament, becauſe not laid in the Indictment, though his Agreement be laid in the Indictment: And ſo they would amuſe us, rather than make any ſolid Objection to our Evidence. This Doctrine is certainly very odd, my Lord, and we doubt not will have little Weight with the Court or the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. According to this Doctrine all the Evidence muſt be put in the Indictment.

L. C. J. They ask you what this giving this Liſt does prove?

Mr. Att. Gen. His Agreeing at that Meeting to the Conſpiracy, and the Execution of it, by giving that Liſt of the Names of them that were to be of his Party, and his own Name as Commander of that Party, this he gives to one that was to be of the Party, and particularly was to be his Aid du Camp, in order to get them ready for the Execution; is not this an Evidence of the Agreement, which is the Overt-Act? No Man in the World can be convicted of Treaſon, if this Doctrine be true.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, they have not expreſs'd ſomething in the Indictment that has been read, which will make it plain that this is the moſt proper Evidence of the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment. The Indictment ſays, they agreed there ſhould be forty Men or thereabouts armed, of which a certain Number ſhould make an Aſſault upon the King's Coach, while another Part ſhould ſet upon the Guards: Now the Proof we make is, that Mr. Rookwood the Priſoner, was to command a Party that was to ſet upon the Guards, and in order to it, he gives a Liſt of his Men to Harris who was to be his Aid du Camp, and bids him get thoſe Men ready; and this was upon the Day that this Matter was to be acted: So that it proves very plainly that Overt-Act that we ſuggeſt in the Indictment, that a certain Number of thoſe Men were to aſſault the King's Perſon, and another Part the Guards. And therefore they needed not to have interrupted your Lordſhip; for this Liſt that Harris ſpeaks of, is a very good Proof of the Overt-Act that is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, as to this Matter which they have objected, that this Liſt given on the Day of the intended Aſſaſſination, ought not to be allowed as Evidence to prove the Treaſon, becauſe it is not ſpecially laid in the Indictment, but is by the late Act of Parliament excluded from being proved to convict the Priſoner; now tho' the Act doth exclude the giving in Evidence of any Overt-Act that is not laid in the Indictment, yet it doth not exclude ſuch Evidence as is proper and fit to prove that Overt-Act that is laid in the Indictment. Therefore, the Queſtion is, whether this giving of the Liſt does not prove ſome Overt-Act that is alledged in the Indictment? There is in the Indictment an Agreement laid to kill the King, and if that be proved, that's an Overt-Act of this Treaſon; now when the Conſent and Agreement of Mr. Rookwood to that Deſign is proved, ſurely the Proof of his giving a Liſt of Men is a further Proof that he did agree to it, and then it is very proper to be given in Evidence; for if by the new Statute no one Act can be given in Evidence to prove another, then muſt not only the Overt-Act, but alſo the Evidence of that Act be expreſſed in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, you have heard the Witneſſes what they ſay concerning this Matter. In the firſt Place, if you do believe that there was ſuch Conſults and Meetings, where this intended Aſſaſſination of the King was debated and reſolved upon, and that Mr. Rookwood was preſent and did agree to it, that is an Overt-Act; and again, if you are ſatisfied that there was an Agreement to prepare and provide a Number of Men to ſet upon the King and his Guards, in the Manner you have heard, and he was concerned in making this Proviſion, and was to have a Poſt, and command a Party in that Attack, that is a further Proof of that Conſent and Agreement, that is laid in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you, upon the Evidence that you have heard; if you are ſatisfied, upon the Teſtimony of theſe two Witneſſes that have been produc'd, That Mr. Rookwood is guilty of this Treaſon of which he is Indicted, in Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, then you will find him Guilty: If you are not ſatisfied that he is Guilty, you will acquit him.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer ſwear an Officer to keep the Jury.

(Which was done.)

L. C. J. Now if you have any Thing to move on Behalf of your other Clients pray do it.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, we have an Exception, but never a one of falſe Spelling.

L. C. J. If ſo be it be any ſuch Matter as you can move in Arreſt of Judgment, it had beſt be reſerv'd till after the Verdict.

Sir B. Shower. Our Exceptions will ſerve if Occaſion be for Mr. Rookwood in Arreſt of Judgment, and they will ſerve for the others alſo to prevent the Trouble of the Trial, if we have your Lordſhip's Opinion that they are good Exceptions.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and after a Quarter of an Hour's ſtaying out return'd, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, Anſwer to your Names. Samuel Powel.

Mr. Powell. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez. (And ſo of the Reſt.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtand indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Ambroſe Rookwood is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Powell. We deſire we may be diſcharged.

L. C J. We cannot do that, till we ſee whether there be enough upon the other Pannel, we will give you as much Eaſe as we can, we ſhall not I ſuppoſe try the other till the Afternoon, therefore you may take your Eaſe for the preſent, but you muſt be about the Court when the other Trials come on.

While the Jury was withdrawn, the Court offered to the Council for the Priſoners, that they might move what Exceptions they had before the Jury was ſworn as to any of the other; which accordingly they did; but that relating to the Caſe of Mr. Charles Cranburne, in whoſe Preſence, being then at the Bar, the Objections were made, that Part is left to his Trial.

CLVII. The Trial of CHARLES CRANBURNE, for High-Treaſon, April 21, 1696. 8. Will. III.

At the Seſſion of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Middleſex, ſitting in the Court of King's Bench at Weſtminſter.

AFTER the Trial of Ambroſe Rookwood was over, while the Jury were withdrawn to conſider of their Verdict, the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Sir John Holt. L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Whom will you have try'd next?

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr. Att. Gen. Cranburne, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

Cl. of Ar. Then, Keeper of Newgate ſet Charles Cranburne to the Bar.

L. C. J. You, Gentlemen, that are of Council for the Priſoner, if you have any Thing to move for your Client, you may move it; but firſt let the Priſoner be here.

Then Charles Cranburne was brought to the Bar in Irons.

L. C. J. Look you, Keeper, you ſhould take off the Priſoners Irons when they are at the Bar, for they ſhould ſtand at their Eaſe when they are try'd.

Keeper. My Lord, we have no Inſtruments here to do it juſt now.

Cl. of Ar. You may ſend to the Gate-Houſe, and borrow Inſtruments.

Mr. J. Powell. It ſhould be done indeed; they ought to plead at Eaſe.

L. C. J. Well go on Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before Sir Bartholomew Shower enter upon his Exceptions, unleſs thoſe Exceptions of his are ſome of the Particulars mention'd in this Act he muſt not do it now, after Plea pleaded, before the Trial; but he muſt do it in Arreſt of Judgment.

L. C. J. Treby. It is true, regularly; but let him uſe his own Judgment.

L. C. J. It is very true; the Courſe has not been to allow them to move to quaſh an Indictment for Treaſon, or Felony; but it may be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure it muſt be only for ſuch Things as they cannot take Advantage of in Arreſt of Judgment after the Verdict.

L. C. J. It has not been the Courſe, but it may be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Not where there is an Iſſue join'd, and a Jury return'd to try that Iſſue; I believe that never was done, nor attempted.

L. C. J. Treby. If there were any Prejudice to the King by it, it were not fit for us to alter the Courſe; but let us hear what his Exceptions are.

Sir B. Shower. I have ſeveral Exceptions; five at leaſt; one of them is within the very Words of the Act, that is, improper Latin; I am ſure ſome of it is ſo.

L. C. J. Well let's hear what that is.

Sir B. Shower. It ſays, Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc Septimo, and Lewis is the laſt King mentioned before; and ſo here is no Year of the King of England mention'd. It is a certain Rule, that Relatives muſt refer to the laſt Antecedent, and that Rule holds always, unleſs there be Words that accompany the Relative, which undeniably ſhew to what it refers.

L. C. J. Ay; but do we call the French King Dominus Rex?

L. C. J. Treby. He would have been ſo, if he had ſucceeded in his Invaſion, and this Aſſaſſination.

Sir B. Shower. In every Indictment, if there be Occaſion to mention a former King, it is always nuper

nuper Rex, and ſuch a one, naming the Name of the King, where the preſent King's Name does intervene, to prevent Confuſion; and ſo in civil Actions it is the ſame; and ſo it ſhould have been here.

L. C. J. Ay; but I tell you, it is Dominus Rex nunc, which is our King.

Mr. Phipps. It is not ſaid Angliæ.

L. C. J. But wherever it is Dominus Rex, we underſtand it of the King of England, and no Body elſe. Read the Indictment.

Cl. of Arr. Necnon eundem Dominum Regem ad Mortem & finalem Deſtructionem ponere & adducere, ac ſubditos ſuos fideles, & Liberos Homines Hujus Regni Angliæ in ſervitutem intolerabilem, & miſerrimam Ludovico Regi Gallico ſubjugare, & mancipare, Decimo Die Februarii, Anno Regni dicti Domini nunc Regis, ſeptimo, & diverſis aliis Diebus, &c.

L. C. J. Can any Man imagine this to be the French King?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, your Lordſhip is not to imagine one Way or other.

Mr. Cowper. In the ſtricteſt Senſe and Grammar in the World, it muſt mean King William, and no other. We do not need any Imagination, when in the ſtricteſt Conſtruction, it is plain who it refers to.

Sir B. Shower. I am ſure no Grammar can make it good; nothing but a Suppoſition can help it.

Mr. Cowper. When it is ſaid Dictus Dominus Rex, if Sir Bartholomew Shower can find out another Dominus Rex in the Indictment, than he may make ſomething of his Objection; but the Dominus is only apply'd to our own King throughout.

L. C. J. Treby. Beſides, as to the Rule that Sir Bartholomew Shower mentions, it is that ad proximum Antecedens fiat Relatio niſi impediat Sententia. That's the Reſtriction of the Rule, it muſt relate to the next Antecedent, unleſs the Senſe would be prejudiced; but here if this Conſtruction ſhould be, it would make this Clauſe to be no better than Nonſenſe, viz. That the Subjects and Freemen of this Realm were to be brought into intolerable Slavery to Lewis the French King, ſuch a Day in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our Lord the French King.

Sir B. Shower. We ſay it is little better than Nonſenſe, I am ſure it is looſe, and uncertain, and not Grammar, but carries a new Form with it.

L. C. J. No, it is as well as it can be.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, there is another Exception; it is ſaid, Diverſis Diebus & Vicibus tam antea quam poſtea; and then afterwards it ſays, poſtea ſcilicet eodem Decimo Die Februarii; that is repugnant; it is as much as to ſay, That upon the Tenth of February, and two Days afterwards (to wit) the ſaid Tenth Day of February; that is, after two Days after the Tenth of February, viz. upon the ſame Tenth Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. That Poſtea is another Sentence, and relates to other Matters.

Sir B. Shower. It can't in Propriety of Speech be ſaid to be afterwards the ſame Day.

Sir John Hawley. Mr. Soll. Gen. If Sir Bartholomew Shower remembers the Evidence that we have given this Day, he will find it was in Fact ſo; they met on the Saturday Morning, and afterwards met again the Night of the ſame Day.

L. C. J. There is nothing in that Objection ſure, it is a common Form, when they tell of different Matters.

Sir B. Shower. Well then, if you will hear the reſt which are not of the ſame Nature, we ſhall come to what we think a fatal Exception; we ſay this Indictment of High-Treaſon being againſt a Subject born, ought to have had the Words in it, Contra ſupremum naturalem Ligeum Dominum ſuum; according to Calvin's Caſe in the 7th Report, Fol. Septimo.

L. C. J. It is Contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum, is it not?

Sir B. Shower. That won't help it, my Lord, for all that is applicable to an Alien born: And ſo is the Caſe in my Lord Dyer, 144. where it is ſaid, That if an Indictment of Treaſon be againſt an Alien, you muſt not put in the Word naturalem, if you do, it will be faulty, becauſe he owes but a local Allegiance to the King of England; and not a natural one. Now we ſay, there are none of theſe Priſoners but are Subjects born, and the conſtant Form in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and Queen Mary's, was to put in the Words Naturalem Dominum, and they cannot ſhew me any of thoſe Precedents without it. There was Occaſion in Tucker's Caſe to look into this Matter, and ſearch all the Precedents. I have look'd into my Lord Coke's Entries, and all the Precedents; I have ſeen my Lord of Eſſex's Indictment, and all the others in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and thoſe of the Traitors in the Powder-Plot, and thoſe of the Regicides, and Tucker's own Indictment it ſelf; all along it is Naturalem Dominum ſuum; and the Reaſon for it is, he that is Alien born, you never put in Naturalem Dominum ſuum, becauſe he owes a double Allegiance; one Natural, to his own King under whoſe Dominion he was born, and the other Local, to the King in whoſe Dominions he reſides, for he is bound to obſerve the Laws of the Place where he lives: And if he violate them, he does break the Allegiance that he owes to the Government where he lives, upon Account of the Protection he enjoys under it. But if he be born a Subject of the King of England, he has but one natural Liege-Lord; and he being an Engliſhman born, the King ſtands in that Relation to him, as he does to all his native Subjects, but not to Foreigners; and therefore it was thought requiſite to be, and has always been inſerted into Indictments of Treaſon againſt Subjects born. And, my Lord, we think the very Reſolution of the Court, afterwards affirm'd in the Houſe of Lords that revers'd Tucker's Attainder, went upon this Opinion, That the Law required naturalem Ligeum Dominum to be put in. There the Exception was, that Contra Debitum Ligeantiæ ſuæ was omitted; To which it was objected, that there was Dominum Supremum Naturalem, which was equivalent: No, it was anſwered, both were requiſite, becauſe every Act charg'd in the Indictment ought to be laid againſt the Duty of his Allegiance. Now in Indictments of Treaſon, there are certain Words that are eſſential, becauſe of their Relation between the King and his People. There are certain Forms of Words, which if the conſtant Practice has been to make Uſe of them, the Omiſſion is an Error. Thoſe uſual Forms ought to be obſerv'd, and the Want of them will be a fatal Exception; ſo we think it would be in this Caſe, as much as if the Word Proditorie had been left out; or as if in a Caſe of Felony and Burglary, the Words Felonice, and Burglariter had been left out.

Mr.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we take the Practice, and Precedents to be the Rule of Law in the Case; and I have look'd over a great many Precedents, beſides thoſe that Sir Bartholomew Shower has cited; and I never ſaw any one Precedent of an Indictment of Treaſon againſt a Subject born without the Word naturalem; and all the Caſes cited by Sir Bartholomew Shower are full in the Point. Counter's Caſe in my Lord Hobbart, 271. where 'tis ſaid, that if there be an Indictment againſt a Subject born, it muſt be Contra naturalem Dominum; if againſt an Alien, naturalem muſt be left out. To ſay Contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum will not do, it is not enough, for that may be ſaid againſt an Alien, becauſe he owes a local Allegiance, tho' not a Natural one. And I take it, upon this Difference, this Indictment is not good.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not know how far you will think it proper to enter into this Matter before the Trial.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I think you had as good ſpeak to it now as at another Time; tho' I muſt confeſs it is not ſo proper in Point of Practice.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, my Lord, then we will ſpeak to it now. The Objection is, That the Words naturalem Dominum is not in the Indictment; which they ſay is contrary to the uſual Form: As to the Precedents, there are a great many where it has been, and I am ſure a great many where it has not been; and I am ſure for this Six, Seven, or Eight Years laſt paſt, it has always been omitted: And, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, it is not at all neceſſary, if there be Words in the Indictment which ſhew, that what he did was againſt the Duty of his Allegiance to his Lawful and Undoubted Lord (which are the Words in this Indictment.) It is true, if he be not a Subject born, naturalem cannot be in, becauſe that is contradictory to the Obedience which he owes, for it is not a natural Obedience that he owes, but a Local; but if a Man be a Subject born, and commits Treaſon againſt the Allegiance that he owes, that is againſt his natural Allegiance; for whatſoever he does againſt his Allegiance, he does againſt his natural Allegiance, and ſo there's no need to put in the Word naturalem; becauſe he owes no other Allegiance but that; it is ſufficient if that be put in which ſhews its being againſt his Allegiance. If they could ſhew that a Subject born has two Allegiancies, one that is natural, and the other that is not natural; then if you would proſecute him, you muſt ſhew, whether it was againſt his natural, or againſt his other Allegiance. But when he has none but a natural Allegiance, certainly againſt his Allegiance, without putting in natural, will be well enough. It is true, where there is no natural Allegiance, it muſt be wrong if you put it in, becauſe you put in that Allegiance which he does not owe; but where he is a Subject born, to put in natural Liege-Lord there is no Ground at all for it; there are Words enow that ſhew it was againſt his Allegiance to his Lawful and Undoubted Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Bartholomew Shower, how does it appear, that theſe Men are Subjects born? The Matter you go upon does not appear upon the Indictment, and you are not to go off from that.

Sir B. Shower. Every Man is preſum'd to be ſo, unleſs the contrary appears.

L. C. J. You quote Calvin's Caſe, and the other Caſes that are there put; thoſe are all Caſes of Aliens; there is Dr. Lopez's Caſe; He being an Alien comes into England, and commits High-Treaſon: Why, ſay they, how ſhall we indict this Man? We cannot ſay it is Contra Naturalem Dominum ſuum; for he owes no natural Allegiance to the Queen of England; How ſhall we do to frame a good Indictment againſt this Man? They conſidered of this; and they ſaid it will be a good Indictment, to charge him with High-Treaſon, or any one elſe, leaving out the Word Naturalem: For if it appear he has committed an Offence againſt the Laws of the Kingdom, and againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, which is High-Treaſon, that's enough. Now as to Tucker's Caſe, it was reverſed for want of the Concluſion, contra Debitum Ligeantiæ ſuæ. Thoſe Words are material; for let the Offence be never ſo much againſt the Perſon of the King, as to aſſaſſinate him, or levy War againſt him, yet ſtill if it be not againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, as it cannot be if he owes him none, it is not High-Treaſon. And therefore if it be againſt his Allegiance, whether that Allegiance be natural or local, it is all one, it's enough to make it High-Treaſon.

Mr. Soll. Gen. In that Caſe in Dyer, they ſhew where it was a Fault to put the Word in, but they can ſhew no Caſe where it has been adjudged to be a Fault to leave the Word out.

L. C J. No Doubt it would be a Fault to have that in, Contra Naturalem Dominum Juum, where there is only a local Allegiance due.

Mr. Phipps. How does it appear whether it is the one or the other that is due?

L. C. J. It is no Matter whether the one or the other do appear, it is High-Treaſon be it the one or the other, if it be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance.

Mr. Phipps. Suppoſe an Indictment againſt an Alien were, Contra Naturalem Dominum.

L. C. J. That would be ill, becauſe then you had laid it more ſpecially, and otherwiſe than really it is, and reſtrained it where you ought not to do it.

Mr. Phipps. How then, my Lord, ſhall it appear that he only ow'd a local Obedience?

L. C. J. It may be given in Evidence, That he is an Alien born.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He may plead it in Abatement to the Indictment.

L. C. J. He ought to be acquitted, for you have indicted him of a Crime againſt his natural Allegiance, when he owes no ſuch. But Allegiance generally comprehends all Sorts of Allegiance, Natural, and Local.

Sir B. Shower. How then, my Lord, come all the Lawyers of all Ages to put in thoſe Words in Indictments of High-Treaſon againſt Subjects born?

L. C. J. No, I have ſeen Abundance of Precedents, that have only Contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ Debitum generally, and ſo the moſt part are; for Allegiance is the Genus, and if that be ſuggeſted, all the Species are contain'd under that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, have they any more?

Sir B. Shower. Yes, we have more.

L. C. J. Well, you ſhall have them all in time.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, here is another Objection, and that's this; Here is one Fact that they have laid, and that's the 2d Overt-Act in this Indictment, dictment, that they conſented and agreed that Forty Men, (whereof theſe Four were to be Four) but do not lay it to be done traiterouſly. They ſay Conſenſerunt Agreaverunt & Aſſenſerunt, but not proditorie; and I never ſaw an Indictment that laid an expreſs Overt-Act, without repeating the Word again. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, the Words in the Indictment are thus; as to the firſt Overt-Act, it is laid in this manner; Et ad execrabilem Aſſaſſinationem illam exequend. at ſuch a Time and ſuch a Place proditorie tractaverunt propoſuerunt & Conſultaverunt de viis modis & mediis, &c. and then comes this which we except againſt; & Conſenſerunt Agreaverunt & Aſſenſerunt quod Quadraginta Homines, &c. Now this is a plain diſtinct Act, and there is no proditorie to it; and if ever they can ſhew me any Indictment, in which an Overt-Act was laid, of which they gave any Evidence, and it had not the Word proditorie in it, I am very much miſtaken. I am ſure, I never ſaw any ſuch. And it is not enough to ſay, that the Nature of the Thing is ſuch, as that it cannot but be a Treaſonable Act; but they muſt alledge it to be ſo, by the expreſs Uſe of that Word, which the Law has appointed to expreſs this Crime by. In the Caſe of an Indictment for Felony, if it be not ſaid Felony, it is not good. They are not to deſcribe that by Circumlocution, which is a particular Crime fixt by Law, they muſt uſe the Verba Artis, the Terms of Art, and no other: If your Lordſhip pleaſes it may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let it be read if you pleaſe; but take it in Engliſh, and it is no more than this, they did traiterouſly compaſs the Death of the King, and for that purpoſe they did traiterouſly meet, and conſult about the Ways and Means, and did conſent and agree that forty Men, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Reads, Et ad Execrabilem Horrendam & Deteſtabilem Aſſaſſinationem Anglice Aſſaſſination & Interfectionem illam Citius exequendum & anno ac Diverſis aliis Diebus & vicibus apud parochiam prædictam in Comitatu prædicto proditorie tractaverunt, propoſuerunt & Conſultaverunt de viis modis & mediis ac Tempore & Loco ubi quando qualiter & quomodo Dictum Dominum Regem ſic ex Inſidiis facilius Interficerent.

Sir B. Shower. There is an End of that, now go on.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, Sir Bartholomew, you miſtake, there is no End of it, that's done at the ſame time with that which follows.

Sir B. Shower. No it is not the ſame Overt-Act; but let him go on.

Cl. of Arr. Et Conſenſerunt Agreaverunt & Aſſenſerunt quod quadraginta Homines Equeſtres.

Sir B. Shower, Well you need read no further for our Objection. We ſay, there wants the Word Proditorie: For there are two Overt-Acts, the One is, that they traiterouſly did conſult of the Ways and Means, how to kill the King, and that Overt-Act we agree to be well laid: But then it ſays they conſented, and agreed that there ſhould be Forty Men, whereof theſe Four ſhould be Four, but does not ſay they traiterouſly agreed; are not theſe diſtinct Acts?

Mr. Phipps. Surely, My Lord, they are diſtinct Acts; for this Part of the Indictment upon which Sir Bartholomew grounds his Objection, is that Overt-Act of which the Liſt in Mr. Rookwood's Caſe was urged by the King's Council, and agreed by the Court to be an Evidence.

Then the Jury againſt Mr. Rookwood came in, and delivered in their Verdict, as it is in his Trial, then afterwards the Court went on thus.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Objection is, that Proditorie is not inſerted into that particular Clauſe of the Indictment, which ſhews their particular Agreement that there ſhould be forty Men, whereof the Four named in the Indictment were to be Four. Now your Lordſhip obſerves how the Indictment runs, it is for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King; and it ſets forth for this Purpoſe, that to effect this Compaſſing and Imagining, they Proditorie tractaverunt & Conſultaverunt de viis mediis & Modis, how they ſhould kill the King. Now that which immediately follows after is, the particular Method and Means that were agreed upon, that is, that there ſhould be forty Men. Now this is the ſtrangeſt Suggeſtion that ever was, when we have ſet forth, that traiterouſly they did ſo agree of the Ways and Means, and then ſet forth the particular Means, that here muſt be proditorie again to that. This is ſuch a Conſtruction as I cannot but admire how it could come into any one's Head. It is Part of the Sentence; for the other Part, as we have laid it, is not compleat before: It may be it might be ſufficient without ſetting forth the particular Ways and Means; but when it is ſet forth, it is Part of the Sentence, and refers to the firſt Beginning.

L. C. J. Aye ſure it does.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot tell what they would have, unleſs they would have us repeat the Word proditorie in every Line.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Or before every Verb.

Sir B. Shower. No, but I think it ought to be repeated at every Overt-Act.

Mr. Conyers. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, after that they have ſet forth that this was the particular Method and Way agreed upon at their Conſultation, that forty Horſemen or thereabouts ſhould go about it, of which the Perſons indicted were to be Four, it goes on, Et Quilibet eorum proditorie ſuper ſe Suſcepit eſſe unum, there it is put in, and it appears to be as particular as poſſible can be.

Mr. Cowper. Sir Bartholomew Shower ſays, that when we have alledg'd that they did traiterouſly treat, propoſe and conſult of the Means and Ways of killing the King, there we have done the Sentence and made that one Overt-Act. Now how is the Sentence done? The next Word is a Conjunction Copulative, & Conſenſerunt, &c. And what is the Uſe of a Conjunction Copulative? But to convey the Force of the Words in a former Sentence to the Sentence following, and to prevent the Repetition of every Word in the ſubſequent Sentence that was in the Precedent: But it is plain, they are both one and the ſame Overt-Act, and theſe ſubſequent Words are only an Explanation, more particularly of the Overt-Act ſet forth in the precedent Words.

Sir B. Shower. In Anſwer to that, that has been ſaid, if they ſhew me any Precedent, where an Indictment has been for High-Treaſon, ſetting forth ſeveral Overt-Acts, and not the Word proditorie ſet to every Overt-Act, then they anſwer my Objection. If the Word Quod had come in, that would have made them diſtinct to be ſure; and I think they are as diſtinct Acts now; ſuppoſe they had concluded at the End of the Word Interficerent, that had been a good Overt-Act; I am ſure they will agree that: And if it be ſo, then the other is a good Over-Act too. For it is a diſtinct Thing from that which was a perfect Sentence before; and it either requires a Likewiſe, or the Word Proditorie muſt be repeated. They have not ſo much as ſaid ſimiliter Conſenſerunt or ſimili modo; there is an (&) indeed, but that does not ſo couple the Sentences together, as not to make them diſtinct Acts. There are ſeveral Ets thorough the whole Indictment, but that does not, as Mr. Cowper would have it, couple all together to make one Overt-Act.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, if what Mr. Cowper ſays be allow'd, (viz.) that the (&) makes it one intire Sentence, then there is no Overt-Act at all; for after the Treaſon alledg'd, the Clauſes are coupled to one another by an Et, and conſequently by Mr. Cowper's Way of arguing the whole Indictment is but one intire Sentence.

L. C. J. I do not underſtand your Meaning as to that; they tell you Proditorie is alledged to the Conſulting, Contriving and Agreeing, then they tell you what was the ſubject Matter of that Contrivance and Agreement to aſſaſſinate the King, and in order to that they agreed there ſhould be 40 Men, is not that good enough, without Proditorie to every Line.

Sir B. Shower. No, it is not ſaid in Ordine ad, there is no ſuch Thing; but only they did conſult of the Ways and Means, and did agree that 40 Horſemen ſhould do it, and afterwards did agree to provide Horſes and Inſtruments of War. Now that being with a Quodque, they ſay makes a new Overt-Act; but I cannot underſtand why Quodque is not as much a Copulative as Et, and the one ſhould not have the ſame effect as the other.

L. C. J. Firſt it tells you there was a Conſult and Agreement to aſſaſſinate the King, and for the Accompliſhment of the ſaid Aſſaſſination, afterwards eiſdem die & Anno Proditorie Tractaverunt & Conſultaverunt de viis & modis, how they ſhould kill the King.

Sir B. Shower. That is one Overt-Act, ſay we, and there you ſhould ſtop.

L. C. J. Et Conſenſerunt & Agreaverunt quod quadraginta Homines, &c. it is all at the ſame time, and muſt be intended the ſame Conſult and Contrivance; that they conſulted of the Ways and Means, and then agreed ſo many Men ſhould be provided.

Mr. Phipps. No, My Lord, we ſay that is another Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Treby. It ſeems to me to be a ſpecifying and particulariſing the Ways and Means, that they had conſulted of, and concluded on.

Sir B. Shower. If it had been a ſpecifying, it had been much better to put in either then and there, or that this was the Reſult of the Conſultation.

L. C. J. Treby. It does ſeem to me ſo, that it was the Reſult of the Conſultation, and it is well enough.

L. C. J. You had better have ſav'd theſe kind of Exceptions till the Trial was over.

Sir B. Shower. But, my Lord, if there be one Overt-Act ill laid, I ſubmit it whether they can give any Evidence of that Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Treby. No doubt of that they cannot; but we think it is as well laid as it could be laid.

L. C. J. Truly I am not well ſatisfied, that it is neceſſary after you have laid the Proditorie, as to the particular Treaſon, to lay it again to the Overt-Act. For the Overt-Act is but Evidence of the Treaſon: The Treaſon it ſelf lies in the Compaſſing, which is an Act of the Mind.

L. C. J. Treby. You cannot Indict a Man of Treaſon for Aſſaſſinating or killing the King, but you muſt in every ſuch Caſe frame the Indictment upon the Article for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; which muſt be laid to be done traiterouſly. Then when afterwards you ſay the Perſon accuſed did wound him, or impriſon him, or conſult and agree to aſſaſſinate him, or did actually aſſaſſinate him, theſe are but ſo many Overt-Acts of compaſſing the Death, and you having firſt ſaid that he did Proditorie compaſs and imagine the King's Death, you have thereby ſhewn that you charge him with a greater Offence than Felony (which my Lord Coke ſays is the Uſe of the Word Proditorie;) and that being thus done, I do not apprehend it to be neceſſary that you ſhould add Proditorie to all the reſt of the following Particulars; for they are only external Diſcoveries of the inward Treaſon; and more properly deemed to be Evidence of the Treaſon, than to be the Treaſon it ſelf.

L. C. J. The Treaſon is conſummate in the Intention, beſides the Words of the Statute make that the Treaſon, not the Overt-Act, that is but Evidence, and ſo it was held, (not upon this Exception, but upon the Reaſon that my Lord ſpeaks of) in the Caſe of the Regicides of King Charles the Firſt, That the Indictment ſhould not be for killing the King, but for compaſſing and imagining his Death, and the Killing was alledg'd as an Overt-Act.

Sir B. Shower. It muſt be ſo if it were for levying of War.

L. C. J. Moſt true; for levying the War is the Treaſon, but in this Caſe we think it is no Exception.

Mr. At. Gen. Then let us have the Fifth.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, here is another Thing. It is a Queſtion whether there be any Overt-Act preſented by the Jury at all. The Indictment ſays, Juratores pro Domino Rege præſentant, that they as falſe Traytors did compaſs the Death of the King, and the Slaughter of his Subjects, and they did meet, and conſult, and agree how to do it, Et iidem Chriſtophorus Knightly and the reſt, to fulfil their ſaid traiterous Intentions and Imaginations did, afterwards, the tenth of February, buy Arms and Horſes. Now our Objection is, That it does not appear, that any one of theſe Overt-Acts are the Preſentment of the Jury; with Submiſſion they ought to have begun it again, either with a Quodque, or ſomething that ſhould have referred it to the firſt, Juratores præſentant, or elſe they muſt have begun quite again, with a Juratores Ulterius præſentant, and not have coupled them as this is with an Et. The moſt Forms begin with an ulterius præſentant, but here we find no Overt-Act is ſo introduced. They might preſent Part, and not preſent the other Part, for any Thing that does appear. Every Thing ought to be laid poſitively, as the Jury's Dictum; it may be only the Clerk's Saying, and not the Jury's, for any Thing that does appear. Your Lordſhip remembers the Caſe of the King and Trobridge upon a Writ of Error to reverſe a Judgment for erecting and continuing a Cottage againſt the Form of the Statute; now Contra formam Statuti was in the Beginning of the Indictment, ment, but not in the Conclusion; to the erecting but not the continuing. And though there was there Juratores ulterius dicunt, it was not super Sacramentum suum, and they did not say, he did continue it against the Statute; and there being no formal Presentment, that he maintain'd the Cottage notwithstanding the Act, Et did not so couple it to the first Part, as to make it a good Presentment. So we say in this Case, this is a Fault, and different from all the common Forms; there ought to be a direct Presentment of each Overt-Act, and not coupled by an Et. For Et will not do it; for it is a distinct Overt-Act every one, and should have been Et quod Consultaverunt, quodque Agreaverunt, that a certain Number should do so and so; and to be sure, it should have been so at the last Overt-Act, which is only, Et iidem Crhistophorus Knightly, &c. did buy Arms and Horses. Now this last Et, being a loose Conjunction Copulative, in common Sense ought to refer to that which they had agreed upon, for that is last mention'd there, and the natural Sense leads thither, and not to the Beginning of the Bill Juratores præsentant quod.

Mr. Phipps. I shall not trouble your Lordship further, they ought to have put in a Quodque, or an Ulterius præsentant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where would you have the Quodque, or the Ulterius præsentant?

Mr. Phipps. Either to every Overt-Act, or at least to that last.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Indictment sets forth, that they committed such, and such a Treason; Their Objection is, that Quodque is not put into every Overt-Act; and our Answer is, that the first Quod governs all that relates to that Treason. It may be if there were two distinct Treasons in the Indictment, when you come to set forth the Second Treason, you should say Juratores ulterius præsentant the Second Treason; but the Overt-Acts to prove the same Treason, are all Parts of that Treason, and make but one Species of Treason, which is the Imagining the Death of the King. There's the Treason; and to bring it to pass, they did so, and so: This, my Lord, must be Part of the Finding of the Jury as well as the Treason it self, of which these are the Overt-Acts. But then if you will lay the levying of War in the same Indictment, then it may be you must say Juratores ulterius præsentant quod, &c. But it had been a strange Absurdity to say, Juratores ulterius præsentant, such and such Overt-Acts: For the Overt-Act is not a further Indictment, but only a setting forth that which is Evidence, upon which they found the Indictment for Treason.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What the Indictment says, is as direct Affirmation as can be all along of the Presentment of the Jury, that the Prisoner and others did compass and imagine the Death of the King; and to bring it about, they did consult together, and did agree to make use of such and such Means, and were to have a Party of 40 Men, and they bought Arms and Horses. Now it does not repeat quodque, or ulterius præsentant quod, to every one of those Sentences, that they did so and so, and that they did so and so. Now I would fain know the Difference between Saying, and they did such a Thing, and Saying, and that they did such a Thing. That's all the Difference that they think to overturn this Indictment for. The omitting of a Juratores ulterius præsentant, certainly is nothing; for the first Presentment runs through the whole Indictment, and there does not need an Ulterius.

Sir B. Shower. Certainly there should have been a Quodque at least.

L. C. J. No indeed, I think it is better as it is, than as you would have had it; because the first Quod goes through the whole, That in order thereunto he did so and so; would you have it said & quod in order thereunto he did so and so; but tho' that may be good Sense, I think it is not so good as the other. This Indictment is for one Sort of Treason, and that is, for Compassing the Death of the King; and it is, I think, more proper to have but one Quod, than to have more; for it makes the whole Indictment more entire. As to the Juratores ulterius præsentant, that is never proper, where the Species of Treason is the same: For indeed if there had been two distinct Treasons, the one for compassing the Death of the King, and the other for levying of War, in that Case you must bring it in by ulterius præsentant: Because they are two several Offences, though compris'd in one Bill, and they are in Law as two Indictments. And so it is in the Case that you mentioned of Cottages: It is one Offence to erect a Cottage, and another Offence to continue a Cottage, and they are to have several Punishments; and because they there jumbled them both together in one Indictment, that Indictment was held to be nought: For by Law, the Indictment for erecting a Cottage, ought to conclude contra formam Statuti, and then the Jury must begin again, & ulterius præsentant quod the Cottage was continu'd against the Form of the Statute; because they are several Offences. But here the High-Treason is but one and the same Offence, and the other Things are but Overt-Acts to manifest this Treason, the Compassing the Death of the King; and truly I think it is better as it is.

Mr. Phipps. I have seen several Precedents of Indictments, where the several Overt-Acts were to the same High-Treason, but still they had each an ulterius præsentant.

Mr. At. Gen. I believe it is hard to find many Indictments in the same Words: I am sure all are not.

L. C. Baron. Is it not as great an Affirmation to say, and they did such a Thing, as to say, and that they did such a Thing. Sir Edward Ward.

L. C. J. I cannot reconcile it to my Reason, but it should be as good Sense without that as with it.

L. C. J. Treby. In a long Deed it begins, This Indenture witnesseth, that the Party granted so and so, and the Party covenants thus and thus; and so it goes on commonly, without renewing the Word That to the subsequent Clauses: But yet the first Expression (This Indenture witnesseth that) governs the whole Deed, though it be many Skins of Parchment.

L. C. J. If you begin with an Indenture, you begin, That it witnesseth so, and so; without renewing, unless it be a very distinct Thing.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think that Similitude makes for us. A. B. covenants so and so in a Conveyance, and then further, that so and so.

L. C. J. But there you restrain that in the Beginning of the Covenant to every particular in that Covenant.

Mr. At. Gen. Will your Lordship please to call the Jury now?

L. C. J. Have you a Mind to go on with the Trial, or to go to Dinner?

Mr. At. Gen. I believe your Lordſhip can try but one more to Night, and that may be as well after Dinner as before.

L. C. J. Well then, adjourn till 5 a-Clock, and in the mean time, you Keeper, knock off the Priſoners Fetters.

Keeper. They ſhall, my Lord.

Then the Court adjourned till 5 a-Clock in the Afternoon, it being then about 3.

Poſt Meridiem, the 21ſt of April,-96. The Court returned, and was reſum'd about 6 in the Evening.

Cl. of Ar. Keeper of Newgate, bring Charles Cranburne to the Bar, (which was done.) Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Thoſe good Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; and therefore if you will challenge them or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Cranburne, My Lord, I humbly deſire I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Court. Aye, Aye. (He had them.)

Cl. of Ar. Where is George Ford?

Cryer. Vous Avez.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Underhil.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Withers.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, thoſe that were of the laſt Jury I hope ſhall not be call'd of this Jury: This Priſoner being tried upon the ſame Indictment the laſt was.

L. C. J. If they be not, it ſhall be in Eaſe to them, but it is not in Favour of you.

Mr. Phipps. We humbly conceive, having given their Verdict upon the ſame Indictment, they are not ſuch indifferent Perſons, as the Law intends they ſhould be, and think it is good Reaſon they ſhould not ſerve upon this Jury.

L. C. J. What though it be upon the ſame Indictment? the Evidence is not the ſame; for they are diſtinct Offences.

Mr. Phipps. I do not know whether it be a good Cauſe of Challenge, but ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Well, you may doubt of it if you pleaſe, and try the Exception.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Trench.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolfe.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Jonathan Andrews, (He did not appear.) John Raymond.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Francis Barry.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Arthur Bailey.

Cranburne. I challenge him; he was upon the laſt Jury.

L. C. J. That is no Reaſon; Will you challenge him peremptorily?

Cranburne. I do challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Caine.

Cranburne. I do not except againſt him.

Cl. of Ar. Hold Mr. Caine the Book, Cryer.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner, Sir. You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to your Evidence, ſo help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Glover.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Dormer Sheppard. (He did not appear.) George Tredway. (He did not appear.) Matthew Bateman. (He did not appear.) Timothy Thornbury.

Cl. of Ar.

Cl. of Ar. John Wybourne.

Sir B. Shower. I hope you take an Account of the Challenges, Mr. Hardiſtey.

L. C. J. Nay, you ſhould take care of the Challenges, who are his Council: if he had no Council; we wou'd take care of him.

Cryer. Here is Mr. Wyborne, What ſay you to him?

Cranburne. I have nothing to ſay. (He was ſworn.)

Sir B. Shower. I hope your Lordſhip will alſo be of Council for him.

L. C. J. We are to be equal and indifferent between the King and the Priſoner: But you that are now his Council by Law, ought to take care that he loſe no Advantage.

Cl. of Ar. William Strode.

Cranburne. I have nothing to ſay againſt him. (He was ſworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Daniel Byfield. (He did not appear.) Benjamin Noble. (He did not appear.) Thomas White.

John Billers, Eſq.	Philip Wightman, Gent.
Richard Bourn, Eſq.	John Wyborne, Gent.
Nich. Roberts, Gent.	William Strode, Gent. and
Andrew Cook, Gent.	Thomas White, Gent.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney General, before this Inqueſt be taken of the High-Treaſon, whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: And all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Do you think we ſhall be able to try the other to Night.

Mr. At. Gen. That is according as this holds, my Lord.

L. C. J. I ſpeak it for the Eaſe of the Jury, that they might be diſpatched, and not attend another Day.

Mr. At. Gen. I doubt we cannot try any more than this to Night.

L. C. J. Well it is no great Matter, it will be but a Morning's Work; it may be too great a Streſs and a Hurry to do any more to Night; and therefore we will diſcharge the Jury for to Night, thoſe of them that are not ſworn; but we will be here to Morrow Morning by Seven a Clock; and therefore pray Gentlemen attend early.

Cl. of Ar. C. Cranburne Hold up thy Hand. (which he did.) You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Charles Cranburne, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Yeoman, for that he, with Chriſtopher Knightley, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, Robert Lowick, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, and Ambroſe Rookwood, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman, the Fear of God in their Hearts not having, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being mov'd and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Clement, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord, William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme, True, Rightful, Lawful, and undoubted Lord, the Cordial Love, and the true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance which every Faithful Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhou'd bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and wholly to extinguiſh, intending and contriving, and with all their Strength, purpoſing, deſigning and conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and very well eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change and alter; as alſo our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put and bring, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King to ſubjugate and enthral, the 10th Day of Feb. in the 7th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, malicioufly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine and contrive, purpoſe, deſign and intend our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to Slay, Kill, and Murder, and a miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of him our ſaid Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England to make and cauſe; and their ſaid moſt wicked, impious, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances and Purpoſes, aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightly, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and very many other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown; afterwards, to wit, the ſame Tenth Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aboveſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in the ſame County, falſely, malicioufly, adviſedly, ſecretly, traiterouſly, and with Force and Arms, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and wile, to Aſſaſſinate, Kill and Murder: And that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing the ſooner to execute and perpetrate; afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, and diverſe other Days and Times, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, traiterouſly did treat, propoſe, and conſult of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what manner our ſaid Lord the King ſo by lying in wait the more eaſily they might Kill: And did conſent, agree, and aſſent, that Forty Horſemen, or thereabout (of whom they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, ſhould be four; and and every one of them traiterouſly took upon himſelf to be one) with Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, charged with Gun-powder and Leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, Armed, ſhould lie in wait, and be in Ambuſh our ſaid Lord the King, in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad, to ſet upon; and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed, upon the Guards of our ſaid Lord the King, then attending him, and being with him, ſhould ſet upon, and them ſhould fight with and overcome; whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo armed, him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould Aſſaſſinate, Slay, Kill, and Murder. And they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightly, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, the Treaſons, and all their treaſonable Intentions, Purpoſes and Contrivances aforeſaid to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to effect, afterwards, (to wit) the aforeſaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Swords and Rapiers, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and Military Inſtruments, falſely, maliciouſly, ſecretly and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and to be bought, obtained, gathered together, and procured, did cauſe, with that Intent them in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, as aforeſaid, to be us'd, imploy'd, and beſtow'd: And the ſame Premiſſes the more ſafely and certainly to execute, do, and perpetrate, the aforeſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, with one Edward King (late of High-Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted) by the Conſent and Aſſent of divers of the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the aforeſaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforeſaid, traiterouſly did go, and came unto the Place propoſed, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murdering of our ſaid Lord the King, by lying in wait, ſhould be done, perpetrated and committed, to view, ſee, and obſerve the Conveniency and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, Aſſaſſination, and Killing, there to be done, perpetrated and committed; and that Place ſo being ſeen and obſerved, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, his Obſervations thereof to ſeveral of the ſaid Traitors and Conſpirators did relate and impart, to wit, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid; and the ſaid Charles Cranburne the ſame Day and Year there, in order to the ſame execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing of our ſaid Lord the King, by the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perpetrate, and commit, adviſedly, knowingly, and traiterouſly did bear and carry among divers of theſe Traitors and Conſpirators forward and backward from ſome to others of them, a Liſt of the Names of divers Men of them who were deſigned and appointed our ſaid Lord the King, ſo as aforeſaid, by lying in wait, to Kill and Murder againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty: if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Mr. Montague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon that is found againſt four Perſons; but the particular Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, is for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, and enſlave the Nation to Lewis the French King: And the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner at the Bar did for this purpoſe meet and conſult with ſeveral falſe Traitors to the King and Government, of the Ways, Manner, and Means how, and the Time and Place when and where to Aſſaſſinate the King; and at length they agreed that forty Horſemen ſhould go together, and ſet upon the King in his Coach, as he returned from Hunting; ſome to attack the Coach, while others ſet upon the Guards. The Indictment does further charge him with getting Horſes and Arms, and particularly with carrying a Liſt of the Aſſaſſinators from one to another. Theſe are the particular Things charged in the Indictment, and to this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty; if we prove the Fact, Gentlemen, we don't doubt your Juſtice.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Priſoner at the Bar, Charles Cranburne, is Indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. Gentlemen, the Over-Acts laid in the Indictment to prove the Priſoner guilty are, That he was at ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations about the Manner of putting this Deſign in Execution; at which Meetings it was agreed, that there ſhould be about forty Horſemen in Number prepar'd, and arm'd for that Purpoſe, and they did provide Horſes and Arms for that very Thing, and did agree to put it in Execution.

Gentlemen, the Evidence that you will hear produced againſt the Priſoner at the Bar will be of this Nature. You will hear from the Witneſſes, that about Chriſtmas laſt, or the Beginning of January, Sir George Barcley, did come over from France from the late King James, to whom he was an Officer in his Guards, with a Commiſſion for attacking the Prince of Orange, or levying War upon his Perſon. He came over about that Time, and ſeveral Troopers of the late King James's Guards, to aſſiſt him in that barbarous Conſpiracy. When Sir George Barcley came over, he did acquaint with this Deſign ſeveral Perſons in England, that he thought proper to be Accomplices with him in it; particularly Capt. Porter, Mr. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and ſeveral others whoſe Names you will hear of, and they had ſeveral Meetings about it the Beginning ginning of February, at Capt. Porter's Lodgings, at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, and ſeveral other Places where they conſulted in what manner they might attempt and accompliſh this bloody Deſign.

Gentlemen, you will hear, that at theſe Meetings it was propos'd, that they ſhould do it by Ambuſcade as the King came from Richmond a Hunting, whither he uſed to go upon Saturdays: Others were for doing it on this Side the Water. And ſo their Opinions being divided, it was thought neceſſary to find out and ſettle which was the beſt Place; and in Order thereunto they employ'd Capt. Porter, Mr. Knightley, and Mr. King (who was executed) to view the Ground, and accordingly they went, and pitch'd upon the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green for this Purpoſe, as the moſt convenient Place: And having ſo done, they came back, and gave an Account to thoſe that had appointed to meet 'em, to hear the Succeſs of their Expedition, at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, and in that Place, you will find by the Evidence, that thoſe Perſons, who were the Heads of the Conſpiracy, undertook to find their ſeveral Proportions of Men, for whom they would undertake, that would go with them, and be concern'd in this Deſign. Sir George Barcley was to furniſh about twenty. He had the Command of the Troopers that came from France, and thoſe other Officers that came thence, were under him. Capt. Porter was to furniſh ſeven, Charnock was to furniſh eight, Sir William Perkins was to furniſh five Horſes and three Men, and, I think, Lowick was to furniſh ſome more: In the whole Number they reckon'd there ſhould be about forty.

It will appear, Gentlemen, that the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Cranburne, was one of the Men that Capt. Porter undertook to get, and engage in this Deſign; and accordingly Capt. Porter did acquaint Mr. Cranburne with it; and he did undertake to be one, and to be ready to go with him, and be concerned in this Aſſaſſination. You will find he was acquainted with it about the 14th of February, the Day before the firſt Time that they intended to aſſault the King: Then he did undertake and agree to prepare himſelf againſt the next Day. The next Day, which was the 15th of February, they had ſeveral Meetings, and they were making Preparation in Order to go out. It happen'd, by great Providence, his Majeſty did not go abroad that Day, and thereupon they diſpers'd themſelves; but they had Meetings afterwards, at which Meetings the Priſoner was preſent, with Capt. Porter, Mr. Pendergraſs, La Rue, and ſeveral others that were concerned in the Conſpiracy, particularly the 21ſt of February, the Day before the ſecond Time they were to have put this in Execution. Capt. Porter being at the Sun-Tavern, with ſeveral other Gentlemen, and they reſolving to have it executed the next Day, if the King went abroad; Capt. Porter ſent for Cranburne, and Keyes that was executed, and Kendrick and Sherborn, four of thoſe that he had undertaken for, (of whom, I ſay, Cranburne, the Priſoner at the Bar, was one) and then he acquainted 'em that they were reſolv'd to go on with it the next Day. And then they agreed to be in a Readineſs accordingly. The next Day the Priſoner, with ſome others, met at Mr. Porter's, where they were preparing to go out and attack the King, and they had ſeveral Diſcourſes about the Ways and Means of doing it; and particularly Capt. Porter at that Time ſaid, that he had a very good Gun that held about ſix or eight Bullets, and that Mr. Pendergraſs was to have, who was to attack the Coach, and ſhoot into the Coach: Mr. Cranburne was there preſent at that Time, and Mr. Cranburne was imploy'd particularly by Capt. Porter to carry a Liſt that Porter writ of the Names of ſeveral Men that were to act in it under him, and this he was to carry to Charnock; Porter writ it and gave it him, and he carry'd it with Directions to bring it back with the Liſt of the Names of Mr. Charnock's Men. Cranburne did accordingly at that Time carry the Liſt of the Names to Capt. Charnock, and brought it back with an additional Liſt, from Capt. Charnock, of his Men.

At that Time, you will hear further, when Cranburne brought the Liſt, he brought an Account that he heard the King did certainly go abroad: For Mr. Charnock had Intelligence ſo from Chambers, who lay at Kenſington to get Intelligence: At which there was very great Rejoycing among all that were preſent at that Time, hoping they ſhould have an Opportunity to put this execrable Deſign in Execution; and ſo they prepar'd all of 'em to go out. There were ſeveral Inns in Turnham-Green and Brentford, and thereabouts, and they were to be placed two or three in an Inn, that they might be ready to get togerher when Time ſhould ſerve. It happen'd the King did not go abroad that Day neither, there being ſome Diſcovery of this Deſign, and ſo they did diſperſe themſelves, as apprehending it was diſcovered.

Gentlemen, it will appear by ſeveral Witneſſes, that the Priſoner at the Bar was engaged in this horrid treaſonable Deſign, and was to have acted a Part in it. We will call our Witneſſes that will make the Particulars out to you, and we do not queſtion but you'll do what is right. Firſt, call Capt. Porter; (who was ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, if you pleaſe, Capt. Porter, give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know of this wicked intended Aſſaſſination, and what Share the Priſoner at the Bar had in it.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, before this wicked Aſſaſſination was on Foot, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Cranburne, was imploy'd by me to buy Arms, I uſed to give him Money to go to the Brokers to buy Arms at ſecond-hand, and he brought a Sword-Cutler to me, of whom I bought about twenty Swords. And when Sir George Barcley came into England, and this Buſineſs was reſolv'd upon, I acquainted him with the Deſign, and promis'd to mount him. He never was at any of the Meetings with Capt. Charnock, Sir George Barcley, or Sir William Perkins; but he went to look for a Horſe, and was ready both Saturdays to go along with me. On Saturday the 22d I ſent him with a Meſſage to Sir William Perkins, for the Note for the two Horſes, which he had promiſed me to furniſh me with, out of his five that he was to furniſh; he came back again, and told me that there was a Meſſenger came and ſaid that the King did go out, and he knew where to have the two Horſes; that Mr. Charnock was afraid we ſhould not have the full Number of Men, and deſired me to ſend him the Names of my Men; I did write a Liſt of the Names of my Men, and I went afterwards to the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, Garden, whither he was to come to me; he did ſo, and he brought back the Liſt of my Men, with the Liſt of Mr. Charnock's Men written underneath it, and at the ſame Time News was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day.

L. C. J. You ſay, that before the Aſſaſſination was ſet on foot, you imployed him to buy Arms and Horſes.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I acquainted him with it the Friday before the firſt Saturday.

L. C. J. You ſaid before the Aſſaſſination you imployed him to buy Arms: When was that?

Capt. Porter. I ſaid before the Aſſaſſination was on foot I imployed him to buy Arms. I told him I was to be a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment, and promiſed to make him my Quarter-Maſter.

L. C. J. How long ago was this? Was it a Week before the Aſſaſſination was on foot?

Capt. Porter. He has known of my being a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment this two Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do doubt my Lord, he does not diſtinguiſh the Times when he bought the Arms, and when the Aſſaſſination was.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, he does now; I miſapprehended him at firſt, and thought he ſaid he had imployed him to buy Arms a Week before the Aſſaſſination was on foot; but he ſays it was a longer Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire my Lord, he may be ask'd what Time he bought Arms before this Aſſaſſination: When was the laſt Time he bought Arms?

Capt. Porter. It was ſeveral Months before the Aſſaſſination.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it within a Year before it.

Capt. Porter. Yes I believe it was within a Year. I gave him ſeveral Times Money for that purpoſe, in all above ten Pounds, and he told me, one with another, he had bought ten Caſe of Piſtols, and kept them in the Houſe till there were Occaſion.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long ago is it?

Capt. Porter. I believe about a Year; within a Year.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you firſt acquaint him with the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. Porter. Preſently after Sir George Barcley acquainted me with it, I ſent to him, to deſire him to get the Piſtols clean and ready.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you tell him of the Deſign?

Capt. Porter. I told him there was a Deſign on foot, and I would tell him more when I ſaw him next; and I deſir'd him to get the Swords from the Sword-Cutlers, and the Piſtols clean and ready. And I met him afterwards, and told him of the Deſign, and that we intended to do it on Saturday the fifteenth; and he engaged to be ready and make one. On the Friday before the twenty-ſecond he went with me to the Cock-pit, and there we met with one Mr. Gunn, and I ask'd him if he knew where any good Hackney-Horſes might be had? He ſaid he believed he did; and I ſent Cranburne with him, and he came back, and told me he had found two or three out in Bloomsbury.

L. C. J. Look ye, Capt. Porter, you muſt not ſpeak ſo faſt, it is impoſſible to underſtand ſo much Matter as you deliver without diſtinguiſhing of Times. You ſaid, that ſome long Time before the Aſſaſſination was on foot you ſent him to buy Arms, for what Purpoſe were thoſe Arms?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, he has told you —

L. C. J. Pray let me hear it from him again.

Capt. Porter. I ſay my Lord, he knew of my being a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment this two Years.

L. C. J. But what were thoſe Arms for that he bought?

Capt. Porter. To be ready againſt King James landed, which was deſigned ſeveral Times.

L. C. J. Why, now you make the Matter clear to me.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, that is not the Thing we go upon, that is but introductory to the Buſineſs that we are now a Trying. Therefore we deſire to know of him: Captain Porter, when did you firſt acquaint Cranburne of the Aſſaſſination of the King?

Capt. Porter. As ſoon as Sir George Barcley acquainted me with it, and deſired me to get what Men I could to effect it, I ſent for Cranburne to my Lodgings in Norfolk-Street, and he came to me one Morning; and I told him there was a Deſign on foot, and I would tell him more of it afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it that Sir George Barcley acquainted you with it?

Capt. Porter. About the latter End of January.

Mr. At. Gen. And what ſaid he to it when you acquainted him with it?

Capt. Porter. He did agree to go with me, and I promiſed to furniſh him with Horſe and Arms; and on Friday before the fifteenth I ſent him with three Caſe of Piſtols to Sir William Perkins, to furniſh the three Men he was to mount with his own Horſes.

L. C. J. Who was to have thoſe three Caſe of Piſtols.

Capt. Porter. Sir William Perkins was, and he carried them to Sir William Perkins's.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was this do you ſay, before the Aſſaſſination was to have been?

Capt. Porter. It was Friday before the fifteenth.

Mr. At. Gen. That was before the firſt Time that it was to have been done.

Capt. Porter. Yes; and Friday before the laſt, I ſent him to look after the Horſes that Gunn ſaid he believed he could help me to, and he came to me to the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and told me he and Jeffery Gunn had found three Horſes in Bloomsbury, and I came out of the Room where I was with Sir George Barclay and others, and there was Kendrick, and Keyes, and Cranburne, and I told them we were reſolved to put it in Execution the next Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, pray what Diſcourſe had you with him the next Day?

Capt. Porter. The next Day, the 22d, he came to my Lodging at Maiden-Lane, and I ſent him to Sir William Perkins for a Note for the two Horſes, that I was to mount of his: He came back and told me he knew where to have them, and that Capt. Charnock was affraid we ſhould not have our Compliment of Men, and deſired me to ſend him an Account what Men I could bring, which I did by Mr. Cranburne, and being to go to the Blue-Poſts, ordered him to bring it to me thither, and he did bring it back to met to the Blue-Poſts with Captain Charnock's Liſt underneath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Captain Porter, was there any Body preſent when you ſent the Liſt, and the Priſoner brought it back to you?

Capt.

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was Mr. De la Rue, and Captain Pendergraſs, and Mr. King, I know of none elſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray do you remember what Healths were drunk after you heard the King was not to go abroad?

Capt. Porter. I don't remember what Healths were drunk that Day particularly, but whether it were Thurſday or Friday, (I cannot tell particularly the Day) We drank a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange upon the next Saturday.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was preſent that Day when that Health was drunk?

Capt. Porter. Mr. Cranburne was there preſent at that Time, and did drink the Health.

Mr. Cooper. Pray, Sir, did he meet you by Appointment on Saturday the 15th, or was it by Accident?

Capt. Porter. By Appointment, as all the reſt did, to get ready as all the reſt did, to go upon the Deſign; and ſo it was both Days.

Sir B. Shower. If they have done with Mr. Porter, we would ask him a Queſtion or two for the Priſoner: We deſire to know when it was that thoſe Arms were bought that he talks of: For we muſt acknowledge that Mr. Cranburne heretofore went upon ſeveral Meſſages for Capt. Porter; When was that buying of Arms?

Capt. Porter. I tell you I cannot exactly tell the Month.

Mr. Cranburne. Do you remember the Year?

Capt. Porter. I believe it was leſs than a Year before the Aſſaſſination was on Foot.

Mr. Cranburne. If you remember, Sir, it was a Month before Col. Parker was put in the Tower.

Capt. Porter. It was ſeveral Times, I cannot tell the particular Times.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I deſire to know when he firſt communicated this Deſign to Mr. Cranburne, and who was by, and where it was.

Capt. Porter. I told you I ſent for Mr. Cranburne one Day in the Week before the 15th, and he came to me at my Lodging in Norfolk-ſtreet, and I acquainted him that Sir George Barclay was come, and there was ſuch a Deſign on Foot; and I deſired him to get thoſe Piſtols that he had of mine ready, and cleaned; that they might be ready for the Execution.

Sir B. Shower. What Day was that?

Capt. Porter. One Day in the Week before the 15th.

Mr. Cranburne. Did you ever name Sir George Barclay to me in your Life?

Capt. Porter. Yes I did, I told you he was come from France.

Mr. Cranburne. Where was that, at Mr.——

Capt. Porter. In Norfolk-ſtreet, where I lay?

Mr. Cranburne. Who was by?

Capt. Porter. No Body but my ſelf.

Sir B. Shower. Upon what Occaſion did you meet there?

Capt. Porter. I ſent for him to my Lodging.

Sir B. Shower. How long had Sir George Barclay been in Town, before that Time?

Capt. Porter. I cannot tell the Time when he came to Town.

Sir B. Shower. How long was it after he came to Town before you ſaw him? Had you ſeen him a Week or a Fortnight before? Pray recollect yourſelf.

Capt. Porter. I told you that the firſt Time I heard of him, was the latter End of January; Capt. Charnock told me he was come, but I was then ſick of the Gout.

Sir B. Shower. Now then I would deſire to know, who was by, upon the Friday before the 22d, at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, when you and Mr. Cranburne were there?

Capt. Porter. I did tell you, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. I deſire to know, whether there was any Body beſides Mr. Cranburne, Kendrick, and Keys?

Capt. Porter. Sir, I will tell you all I can remember; I was in one Room with Sir George Barclay, and there was Sir William Perkins, Capt. Charnock, and myſelf; and afterwards I went into another Room, where there was Kendrick, and Cranburne, and Keys; and Jeffrey Gunn came in afterwards; I remember no Body elſe.

Mr. Phipps. Was not Gunn there when you firſt came in?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Remembrance, he came in afterwards.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this may be a very material Part of our Defence, and therefore we muſt enquire a little the more into it. Mr. Porter is pleaſed to ſay, that he was in a Room with Sir George Barclay, and Charnock, and Sir William Perkins; and he came out into another Room where was Mr. Cranburne, Kendrick, and Keys; and there he ſays, after he had been there ſome Time, Gunn came in; I deſire to know whether Gunn was there when he firſt came in?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Remembrance, he came in afterwards; but I cannot poſitively tell, for I was in and out ſeverel Times.

Mr. Phipps. At the Time that you communicated this Deſign to Mr. Cranburne, what ſaid he to you?

Capt. Porter. When I firſt communicated the Thing to him, I told him there was a Thing on Foot for the Service of King James, and deſired him to go along with me.

L. C. J. What Kind of Service did you tell him it was?

Capt. Porter. He asked me, what kind of Service it was? I told him Sir George Barclay was come over, and I told the whole Deſign of the Aſſaſſination of the Prince of Orange, that it was intended to take him off, as he came from Richmond from Hunting.

Mr. Phipps. And pray what did Mr. Cranburne ſay to you?

Capt. Porter. He ſaid he would be ready to go along with me.

Mr. Phipps. You ſay, you ſent by him three Caſe of Piſtols to Sir William Perkins, at that Time did you tell him for what Deſign thoſe Piſtols were?

Capt. Porter. I told him, they were for the three Men that Sir William Perkins was to mount upon three of his five Horſes.

Mr. Cranburne. Did you ſpeak to me to carry thoſe Piſtols to Sir William Perkins?

Capt. Porter. I think ſo, to the beſt of my Remembrance I ordered you my ſelf to carry them.

Sir B. Shower. Captain Porter, I deſire you to recollect your ſelf, and tell us plainly, whether the Deſign was communicated to Mr. Cranburne before the 15th.

Capt. Porter. Certainly, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Are you ſure of it?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, I am ſure of it.

Sir B. Shower. I ask you, becauſe you know what has been ſaid upon this Occaſion in other Trials.

Cranburne. Where did you write the Note, that you ſay you ſent to Sir William Perkins? Was that Note ſealed or was it not?

Capt. Porter. I did not tell you that I writ a Note.

Cranburne. You ſwore that you wrote a Note, and ſent it by me to Sir William Perkins for two Horſes.

Capt. Porter. I ſaid no ſuch Thing, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you, Capt. Porter, let him ask you any Queſtions, and if they be proper anſwer them, and let not his Affirmations or Miſtakes provoke you to be angry.

Capt. Porter. I ſaid, I ſent him to Sir William Perkins, for a Note to have the Horſes from Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Phipps. Did you ſend him with a Letter, or was it a Meſſage by Word of Mouth?

Capt. Porter. I did ſend him by Word of Mouth, for a Note.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen, obſerve the Evidence, Sir William Perkins was to give a Note for two Horſes, and Capt. Porter ſent Cranburne for the Note.

Mr. Phipps. The Queſtion therefore that I ask, is, Whether he ſent a Letter for the Note, or whether by Word of Mouth?

Capt. Porter. I ſent by Word of Mouth.

Mr. Cranburne. Pray will you tell the Court what you ſaid upon the 22d to Mr. Pendergraſs and me, after you came down from the Blue-Poſts leaning upon the Rail.

Capt. Porter. I don't remember a Word of it, for I cannot remember every Word that I have ſpoken.

Sir B. Shower. If you can remember one Particular, ſure you can remember another. If you can't remember this, how came you to remember any Part of the Diſcourſe that happen'd at the Blue-Poſts?

Capt. Porter. Becauſe that was material to this Buſineſs, for I had very ſoon after a particular Occaſion to recollect it upon the breaking out of the Plot.

Mr. Cranburne. Pray what Hour was it this Saturday the 15th that you communicated this Deſign to me?

Capt. Porter. I cannot tell what Hour, but I ſay you met me at the Blue-Poſts Saturday the 15th.

Mr. Cranburne. You ſay, you communicated it to me the 15th.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays he communicated it to you, before the 15th.

Mr. Cranburne. I deſire to know where he was the 14th.

Capt. Porter. I ſay, one Day before the 15th; in that Week I ſent for you to come to my Lodgings, and you did come, and there I communicated it to you.

Cranburne. Sir, I was not at your Lodgings that Week.

Mr. Phipps. What Day of the Week?

Capt. Porter. I cannot be poſitive whether it was Thurſday, or Friday, or what Day; but one Day that Week it was.

Mr. Phipps. You ought to be poſitive when it was.

Capt. Porter. I do tell you as near as I can.

Mr. Phipps. With Submiſſion, my Lord, he ought to be poſitive one Way or other.

L. C. J. Nay, I don't ſee that he ought to be poſitive to a Day; he may be ſo if he can.

Cranburne. Pray what Day did you ſay you ſent me to Sir George Barclay?

Capt. Porter. I do not ſay that I ever ſent you to Sir George Barclay?

Mr. Phipps. Can you take upon you to ſay, That he was at your Lodgings that Week before the 15th?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Knowledge it was one Day that Week.

Mr. Phipps. To the beſt of your Knowledge: Are you ſure of it?

L. C. J. Speak as certainly as you can.

Capt. Porter. Indeed, I believe ſo, it was before the 15th. I am ſure, I think, it was within three or four Days after Sir George Barclay had acquainted me with it, I ſent to the Priſoner to come to me to my Lodgings, at Mrs.——— in Norfolk-ſtreet, and acquainted him with it.

L. C. J. And when you acquainted him with it, What did you tell him? What Part was he to act in it?

Capt. Porter. I told him, I would have him go along with me, and that I had ſet him down for one of my Party, and would provide him Horſe and Arms; and he did agree to go along with me.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Webber, Pray let me ſee Charnock's Trial.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. Why, Sir Bartholomew, is the Trial any Evidence?

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Sheriff, I know what Uſe I can make of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Sir B. Shower. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. De la Rue. (which was done.)

Pray, Sir, give the Court, and the Jury, an Account what you know of the intended Aſſaſſination, and what Share the Priſoner had in it.

Mr. De la Rue. It is too long a Story to tell you all that I know of this Matter; but, if you pleaſe, I will tell you what concerns the Priſoner at the Bar. I am heartily ſorry that I have Occaſion to appear againſt him, as I would be truly againſt any Body: But ſince I am here upon my Oath, I muſt declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth; and I hope I ſhall not declare any Thing but what is Truth. Upon Saturday the 15th of February, the Day that the Deſign was to have been put in Execution againſt his Majeſty, and all that were in the Coach with him, and againſt his Guards, I went to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-ſtreet, to inform my ſelf whether they reſolved on that Day to go out upon the Deſign; and I found by Mr. Charnock that they did reſolve it, and I ſtayed there a while, till ſuch Time as Mr. Chambers came in; I did not know whence he came then, but, as I was informed afterwards, he came from Kenſington to Mr. Charnock, and his Boots were dirty; and Mr. Charnock told me he had ſent a Meſſenger to Mr. Porter; And, ſays he, if you will ſtay a little Time, I ſhall have an Anſwer. The Meſſenger came back, and told him, That Capt. Porter din'd at the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden. I did not go to dine with him, but went Home, where I ſaw Mr. King at my Lodging, who told me, that the King did not go out that Day. I told him, I heard he did not: I found by Mr. Chambers's coming back, and that we had no notice from Mr. Charnock, that it was concluded the King did not go out as it was supposed he should have gone. When I had dined at my Lodging, I went to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, to Mr. Porter, and there were four, or five, or six People with him; there was one Mr. Sherborn, and Mr. Kendrick, and two People that I never saw before, and another Person, but I can't tell now who he was. When we had been there a little while, comes in this unfortunate Man at the Bar, Mr. Cranburne; I don't know where he had been; but by his coming in so late, I suppose he had not dined, and he ordered the Drawer to get him some Costelets. This is all I can say as to that Day. I had seen Captain Porter twice or thrice between that and the 22d, and he desired me to be at home on Friday Night between Eight and Nine, and he would send to me: He did send, and I was from home. But when I came I was informed his Servant had been to speak with me; and in the Morning, about Eight or Nine o'clock, Saturday the 22d, he sent his Servant to me to tell me his Master would speak with me at his Lodgings. I went to his Lodgings, and he then lay in Maiden-Lane, at one Brown's a Surgeon: When I came in, he was in Bed; and he told me in French, Touts Parties sont prests, All Parties are ready. I understood all along that there were three Parties to be engaged; one to attack the King's Coach, and the two others the Guards: Sir George Barclay was to head the first, and Porter, and Rookwood, the rest. Mr. Porter arose and dressed himself, and in came Mr. Cranburne; and Mr. Porter went out to him in the Dining-Room, and what he said I can't tell: But soon after came in Pendergrass, Mr. Keys, and Mr. King, and then he takes Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Sir B. Shower. Who took that?

Mr. De la Rue. Captain Porter took Pen, Ink, and Paper, and writes down a List of his Party, and puts me down first. Mr. Pendergrass asked me if I was the Captain, and I made him some Answer, but what in particular I cannot tell; I think I told him I knew of the Thing before the most did. But I can remember particularly that List was given to Mr. Cranburne, to carry to Mr. Charnock; upon what Account it was, I cannot tell; but I concluded, that Mr. Charnock was to be acquainted with those Persons that Mr. Porter was sure of: And Mr. Porter at that time told me that he was disappointed of some People, and desired me to get him some other Men in their Rooms; and he sent particularly to one that Mr. King proposed; and I did go, and brought him to the Blue-Posts, where Captain Porter told me he was to dine; and the Gentleman I went to, told me he would meet me at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden. When I came back to Mr. Porter's Lodgings, Mr. Porter and Mr. Pendergrass, and Mr. Oldfield, and I, went in a Coach to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden; and when we had been there a little while, Mr. Cranburne came back to give an Account of the Errand Mr. Porter had sent him upon, and he brings this List.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who brought it?

Mr. De la Rue. Mr. Cranburne.

Cranburne. Whither did I bring it?

Mr. De la Rue. To the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden.

L. C. J. You must not ask any Questions till they have done with him. But Mr. De la Rue, let me ask you what Day was this?

Mr. De la Rue. This was Saturday the 22d of February; and he told Mr. Porter there was a List of Mr. Charnock's Men at the bottom of that List; and I took the List in my Hand, and there was Mr. Charnock's List of Six or Seven, or thereabouts, of his Party, and at the bottom of it was R. C. I think, for Robert Charnock. Mr. Porter takes Mr. Cranburne from the Company into another Room, and I went after them, and he told Captain Porter, in my hearing, that the King did not go out that Day. There is one Thing I forgot which now I recollect, and I am upon my Oath to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth. When I was at Mr. Porter's Lodging, he told me the King was to go out; and that Mr. Chambers, the orderly Man, had sent word, That the King resolved to go out between Ten and Eleven.

L. C. J. Who said so?

Mr. De la Rue. Mr. Cranburne told me so at Mr. Porter's Lodgings, I say I had forgot it, but it occurs to my Memory now, that he told me there before he went to the Blue-Posts, that the King did go out that Day between Ten and Eleven; for Mr. Chambers, the orderly Man, had been with Mr. Charnock or Sir William Perkins, to let them know so much. And afterwards when he came back with the List of Captain Porter's Men, to Captain Porter at the Blue-Posts in the Spring-Garden; there was at the Foot of that List, a List of Mr. Charnock's Men in another Hand, I suppose writ by himself, but that I cannot swear whose Hand it was; and Mr Porter took him into another Room, and then Mr. Cranburne told him the King did not go out, and I believe it was then between 11 and 12 o'clock; and he also told Mr. Porter, that Mr. Charnock was apprehensive the Thing was discovered, and therefore desired him to have a care of himself, for he himself was resolved not to lie at home that Night; I think, my Lord, Mr. Porter did send back Mr. Cranburne to Mr. Charnock, I cannot be positive whether he did or not, but I believe he did; because I am sure Mr. Cranburne did tell Mr. Porter, Sir George Barclay would speak with him; and Mr. Porter made Answer, why should he desire me to go to him, when he knows I am under some ill Circumstances, and he can better come to me? and I believe Mr. Porter did send Mr. Cranburne once again to Mr. Charnock.

L. C. J. Well, pray do not say any thing of any Matter, but what you can be positive in.

Mr. De la Rue. But Mr. Porter did not go to Mr. Charnock, nor did Mr. Charnock come to him, therefore they stay'd there and dined; and after Dinner, or a little before Dinner, Keys the Trumpeter came up and told us, that my Lord of Oxford's Regiment of Guards was returned from Richmond, foaming: Keys went down Stairs again to learn Intelligence, as I thought, and came up and told us he saw the King's Coaches newly returned to the Meuse, and Mr. Cranburne was by all the Time; I think this was before Dinner, and then we went to Dinner.

L. C. J. I tell you again, don't speak any thing that is material, but what you can be positive in.

Mr. De la Rue. I am positive as to the Thing, and that it was the 22d of February, but I cannot be positive as to all the Circumstances. After Dinner there was the usual Healths, the Jacobite Healths to King James, and the Prince of Wales, and the Reſtoration, and the like; and after that I think it was Mr. Porter took an Orange in his Hand, and ſqueez'd it, I am ſure one in the Company did, and drank ſomething to the Rotten Orange, I cannot very well remember juſt now what it was; but I would be cautious of ſaying any thing but what is Truth; but if your Lordſhip will give me leave to recollect my ſelf, I will tell you what it was——Oh! it was to the ſqueezing of the Rotten Orange, and the Health went round, and Mr. Cranburne was in the Company, and drank the Health. But being diſappointed and fruſtrated of the Deſign by the King's not going abroad that Day, and Mr. Porter being cautioned by Mr. Charnock to take care of himſelf, and being told that Mr. Charnock would not lie at home that Night, and the Guards returning in that manner, they were all apprehenſive that the thing had taken Air, and the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King was diſcovered, and therefore Mr. Porter concluded of going out of Town; ſeveral Healths were drunk round, and I think about Two o'clock he went out of Town, and then the Company broke up. This is what I can ſay as to the Priſoner, and I hope I have ſaid nothing but what is Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we deſire to know whether they will ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Phipps. At the time you ſay this Liſt was given by Captain Porter, to Mr. Cranburne, did Mr. Porter declare to what purpoſe the Liſt was ſent?

Mr. De la Rue. No, Sir, not a Word of any ſuch thing. Mr. King was by, and Mr. Pendergraſs was by, and I think Mr. Keys was by, and he writ a Liſt of his Party, putting me down firſt; and Mr. Pendergraſs ſaid to me, you are Captain, and he gave it to Mr. Cranburne to carry it to Mr. Charnock; what the particular Meſſage was, I cannot be poſitive: Indeed I don't very well remember the Meſſage, but the Liſt was carried to Mr. Charnock, and to the beſt of my memory it was to give Mr. Charnock an Account what Men he was ſure of; for Mr. Porter told me of ſeveral Diſappointments he had had, of Perſons that had promiſed him, and failed.

Mr. Phipps. Can you remember what Mr. Cranburne ſaid upon that?

Mr. De la Rule. No, I do not.

Cranburne. What Meſſage was that, you ſay, I brought from Sir George Barclay?

Mr. De la Rue. I do not ſay that you brought any Meſſage from Sir George Barclay.

Cranburne. You ſaid that I brought a Meſſage that Sir George Barclay would ſee him.

Mr. De la Rue. I do not ſay ſo; but I ſay that you told Mr. Porter that Mr. Charnock ſent you with a Meſſage to let him know that Sir George Barclay was deſirous to ſee Mr. Porter, to confer about taking care of themſelves.

Cranburne. Did you hear me name Sir George Barclay's Name?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, I ſay you told Mr. Porter that Mr. Charnock bid you caution him to take care of himſelf, and that he would go that way, for Sir George Barclay, and he, deſired to ſee him; and Mr. Porter ſaid it was an unreaſonable thing for Mr. Charnock to deſire it, becauſe they knew he was under Circumſtances that it was not proper for him to go, and he wondered they would not rather come to him.

L. C. J. What time a Day was this?

Mr. De la Rue. It was about Twelve o'clock, I think.

L. C. J. Was it after ſuch time as the News was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, my Lord, it was after that time.

Mr. Phipps. Were you with Sir George Barclay when he was here in England? Did you ſee him here?

Mr. De la Rue. I did not ſee him on this ſide of the Water. I knew him abroad, and a great many other unfortunate Perſons, that were concerned in this Affair; I knew ſome of them here, and that they were concerned in the Deſign, but I did not converſe with many, indeed with but a very few about it; for to ſhew that I was not a Man that deſigned to trepan or enſnare any Man, I did never exchange two Words about this Matter with any Perſons that I knew were concerned in it, but Sir William Perkins, (and that but in a ſmall meaſure) and Mr. Charnock and Mr. Porter, and Mr. King, and Col. Parker; except what paſſed upon the 22d, between Mr. Porter, and Mr. Charnock, when Mr. Porter ſent Mr. Cranburne to Mr. Charnock. Mr. Cranburne was one who Mr. Porter called his Quarter-Maſter: I know this Gentleman was commonly depending upon Mr. Porter, but I think I never was much in his Company, I did not know what Deſign he had upon him, but I was told by Mr. Porter, that he intended to make him his Quarter-Maſter, and I underſtood Mr. Porter was to have a Troop of Horſe in Col. Parker's Regiment.

Mr. Phipps. You ſay you knew a great many of them that were concerned, but you diſcourſed and converſed but with a few?

Mr. De la Rue. I do ſo, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. How do you know that they were concerned, when you did not diſcourſe with them?

Mr. De la Rue. By Information from Mr. Charnock and Mr. Porter.

Mr. Phipps. Do you know any thing more of Mr. Cranburne, than the Liſt, and what you have ſaid already?

Mr. De la Rue. I give you an Account of all that I do know.

L. C. J. Anſwer that particular Queſtion. Do you know nothing more than what you have ſaid?

M. De la Rue. No, my Lord, I do not remember nor know any more as to Mr. Cranburne than what I have declared, and I am ſorry I had occaſion to declare ſo much.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Pendergraſs, (who was ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Intended Aſſaſſination, and how far Mr. Cranburne, the Priſoner at the Bar, was concerned in it.

Captain Pendergraſs. My Lord, the 13th of February laſt, I came out of Hampſhire, Mr. Porter ſent for me to come to Town, and I met him that Day at the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, and there he told me of the Aſſaſſination that was to be done on Saturday following: The next Day we dined at the Roſe-Tavern, where the Priſoner dined with us, and we talk'd of the Buſineſs, that was Friday the 14th, and we were to be in readineſs the next Day to aſſaſſinate the King,

King, as he was coming from Richmond; but ſome Company coming in afterwards, we left off the Diſcourſe, and talk'd no more that Night. The next Day that we were to do the Buſineſs, we met at the Blue-Poſts in Spring-Garden, and finding the King did not go abroad that Saturday, we dined there at the Blue-Poſts, and talk'd over again of Aſſaſſinating the King, and the Priſoner was by at the ſame time; they were all mightily concerned the King did not go that Saturday; but when we had dined there, we had no further Diſcourſe about the Aſſaſſination that Day, but every body was to prepare againſt the next Saturday.

L. C. J. Was that agreed upon then?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, it was, by all the Company; ſo we parted that Day. Some time the next Week I met Mr. Porter, and Mr. Porter ask'd me if I had a Horſeman's Sword; I told him, No: Says he to Mr. Cranburne, let Captain Pendergraſs have one of the Horſemen's Swords that you have got. Says Mr. Cranburne to me, if you will come to my Houſe you ſhall make choice of one yourſelf, for I have ſeveral at home. Said I, Mr. Cranburne, I cannot go that Way, but I'll take one of your chooſing, if ſo be you'll leave it at my Lodgings: He ſaid he would do it, and did; he left it at my Lodgings in Suffolk-Street, which Sword I have ſtill. The Day following I met him, and he ask'd me if I had received the Sword; I ſaid I had it; and he ſaid, it was very well. After this I did not ſee Mr. Cranburne till Saturday the 22d, at which Time I came to Mr. Porter's Lodgings between Nine and Ten o'clock in the Morning, and the Priſoner at the Bar was there, and I heard Mr. Porter give him a Meſſage to go to Sir William Perkins for ſome Horſes, I know not how many. The Priſoner went, and in ſome time after, came back again, and brought an Account that the King went out that Saturday the 22d to Richmond; ſo every body was to get ready: And Mr. Cranburne ſaid, that Mr. Charnock deſired that Mr. Porter would ſend a Liſt of his Men; upon which Mr. Porter wrote a Liſt of his Men, and gave it to the Priſoner to carry it to Mr. Charnock, and bid him meet him at the Blue-Poſts; and Mr. Porter, and Mr. De la Rue, and I, took Coach, and went down to Spring-Garden, and when we came to the Blue-Poſts, there were ſome Perſons that I think Mr. De la Rue had appointed to come there; the Priſoner comes thither, and brought the Liſt back, with a Liſt of Mr. Charnock's Men underneath. I know not who the Men were, for I ſaw it only on the one Side of the Table, in Mr. Porter's Hand; at the ſame Time the Priſoner brought an Account, that the King did not go Abroad that Day, and preſently after we had the ſame Account from other Hands; and Captain Porter and I went out of Town, and we heard no more of it.

L. C. J. Are you ſure that he did agree to this Matter before the 15th?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, I am ſure of it, he agreed to it Friday the 14th, at the Roſe-Tavern in Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. On the 15th, it ſeems they were diſappointed; are you ſure there was an Agreement to purſue it the 22d?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, I am ſure there was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Priſoner there?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, my Lord, I am ſure that the Priſoner at the Bar was there.

Cranburne. Pray, Mr. Pendergraſs, was there any Diſcourſe about this Thing when I was there?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, Mr. Cranburne, you cannot but remember there was.

Cranburne. What Hour did I come there, pray Sir?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Truly, I cannot be poſitive to an Hour; but you were there while the Diſcourſe was.

Cranburne. Whether I did ſtay there all the while, and who was in the Company?

Capt. Pendergraſs. All the Company broke up about ſix o'clock, there was Mr. King, Captain Porter, Mr. Kendrick, Mr. Cranburne, Mr. Keys, and myſelf.

Cranburne. Was Kendrick there when I was there?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, I am ſure of it; I will do you all the Juſtice in the World that I can.

Sir B. Shower. You ſay, Sir, he did agree upon the 14th to this Deſign; pray what Words did he uſe?

Capt. Pendergraſs. He did agree that we ſhould attack the King the next Day.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, if you can recollect yourſelf; what did the Priſoner ſay, or whether you took him to agree by being ſilent?

Capt. Pendergraſs. He ſaid, he hop'd we ſhould execute our Buſineſs the next Day.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Capt. Pendergraſs. That was the 14th of February, and the ſame Night I gave Account of the Matter to my Lord Portland.

Mr. Phipps. Did he agree to be one in the Execution of the Deſign?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Yes, he did; he diſcourſed the Matter to me himſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence.

L. C. J. Well, then what ſay you to it for the Priſoner?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, what we have to ſay on behalf of the Priſoner in this Reſpect is this: Here are but three Witneſſes produced, and as to one of them, De la Rue, there is no Evidence that he gives your Lordſhip and the Jury, that affects this Matter, but only that there was a Liſt given by Captain Porter, and carried by the Priſoner to Mr. Charnock, and ſo brought back again. But he does not recollect, nor ſwear to any Meſſage that was ſent from Porter by the Priſoner to Mr. Charnock: Now, my Lord, the bare Carrying of a Note of Names will be no Evidence of Treaſon. Mr. De la Rue does not ſwear to any Privity of the Priſoner, what the Liſt was for, nor to the Delivery of the Liſt, which is the Overt-Act in the Indictment; nor upon what Account this Liſt was written, or ſent, or brought back again, or any Word that proceeded from Captain Porter to him upon giving the Liſt, or any Word when it was brought back again. So that as to De la Rue's Teſtimony, we muſt ſubmit it to the Memories and Recollection of your Lordſhip and the Jury; we think he only proves a Plot in general, of which there is no peradventure, every body is ſatisfied, that there was ſuch a horrible Conſpiracy: Thoſe that have been condemned and executed for it, have own'd it, and ſo it can never be doubted, but he does not ſay any Thing to affect the Priſoner at the Bar; for as to the Drinking of Healths, and being preſent when thoſe Healths were drunk, tho' tho' it be an Evidence of Diſaffection to the Government, or too much good Manners and Complaiſance to the Company a Man is in; yet that Diſaffection, or civil Temper, or Complaiſance, we hope are no Evidences of Treaſon. It is plain the Priſoner did depend very much upon Captain Porter; he was in Truth his Servant to go of his Errands, and expected an Office from him, God knows when; but it does not appear by any particular Action, that he did any thing that can be Treaſon, upon Mr. De la Rue's Evidence. Then as to what Mr. Pendergraſs ſays, I muſt confeſs his Evidence comes Home: For he ſays there was a Deſign of the Aſſaſſination, and ſome Agreement of the Priſoner to it; but I muſt beg your Lordſhip's Favour to obſerve, upon Mr. Pendergraſs's Evidence, if that ſtand alone, it will be but one Witneſs, and then we are ſafe by the Purview of this Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. Ay, and by the Law, before the making of that Act.

Sir B. Shower. Then, as to Captain Porter, I muſt beg leave to ſay, If our Witneſſes are come that were abſent at the other Trial, and they prove what is in my Inſtructions, it will be very much queſtionable, whether there be any Credibility due to his Teſtimony: Then if you take off his Teſtimony, there is only the Evidence of Mr. Pendergraſs; and if he be to be believed, to which I have nothing to ſay at preſent, in the Caſe of a Man's Life, upon an Indictment of Treaſon, where the Law requires two credible Witneſſes, his ſingle Teſtimony is not ſufficient to convict the Priſoner. We beg Leave to call our Witneſſes, and then we ſhall leave it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury.

Mr. Phipps. As to the particular Overt-Act ſaid in the Indictment, the carrying about the Liſt, only Mr. De la Rue ſpeaks to it, and Sir Bartholomew Shower has given it an Anſwer, and I ſhall not repeat it.

L. C. J. Look ye, for that, if any one Overt-Act is prov'd by two Witneſſes, it's well enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Beſides, they miſtake, my Lord, extremely; for Captain Porter, and Mr. Pendergraſs, ſpeak both of them to that Particular, as to the Liſt.

Sir B. Shower. We do not deny it; the Queſtion is, Whether you have two credible Witneſſes?

Cranburne. Pray, Mr. Pendergraſs, do you remember what Captain Porter ſaid to you, and I, when we came down to the Blue-Poſts, leaning upon the Rail?

Capt. Pendergraſs. Indeed, Sir, I do not.

Cranburne. I would have you recollect yourſelf; as we ſtood againſt the Rails in Spring-Garden, when we came down from the Blue-Poſts, after the Deſign miſcarry'd, Mr. Porter ſaid, Mr. Charnock, and they, might thank themſelves if it were diſcovered; For, ſays he, I never communicated a Word of this Thing to any of my Party.

Capt. Pendergraſs. Indeed I don't remember a Word of it, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we have one Piece of Evidence to offer againſt the Teſtimony of Captain Porter: He ſays, That he ſent Cranburne with Gunn from the Cock-pit to ſee for Hackney-Horſes, and that Cranburne came to him to the Sun-Tavern, and there they had ſome Diſcourſe about executing the Deſign the next Day; and being ask'd, Who was by, when he communicated the Deſign to Cranburne, and particularly, Whether Mr. Gunn was by? He ſays he came in afterwards, but was not there at the Time of the Communication about the Deſign. Now we ſhall prove that Gunn came in with the Priſoner, and was with him all the Time, and there was no ſuch Diſcourſe happen'd.

Sir B. Shower. Call Jeffery Gunn, and Mary Gerrard. [They appeared.] Your Lordſhip will obſerve, what Captain Porter ſwore, That he went into the Room to Cranburne, and Gunn was not there: Now, if we falſify him in that Particular, we ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhip how far he is to be believed in the reſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir Bartholomew, ask your Witneſſes what you will, but make no Deſcants upon their Evidence till you have heard them.

Then the two Witneſſes were ſworn.

L. C. J. Well, look ye, you are both upon your Oaths, Conſider what you ſay, ſpeak the Truth, and tell all that you know, and nothing but the Truth. Which do you begin with?

Mr. Phipps. Jeffery Gunn: Pray, Mr. Gunn, did you go to the Sun-Tavern at any Time with Mr. Cranburne?

Gunn. Yes, I did.

Mr. Phipps. What Day of the Month was it?

Gunn. I cannot poſitively tell the Day, it was of a Friday.

Sir B. Shower. Was it of a Friday, in February, or January?

Gunn. It was in February.

Mr. Phipps. Was it before the Plot broke out?

Gunn. Yes, It was.

Mr. Phipps. How long was it before the Plot broke out?

Gunn. I cannot tell that, truly.

Mr. Phipps. Whence did you go?

Gunn. I was at the Cock-pit, and I went from thence to the Sun-Tavern.

Sir B. Shower. Whom did you meet there?

Gunn. I ſaw Captain Porter there.

Sir B. Shower. What Room were you in?

Gunn. We went into a Room next the Street.

Sir B. Shower. Who was there with you?

Gunn. There was Mr. Cranburne, and I, and Mr. Keys.

Sir B. Shower. How long was it before Mr. Porter came in to you?

Gunn. He came in about half a quarter of an Hour after I was there.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there from the Beginning till Mr. Cranburne went away.

Gunn. Mr. Cranburne, and I, went from the Cock-pit together.

Sir B. Shower. How long did you ſtay there?

Gunn. I was there about an Hour and a half.

Sir B. Shower. Were you out of the Room at all in that Time?

Gunn. Yes, I was out of the Room once.

Sir B. Shower. How long were you out of the Room?

Gunn. I went Home to my Lodging.

Sir B. Shower. Were you ever with Mr. Cranburne at the Sun-Tavern at any Time beſides this?

Gunn. Never in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Whom did you leave with him when you went out?

Gunn. Capt. Porter, and Mr. Keys, as I remember.

Sir

Sir B. Shower. Were you there before Captain Porter came to him?

Gunn. I was with Mr. Cranburne, and Captain Porter came in about a Quarter of an Hour after; we came from the Cock-Pit together.

Sir B. Shower. Pray recollect your ſelf, and tell us upon your Oath, were you there when Capt. Porter came in?

Gunn. Yes, I think I was there when Capt. Porter came in.

Sir B. Shower. Did you go and leave him there?

Gunn. We went all out together. I was there about an Hour and half.

L. C. J. Nay, but you ſaid you were abſent ſome Time.

Gunn. I went Home, and came back again.

Sir B. Shower. When you went Home, did you leave Mr. Cranburne behind you?

Gunn. Yes, I think ſo.

Mr. Phipps. Did you leave Captain Porter with him?

Gunn. I think Capt. Porter was with him then.

Mr. Phipps. But upon your Oath, was you in Company with Mr. Cranburne at the Sun-Tavern, when Capt. Porter came firſt in?

Gunn. Capt. Porter went in and out ſeveral Times.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee Capt. Porter before you went to your own Houſe?

Gunn. Yes, ſure.

Mr. Phipps. Then it cannot be true what Mr. Porter ſays, that Gunn did not come in till afterwards.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, Mr. Gunn, I would ask you a Queſtion or two firſt, Were you there all the while that Mr. Cranburne was there, or did you go Home?

Gunn. I went Home.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you come back again?

Gunn. Yes, I went home and eat ſome Victuals.

Mr. At. Gen. How long were you abſent?

Gunn. I came back in half a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. At. Gen. How far is it to your Houſe?

Gunn. 'Tis not above 100 Yards.

Sir B. Shower. Did Mr. Porter come in to you before you went Home, when you firſt came in with Cranburne?

Gunn. He came in after we were in the Room.

Mr. Phipps. Capt. Porter ſaid, when he came into the Room Gunn was not there.

L. C. J. He did not ſay poſitively, but as he remember'd; now I would ask you a Queſtion or two.

Sir B. Shower. Pray my Lord, our Inference from this Evidence is this: Capt. Porter ſays, that upon Friday the 21ſt of February he was with Cranburne at the Sun-Tavern, and out of one Room into another he came to Mr. Cranburne, and talk'd with him of this Deſign, and after that Gunn came in to the Room, after the Communication was over: Now this Man ſwears he went from the Cock-Pit with Mr. Cranburne, he was with him in the Room at firſt when Capt. Porter came; ſome Time afterwards he went to his own Houſe, and left Captain Porter with Mr. Cranburne, and came back again, and they came away together: Now we ſay, theſe two are inconſiſtent; for Capt. Porter ſwears that Gunn was not there till after the Communication was over.

L. C. J. As he remembers.

Mr. Phipps. Nay, I think he was poſitive he came in afterwards.

L. C. J. As I remember he was not poſitive, but call Capt. Porter again.

Mr. Phipps. When you came back from your Houſe, who were in the Room?

Gunn. The ſame Company as I left, as far as I remember.

Mr. Mountague. Was Capt. Porter in the Room when you came back?

Gunn. Indeed I can't directly tell, I believe he was.

L. C. J. Pray obſerve what your Witneſs ſays: He ſays, Capt. Porter came in and out, and was there ſeveral Times before he went away.

Gunn. Yes, my Lord, he was ſo.

L. C. J. And you were abſent ſome Time, but were you there ſome Time before Porter came in?

Gunn. Yes, I believe I was.

Then Capt. Porter came in.

Mr. At. Gen. Look ye, Capt. Porter, you ſee that Man there?

Capt Porter. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an Account of what you know of that Man's coming in to you at the Sun-Tavern.

Capt. Porter. I came ſeveral Times out of Sir George Barclay's Room into theirs, and to the beſt of my Remembrance, Mr. Cranburne was there before Gunn came in.

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember whether the firſt Time that you went out of Sir George Barclay's Room to ſpeak with Mr. Cranburne, Mr. Gunn was there?

Capt. Porter. To the beſt of my Remembrance he was not; to the beſt of my Remembrance, Mr. Gunn, I ſaw Mr. Cranburne in the Room before you was there.

Sir B. Shower. Did not you order Gunn to come with him to the Sun-Tavern?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, I did.

Sir B. Shower. Cannot you tell whether they came together?

Capt. Porter. I was not in the Room when they came in firſt, but to the beſt of my Remembrance he was not there when I came in the firſt Time.

L. C. J. Now, Gunn, you hear what Capt. Porter ſays, before you went away to your own Houſe did Mr. Porter come into the Room to you?

Gunn. Indeed, my Lord, I am not poſitive, I think he did.

Mr. At. Gen. Neither of them is poſitive, and it is a Circumſtance not very material; for it ſeems he was abſent, and then the Diſcourſe might be.

L. C. J. No, it is not material, but you ſee upon a ſtrict Examination what it comes to?

Sir B. Shower. They are agreed upon it I perceive, to be poſitive on neither Side.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Cranburne, pray ask Mrs. Gerrard what you have a mind.

Cranburne. Pray what do you know of Capt. Porter's going out in Diſguiſe, and wearing falſe Hair and Vizards, and going upon the Highway, and ſuch things?

Gerrard. I know not what Mr. Cranburne means. [At which the People laugh'd.]

Sir B. Shower. It is no laughing Matter, when a Man is upon his Life.

L. C. J. No, no, let him have fair Play; Anſwer the Queſtion.

Cranburne.

Cranburne. Do you know any thing of your Maſter's going abroad in Diſguiſes?

Gerrard. I do not know any thing of my Maſter's going upon the Highway.

L. C. J. Did he go out with Vizards, or any ſuch Things?

Gerrard. I never ſaw him wear a Vizard or falſe Beard in my Life, but he had once a Patch on when he was forced to keep out of the way, upon the Account of the Dog-Tavern Buſineſs in Drury-Lane.

Mr. Phipps. See if Mr. Edward Boucher is here. [He was call'd, but did not appear.]

Sir B. Shower. Call Mrs. Burton. [Which was done, but ſhe did not appear.]

Mr. Phipps. Is William Hardyman here? [He was call'd, but did not appear.]

Sir. Shower. Then call Simon Dawſon, and we have done. [Which was done.]

Crier. They are all call'd, but they do not appear.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Directions, upon the Evidence that has been given, as to the Credibility of theſe Witneſſes, and whether what Capt. Porter ſays, and what Gunn ſays be conſiſtent; ſo that you can be ſatisfied there are Two Lawful Credible Witneſſes to prove any Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Yes ſure, but I would have you debate it, if you believe there be any thing in it.

Sir B. Shower. I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Directions.

L. C. J. The Queſtion is, Whether I ſhould give any Directions at all or no, or whether there be any Occaſion for it?

Cranburne. I declare this openly before this Honourable Court, and ſo many Noblemen as are here, that Mr. Porter never made me acquainted with this Deſign, till what he ſwore here.

L. C. J. I can't tell, 'tis ſworn by two Witneſſes.

Cranburne. I do declare, tho' Capt Pendergraſs ſays he does not remember it, that Capt Porter did declare in Spring-Garden the 22d, when he came out of the Blue-Poſts by the Rails, if this Deſign miſcarry, ſays he, Mr. Charnock, may thank himſelf; for I never communicated this Secret to any of my Friends.

L. C. J. But hark ye, do you conſider what you ſay, if this Deſign miſcarry: Pray what Deſign was that?

Cranburne. He never named any thing but the Deſign, he did not ſay what it was.

L. C. J. But why were you employ'd to carry a Liſt from Capt. Porter to Mr. Charnock and to bring a Liſt back again from him to Capt. Porter?

Cranburne. I did carry the Note, but there was nothing mention'd what the Liſt was for.

L. C. J. Then you were there on Friday, the 14th, and there the Deſign was propoſed to Aſſaſſinate the King the next Day, and you engag'd in it.

Cranburne. Not a Word of it true, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay but Mr. Pendergraſs ſwears it, and that you were hearty in the Matter, and hop'd you ſhould do your Buſineſs the next Day.

Cranburne. I can't help it if he does ſwear it.

L. C. J. Then you were at the Meeting at the Sun-Tavern the 21ſt.

Cranburne. My Lord, you hear what Gunn ſays.

L. C. J. As to that they are neither of them poſitive, but you did there promiſe and undertake the Matter, that Capt. Porter is poſitive in, that it was agreed by you all to do it the 22d; and Mr. Pendergraſs ſays, when you were diſappointed the 15th, you all agreed to purſue the ſame Deſign the Saturday following.

Cranburne. My Lord, I did not dine at the Blue-Poſts that Day.

L. C. J. But you were there; I think indeed Mr. Pendergraſs ſays you came in after Dinner, and had ſome Steaks.

Cranburne. I never heard directly nor indirectly of this Deſign, till what I heard them ſwear here.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, you do underſtand for what Crime this Priſoner at the Bar is Indicted: It is for High-Treaſon, in Deſigning and Compaſſing the Death of the King, which was to be effected by an Aſſaſſination, in the moſt barbarous and wicked Manner, that any Attempt of that Nature can poſſibly be made, being to ſurpriſe the King, and murder him in his Coach.

The Queſtion Gentlemen is, whether this Priſoner be Guilty of this Crime or no; there have been three Witneſſes produced that have given Evidence againſt him, Capt. Porter, Mr. De la Rue, and Mr. Pendergraſs; and they do all tell you, that there was ſuch a Deſign on foot to Aſſaſſinate the King, as he came from Hunting at Richmond, after he came on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green. There were diverſe Perſons engaged in this Deſign, which Sir George Barclay was come from France to promote and manage: Capt. Porter, as it does appear upon his Evidence, was a Perſon that was principally engag'd, and at that Time was hearty in the Proſecution of it.

As to Mr. Cranburne, Capt. Porter tells you he was a Man that he had had a long Acquaintance with, and had employed him and deſigned to employ him as an Officer under him, in caſe a Revolution happened, which it ſeems about that Time, and ſome time before it, was expected. Captain Porter was to have been a Captain and I think he deſigned to promote Cranburne to be his Quarter-maſter; and he ſent him to buy Arms; and Preparations were made for that Buſineſs; but that is not the Thing that we are now upon, the Matter that now properly falls under our Conſideration, is this; The Coming over of Sir George Barclay, the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February laſt, upon which, as it ſeems, Mr. Porter was engaged; and having an Intereſt in this Cranburne, and there being Horſes to be furniſh'd to attack the King and his Guards about Turnham-Green, this Man, Cranburne, was a Perſon that was engaged to be one of the Horſemen that were to make the Attack, and he tells you that he did employ him to provide Horſes and Swords, and to prepare the Piſtols, and that he did engage in it, and particularly that the Deſign was to be executed on Saturday the 15th of February, and that he was then ready to go with Capt. Porter; but on that Saturday the King did not go abroad, whereby the Deſign was diſappointed for that Time: Afterwards there was a Meeting at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, where he met with Sir George Barclay and others of them, and there comes to that Tavern Mr. Cranburne and others, and they were in another Room, and Capt. Porter ſays he came to them, and did diſcourſe about purſuing the Deſign the very next Day, which was agreed, and Cranburne was ready to go the next Day.

Then

Then he tells you further, that the next Day being Saturday the 22d, the ſecond Time that this Aſſaſſination was to have been executed, upon the Deſire of Mr. Charnock, who was a Perſon alſo that was engaged in this Deſign, Captain Porter writes a Liſt of the Men he could bring, and ſent it by Cranburne to Charnock; Cranburne carries the Liſt to Mr. Charnock, and brings it back again with an Addition of the Names of Mr. Charnock's Men underneath.

Mr. De la Rue is called, and he ſwears to that very Circumſtance, that Mr. Cranburne was ſent by Captain Porter with a Liſt to Mr. Charnock, and brought it back again from Mr. Charnock, with an Addition of other Names.

Then Mr. Pendergraſs tells you, that he was with this Mr. Cranburne, the Priſoner at the Bar, the fourteenth of February, and there was a Diſcourſe of going in purſuance of this Deſign the next Day, and the Priſoner agreed to it, which he is poſitive in: He tells you, that when they were diſappointed the 15th, being at the Blue-Poſts, they then agreed to purſue it the next Saturday; Cranburne was one of them that agreed.

Captain Porter and De la Rue inform you that Healths were drank to the late King, and the late Queen, and the Prince of Wales, as they called him, and then at length, as the concluding Health, Captain Porter, or ſome of them in the Company, having an Orange in his Hand, ſqueez'd it, and drank a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange, which was pledged by all, and particularly by Mr. Cranburne, as is proved by both Captain Porter and De la Rue.

So that now, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you, whether this is not Evidence ſufficient to prove this Man guilty of the Treaſon whereof he is indicted, that is, of Deſigning and Intending the Aſſaſſination of the King, and being engaged as a Party to execute this Deſign, whenever there was an Opportunity.

The Counſel inſiſt upon it, on the Behalf of the Priſoner, that what Captain Porter ſays is not Evidence: In the firſt Place they urge that he is not a Man of Credit, for they have mentioned that he uſed to be diſguiſed, and wear a Vizard Mask, and go abroad under odd Circumſtances, and therefore his Reputation they hope is not good enough to make him a credible Witneſs againſt the Priſoner: Now the Priſoner's Witneſs being produced, ſays he never knew him go in Diſguiſe, or wear a Vizard Mask, but once he wore a Patch, becauſe he was under ſome ill Circumſtances about a Riot in Drury-Lane; every Body underſtands what the Meaning of that was, his Drinking of Healths at a riotous Aſſembly, upon the 10th of June, and he being under ſome Proſecution for that, occaſioned him to wear that Diſguiſe, but it was not done to hinder any Perſon, or do any Miſchief.

But then, ſay they, he is miſtaken in his Evidence, of the Meeting at the Sun-Tavern the 21ſt of February, the Day before the laſt, that this Deſign was to have been executed, for whereas he ſays, that Gunn was not there when he came to them, yet Gunn was in the Company at that Time, and whereas he ſwears poſitively that they diſcourſed of going upon the ſame Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King the next Day, as was agreed the Saturday before; Gunn heard no ſuch Diſcourſe. Gunn is called, and he tells you he did come to the Sun-Tavern at that Time, with Cranburne and Captain Porter, he came into the Room, and he heard no ſuch Diſcourſe. They did open it indeed that Gunn had been there all the while, and if ſo, then if there had been ſuch a Diſcourſe, he muſt have heard it. Gunn has been examined, and does tell you he was not there all the while, but went out and was abſent for ſome Time, about half a quarter of an Hour.

They have made a Queſtion whether Captain Porter came in when Gunn was there, he ſays truly he thinks that Captain Porter did come into the Room while he was there, before he went out, but he cannot tell certainly, he was there ſome Time, while he was there. Then Captain Porter was called again, and Captain Porter does ſay he knows Gunn was there, but whether he was there at that Time he came in, he cannot ſay poſitively; but Gunn ſays Captain Porter was going in and out ſeveral Times, as Porter ſays himſelf; and Gunn was abſent for ſome part of the Time. So that I cannot ſee any ſort of Contradiction between the Evidence that Porter gives, and the Evidence that Gunn gives; the one is uncertain, and ſo is the other as to that Circumſtance.

But, Gentlemen, they would infer, that if there was any ſuch Diſcourſe while Gunn was there, it muſt be of neceſſity that Gunn muſt have heard it; but it is not neceſſary the Diſcourſe ſhould be when Gunn was there: Captain Porter ſwears poſitively, that there was ſuch a Diſcourſe of going the next Day to purſue the Deſign, and he ſays he thinks Gunn was not preſent at that Time when the Diſcourſe was, and Gunn ſays he was abſent ſome part of the Time.

And ſo I muſt leave it to you; upon the whole Matter, if Mr. Cranburne the Priſoner at the Bar, did conſent and agree to act in this bloody and wicked Deſign, then you are to find him Guilty; if you are not ſatisfied of that upon the Evidence you have heard, or you think there is any Inconſiſtency, or Incoherence in the Teſtimony on the one ſide, and the other; and that there is good Reaſon to disbelieve the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, then you are to acquit him. You have heard your Evidence, and you had beſt conſider of it.

Cl. of the Crown. Who keeps the Jury?

Crier. There is an Officer ſworn.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and about a Quarter of an Hour after returned.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names, John Caine.

Mr. Caine. Here. [And ſo of the Reſt.]

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did] Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Charles Cranburne is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Caine. My Lord, the Jury humbly deſires they may be diſcharged from their Attendance to-morrow.

L. C. J. We cannot do it, unleſs the Jury be full without them; if you come early, we ſhall diſpatch you preſently.

Then the Priſoner was taken from the Bar, and the Court adjourned till Seven o'clock the next Morning.

CLVIII. The Trial of Robert Lowick, for High-Treaſon, April 22, 1696. 8 Will. III.

THIS Day the Juſtice of Oyer and Terminer holden for the County of Middleſex, met, and the Court was reſum'd by Proclamation in uſual Form.

Clerk of the Arraignments. Keeper of Newgate, ſet Robert Lowick to the Bar, (which was done.) You the Priſoner at the Bar, Robert Lowick, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them, as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Mr. Mompeſſon. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to favour me with one Word for the Priſoner at the Bar, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with any thing that was urged by the Gentlemen that were of Counſel Yeſterday, but I ſhall rely upon ſomething that has not yet been ſpoken to. My Lord, they have not laid any Time or Place where the Conſent or Agreement was, for the forty Men that were to ſet upon the King and his Guards: There is a Time laid before where they met and diſcourſed of the Ways and Means how to aſſaſſinate and kill the King; but when it comes to the Aſſenſerunt, Conſenſerunt, & Agreaverunt, with ſubmiſſion, this being another Act, there ought to be another Time and Place laid, and for that I ſhall cite your Lordſhip two or three Caſes; for Men may meet and propoſe, and diſcourſe, and conſult of ſuch Things, tho' they be very ill Things, and yet that may not be Treaſon. It's the Agreement that is the Treaſon, and ſo it was held in Captain Blague's Caſe about taking the Tower. They may meet at one Time and Place, and at another Time and Place they may agree, in Dyer, 68 B. and 69 Pl. 28. A Man was indicted for Murder, That he at ſuch a Place in and upon the Perſon that was murdered, inſultum fecit, & ipſum, the Perſon that was murdered, cum quodam cultello, of ſuch a Price, percuſſit; and he does not ſhew the Place where he ſtruck him, nor had the Indictment the Words, ad tunc & ibidem, and therefore the Court held it void: So it is likewiſe ruled in Goodrick's Caſe, Hell. 35 & 119. and therefore in Indictments for Murder, ſince they generally ſet forth not only the Time and Place of the Aſſault, but likewiſe of the Blow; ſo likewiſe in Things of a more inferior Nature, as Reſcues returned by the Sheriff, that the Capias was ſerved, but does not ſhew where the Reſcue was; or though he ſhews where the Arreſt was, and an & coupled the Reſcue to it, yet it was adjudged an ill Return, Dyer 69. Pl. 29. 10. Edw. 4. 15 Fitz. Ret. Vice. 32 Bro. Ret. Det. Bre. 97. and Error 193. Palm 564. and in Noy 114. there are theſe Words, Note, It was moved in Diſcharge of Reſcue, the Return was, that they, viz. A. B. aforeſaid, the Bailiffs, ad tunc & ibidem vulneraverunt, &c. And the aforeſaid George, &c. Reſcuſerunt without ad tunc & ibidem, referred only to the Vulneraverunt, and not to the Reſcuſerunt, and therefore the Return was adjudged inſufficient; for, my Lord, although in Conveyances, a Clauſe or Word in the Beginning or End may refer to the Whole, yet in Indictments, every Sentence muſt be certain, plain, and expreſs, and have its own Time and Place: Therefore in Noy's Rep. 122. Raymond was indicted for ſtopping a Croſs-Way leading from a certain Ville called Stoake, into a Ville called Melton, in the County of Dorſet, and the Indictment was quaſh'd, becauſe in the County of Dorſet ſhall refer only to Melton, and not to both: So an Indictment of forceable Entry into a Meſſuage exiſtens Liberum Tenementum of J. S. is not good for want of the Words ad tunc, though the Participle exiſtens does ſtrongly imply that it was his Houſe at that Time, 3 Cro. 754. Het. 73. Noy 131. Palm. 426, Bridg. 68. 2 Cro. 214, & 610. Sid. 102. Lat. 109. &c. And my Lord Coke tells us in Calvin's Caſe 5 B. that Indictments of Treaſon, of all others, are the moſt curiouſly and certainly indited and penned; and all thoſe that I have ſeen and obſerved, have contained more Certainty than the Indictment now before your Lordſhip: In Reginald Tucker's Caſe, the Indictment was, That he and Thomas Place apud Bridgwater, in Com. Somerſett. prædict. Compaſſaverunt, to kill and depoſe the King, &c. and to bring their treaſonable Purpoſes to effect, they the ſaid Reginald Tucker and Thomas Place, the ſame Day and Year, at Bridgwater aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, againſt the King, with a great Multitude of People, array'd in a warlike manner, viz. with Swords, &c. ſeipſos illicite & proditorie inſimul ad tunc & ibidem congregaverunt & aſſemblaverunt & guerram publicam contra dictum Dominum Regem apud Bridgewater prædict. in Com. prædict. dicto viceſimo Die Junii Anno primo ſupradicto proditorie paraverunt, ordinaverunt & levaverunt. So in the Indictment of Gate, as it is ſet forth at large in a Plea in Bar of Dower, brought by his Wife, he with Force and Arms, apud Villam de Ware, &c. aſſembled with a great many Perſons, & Bellum crudele contra dictam Dominam Reginam apud Ware, prædict. ad tunc falſo & proditorie publicavit cavit & levavit, ac insuper ad tunc & ibidem falso & proditorie, proclaimed the Duke of Northumberland, to be Lieutenant-General of their Forces; & etiam falso & proditorie apud Ware prædict. ad tunc, proclaimed the Lady Jean Dudley Queen. This is in Bendlowe's Reports, publisht by Serjeant Rowe, fol. 55. placito 91. So in the Earl of Leicester's Case, Plowd. Com. 385, the Indictment is laid much after the same manner, and many other Indictments, which at present I am unwilling to trouble your Lordship with; and this being one of a new Form and of the first Impression, I hope your Lordship will hold it insufficient. And, my Lord, when they go farther, and say, Et quilibet, eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum, there is no Place or Time alledged where that was done, which of Necessity should be mentioned: For it is a constant Rule in our Books, that what is issuable, ought to have a Place where it may be tried. Now, this is issuable, and the most material Thing in the Indictment is, for compassing the King's Death. The Overt-Acts are, That Christopher Knightley the Prisoner, and two others, did consult to kill the King; and afterwards did agree how to do it, viz. by forty Horsemen Quorum, these should be four, and every one of them did agree to be one; then comes the other Overt-Act of providing Arms for them. Now suppose they should not prove the last, viz. the providing Arms; then, my Lord, they must resort to one of the other Overt-Acts, that these four did consult and agree to kill the King; or that these four did agree, the manner how to do it, as is laid in the Indictment; and 'tis plain they must fail of Proof of either of these; for by the not prosecuting any one of the Name of Christopher Knightley, but preferring a new Indictment against one Alexander Knightley, it appears that Christopher Knightley was not there; and the proving these three others making a Consult and Agreement, is not a Proof of the same Overt-Act, that is laid in the Indictment, as it ought to be by the late Act; unless they can prove that a Consult of Three is a Consult of Four: And if it be answered, that it is alledged, that Quilibet eorum super se suscepit, then will that come to be issuable, and the most material Part of the Indictment; and consequently a Place ought to have been laid where it should be tried; this, my Lord, is a distinct Sentence of it self, it is in a Parenthesis, and though you take it away, the Sense of what remains is perfect and intire; and consequently this Sentence is or should be intire of it self, and therefore ought certainly to be expressed. Besides, if your Lordship pleases, it is not positively laid, what these Persons severally undertook to be, there is indeed mention made before of Forty Horsemen, agreed upon to set upon the King, then comes the Parenthesis, Quorum iidem Christophorus Knightley, Robertus Lowick, Ambrosius Rookwood & Carolus Cranburne forent Quatuor, & quilibet eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum: It is perhaps expressed fully enough by the Word Quorum, that it was agreed these should be four of the forty Horsemen; but there wants the Repetition of the Word Quorum, to express what they severally engaged to be; and the Word & cannot join and connect the Sentences: For forent and suscepit differ not only in Number, but also in Mood and Tense, and the Sense is not necessarily coherent; for it might be true, that the Majority of the Company might agree, these should be four, and yet they themselves might not severally engage therein, and one or some of them might undertake it, and yet the Company not agree to it; and it cannot be mended by Intendment. There was Vaux's Case, in the 4 Rep. 44. he was indicted for Murder, for persuading a Man to take Cantharides; it was laid, That he persuadebat eundem Nicholaum recipere & bibere quendam potum mixtum cum quodam veneno vocat. Cantharides; and the Indictment says, Quod prædictus Nicholaus nesciens prædictum potum cum Veneno prædicto fore intoxicatum, sed fidem adhibens Dictæ persuasioni Willielmi Recepit & Bibit; but does not say, venenum prædictum, but yet it adds, Per quod prædictus Nicholaus immediate post receptionem veneni prædicti, languished and died; here, one would think, was a sufficient Implication, that he took and drank the Poison; but it was ruled, that none of these Words were sufficient to maintain the Indictment; for the Matter of the Indictment ought to be plain, express, and certain, and shall not be maintained by Argument or Implication, and therefore for Want of those Words the Indictment was held insufficient, and the Man again indicted for that Offence, and there seems much more Incertainty in this Indictment, and therefore I humbly pray your Lordship that it may be quash'd.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think the Objection is fully put, and therefore we desire to have their Answer to it.

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr. At. Gen. We think, my Lord, this Objection will receive a very plain Answer. The Indictment sets forth, That at such a Place the Prisoner at the Bar did imagine and compass the Death of the King: There is a particular Case where the Imagining was, and that they, to accomplish that Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, did, among others, postea eisdem die & anno apud parochiam prædictam, meet and consult, &c. so there's the same Place set forth again, wherein they did meet and consult of the Ways and Means, and Time and Place, when, where, and how to assassinate the King: And immediately it follows, & consenserunt & agreaverunt, &c. that forty Men, whereof they were to be four, and every one of them undertook to be one, should do so and so. Now, my Lord, say they, It is not said that the Agreement that there should be forty Men to do it, was at the same Time and Place where they did meet and consult about the Ways and Means: But, my Lord, with submission, it is very plain, that the Agreement for forty Men, and the particular Agreement for them to be of the Number, is but the Effect of the Consultation that is mention'd just before: For it is said, they consulted how they should do it, and they agreed to do it in this manner; the particular manner is set forth immediately after that, it is said they did consult of the manner; so that, my Lord, it is Part of the former Sentence; a Particularizing of what they did agree upon at that Consultation; but it is no distinct Overt-Act: If it had been a distinct Overt-Act, then the Cases that have been cited by the Council, do shew, that there should be a particular Time and Place mentioned for every Overt-Act; but this is only a Part of that Overt-Act that was mentioned generally before: This tells you particularly what the Means were they did agree upon, and the Sentence is not compleat till you have gone over this; so that, my Lord, with submission, it had been very improper when they agreed at such a Time and Place, of the Means and Ways how it ſhould be effected, then to ſet forth that it was at the ſame Time and Place where they did conſult of the Ways and Means, that cannot be proper; for it is not laid at firſt, that there was any particular Way propoſed, but only in general, they conſulted of the Ways and Means; therefore, my Lord, all this that Mr. Mompeſſon has ſaid, will not be pertinent to this Caſe, it is impoſſible to have been otherwiſe; it is but a Part of the Sentence; and it is not compleat till you have gone over the ſeveral Particulars: As to the Caſe of a Reſcous, that is, the Offence upon which the Matter is to be grounded; the Verberavit and Vulneravit are not the Reſcueing; but where there is not one Sentence compleat, till you come to the End of theſe Words, there it muſt be all taken together; ſo it is here, they conſulted of the Way, and agreed this to be the Way, which they ſet forth in particular: It is joined to the former Part of the Sentence, and the whole is not compleat without it.

Sir John Hawles. Mr. Sol. Gen. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, it cannot be otherwiſe, nor can they make it Senſe otherwiſe.

Sir John Holt. L. C. J. They ſay you might and ſhould have put in, ad tunc & ibidem.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, I ſay it cannot be repeated again: Indeed if you would make it like the Caſe, as Mr. Mompeſſon would have it, that forty Men did agree to it, and forty Men did it, it were neceſſary to name Time and Place, as it is in the Caſe of Murder: That he did agree to murder him, and afterwards knock'd him on the Head, there you ſhall lay Time and Place where he agreed, and where he did the Act, for there is an Act done; but in this Caſe there is no Act done, but only an Agreement that forty ſhould do it, whereof theſe four were to be part of the Number. Now, they cry, you do not ſay what theſe four were to be for. Yes, we do: The Forty were to do ſuch an Act, and theſe were to be four of that forty, and every one of them undertook to be one; ſo that it cannot be expreſs'd otherwiſe than it is; for what they ſay of the Indictment's being not in the ſame Form that other Indictments are, that will be no Argument at all; for it does not follow, that there muſt be one expreſs'd Form of Indictment; of Right there are divers Forms of Indictments, and all of them good, becauſe Indictments are to be framed according to the particular Caſe, and they cannot put me an Inſtance of ſuch a particular Caſe as this. As to that of the Miſtake of the Name of Knightley, that unqueſtionably can be no Objection at all: For how does it appear to the Court, that this is againſt the ſame Perſon that was before indicted by the Name of Chriſtopher? there may be another Chriſtopher, for ought they know: But I will ſuppoſe, that the Conſult was proved not, as it is laid, that there were to be four; but only that they were to be three of them, it would be well enough againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, if he be proved to be one.

Mr. Conyers. Firſt, we have here laid a Time and Place for the Treaſon alledged in the Indictment, and alſo for the two Overt-Acts, how, when, and where it was to be done, and the providing of Arms for it; and for this Particular of the forty Men, that they would have us put the ad tunc & ibidem to that, is but Part of the Overt-Act, which was before alledged; for the firſt Overt-Act mentioned, is the Meeting and Conſulting, and there we lay both Time and Place; that on ſuch a Day, and at ſuch a Place, they did meet and conſult of the Way and Manner how to do ſuch an Act: And then we continue on the Sentence, by particularizing how it was to be effected; that they did agree there ſhould be forty Horſemen to do it, whereof they were to be four: This is but a Part of the Overt-Act, which is the Conſulting and Agreeing upon the Ways and Means; this particular Means agreed upon, being but the Reſult and Effect of the Conſultation before: So that we conceive there is no Want of Time or Place upon which to take Iſſue in this Caſe.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I think, with ſubmiſſion, there is nothing in their Objection, and I take it to have received a full Anſwer already: Yet I would ask one Thing of the Gentlemen of the other Side, had the Sentence run without the Words de iis modis & mediis, &c. which follow after the Word conſultavit, and before the Words & aggreavit; in this manner, That they did then and there traiterouſly treat, propoſe, conſult, and agree, that forty Horſemen, or thereabouts, with Guns, and ſo forth. If then there had been any Colour to think it neceſſary, that it ſhould be laid in this manner, That they did then and there traiterouſly treat, and then and there traiterouſly propoſe, and then and there traiterouſly conſult, and did then and there traiterouſly agree: And if not, then I would deſire them to tell me why then and there is more neceſſary to one Verb did agree, than it is to all the Reſt, in Senſe and common Speaking. The only Uſe of a Conjunction copulative, is to derive the Force of ſome Words, in a Sentence foregoing, down to a Sentence following, to avoid Repetition: And here, though after the Conſultation be put many Words that relate to that Matter, by Way of Parentheſis; yet the ad tunc & ibidem ſtill does refer to all the Verbs following, being joined by the Conjunction copulative; it does not vary the Caſe at all, the putting in that Parentheſis; it is notwithſtanding but as one Sentence: And the ſuppoſing that the Parentheſis ſtood out, makes it very plain, there can be no Colour to ſay there wanted a Repetition of the ad tunc & ibidem to every Verb.

Sir B. Shower. With ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip's Judgment, there is no Anſwer made to this Objection. I do agree, if there had been ſeveral Verbs, and no other Words had intervened, that an & would have coupled all together, and you need not have repeated ad tunc & ibidem to every one: But here is a Fact after the Verbs, that makes one compleat entire Sentence; and if this of the forty Men were left out, it had been a good Sentence, that they did propoſe and treat how, where and when; that's a Sentence of it ſelf, the Conſulting and the Treating of the Ways and Means; But then they ſay, and they did agree and aſſent that forty ſhould do it: Now there is no Neceſſity for the interpreting of theſe Words, That they ſhould conſult and agree at the ſame Place and Time; there is no neceſſity to conjoin this Agreement for the forty Men with the Conſultation; they might propoſe and conſult at one Time and Place, and not agree, and afterwards agree at another Time and Place: It is not a Specification, or, as they call it, a ſpecifick Account of the Conſultation, nor a neceſſary Effect of it, ſo as to make it neceſſary to join them together; they might meet and conſult at one Time and Place,

Place, and at another Time and Place they might agree that forty should do it; and therefore when you say at one Time and Place they did consult and propose, and afterwards they did agree; it is not necessarily implied, that it must be at the same Time and Place; and when it is not necessarily implied, we think it necessary in Indictments, for Certainty-sake, to have ad tunc & ibidem inserted again.

Mr. Mompesson. My Lord, Mr. Sollicitor says, That as to other Precedents, that does not make it necessary that this should be like them; and that it is no Argument that it ought to be so here. My Lord Coke, in Calvin's Case tells us, That by Precedents the Law is known, and that Indictments of Treason are of all Things the most curiously penn'd; and it is common to infer the Law is so, because usually it is so in the Precedents of Indictments. Mr. Sollicitor says likewise, That there may be a Christopher Knightley besides an Alexander; but I cannot take that for an Answer to the Exception I urge, which is the Want of ad tunc & ibidem at the Quorum, and the Quilibet; for the Quilibet may come to be in Question as the most material Part of the Indictment, because the Agreement of the Four upon the Meeting of the Four is alledg'd as an Overt-Act. Now, with submission, they must prove the Assembly of the whole Four, or they do not prove the Overt-Act expresly laid: Then as to the Quilibet suscepit, which is the most material Part, it has no Time nor Place.

Mr. At. Gen. No sure: We do not need to prove all four, for it is a distinct Offence in each, and if any one undertook, it is well enough against him: and for the Time and Place, we tell you, it is Part of the former Sentence, and makes but an intire One.

Mr. Mompesson. As for the Residue of the Verbs, if they had been omitted, it had been good Sense; but this is a perfect intire Sentence of itself, when it tells you what they consulted and treated of, as in the Case of the Rescue that I put; if it had stopp'd there, it had been a good Sentence without the Vulnaverunt.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Rescous is the Offence in that Case, the other is distinct: But here, in this Case, nothing can be plainer than that all is one Act, as we have laid it, That at such a Time and Place they did consult and treat of the Ways and Means; but then there is no Agreement mentioned till after we have said they did consult of the Ways and Means, and did agree that this should be the Way: This is certainly one intire Sentence that shews what the Agreement was upon the Consultation as the Result of it.

Mr. Cowper. As to what Sir Bartholomew Shower says, That we ought to repeat the ad tunc & ibidem, unless the Sense of the Words implies a Necessity that the Consultation and the Agreement should be at one Time and Place. My Lord, there can be nothing in that, for it does not arise from the Necessity of the Thing one Way or t'other; but we take it as an intire Sentence, and that the whole Matter is sufficiently connected and laid to one Time and Place, though it might be divided, it must be taken, as alledged, to be one intire Fact, or else it recurs to the same Objection, that ad tunc & ibidem must as well be put to every Verb; for 'tis possible they might propose at one Time and Place, and consult at another, and debate at another, as well as agree at another: So that nothing is to be argued from the Necessity of the Thing more in one Case than the other; for one Man might propose it in one Place, and the Rest might then shake their Heads at it, and then they might again meet and consult at another Place, and afterwards agree at a Third: But when it is said then and there they did meet, consult, and agree, it cannot be understood but that the Agreement was at the same Time and Place with the Meeting and Consult.

Sir B. Shower. But this can be no Answer that Mr. Cowper gives now, for proposing, and consulting, and treating, and debating, are all of the same Signification, for one Man's proposing to another; and the other's proposing to him, is consulting, treating, and debating; but now consulting and agreeing are different Things.

Mr. Cowper. So is proposing and consultng: One may propose, but there must be at least Two to consult: There is that nice Difference between them.

Sir B. Shower. Every one must agree for himself, and that must be certainly laid with Time and Place, let the Proposal and Consultation be what it will.

L. C. J. Mr. Mompesson puts that Case in Dyer upon an Indictment of Murder, That on such a Day, and at such a Place, the Party made an Assault upon the Persons slain, & percussit; but does not say, Et ad tunc & ibidem percussit, and for not alledging that the Indictment was held nought.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, That is a different Case from this, because insultum fecit, and the percussit, are different Crimes; there is a great Difference between an Assault and a Stroke: But here it is, That they did propose and consult of the Ways and Means, and agreed upon this particular Way; that is the same Thing; it is not an intire Sentence till you come to the End of it, then it is compleat when you shew what was the Effect of the Consultation; what they were agreed upon, and not till then.

Mr. Mompesson. A Man's holding up his Hand is an Assault, but he must actually Strike, to be guilty of Murder: So a Man may debate, and yet not agree: It is the Agreement that is the Treason.

L. C. J. Read the Indictment.

Mr. Mompeſſon. The Conſult is like the Aſſault, and the Agreement is like the Stroke.

L. C. J. Treby. It is a nice Caſe as you would have it, but I think it is very natural as the King's Counſel put it at firſt; they lay the Conſultation of the Ways and Means how it ſhould be done, and then they conclude that thus it ſhall be done: All which makes but one intire Thing.

L. C. J. They ſay they met that Day at St. Paul Covent-Garden, that's in the Beginning, and did conſult how to kill the King; and they conſented and agreed among themſelves, that it ſhould be done in this manner: Does not this refer to both Time and Place in the Beginning? It is a continuing on of the ſame Sentence, and makes all but one and the ſame Act; it is the Reſult of the Conſultation at that Time and Place.

Sir B. Shower. But, my Lord, it might be at another Place: They might conſult at one Place, and conclude at another.

Mr. Conyers. But it is laid to be at the ſame Place, for no other Place does appear, and it is one continued Sentence.

L. C. J. Treby. You would make the Repetition ſo frequent and reiterated, that it would become abſurd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Indeed I do not know what theſe Gentlemen would have.

Sir B. Shower. We would have this Indictment as all others are, the Precedents are as we ſay, and we hope this ſhall purſue 'em, or elſe be quaſh'd.

L. C. J. Look ye here, Sir Bartholomew Shower; ſuppoſe this Part ſhould not be right, that will not vitiate the whole Indictment.

Mr. Mompeſſon. But your Lordſhip won't ſuffer them to give Evidence of that Part that is vicious.

L. C. J. Yes, yes; it comes within the firſt Words of the Time and Place laid; they may give Evidence of it, becauſe this is but a ſetting forth for the Manner agreed upon for the Execution of the Deſign that was before conſulted and treated of; it is comprehended in the former Words; and if they had omitted this out of the Indictment, the Indictment had been never the worſe; there had been a ſufficient Overt-Act alledged to prove the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; for if People at ſuch a Place and Time meet, and propoſe the Way and Means how to effect it, do you think the Indictment would not be good enough without laying the particular Means agreed upon? Certainly it had been well enough if this had been omitted. Do you think they cannot give in Evidence this as a Proof of the Overt-Act? Certainly they may.

Sir B. Shower. The Queſtion will be, my Lord, then upon the Whole, Whether the Concluſion of the Indictment, contra legiantiæ ſuæ Debitum, ſhall be taken diſtributively to every Fact, and if ſo, then there ought to be Time and Place alledg'd to every Fact.

L. C. J. Suppoſe you lay ſeveral Overt-Acts, and prove but one, yet he is to be found guilty of the High-Treaſon, which is the Imagination, and Compaſſing the Death of the King, which is the Crime laid in the Indictment; then ſuppoſe this was left out of the Indictment, they might give it in Evidence, as a Proof of the Overt-Act, that it is well laid for Time and Place; and therefore though it be expreſs'd, and not ſo fully and particularly laid, we cannot quaſh the Indictment for it, becauſe the Indictment would have been good, though that had been omitted.

L. C. J. Treby. That is certainly true, it is no Cauſe for quaſhing the Indictment.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Indictments againſt the Regicides were for Compaſſing the Death of the King, and they gave in Evidence that he was put to Death, though they charged in the Indictment only the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King.

L. C. J. Ay ſure, that is an Overt-Act with a Witneſs, the Indictment was not laid for Murdering the King, but for Compaſſing his Death, which is the Treaſon according to the Act of Parliament of 25th, Ed. the 3d, and as an Overt-Act they gave the Cutting off his Head in Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Indictment ſays, they compaſſed and imagined the King's Death, and they agreed to do it in this manner; if this be not all one intire Sentence I know not what is.

L. C. J. As to your Caſe, Mr. Mompeſſon, which you quote out of Dyer, it is poſſible a Man may make an Aſſault at one Time, and at another Time make an Aſſault and give a Stroke, but this is all one Act, it does but ſpecify what was generally conſulted of and propoſed.

L. C J. Treby. Pray, do you think a Man may demur upon a common Action of Battery, where 'tis ſaid firſt, at ſuch a Time and Place, Inſultum fecit & verberavit, vulneravit, becauſe there is not a Place ſet to every Word.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Indictments ought to be very curiouſly penn'd, and what is good in an Action will not be good in an Indictment, with Submiſſion.

L. C. J. Treby. But ſuppoſe you ſhew'd it for Cauſe upon ſpecial Demur.

Mr. Mompeſſon. My Lord, I cannot tell what it would amount unto.

L. C. J. You cannot quaſh the Indictment at this Time, that is not poſſible, becauſe the Indictment is good as to the reſt, ſuppoſing this was not ſo well as it might be.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Then, my Lord, I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether they ſhall be admitted to give in Evidence this particular Thing.

L.

L. C. J. They may certainly give in Evidence, the Agreement to have Forty Men to kill the King, as a Proof of the Conſultation, Agreement, and Conſent to kill the King; and the Conſenting to have Forty Horſemen is an Evidence of their treating, propoſing, and conſulting to kill the King. Then for your Objection of Quilibet ſuſcepit to be one, that is well enough, it is all ſtill but one Sentence.

Sir B. Shower. One of which is it? for they have not laid in the Indictment what it is, whether it be one of the Four, or one of the Forty.

L. C. J. Whether it be one of the Four, or the Forty, is not material, for cannot one be found guilty, and the reſt acquitted? the one is not charged with the Act of the other, but they are ſeveral Offences, and each muſt anſwer for himſelf. In all Indictments, Offences are ſeveral. Suppoſe an Indictment of Conſpiracy, and it is laid in the Indictment that Four did conſpire, can't you prove that two conſpired? no Queſtion you may. It is not certainly neceſſary that every one ſhould be proved to have conſpired. Suppoſe it were alledged that Four did beat a Man, and does not ſay Quilibet eorum beat him, you may give in Evidence that one did beat him.

Sir B Shower. No Queſtion of that in Caſe of a Battery, but in the Caſe of a Conſpiracy there muſt be more than one.

L. C. J. Nay, I will ask you even in an Action of Conſpiracy, where the very Giſt of the Action is Conſpiring together, cannot two be found guilty, and the reſt acquitted? In Riots there muſt be Three or more. It may be you'll lay Ten, but it is ſufficient, I hope, if you prove it upon any Three of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Difference is betwixt Contracts and Crimes, for Contracts they are joint, but Crimes they are in their own Nature ſeveral.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Beſides, my Lord, though they be out of Time, yet this is not to the Abatement of the Indictment, but to the Evidence; how do they know, but we will give it in Evidence that Chriſtopher Knightley was one.

L. C. J. Treby Mr Mompeſſon moves it as a Caveat againſt your giving it in Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. If in an Outlawry againſt diverſe, they leave out theſe Words, Nec eorum aliquis comparuit, that is every Day held to be nought, and for that Reaſon we ſay, the Quilibet eorum ſuſcepit is neceſſary too, and without being laid cannot be given in Evidence, and if it be laid, it ought to have Time and Place.

L. C. J. Treby. The Default of Appearance muſt be a ſeveral Thing, and when he lays it jointly non comparuerunt, it may be true that all did not appear, if any one made Default; but when you charge Men with a Fact done, though in the plural Number, yet it is a diſtinct ſeparate Charge upon every one.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, thoſe Man that thou ſhalt hear call'd, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak to them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn. George Ford.

Oyez, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney-General, before this Inqueſt be taken of the High-Treaſon, whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn are theſe;

George Ford, Eſq;	Thomas Ramage, Gent.
Thomas Trench, Eſq;	William Wild, Gent.
John Wolfe, Eſq;	William Pitts, Gent.
John Raymond, Eſq;	William Smith, Gent.
George Hawes, Eſq;	Benjamin Boltby, Gent.
Matthew Bateman, Eſq;	Elias Fletcher, Gent.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Robert Lowick, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman; for that he, together with Chriſtopher Knightley, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman; Ambroſe Rookwood, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman; and Charles Cranburne, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman; not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Mild, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord, WILLIAM the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme, True and Rightful, Lawful and Undoubted Lord; the Cordial Love, and True and Due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King, that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of Right, ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh, Intending and Contriving, and with all their Strength Purpoſing, Deſigning and Conſpiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is, our Right, duly, happily, and very well eſtabliſhed, altogether to ſubvert, change, and alter; as alſo the ſame our Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to put, and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and moſt miſerable Slavery to Lewis the French King, to ſubjugate and enthral, the 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before, as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, malicioufly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did compaſs, imagine, and contrive, purpoſe, deſign, intend, our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to kill, ſlay, and murder; and miſerable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make, and cauſe, and the ſame their moſt wicked, impious, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and very many other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown; afterwards, to wit, the ſame 10th Day of February, in the Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and diverſe other Days and Times, as well before as after; there, and elſewhere, in the ſame County, falſly, malicioufly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly; and with Force and Arms did meet together, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree, him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, by lying in Wait and Wild, to aſſaſſinate, kill, and murder, and that execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination and Killing, the ſooner to execute and perpetrate; afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, and diverſe other Days and Times, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid; traiterouſly did treat, propoſe, and conſult, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place, where, when, how, and in what manner, our ſaid Lord the King, ſo by lying in wait, the more eaſily they might kill, and did conſent, agree, and aſſent, that Forty Horſemen, or thereabouts; of whom the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, would be four; and every one of them traiterouſly took upon himſelf to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Piſtols, loaden with Gun-powder, and Leaden Bullets; and, with Swords, Rapiers, and other Arms, armed, ſhould lie in Wait, and be in Ambuſh, the ſame our Lord the King in his Coach being, when he ſhould go abroad to ſet upon, and that a certain and competent Number of thoſe Men ſo armed ſhould ſet upon the Guards of him our ſaid Lord the King then attending on him, and being with him, and ſhould fight with them, and overcome them, whilſt others of the ſame Men ſo armed, him, our ſaid Lord the King, to aſſaſſinate, kill, ſlay, and murder: And they the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, their Treaſons, and all their Traiterous Intentions, Deſigns, and Contrivances aforeſaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, and bring to Effect afterwards, to wit, the aforeſaid 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aboveſaid, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Piſtols, Rapiers, and Swords, and other Weapons; Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and military Inſtruments, falſly, malicioufly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and did cauſe to be bought, obtain'd, gather'd together, and procured with that Intent, them, in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder of our ſaid Lord the King, that now is, as aforeſaid, to uſe, employ, and beſtow; and the ſame Premiſſes the more ſafely, and certainly to execute, do, and perpetrate, he the aforeſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, with one Edward King, lately of High-Treaſon, in Contriving and Conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is duly convicted and attainted, by the Conſent and Aſſent of divers of the Traitors and Conſpirators tors aforeſaid, the ſaid tenth Day of February, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, traiterouſly did go and come to the Place propoſed, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing and Murder, of our ſaid Lord the King, by lying in Wait, ſhould be done, perpetrated and committed, to view, ſee, and obſerve the Conveniency and Fitneſs of the ſame Place, for ſuch lying in Wait, Aſſaſſination and Killing, there to be done, perpetrated, and committed; and that Place being ſo viewed and obſerved afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, his Obſervations thereof to ſeveral of the ſaid Traitors and Conſpirators, did relate and impart, to wit, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and the aforeſaid Charles Cranburne, the ſame Day and Year there in order, the ſame execrable, horrid, and deteſtable Aſſaſſination, and killing of our ſaid Lord the King, by the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perpetrate, and commit, adviſedly, knowingly, and traiterouſly, did bear and carry among divers of thoſe Traitors and Conſpirators forwards and backwards, from ſome to others of them, a Liſt of the Names of diverſe Men of thoſe who were deſigned and appointed, our ſaid Lord the King, ſo as aforeſaid, by lying in Wait to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of the Allegiance of them the ſaid Chriſtopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne; and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided: Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it, if you find he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him Not Guilty, and that he did not fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt Robert Lowick, Priſoner at the Bar, and the Indictment does charge him with compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, and inſlave this Kingdom of England, and bring it under French Tyranny and Slavery, and the Indictment ſets forth that Robert Lowick, the Priſoner at the Bar, the Tenth of February, met ſeveral falſe Traitors, and there conſulted and treated how to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty; and agreed, that forty Horſemen to get together, ſome to attack the Guards, while others were to aſſaſſinate the King in his Coach; and the Indictment charges him likewiſe with getting together Horſes and Arms for this purpoſe, to this he hath pleaded Not Guilty. We will call our Evidence, and prove the Fact againſt him, and we do not doubt but you will do your Duty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, this is an Indictment of High-Treaſon, in conſpiring and compaſſing the Death and Deſtruction of the King, the Nature of our Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar is this.

You will hear, Gentlemen, by the Witneſſes, that about Chriſtmas laſt a Conſpiracy and Deſign was ſet on foot to aſſaſſinate the King, and accordingly to accompliſh it, there were ſeveral Perſons ſent over from France by the late King James, who were Part of his Guards, and particularly Sir George Barclay was to be the Head of them; he was a Lieutenant of the Guards there, and he was ſent over in January laſt, and there were a great many Troopers ſent over, who were to be under his Direction, particularly Mr. Harris, who will give you an Account, that he was ſent over by Order of King James, and he was told particularly King James had a Service for him to do in England, and he hoped it might be an Opportunity to advance him. He was to obſerve the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and by what Token he ſhould know him; he was to meet him in Covent-Garden, and he was told he might find him there twice a Week in the Square, about ſix o'clock, after it was dark; and that he might know him, he told him, he would have his white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket; accordingly Mr. Harris came over, and Mr. Hare came with him, and they came and did meet with Sir George Barclay, and they, together with Sir George Barclay, and ſeveral others here in England, Mr. Porter, Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Perkins, did enter into Conſultation how to effect it: There were ſeveral Meetings about it, and you will find the Priſoner at the Bar was at ſeveral Meetings to that Purpoſe, and they did undertake among them, to provide ſo many Men as might make about the Number of Forty, which they thought ſufficient for the Execution of this Deſign.

Gentlemen, you will hear that the Priſoner at the Bar did treat with ſeveral Perſons to be engaged in it; particularly about the 5th of February, he ſent to one Bertram, and asked him if he would be engaged in a Deſign for K. James's Service that was quickly to be executed, without asking of Queſtions, and afterwards, I think, he undertook he would: So about the 14th of February he met him again, and that was the Day before the firſt Time they intended to attack the King, and then being ſo near the Time when it was to be executed, he thought it proper to acquaint him with the Thing he had engaged him in; and he did acquaint him, That the next Morning they were to be ready to attack the King and his Guards, and bid him be ſure to get his Boots and other Things ready for that purpoſe, and he gave him a Guinea in order to it. Bertram, it ſeems, on the 15th of February did not come, and the King it ſeems did not go abroad that Day, ſo they were diſappointed at that Time; but the Sunday after Bertram met him, and Mr. Lowick complained that he had not come upon the Saturday according as he had undertaken; and he told him it would have been the ſame Thing, he would have diſappointed them if the King had been in the Field.

Gentlemen, you ſhall find, That as he thus engaged Mr. Bertram, ſo he was to provide ſeveral others; and did declare, That at his own Charge he had got two or three, he complained of it as a Hardſhip put upon him, That whereas Mr. Harris had 6 s. a Day Subſiſtence, and was only to take care of himſelf, he, Mr. Lowick, had at his own Charges engaged and provided ſeveral.

You will find, Gentlemen, that Mr. Rookwood, who was tried Yesterday, had several Meetings about it, with Mr. Lowick and Mr. Harris; they did think it to be a barbarous Thing: But however, they were resolved to obey Orders, and the Prisoner in particular said he would obey Orders, tho' he thought it a very wicked Thing.

Gentlemen, you will find by the Evidence how the Matter was carried on; the Prisoner was to be engaged in it, and did not only embark himself in Person, but engaged others, and did treat with them about it. We shall call our Witnesses, who will give you a full Account of it, and then we shall leave it with you, who we question not will do Justice. First call George Harris; who appeared and was sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of the intended Assassination, and what Part the Prisoner at the Bar had in it.

Mr. Conyers. Begin from the first, and tell your whole Knowledge as you did Yesterday.

Mr. Harris. On the 14th of January, New Stile, I was ordered to wait on King James at Dinner; after Dinner was over, I was called in, where was Col. Parker and Mr. Hare at the same Time, and King James told me he was very sensible of the good Service I had done him; and now he had an Opportunity of doing something for me: I was to go into England, and there to be subsisted, and I was to follow the Orders of Sir George Barclay; the King told me I should find Sir George Barclay in Covent-Garden, with a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, on Mondays and Thursdays between the Hours of six and seven in the Evening, and that was the Sign I was to know him by, and he ordered me to go to Mr. Caroll, that is Secretary to the late Queen, and Col. Parker went along with me, and he ordered me ten Lewidores, and Mr. Hare as much, which Mr. Caroll gave us; and if that were not sufficient, or if we were Wind-bound at Calais, we had Orders to apply to the President of Calais to be furnished with what we wanted: accordingly we went, and the Wind not serving when we come to Calais, we were forced to stay there, and our Charges were paid to our Landlady by the President of Calais, according to the Order we received at St. Germains; when the Wind served fair we went on board, and came to Rumney-marsh, to one Mr. Hunt's House, and from thence he furnished us with a Couple of Horses, and we came the Sandy-way to one Mr. Tucker's, and from thence to Mr. Cross's, and from thence to Gravesend, and from thence to London: We came up in the Night-tide, and being late when we came to Town, Sunday-night, we lay at an Inn at the lower-end of Gracechurch-street; the next Day we went to look for Sir George Barclay, but not finding him in Covent-Garden, according to what King James told us, I admired at it; but one Mr. Birkenhead meeting my Comrade the next Day, said, Sir George Barclay desired to see us, and appointed us to meet him, which we did that Night, where Sir George Barclay ask'd us how the King and Queen, Prince and Princess did; he told us at that Time he had no Money for us, but in a few Days we should have Money; and accordingly he sent us Money. We had five Guineas, but it was at twice; two Guineas at one Time, and three at another, and this was for a Month's Subsistence at five Shillings a Day, Guineas going then at thirty Shillings. And afterwards when Major Holmes delivered the Horse, upon Saturday the 15th, we had another Guinea, that made up what we had to be six Shillings a Day when we had Horses, and five Shillings a Day when we had none: And as for Mr. Lowick, the first Saturday which was designed for the Assassination, I happened to be at Mr. Counter's Lodgings in Holborn, a Confectioner's; and there I see Mr. Lowick come in.

Mr. Conyers. Who lodged there, pray Sir?

Harris. Sir George Barclay and Mr. Counter had Lodgings there; and Mr. Lowick came in there, but I cannot say he stay'd there any Time, I think he went out presently afterwards. The next Week I met Mr. Lowick in Red-lyon Fields, and discoursed with him there about this Matter, and I told him what a barbarous and inhumane Thing it was that we should be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange, and that it would render us odious to the World, and that we should be a continual Reproach to our selves; he did agree it was so: But in conclusion Mr. Lowick said he would obey Orders, and he said Sir George Barclay he was sure would not do it without Orders. That Day when we were walking out, we met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes riding in the High-way up towards Islington, and we spoke to him, for Mr. Lowick told me the Thing was discovered, and his Name was given up, and other Gentlemens, and I think another; and so he told me that one Harrison told him of it, and forewarned him that Night from lying in his Lodging; and he told him that he believed it would not be safe for the Rest to lie in their Lodgings, or to that effect.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he said he would obey Orders, What was the Discourse about?

Harris. We were talking of murdering the Prince of Orange: And not only that, but I do believe that Mr. Lowick is so sensible that what I say is true, and he is a Man of so much Conscience and Honour, that he will not contradict any thing that I affirm or have said here. On Saturday the Two and Twentieth we dined at the Castle, a Tavern or a Cook's Shop, at the End of Red-lyon Street. I was much in a Sweat, and he asked me what made me so? I told him I had been getting Captain Rookwood's Party ready; and I told him (laughing) that Captain Rookwood said I should be his Aid du Camp, and so I was getting the Men together: Says he to me, you may very well do it, for you have Six Shillings a Day, and I have nothing. Mr. Lowick, you know what I say to be true; I know not why you lift up your Hands; but you did tell me I might very well do it, having six Shillings a Day, and you had nothing, and yet brought a Couple of Men at your own Charge, and that their Horses could not be discharged unless you went. These were his Words, my Lord, or to this effect.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you mean by being discharged?

Harris. I mean this, that I believe he paid for them; and they were waiting at a House till he came.

Mr. Conyers. Why were they to be discharged that Day?

Harris. The Reason why they were to be discharged that Day, was, because Captain Rookwood had told him before, that the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day; and therefore we went together to walk towards Islington.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Harris.

Harris. The ſecond Saturday that it was to have been executed. I was not a Spy upon any Man's Actions: I cannot tell what they did any more than I tell you: I do not wrong you any Way in the World, Sir, I am ſure on it.

L. C. J. When was it that you ſpoke with Mr Lowick about murdering the King?

Harris. It was Monday, Tueſday, Wedneſday, or Thurſday, I cannot be exact to the Day, but it was one of theſe Days, after the firſt Saturday; I cannot be poſitive what the Day was.

L. C. J. Well, it was between the two Days?

Harris. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. How did you know of that Deſign of murdering the King?

Harris. I was inform'd of it by Captain Rookwood the firſt Saturday, and I met Mr. Lowick and had this Diſcourſe about it: and afterwards they informed me that Mr. De la Rue did not lie at his Lodgings, and the Thing was diſcovered, and they believed that Rue had diſcovered it: And I deſire you'll call Mr. De la Rue as to this Matter; for I believe he will own it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you to truſt him with ſuch a Diſcourſe?

Harris. Becauſe we met there at Counter's Lodgings, and we had ſeveral times Diſcourſes of it; there was Major Bernard and Capt. Rookwood beſides, and I always declared againſt it as a barbarous and inhuman Thing, not to be anſwer'd before God or Man, and that we ſhould be odious to all the World if the Thing were effected, as I believ'd it would not be. I wou'd never ſhew my Head after ſuch a Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember who began the Diſcourſe of this Matter?

Harris. I cannot tell that. I can't come to every Particular.

Sir B. Shower. You ſaid juſt now, you apprehended Mr. Lowick to be a Man of Conſcience and Honour; Pray what were his Sentiments about it?

Harris. His Sentiment was, That he would obey Sir George Barclay's Orders; and he was ſure Sir George Barclay would not do it without Orders.

Sir B. Shower. Did not he declare it to be a barbarous Deſign?

Harris. I can't remember every particular Thing that he ſaid; for I am not a Spy upon any Man's Actions.

Lowick. When you were talking of that Deſign that you ſpeak of, pray did I conſent to any ſuch Thing?

Harris. I tell you how far you conſented; you ſaid you wou'd obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, and you was ſure he would not do it without Orders.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Did you ſee any of Sir George Barclay's Orders?

Harris. No, I did not, I was to follow his Orders; but what Orders he had I cannot tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Sir George Barclay tell you you were to do?

Harris. Sir George Barclay declared, on the firſt Saturday, that we were his Janizaries, and talk'd of attacking and bringing away the Garter: I cannot ſay this Gentleman was by then; and afterwards Sir George Barclay went out and returned, and came in again into the Room, and declared that we were Men of Honour, and that we were to attack the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Did Sir George Barclay give the Priſoner at the Bar any Orders?

Harris. I don't tell you he did.

Mr. Mompeſſon. You ſay you met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes upon the Road going to Iſlington: How do you know the Priſoner was there?

Harris. Why, was not I with him? I am very ſorry to come upon this Account; but you know it is Truth all that I ſay; and I am ſure you are ſenſible I do you no Wrong: He met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes, and he went down and ſaid ſomething to Sir George Barclay in the Highway; what it was I don't know; but I ſtood, and Captain Rookwood and Mr. Bernard ſaid ſomething to him, which you very well know.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it?

Harris. I can't tell, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. We do not deſire you to tell what you can't tell: Is this all you know?

Harris. It is all at preſent that I recollect.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray ſwear Mr. Bertram.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Conyers. Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury what you know of this intended Aſſaſſination, and how far the Priſoner was concerned in it.

Bertram. My Lord, about the Beginning of February laſt, Major Lowick came to me, and ask'd me if I would eſpouſe a Thing with him that might be for my Advantage; I told him that I thought I might eſpouſe any Thing that he thought fit to engage in.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Whom did you tell ſo?

Bertram. Major Lowick: And he told me it was well, and deſired me to ask no more Queſtions: I did not; but it went on to the 14th of February, when he deſired me to be at his Lodgings at twelve o'clock. I was ſo about that Time, but he was not within, and I ſtay'd till he came in, and he took me up into his Chamber, and told me he believed they ſhould ride out in ſome little Time; and he told me he believed the King was to be ſeiz'd in his Coach, and he gave me a Guinea to buy me Neceſſaries.

L. C. J. What Neceſſaries?

Bertram. I can't ſay he nam'd any.

Mr. Att. Gen. But for what Purpoſe were thoſe Neceſſaries?

Bertram. I don't know that he nam'd any Thing, indeed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well; did he tell you when you were to be ready?

Bertram. If you pleaſe to give me leave, I'll tell you: He deſired me not to be out of the Way; and the next Morning I was to meet him at the Purl-Houſe in Hart-ſtreet. I did not meet him; and the next Time I ſaw him, I am not poſitive whether it was the next Day after the Fifteenth when I was to meet him at Hart-ſtreet, but did not ſo; but the next Time I ſaw him, he ask'd me why I did not meet him according to his Appointment? I told him, I had ſome Reaſon for it; and he anſwer'd me again, That he believed, if the King had been in the Field, I would have done the ſame; but I have not ſeen him ſince, till I ſaw him at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no Diſcourſe of Horſes that you were to provide?

Bertram. I do not remember any particular Thing more than I have told you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he not tell you what the Deſign was you were to go about?

Bertram. He did not tell me of any other Deſign than as I tell you, for he believed I knew of it; I thought ſo at leaſt: The firſt time I knew of it was from Mr. Charnock.

L. C. J. What did he tell you was the Deſign that you ſhould engage in for your Advantage upon Friday the 14th, when he gave you the Guinea?

Bertram. He told me, he believed they ſhould ride out very ſuddenly, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach.

L. C. J. Did he tell you when the King was to be ſeized?

Bertram. No, he did not tell me when, but this was the 14th, the next Morning I was to meet him at Hart-ſtreet, but did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did he tell you the King was to be ſeiz'd by?

Bertram. He did not nominate any one elſe, for he obliged me not to ask him Queſtions, nor I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he name himſelf to be concerned?

Bertram. He named himſelf ſo far, as that he believed he ſhould ride out very ſuddenly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the next Morning, or the next Day?

Bertram. I cannot ſay that he named any particular Time.

Mr. Att Gen. Will they ask him any Queſtions?

Sir B. Shower. No, I think we ſhall not.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, Mr. Bertram, will you anſwer me one Queſtion, What did he ſay to you when he check'd you for not coming according to his Appointment?

Bertram. I took it as a Kind of a Check: He told me, that if the King had been in the Field, he believed I would have done the ſame.

Sir B. Shower. There is one Thing we muſt a little examine this Gentleman to: Were not you under a Neceſſity before that Time that he gave you the Guinea? Pray what Condition were you in?

Bertram. Under Neceſſity, Sir! I was never very plentiful of Money of late.

Sir B. Shower. Did he never give you a Guinea or two before in Charity, and out of Compaſſion to your Neceſſities?

Bertram. He has given me Money ſeveral Times before; and I believe if I would have ask'd him for any Money, he would have given it me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this Money given you for Charity, or for any other, and what Purpoſe?

Bertram. I did not ask him for any thing, but he gave it me, and ſaid, There's a Guinea to buy you Neceſſaries.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Diſcourſe before that?

Bertram. I told you, he ſaid, he believed they were to ride out very ſuddenly, and he believed the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and he deſired me not to be out of the Way.

Mr. Cowper. And when he gave you the Guinea to buy you Neceſſaries, was it immediately after this Diſcourſe?

Bertram. Sir, it was at the ſame Time.

Lowick. Did not I give your Wife a Guinea two Months before this?

Bertram. Yes, Sir; I acknowledge I was informed you did, I was not in Town then.

Lowick. Pray let the Court know that.

L. C. J. Did he tell you the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, before he told you they were to ride out very ſuddenly?

Bertram. No, afterwards; and then he gave me the Guinea.

Sir B. Shower. His Words are not coupled together, they have no Relation to one another.

L. C. J. No; but he told him they were to ride out very ſuddenly, and the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries at the ſame Time.

L. C. J. Treby. There's no doubt he was engaged in the Deſign with thoſe other Perſons.

Mr. Conyers. And afterwards he rebuked him becauſe he had not met him; and he ſaid, it would have been the ſame Thing if the King had been in the Field.

Mr. Montague. What Day in the Week was it that you failed him?

Bertram. It was on a Saturday.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, we deſire to know, who he did underſtand by the King that was to be ſeized.

L. C. J. What did he call the King?

Bertram. He ſaid nothing but the King.

L. C. J. Who did you underſtand by that?

Bertram. I leave it to the Court, I am not to interpret Things.

L. C. J. Treby. Did he name the Prince of Orange, or King James? Did you think King James was to be ſeized?

Bertram. My Lord, I tell you what he ſaid, I am not to interpret his Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you believe he meant King James, or this King, that was to be ſeized?

Bertram. I believed it might be the King here.

L. C. J. Take the Words as they are; he ask'd him before, Whether he would engage in a Deſign that might be for his Advantage? On Friday the 14th of February he meets him at his Lodging, and tells him, he was to ride out ſuddenly, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and appointed him to meet him the next Morning, and gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Pray, has not Mr. Lowick given you Clothes, Linen and other Things at any other Time?

Bertram. Sir, you have been always ready to ſerve me, I muſt acknowledge, and you have been very kind to me.

Lowick. If you pleaſe to give an Account of my Character, whether ever I was guilty of any bloody Thing.

Bertram. No, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. How long have you known Mr. Lowick?

Bertram. I believe I have known him this 20 Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Behaviour has he been of?

Bertram. He has always had very good Behaviour, and the beſt; he has had the beſt Character of all Mankind.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever know him inclin'd to do a raſh Action?

Bertram. Never in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever know him do a malicious Action?

Bertram. No, but he had always the Character of a good Man, and was always ready to ſerve any Man in his Neceſſities, and to do Good; he has that general Character abroad.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Where does he live?

Bertram. He lived laſt at Brownlow-ſtreet, but he has no Wife nor Family, and ſo has no fix'd Being.

L. C. J. What was his Way of Living?

Bertram. He was bred a Soldier, and has been abroad.

L. C. J. Where.

Bertram. In Ireland.

L. C. J. In whoſe Service?

Bertram. In the Service of King James.

Lowick. He knows particularly, that once I was upon a Party and ſaved five Officers from being killed in cold Blood.

L. C. J. What Countryman is he?

Bertram. Yorkſhire.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Was he accounted of a cruel or a bloody Nature?

Bertram. No, of a quite contrary.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know for what Cauſe he gave him or his Wife a Guinea.

Bertram. I know not what that Guinea was for that he gave me the fourteenth of February, any otherwiſe than as I have told you.

Mr. Mompeſſon. What was the Guinea given to your Wife for?

Bertram. For that Guinea given to my Wife, it was out of his own Kindneſs and Goodneſs to my Family and me.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the other Guinea for? You are upon your Oath.

Bertram. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell; he gave it me to buy me Neceſſaries.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there nothing elſe mentioned what Neceſſaries thoſe were to be?

Bertram. No, Sir; upon my Oath there was not any particular mentioned.

Mr. At. Gen. What made him ſo kind to you, pray?

Bertram. We were both born in a Town, and I believe we are near related.

Sir B. Shower. You ſay you are Towns-People, and have been long acquainted, and you knew him in Ireland, pray did you ever know that he ſaved any People's Lives?

Bertram. I was not in that Action my ſelf, but all that were in it gave that Relation, that he was very favourable, and did ſave Peoples Lives, particularly one Captain Harlow, and brought him and other Priſoners, and I remember the Thing; it was about a Fortnight before the Buſineſs of the Boyne, upon a Sunday Morning, that they took thoſe Priſoners, and he did perſuade ſeveral Parties that he commanded, to decline killing, as much as they could: I was not in this Action, but this I heard of all that were in it, and from the Priſoner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When he gave you that Guinea, did not he ſpeak any Thing of a Horſe that was to be provided for you?

Bertram. Not a Word: I never did ſee a Horſe upon that Account, nor was I Maſter of a Horſe, nor was I told I ſhould have a Horſe in any reſpect whatſoever.

Juryman. How could you ride out, as you ſay they were to do, without a Horſe, or without knowing any Thing of a Horſe to be provided for you?

Bertram. I did not know of a Horſe.

L. C. J. But he ſaid you were to ride out ſpeedily.

Bertram. No: he ſaid in general, we ſhould ride out ſuddenly.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was there beſides your ſelf?

Bertram. No Body.

Mr. At. Gen. Then that we muſt mean you and him. And how were you to ride out without a Horſe? Pray mind what you ſwear?

Bertram. I was to meet him the next Morning, but did not.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what cou'd you underſtand by that, that you were to ride out ſuddenly, and had no Horſe?

Bertram. That was underſtood, that if I did ride out, I muſt have a Horſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Who ſhould you have it from? had you a Horſe of your own?

Bertram. No, I had not.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you intend to hire a Horſe?

Bertram. No, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you ask where you were to have a Horſe?

Bertram No, I did not ask nor inquire, nor was it promis'd me I ſhould have a Horſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you where you were to ride?

Bertram. The next Morning I was to meet him.

Mr. At. Gen. For what? to ride out was it?

Bertram. I can't really tell whether it was upon that Account or not.

Mr. At. Gen. Whether did he tell you where he was to ride?

Bertram. Indeed he did not.

Juryman. It is very ſtrange that you did not ask him where he was to go, nor ask him for a Horſe.

Bertram. I was ſo ſenſeleſs, that I neither did ask him about a Horſe, nor ever knew of any that was to be provided for me.

Juryman. Did you underſtand what was meant by the Riding out ſuddenly?

Bertram. I did take it to be about the Buſineſs, the ſeizing of the King.

Juryman. Did he compare it to attacking him in the Field?

Bertram. No, he did not; but he ſaid he believed the King would be ſeized in his Coach; he made no Compariſons.

Mr. Mountague. Pray Mr. Bertram, why did you not meet him? What Reaſons had you for not doing it?

Bertram. I thought it not requiſite to meet him.

Mr. Montague. What, had you no Mind to the Thing?

Bertram. No, I had not; becauſe I thought the Thing very unlawful.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what was that Thing you ſpeak of, that you thought was unlawful?

Bertram. I thought it was about ſeizing and killing the King.

L. C. J. Pray mind; there is no Body deſires you ſhould ſpeak more than the Truth; but on the other ſide, being upon your Oath, you are to ſpeak the whole Truth; for if you conceal any Part of the Truth, though you have a Kindneſs for your Countryman Mr. Lowick, who has been kind to you, you will forſwear your ſelf, for you make a different Repreſentation of the Matter, and make it appear quite otherwiſe than it is; pray do not ſtrain one Tittle, but let us have all the Truth.

Bertram. I don't believe I ſtrain one Bit.

Mr. Montague. Then tell my Lord why you did not meet him.

Bertram.

Bertram. I did believe it was about ſeizing and killing the King, and I did think it to be illegal.

Mr. Montague. Why did you think it was about that?

Bertram. Becauſe Mr. Charnock had told me of it before.

Mr. At. Gen. How did you know that was what Lowick ſpoke to you about?

Bertram. I did ſuppoſe it to be the ſame, becauſe he deſired me at firſt to ask no Queſtions, no more did I; but I took it always to be the ſame Thing.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay to you?

Bertram. He told me he had a Buſineſs to propoſe to me, if I would engage in, that would be for my Advantage, but I muſt ask no Queſtions; talk'd of Riding out ſuddenly, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and having heard of it from Charnock, I thought it was the ſame Buſineſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have one Witneſs more, call Captain Fiſher. [He did not appear.] If he does not appear, we ſhall let them go on, and when he comes in, we can examine him afterwards.

L. C. J. Is he a material Witneſs?

Mr. Sol Gen. We do apprehend he is a very material Witneſs.

L. C. J. If you think him a material Witneſs, it will not be proper for them to enter upon their Defence, till they have heard the whole Accuſation.

The Court ſtaid for Mr. Fiſher's coming for near an Hour, and at laſt he came in and was ſworn.

L. C. J. Who is this?

Mr. At. Gen. This is one Captain Fiſher.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Captain Fiſher, do you know Mr. Lowick, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Capt. Fiſher. I have not talked with Mr. Lowick ſince the 8th of February, and then he talked that he would be ready to ſerve his Maſter to the uttermoſt of his Power.

Mr. At. Gen. What Maſter?

Capt. Fiſher. King James.

Mr. At. Gen. What particular Service?

Capt. Fiſher. He named no particular Service, but only that he would be ready to ſerve his Maſter to the uttermoſt of his Power.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was this?

Capt. Fiſher. At the Cock in Bow-ſtreet.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was in Company?

Capt. Fiſher. There was Mr. Harriſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an Account of what you know of this barbarous bloody Deſign.

Capt. Fiſher. I believe there was a Deſign to ſeize the Prince of Orange.

Mr. At. Gen. What do you know of it? you ſay you believe it.

Capt. Fiſher. I believe it by my Knowledge, becauſe I was concerned in it.

Mr. At. Gen. By whom was that Deſign carried on?

Capt. Fiſher. By Sir George Barclay and Mr. Harriſon.

L. C. J. What was the Deſign?

Capt. Fiſher. We were to fall upon the Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. You called him ſo, the Prince of Orange?

Capt. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, tell us what happened.

Capt. Fiſher. It was to have been done the 15th of February, and we met accordingly the 14th, but the King not going Abroad, it was put off.

L. C. J. Who met on the 14th?

Capt. Fiſher. I met only Mr. Harriſon and Sir George Barclay, then it was put off till the 22d; upon the 21ſt, we met at the Three-Tuns in Holborn, and from thence we came to the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and there was no Body but Mr. Harriſon and I together, and Sir George Barclay came to us; I believe there were about 14 or 16 in the Houſe; there Sir George Barclay told me, Mr. Lowick was to meet me and two more at an Inn by St. Giles's Pound, and that we were to go together to ſeize the Prince of Orange the 22d.

L. C. J. Did you meet him?

Capt Fiſher. I did not meet him, it being put off by the King's not going abroad.

L. C. J. This does not affect Mr. Lowick at all.

Mr. At. Gen. It does not, we acknowledge; but at that time which you ſpeak of, the 8th of February, had you any Knowledge of the Aſſaſſination?

Capt. Fiſher. There was no Aſſaſſination at that Time, at leaſt it was not then declared.

Mr. At. Gen. What was your Diſcourſe about then?

Capt. Fiſher. There was Notice of the King's preparing to come for England.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay Mr. Harriſon was there.

Capt. Fiſher. Yes, and talked very little about the Matter, but only that there were Preparations for the King's coming.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Lowick ſay to you?

Capt. Fiſher. I have told you all that Mr. Lowick ſaid to me.

Mr. At. Gen. Repeat it again.

Capt. Fiſher. He ſaid he would be ready to ſerve his Maſter, to the uttermoſt of his Power.

Mr. Cowper. Had you no Diſcourſe about an Act of Parliament?

Capt. Fiſher. Mr. Lowick ſaid it was not convenient to talk with more than one at any Time, for there was an Act of Parliament on Foot, that under two Witneſſes nothing ſhould affect a Man's Life in Treaſon.

Mr. At. Gen. The Act of Parliament was then a making.

L. C. J. When Mr. Lowick ſaid he would ſerve his Maſter, what Diſcourſe had you about it?

Capt. Fiſher. Mr. Lowick ſaid not a Word within, but at the Door he ſaid he would ſerve his Maſter to his Power.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that, that they would not talk with above one at a time?

Capt. Fiſher. Nothing that was thought treaſonable Practices ſhould be diſcourſed of before above one at a time, ſo I underſtood it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done.

Sir B. Shower. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the Priſoner at the Bar, and we do hope here is not Evidence ſufficient to convict him of High-Treaſon, the Queſtion is not whether there was a Plot or a Conſpiracy to Aſſaſſinate the King, or to prepare for an Invaſion, but but all that you are to conſider, Gentlemen, is, whether the Evidence againſt Mr. Lowick, be ſufficient to convince you, that he did deſign to Seize and Aſſaſſinate the King; there are three Witneſſes produced, but we think this laſt Witneſs, Fiſher, his Teſtimony does not hurt him in the leaſt. We know your Lordſhip will declare and direct the Jury, that the Evidence in a Caſe of Treaſon ought to be plain, not only with reſpect to the Fact, that it was done; but alſo of ſuch Facts as are the Evidences of a Man's Intentions, and thoſe are not to be conſtrued by Strains and Intendments, or Implications; unleſs they be ſuch as Evidently, Naturally, and to common Underſtanding expreſs the Intention, it cannot be good Evidence in Treaſon: Now we ſay that Captain Fiſher has ſaid nothing at all that will affect the Priſoner, for all that he ſays is, that the Eighth of February he ſaid he was ready to ſerve his Maſter to the utmoſt of his Power, and any Words as well as theſe may be conſtrued to make a Man guilty of Treaſonable Intentions; for it might be a Recollection of Favours Received, or it might be a grateful Intent to ſerve him upon particular Occaſions, but that is no Evidence upon this Indictment. Suppoſe it was to ſerve him upon the ſuppoſed intended Invaſion, yet with Submiſſion, that is not Evidence of the Overt-Act laid here; here is no Overt-Act mentioned of preparing Arms, or Encouraging Men, or Seducing the King's Subjects, in order to the better reſtoring of the late King James, or the expected Landing of the French, or the like. All that is laid to the Priſoner's Charge, is the Compaſſing the King's Death, and a Deſign to Aſſaſſinate him in his Coach, and in order to the Aſſaſſination, he was to buy Arms and Horſes; now all that he ſays is quite of another Nature, of a quite different Strain, and has no Tendency to this Matter, and nothing he ſays that Lowick ſhould ſay, but is applicable the other Way, and tends more naturally to the Invaſion, than to the Aſſaſſination. Your Lordſhip obſerves there was ſome notice taken of what Mr. Lowick ſhould ſay, concerning the Act of Parliament, that he would not talk with above one at a time; how far when Life is concerned ſuch looſe Diſcourſe ought to be inforced before a Jury I muſt leave to your Lordſhip; though a Man may be innocent, yet he may be cautious, and the more Innocent, perhaps the more cautious; but that is applicable to the Invaſion too, and has no Relation to the Treaſon in this Indictment more than any other. It ſhews he was more wary than others were, but it is not applicable to the Fact that he now ſtands charged with. Then the whole of the Evidence depends upon the Teſtimony of Mr. Harris and Mr. Bertram, and we think they are not two Witneſſes to one Thing, and what they ſay muſt be ſtrained, and intended, and preſumed, to make Evidence of Treaſon; for what Mr. Harris ſays about the Diſcourſes between him and the late King James, about receiving Orders from Sir George Barclay, and his Paſſage over from France, and the ſeveral Stages he and Mr. Hare travell'd, and the Diſcourſes between Sir George Barclay and him; Your Lordſhip will acquaint the Jury that is no Evidence to affect Mr. Lowick, nor what Berkenhead and Hare agreed upon does any way affect Mr. Lowick, for thoſe Things may be all true, and yet Mr. Lowick innocent of what he ſtands charged with in this Indictment; he ſays, That upon the firſt Saturday he ſaw Mr. Lowick at the Confectioner's, but he cannot ſay he ſtaid there at all, there was not a Word ſpoken by Mr. Lowick that he remembers then, but what he ſays that ſeems to touch, and the only Thing that touches Mr. Lowick, in all this Evidence is, that upon Monday, Tueſday, Wedneſday or Thurſday, it is a pretty large Time, between the Fifteenth and the Twenty-ſecond, he was talking with Mr. Lowick about the Barbarity of this Buſineſs, and that Lowick after all, ſaid he would obey Orders; now with Submiſſion, my Lord, to make that to have Relation to the Aſſaſſination muſt be by a forc'd ſtrain'd Intendment, he does not declare what the Orders were, nay, he does not affirm there were any Orders for the Aſſaſſination, but only that he would obey Orders; here's no Order by Writing, no Order by Parole that Mr. Lowick declared he would obey; as to what Lowick declared about his Intention of Riding out and Seizing the King in his Coach; that cannot be intended the Order that he was to obey to Aſſaſſinate the King, that Order does not appear, there are no Footſteps of it in all the Evidence, ſo that there is nothing in that Teſtimony that will hurt Mr. Lowick: Then upon the Two and Twentieth when they dined together, Mr. Harris ſays, that there was a Diſcourſe of two Men, but it does not appear, nor does the Witneſs give any Account what thoſe two Men were to be for; 'tis true two Men he was to get diſcharged, but that is not Evidence that theſe Men were to make a Part of thoſe Forty, neither the Words before nor the Words after can have that Conſtruction; nay, it does not appear it was for any Purpoſe at all, now in the Caſe of Life, where a Man ſtands at the Bar, we hope ſuch an Evidence ſhall not be Conſtrued to make a Proof of a Treaſonable Intention, that theſe were to Aſſaſſinate the King, or to make Part of the Forty that were to do it, when it does not appear they were there, nor who they were, nor any ſort of Notice taken or given upon what Account they were provided. And then as to Mr. Bertram's Evidence, it is palpable that his Evidence and whatſoever he ſays cannot amount to make one Witneſs to prove an Overt-Act within this Statute, and that there muſt be two Witneſſes the Law requires; what does Mr. Bertram ſay to prove any Man guilty of Treaſon, but only by Intendment, Thought or Suſpicion? It is true, Mr. Bertram's Evidence would be good enough to commit a Man upon Suſpicion of Treaſon, but to Convict him it cannot be; he ſays that in the Beginning of February he ſpoke to him, and told him he would employ him in a Buſineſs that would be for his Advantage, but he muſt ask no Queſtions; this is very dark, for the Meaning of it does not appear what was intended by it; it might be one Thing as well as another, it might be to employ him in his Family, or it might be to ſend him of a Journey, or it might be the taking of a Farm, but to apply that as an Evidence of a Charge of High-Treaſon, that we think is very hard, and we hope your Lordſhip will think ſo too; but then he comes and tells you further of a Diſcourſe upon the Fourteenth, of his riding out ſuddenly, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, but he does not ſay that he was to ſeize him, nor that he would be concerned in it, it, nor that he knew of it, nor did declare at what time it was to be done, nor any thing certain whether it was a Prophecy, or a Dream, or a Story that he related again, or what it was; there is no Connection between the Riding out ſuddenly, and the other Words of ſeizing the King in his Coach; then he ſays he gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries, the Man acknowledges Mr. Lowick ſeveral times had given him in Charity-Money, Clothes and other Things, and gave his Wife a Guinea as you obſerve, in Charity, but he gave him this Guinea on purpoſe to buy him Neceſſaries, and it is hard that a Man's Charity to a Countryman, to a Townſman, to an antient Acquaintance of Twenty Years ſtanding, to a Perſon that he had been familiar with formerly, and known to have lived well, ſhould be miſinterpreted and ſtrain'd, to make it a giving him Money as Subſiſtence, and a Reward for the doing ſuch a Miſchievous Bloody Act; We ſay his Charity to this Man formerly is inconſiſtent with the Suppoſition that he could be privy to ſuch a barbarous Deſign now, and we hope the Jury will conſider the Character that that very Man has given to my Client, for the ſame Witneſs gives you an Account of his Behaviour all along, that he was not given to Raſh and Barbarous Actions, nor guilty of any malicious Thing, nay, that he prevented Miſchief, and the killing of People in cold Blood. We muſt leave it to the Jury's Conſideration, and your Lordſhip's Direction. All theſe things that they ſay may be true, and Lowick be not guilty, and the acquitting of Mr. Lowick will be no Reflection upon the Witneſſes, nor any Diſcredit to the Teſtimony that has been given of this Conſpiracy; but we hope 'tis doing Juſtice to this Man, the Witneſſes not coming up to the Proof of what is laid in the Indictment. We muſt beg your Lordſhip's Patience a little longer, and call ſome Witneſſes to give you an Account how long they have known Mr. Lowick, and what his real Character is; they will tell you he is a peaceable good Man, and ſhew you that his Temper and Inclination was rather to a ſober quiet Life than to lead him to ſuch Action, and that they cannot think him likely to be tempted to be concerned in ſuch a Deſign; and then we muſt leave it to the Jury. Call Mrs. Yorke.

Lowick. I believe there is no body here that knows me but will give me that Character.

Mrs. Yorke came in, and was ſworn.

Sir B. Shower. Pray Mrs. Yorke, how long have you known Mr. Lowick?

Yorke. About a Dozen or Fourteen Years.

Sir B. Shower. What ſort of Diſpoſition is he of?

Yorke. He is a Civil Honeſt Man as ever I ſaw in my Life, or ever knew of; and I never heard otherwiſe from any one that knew him.

Sir B. Shower. What was he in his Actions, was he Malicious, or Good-natur'd?

Yorke. As good a natured Man as ever I ſaw.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Has he the Reputation of a Cruel Bloody-minded Man?

Yorke. Quite the contrary. He lodged in my Houſe half a Year, it is not quite a Year ago ſince he lay at my Houſe. He was the moſt obliging Man that ever lay in my Houſe. He was ſo civil to all the Lodgers, that they admired him for his Goodneſs, and made them in love with him.

L. C. J. How came he to lodge at your Houſe?

Yorke. He came from his other Landlady, they could not agree, his other Landlady was a ſort of a Shrew, and therefore he did not care for ſtaying there; and I deſired his Company, becauſe I knew him to be ſo obliging and civil a Man.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe?

Yorke. In Bloomsbury.

L. C. J. What is his Way of Living? Is he a Man of an Eſtate?

Yorke. I cannot tell, I did not enquire into that.

L. C. J. Had he no Employment to get his Living by?

Yorke. I do not know any thing of that, I never enquired into it; he paid me very honeſtly for my Lodging, and he is a very good Man, for any thing I know.

Sir B. Shower. Then call Mrs. Moſely.

She came in, and was ſworn.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Gentlewoman?

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mrs. Moſely, will you tell my Lord and the Jury: Do you know Mr. Lowick?

Moſely. Yes, Sir, I do.

Sir B. Shower. How long have you known him?

Moſely. Near twenty Years.

Sir B. Shower. Pray give an Account upon your Knowledge what Diſpoſition and Temper he is of, whether he is Raſh, Malicious, Bloody, and Ill-natur'd.

Moſely. He is a peaceable, virtuous, honeſt Man, and a Man that I never heard or ſaw that Creature that could ſpeak any ill Thing of him in my Life; nor I never heard him ſpeak any Thing maliciouſly of any Creature in my Life to do them a Prejudice: So far from that, that he is a Man has a Character, perhaps, above any Man that I could ſpeak or hear of in my Life. I ſpeak it even above my own Relations, they may have ſome Paſſions; but I never ſee that Gentleman in a Paſſion in my Life. He has lain in my Houſe ſeveral times, and he has had Company come to him, but never any that was Scandalous one Way or other. I never ſaw him ſuddled; nor ever heard him Swear, nor any one accuſe him of any of thoſe Things.

Mr. Mompeſſon. Call Dr. William Mew. He did not appear.

Sir B. Shower. The Priſoner has ſomething to ſay for himſelf, my Lord, but we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, and the Jury's, whether there be any Evidence but what is dark and ſavours of Suſpicion only; ſuſpicious it is, but whether there be any Evidence that is plain and direct as the Law requires in Caſes of High-Treaſon, we muſt leave it to your Conſideration, for we apprehend there is none.

Lowick. My Lord, as to this Buſineſs, the Thing that I ſtand accuſed of, the Aſſaſſination, I know nothing in the World of it, nor never did, directly or indirectly; and if I am convicted, and could, to ſave my Life, be the Death of the pooreſt

eſt Child in the World, I would not ſave my Life to do it.

L. C. J. Look you, I would put you to make Anſwer to ſome Things; you were at Sir George Barclay's, at the Confectioner's in Holbourn; and it is ſworn he came over upon ſuch a Deſign. Then you were with Mr. Harris at Red-Lion-Fields, and there he was ſpeaking to you of the Horridneſs of the Deſign that was to be executed upon the King's Perſon the Saturday before, and he told you he did miſlike it; and thereupon you anſwered that you would obey Orders, and that Sir George Barclay had Orders for it, otherwiſe he would not do it.

Lowick. Sir George Barclay never ſpoke one Word of it to me.

L. C. J. Every Body knows now upon what Deſign he came over from France, and when Mr. Harris ſhewed Diſſatisfaction with the Thing, you made that Anſwer to his Diſcourſe.

Lowick. He never ſaid one Syllable to me of it. I truſt to your Lordſhip's Judgment, and the Jury's Mercy.

L. C. J. And then I would have you anſwer to another Thing, when you dined together on the Saturday the two and twentieth, what were thoſe two Men that could not be diſcharged without you?

Lowick. My Lord, I know nothing in the World of two Men.

L. C. J. You went to diſcharge them, for the King did not go abroad that Day.

Lowick. I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. He ſwears this, and that's as to him; but then as to Bertram, what Deſign was that, that you were to engage Bertram in for his Advantage, and he was to ask no Queſtions?

Lowick. My Lord, he is a poor Man, and my Countryman, and I have at all Times, from time to time, for this ſeven Years, helped to ſubſiſt him and his Family, that he will not deny, and I have ſeveral Times given him both Clothes and Money.

L. C. J. Then I would ask you again, When he came to your Lodging on Friday the 14th of February, and you told him the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and ſaid that we were to ride out very ſuddenly, and you appointed him to meet the next Morning; and becauſe he did not meet you blamed him, and ſaid, It would have been the ſame Thing, if the King had been in the Field. Look you, I would have you give Anſwer to this if you can.

Lowick. I remember nothing in the World of it, not a Word I aſſure you, and to the beſt of my Remembrance, I did not ſee him in two Days after.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I muſt beg leave to anſwer to the Objection that the Counſel for the Priſoner have made, that there are not two Witneſſes to prove the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and ſo the Law is not ſatisfied. In Anſwer to that, I deſire your Lordſhip's Favour to obſerve how the Evidence is, and then we ſhall ſee whether there are not plainly two poſitive Witneſſes of the Overt-Act, by agreeing to aſſaſſinate the King. The firſt Witneſs is Mr. Harris, your Lordſhip obſerves that Mr. Harris gives an Account that Mr. Lowick was at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings the firſt Day that it was to have been executed; and that afterwards between the fifteenth and the two and twentieth, thoſe being the firſt and ſecond Days that this was to be done, when he and Rookwood, and the Priſoner Lowick, were walking together in Red-Lion-Fields; and there had ſome Diſcourſe about the intended Aſſaſſination, and the Barbarity and Bloodineſs of it, and Mr. Harris and Mr. Rookwood were averſe to it. Mr. Lowick ſaid he would obey Orders, and he was ſure Sir George Barclay would not do it unleſs he had direct Orders for it; that was twice repeated by him, as Harris ſwears: And afterwards Mr. Harris tells you, that the two and twentieth he dined with Mr. Lowick, and Mr. Lowick obſerved that Mr. Harris came in, in a great Sweat, and asked him how it happened; he ſaid he had been about to get ready Rookwood's Party that were to ſeize the King, for he was to have one Party. Says Mr. Lowick to him, you need not grudge to do it, you have ſix Shillings a Day, I have nothing; and yet I, at my own Charge, am to provide two. This is as poſitive Evidence as well can be of his being privy to the Deſign; and his engaging People at his own Charge, ſhews a great deal of Forwardneſs and Zeal in the Priſoner to the Buſineſs. My Lord, I think this is poſitive and plain Evidence, and not only made out by Inferences and Conſtructions, as Sir B. Shower ſays, but plain, poſitive Proof. The firſt Day he was with ſeveral of them, and when they diſcourſed of the Thing afterwards, he declared he would obey Orders; and what could thoſe Orders be but for what they were diſcourſing of, and nothing was diſcourſed of but this Deſign they were engaged in, and this was to juſtify the Thing, and take off the Apprehenſion of the Barbarity of it: This is Harris's Teſtimony. The next Witneſs is Bertram, and he tells you that the fifth of February the Priſoner ſent for him, and when he came to him, he asked if he would engage in a Buſineſs that might be for his Advantage, and ask no Queſtions; ſo at that Time he did not acquaint him what the Thing was, but that ſhews it was a Thing that was to be kept ſecret at that Time, in regard he did not think fit to acquaint him at the firſt Inſtance. But the fourteenth of February, when he met him again, the Day before the firſt Time that it was to be put in Execution; Bertram ſwears he told him that they were to ride out the next Morning, that muſt be Lowick and Bertram, for there was no Body elſe there; and that the Prince of Orange was to be ſeized in his Coach. Was it poſſible the Priſoner could be ignorant of it? When he engaged him to go upon a Deſign without asking Queſtions; ſent for him the Day before, acquainted him they were to ride out the next Morning, and that the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and bid him be ready againſt next Morning, and gave him a Guinea at that Time; the Witneſs ſays it was for Neceſſaries, but he does not pretend that it was for Charity, as formerly. And that muſt be for Neceſſaries for that Purpoſe that they were then diſcourſing of, when he deſired him to be ready the next Day, and gives him Money to buy him Neceſſaries: What can that be, but Neceſſaries for what he was to be ready for? And then he did not come the next Day, and he tells you why, becauſe he thought it a very wicked and unlawful Thing, and ſo he diſappointed him; and the next Time Lowick chid him, and told him he would have ſerved him ſo if the King had been in the Field. This is plain, though I believe Bertram does ſpeak as tenderly as he can, being his Friend and old Acquaintance, and is willing to ſay as little as he can of him? ſo that I believe no Body thinks but what Bertram ſays againſt the Priſoner is true, and what he ſwears is plain and poſitive. To ſhew, that Lowick did engage in the Deſign, he acquainted him with it the fourteenth, by telling him the King was to be ſeized, and they were to ride out, and he was to be ready the next Day.

L. C. J. He does not ſay they were to ride out the next Day.

Sir B. Shower. No, the Words were, We are to ride out ſuddenly.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think he did ſay they were to ride out the next Morning.

L. C. J. No, Call him in again.

Mr. Cowper. The Words were, We ſhall ride out ſuddenly, and bid him meet him next Morning; and afterwards chid him for not meeting accordingly, and told him it had been the ſame Thing if the King had been in the Field.

L. C. J. If you cannot agree upon the Evidence, you muſt call in the Witneſs.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we are agreed upon the Evidence, it was ſuddenly.

L. C. J. Well then, there is no Occaſion, have you done on both Sides?

Counſel. Yes, my Lord, we ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner at the Bar, Robert Lowick, is Indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King by an Aſſaſſination; you have heard what Evidence has been given upon this Indictment. And in the firſt Place, It is proved to you that there was a Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King; which was to be carried on under the Conduct and Management of Sir George Barclay. The Queſtion that you are now to conſider of, is whether the Priſoner at the Bar was concerned or engaged in the Proſecution of that Deſign. There have been two Witneſſes produced, who have given their Evidence, and have been very ſtrictly examined, and Obſervations have been made upon the Teſtimony they have given.

The firſt Witneſs is Mr. Harris, and he gives you ſome Account of the Original of this Deſign. He tells you how he was at St. Germains, and introduced to the late King James, who did expreſs a great Kindneſs for him, and told him that he had an Opportunity of doing ſomething for him that would be for his Advantage: And that he and one Hare, who was preſent at that Time, ſhould go into England, (for it ſeems they were both together introduced by Colonel Parker) and ſhould be ſubſiſted in England, and thereupon Directions were given them what Courſe they were to take; which was to go to Calais, and to each of them ten Lewidores were given for their Charges, and they were acquainted that if it happened that if they ſhould lie there ſo long for Want of a Wind to bring them over hither that their Money was ſpent, Proviſion ſhould be made for their Supply there. They had farther Directions, that when they came into England, they ſhould apply themſelves to Sir George Barclay, and follow his Orders, with Inſtructions how to find him; being told that Sir George Barclay would be walking in Covent-Garden every Monday, and every Thurſday Night, about the Hours of ſix or ſeven o'Clock, and that they ſhould know him by a white Handkerchief that was to hang out of his Pocket.

Mr. Harris further tells you, That they did come to Calais, in order to embark for England, and there they happened to ſtay a conſiderable Time, even ſo long that their Money would not defray their Expences there, and they found it true as it was promiſed them; for the Preſident of Calais paid the Reckoning for them at the Place where they lodged; and afterwards they came into England, and landed in Kent, and came to Rocheſter, and from thence to London. About the latter End of January, Old Stile (for it ſhould ſeem it was the 14th New Stile, which is the 4th, Old Stile, they were at St. Germains) he tells you that he did go the firſt Monday, after their Arrival, into Covent-Garden, to look after Sir George Barclay, but then miſt him. But afterwards his Companion, Mr Hare, met with one Berkenhead, and complaining that they had not met with Sir George Barclay according to the Directions they had abroad: Whereupon, by the Means of Berkenhead, they were brought to the Speech of Sir George Barclay, who gave them Reception, and owned that he had Authority to ſubſiſt them; but ſaid he had not then Money, but ſhortly ſhould, and when he had, they ſhould be ſure to receive their Subſiſtence. He tells you, that after this, Sir George Barclay gave them Subſiſtence Money, Paying them at the Rate of five Shillings a Day when they had no Horſes, and when they had, ſix Shillings a Day: So they put themſelves altogether under his Command and Conduct. He has given you an Account what Diſcourſe he had with Mr. Rookwood, from whom he diſcover'd what the Deſign was in which he was to be engaged. And the Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King was firſt intended to be put in Execution on Saturday the 15th of February, at which Day Mr. Harris and others, being at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings; Sir George ſaid they were his Janiſaries, and afterwards careſt them, and ſaid they were Men of Honour, and told them that they were to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards; but it ſeems the King not going abroad that Day, they loſt that Opportunity.

Truly, Then Mr. Harris began to be a little troubled, and concerned, when he underſtood the Meaning of his being under Sir George Barclay's Conduct. And he ſays that after that firſt Saturday the 15th, and before the next Saturday the 22d, he met with Lowick, Rookwood, and Bernarde, and he was complaining of his being engaged in ſuch a Deſign as this was. He called it then the Murder of the Prince of Orange, and ſaid it was a barbarous Thing, and he did not like it, nor Rookwood neither; but as for Lowick, whether he diſliked it, or no, I know not, but he made Anſwer to him, I will obey Orders: Says he, Sir George Barclay has Orders for it, or otherwiſe he would not do it.

Then you are told further, that after this, on Saturday the 22d, Mr. Harris dined with Lowick at a Cook's at the End of Red-Lion-Street, and being there together, Harris being in a Sweat, and was asked the Reaſon by Lowick, he ſaid he had been giving of Orders for the getting ſome Men together that were to go under Rookwood, and Lowick told him he might very well do it, for he had Pay 6 s. a Day; but ſays he, I am to ſubſiſt two Men, and have nothing at all. Mr. Harris wiſhed him to go to Sir George Barclay and complain of it to him, but he ſaid he would not; but it ſeems, it being then underſtood by them that the King did not go abroad that Day, Lowick ſaid he muſt go and diſcharge the two Men, and went about it. This is the Sum and Subſtance of Mr. Harris's Evidence againſt Mr. Lowick.

The next Witneſs is Bertram, and he tells you that ſometime before the fifteenth of February, which was, as I told you, the very firſt Day that they did deſign to aſſaſſinate the King, Mr. Lowick ſent for him, and told him, that he would put him upon a Buſineſs that ſhould be for his Advantage, if he would undertake it without asking any Queſtions; this was ſometime before, but the certain Day Bertram does not remember; but he tells you farther, that on Friday the fourteenth of February, he was with Lowick at his Lodgings, and he ſaid unto him, that the King, he did believe, was to be ſeized in his Coach, and we are to ride out ſuddenly; and then he gave him a Guinea to buy him Neceſſaries, and withal bid him meet him at the Purle-houſe in Hart-ſtreet next Morning; and Bertram tells you, he had underſtood what this Deſign was, for he had it before from Charnock, and did forbear to go the next Morning, becauſe he did diſlike it. After this Mr. Lowick met him and chid him for diſappointing of him, in not meeting him as he directed, for ſays he, it would have been the ſame thing if the King had been in the Field. This is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that Bertram has given againſt him.

Now Bertram being croſs-examined on the behalf of the Priſoner, ſays he hath known him a great while, and that he is a Man of a peaceable and fair Diſpoſition, very charitable, and that he has given him Money before, and particularly a Guinea to his Wife in his Abſence.

Indeed I might have mentioned the Evidence of Fiſher to you, but that is but circumſtantial, and does not come home to the Caſe, but being given it may be mention'd, and that is, about the Eighth of February, Fiſher had ſome Diſcourſe with Lowick, and it ſeems there was Notice taken of the intended Invaſion, and Lowick ſaid he would ſerve his Maſter faithfully; and that the Witneſs thought was meant of the late King; and he ſaid at another Time, that he would not diſcourſe with above one at a Time, becauſe of the late Act of Parliament that was then a paſſing, relating to High-Treaſon, that required two Witneſſes. Now, I ſay, this is not any Proof againſt the Priſoner, but it is a Circumſtance that may ſhew his Inclination to the late King.

The Counſel for the Priſoner have inſiſted upon the Inſufficiency of the Evidence that has been given on behalf of the King, and have ſaid, that the late Act of Parliament requires two Witneſſes, which is true, but not two Witneſſes to any one Overt-Act; but if there be two Witneſſes, one to one and another to another Overt-Act, that is ſufficient; but they ſay that it is not ſo in this Caſe.

In the firſt Place, they object againſt the Evidence that is given by Harris, they ſay it is ſhort, that muſt be left to your Conſideration; whether the Evidence that is given by Harris concerning Mr. Lowick, does prove to your Satisfaction, that he conſented and agreed to the Aſſaſſination of the King, you are to weigh the Evidence, when it is ſworn that when Harris, Rookwood, and the Priſoner were walking in Red-Lion-Fields, and talking of this horrid Deſign, and Harris complained that it was a barbarous Thing to murder the Prince of Orange, as they call'd him, you muſt conſider what Anſwer Lowick did make about obeying of Orders; then his ſubſiſting of Men at his own Charge without Pay, and complaining of his having no Pay, and his diſcharging them the laſt Day that the Aſſaſſination was intended, that I muſt leave to you, whether or no this is not an Evidence, if you believe the Witneſs to ſatisfy you that he was engaged in this Deſign.

Then, Gentlemen, he has alſo been deſired to give an Anſwer to this Queſtion, and to tell upon what Deſign he was to employ Bertram that ſhould be for his Advantage; but he was to ask no Queſtions, and afterwards whether he did tell him the King was to be ſeized in his Coach, and they were to ride out ſuddenly and bid him meet him the next Morning, and when he did not meet him, he ſaid, It would have been the ſame Thing if the King had been in the Field. If this be an Evidence of Mr. Lowick's engaging in and agreeing and conſenting to the Deſign, then here will be another Witneſs againſt the Priſoner beſides Harris.

Gentlemen, you are to judge of this Matter and of the Evidence. It is true, we are not to put in the Caſe of a Man's Life, any forced and violent Conſtructions upon any Words or Diſcourſes; but if the Evidence be plain and clear, tho' he did not ſay in expreſs Words, that he did deſign to aſſaſſinate or kill the King; yet, if upon the whole Diſcourſe that paſt between them it appears plainly, clearly, and ſatisfactorily to you that he did conſent and agree to this Deſign, or was engaged in it, here's another Witneſs, I ſay, to prove him guilty, beſides Harris; you are to conſider the whole Evidence, the ſubject matter of Diſcourſe, and if you are ſatisfied, I ſay, that he was engaged in ſuch a Deſign by the Proof of Bertram, as well as of Harris, then there are two Witneſſes, which is as much as the Law requires.

But, indeed, the Counſel have called ſeveral Witneſſes to prove that the Priſoner has lived very peaceably and quietly; one Woman ſays, She has known him twelve Years, and that he lodged at her Houſe, and that he was a Man of great Temper and Candour, and not diſorderly, but had a general good Eſteem and Character: And then there is another, Mrs. Moſeley, that proves the like, and ſays, She has known him theſe twenty Years, and ſhe ſays no Man has a better Character: And Mr. Bertram hath ſaid, that he was not of a raſh or bloody Temper.

Now, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you, upon the Evidence that you have heard, there are theſe Witneſſes that have been produced, and there are theſe Circumſtances that appear in the Caſe; if you are ſatisfied upon this Evidence that has been given, that the Priſoner Mr. Lowick did conſent to and engage himſelf in that Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King, then you are to find him guilty; if you are not ſatisfied, you are to find him not guilty; you have heard your Evidence, and had beſt conſider of it.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew, and ſtaid out about half an Hour, and then returned.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, anſwer to your Names, George Ford.

Mr. Ford. Here. [And ſo of the reſt.]

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, Is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge, we do not find any.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that Robert Lowick is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Diſcharge the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Court diſcharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Will you have the Priſoners ſet to the Bar?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

Then the Keeper of Newgate brought Rookwood and Cranburne, and all three were ſet to the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to give Judgment againſt the Priſoners that are convicted.

L. C. J. Ask them what they have to ſay for themſelves in Arreſt of Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand; you ſtand convicted of High-Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, what can you ſay for yourſelf why the Court ſhould not give Judgment againſt you, to die according to Law?

[Then the Keeper bid him kneel.]

L. C. J. No, no, he need not kneel; if you have any thing to ſay, Mr. Lowick, we will hear you.

Lowick. I throw myſelf upon the King's Mercy.

Cl. of Arr. Ambroſe Rookwood, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) you ſtand convicted of the ſame High-Treaſon, for Conſpiring the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, what can you ſay for yourſelf why the Court ſhould not give you Judgment to die according to Law.

Rookwood. All that can be ſaid has been ſaid already, and ſo I ſhall ſay no more.

Cl. of Arr. Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand, thou ſtandeſt convicted of High-Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King by Aſſaſſination, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf, why the Court ſhould not give the Judgment to die according to Law?

Cranburne. I have nothing to ſay but what I have ſaid already.

Cl. of Arr. Then Crier make Proclamation.

Crier. O yes, all Manner of Perſons are commanded to keep Silence while Judgment is in giving upon Pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Lowick, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, you have been indicted, and upon full and clear Evidence have been convicted of High-Treaſon; a Treaſon that was advanced to the higheſt Degree both of Malice and Miſchief againſt the King and Kingdom; you deſign'd to aſſaſſinate the King with an Intent to ſubvert the State, and by the introducing of a foreign Power to deſtroy the ancient Liberty and Conſtitution of England.

Our French and Popiſh Enemies, by whom you were employ'd in this bloody Enterpriſe, did very well know, that the Wiſdom and Courage of his preſent Majeſty has reſcued this Kingdom from that Slavery and Oppreſſion which they often threatned to bring upon us; they knew that under his Government we have been protected in the Enjoyment of our Religion, Laws and Liberty for ſeveral Years, and that his Majeſty is the Head of the Proteſtant Intereſt, and the Protector and Preſerver of the Liberty of Europe, and that upon the Preſervation of his Life, and the Safety of his Perſon, the Good and Happineſs of Multitudes of People do depend, which the French King's Pride and Ambition has been ready to take hold of any Opportunity to enſlave and oppreſs.

Your being engaged in ſuch a horrid Deſign againſt ſo precious a Life, and to be the bloody Inſtruments to give that diſmal Stroke, which would have brought Miſery and Deſolation upon ſo many Men, renders you worthy to undergo a greater and more ſevere Puniſhment than by the Law of England can be inflicted; but that there is no greater provided for ſuch Criminals, is to be imputed to the ancient Honeſty and Integrity of Engliſh Men, who, when they fram'd this Conſtitution of Government, never imagined England ſhould produce ſuch degenerate Wretches, as would endeavour by Plots and Contrivances to betray their Country to a foreign Yoke, and ſubject themſelves and their Fellow-Subjects to the ſlaviſh Dominion of Strangers.

Your Crime being ſo great, it is now high time for you ſeriouſly to reflect upon it; and tho' you deſerve to ſuffer the greateſt of Puniſhments, yet I have that Compaſſion for your Perſons, that I wiſh heartily you would make uſe of that Opportunity which is now put into your Hands, to repent. And ſince you are adjudg'd by the Law unworthy to live here, that you will make Preparation to appear at another Tribunal, where you muſt have another Trial, and, without an hearty and ſincere Repentance, receive a more ſevere Sentence. I hope this Calamity, and the Judgment that is to fall upon you, will be an Admonition to you to take better Advice in the laſt part of your Time which is left you, than you have done in the whole Courſe of your Lives, and that you will be wiſer than to follow the Direction of thoſe Guides whoſe Principles and Doctrines have ſo far perverted and corrupted you, as to engage you in ſuch a bloody Deſign. I ſhall leave you to make that Preparation for another World, which is proper for Men in your Condition, and pronounce the Judgment of the Court, which the Law hath appointed and the Court does award;

That

That all of you be conveyed from hence to the Priſon from whence you came, and from thence every one of you is to be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hang'd by your Necks, and to be cut down while you are alive, your Privy-Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels are to be cut out of your Bodies, and burnt in your View, your Heads are to be cut off, and your Bodies to be divided into four Parts, and your Heads and Quarters are to be diſpoſed where his Majeſty ſhall appoint. And I pray God to have Mercy on all your Souls.

Cranburne. I humbly deſire the Liberty of my Wife and Relations to come to me, and ſuch Divines as I ſhall deſire may have free Recourſe to me.

L. C. J. You ſhall have that Liberty that is allowed to all Perſons in your Condition.

Rookwood. I muſt beg the ſame Favour to have ſome few Friends and Relations come to ſee me without a Keeper.

L. C. J. You ſhall have a Warrant for your Friends to come to you.

Rookwood. I beg your Lordſhip that you would pleaſe to ſpecify it in the Warrant, becauſe they would not grant it hitherto without a Keeper being by.

L. C. J. You mean, you would have your Brother permitted to come to you.

Rookwood. Yes, and ſome few Relations.

L. C. J. What is uſually done in ſuch Caſes, let it be done.

Lowick. My Lord, I deſire the ſame Thing, that my Siſter may come to me, and that the little time I have I may be in private with my Friends.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, they may give the Names of thoſe they would have admitted to them, and then the Keeper will attend your Lordſhip for your Direction.

L. C. J. That the Keeper muſt take care of, leſt they allow ſuch a Liberty as may endanger an Eſcape; for their being alone may prove a dangerous thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is reaſonable they ſhould tell who they are, before they be admitted.

L. C. J. You allow them, I ſuppoſe, to have private Diſcourſe in the ſame Room, if a Keeper be by.

Cranburne. No, my Lord, we never had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Such as your Lordſhip thinks proper to be admitted to them may have Diſcourſe with them in private, if the Keeper be in the Room, but no others but ſuch as your Lordſhip ſhall allow; for we know what has been the Effect of a Liberty of Acceſs to ſome Priſoners.

L. C. J. Let us have a Note of thoſe Names that you would have come to you, and we will give Directions that ſhall be proper in it.

Cl. of Arr. Sheriff of Middleſex, you muſt take them into your Cuſtody till Execution is done.

Then the Keeper took away the Priſoners.

On Wedneſday, April 29. Ambroſe Rookwood, Robert Lowick, and Charles Cranburne, were drawn to Tyburn, where the two former deliver'd the following Papers to the Sheriffs.

Major LOWICK's Paper.

IN the Name of the Holy Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, Amen. In the firſt Place, I die in the Religion I was baptiz'd, viz. Roman Catholick, and humbly beg the Prayers of all good People for a happy Reſurrection, and of all Catholicks for the Good of my Soul.

As for being engag'd in this for which I die, it was never ſo poſitive that I had a Horſe from the Beginning to the very Laſt, nor never ſee any allow'd me, or the two Men I was to provide, as was ſworn againſt me at my Trial; nor had I any on that Account; nor was I at any of their Meetings when they ſettled any ſuch thing. And as for any Order or Commiſſion from King James, I never ſee any ſince I came laſt into England, which is now about five Years; and I am confident none that knows King James will believe he would give any ſuch Order.

Indeed, I muſt confeſs, I believe King James was a coming to aſſert his own Right; and I ſhould, if on Shore, have done any thing in my Power to have aſſiſted him; and, in order to that, I ſhould have been very glad to have had a Horſe, but never had any.

And as for being concern'd in any bloody Affair, I never was in my Life, but have done my Endeavour to prevent, as much as I could, on all Occaſions; and if the killing the moſt miſerable Creature in the World, or greateſt Enemy, would now ſave my Life, reſtore the King, and make me one of the greateſt Men in England, I firſt would chooſe to die, becauſe againſt the Law of God.

If any who are now Sufferers on this Account, think I have been too forward, and a Promoter to this Deſign, I do now declare it was never my Inclination to do any raſh thing. However, I beg their Pardons, and of all the World I have offended, either in Thought, Word, or any Action whatſoever, and do freely forgive my Enemies, and hope, thro' the Mercy of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to have Remiſſion of all my Sins. Good God preſerve the King, Queen, Prince, and Princeſs, and all that royal Blood of Stuarts; and may England never want one of that direct Line to govern them, and make them once more happy. I have had the Honour to ſerve my royal Maſter in ſeveral Commiſſions, and the laſt as Major, and ſtrove ever to ſerve him to the beſt of my Power, and ever to be juſt to thoſe whom I had the Honour to command. Lord Jeſus, into thy Hands I recommend my Spirit! O Jeſus, receive my Soul!

ROBERT LOWICK.

Brigadier ROOKWOOD's Paper.

HAVING committed the Juſtice of my Cauſe, and recommended my Soul to God, on whoſe Mercies, thro' the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, I wholly caſt myſelf, I had once reſolv'd to die in Silence; but ſecond Thoughts of my Duty to others, chiefly to my true and liege Sovereign King James, moved me to leave this behind me.

I do therefore, with all Truth and Sincerity, declare and avow, that I never knew, ſaw, or heard of any Order or Commiſſion from King James for the aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange, and attacking his Guards; but I am certainly inform'd that he, the beſt of Kings, had often rejected Propoſals of that Nature, when made unto him.

Nor do I think he knew the leaſt of the particular Deſign of the attacking the Guards at his Landing, ſo much talk'd of, in which I was engaged as a Soldier, by my immediate Commander, much againſt my Judgment; but his Soldier I was, and as ſuch I was to obey and act according to Command.

Theſe twelve Years I have ſerved my true King and Maſter, King James, and freely now lay down my Life in his Cauſe. I ever abhorr'd Treachery, even to an Enemy; if it be a Guilt to have comply'd with what I thought, and ſtill think, to have been my Duty, I am guilty. No other Guilt do I own.

As I beg all to forgive me, ſo I forgive all from my Heart, even the Prince of Orange, who, as a Soldier, ought to have conſider'd my Caſe before he ſign'd the Warrant for my Death. I pray God may open his Eyes, and render him ſenſible of the much Blood, from all Parts, crying out againſt him, ſo to prevent an heavier Execution hanging over his Head, than what he inflicts on me.

AMBROSE ROOKWOOD.

After which they were executed as Traitors, according to their Sentence.

CLIX. The Trial of PETER COOK, at the Old-Bailey, for High-Treason, May 9, 1696. 8 Will. III.

Saturday May 9, 1696.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of Mr. Peter Cook, upon an Indictment of High-Treason found against him by the Grand Jury for the City of London, upon the Commission of Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the said City, upon which Indictment he had been arraigned, and upon pleading not guilty, Issue had been joined, and the Court having been adjourned unto this Day for the Trial by publick Proclamation in usual manner, the Court was resumed, and the Names of the Men returned to serve on the Jury, having been called over according to the Pannel, and the Defaulters recorded; the Court proceeded as follows.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook the Prisoner to the Bar. [Which was done.] You Prisoner at the Bar, those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and You, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will Challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak to them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Cook. Sir, I desire you would not name them too fast, for my Eyes are very bad.

Cl. of Arr. John Ewer.

Cook. Who must I apply myself to, Sir? I desire to know whether he is a Freeholder in London?

Cl. of Arr. I know nothing to the contrary, Sir, he is returned as such by the Sheriff; you had best ask him himself, he can best tell.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr. Ewer. Yes, Sir, I am a Freeholder.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Sherbrook.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr. Sherbrook. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I challenge you. —— No, Sir, I beg your Pardon, I do not challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Then hold Mr. Sherbrook the Book: [Which was done.] Look upon the Prisoner: You shall well and truly try and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Billers.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London?

Mr. Billers. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]

Cl. of Arr. John Brand.

Cook. Pray, Sir, don't go too fast; Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr. Brand, I am no Freeholder in London.

L. C. J. Treby. What say you, Mr. Attorney?

Sir Thomas Trevor. * Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not have any Body that is not a Freeholder serve; so he was set by.

Cl. of Arr. William Hull.

Mr. Hull. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.

L. C. J. Treby. Why, what Estate have you?

Mr. Hull. What I have, is in Leases.

L. C. J. Treby. What, Leases for Years, or Leases for Lives?

Mr. Hull. Leases for Years, Sir.

L. C. J. Then he cannot serve upon the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Leeds.

Cook. Hold, Sir, let me see; are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr. Leeds. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd]

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Clark.

Cook. Hold, Sir, I pray let me look upon my Paper. I challenge him.

A Stander-by. He does not appear.

Cl. of Arr. Nathan Green.

Cook. Where is he, Sir? Are you a Freeholder?

Mr. Green, Yes, I am, Sir. [Challeng'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Emes.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr. Emes. Yes, I am.

Cook. Were you one of Sir John Friend's Jury?

Mr. Emes. Yes I was.

Cook. Then I challenge you for Cause, and I give you my Reason.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. I pray, let us hear your Reason; give your Reason for your Challenge.

Cook. It is for being of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. Then you challenge him for Cause.

Cook. Yes, that he was of Sir John Friend's Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, Brother Darnall, how is that a Cause of Challenge? You are the Prisoner's Counsel, let us hear what you say to it.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. My Lord, what we have to say to it, is this; Here are some Persons returned upon this Pannel, that were formerly Jurors in a Cause that was try'd for the same Species of Treason that this Gentleman, the Prisoner, is charged with in this Indictment; and I think the Witnesses at that Trial did mention in their Evidence my Client, as being present at those very Consults, about which they gave their Evidence; these Gentlemen gave Credit to those Witnesses, and found the Verdict against the Person then accused. We humbly submit it to your Lordship and the Court, whether we may not for this Cause challenge this Person as not indifferent, it being for the same Cause and Consult that the other was try'd for.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure Mr. Serjeant is not in earnest in this Objection.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. My Client thinks it a very good Objection, that he is not indifferent, and I desire he should be satisfied in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he thinks so, he may except against him, but if he insist upon it as a Cause of Challenge, we desire you would put the Case, and my Lords the Judges determine it.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. I have told you what the Case is.

L. C. J. Treby. But you hear the King's Counsel insist upon it, to have you make it out in Point of Law.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. My Lord, I have stated the Case as my Client desired, and we submit it to you.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, there is nothing in it.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. Then my Client, if he will not have him serve, must challenge him peremptorily; which he did.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Byer.

Cook.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?
Mr. Byer. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. James Denew.
Mr. Denew. I am no Freeholder.
Cl. of Arr. Henry Hunter.
Cook. Hold, hold, my Lord, I challenge him as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Mr. Baker. Nay, that was not allow'd in Mr. Emes's Caſe; but you challenged him peremptorily, and ſo you muſt now, if you have a Mind to it.
Cook. I challenge him.
Cl. of Arr. John Hall.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Hall. Yes, I am, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. John Cullum.
Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London?
Mr. Cullum. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. John Cox.
Mr. Cox. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.
Cl. of Arr. John Hedges.
Cook. Hold, I pray, Sir, let me look upon my Paper; Sir, are you a Freeholder in London?
Mr. Hedges. Yes, Sir, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Thomas James.
Mr. James. My Lord, my Name is not Thomas.
Mr. Sher. Buckingham He is returned, it ſeems, by a wrong Name; we did not know it.
Mr. Serj. Darnal. Then you cannot ſwear him.
Cl. of Arr. Thomas Poole.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Poole. Yes, Sir.
Cook. I challenge him, as being of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Mr. Att. Gen. That has been over-ruled already.
Cook. I challenge him.
Cl. of Arr. Peter Parker.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London?
Mr. Parker. Yes, Sir, I am.
Cook. I challenge you, Sir, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Mr. Baker. Nay, you can't offer it again.
Cook. I challenge him.
Cl. of Arr. George Grove.
Cook. Where is he? Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Grove. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Nathaniel Wyerſdell.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London?
Mr. Wyerſdell. Yes, Sir, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Samuel Blewit.
Cook. Hold, pray, are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr. Blewit. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. John Wolfe. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Wolfe. He did not appear, and was ſaid to be no Freeholder.
Cl. of Arr. William Smith.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr. Smith. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Edward Fenwick.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr. Fenwick. Yes, Sir, I am.
Cook. I do not challenge him.
Cl. of Arr. Then ſwear Mr. Fenwick. [Which was done.]
Cl. of Arr. Benjamin Hooper.
Cook. Stay, Sir, pray ſtay a little, where is he?
Cl. of Arr. There he is, Sir.
Cook. Which is the Gentleman? Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Hooper. Yes, Sir.
Cook. I challenge you.
Mr. Hooper. I thank you, Sir.
Cl. of Arr. Nathaniel Long.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr Long. Yes, Sir.
Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Cl. of Arr. The Court has adjudged that no Cauſe of Challenge, therefore I take no notice of it, but as to a peremptory Challenge.
Cl. of Arr. Richard Chiſwell.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Chiſwell, Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. John Child.
Cook. Hold, pray, a Moment; I have not croſt theſe laſt in my Paper, but I challenge this Man, being of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Mr. Baker. You have had that anſwered over and over again, as no Objection; it is nothing but a peremptory Challenge.
Cl. of Arr. William Walker.
Mr. Walker. I was one of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Cook. I challenge him for the ſame Reaſon.
Mr. Att. Gen. But that is no Reaſon at all.
Cook. Then I challenge him.
Cl. of Arr. John Wells.
Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?
Mr. Wells. Yes, Sir, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. John Hibbert.
Cook. Which is he, Sir?
Cl. of Arr. He ſtands upon your Left-hand; the Man in the black Peruke.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr. Hibbert. Yes, I am, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Daniel Wray.
Cook. Stay, Sir, are you Mr. Wray?
Mr. Wray. Yes, Sir, my Name is Wray.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Wray. Yes, Sir.
Cook. I challenge you.
Mr. Wray. I thank you, Sir.
Cl. of Arr. John Petit.
Cook. Which is he?
Mr. Petit. I am the Man, Sir.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
Mr. Petit. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. John Sherbrook.
Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.
Mr. Baker. But you have heard that denied to be an Exception over and over.
Cook. I challenge him.
Cl. of Arr. Stephen Blackwell.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr. Blackwell. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. William Hatch.
Cook. Pray give me time to mark them; pray, who is this Man you now call?
Cl. of Arr. William Hatch.
Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?
Mr. Hatch. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
Cl. of Arr. Henry Beadle.
Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?
Mr. Beadle. Yes, I am.
Cook. I do not except againſt him. [Was ſworn.]
Cl. of Arr. John Stredwick.
Mr. Stredwick. My Lord, as I apprehend, I am no Freeholder.
L. C. J. Treby. Why do you apprehend ſo?
Mr. Stredwick. It is my Wife's Eſtate, not mine.

Cl. of Arr.

Cl. of Arr. Then your Wife has a Freehold, it ſeems.

Mr. Stredwick. Yes, ſhe has.

L. C. J. Treby. That is Freehold enough; for you have an Eſtate for your Wife's Life.

Mr. Baker. And after that too, for it is not given over to any Body elſe, and ſhe won't give it from him.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London or no?

Mr. Stredwick. I apprehend, Sir, I am not.

Mr. Baker. He ſays he has an Eſtate for his Wife's Life.

Cl. of Arr. Then he is a Freeholder, what do you ſay to him?

Cook. Are you poſitive you are a Freeholder in London upon your Word?

Mr. Stredwick. I think not.

Mr. Baker. Why your Wife's Eſtate is yours for your Life.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, here is a Man that ſays poſitively he thinks he is no Freeholder, I deſire your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether he be a Freeholder or not?

L. C. J. Treby. Why let him put his Caſe, if he make a Doubt of it.

Mr. Stredwick. I am not poſſeſt of an Eſtate my ſelf.

L. C. J. Treby. But is not your Wife an Inheritrix?

Mr. Stredwick. Yes, my Lord, ſhe is.

L. C. J. Treby. Then you are ſeiz'd of a Freehold in her Right; and, Mr. Cook, your own Counſel will tell you and ſatisfy you, that that is a Freehold ſufficient for this Service.

Mr. Baker. His Wife's Father ſettled it upon her and her Heirs.

L. C. J. Treby. No queſtion, it is a ſufficient Freehold if the Wife be living.

Mr. Baker. Yes, ſhe is.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. William Prince.

Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Friend's Jury.

Mr. Prince. I thank you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. John Simmons.

Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Arr. Robert White.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr. White. Yes, I think ſo.

Cook. Pray tell me whether you are, or not.

Mr. White. Indeed I think ſo, Sir. [Challeng'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Edward Brewſter.

Cook. Where is Mr. Brewſter? Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London?

Mr. Brewſter. Yes, Sir.

Cook. I challenge him. Pray, Sir, I deſire to know how many I have challenged.

Mr. Baker. You have challenged Thirty Three.

Cook. How many beſides thoſe that are of Sir John Friend's Jury?

Mr. Baker. You have but two more to challenge, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I thought you had heard the Opinion of the Court, Mr. Cook, that it will not hold as a Cauſe of Challenge that he was of Sir John Friend's Jury; therefore thoſe are all reckoned among the peremptory Challenges, and you can challenge but two more in all.

L. C. J. Treby. Not without Cauſe, but as many more as you can have good Cauſe againſt.

Cl. of Arr. John Reynolds.

Cook. I except not againſt him. [Was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Brookbank.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay to him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. Adam Bellamy.

Mr. Bellamy. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. Why, what Eſtate have you?

Mr. Baker. He has Eſtate enough, I know, for Value.

Mr. Bellamy. I have only a Leaſe.

L. C. J. Treby. A Leaſe for Years?

Mr. Bellamy. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. David Grill.

Mr. Grill. I am no Freeholder, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. William Rawlins.

Cook. I accept of him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Roycroft.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?

Mr. Roycroft. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Parker.

Cook. How many have I to challenge, do you ſay?

Cl. of Arr. But one, Sir; what ſay you to Mr. Parker?

Cook. I do not except againſt him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. James Robinſon.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay to him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Morewood. [Challeng'd.]

Mr. Baker. You have challeng'd all your Number now.

Cl. of Arr. My Lord, we have gone through the Pannel, we muſt now call the Defaulters again. Thomas Clark.

Mr. Clark. Here.

Sir B. Shower. Was he here when he was call'd over?

Mr. Att. Gen. That's nothing, he is here now.

Sir B. Shower. But if there be a Default of the Jury, and the King's Counſel have challenged any one, they ought to ſhew their Cauſe; therefore we deſire that they may ſhew their Cauſe why they challeng'd Mr. Simmons.

L. C. J. Treby. The King has Power to challenge without ſhewing Cauſe till the Pannel be gone through; but if there be a Default of Jurors when the King challenges, the King's Counſel muſt ſhew Cauſe.

Sir B. Shower. Here is a Default of Jurors, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. No body is recorded abſolutely a Defaulter, if he comes in time enough to be ſworn.

Cl. of Arr. Swear Mr. Clark [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Treby. When there is an apparent Default of Jurors, then they muſt ſhew their Cauſe: but here his Appearance, it ſeems, was recorded, and ſo he was no Defaulter; and you might have challenged him for Cauſe ſtill.

Cl. of Ar. James Dry.

Mr. Dry. My Name is not James.

Serj. Darnal. Then you cannot ſwear him: Here are Three miſtaken in their Names.

L. C. J. Treby. That is in the Copy in your Brief, Brother, it may be.

Serj. Darnal. No, my Lord, the Officers admit it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we deſire thoſe Gentlemen, that ſay they are no Freeholders, may be ſworn to that Matter. [Which was accordingly done.] And ſeveral of them that had ſtaid, did deny the having of any Freehold upon Oath, and ſome were gone away.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray take care to eſtreat the Iſſues, and return greater Iſſues the next time.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Truly, the Court muſt put ſome great Penalty upon them for trifling with the Court in reſpect of their Duty that they owe to the King and Country, in regard of their Eſtates.

Cl. of Arr. Pray, let the Officers be called who ſummoned this Jury, Mr. Sheriff.

[Which was done.] And they examined concerning their ſummoning thoſe who made Default, and the Iſſues of thoſe who were recorded as Defaulters were ordered to be eſtreated.

Then the Court not being able to proceed for want of a Jury, they ordered another Pannel to be ready againſt Wedneſday next, to which time, at Seven in the Morning, the Court was by Proclamation adjourned.

Die Mercurii Decimo Tertio Maii, Anno Dom. 1696.

The Court being met according to the Adjournment, the Pannel was called over, and the Defaulters Recorded, and ſeveral excuſed for Abſence upon Sickneſs, and being out of Town before the Summons. Then Mr. Serjeant Darnall deſired before the Jury was called, to move ſomething againſt the Pannel: And made his Motion thus,

Mr. Serj. Darnall. IF your Lordſhip pleaſes, I have ſomewhat to offer to you before you go upon this new Pannel, and I confeſs, I think it is my Duty to the Court, as well as to the Priſoner, to ſtate the Caſe as it is, and ſubmit it upon the Reaſon of Law, and the Authorities that I ſhall offer, whether the Proceedings upon this new Pannel will not be erroneous? My Lord, the Queſtion is, whether as this Caſe is, the Priſoner has had a Copy of the Pannel of his Jury by which he is to be tried, according as the late Law requires? he had a Copy of the former Pannel, and upon that Pannel Nine were ſworn, and their Names all entered upon Record, and made Parcel of the Record. Therefore now the Queſtion is, whether he can be tried upon a new Pannel? We are in a Caſe that rarely happens; and in a Caſe of Life and Death, I know your Lordſhip will be careful not to vary from the ancient Practice or to make a new Precedent, becauſe of the Conſequences. It muſt be agreed in this Caſe, that the old Pannel upon which the Priſoner took his Challenges, and of which Nine were ſworn, is Parcel of the Record. Now, my Lord, to add a new Pannel, upon which Twelve more ſhall be ſworn, and all this appear upon Record, and the Priſoner tried upon the laſt Pannel, will not this be Error? I offer this before the Jury be called and ſworn, becauſe we deſire to be fairly tried; and we deſign to reſt upon the Fact in this Caſe. If it ſhould appear, That he is tried upon a Pannel that is unduly made and returned, that will be of Evil Conſequence one way or other. And can this be duly made, if another appear upon Record before it? And can any Body ſay it is quaſh'd or abated? Or can it be ſo? My Lord, in Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, p. 155. it is ſaid, If any of the Pannel die after the Return, and before their Appearance, ſo that there are not enough left to make the Jury, yet the Pannel ſhall not be quaſh'd, nor is it abated, but it is Cauſe to grant a Tales. And certainly, my Lord, it is a ſtronger Caſe, when by reaſon of Challenges, which the Law gives the Priſoner Liberty to make, there are not enough left, that there ſhall not be a new Pannel, but that a Tales ſhall be granted; for if a new Pannel might be made, it cannot appear who were challenged, or who were admitted. And if your Lordſhip pleaſes to conſider the Intention of the Law in giving the Priſoner Power to challenge, is, that he may have an indifferent Jury; but that would be prevented by ſuch a Practice as this; for when it has been diſcovered upon the old Pannel whom the Priſoner choſe, and whom he challenged upon the new Pannel, the Perſons challenged may be ſet firſt, and thoſe, that were choſen may be omitted, or ſo, poſtponed, that none of them whom he thought equal to try him, can ſerve upon the Jury. And truly, my Lord, if I am rightly informed, that is the Caſe upon this new Pannel, ſome of thoſe that were admitted and ſworn are left out, and moſt of them, I think, are put laſt in the Pannel whom he thought equal Men to try him, and all thoſe whom he challenged peremptorily, are the firſt Men in the Pannel. This, my Lord, is the Caſe before you, and if this be admitted, the Uſe and End of Challenges, which are in benefit and favour of Life would be defeated. And for Authorities in this Caſe, beſides the Reaſon and Ground of the Law, many cannot be expected, becauſe it is a Fact that rarely happens. I find none of the ancient Practiſers ever knew it, but I find that a Tales ought to be granted, ſo it is ſaid in ſeveral Books, as in Stamford, 155, 156. when ever upon the Principal Pannel, all the Jury does not appear, or ſo many of them do not, that there are not enough left to make a Jury, which is our very Caſe; then in ſuch Caſe the Pannel ſhall not be quaſh'd or abated; but a Tales granted, ſo is 14 H. 7. 7. there the Queſtion was, whether there ſhould be a greater Number returned upon the Tales than were in the Principal Pannel, and there the Difference was inſiſted upon, and agreed, That where it is between Party and Party, where Life is not concerned, it ſhall not, but where Life is concerned, and the Priſoner has Power to challenge 35 peremptorily, there the Judge may award as many upon the Tales as he pleaſes, that there may be enough to remain after the Challenges; ſo that if this old Pannel be not abated, and could not be quaſh'd, and a Tales might be granted to conſiſt of any Number, I conceive the Priſoner cannot be tried upon this new Pannel, but it will be Erroneous: and I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhip's whether you will proceed upon it.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſpare me a Word of the ſame Side, with Submiſſion, We think their ought to have been an Habeas Corpora, with a Tales, ſuch as had been before Sworn, being to be part of the Jury now, and that is the proper Way to bring the Priſoner to his Trial in this Caſe; the King's Counſel cannot expect we ſhould produce many Precedents, for I believe this is the Second of the Kind that ever happened, at leaſt, within Memory, That a Trial in Treaſon was put off pro defectu Juratorum, though I have a Precedent that I think is expreſs in the Caſe; but we inſiſt in the firſt Place, That a Tales does lie at Common-Law, in the Caſe of Life; and ſo the Book that Mr. Serjeant cited in Stamford, is expreſs; and then we ſay, that the Anſwer which we expect, that we are now before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, is not ſufficient, becauſe the Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, though they do not uſually award Proceſs by way of Writ, but before their coming, they command the Sheriff to have his County ready there, and ſo in Fact, it is a Parol Precept; yet when it is returned, then it is entered upon Record, either Præceptum eſt Vice Comiti quod venire faceret; or, Ideo veniat Jurata; and the Jury are entered upon Record: So that take it to be before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, yet the Sheriff having returned a Pannel, and that being upon the File, as appears before your Eyes, in Obedience to your Command, and that Copy of the Pannel being delivered to us two Days before Saturday laſt, we humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether by Force of the Common-Law, and of the late Act of Parliament, we ought not to be tried by that Pannel, we inſiſt upon it, that the Act intends, and expreſsly deſigned, that not only the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of the Pannel that the Sheriff returned at any time after, but that he ſhould be tried by the Pannel that we had a Copy of at firſt; for it is not ſaid a Copy, toties quoties the Court ſhall think fit to award a Precept for a new Pannel, but the Words of the Act are a Copy of the Jury duly returned by the Sheriff; now this we had, and your Lordſhip knows it is not a returned Pannel till it be in Court, and then it becomes part of the Record: My Lord, I do agree, the Juſtices in ſome Caſes have quaſh'd and ſet aſide Pannels and Juries, and ordered new ones, and I confeſs there was an extraordinary Caſe in the Time of King Charles the Second, which was upon the Indictment againſt Whitebread, where after the Jury Charged, and Evidence given, the Jury was diſcharged, and a new Pannel made the next Seſſions, upon which Mr. Whitebread was Tried and Convicted; how juſt or regular that was, I will not inſiſt upon now, but I am ſure there were great Complaints of that Practice, and few Precedents can be ſhewn of the like: But beſides, the Parties themſelves waved it there, no Objection being taken againſt it; but we inſiſt upon it in this Caſe, that this being upon Record, is part of the Record, and ſo appears to the Court: If the Record indeed were to be made up upon a Writ of Error, perhaps it would be no Error, becauſe it may be they would leave it out; but here it appears there was a Pannel of Record before you, and this muſt either be quaſh'd, or altered, or continued on by Proceſs; you have Power to quaſh it, if it be unduly returned by the Sheriff. If there be any evil Practices for procuring the Pannel, either by the Proſecutor or the Priſoner; if there be no Freeholders return'd, or the ſame happen in any other reſpect not to be legally done according to the Command or Precept of the Court; but becauſe there is a Default of Appearance of Jurors, no Pannel was ever quaſh'd upon that Account. Then ſay we, if it be not quaſh'd, this Pannel muſt continue; for, What ſhall become of it? Why ſhould it not continue? It is not within the Act of Parliament that gives the Juſtices Power to make a new Pannel, as in the Caſe of a Grand Jury when they are Guilty of Concealments, or refuſe to find Bills upon great Evidence, but we have no ſuch Caſe before you, nor do I know any ſuch Rule as can reach this; ſo that we take it, there is no Difference between this Caſe, as before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, and other Juſtices; that Proceſs does lie againſt the Jury that does not appear even in Treaſon and Felony, there is no Diſpute, and it is very properly ſo, if it be before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer; firſt a Venire facias, and then upon Default, a Habeas Corpora, that is the proper Way; then take it before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, there it is entered upon Record, Præceptum eſt Vice Comiti, &c and here is a Pannel returned by virtue of this Precept, and ſome of the Jury do not appear, and ſo there are not enough to Try the Priſoner after a great many Sworn and Challenged, and this entered upon Record. What ſhall become of that Pannel, it cannot be quaſh'd nor abated? My Lord, there is a Caſe that does warrant that Opinion of a Tales in a Caſe of Felony; and if there may be a Tales, then there may be a Habeas Corpora, and there are Directions how the Jurors ſhall be Sworn again, upon their appearance on the Habeas Corpora, and that is Wharton's Caſe in Yelverton 23.

Mr. J. Powell, jun. Do not diſpute that, it is plain, that a Tales does lie in Felony, upon a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer; but can you ſhew me, Sir Bartholomew, any where, that upon a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery a Tales does lie?

Sir B Shower. Sir, I can only ſhew the Reaſon of the Law, and I cannot find that does contradict what we now contend for.

Mr. J. Powell. I tell you, Sir Bartholomew, there is no Tales but with a Habeas Corpora to bring the in firſt Jurors, and that cannot be upon a parol Precept on a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, there goes a Venire facias, which is a Writ upon which the Habeas Corpora may be grounded, but there is no Venire facias upon a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery.

Sir B. Shower. Why ſhould there not be a Precept in nature of an Habeas Corpora for a Jury return'd, upon a Precept as well as on a Writ?

Mr. J. Powell. No, it never was done; the Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery is a general Commiſſion that does Authorize the Sheriff to impannel, and have a Jury ready at the Day appointed, for the Delivery of the Goal, to Try the Priſoners; it doth import in it ſelf a general Precept for that Purpoſe, before Iſſue joined, which the Sheriff cannot do in the Caſe of a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, but muſt have a Writ of Venire facias, after Iſſue joined.

[Sir John Hawles.] Mr. Sol. Gen. In all Caſes that they cite, there is a Writ of Venire facias, upon which the After-proceſs, by Writ, may be grounded; but here is no Foundation for any future Proceſs by Writ, becauſe it is only by Parol-Precept.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure theſe Gentlemen don't think what they ſay; the Pannel is not Part of the Record, and there is no Record of it; nothing but the Clerk's Entry in a Paper, or Note, for his own Memorandum.

Mr. J.

Mr. J. Rockeby. Brother Darnal, have you any Book that ſays, Juſtices of Goal-Delivery muſt award a Tales upon Default of the Jurors.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. No, my Lord, I cannot ſay ſo.

L. C J. Treby. Suppoſe all the Jury had been challeng'd, or dy'd.

Mr. J. Powel. There could be no quaſhing of it, but it would fall of it ſelf, for want of a Jury.

Mr. J. Rokeby. If, according to your Doctrine, we muſt keep to the firſt Pannel, the Conſequence wou'd be, there would be no Trial at all.

Sir B. Shower. Stamford makes no Difference that I can ſee.

Mr. Att. Gen. But theſe Gentlemen have been told the Difference upon which this Matter is grounded; a Tales cannot be without a Habeas Corpora, and a Habeas Corpora cannot be without a Venire facias; but a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery cannot award a Venire facias, becauſe that is not to be awarded till Iſſue joined.

Mr. B. Powis. The Return of this Pannel before Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, is an Act of the Sheriff, by virtue of the Commiſſion, and nothing appears of Record till the Jury are Sworn.

Mr. J. Rokeby. They object that it is upon Record.

L. C. J. Treby. By the Record, they mean the Clerk's Note.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you pleaſe to look upon the Indictment, there is no Entry at all, and that is all the Record before you.

Mr. J. Powel. Does it appear upon Record, that Nine were Sworn?

Mr. Baker. No, there is nothing upon the Record.

Cl. of Arr. It does not appear till the Record is made up, and nothing is entered till Twelve are Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. There will be a great Inconvenience, if a Pannel may be changed at any Time.

Mr. J. Powel. This is a Caſe that never happened before, and may be never may again.

Sir B. Shower. The Law will hold the ſame, in caſe it does appear upon Record, as well as where it does not: But we ſay, a Pannel return'd in Court is a Record.

Mr. J. Powel. No, it will not; becauſe, when a Jury does appear, and the Twelve are Sworn, then it becomes Parcel of the Record; and therefore Whitebread's Caſe * was quite another Caſe, and was indeed held to be an extraordinary Caſe, but that comes not up to us, for there a full Jury was Sworn, and Evidence given.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. It may be the ſame Jury will not be returned.

Mr. J. Powell. But if you have a Copy of the Jury, you are at no Miſchief.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Some that were in the former Pannel are quite left out.

Mr. Sher. Buck. There are none left out, but what were not Freeholders, that I know of.

Mr. B. Powis. He ſays the Fact is not true, as you have alledged it.

Mr. Sher. Buck. And Mr. Serjeant Darnal has been pleaſed to reflect upon us, as if we had pack'd this Jury, by altering the Places of the Names, which, my Lord, we do utterly deny, and we only left out thoſe that were not Freeholders.

Mr. B. Powis. The Sheriff ſays, he has not poſtponed any of them, and only left out thoſe that were not Freeholders.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If the Law were as plain with us as the Fact in that Caſe, we ſhould have a very good Caſe of it.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. Mr. Serjeant, I have both the Pannels here; they may be compared.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I ſaid no harm, Mr. Sheriff, nor meant any Reflection upon you.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. Mr. Serjeant was pleaſed to ſay, the excepted Men were put in the Front, and thoſe that were Sworn were put laſt.

L. C. J. Treby. There is nothing at all in the Objection.

Mr. J. Powell. Really, becauſe it was opened as a Reflection, it will be proper for the Sheriff to clear it.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. My Lord, the Anſwer I give to it, is, That particularly one that was Sworn laſt Time, is now at the very Beginning of the Pannel; and in general, they are mix'd promiſcuouſly, without any Deſign or Study in the leaſt. He ſays we have left out thoſe that ſerved before: I ſolemnly proteſt, I know not one Man returned upon the laſt Pannel that is left out, unleſs it appeared that he is no Freeholder; and we had no Reaſon to put in them, that we knew could not ſerve.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. That can't appear to us, that they are not Freeholders.

Mr. J. Rokeby. But it appears to him, and therefore he did well to leave them out.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. What I ſay, I am ready to give upon my Oath.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I ſay there is one Henry Beadle left out, and he was one that was Sworn.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. I will not ſay for a particular Man; I proteſt that I did not know he was left out; if it be ſo, it was by Miſtake; for I know Mr. Beadle very well, and I take him to be an honeſt Man, and very well affected to the Government as any Man.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. We deſired to be tried by Men that are honeſt and well-affected to the Government.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. There you have of them, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Thoſe that were Sworn are put laſt of all, and there is not above one of them that is within poſſibility of coming on again.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. It will appear by Mr. Cook's Challenges, and the other Pannel, that they ſtood late before; and Thomas Clark, who was Sworn the laſt Time, ſtands tenth Man upon the Pannel.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. He was Sworn after we had gone through the Pannel, and took all our Challenges, not appearing at firſt.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. I tell you you they ſtand for the moſt part as they did, for ought I know.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. There is but one in Threeſcore and Ten, that can be Sworn now, of them that were Sworn before; and there were Nine of them then Sworn.

* Vol. II. P. 711.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is a Miſtake. Indeed there are a great many added to the Pannel, becauſe there was a Defect the laſt Time, and therefore now they may perhaps ſtand later.

Mr. Serj Darnal. I do not ſpeak to reflect upon the Sheriffs: I go according to my Inſtructions.

Mr. J. Powell. If it had been ſo, it had been well enough, for you muſt be contented, the Court muſt take it as the Sheriff returns it, and you have a Copy of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here are four of them that were Sworn before, that ſtood above ſixty off in the old Pannel.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. The firſt Man that was Sworn, Mr. Sherbrook, ſtands within the firſt Twelve now, as well as before.

Mr. J. Powell. If they had been all new, there had been nothing in that.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Truly, I can't ſee but that the Sheriff hath done like an equal, juſt, fair, and honeſt Officer.

Mr. Att. Gen. They may challenge as they will.

L. C. J. Treby. You are to conſider, that this happens becauſe you run out as far as your utmoſt Number, that Time you challenged Thirty-five peremptorily, and divers others for Cauſe, ſo as not to leave enough for a Jury; and from that alone aroſe a Neceſſity of increaſing the Number of the Pannel.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. It was our Client that challenged them, we do not adviſe him whom to challenge.

Mr. J. Rokeby, But you muſt take the Conſequence of it, which cauſes this Addition to the Pannel

L. C. J. Treby. What do you complain of? they that are returned, are put in the ſame Order as they were before; they that were Sworn, were (for the moſt part) late in the Pannel then, and ſo they are now. I do not find any Thing done to the Prejudice of the Priſoner.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If the Chriſtian Names had not been miſtaken, there had been perhaps enough to have been Sworn.

L. C. J. Treby. That's a good Argument for a new Pannel, becauſe the Chriſtian Names were miſtaken before.

Mr. J. Powell. It was by Defect of Jurors, and therefore there was an abſolute neceſſity of a new Pannel.

L. C. J. Treby. I am of the ſame Opinion.

Wharton's Caſe is well known: It was much cited as to another Point in Buſhel's Caſe. It was a Trial at the King's-Bench Bar at Weſtminſter by a Jury of Kent, upon an Indictment of a Murder.

And I think you ſay the Caſe of H. 7. was between Party and Party in Appeal. And I believe Stamford's Diſcourſe, in the Place cited, relates chiefly to Appeals.

I ſhall not deny that a Tales my poſſibly be upon an Indictment before Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer; though 'tis not uſual, nor do you ſhew, or our experienced Clerks know any ſuch Precedent. I agree, that in the mentioned Caſes a Tales was proper; for in both Caſes (viz. of Appeal and Indictment removed into the King's-Bench) the Proceſs for the Jury was as it ought to be, by Writs of Venire facias, &c. upon which a full Jury not appearing, there muſt be a Tales. But in proceeding to Trial before Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer on ſuch Indictment as is here, though I will not ſay but they may proceed by Writ of Venire facias, yet I do ſay, that the more known Courſe is by Precept, in nature of a Venire facias: And the Uſage is, that after (and never before) the Priſoner hath pleaded not Guilty, there goes a Precept to the Sheriff, under the Seals of the ſaid Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, returnable at ſuch Day as they ſhall adjourn to, for returning a Jury to Try it, (as was done lately, upon Advice, in the Caſe of Rookwood, &c.) and upon the Return of that, if, after Challenges, there are not enough left to make a Jury, whether thoſe Juſtices ſhall iſſue a Precept in nature of a Habeas Corpora, or Diſtringas with a Tales, or another Precept in the ſame Form as before, and without taking notice of the former, is a Queſtion not in Judgment before us. For, we are about proceeding to a Trial on an Indictment in this Court of Goal-Delivery, (which is the Court wherein generally all capital Crimes are tried, as well at this Place as at the Aſſizes) and, I think, here cannot be a Tales; I am ſure it is not neceſſary. For, Firſt, Here is never any Writ of Venire facias, &c. Secondly, Nor ever a Precept for returning a Jury to Try a particular Iſſue: But this Court takes the Pannels of Juries returned by the Sheriff, without any particular Precept to him.

The Courſe of proceeding by virtue of a Commiſſion of Goal-Delivery, which is the Law in this Caſe, is this, viz. There is antecedent to the Coming of the Juſtices, a general Commandment or Precept made, in Writing, to the Sheriff by the ſaid Juſtices, to return Juries againſt their Coming, for the Trying of all and ſingular Priſoners in their Goal, whether they have pleaded before, or ſhall after. And for that Purpoſe it requires the Sheriff to ſummon, out of all Parts of his Country whence the Priſoners come, a great Number of Freeholders not a-kin to the Priſoners, to be at the Time and Place appointed for holding the Court. The Sheriff, by virtue of this general previous Precept, ſummoneth many for Jurors, and prepares diverſe ſeveral Pannels of their Names, either at firſt, or afterwards, as appears neceſſary, and returneth and delivereth in one or more of theſe Pannels, from Time to Time, as the Court does need, and call for any: This, we know, in Fact, is frequently done where the Seſſions of Goal-Delivery laſts ſeveral Days, and there is occaſion. Though, in Suppoſition of Law, all theſe Pannels are returned, and the Trials thereupon had the firſt Day of the Seſſions; and, in Law, it is intended to be but that one Day only. The Return of this Precept it thus, viz, Executio iſtius Præcepti patet in quibuſdam Panellis huic præcepto annexis, and the Pannels are annexed, and there are often filed here divers Pannels upon the ſame general Precept, though ſometimes but One. Theſe Pannels are thus delivered into Court, and a Jury taken out of them as there is occaſion, only upon a Parol Award, that is, barely the Court's calling for the ſame, without Writ or Precept in Writing, or giving any Day for the Doing it. For this Proceeding is immediate, for the ſpeedy Delivery of Priſoners; and the Entry, after ſetting forth that the Priſoner being arraigned pleads not Guilty, is, Ideo immediatè veniat inde Jurata, or fiat inde Jurata:

Jurata: And this Court's being inſtituted for the ſpeedy Delivery of Priſoners, and Warnings being given long before, of their Coming, are the Cauſes why it has been always held without doubt, that Juſtices of Goal-Delivery might inquire and try the ſame Day.

If it fall out, that by reaſon of Defaults, Deaths, or Challenges, there cannot be a full Jury had out of a Pannel, (as here there wanted three) which is an Accident that the Court cannot know, till they have gone through the Pannel; I think in this Caſe, that Pannel goes for nothing, is utterly loſt and void, and to be caſt away or cancelled: For it does not anſwer the Award of the Court, which was to have a Jury to Try the Priſoner preſently. It is meant an effectual Pannel that ſhould afford a full Jury of Twelve unexceptionable Men; and every Pannel that comes ſhort in this, is to be laid aſide as a void Thing; and then the Court takes and makes uſe of another immediately, which may not be deficient, whereby the Award is obſerved, and the preſent Service diſpatched.

Objection. It is objected, That the old Pannel is Parcel of the Record in Court, and, upon that, Nine were Sworn, and their Names are all enter'd upon Record; and now to add a new Pannel, upon which Twelve ſhall be Sworn and Try the Priſoner; all this appearing upon Record, it will be Error.

Anſwer. This Objection ſtands upon two Miſtakes, both ariſing from not obſerving the Difference between Precepts and Pannels, in a Court of Goal-Delivery and Venire facias, or Precepts and Pannels in other Courts.

1. It ſuppoſes that here will be two Pannels, which will appear to relate to the Trial of this Priſoner, Mr. Cook.

2. It ſuppoſes that both theſe will become Records, or Parcel of the Record in Court.

If either of theſe Suppoſitions prove to be a Miſtake, it will deſtroy the Objection. I think both are Miſtakes.

1. Here is not, nor will be, nay, there ought not to be any Pannel purporting to be returned for the Trying of Mr. Cook, or any particular Priſoner or Priſoners. For the Precept in this Caſe is (not like a Venire facias, which always reſpects a particular Iſſue between Parties therein named, but) general, requiring the Sheriff to return Jurors enough to Try all the Priſoners, not naming any. And the Return, which is the Anſwer to it by a Pannel or Pannels, is as General; the Title of every Pannel being Nomina Juratorʼ ad Triandum pro Domino Rege, and no more; or Nomina Juratorum ad Triandum inter Dom. Regem & Priſonar. ad Barram, without naming any of the Priſoners, and it were abſurd if it ſhould be otherwiſe: For the Precept goes to the Sheriff before the Seſſions, and his Return is ſuppoſed to be made at the Beginning of the Seſſions, when it is not known who of the Priſoners will be indicted; or, if indicted, who will plead not Guilty, or Guilty, or a Pardon, or other Plea.

When, for the Trial of a particular Priſoner (or divers Priſoners that are thought fit to be put upon Trial by the ſame Jury) a Jury is about to be taken out of any Pannel, the Clerk, as he goes along, may take a Note in Paper of the Name of every one that is ſworn; or he may (and uſually doth) write Jur. on the ſaid Pannel, againſt the Name of every one Sworn: But this Note or Mark is no Part of the Record; it is not ex Inſtitutione Legis, it is but a voluntary Memorandum, for the Help of his Memory. If he could ſafely truſt to the Strength of his Memory, he need not write at all on this Occaſion; I mean, not till a full Jury is Sworn, who try the Priſoner. But then, indeed, the Clerk muſt (from his Notes or Memory) write the Name of all the Twelve, entering them on the Record of the Indictment, in this manner, viz. juſt after the Ideo immediatè veniat inde Jurata coram præfatis Juſtic. &c. adding, & Juratores Juratæ illius, &c. Scil. A. B. &c. Dicunt, &c. And it is by this only, that the Names of thoſe that are Sworn, come to be of Record; and it is this Entry upon the Body of the Indictment alone, that is the Record, that ſhews who were Jurors Sworn, to Try this, or that, or other Priſoner, or Priſoners.

So that if the old Pannel were filed, and were a Record, as the Priſoner's Counſel would ſuppoſe, yet it would not thereby be made appear, that the ſaid Pannel was returned, or uſed for, or in order to the Trial of this Priſoner.

2. The old Pannel is not filed among the Records of the Court, nor ought to be. When ſuch a Pannel does not produce a Jury, the Clerks may and uſe to throw it by, as a uſeleſs Thing. But, however they uſe it, we cannot allow it to be a Record. It was received de bene eſſe; it is abortive and comes to nothing. And it is not every Thing that paſſeth in Court in order to a Record, that comes to be ſo. A frivolous Plea that is rejected, is not recorded. A Preſentment or Bill of Indictment, before it is found, is not a Record: And if an Ignoramus be returned upon a Bill of Indictment, it never can be a Record; and thereupon, the Clerks do ſometimes throw it away, though ſometimes they keep it and put it on the File, only taking care to croſs it; but if they do forget to croſs it, yet it is not a Record.

By all this it is apparent how great the Difference is between a Precept and Pannels in this Court, and a Venire facias and a Pannel returned thereupon, which is ever iſſued after Iſſue joined, and doth always mention the particular Parties and Matter it relates to, and is a Record, and a Ground for an Habeas Corpora with a Tales, to be returnable at a certain future Day.

But, in this Caſe, in this Court, it is quite otherwiſe.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, ſince there is a new Pannel, we hope we ſtand in the ſame Condition upon the Act of Parliament, to take Exceptions to the Indictment before this Jury Sworn, as we did before the other Jury Sworn, ſince all that is quite ſet aſide.

L. C. J. Treby. Yes truly, I think that may be.

Mr. Att. Gen. But theſe Gentlemen would have done well to have given notice of their Exceptions.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I ſhall not ſtand upon an Exception which I think I might take to the Word Turmas in the Indictment, which whether it be Troops of Men, or Horſes, or what it is does not appear; but, I think, we have an Exception ception to the chief Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and that we presume, if my Brief be right, will be sufficient to set aside this Indictment: That Mr. Cook did agree with other Traitors to send Mr. Charnock into France to the said late King James, and King James is never mentioned before in all the Indictment, that is one Exception that we have, that there is no late King James mentioned in the Indictment before this, if my Copy be right, if it be otherwise, I suppose they will find it: It is laid, That Mr. Cook did agree to send Charnock as a Messenger into France, eidem nuper Regi Jacobo, and no Rex Jacobus is mentioned before. Then there is another Exception, and that's this: They come and say, That whereas there was a War with France, which is only in the Indictment by way of Recital or Rehearsal of an History, Quod cum per magnum Tempus fuit & modo sit, &c. Mr. Cook the Premisses knowing, did compass and imagine the King's Death, and did adhere to the said King's Enemies such a Day. Now, my Lord, I do think that this can never be maintain'd, for that Cum quoddam Bellum, &c. being an historical Narrative, is not positive enough: For adhering to the King's Enemies, being one of the Treasons laid in the Charge, there ought to be a War at the Time of the Adhesion, and of Necessity then that ought to be presented by the Jury; for though your Lordships can judicially take notice of War or Peace, yet you cannot take notice of it at such a particular Time, and the Reason is from the Notion that is in my Lord Coke in his third Institutes, cap. Treason, That Adhesions to Rebels is not Adhesion to the King's Enemies, for a Rebel is not said to be an Enemy; but it must be adhering to such an Enemy, as between whom and the King there was War at that Time, and consequently it ought to be more positively averred in the Indictment, than it here is; but as to the Overt-Act of Mr. Cook's consulting and agreeing to send Charnock over to the said late King James, to give him notice of what was agreed upon between them, when King James is not named before, that can never be got over, with Submission.

Mr. Baker. It is a Mistake of your Copy, Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr. Att. Gen. I have looked into the Record, and it is Jacobo Secundo nuper Regi, not Dicto.

Sir B. Shower. Then, with Submission, my Lord, they cannot try us now, for we ought to have a true Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Baker. Upon demand. But you never demanded it.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, it was demanded.

Mr. Baker. Who demanded it?

Sir B. Shower. Our Sollicitor Burleigh.

Mr. Baker. No, he did not; I gave it him officiously.

Mr. Att. Gen. With Submission, my Lord, it is no Objection at all, that their Copy is wrong. That should have been before the Prisoner had pleaded; for the Words of the Act are, That he shall have it so many Days before, to enable him to plead, and he cannot be put to plead unless he have a Copy of the Indictment so long before: And at Rookwood's Trial it was said by the Court it could not be alledged after Plea pleaded.

Mr. Burleigh. The Copy was given to me publickly in Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did not your Sollicitor compare it with the Indictment?

Mr. Att. Gen. They might have compared it by the Clerk's reading it to them; but they will not admit the Prisoner's Sollicitor to see the Original, because the Act expresly says they shall not have a Copy of the Witnesses Names.

Sir B. Shower. The Officer is to deliver a true Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. No; the Party is to demand it by himself or his Agent, and then he is to have it; and if he be denied, he ought to apply himself to the Court, who will order the Delivery of it; but we stand upon it that they cannot take this Exception now after they have pleaded, for the Intent of the Copy is to enable him to plead.

L. C. J. Treby. The Copy, by the Act of Parliament, is to be delivered to the Prisoner, his Attorney, Agent, or Sollicitor, if they require the same, and here it seems there was no requiring of it, but it was voluntarily given; and now you have lapsed your Time of making the Exception of wanting a Copy, by having pleaded to the Indictment, whereby you have in effect admitted and declared, either that you had a true Copy of it, or that you did not think fit to require one; for the Use of the Copy is to better enable the Prisoner to plead. But when you did plead, you took upon yourself to be well able to plead without the Help of a Copy, which you might have had upon the asking for.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, there is another Thing in the Indictment, That in this Overt-Act there is a new Time, and a new Place, and a new Verb, and a new Fact alledged, and no nominative Case: It is alledged, That Peter Cook, at first, with others, did so and so: and then the first of July to bring the Treasons aforesaid to effect, there & alibi, &c. (which is very loose, for I know not whence the Venue must come) did traiterously with Charnock, Friend, &c. consult to procure Diversas Turmas & Legiones, &c. to join with them in England, and then it comes & ulterius such a Day, Year, and Place, did traiterously agree so and so, and not say who: Now this is neither by expres Words, nor Rule of Grammar to be referred to the Prisoner at the Bar, it does not say ipse idem Petrus Cook; now, my Lord, that the King's Counsel thought it necessary in every Overt-Act is plain, because those Words are put in every other Clause of the Indictment, in those Clauses that go before, and those Clauses that come after; then if they will take it, that this Clause must refer to the next Antecedent, that will not do, for the next precedent nominative Case is either Friend or Charnock: So that this is without a nominative Case, and the Precedents in my Lord Coke's Entries 361, and all the other Books have the nominative Case repeated, where there is a new Time, and a new Place, and a new Fact alledged: Now it might be true, that the Prisoner at the Bar might be present, and this same Treason might be discoursed of and agitated, and there might be a Consult about this Business, and yet it is not necessarily implied that he must consent and agree to send Charnock into France, upon which the great Stress of the Indictment lies: Therefore we say, these Words having no nominative Case, the Indictment cannot hold.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to this Objection it will receive a very plain Anſwer. Our Indictment begins and ſets forth, that Peter Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, did imagine and compaſs the King's Death, and did adhere to the King's Enemies, and theſe are the Treaſons: And then it ſets forth the Overt-Act, that in Execution of the traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Adheſions aforeſaid, Ipſe idem Petrus Cook, together with Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, Sir John Friend and others, did propoſe and conſult to procure from the French King, Forces to invade this Land; & ulterius, he and they did agree to ſend Charnock to the late King James.

Mr. J. Rokeby. There's the firſt naming of James the Second, late King of England, and there is no eidem Jacobo I promiſe you.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, that Miſtake is over. Pray go on, Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to this Objection of Sir Bartholomew Shower, he would have ipſe idem Petrus repeated over again; and he ſays that we lay a diſtinct Overt-Act with a different Time and Place: Now that is a Miſtake too; it is not a different Time and Place, but the ſame Time and Place: And it mentions that cum R. Charnock, J. Friend, &c. & cum aliis Proditoribus conveniebat, conſultabat, &c. which he ſays may refer to Sir John Friend or Charnock: But if you look into the Frame of the Sentence, that can never be.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Petrus Cook is the nominative Caſe that governs all the Verbs.

Mr. Att. Gen. And there is no other nominative Caſe in all the Indictment, but Petrus Cook, except it be in a Parentheſis, and that ſaves the Rule of Grammar, if there were any Thing in it, that it muſt refer to the laſt Antecedent.

Sir B. Shower. When it comes to the Clauſe that he did procure Horſe and Arms, there the nominative Caſe is repeated.

L. C. J. Treby. It would not have made it worſe, if they had made it ſo here; but the Queſtion is, Whether it be neceſſary?

Sir B. Shower. Indictments ought to be preciſely certain; but this we ſay is not ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. But here is as much Certainty as to the Perſon, as can be, that he did conſult with ſuch and ſuch about ſuch Things; and further, the ſame Day did agree with the ſame Traitors to do ſo and ſo.

Mr. J. Powell. Indictments, it is true, ought to be plain and clear; but I do not ſee but here is as much Certainty as can be, that he did ſuch a Day conſult, and further the ſame Day did agree with the ſame Perſons.

Sir B. Shower. Who did agree, my Lord?

Mr. J. Powel. He that did conſult with them before, and that is Peter Cook.

Mr. Att. Gen. You'd have had us to have put it to every Verb, I believe.

Sir B. Shower. In Indictments no Preſumption ought to be uſed, but the Facts ought to be directly and poſitively alledged.

Mr. J. Powell. It's true, there ſhould be no Preſumption, and there is none here, for certainly this is a plain Aſſertion of Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. Here are two Things that are ſet forth: Firſt, That Peter Cook did meet with Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, and others, and then and there did conſult with them, and conſent to procure an Invaſion, and join an Inſurrection thereto. And, Secondly, Further with the ſaid Traitors did agree to ſend Charnock into France. Now, what is the nominative Caſe to this Agreement? Is it Sir John Friend, and Sir William Perkins? That's impoſſible: For they could not be ſaid properly to meet and conſult with themſelves, every one of them with his own ſelf and the reſt. And then the Number, if it had referr'd to them, ſhould have been plural, but here it is ſingular, [agreavit] and the Senſe is no more than this; That then and there Mr. Cook did meet with ſuch Perſons, and did conſult with them about ſuch and ſuch Matters, and further, did agree with them to do thus.

Sir B. Shower. The Meaning is not to be forced and ſtrained by Inference or Preſumption, but it ought to be expreſs and plain.

L. C. J. Treby. Nay, you cannot expreſs it better; you may make a Tautology of it if you will.

Sir B. Shower. The Paragraph is long, my Lord, and therefore requires the more Care to have thoſe Repetitions that are neceſſary.

L. C. J. Treby. Your Objection to this Paragraph is, that it is too long; but repeating the ſame nominative Caſe to every Verb, would make it much longer.

Sir B. Shower. It cannot be underſtood to mean Peter Cook without Preſumption, which ought not to be in an Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. And as to Sir Bartholomew Shower's firſt Objection, his Copy is right too, and he miſtook the Place.

Sir B. Shower. You ſhou'd have given me that for an Anſwer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nay, you ſhould have taken more Care, and not have made the Objection.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think it is hardly poſſible to have made this better if it had been otherwiſe than it is.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, we think we have a good Fact of it, which we rely upon, and therefore do not ſo much inſiſt upon theſe Exceptions, tho', in Duty to our Client, we mention that which we think is neceſſary, and we ſubmit to your Lordſhip.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook to the Bar. [Which was done.] You, the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe good Men which you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you would challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Crier. Call Sir John Sweetapple.

Sir John Sweetapple. Here.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I am adviſed ——

L. C. J. Treby. Pray, Sir, ſpeak out, that we may hear what you ſay: And let the Crier make Proclamation for Silence. [Which was done.]

Cook. My Lord, before the Jury is called, I am adviſed, that if any of the Jury have ſaid already that I am guilty, or they will find me guilty, or I ſhall ſuffer, or be hanged, or the like, they are not fit or proper Men to be of the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. You ſay right, Sir, it is a good Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr.

Mr. J. Rokeby. That will be a ſufficient Cauſe, if when they come to the Book, you object that, and be ready to prove it.

Cook. Which is Sir John Sweetapple? [He was ſhewn to him.]

Cl. of Arr. There he is.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. William Walker.

Cook. Sir, have you ſaid any ſuch Thing that you believe me guilty?

Mr. Walker. No, Sir.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, he is asking of the Juryman the Queſtion.

Mr. J. Rokeby. That's a Fact the Priſoner ſhould prove upon him.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he muſt not ask the Jury that Queſtion, Whether they have declared before, that they will find him guilty; that is to make them guilty of a Miſdemeanor.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Is it any Miſdemeanor for me to ſay, I think or believe ſuch a Man is guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he be ſummon'd to be of a Jury, and declare his Opinion before-hand, it is a Miſdemeanor.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. But ſuppoſe it be before he was ſummon'd?

Mr. Att. Gen. If you make any ſuch Objection, you muſt prove it, and not out of the Juryman's own Mouth.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. I think any Man, my Lord, that comes to ſerve upon the Jury, may be ask'd any Queſtion that does not make him guilty of any Offence or Crime, or liable to any Puniſhment: Now if any of theſe Gentlemen that are return'd upon this Pannel, before the Summons have declared their Opinion, that the Priſoner is guilty, or ought to ſuffer, with Submiſſion, the Priſoner may ask ſuch a Queſtion, Whether he have ſaid ſo, yea or no?

Mr. J. Powell. He cannot upon a Voyer Dire be ask'd any ſuch Queſtion.

Mr. J. Rokeby. It is not denied to be a material Objection, but it muſt be made out by Proof.

L. C. J. Treby. You put it too large, Brother Darnall, you may ask upon a Voyer Dire, whether he have any Intereſt in the Cauſe; nor ſhall we deny you Liberty to ask whether he be fitly qualified, according to Law, by having a Freehold of ſufficient Value; but that you can ask a Juror or a Witneſs every Queſtion that will not make him criminous, that's too large: Men have been ask'd, Whether they have been convicted and pardon'd for Felony, or whether they have been whip'd for Petty Larceny; but they have not been obliged to anſwer; for, tho' their Anſwer in the affirmative will not make them Criminal, or ſubject them to Puniſhment, yet they are Matters of Infamy; and if it be an infamous Thing, that's enough to preſerve a Man from being bound to anſwer. A pardon'd Man is not guilty, his Crime is purged; but merely for the Reproach of it, it ſhall not be put upon him to anſwer a Queſtion whereon he will be forced to forſwear or diſgrace himſelf. So Perſons have been excuſed from anſwering whether they have been committed to Bridewell as Pilferers or Vagrants, or to Newgate for Clipping or Coining, &c. Yet to be ſuſpected or committed is only a Misfortune and Shame, no Crime. The like has been obſerved in other Caſes of odious and infamous Matters which were not Crimes indictable. But to keep to our Caſe, 'tis true, a Juror may be challenged being an Alien, or being a Villain; but where the Matter apparently carries Crime or Shame, it ſhould be proved; the Outlawry ſhould be proved, and ſo ſhould the being a Villain. Yet that is no Crime, tho' it be an Ignominy.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. But, my Lord, I take this to be no manner of Infamy at all, there is nothing of Crime, nor nothing of Reproach, but only a declaring of a Man's Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think otherwiſe; I take it to be at leaſt a ſcandalous Misbehaviour, and deſervedly ill-ſpoken of, for any Man to prejudge, eſpecially in ſuch a heinous Matter. I think it is a very ſhameful Diſcovery of a Man's Weakneſs and Raſhneſs, if not Malice, to judge before he hears the Cauſe, and before the Party that is accuſed could be tried. But, it ſeems, by what the Priſoner ſays, that he would ask all the Jurors, whether they have not ſaid, that he was guilty, or that they would find him guilty, or that he ſhould be hanged, or the like: Which (preſuming him innocent) is to ask whether they have not defamed and ſlandered him in the higheſt Degree; and to force them to diſcover that they have a mortal Hatred to him, and come with a malicious Reſolution to convict him: Which, admitting they are not puniſhable by our Law, yet are Things ſo deteſtably wicked and ſo ſcandalous, as are not fit to be required to be diſcloſed by and againſt themſelves.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. Pray, my Lord, what is more common than for a Man to ſay, before he is ſummoned to be upon a Jury, when he hears a Fact reported concerning ſuch a one, to ſay I believe he is guilty, or I am of Opinion he is, and I am ſure he will be hanged, and yet there is no Crime in this.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, Brother Darnall, I know not how you may approve of ſuch a Man, but I'll aſſure you I do not. I take the Queſtion not to be concerning a Man's diſcourſing ſuppoſitively; as, if upon hearing News, or a Report of clear Evidence, a Man ſhould ſay, Suppoſing this to be true, ſuch a Man is guilty, and I ſhould find him ſo if I were of his Jury. This might not be ſufficient to ſet aſide a Juror: For this has been a general Diſcourſe among the Subjects upon Occaſion of this Conſpiracy; and it imports that if Evidence ſhould not be true and clear, he would acquit him. And ſo he is, as he ſhould be, indifferent. But if a Man, qualified for a Juror, affirm poſitively that ſuch a Priſoner is guilty, and that he will find him ſo whatever Evidence or Proof be given or made to the contrary, I think that may be a Miſdemeanor puniſhable as an owning and encouraging of Falſhood, Perjury, and Injuſtice, and a Contempt and Scandal to the Juſtice of the Kingdom. Tho' I hope and believe that no Man hath ſo demeaned himſelf.

Mr. J. Powell. In a Civil Caſe it would be a good Cauſe of Challenge. If a Man have given his Opinion about the Right one way or other, may you not upon a Voire dire ask him whether he hath given his Opinion one way or other? I believe it may be ask'd in a Civil Cauſe, becauſe he may have been a Refferee; but if you make it Criminal it cannot be ask'd, becauſe a Man is not bound to accuſe himſelf; now the Difference lies in the Nature of the Cauſe, it is not Criminal in a Civil Caſe for a Man to ſay he was an Arbitrator in ſuch a Caſe, and, upon what appeared before him, he was of ſuch an Opinion.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, it is a different Caſe to give an Opinion about the Right between Party and Party, where a Man has been an Arbitrator and ſo in the Nature of a Judge, and where a Man is to go upon a Jury in the Caſe of Life and Death, and before the Evidence given, he declares his Opinion without hearing the Cauſe.

Sir. B. Shower. My Lord, we know ſeveral of the Trials have been printed, and the Names of ſeveral Perſons mentioned, and upon reading of the Trials or converſing about them, Men are apt to give their Opinions one way or other.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. It is only an Objection in Caſe he has done it.

Mr. J. Rokeby. But, Brother, how can you ask him the Queſtion?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If the Court are of Opinion that it is ſuch a Crime that it cannot be ask'd, as tending to make a Man accuſe himſelf of an infamous Crime, then we ſubmit it to you, and I confeſs we muſt not ask it; but we cannot apprehend that there is either Crime or Infamy in it, tho' we think it is an Objection and a good Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr. B. Powys. I think, tho' it be not ſuch a Crime as infamous upon which a Man is not to be credited, for that is Infamy in the Eye of the Law, whereby a Man is prejudiced in his Credit; yet however it is a ſhameful Thing for a Man to give his Judgment before he hath heard the Evidence, and therefore I think you ought not to ask him it, to make him accuſe himſelf, if it be an opprobrious Matter upon him.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Truly, my Lord, I always took it to be the Rule, if the Thing asked to the Perſon returned be not criminal nor infamous, the Party that is ask'd ought to anſwer to it.

L. C. J. Treby. I would fain know if you ſhould ask any of the Jury-men this Queſtion, whether he be guilty of all the Crimes that are pardoned by the laſt Act of Grace, he be bound to anſwer it?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Undoubtedly we cannot ask any ſuch Queſtion; no, not to any one of the Things therein mentioned.

L. C. J. Treby. But yet you will force him to diſcover a Crime (if it be one) that is unpardoned.

Mr. J. Powell. Certainly you go too far, Brother, for no Man is obliged to charge himſelf with what is Criminal, but whether this be Criminal to ſay, I believe ſuch a one will be hanged, is of another Conſideration.

Mr. J. Rokeby. But I think it muſt be proved upon him if any Objection be made.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, it will be no eaſy Thing to bring Witneſſes to prove this matter, and therefore we would have it from his own Mouth.

Mr. J. Rokeby. And it is a very hard matter for a Man to be put upon proving every Diſcourſe that he has had about the publick Affairs of the Time.

Mr. Recorder. The Reaſon of your Exception is, that he has declar'd his Opinion before-hand, that the Party would be hanged or would ſuffer, that's a Reproach and a Reflection upon a Wiſe Man ſo to do; and if they can prove it upon him, let them do it: But whether you ſhould ask him ſuch a Queſtion, Whether he be a Fool or a Knave for the giving an Opinion one way or other, that's the Queſtion before us.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, we do not offer it to the Court as an Objection that he is not a wiſe Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. But what a Man does utter imprudently, may occaſion a Prejudice againſt him, and therefore ought to be proved, and not he to prove it himſelf.

L. C. J. Treby. Eſpecially being a Freeholder of London, and taking notice of what is done in London; and if he does take notice of the Fact, and does previouſly give his Opinion of a Matter which he may be called upon a Jury to try, this is an Indiſcretion and a Reproach to him, and I think a Miſdemeanour.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, I acknowledge it is ill done of him, that is, indiſcreetly and not wiſely, and we would have diſcreet and wiſe Men upon our Jury.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, Mr. Serj. Darnal will make it ſo little a Thing at laſt, that it will amount to no Cauſe of Challenge, if it were even prov'd againſt him, which we inſiſt it ought to be, it being their Objection, and the Party not being bound to prove it againſt himſelf; but truly we think there is more in it than ſo, becauſe it is an unjuſt prejudging of a Man before he is tried and heard, and if ſo, it is a Thing that he ought not to accuſe himſelf of, and therefore we oppoſe the asking any ſuch Queſtion.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Our Objection is not becauſe it is an Offence to declare a Man's Opinion upon a Fact reported, but becauſe it ſhews he has a ſettled Opinion againſt the Perſon of his Guilt, and ſo he is not ſo equal a Man to try him.

L. C. J. Treby. And is that like an honeſt Man and a Freeholder of London, (who ought to be indifferent) to come with a ſettled Opinion againſt a Man, when he is to be one of his Jury?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Well, my Lord, we have been heard, and ſubmit it to the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think it reflects both Diſhoneſty and Diſhonour upon him, and therefore theſe Queſtions ought not to be ask'd. The Queſtion is not whether a Man (if ever ſuch a Man there were) that hath ſo reſolved and declared ſhall be ſworn? No; he is not fit to ſerve upon a Jury. But the Queſtion is, How this ſhall be diſcovered, by his own Oath or by other Proof? I think it ought to be made appear by other Proof, if true. A Man attainted of Felony, Forgery, falſe Verdict, or Perjury, ought not to ſerve on a Jury, yet he ſhall not be examined concerning the ſame on a Voire dire. And if there be in Court a Copy of ſuch Judgment carefully examin'd and kept by himſelf, he ſhall not be forced to anſwer whether it be a true Copy; tho' his Anſwer could not ſubject him to any further Penalty.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, I hope no Gentleman of the Jury has done it.

L. C. J. Treby. I hope no Freeholder of London is ſo indiſcreet or ſo unjuſt. But if any Man in this Pannel have any particular Diſpleaſure to the Priſoner, or be unindifferent, or have declared himſelf ſo, I do admoniſh and deſire him to diſcover ſo much in general; for it is not fit, nor for the Honour of the King's Juſtice, that ſuch a Man ſhould ſerve on the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. We hope ſo too. We hope that all that are returned upon the Jury are diſcreet and impartial Men.

Cl. of Arr. Well, Sir, what ſay you to this Gentleman Mr. Walker?

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Nathanael Long.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think he may ask if they have a Freehold or no; becauſe the Law requires that Qualification, and the Priſoner not being able to prove the Negative, it puts the Proof of the Affirmative upon the Perſon himſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. What does Sir Bartholomew mean? would he have the Jury-men bring their Evidences with them to prove their Freehold?

L. C. J. Treby. No ſure, Mr. Attorney; but to ask the Queſtion was allowed him the laſt Time, and we will not deny him the ſame juſt Favour now.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Long. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury when the Bill was found againſt me?

Mr. Long. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. William Carbonell.

Mr. Carbonell. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. What, does he ſay he has no Freehold?

Cl. of Arr. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then he muſt be ſet aſide.

Cl. of Arr. Joſhua Foſter.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London neither.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we deſire they may be ſworn whether they have a Freehold or not.

Cl. of Arr. Hold Mr. Carbonell and Mr. Foſter the Book. [Which was done ſeverally.] You ſhall true Anſwer make to all ſuch Queſtions as ſhall be asked you by the Court. So help you God.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him if he hath not a Freehold in London?

Mr. Carbonell. No, I have not.

Cl. of Arr. Have you or any Body in Truſt for you a Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Carbonell. No, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Joſhua Foſter, have you or any in Truſt for you any Eſtate of Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Foſter. No, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Billers.

Cook. I deſire they may be called in the Order as they are in the Pannel; you have not called John Ewen, who is next.

Cl. of Arr. I do call them in Order; As for Mr. Ewen, one hath made Oath that he is ſick, and is not able to come hither. What ſay you to Mr. Billers? There he ſtands.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder of 10 l. a Year within the City of London?

Mr. Billers. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Was you of the Grand-Jury, Sir, when the Bill was found againſt me?

Mr. Billers. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Child.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London?

Mr. Child. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Child. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury when the Bill was found againſt me?

Mr. Child. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of. Arr. Edward Leeds.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Leeds. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Leeds. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

L. C. J. Treby. What Queſtion was that he asked him?

Cl. of Arr. Whether he were one of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill.

L. C. J. Treby. A very proper Queſtion: For an Indicter ought not to be a Trier.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Clark.

Cook, Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a Year.

Mr. Clark. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Clark. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Nathan Green.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, within the City of London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Green. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Green. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Sherbroke.

Cook. I have nothing to ſay againſt him.

Cl. of Arr. Then hold Mr. Sherbroke the Book. [Which was done.] Look upon the Priſoner. You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, (whom you ſhall have in Charge) according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Then Mr. Sherbroke was put into the Place appointed for the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Dry.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in the City of London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Dry. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Dry. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Joſeph Morewood.

Cook. Sir, Have you a Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Morewood. Yes, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. William Wilkinſon.
Mr. Wilkinſon. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.

[To which he was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. Henry Mitchel.
Cook. Hold, Sir, here Thomas Man in my Pannel is next.
Cl. of Arr. There is Oath made that he is ſick in Bed. What ſay you to Mr. Mitchel?
Cook. Sir, have you a Freehold of 10 l. a Year in the City of London?
Mr. Mitchel. No, Sir. [To which he was ſworn.]
Cl. of Arr. Richard Ryder.
Cook. Sir, Have you a Freehold of 10 l. a Year in the City of London?
Mr. Ryder. Yes, I have, Sir; but I live in a Pariſh that never ſerve upon any Juries, nor ever did in the Memory of any Man.
Cl. of Arr. But have you a Freehold of 10 l. a Year?
Mr. Ryder. Yes, Sir.
Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Nathanael Wyerſden.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Wyerſden. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Wyerſden. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you. My Lord, I deſire to know how many I have excepted againſt.

Cl. of Arr. One and Thirty.

Mr. Burleigh. Write, write.

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Blewitt.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Blewitt. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Blewitt. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Wolfe.

Cook. I accept of him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. William Smith.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Smith. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Smith. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Bickley.

Mr. Bickley. My Lord, I don't look upon my ſelf as a Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. Why ſo, Sir?

Mr. Bickley. I have a Leaſe for one and Fifty Years, my Lord, of my Houſe, and there is a very little Piece of Ground adjoining to it that was very convenient for me to lay to my Leaſe; there is no way to it but through my Houſe; it is a Thing that never was let for any Thing, and it is not worth the Building.

L. C. J. Treby. What Eſtate have you in it? Do you pay a Ground-Rent for it?

Mr. Bickley. My Lord, I bought that little Piece of Ground for the Conveniency of my Leaſe.

L. C. J. Treby. But did you purchaſe it for Term of Years, or to you, and to your Heirs?

Mr. Bickley. Nay, I bought it for ever, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then you have a Freehold in it. What's the Value of it?

Mr. Bickley. Truly very little, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. I don't know any Body can judge of the Value of it but your ſelf. Is it worth 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Bickley. My Lord, I can't value it at Ten Pound a Year, it never coſt me Forty Pound.

L. C. J. Treby. Then for Eſtate you are well enough, but for Value you are a little under.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Collins.

Cook. I accept of him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. John Watſon.

Cook. I do not challenge him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. Benjamin Hooper.

Cook. I accept of him. [He was ſworn.]

Cl. of Arr. John Wells.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Wells. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Wells. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. John Hibbart.

Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10 l. a Year?

Mr. Hibbart. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill againſt me?

Mr. Hibbart. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Mr. Cook, you have challenged your full Number. Call Daniel Wray. [He was ſworn.]

Cl.

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit. [He was ſworn.] Crier Countez.

Henry Sherbrook.

Crier. One, &c.

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit.

Crier. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn are as follows:

Cl. of Arr. Crier, Make Proclamation.

Crier. O Yes, If any one can inform my Lord, the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken of the High-Treaſon whereof Peter Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner now ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverence, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or they forfeit their Recognizance.

L. C. J. Treby. You muſt make room for thoſe Twelve Gentlemen that are ſworn, that they may be at eaſe; and for thoſe that are not ſworn, their Attendance may be ſpared.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Cook. Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted in London, by the Name of Peter Cook, late of London, Gentleman; For that whereas an open and notoriouſly publick and moſt ſharp and cruel War, for a great while hath been, and it is by Land and by Sea carried on, and proſecuted, by Lewis the French King, againſt the moſt Serene, moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. All which time, the ſaid Lewis the French King, and his Subjects, were, and yet are Foes, and Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, William the Third, and his Subjects, he the ſaid Peter Cook, a Subject of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, of this his Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premiſſes, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved, and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traitor againſt the ſaid moſt Serene, moſt Mild, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord, William the Third, now King of England, his Supreme, True, Rightful, Lawful, and undoubted Lord, the Cordial Love, and true, and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould bear, and of Right is bound to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguiſh, Intending, and Contriving, and with all his Strength, purpoſing, and deſigning the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our ſaid Lord the King that now is of Right duly, happily, and very well eſtabliſhed altogether to ſubvert, change, and alter, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable, and miſerable Servitude to the aforeſaid French King to ſubdue, and enthral; the Firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and divers Days, and Times, as well before as after, at London, in the Pariſh of St. Peter Cornhil, in the Ward of Lime-ſtreet, Falſly, Maliciouſly, Deviliſhly, and Traiterouſly did Compaſs, Imagine, and Contrive, Purpoſe, and Intend, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then his Supreme, True, Rightful, and Lawful Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Empire, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depoſe, caſt down, and utterly deprive, and the ſame our Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, by Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and his Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, conquer and ſubdue, to move, incite, procure and aſſiſt, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord King William, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to Make, and Cauſe. And further, That the ſaid Peter Cook, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the aforeſaid Firſt Day of July, in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, and divers other Days and Times, before and after, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, to the ſaid Foes, and Enemies of the ſame our Lord the King, did adhere, and was aſſiſting: And his aforeſaid moſt wicked, and deviliſh Treaſons, and Traiterous Compaſſings, Contrivances, Intentions, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, and in Proſecution, Performance, and Execution of that traiterous adhering, he the ſaid Peter Cook, as ſuch a falſe Traitor, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, and divers other Days, and Times, as well before as after, there and elſewhere in London aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, and by Force, and Arms, with one Robert Charnock, Sir John Friend, and Sir William Perkins, Knights, (which ſaid Robert Charnock, Sir John Friend, and Sir William Perkins, were lately ſeverally duly Convicted, and Attainted of High-Treaſon, in Contriving and Conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is) and with divers other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propoſe, treat, conſult, conſent, and agree to procure from the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then, and yet Foes, and Enemies of our ſaid Sovereign Lord William, now King of England, &c. great Numbers of Soldiers and Armed Men, this Kingdom of England to Invade and Fight with, and to Levy, Procure, and Prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, and Troops, and Legions againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, to riſe up and be formed, and with thoſe Foes and Enemies, at and upon ſuch their Invaſion and Entry within this Kingdom of England, to join and unite, Rebellion and War againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and carry on; the ſame our Lord the King ſo, as aforeſaid, to Depoſe, and him to Kill and Murder: And further, with the ſaid falſe Traitors, the ſame Firſt Day of July, in the Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, traiterouſly

traiterouſly did conſult, conſent, and agree to ſend the aforeſaid Robert Charnock as a Meſſenger from him the ſaid Peter Cook, and the ſame other Traitors, as far as, and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, unto James the Second, late King of England, to propoſe to him, and to requeſt him to obtain from the aforeſaid French King, the aforeſaid Soldiers and Armed Men for the Invaſion aforeſaid to be made, and Intelligence and Notice of ſuch their traiterous Intentions and Adherings to the ſaid late King James the Second, and the ſaid other Foes and Enemies, and their Adherents, to give and ſhew, and them to inform of other things, Particulars and Circumſtances thereunto referring, for the Aſſiſtance, Animating, Comforting, and Aid of the ſaid Foes and Enemies of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, in the War aforeſaid: And to ſtir up and procure thoſe Foes and Enemies the readilier, and more boldly this Kingdom of England to invade; the Treaſons, and traiterous Contrivances, Compaſſings, Imaginings, and Purpoſes of the ſaid Peter Cooke aforeſaid, to perfect and fulfil; alſo the ſame firſt Day of July, in the Seventh Year aboveſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, He the ſaid Peter Cook, divers Horſes, and very many Arms, Guns, Muskets, Piſtols, Rapiers, and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Matters, and Military Inſtruments, falſly, malicioufly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly, did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and to be bought, gathered togeter, obtained and procured, did cauſe and in his Cuſtody had and detained to that Intent to uſe the ſame in the ſaid Invaſion, War, and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King that now is, him our ſaid Lord the King, of and from the Regal State, Crown and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depoſe, caſt down, and deprive, and him to Kill and Murder; and the Deſigns, Intentions, and all the Purpoſes of him the ſaid Peter Cook aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and fully to bring to effect, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided.

Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto has pleaded not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are, your Charge is to inquire whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince; if you find him not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mompeſſon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, this is an Indictment for High-Treaſon againſt Peter Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Indictment ſets forth, That whereas there has been an open and cruel War for a long Time, and ſtill is between his Majeſty King William, and the French King, the Priſoner at the Bar not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, the firſt of July in the Seventh Year of the King's Reign, did compaſs and intend to depoſe and deprive the King of the Title, Honour, and Dignity of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and likewiſe to put the King to Death, and did adhere to the King's Enemies; and to fulfil theſe Treaſons, he did conſult with Charnock, and ſeveral other Traitors who were mentioned there, and ſome of whom have been found guilty of Treaſon, and executed for it, to ſend over to the late King James, to perſuade the French King to ſend over Soldiers and Arms to invade this Kingdom, and to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion in it, and to deprive and put the King to Death, and to compleat theſe Treaſons, it further ſets forth, That the Priſoner at the Bar did provide ſeveral Arms and Horſes, and this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided; to this he has pleaded not Guilty, and for Trial put himſelf upon the Country, and, Gentlemen, if we prove theſe Facts laid in the Indictment, it's your duty to find him Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, before the Witneſſes are examined againſt me, I intreat you that they may not be both in Court together, that one may not hear what the other ſwears, tho' I ſuppoſe it is the ſame thing; for they have been together both now and the laſt Day.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Cook. I muſt tell you it is not neceſſary to be granted for asking; for we are not to diſcourage, or caſt any Suſpicion upon the Witneſſes, when there is nothing made out againſt them; but it is a Favour that the Court may grant, and does grant ſometimes, and now does it to you; though it be not of neceſſity: They ſhall be examined apart, but at preſent this is not the Time of Examination; for the King's Counſel are now to open the Evidence before they examine the Witneſſes; but when the Time comes for the Witneſſes to be call'd and examined, the Court will, in favour to you, take care that your Requeſt be complied with.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, the Priſoner ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of his Majeſty, and likewiſe in adhering to his Majeſty's Enemies, theſe are the Treaſons ſpecified in the Indictment: The Overt-Acts that are laid to prove theſe Treaſons are, That he with ſeveral other Traitors, named in the Indictment, did meet and conſult, and agree to ſend over Charnock into France, to invite the French King to make an Invaſion upon the Kingdom, and did provide Arms for that Purpoſe.

Gentlemen, the Nature of the Evidence that you will have produced to prove the Priſoner guilty of theſe Treaſons lies thus: It will appear to you that there has been for ſome Time a Conſpiracy carried on by ſeveral Traitors, and wicked Perſons, to ſubvert the eſtabliſhed Government of this Kingdom, and deſtroy the Conſtitution of England, by a foreign Invaſion of the French. You will hear that this Conſpiracy was laid wide, and conſiſted of ſeveral Parts, one Part was that of Aſſaſſinating his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, ſon, and that was to be done firſt, as a Preparation and Encouragement to the French to invade the Kingdom: The other Part was the inviting the French King to invade us, and the Priſoner at the Bar is accuſed of being concerned in that Part that relates to the Invaſion of this Kingdom, by a French Power; and though it may be the other Part, that of Aſſaſſinating the King, be the blackeſt Part of the Conſpiracy, yet if the Priſoner at the Bar has been engaged in the inviting a foreign Power to invade the Kingdom, my Lords, the Judges, will tell you, in Point of Law, that is as much an Overt-Act of the compaſſing the Deſtruction of the King and the People of England, and the Subverſion of our ancient good Conſtitution, as if he had been concerned immediately in the other Part, the Aſſaſſination.

But now, Gentlemen, that the Priſoner was engaged in inviting the French to invade us, you will hear proved by ſeveral Witneſſes, that there having been a Deſign laſt Year, juſt before his Majeſty went to Flanders, to expoſe his own Perſon for our Protection, and the Protection of the Liberties of Europe, there was a Conſpiracy to murder him before he went to Flanders, which, it ſeems, they were not ripe for them; but immediately after he was gone to Flanders, you will hear there were formal Meetings of ſeveral Gentlemen and Perſons of Quality, among whom the Priſoner at the Bar was one: There was a Meeting in May, laſt Year, after the King was gone to Flanders; and this was at the Old King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet; and there were preſent, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Mr. Charnock, (all which three laſt have ſuffered the Puniſhment of the Law for their Treaſon already) and there were alſo Mr. Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman; theſe Men did meet together, to conſider of the beſt Ways and Means of encouraging and inviting the French King with an Armed Force to invade this Kingdom; they conſidered that that was a proper Opportunity, and did treat of ſeveral Arguments that might perſuade to it: Firſt, that the King was gone to Flanders, and ſo was not in Perſon here to defend us; and that the Troops, to make good ſuch Defence, were in a great meaſure drawn thither, to aſſiſt the Allies againſt the French Power; they did think likewiſe, that at that Time there was a great Diſcontent and Diſſatisfaction in the Nation, though I think in that they were greatly miſtaken; and I believe and hope they will always find themſelves ſo, to think that the People of England are ſo little ſenſible of that which is the Means of their Preſervation, as to hearken to any Diſcontents to encourage a French Power to come into England to deſtroy our Religion and Liberties; that indeed they did apprehend, though they were miſtaken, and I believe they always will, when they go upon that Ground.

Gentlemen, Theſe Perſons thinking this a proper Opportunity, did agree to ſend a Meſſenger into France upon this Meſſage, To go to the late King James, and perſuade him to deſire and prevail with the French King to aſſiſt him with Ten Thouſand Men, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; and to encourage him, they promiſed their Aſſiſtance here, as ſoon as he came over; and undertook, that between them, they could furniſh, and would raiſe 2000 Horſe to meet him at his Landing, and join upon ſuch an Invaſion.

Gentlemen, At this Meeting this was agreed upon by all that were there, whereof the Priſoner was one; and they did agree to ſend Mr. Charnock, (who has ſince been executed, and a principal Encourager of the Deſign, and Actor in it) he was the Meſſenger that was appointed to go upon this Errand, and Mr. Charnock was reſolved to go, but deſired another Meeting of theſe Gentlemen, to know if they continued in their former Reſolution, that he might have all the Aſſurance that was reaſonable to give the French King Encouragement to make the Invaſion: Accordingly another Meeting was had of moſt of the ſame Perſons that were at the Meeting before; particularly the Priſoner at the Bar was at that Second Meeting, which was in Covent-Garden at one Mrs. Mountjoy's, who keeps a Tavern next Door to Sir John Fenwick's Lodgings; there they met upon the ſame Deſign, and upon Conſultation had, and the Queſtion ask'd, they did agree to continue in the former Reſolution, and upon that, immediately Mr. Charnock went into France, to ſollicit Forces from thence to invade us; but it happened, as it ſeems, that the French King's Forces were otherwiſe employed, ſo that he cou'd not ſpare ſo many at that time; and this Return was brought by Charnock to the Gentlemen that employed him; that he had ſpoke with the late King, who gave him that Anſwer, That the French King cou'd not ſpare ſo many Men at that time, but he thank'd them for their Kindneſs.

Gentlemen, This will be the Nature of our Evidence, to ſhew, that the Priſoner at the Bar was concerned in that Part of the Conſpiracy which relates to the French Invaſion; and if he be guilty of that, in point of Law, he is as much guilty of the Conſpiracy, to depoſe and murder the King, as if he had been concerned in the other Part of Aſſaſſinating his Royal Perſon; and I believe no Body can think that thoſe that were to act in the Aſſaſſination, wou'd have attempted to engage in ſuch a deſperate Deſign, if it had not been for the Encouragement of the French Invaſion that was to ſecond them afterwards if they ſucceeded; ſo that no Body can extenuate the Crime of the Invaſion, becauſe as to the Horridneſs of the Attempt, it is leſs black than the other; they are both Crimes of a very high Nature, and equally High-Treaſon; and if we prove the Priſoner guilty of this Part, we hope you will find him guilty.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes and prove the Matter, as it has been opened. Call Captain Porter and Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Now, my Lord, we muſt deſire that that may be done which our Client deſired before, and which your Lordſhip was favourably pleaſed to promiſe, that the Witneſſes may be examined apart.

L. C. J. Treby. Let it be ſo: Who do you begin with?

Mr. Soll. Gen. We begin with Captain Porter, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then let Mr. Goodman withdraw.

Mr. Baker. Let Mr. Goodman go up Stairs, and we will call him preſently.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Swear Captain Porter: [Which was done.] Captain Porter, Do you know Mr. Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you remember a Meeting of ſome Gentlemen at the King's-Head-Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet.

Capt. Porter. Yes, I do, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then pray give an Account of the Company that were there, the Time when, and what paſs'd.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, the laſt Year we had two Meetings; the Firſt was in May, the other was the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June; the Firſt was at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet; there were my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Mr Charnock, Mr. Cook and my ſelf; Mr. Goodman came in after Dinner; at this Meeting it was conſulted which was the beſt Way and the quickeſt to reſtore King James, and haſten his Return into England; ſeveral Diſcourſes and Propoſals there were; at laſt it was agreed to ſend Mr. Charnock to the late King to borrow of the French King Ten Thouſand Men, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons, to be ſent over into England to aſſiſt the King's Reſtoration. Says Mr. Charnock thereupon, this the King can do without your ſending, and I would not go upon a fooliſh Errand. What will you do to aſſiſt in this Matter? The Company deſired him to promiſe King James, that if he would ſend Word when he Landed, and where, they wou'd be ſure to meet him at his Landing with a Body of 2000 Horſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar in the Company, and preſent at this Reſolution?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did all the Company agree to it?

Capt. Porter. Yes, they did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Signs were there of their Agreement? Did they ſtand up ſeverally and declare their Agreement, or how?

Capt. Porter. My Lord of Aylesbury and Sir John Fenwick did riſe up, and deſired Captain Charnock, that he would go upon this Errand: And when the Queſtion was ask'd ſeverally of all there preſent by Mr. Charnock, whether he might aſſure the King of what they had told him? Every one ſaid yes, you may; and Mr. Cook kneel'd indeed upon a Chair, and ſaid, Yes, you may.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give his Conſent to it?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he anſwered in thoſe very Words.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you remember any Meeting of any Company at Mrs. Mountjoy's?

Capt. Porter. Yes, that was a ſecond Meeting.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury how you came to meet there then, what Company were there, and what paſs'd.

Capt. Porter. Mr. Charnock deſired another Meeting, to ſee if the Gentlemen kept to their former Reſolution; and we met at Mrs. Mountjoy's eight or ten Days after, and there were moſt of the Company that was at the firſt Meeting, and there all that were preſent did aſſure Mr. Charnock that they kept to their firſt Reſolution, and wou'd abide to what was agreed upon at the former Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were preſent at the ſecond Meeting?

Capt. Porter. The Priſoner at the Bar was there at that ſecond Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that ſecond Meeting for, do you ſay?

Capt. Porter. It was to give Mr. Charnock Aſſurance, that we were agreed to ſtand by the Reſolution taken at the firſt Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Mr. Charnock do afterwards?

Capt. Porter. I went away from them; there was Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend and Captain Charnock went to the Queen's-Head Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet, and Captain Charnock told me he would go in two or three Days, and I believe did ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you ſee him afterwards?

Capt. Porter. When I was a Priſoner upon the Account of the Riot in Drury-Lane; about two or three Days after I came to Newgate he came to ſee me, and ſaid he had been in France; and that King James thank'd us for our kind Offer, but the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year; and he told me he had been with my Lord of Aylesbury, and the reſt of the Gentlemen that had employ'd him to go over, and had delivered them the ſeveral Meſſages that he was ordered to from the King.

L. C. J. Treby. Captain Porter, who were preſent at the ſecond Meeting, do you ſay?

Capt. Porter. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Captain Charnock, Mr. Cook and my ſelf; I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery or Mr. Goodman were at that ſecond Meeting or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Capt. Porter, I would ask you another Queſtion: You were concerned in the Aſſaſſination with thoſe other Perſons that engaged in it; Pray what Safety did you propoſe to your ſelves after the Aſſaſſination was over?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I asked Sir George Barclay what we ſhould do after the Fact was committed: Says he, you need fear nothing, I will go away that Night, I have a Ship ready, and the King will be Landed in five or ſix Days afterwards; if you'll but keep yourſelves cloſe for ſo many Days, all will do well.

Mr. Soll Gen. If the Priſoner or the Council will ask him any Queſtions, my Lord, they may do it.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, can you recollect what Time of Day this was that this Debate and Reſolution were had at the Old King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet.

Capt. Porter. Truly Sir Bartholomew, I can't tell.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, by what means do you recollect that this was in the Month of May?

Capt. Porter. Becauſe Capt. Charnock was abſent at the Dog-Tavern Riot, which was the Tenth of June.

Sir B. Shower. Was it not in April?

Capt. Porter. No, Sir; to the beſt of my Remembrance it was in May.

Sir B. Shower. What makes you think it was in May rather than April?

Capt. Porter. I have told you, Sir, becauſe both Meetings were before the Dog-Tavern Riot, the Tenth of June, and Mr. Charnock was not there at that Time; but he told me afterwards he had been in France, and there were eight or ten Days Difference between the two Meetings.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if they have done with him, I would ask him one Queſtion, to ſettle this Matter in point of Time. Capt. Porter, Was the King gone to Flanders when you had theſe Meetings?

Capt. Porter. The King was gone, Sir, before the firſt Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. The King did not go till ſeveral Days in May; was Mr. Goodman there?

Capt. Porter. He was at the firſt Meeting, but I can't tell whether he was at the Second or no.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray what Time was Mr. Goodman there at the firſt Meeting?

Capt. Porter. He came up after Dinner at the firſt Meeting.

Mr. Baker. Then call down Mr. Goodman, who came in, and was ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Goodman, Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of an intended Invaſion upon this Kingdom; what were the Circumſtances of it, and who were concerned in it.

Mr. Goodman. My Lord, about the Middle of May laſt, or thereabouts, Captain Porter ſent to me, and told me there was a Meeting of ſome Gentlemen of our Acquaintance at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet; and he deſired me that I would be there, becauſe it was about Buſineſs: I told him I did not know whether I cou'd be there at Dinner; but however, I wou'd not fail of coming thither after Dinner; and accordingly I came. When I came into the Houſe, I ſent up my Name to Capt. Porter, and he came down and brought me up Stairs, and there I ſaw my Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Mr. Charnock, and that Gentleman at the Bar, Mr. Cook: When we were there, the Diſcourſe was, that we did think King James's coming was retarded, and we wou'd do any thing to facilitate his Reſtoration.

Cook. My Lord Chief Juſtice.

L. C. J. Treby. What ſay you, Mr. Cook?

Cook. My Lord, If your Lordſhip pleaſes, I deſire the Jury may not be talk'd to by any Body; and I underſtand there are ſome talking with the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. Fy upon it, we will lay any Body by the Heels that do ſo, they muſt neither be diſturbed, nor inſtructed by any Body.

Cook. My Lord, I am informed there was ſomebody talking to them, and telling them this was the ſame Caſe with Sir John Friend.

L. C. J. Treby. Do you but ſhew us the Man, and we will find another Place for him; we will ſend him to the Gaol, I'll aſſure you.

Mr. Burleigh. This Gentleman, my Lord, did hear ſuch a Diſcourſe to the Jury (pointing to a Gentleman there) who ſtood up.

My Lord, I cannot poſitively ſwear to the Man, but I did hear ſome Diſcourſe that it was the ſame Evidence as in the former Trial.

L. C. J. Treby. If you can ſhew us who it was, we will take care to puniſh him: I ſuppoſe he ſtands Corrected; and if we knew who he was, he ſhou'd ſtand Committed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Goodman, begin again, and tell what paſs'd at that Meeting, becauſe the Jury were interrupted from hearing by People's buzzing about them.

Mr Goodman. My Lord, When Captain Porter brought me up into the Room, I told you what Gentlemen I found there; after we were ſet down, there was a Conſultation, that conſidering the French King's Wars retarded the Affair of ſending back King James, and the Means of reſtoring him to the Crown, it was fit we ſhou'd find out ſome Way or Method to facilitate his Reſtoration, and it was thought convenient to have a Meſſenger to ſend over to King James with Propoſals for that Purpoſe; to this effect, as near as I remember, That if King James cou'd prevail with the French King to furniſh Ten Thouſand Men, whereof 8000 to be Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons, we wou'd endeavour to meet him at the Head of as many Horſe as we cou'd raiſe, to ſuſtain thoſe Forces at their Landing: This was debated in order to come to a Reſolution; and much Difficulty there was how many the Number ſhould be; the Man pitched upon to be ſent, was Mr. Charnock; and after ſome Debate, how many Thouſand Horſe could be raiſed: Says Mr. Charnock, don't let me go over upon a fooliſh Errand, but let me know what I have to ſay exactly: Thereupon it was concluded by all, that Two Thouſand Horſe ſhould be the Number we cou'd promiſe, and the King might depend upon them; and if we brought more, ſo much the better; and Sir John Friend ſaid, I believe he has ſo many Friends here, that if he came himſelf, he might be welcome; but that we did not think fit to truſt to; and no Body wou'd adviſe any ſuch thing; when the Reſolution of the Thing and the Number was thus fixed, Mr. Charnock ask'd whether it were with all our Conſents? and that he might aſſure the King, that this was our Reſolution thereupon? We all roſe up, and ſaid to him, Yes, you may, yes, you may, every one particularly; and I remember one Thing particularly concerning the Priſoner Mr. Cook, That he kneel'd upon the Chair when he ſaid, Yes, you may; and his Elbows were upon the Table: This is all that I know of that Meeting. There was to be another Meeting, as Captain Porter told me; but I had Buſineſs in the City; but whatſoever he promiſed on my Behalf, as to the Quota of Men, I wou'd be ſure to make it good; and I was not at the ſecond Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Charnock afterwards?

Mr. Goodman. Yes, I did, when he came back; and he told me the Thing was not accepted, for the French King cou'd not ſpare Men, and that he had been with the ſeveral Gentlemen to carry them the Compliments that he had in Charge from King James, who returned them Thanks for their good Affection; and among the reſt, he did me the Honour to return me Thanks too.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mr. Goodman, let me ask you a Queſtion: When was it that you ſaw Mr. Charnock after this?

Mr. Goodman. It was in Arundel-ſtreet, at his Lodgings.

Sir B. Shower. But I ask you, Sir, when it was? Was it before or after the Tenth of June?

Mr. Goodman. It was after the Tenth of June, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. How long after, pray?

Mr. Goodman. I believe it was a Month after the Tenth of June.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee him here in England before Mr. Porter was diſcharged from the Riot, and came out of Newgate?

Mr. Goodman. I believe I did ſee him before Captain Porter was diſcharged, long.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Who were the Perſons that were preſent at that Meeting?

Mr. Goodman. My Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, Captain Porter, and the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Cook.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Were you at Dinner with them, Sir?

Mr. Goodman. No, I came in after Dinner.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray what Houſe was it, do you ſay, this Meeting was at?

Mr. Goodman. It was at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet.

Sir B. Shower. Can you tell what Day of the Week it was?

Mr. Goodman. No, nor the Day of the Month.

Sir B. Shower. Was you ever in the Company of theſe Gentlemen at any other Time?

Mr. Goodman. No, this was the only Time that I heard of this Conſultation; I was not at the ſecond Meeting.

Cook. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, may I ask Mr. Goodman any Queſtions?

L. C. J. Treby. Yes, by all Means ask him what you will.

Cook. Mr. Goodman, You are upon your Oath: but did you ever hear me ſpeak ten Words in your Life? Was you ever in my Company in any Houſe, before or ſince?

Mr. Goodman. Yes, Sir; I was in your Company at the Cock in Bow-ſtreet, where you came in accidentally.

Cook. Did you ever hear me talk of the Government, or any Thing of that Nature?

Mr. Goodman. What the Diſcourſe was of, I cannot particularly ſay, but I am certain you was there: And as to the Conſultation that I now ſpeak of, I remember very well you gave your Conſent in that Manner as I have told the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done at the preſent.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, Brother Darnal, what ſay you for the Priſoner?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: I am of Counſel, in this Caſe, for the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Cook, who ſtands indicted of a very great Offence, no leſs, Gentlemen, than High-Treaſon; and if he be Guilty, his Puniſhment will be as great: But becauſe the Puniſhment and the Offence are both very great, the Law requires exact poſitive Proof, and that by two credible Witneſſes. There have been two indeed that have been produced to you; and if you believe both of them; after what we ſhall offer to you againſt them, and if what they ſwear be true, the Priſoner is Guilty: But if we ſatisfy you that either of them is not to be credited, ſo that you do not believe both of them, he muſt be acquitted.

There is no doubt, Gentlemen, but there has been a Villainous Horrid Plot; there is no queſtion of it; and it was, as it has been opened, barely to Aſſaſſinate one of the braveſt Men living; and to make the happieſt People in the World, if they know when they are ſo, the moſt miſerable People upon Earth, by bringing them under French Tyranny and Slavery. Many of the Traitors have been brought to juſt Puniſhment for this Treaſon; nay, they have own'd the Fact at their Deaths, ſo that there is no queſtion of the Truth of it; and therefore, Gentlemen, every honeſt Man will endeavour to bring ſuch as are plainly guilty, of ſuch an abominable Conſpiracy, to juſt Puniſhment; but yet they will be as careful not to let an innocent Man ſuffer; that, Gentlemen, every honeſt Man will take care of, and eſpecially ſuch as are upon their Oaths: It concerns a Jury highly to be ſatisfied, that he is not innocent, whom they bring in guilty; for it is better that Twenty guilty Men ſhould eſcape, than one innocent Man ſuffer.

But, Gentlemen, if my Brief be true, we ſhall give you ſuch an Account of one of theſe Witneſſes; firſt, as to the Man himſelf; that he is not a Man to be credited as a Witneſs; and then beſides that, as to the Evidence he gives in this Caſe; (I ſay, if my Brief be true) it is falſe, and we ſhall prove it ſo; and when you have heard our Evidence, if you are ſatisfied that one of theſe Witneſſes is not to be credited, or that what he ſwears is not true, you are to acquit the Priſoner.

Gentlemen, Here has been one Mr. Goodman produced as a Witneſs, one that never was produced before at the Trial of any of thoſe that have ſuffered, ſo that the Truth of their Guilt does not at all depend upon his Evidence, nor does it give any Credit to it. This is this Gentleman's firſt Entry upon this Stage; and yet (if my Brief be true) this is not the firſt bloody or cruel Part that he has acted; for we have a Record of Conviction againſt him, whereby it will appear to you, that he was indicted (for Endeavouring to poiſon two great Dukes) for giving forty Guineas to an Italian Empirick, one Amydei, and promiſing two Hundred Pounds more when it was effected, to poiſon the late Duke of Grafton, and the preſent Duke of Northumberland; and we ſhall ſhew you, that he was convicted of it, and fined a Thouſand Pound for the Offence; which, conſidering the Meanneſs of his Circumſtances at that Time, was as much as Twenty Thouſand Pounds; for he could as well have paid Twenty as One then; and it appears too, that Mr. Goodman (nay, it will not be denied by him himſelf) was in this horrid Plot; and he that wou'd be concern'd to poiſon two Dukes in a Family, to which he had ſo many Obligations——

Mr. Goodman. My Lord, I deſire leave to ſpeak to this Matter that the Serjeant mentions.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, Sir, let me go on; you may talk anon; I have ſeen the Copy of the Record of Conviction, and have it ready to produce.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Goodman, be quiet, and ſtay till by and by; you will be defended, no Doubt on it; but in the mean time let them go on, and don't interrupt them.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I ſay, my Lord, he that wou'd be concerned in ſo vile an Act, as a Contrivance to take away the Lives of two great Dukes, (who were, in effect, his young Maſters) that he ſhou'd go to poiſon them in a Family to which he had been ſo much obliged; and then, he that wou'd be concerned in ſo horrid a Plot as this was, to deſtroy his Country, and take away the the Life of the King; ſure it will be no difficult Thing to think that this Man will not ſtick at the little Priſoner's Life at the Bar, eſpecially when he has ſo great a Temptation to it, as to ſave his own Life by it.

But perhaps ſome of you may doubt whether it is to ſave his own Life or no: But I believe there are none of you would give any Credit to him, if you thought ſo: Therefore, to ſatisfy you of that Fact, we ſhall produce you Evidence of his own Opinion of that Matter, beſide the general known Circumſtances he lay under; As, That he was long in Priſon before he charged the Priſoner with any Thing, and the Priſoner was at Liberty, went every Day abroad for a Week after Mr. Charnock's Trial, and never abſconded one Minute, but lived publickly, openly and viſibly to all his Friends, and all Strangers: But beſides, Gentlemen, that Mr. Goodman knew he muſt die, and juſtly and deſervedly for this horrid Plot and Treaſon himſelf; and had no other Way left to ſave his Life, but to come in thus as an Evidence and Accuſer, which we think will ſhake his Credit with you.

I ſay, beſides all this, (if my Brief be true) we ſhall prove that he has ſaid himſelf, That either he muſt hang Peter Cook, or he muſt be hanged himſelf. Thus, Gentlemen, he ſwears to ſave his own Life, by taking away another's.

This, Gentlemen, is as to the Man himſelf, that he is not to be credited. But now further, as to the Evidence that he has given; He tells you that he came into the Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and that there he found ſuch Company; he owns he came in after Dinner; and that the other Gentleman, Mr. Porter, owns too; he ſays there were preſent at this Meeting, my Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Mr. Cook, and ſeveral other Gentlemen; but (if my Brief be true) we ſhall prove by three Witneſſes, that he was not there till they were gone; and that will make an End of all the Pretence of his Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nay, then we ſhall never have done.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I'll aſſure you, Sir, I have the Names of three Witneſſes in my Brief, to prove that my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook, were gone before he came in, tho' if any, or either of them were gone, it deſtroys his Teſtimony; and if we prove this to you, I would be loth to be one of the Jury that ſhould take away the Priſoner's Life upon this Evidence; no, if he were the vileſt Man alive, and much leſs the Life of the Priſoner at the Bar; for we ſhall prove (if my Brief be true) he is a Man of Morals, a Man of Virtue, one that has a great Love for his Country; and this we ſhall prove by Evidence undeniable, Perſons of Quality in their Country, ſuch as ſerve their Country in Parliament, as their Repreſentatives; we ſhall ſhew it by ſuch Evidence, that there will be no Room to doubt of it: He is a Man without any Stain or Blot upon him, 'till this Accuſation; he is the eldeſt Son of his Father, and Heir to a great Eſtate; his Father is a great Officer, and a great Getter under this Government, and can it be imagin'd, or believ'd, that ſuch a Man would be guilty of the worſt of Treaſons, to deſtroy the Religion he profeſſes, to overturn the State, to ruin his own Eſtate, himſelf and his Poſterity, which muſt be the Conſequence of it? Nay, if two good Witneſſes cou'd be produc'd to teſtify it, and if we had not had ſo much to take off the Credit of Goodman, I cou'd hardly believe it of any Man that was in his right Senſes; he muſt have been a Mad-man if he had done it, one that ſtood ſo well with the preſent Government, and of a Family never tainted with Diſloyalty.

Certainly, Gentlemen, when we make out this to you againſt Mr. Goodman, the Priſoner can be in no Danger of his Life, from Mr. Goodman's Evidence, tho' he is an unfortunate Man to come under ſuch an Accuſation; but I cannot believe that any Jury, upon ſuch a Man's Evidence, will brand an honeſt Family with the fouleſt, vileſt, blackeſt Treaſon that ever was hatch'd; no, Gentlemen, you are Men of Ability and Underſtanding, and that is it we rely upon; we doubt not but that you will conſider the Evidence, and conſider your Oaths, and not let the Priſoner's Blood lie at your Doors; therefore we ſhall go on and call our Witneſſes to make out what I have open'd.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord; we deſire to call our Witneſſes, and I ſhall reſerve my ſelf to make ſome Obſervations after we have given our Evidence: Mr. Serj. has open'd as much as we can prove, and we will now produce our Evidence; Firſt we will ſhew the Conviction of Goodman: Mr. Burleigh, where is the Conviction?

Mr. Burleigh. Here it is, Sir.

Sir. B. Shower. Where had you it, Sir?

Mr. Burleigh. Out of the Treaſury at Weſtminſter.

Sir B. Shower. Is it a true Copy, did you examine it there?

Mr. Burleigh. Yes, it is a true Copy, I did examine it with the Record.

Sir B. Shower. Then read it, Mr. Tanner.

Cl. of Arr. Reads—Michaelmas Term: Triceſimo ſecundo Caroli Secundi.

L. C. J. Treby. Read the Record in Engliſh to the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. [Reads.] Be it remember'd, that Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our Lord the King that now is, who for the ſame our Lord the King in this part ſueth, came here in the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the King himſelf at Weſtminſter, on Thurſday next after three Weeks of St. Michael, the ſame Term; and for the ſame our Lord the King, brought here into the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the ſaid King, then and there, a certain Information againſt Cardell Goodman, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman, which Information follows in theſe Words, Scilicet, Middleſex ſcilicet, Be it remember'd that Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, who for the ſame our Lord the King, in this Behalf ſueth, in his own proper Perſon came here into the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the King himſelf at Weſtminſter, on Thurſday next after three Weeks of St. Michael that ſame Term, and for the ſame our Lord the King, gives the Court here to underſtand and be inform'd, That Cardell Goodman, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman, being a Perſon of a wicked Mind, and of an ungodly and deviliſh Diſpoſition, and Converſation, and contriving, practiſing, and falſly, maliciouſly and deviliſhly intending intending Death, and Poiſoning and final Deſtruction unto the Right Noble Henry, Duke of Grafton, and George, Duke of Northumberland, and that the aforeſaid Cardell Goodman, his moſt wicked, moſt impious, and deviliſh Intentions, Contrivances and Practices aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, the Thirtieth Day of September, in the ſix and Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. and diverſe other Days, and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, with Force and Arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, and deviliſhly, by unlawful Ways and Means, did ſolicite, perſuade, and endeavour to procure one Alexander Amydei, to prepare and procure two Flasks of Florence Wine, to be mix'd with deadly Poiſon, for the Poiſoning of the aforeſaid Right Noble Henry, Duke of Grafton, and George, Duke of Northumberland, and his moſt wicked, moſt impious, and deviliſh Contrivances, Practices and Intentions aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and the more to bring to Effect, the aforeſaid Cardell Goodman, the Day and Year aboveſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, maliciouſly and deviliſhly, did promiſe and agree, to give unto the aforeſaid Alexander Amydei, forty Pieces of Guinea-Gold, of the Value of forty Pound, of lawful Money of England, if he the ſaid Alexander Amydei wou'd prepare, procure and provide two Flasks of Florence Wine, to be mix'd with deadly Poiſon, for the Poiſoning of the aforeſaid Right Noble Henry, Duke of Grafton, and George, Duke of Northumberland; and if the aforeſaid Poiſon with the Wine aforeſaid to be mix'd, ſhou'd effect the Death of the aforeſaid Henry, Duke of Grafton, and George Duke of Northumberland: that then he the ſaid Cardell Goodman, wou'd give unto the ſaid Alexander Amydei, the Sum of one Hundred Pounds, and that beyond Sea he wou'd maintain the ſaid Alexander all the Days of him the ſaid Alexander, to the evil and moſt pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, &c. — Then here is Proceſs pray'd by the Attorney-General againſt Mr. Goodman, who comes, and by his Attorney pleads not Guilty, and here is Iſſue join'd.

Sir B. Shower. Well, ſee for the Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. There was a Trial at Niſi Prius, and the Jury find that the ſaid Cardell Goodman is guilty of the Premiſſes in the Information ſpecify'd as by the Information is ſuppoſed againſt him.

Sir B. Shower. Now read the Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Thereupon it is conſider'd, that the ſaid Cardell Goodman do pay to the King, the Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, for his Fine, impos'd upon him for the Occaſion aforeſaid, and that the aforeſaid Cardell Goodman be committed to the Marſhalſea of this Court, in Execution for his Fine aforeſaid, that he be ſafely kept there, till he pay his Fine aforeſaid; and before that the ſaid Cardell Goodman is deliver'd out of the Priſon aforeſaid, he ſhall give Security to behave himſelf well, during his Life, and alſo ſhall give Security for the Peace to be kept towards the ſaid Lord the King, and all his People, and particularly towards the Right Noble Henry, Duke of Grafton, and George, Duke of Northumberland.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. So, you hear the Record of the Information, Conviction and Judgment, for a very horrid, abominable Crime.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I deſire they may now go on, and read the whole of the Record.

Cl. of Arr. [Reads.] And afterwards, to wit, on Friday next after eight Days of St. Hilary, in the thirty ſixth, and thirty ſeventh Years of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, before our ſaid Lord the King at Weſtminſter came the aforeſaid Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, and acknowleded that the ſaid Cardell Goodman has ſatisfy'd to our ſaid Lord the King that now is, of the Judgment aforeſaid againſt him, in Form aforeſaid given, therefore the ſaid Cardell Goodman is thereof acquitted; And ſo forth.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Call Mr. Charles Edwards, William Cock, Chriſtopher Crawford, Mary Crawford, and Mr. Huntley.

Edwards appear'd upon a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of Newgate, where he was a Priſoner.

Mr. Baker. Where is the Warrant of his Commitment? What is he committed for?

Tokefield. He is committed for Suſpicion of Treaſon, and treaſonable Practices.

Mr. Baker. Is he not committed for High-Treaſon?

Tokefield. No, Sir, he is not.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. What Diſcourſe had you with Mr. Goodman, concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, what did you hear him ſay?

Mr. Baker. He is not ſworn yet, it ſeems this Gentleman was Dundee's Chaplain in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he be not ſworn, he can give no Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, we deſire he may be ſworn.

L. C. J. Treby. Swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray Sir, will you tell the Court, and the Jury, what you know of any Diſcourſe of Mr. Goodman's concerning the Priſoner at the Bar.

Edwards. My Lord, I deſire to know, being ignorant of the Law, whether I am brought here by the common Courſe of Juſtice or not?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Sir, we have Subpœna'd you for the Priſoner at the Bar, to give Evidence of the Truth of your Knowledge here upon Oath.

L. C. J. Treby. Would you have us tell you how you came here? We ſuppoſe you came by due Proceſs of Law, as a Witneſs.

Edwards. Then, my Lord, I deſire to ſpeak but one Word; that 'tis a ſtrange Thing to me to conſider, how Words ſhould be carried away that were privately ſpoken; as if it were to expoſe me to the Reproaches of all my Friends; it is a Thing that I did never expect to hear of again: However, ſeeing I am called here, and obliged upon my Oath to declare what I know, I by God's Grace will, to the uttermoſt of my Power, tell what has paſs'd in this Matter.

L. C. J. Treby. Don't make any Apology for telling the Truth: You are obliged by your Oath to do it, and the Crurt expects it from you.

Edwards. Among other Diſcourſes that paſs'd betwixt Mr. Goodman and me, I ask'd him when Mr. Cook was to be arraigned, and when he was to

to be tried: Says he, he is to be arraigned upon Monday, and he is to be tried upon Thursday. I ask'd him whether it was for the Assassination-Plot, and he told me no. For what then? Said I: As being concerned in sending Mr. Charnock into France? Who are the Evidences against him, said I? Said he, Captain Porter and my Self. Said I, I believe two Witnesses will be found Good, or by Way of Demonstration in Law; and I pity the poor Gentleman's Case. Says he, he swore against me. How comes it then, said I, that he is not come off, and has not a Pardon, and would divulge no Body else?

L. C. J. Treby. Who had not a Pardon do you mean?

Edwards. Mr. Cook. I ask'd how he had not a Pardon? Says he, he would give an Account of no Body else but me, and that was the Reason he had no Pardon. Said I to him, Who are the Evidences against him? Says he, Captain Porter and my Self. And after this, says he, he or I must perish; or, he or I must suffer; I believe the Word was suffer: But, says he, 'tis a foolish Thing to be hang'd. All that's said of a Man that is hang'd, is, That he hang'd handsomely, or he dy'd bravely. That's all the Discourse that I can remember.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. He said it was a foolish Thing to be hang'd; and Mr. Goodman, it seems, had no Mind to be hang'd; and I believe so too: But he must not hang my Client, to save his own Life.

Edwards. Now, by the same Oath that I have Sworn, I knew nothing of being brought hither, till my Words were carry'd away privately from me, and has been consulted of, and returned to me back again; and I was far from suborning or carrying away a Discourse privately to make any Advantage of it.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Now we will call Crawford, and Huntley, and Cock.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire that Gentleman that was last examin'd, may not go away.

[Crawford, Huntley, and Cock were Sworn.]

Sir B. Shower. Set up Mr. Crawford (which was done.) Pray, Sir, will you recollect your self: Do you remember when my Lord of Aylesbury and Captain Porter din'd at the King's-Head?

Crawford. Yes: It was about a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. What Company was there?

Crawford. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Friend, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Captain Porter, and Two or Three more, I did not know their Names.

Sir B. Shower. How many were there that din'd there?

Crawford. I think about Eight in all.

Sir B. Shower. Was the Room shut while they were there, or did the Servants and Drawers go up and down commonly?

Crawford. Yes they did go up and down commonly.

Sir B. Shower. After Dinner, did any Body come to them while they were there?

Crawford. No, not during my Lord of Aylesbury's Stay, and my Lord Montgomery went away with him.

Sir B. Shower. About what Time did my Lord of Aylesbury go away?

Crawford. I think it was about Four o'Clock.

Sir B. Shower. How can you tell it?

Crawford. I did attend upon them the most Part of the Time.

Sir B. Shower. Did you see him go away?

Crawford. Yes, I did.

Sir B. Shower. Was that Gentleman, Mr. Goodman there, when they went away?

Crawford. I did not see him there, to my Remembrance: No Body came in there before they went away, saving their own Servants.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Do you know Mr. Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar? Was he one of the Gentlemen that were at your House?

Crawford. Yes: I did not well remember or recollect, till I saw him on Saturday last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he one that went away?

Crawford. I do not remember truly, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how long was it after Dinner that they went away?

Crawford. I think it was not an Hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you there all the Time, from the Time of the Dinner?

Crawford. No, not all the while I was not in the Room, but going too and fro.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. You say Mr. Goodman did not come up till after they were gone?

Crawford. No, I did not see him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you him at all?

Crawford. No, I did not see him at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Just now it was said he did not come till they were gone, and now it seems he did not see him at all.

Crawford. I do not know that he was there at all.

L. C. J. Treby. But, Brother Darnal, you open'd it, that Mr. Goodman came after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone, and now you will prove it that he came not at all.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we do not pretend to falsify his Evidence for any thing more than is material for the Prisoner: We say Mr. Goodman was not in the Room where they din'd till those Persons went away; if in any Particular we disprove him, it is sufficient for us: If we can shew that he was not there till three of those that he has nam'd were gone away, that answers our End. We are not concern'd if he came at four, five, or six o'Clock, and discours'd with Charnock till twelve o'Clock at Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray reserve your Remarks, but only observe now what he says, that Mr. Goodman came not at all thither, and that is more than you pretended to open.

Mr. Conyers. How many were there that were there at Dinner?

Crawford. About Eight.

Mr. Conyers. How many do you name that you know?

Crawford. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Friend, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, and Captain Porter, there were several others; two or three more, but I did not know their Names.

Mr. Conyers. Did you see Mr. Goodman come in at any Part of the Day afterwards?

Crawford. I do not know that Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Crawford, you say, that for an Hour after Dinner you were sometimes in the Room

Room and ſometimes out; when you were out of the Room, were you always in the Paſſage up to the Room?

Crawford. No, I was not.

Mr. Cowper. Could any Man come in or out without your ſeeing?

Crawford. I ſhould have known him above Stairs when I came in again.

Mr. Cowper. Why, you ſay, there are two or three above that you did not know.

Crawford. I knew them by Sight, if not their Names.

Mr. Cowper. Were you always in Sight then?

Crawford. No, Sir, I tell you I was up and down.

Sir B. Shower. Was there any Body came in before my Lord of Aylesbury went out, that is, any Body beſides thoſe that din'd there?

Crawford. No.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we are not contending now about a Man's coming up without his Knowledge; but whether any ſuch Man as Mr. Goodman came up and ſtaid there, during the Conſultation, and we inſiſt upon it; there was no Body there till my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook were gone, but thoſe that din'd there: Now I would ask a Queſtion again of him, Was there any Body but who din'd there, till my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Crawford. No, there was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why do you ſay ſo? How do you know that?

Crawford. I did not ſee any Body.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you attend upon other Rooms, as well as that, at the ſame Time?

Crawford. Yes, I did.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then how is it poſſible that he can ſwear that Mr. Goodman was not there?

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember when my Lord of Aylesbury and they went away?

Crawford. It was about Four o'Clock.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there in the Room when they went away?

Crawford. I went out with my Lord to the Coach.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ſee him come down Stairs; or did you go up Stairs then?

Crawford. I went up Stairs when the Coach was called.

Sir B. Shower. Was then any Body there but ſuch as din'd there?

Crawford. I did not ſee any Body there but thoſe that din'd there.

Mr. Cowper. But, my Lord, he does not know all that din'd there neither.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Crawford, you ſay my Lord of Aylesbury and others went away about Four o'Clock: Pray how long did the Reſt of the Company ſtay there?

Crawford. I cannot remember. They ſtaid there pretty late: It is a pretty while ago.

L. C. J. Treby. About what Hour did they part?

Crawford. I cannot remember what Time the Reſt went away: Our Houſe is fuller at Night than at Noon; and I waited upon other Companies. It was pretty late before they went away, that I am ſure.

L. C. J. Treby. But he cannot remember whether it were Five, or Six, or Twelve, that they went away, only he can remember the Hour of Four, that my Lord of Aylesbury and they went away.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Was it Light, or was it Dark when they went away?

Crawford. It was Dark.

L. C. J. Treby. Did you attend the Company after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone?

Crawford. I went up and down into that Company as I did into others.

L. C. J. Treby. Was you there ſeveral Times after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone?

Crawford. Yes, I was there once or twice after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone, I am ſure.

L. C. J. Treby. And did you never ſee Mr. Goodman there?

Crawford. No, I never ſaw Mr. Goodman in my Life, before I ſaw him on Saturday laſt.

Sir B. Shower. Which is Mr. Huntley?

Huntley. Here I am, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Pray recollect your ſelf, and tell my Lord and the Jury what you remember of any Company that were with Mr. Porter, at the King's Head, and who din'd there.

Huntley. My Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock.

Sir B. Shower. That was the Company, you ſay, that din'd there: Did Mr. Goodman dine there?

Huntley. No, Mr. Goodman did not dine there.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, recollect your ſelf: When did any of this Company part, or go away?

Huntley. My Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery went away about Four o'Clock.

Sir B. Shower. Sir, how do you know that?

Huntley. I went down Stairs after them; I was above Stairs when they parted from the Reſt of the Company.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray mind, Sir: Was Mr. Goodman there at that Time before they went away?

Huntley. No, he was not.

Sir B. Shower. Are you ſure of that, upon the Oath you have taken?

Huntley. Yes, I take it upon my Oath, he was not there.

Sir B. Shower. Did you attend them at Dinner?

Huntley. Yes, I did attend them at Dinner.

Sir B. Shower. Did you attend them all the While they were there?

Huntley. I was call'd frequently, and was in and out of the Room very much after Dinner.

Sir B. Shower. Do you think if a freſh Man had come in after Dinner, you ſhould not have known him?

Huntley. Yes, I ſhould have known him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, let me ask you one Queſtion. Was Mr. Goodman there at all that Day?

Huntley. That I don't know; I did not ſee him at all.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you attend upon any other Rooms that Day?

Huntley. No, I attended only upon that Company.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were you in the Room all the Time?

Huntley. No, I went up and down.

Mr.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Time did the laſt of the Company go away?

Huntley. It was about Darkiſh; it was pretty late to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did any Body come to thoſe Gentlemen after Dinner?

Huntley. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſee Goodman before now?

Huntley. Never in my Life to my Knowledge.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Did all the Company, but my Earl of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, ſtay 'till it was Duskiſh?

Huntley. That I don't know.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Did you know all the Company that was that Day at Dinner?

Huntley. I knew all but One.

Mr. J. Rokeby. And who was that?

Huntley. That was Mr. Charnock.

Mr. J Rokeby. And yet you can't tell whether there was any Body elſe that you did not know, how then can you tell that Goodman was not there?

Sir B. Shower. He did not know him at that Time, but he might remember him afterwards.

Mr Conyers. Did not the ſame Company uſe to meet at other Times, at your Houſe?

Huntley. Not to my Remembrance.

Mr. Conyers. How then came you, if they never had us'd to meet there, to know all theſe People's Names?

Huntley. I have ſeen Sir John Friend there, and Sir William Perkins.

Mr. Conyers. Was Sir John Friend there, or no?

Huntley. Yes, he was

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, he was the only Man that was not nam'd before: You did not name Sir John Friend before, as I heard: But pray, did you ever ſee Mr. Charnock there, but at that Time?

Huntley. No, I did not.

Mr Conyers. How came you to know it was Mr. Charnock?

Huntley. I knew very few of them before that Time; and I ask'd their Servants the Names of all thoſe Perſons that were there?

Mr. Conyers. Did you know Mr. Porter, pray?

Huntley. Not before that Time: I did ſee Mr. Porter, and I knew him again when I ſaw him, his Black told me his Name that Day.

Sir B. Shower. You, Huntley, I would ask you one Queſtion more; Was the Door ſhut or no?

Huntley. No, it was not.

Sir B. Shower. Did the Servants go up and down as they us'd to do?

Huntley. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Bartholomew would make it that there was no Conſultation at all.

Sir B. Shower. They were mad Folks if they would conſult at that Rate with the Door open. Pray call Mr. William. Cock. [Who was ſworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir John Freind has own'd it, that's dead.

Sir B. Shower. Sir John Freind's Confeſſion is nothing to the Priſoner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Serjeant Darnal did open, that the Confeſſion of thoſe that dy'd was an undeniable Proof of the Conſpiracy: But go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Pray, Mr. Cock, will you recollect yourſelf, about the Time when Captain Porter, and ſome other Gentlemen, din'd at your Houſe.

W. Cock. Yes, very well.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Pray, Sir, can you tell who din'd there at that Time?

W. Cock. There were my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Mr. Charnock, Captain Porter, and Mr. Cook.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Was that all the Company?

W. Cock. Yes, it was.

Mr. J. Rokeby. One of them ſaid there were Eight.

L. C. J. Treby. And he has nam'd Eight, Brother.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Can you remember when any of the Company went away, and who went away firſt?

Cock. My Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away in a Hackney-Coach; and their Servants were frequently in the Room, and waited afterwards in another Room, after that they had waited at Table at Dinner; and tho' the Door was ſhut, as it uſed to be when any Company is there, yet no Body was forbid to come there at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Goodman came there?

Cock. I never ſaw Mr. Goodman in my Life before to Day.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Did any Body come to this Company before my Lord of Aylesbury went away that did not Dine there?

Cock. I did not ſee any Body there at all: And my Lord of Aylesbury was about buying a Hogſhead of White-wine, but we could not agree about the Price: And when my Lord of Aylesbury went away, I went down with my Lord, and waited upon him to the Coach; and I told my Lord, I hoped he would buy the Wine ſtill. But he anſwered, he could not tell whether he ſhould or no.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Who elſe went with my Lord of Aylesbury?

Cock. My Lord Montgomery. I don't remember any Body elſe.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Did all the reſt of the Company go away at once?

Cock. Truly my Lord, I can't ſay they did.

Mr. J. Rokeby. By what time did the Reſt go away?

Cock. I believe it might be Eight or Nine o' Clock.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. You ſaw my Lord of Aylesbury when he parted: Was Mr. Goodman there then?

Cock. I did not ſee him.

Mr. B. Powis. Did Mr. Cook ſtay 'till the laſt?

Cock. That I can't tell truly.

Mr. B. Powis. I find they all Swear to Four o'Clock of my Lord Aylesbury's going, and go no further.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Queſtion or two: Did you ever ſee Mr. Goodman before now?

Cock. No, I do not remember I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you went into the Room after Dinner, did you look about the Room to ſee whether there were any new Company?

Cock.

Cock. I did look about the Room ſeveral Times, and ſo did my Servants, to ſee if there were any Thing wanting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that he was not there whilſt my Lord of Aylesbury ſtaid?

Cock. I do: And can take it upon my Oath, he was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then if you can, pray diſtinguiſh the Time when he came in.

Cock. I do not remember that ever I ſaw him in my Life before to Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why are you not as poſitive that he was not there at all, as that he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Cock. He might come in, and I not ſee him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Might he not as well come in before they went away, as after, to come in and you not ſee him?

Cock. No, I do not think he could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why do you think ſo?

Cock. Becauſe the Servants were all about, and they did not go to Dinner 'till Two o'Clock: And I believe thoſe Gentlemen that I named, came in a Quarter of an Hour's Time to Dinner.

Mr. Att. Gen. We do not ſay he came there before Dinner: But could he not come in after Dinner, before my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away, without your ſeeing him?

Cock. Yes, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Then heark ye, Sir, I would ask you one Queſtion: Did you ſee him, upon your Oath, or not?

Cock. No, I did not.

Sir B. Shower. Might not Mr. Goodman come in to them without your ſeeing him?

Cock. It is poſſible; but I don't think it was ſo.

Mr. J. Rokeby. How then can you be poſitive that he was not there 'till my Lord of Aylesbury went?

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ſay you may be poſitive he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went: Can you be as poſitive now, that he was not there before Mr. Cook went?

Cock. I do not know when Mr. Cook went.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How can you be then poſitive he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went?

Cock. There were no more than what dined there when my Lord of Aylesbury went away.

Mr. Conyers. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Queſtion: Were you in the Room at any Time after Dinner?

Mr. Conyers. Pray, Sir, How many Times after Dinner, were you there?

Cock. I believe half a dozen Times.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And yet you do confeſs that Mr. Goodman might come in after Dinner before my Lord of Aylesbury went, and you not ſee him?

Sir B. Shower. Ay, but he could not ſtay there without his ſeeing him, if he was ſo often in the Room: You don't take Mr. Cock's Evidence right.

Mr. Att. Gen. You named eight Perſons that dined at your Houſe: Did you know them all perſonally before that Day?

Cock. Yes, my Lord, the moſt of them at leaſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they uſe to meet at your Houſe?

Cock. Commonly Sir John Friend did once a Week. Mr. Charnock I knew when I was Drawer, and ſo I did Sir William Perkins: The Reſt I knew by hearing their Names.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know them before that Day; Sir, I ask you?

Cock. I had ſeen Captain Porter ſeveral Times before that Day; but I cannot ſay at my own Houſe.

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember the Treaty about the Hogſhead of White-wine?

Cock. Yes, Sir, very well.

Sir B. Shower. Were you by when my Lord of Aylesbury went away, and ſpoke with him about it?

Cock. Yes, I was; and told him, I hoped he would buy the Wine ſtill.

Sir B. Shower. Can you be poſitive that any Body was there before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, that could ſtay there any Time, and did not Dine there?

Cock. I believe not, Sir; for I came in half a dozen Times after Dinner, and I believe if I had heard Mr. Goodman's Name, or ſeen him there, I ſhould have remembred it; but I did not ſee any Body but thoſe that dined there.

Mr. Cowper. Where was you when my Lord of Aylesbury went away? Where did you meet him going away?

Cock. Upon the Stairs: Seeing my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery coming down, I met them.

Mr. Cowper. Where did you meet them? At the Middle, or the Top of the Stairs?

Cock. My Lord of Aylesbury was at the Top of the Stairs.

Mr. Cowper. Did you meet him juſt coming out of the Room?

Cock. Yes, Sir, I ſaw the Coach that was called for my Lord; and ſo I went up Stairs, and met my Lord at the Top of the Stairs coming down.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Now how can you be poſitive who was in the Room when he came out of the Room?

Cock. I went up in the Room after my Lord of Aylesbury went away.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long after my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Cock. It was preſently after.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, had you been in the Room?

Cock. I had been there juſt before.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Call Thomas Peachy. [Who appeared and was ſworn.]

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we ſhall prove that after the Plot broke out, and after Mr. Porter had made his Diſcovery, there was no Diſturbance of Mr. Cook 'till a good while after Charnock's Trial; and Mr. Cock was ſo far from being ſenſible, or conſcious of any Guilt, that he never abſconded, but continued for three Weeks in his Father's Houſe, where he was taken by a Meſſenger. Pray Mr. Peachy will you tell my Lord, and the Jury, where Mr. Cook was taken, and when, and by whom.

Peachy. He was taken at his Father's Houſe by a Meſſenger, about Seven o'Clock in the Morning.

Sir B. Shower. What Day of the Week was it he was taken?

Peachy.

Peachy. Upon a Sunday Morning, in his own Room, in his Father's Houſe, at Seven o'Clock in the Morning.

Sir B. Shower. Did People come to him as they uſed to do?

Peachy. Yes; and he went frequently abroad as he uſed to do, and did never abſcond from his Father's Houſe.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Pray ſwear Mr. Treganna. [Which was done.]

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Treganna, Pray do you remember how long after the Plot broke out did you ſee Mr. Cook?

Treganna. After Mr. Charnock's Trial, a Week, he was at my Chamber; after the Plot broke out, he was concerned in a Trial at Wincheſter Aſſizes, upon an Iſſue out of Chancery, Mr. Nicholls was the Clerk in Court, and went down to manage it at the Aſſizes; and Mr. Cook came to me a Day or two after Wincheſter Aſſizes was over, and ask'd me if I had any News from the Aſſizes? This was long after the Plot broke out: And I remember particularly, that I ſaw him twice after the Plot was diſcovered, at my Chamber.

Sir B. Shower. Swear Mr. Nicholls, [Which was done.]

Sir, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of Mr. Cook's appearing abroad after the Plot was diſcovered?

Mr. Nicholls. I was ſent down to the Trial: I was preſent, and did attend at two Trials indeed, and I ſuppoſe Mr. B. Powis may remember that I attended at two Trials at Wincheſter Aſſizes.

Mr. B. Powis. Poſſibly you might, Sir: I can't tell all the Attendance at the Aſſizes.

Mr. Nicholls. And after my Return from Wincheſter Aſſizes, Mr. Cook was with me ſeveral Days, both at my Office and Chamber, and at his Father's Office: And I remember particularly, that he threatened me that I was in Trouble when I was at Wincheſter, and therefore I remember it very well.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Nicholls, you know Mr. Cook very well; pray what are his Morals?

Mr. Nicholls. Upon Occaſion of the Cauſe in Chancery that went to Trial, I have had the Knowledge of Mr. Cook five or ſix Years; I always believ'd him to be as temperate a Man as ever I met with: I think in five Years Time I was not above once with him in a Tavern.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever hear him Swear?

Mr. Nicholls. No, never; nor vent a Curſe: I believe he drank as little as any Man, and was as godly a Man. I never heard him ſpeak a foul Word.

Sir B. Shower. How do you know that, Sir, that he was ſo godly a Man?

Mr. Nicholls. Upon Occaſion of this Cauſe, I was ſeveral Times at Sir Miles Cook's, and at Mr. Cook's Lodgings there, and we were to go about Buſineſs, and after he was dreſs'd, he has made me ſtay while he went into his Cloſet and ſaid his Prayers. And he told me further, that he never went out of his Father's Doors without ſaying his Prayers; and I was forc'd to ſtay at the Door while he perform'd his Devotions, as he told me, and I believe he did.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Now, my Lord, we will call ſome other Witneſſes to prove his good Affection to his Country, how he continually deſired Succeſs to the Fleet, and to the Army.

Sir B. Shower. So that really he had an Averſion to it.

Swear Mr. Hamond. [Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account what you know of the Priſoner, concerning his Judgment, and concerning his Morals?

Hamond. I have been for ſome Time acquainted with Mr. Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, and to the beſt of my Obſervation, I always took him to be a conſcientious Man, and I have heard him declare great Deteſtation of a French Force: And three or four Days before he was taken into Cuſtody, I ask'd him what he heard of Intelligence? He ſaid he heard what was in the publick Prints, and heard no more, and knew no more; and he had a great Abhorrence of the Conſpiracy, and thought it a very monſtrous Thing. I never heard him ſpeak a diſreſpectful Word of the King's Perſon or Government in my Life. And I ſay again, I have heard him ſeveral Times declare, in common Converſation, that he had an Averſion to French Power, and he had a dread of it.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. What have you heard him ſay about our Fleet, or Army?

Hamond. My Lord, I have heard him very much wiſh Proſperity and Succeſs to our Fleet.

Mr. J. Rokeby. What Fleet, pray Sir.

Hamond. To our Fleet, King William's Fleet againſt the French. Things to this Purpoſe he frequently ſaid.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Then Swear Mrs. Hunt, [Which was done.] but ſhe was not examined.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we leave it here. But I muſt beg the Favour, that if they give any new Evidence, and there be Occaſion, we may have Liberty to anſwer it. And I have an Obſervation or two to make when the Evidence is over.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if they have done with their Evidence, I beg leave to obſerve, that there is ſomething ariſes upon that Evidence, that will give us occaſion to call a Witneſs or two more. My Lord, the firſt Witneſs which they call'd was Edwards, and he is in Cuſtody upon Suſpicion of High-Treaſon in Newgate, and he gives an Account of ſome Diſcourſe that he had with Mr. Goodman; and for that, it will be neceſſary for us to call Mr. Porter again and Mr. de la Rue, to ſhew that this Edwards, the Witneſs, as he is committed for Suſpicion of High-Treaſon, ſo he was in the Conſpiracy for the Aſſaſſination; he was one in the Liſt that was brought back by Cranburne from Mr. Charnock to Captain Porter, as one of Charnock's Men, and he is in Cuſtody for it. Then as to the other Matter, they have called three Witneſſes to prove, That Mr. Goodman was not in this Place at this Time. The Counſel indeed opened it, that he was not at the Tavern till after my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery were gone away; but their Evidence goes further, That he was not there at all: And the Maſter of the Houſe ſays, he was not there to his Knowledge at any Time. So that if their Evidence prove any Thing, they prove that he was not there at all; they do not remember that they ſaw him there: So that the Queſtion will be, whether Mr. Goodman was there at that Time, and it will be neceſſary to call Mr. Goodman again, and Mr. Porter, to confront theſe Witneſſes, who will tell you when he came in: And particularly as to my Lord of Aylesbury, that he went with him to the Stairs-head, and my Lord would not let him go further, but he went back again when my Lord of Aylesbury went down Stairs. We will begin with the Witneſſes, as to this Edwards.

Swear Mr. De la Rue. [Which was done.]

Mr. Conyers. Mr. De la Rue, Pray do you know Mr. Edwards that was here?

Mr. De la Rue. He goes by ſeveral Names; I know him by the Name of Douglas: And laſt Monday I came into the Preſs-Yard, and ſaluted him by the Name of Douglas, and he ſaid he had taken his own Name again, by which he was known at St. Germains, and that was Edwards or Richards, as I remember, or ſome ſuch Name.

Mr. Conyers. When was he at St. Germains?

Mr. De la Rue. About three or four Years ago.

Mr. Conyers. Pray look upon him, ſee if you know him.

Mr. De la Rue. I know him very well, there he ſtands, that is the Perſon in the black Wig; he was reputed at St. Germains to be my late Lord Dundee's Chaplain.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Name did he go by at St. Germains?

Mr. De la Rue. I can't very well tell: But he ſaid he had taken his own Name again; and I think he ſaid it was Edwards or Richards.

Mr. Conyers. Did he go formerly by the Name of Douglas?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, here in England: Mr. Porter knew him to go by that Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. What elſe do you know of him?

Mr. De la Rue. The Liſt that Mr. Cranburne carried from Mr. Porter to Mr. Charnock, and which he brought back again from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter, had in it, among the other Names, the Name of Douglas, which I underſtood to be that Gentleman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he go by that Name at that Time?

Mr. De la Rue, Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray repeat that again, Sir, that we may underſtand it, and ſee whether it be Evidence.

Mr. De la Rue. Why, Sir, the Liſt that Mr. Cranburne brought from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter, at the Foot of the Liſt which Mr. Porter had ſent to him, there were other Names written, as I believe, in Mr. Charnock's Hand, and among thoſe Names there was the Name of Douglas, which I underſtood to be this Mr. Edwards, as he calls himſelf. And moreover, when Mr. Porter went out of Town, going to Doctors Commons, I called at Mr. Charnock's, and he had a great deal of Company with him, four or five Troopers, and among the reſt this Edwards or Douglas was there ſitting by him. Here is a Gentleman that I ſee upon the Bench, I think he is a Scotchman, that knew him at St. Germains as well as I. I think his Name is Mackdonnel.

Mr. J. Rokeby. What Countryman did you take this Edwards to be?

Mr. De la Rue. A Scotchman, and Chaplain to my Lord Dundee that was killed in Scotland.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Did you ſee this Gentleman in France, Sir?

Mackdonnel. I never was in France in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can't ask him the Queſtion: You know it tends to make him either accuſe or excuſe himſelf of a Crime. Pray call Mr. Porter again. But in the mean time, till he comes, we'll examine Mr. Goodman, becauſe he is here. Mr. Goodman you were by, and heard what theſe Drawers ſaid concerning your being at the Old-King's-Head in Leaden-hall-ſtreet that Day. Pray, give an Account when you came in, whether you ſaw my Lord of Aylesbury, and what paſſed between you at my Lord of Aylesbury's going away?

Mr. Goodman. Mr. Porter brought me up; and when I came in they were all ſitting; and after Salutation I ſat down: And when they had conſulted ſome Time, they came to a Reſolution, as I have told you already. The Fellows are ſo far in the Right of it, that my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away firſt; for I took my Leave of them at the Head of the Stairs. Says my Lord of Aylesbury to me, Pray avoid Ceremony, we will go away privately as we came, in a Hackney-Coach. And as to the Maſter of the Houſe, who ſays, he does not know me, I have dined ſeveral Times there; four or five Times with Sir John Friend: And one particular Day above all the reſt, I remember I was not well, and I went down Stairs to the Bar, and ſaid, I pray, can you get me a little Brandy. He ſaid, yes; he would help me to ſome of the beſt in England. And he brought me up ſome which I liked very well; and thinking he had a Quantity of it, I ask'd him what I ſhould give him a Gallon for a Parcel. But he ſaid, he had but a little: And I am ſure he has ſeen me there five or ſix Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then ſet up that Maſter of the Houſe, Cock, again. [Which was done.]

Come, Sir, You hear what Mr. Goodman has Sworn, and mind it; you are upon your Oath. You ſaid juſt now, that you never ſaw Mr. Goodman before.

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir: I don't know that ever I ſaw him before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember nothing of his being with Sir John Friend at your Houſe?

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nay, you are upon your Oath. Nor do you know nothing of your giving of him Brandy?

Cock. No, upon my Oath, I do not remember any ſuch Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is a very ſafe Way of Swearing, I profeſs.

Mr. Conyers. He remembers the particular Time when he was Sick, and you offer'd to ſell him ſome Brandy.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, he ask'd him what he ſhould give him for it a Gallon. But, Mr. Cock, did you ever ſee Goodman in your Houſe ſince my Lord of Aylesbury and they were there?

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir, I did not: And I never had but two Gallons of Brandy in my Life at a Time: And I never had any Cask, or any Thing of that Nature, to ſell any out of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who uſed to be with Sir John Friend at your Houſe?

Cock. There uſed to be Mr. Richardſon, and Juſtice Caſh, and Col. Caſh.

Mr. Goodman. Mr. Richardſon was there that Day: I could almoſt have remembred the particular Day, but I cannot be poſitive; only we were were in the same Room where the Consultation was, at the further Part of the Room.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Your, Friend, the Master of the House, you hear what Mr. Goodman says: He says he was with Sir John Friend at your House, and being not well he ask'd for some Brandy, and you told him, you'd give him some of the best in England. And he propounded to you then to sell him some of it; but it seems there was no Bargain made. Do you remember any such Thing of one that was with Sir John Friend, that spoke of buying of Brandy when he was sick?

Cock. No, upon my Word I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then set up Mr. Porter. [Who stood up.] Pray, Mr. Porter, look upon that Man in the Black Peruke; what Name did he use to go by?

Mr. Porter. He used to go by the Name of Edwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had he any other Name?

Mr. Porter. Yes, Douglas.

Mr. Att. Gen. He has so many Names, that we don't know which is his true Name. Mr. Porter, pray what else do you know of him touching his being concerned in the Conspiracy?

Mr. Porter. I know not any thing of my own Knowledge; but his Name was put down in the List that Mr. Charnock sent me of his Men, and Mr. De La Rue read his Name there.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Porter, you were a Witness upon the Trials of Sir John Friend, and Sir William Perkins; did you give Evidence that Mr. Goodman was in the Room at the same Time when the Consultation was?

Mr. Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, you hear that these People have sworn, that Mr. Goodman did not come till my Lord of Aylesbury went away; nay, indeed, that he was not there at all.

Mr. Porter. My Lord, upon my Oath he was there before my Lord Aylesbury went away, and Mr. Goodman bowed, and took leave of my Lord as he went out of Doors.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time did my Lord of Aylesbury go away?

Mr. Porter. It was about an Hour and a Half, or two Hours after Dinner, and he was in the Room when my Lord went away, for he took his Leave of him at the Door.

Mr. Cowper. Do you remember the Manner of Mr. Goodman's coming in?

Mr. Porter. Mr. Goodman sent up his Name to me, and I told the Company, and promis'd for him, that he was a very honest Man, and much in King James's Interest; and then with their Consent I went down and brought him up.

Mr. J. Powell. How long time do you think there was between Mr. Goodman's coming in, and my Lord of Aylesbury's going away?

Mr. Porter. I cannot tell that, I do not remember exactly how long it was.

Mr. J. Powell. Was it a quarter of an Hour, or half an Hour?

Mr. Porter. A great deal longer, for we had discoursed of the whole Business after Mr. Goodman came into the Room.

Mr. Conyers. How long were they there after Mr. Goodman came in?

Mr. Porter. It was very near two Hours after he came in, before they went away; they did not go away till Six o'clock, and he came in at Four as near as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done.

Sir B. Shower. Then I beg the Favour of a Word or two, my Lord. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the Prisoner at the Bar, and I must beg your Lordship's Patience, and your Favour, Gentlemen, to make a few Observations upon the Evidence that has been given; for we humbly insist upon it in point of Law, that here is not sufficient Evidence before you to convict the Prisoner. You are, Gentlemen, to have respect and regard to your Consciences and the Oaths which you have now taken, to give a Verdict, and make true Deliverance between the King, and the Prisoner; you are not to go according to your own private Opinions, nor according to publick Fame, nor according to common Report, nor according to the Verdicts in other Cases, nor according to the Confessions or Dying Speeches of Criminals who have been Executed, whether made by themselves, or by others for them, but you are to go by the Testimony of Credible Witnesses, and if you have not the Evidence of two Credible Witnesses before you, my Lords the Judges will inform you how the Law stands. That by the Statute of Edward the Sixth, and the new Statute for Trials of Treasons, there must be two Witnesses to prove the Prisoner guilty of the Overt-Act of the Treason that is laid in the Indictment; and whether there have been two Credible Witnesses produced before you, is the Question that you are to consider upon your Oath and Conscience; that is, whether you are satisfied here be two such as the Law requires. The Question is not meerly whether Mr. Cook be guilty, but whether in your Consciences he be legally proved guilty; whether there be Evidence to satisfy your Consciences, according to the Laws of the Land, that he is guilty; and we insist there is not; and therefore I beg leave to recapitulate what has been sworn against him, that we may see how far it reaches, and wherein it is defective.

Gentlemen, Mr. Porter he swears that about the Beginning or Middle of May, he cannot tell which, there was this Meeting at the Old-King's-Head Tavern in Leaden-Hall-street; in which, I wou'd observe to you, that he confines himself to a certain Month; the Reason is very plain, and therefore I ask'd him whether it was not in April; for if he had said it had been then, there had been no danger to the Prisoner, because of the Act of Indemnity, therefore he was careful to fix it in May; and he would not lay it in June, for the Tenth of June is a famous Day; and then, or soon after Newgate had him; he was confined there for a Riot on that Day, and so they have restrained it to a Month, and the only Month that he is capable of swearing to, as to any Act done the last Year till they came in January to the Assassination Plot, which the Prisoner is not accused to have had any Concern in; but it shou'd seem he cannot tell what Day of the Week, or of the Month, but about the Beginning or the Middle of May Eight Persons dined at this Place, and then after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in, and they discoursed about this Matter.

First, Gentlemen, we insist upon it, that it is very improbable that English Protestants of pious Conversation and good Morals, should agree, as he says, to send such a Message to the late King, to invite over a French Popish Force; we may eaſily ſee the horrid and miſchievous Conſequences that wou'd have followed ſuch a Practice, ſuch as muſt affect every Engliſhman with a Concern, ſo that it is improbable a Man of Virtue and Piety cou'd engage in ſuch an Enterprize; and if it be improbable, you will never believe it, unleſs the Conviction or Proof be irreſiſtible: And if you have any other Reaſons to diſtruſt this Man's Truth, then we hope you will go upon the Side of Probability; and not let popular Prejudice, common Fame, or any Thing elſe but legal and undeniable Evidence have the Aſcendant over you. If you are not ſatisfied that Mr. Cook did aſſent (as from the Character of the Man it is not probable he ſhou'd) to ſend Charnock into France, to perſuade King Lewis and King James to ſend Ten Thouſand Men to invade our Country, then he is not guilty.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, he is not guilty we ſay in the Eye of the Law, if they have not two Witneſſes; and for that we ſay you have but one, or but one that is to be believed; and if you have but one that is to be believed, that in Law is but one, and conſequently my Client is not guilty; ſo the King's Counſel agree, that if there be but one Witneſs, he cannot be convicted, the Law is plain in the Caſe. Now to make it out that here is but one Witneſs at moſt, we have offered you ſeveral Objections, and made them out by Evidence, againſt the Teſtimony of Mr. Goodman; that he is not a Perſon fit to be believed; and if he be out of the Caſe, then does Mr. Porter's ſtand alone, and all will amount but to one Witneſs, ſuppoſe it ſhou'd be granted that his Teſtimony were true.

Firſt, We have read a Record of Conviction againſt him, of a Crime, one of the Greateſt next unto Treaſon, that is known in our or any other Law. That he hired a Man to poiſon two Dukes, Branches of a Noble Family, to which he had ſuch great Obligations, as all Mankind do know, and he himſelf cannot but acknowledge; and if there were not that Aggravation in it, of his Obligations to that Family, yet to lie in wait to Murder and Poiſon, is ſuch an Offence as any Age can ſeldom ſhew the like. And the Objection is not ſo very eaſily anſwered as they would have it; nor can it be ſo ſoon paſſed over as they think, by ſaying He is a Witneſs of a Confederacy with which the Priſoner is accuſed, a Crime greater than the Thing objected. It is true, none can bear Teſtimony in ſuch a Buſineſs, but he that is a Party: But, we ſay, if theſe Perſons who come and ſet up themſelves for Witneſſes, were not probi Homines, and did not appear to be Perſons of indifferent Credit between Man and Man, and did not ſtand impartial in the Eye of the World in other reſpects before, then they are not to be believed, as to what they charge themſelves and others to be guilty of. Now, if Mr. Goodman ſtand convicted of ſuch an Offence as this that is alledged againſt him, tho' he is pardoned by the Act of Parliament, or Satisfaction acknowledged upon the Record, though it be even the very next Term, yet that does not purge him from the Infamy and Diſgrace, or from the Imputation of being concerned in ſo Villainous a Deſign. It is impoſſible that he ſhould be a good Witneſs that wou'd be engaged in ſuch a Matter, eſpecially when we have thoſe various Witneſſes, and ſuch a concurring Teſtimony, that what he has Sworn is abſolutely falſe.

Gentlemen, If there were nothing but his own Teſtimony in the Caſe, there would be no Queſtion at all in it: And as to Capt. Porter's Teſtimony about his being there, we have produced three Witneſſes, who, if they be of Credit, then Mr. Goodman is not to be believed, but is falſified throughout; for it is not the Queſtion, whether Mr. Cook went away before the Conſultation and the Reſolution; for if my Lord of Aylesbury, or my Lord Montgomery went away, Mr. Goodman is falſified in that, and conſequently you ought not to believe him in the reſt; for he actually ſwears, that my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and thoſe other Gentlemen, were all preſent, and at the Conſult, and did conſent and agree to the Reſolution, by uſing theſe Words; Yes, you may; Yes, you may. Now, we ſay, there are three Witneſſes that ſwear, That my Lord of Aylesbury was gone before he came there. I do not care whether he came there, or not; that is not material: For if there were no Body there when my Lord of Aylesbury was there but thoſe that were at Dinner, then Mr. Goodman was not there at any ſuch Conſultation, as they would inſinuate was at that Time, in that Place, and that Company.

My Lord, we have proved to you Mr. Cook's Abhorrence and Declaration, which, we think, ought to go a great Way in Satisfaction of his Innocence, at leaſt to induce you to the favourable Side; for, Gentlemen, you are not brought hither to Convict a Man only, but to Try and Examine him, and it is your Duty to Acquit, as well as Convict, according as the Evidence ſtands: It is your Duty to go according to your Conſciences, and to declare whether he be Guilty or Not Guilty, upon the Evidence you have before you: You are to examine the Truth of the Fact in all its Circumſtances, and upon your own Conſciences to declare, whether he is Guilty or Not Guilty; now we propoſe it to you, and ſubmit it to your Conſciences, that here are three Witneſſes, that ſpeak upon their Oaths, againſt whom there is no Objection, that ever they were guilty of lying in wait to Poiſon any Body, nor in any Plot for an Aſſaſſination, nor any Conſpiracy for inviting an Invaſion from France, nor any other Objection againſt them, but they ſtand upright in the Face of the World, and they three ſwear, That he was not there at that Time. The Anſwer that we expect, is, That he might be there, and they not ſee him: And becauſe it was poſſible he might be there, and they not ſee him, therefore it is no Evidence: But, my Lord, becauſe it may be ſo, is no Evidence that it is ſo; that's no Objection; for you will take it as the Nature of the Thing will afford, and the Matter itſelf allow. Now there can be no better Evidence than this; that they went in and out continually; the Drawers, and the Maſter of the Houſe five or ſix Times himſelf, were in the Room, and they ſay, there was no ſuch Perſon there. Why then it is very improbable, if not impoſſible, that any ſuch Man ſhould be there. The one ſwears, he came down from my Lord of Aylesbury juſt before he went away; and another ſays, he followed him out of the Room; and the Maſter ſays, that he met my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-head. All which falſifies Mr. Goodman in that Particular, that he was with my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-head, when he went away.

Theſe

Theſe are incompatible; and if we falſify him in any one Thing, he is not to be believed in any other.

Then, Gentlemen, we offer to your Conſideration an Anſwer to another Objection: They ſay theſe Witneſſes ſeem to ſwear, that he was not there at all. We are not concerned whether he was there afterwards, or not: If you are ſatisfied, that he was not there, as our Witneſſes ſwear, while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, that's enough. But then they make an Objection, how comes the Maſter of the Houſe to remember my Lord of Aylesbury's going away, more than any Body elſe? Gentlemen, you know the Nature of the Thing ſhews, not only that it was more probable the Maſter of the Houſe ſhould make his Obſervations near the Time of Dinner, rather than afterwards at Night, when there is more Hurry: But it is more probable he ſhould take notice of it from the Quality of the Perſon, from the Diſcourſe he had with him about the White-wine, which was a good Medium to refreſh a Vintner's Memory, it being a Matter in his own Trade, and that might make him call it to mind.

Therefore, Gentlemen, we think theſe three Witneſſes ſtand free and clear in their Credit; and being ſo, are inconſiſtent with Mr. Goodman's Teſtimony; and we hope, in favour of Life, the Credit inclines on their Side, eſpecially when the Queſtion is, whether a Man ſhall be executed for Treaſon who never fled for it, who was never charg'd with any Treaſon or Treaſonable Practices before; nay, not ſo much as with any particular Crime or Immorality: And whether three Witneſſes ſhall be believed, againſt whom there is no Objection, rather than Two, againſt One of which there are ſuch Objections.

My Lord, we are not now debating or attacking the Evidence of the Plot, or arraigning the former Judgments againſt the Conſpirators that have ſuffer'd; but, Gentlemen, we are putting you now upon a ſerious Enquiry, (as God and your own Conſciences ſhall incline you) whether our Client be guilty or not guilty upon this Evidence; that is, whether Mr. Goodman ſwears true, or not. We hope that we have given you ſufficient Satisfaction, that upon Mr. Goodman's Part the Evidence is inſufficient; and we hope you will accordingly find our Client not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Mr. Cook have any thing to ſay himſelf, I deſire he may ſay it now, before we begin.

Sir B. Shower. No, pray go on, Sir.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Cook, wou'd you ſay any Thing your ſelf, before the King's Counſel ſum up?

Cook. The little I have to ſay, my Lord, I'll ſpeak now, or by and by, which you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Treby. You muſt do it now, becauſe after they have ſumm'd up, there is nothing more to be ſaid by you.

Cook. My Lord, I thank God, I have lived, a Life, I hope, as good as any Man, and have often received the Bleſſed Sacrament; I have done it conſtantly, and ſhall do it ſpeedily, by the Grace of God, as ſoon as I can have a Miniſter come to adminiſter it to me. I did offer it to my own Father, when he came to me, and told me, If I would confeſs this Thing I ſhould not come to Trial: I told my Father, I would not for Ten Thouſand Worlds take away the Blood of an innocent Man to ſave mine. I thank God, I am in a very good Way to die; I have, for at leaſt this laſt Year, frequently received the Bleſſed Sacrament; and how I have liv'd, every Body in the Court that knows me can tell my Life and Converſation has been as regular as any Man's, and I am as ready to die to-morrow, if Occaſion was for it (I thank God) as any one; I will receive the Bleſſed Sacrament upon it; and it is not for Life that I would do any Thing that is wrong or unjuſt: I do love my Nation, and I love the Quiet of the Nation; I never was for diſturbing the Government that now is; and I ever was againſt Foreign Forces or an Invaſion, for I never thought of one, or heard of it, but with Abhorrence and Deteſtation: And I do aſſure faithfully, I ſhou'd be ſorry to diſparage Mr. Porter's Evidence, becauſe I would have every Body that was concerned in that Horrid and Barbarous Crime to ſuffer; in God's Name, let them all ſuffer. I thank God, I never knew any Thing of it, nor of a French Invaſion: And I would ſay more of it, but that I would not hurt Mr. Porter's Evidence, whoſe Diſcovery of that bloody Buſineſs has done ſo much Service. As for Mr. Goodman, as I hope to receive the Bleſſed Sacrament, and may I periſh when I do it, if I ſpeak an Untruth; I would not for any Thing, no, not for the Good of my Country, have innocent Blood ſpilt; I would lay down my Life to ſerve my Country, but I would not have my Blood be lightly loſt; and how little a Man ſoever I am, my Blood will lie as heavy upon the Nation as any the weightieſt Man's can do. I do not doubt your Lordſhip's Juſtice, nor the Jury's, but I pray, my Lord, obſerve; though it is uſual not to own Things at the Bar, yet I do not make this Denial as of Courſe, but out of Truth; and I aſſure you, in the Preſence of the whole Court, if I ſhould ſuffer for this, I muſt at my laſt Moments either confeſs or deny ſomething: And, I ſay, I do aſſure, in the Preſence of the whole Court, and I will take the Bleſſed Sacrament upon it, that I muſt, at my Death, deny this whole Matter, and that ever I did ſee Mr. Goodman at all there; I do not think I ſaw him; I do not remember I ſaw Mr. Goodman at all, except once in Germain-ſtreet, when the Coach broke, and that muſt be but in paſſing by neither, and he would have hurt or kill'd the Coachman, and we kept him from it; and I walk'd with him half the Length of Germain-ſtreet, before I knew who Mr. Goodman was. If ever a one of thoſe Gentlemen, that are Men of Credit and Honour, can ſay I was any ways ſo inclined, or that they ever ſaw me, or knew me, that I ever bought a Piſtol or a Blunderbuſs, or the like, may God ſink and ſtrike me dead; and the Bleſſed Sacrament, which I intend to receive, be my Curſe and Damnation, if I knew of King James's Coming, till after the whole Town rang of it: I had no Hand in the Invaſion; and, beſides my Abhorrence of introducing foreign Force, I deſire your Lordſhip and the Jury to conſider the Circumſtances of my Caſe, that I had but a very ſmall Allowance from my Father, and therefore it is not probable I ſhou'd take upon me to join with my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, and thoſe other Gentlemen, to ſend Mr. Charnock into France, to invite over a Foreign Force: And I call God to witneſs I had no Hand in it. I beg your Lordſhip's ſhip's Pardon for all this Trouble; I would not hurt Mr. Porter's Evidence, for the Reaſons that I have told you; but this is for my Life, and I don't ſo much value that as I do Truth and Sincerity; and I ſhall receive the Bleſſed Sacrament, if I die, that I never did do ſo. Indeed I never did take the Oaths, nor did I ever refuſe them, becauſe they were never offer'd me; but I wou'd take the Oaths now if they were offer'd me. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for this Trouble.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you done, Sir? Have you ſaid all you would ſay?

Cook. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, you Gentlemen of the King's Counſel, will you conclude?

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King, and I could have been very glad that this Gentleman's Defence that he has made had been ſtronger than in Truth it has been: And I ſhould have been very glad too that his Counſel had been able to have made it better for him; but that he and they may be ſatisfied as much is done as the Caſe will bear; they have had all the Liberty in the World to make his Defence they could deſire, nay, more than in Strictneſs could be allowed them.

Gentlemen, our Evidence is very poſitive againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, and for the higheſt Crime that the King's Subjects can be guilty of, by the Confeſſion of the Gentleman himſelf and of his Counſel. We have, I ſay, two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; they ſay they are not legal ones: I muſt own, if we have not two Witneſſes, we have never an one; for whatſoever falſifies Mr. Goodman's Teſtimony, falſifies whatſoever Mr. Porter has ſworn. Now, the Evidence that Mr. Porter has given againſt him, is this: He ſays, There was to be a Meeting at the King's-Head-Tavern in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet, and there they conſulted of the Methods to bring back King James hither; and it was thought the beſt Way to ſend to King James to invite the French King to ſend 1000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot, to Land here in this Kingdom, where they would meet him with 2000 Horſe. They pitch'd upon a very proper Meſſenger, Mr. Charnock, a Perſon that has been attainted, and has ſuffer'd for High-Treaſon; he was to be ſent into France upon this Errand; Mr. Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, was one of the Perſons that were there at that Time, and he was conſenting to this Meſſage; and Mr. Porter gives you a particular Token relating to the Priſoner, for he remembers the Priſoner did kneel upon the Chair, and lean'd his Elbows upon the Table when he conſented.

Mr. Porter goes further, and tells you, That Mr. Charnock would have another Meeting, to know and ſee whether all the Company were of the ſame Mind they had been; and, That afterwards they met at Mrs. Mountjoy's Houſe, and there the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, and conſenting to the ſame Thing: Thereupon Mr. Charnock went into France, and came back again, and ſaid, The French King could not ſpare ſo much Force. Mr. Goodman gives the ſame Evidence that Mr. Porter had given: It's true, he was not at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern, but he tells you withal, he ſpoke with Mr. Charnock when he came back from France, and Charnock return'd him the ſame Anſwer he did to Mr. Porter, That the French King could not ſpare ſo many Forces. This is the Evidence in ſhort, Gentlemen, that is given againſt the Priſoner; and if this Evidence be true, then is he guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Againſt theſe Witneſſes they have produced, firſt, a Record of Conviction againſt Mr. Goodman, and that was for Hiring one Amydei to poiſon the Duke of Grafton, and the Duke of Northumberland: They have produc'd the Record, whereby it appears, he was Convicted, and Fined 1000 l. and was to find Security for his good Behaviour during Life; and he was to lie in Priſon till the Fine paid, and Security given: But it happens, in that very Record it appears there was Satisfaction acknowledg'd upon that, even the very next Term; and that gives a great deal of Suſpicion to believe, that the Evidence that was given was not much credited; for, tho' the Counſel for the Priſoner has ſaid, that it was the Payment of the 1000 l. that was the Satisfaction; no, it is not ſo, it is a Satisfaction of the whole Judgment, for finding Security as well as the Fine. They ſay he was not able to pay the Fine, and there is nothing appears of the other Parts of the Judgment being complied with, but the whole Judgment is ſet aſide.

But all this does not make a Man no Legal Witneſs; if they thought this Conviction tended to ſet aſide his Evidence, they would have produc'd it at another Part of the Trial, than where they did: That is, when Mr. Goodman was firſt call'd to be ſworn as a Witneſs, then they ſhould have produced this Record, and ſaid he had been no Witneſs: But they knew well enough that that was no Exception againſt the Legality of his Evidence, but tends only to his Credit, and nothing elſe. Now, tho' it be a black Crime to endeavour to poiſon another, yet that does not totally deſtroy any Man's Credit; if it did, then the other Gentleman, Mr. Porter, has confeſs'd himſelf guilty of a greater Crime than that for which Mr. Goodman is convicted by this Record; for he owns himſelf one that was in that Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King. And Mr. Goodman owns himſelf too guilty of a greater Crime then what's objected to him, which is that of High-Treaſon; and, I hope, if he may be believed, when he owns himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon, which is a greater Crime than Poiſoning a private Subject; or guilty of ſuch a Deſign as the Aſſaſſination of the King, which Mr. Porter has charg'd himſelf with, and notwithſtanding which, they have not offer'd that as an Exception againſt Mr. Porter's Evidence, (for they very well know, his Evidence has been receiv'd, and credited:) Mr. Goodman may be credited, tho' guilty of the Crime objected to him: And the conſtant Practice in all Trials of this kind hath been, that it does not take away the Witneſs's Evidence, however it affects his Credit, which in this Caſe is ſupported by the concurrent Teſtimony of Mr. Porter. And ſo then, I ſay, we have two legal Witneſſes (notwithſtanding all the Exceptions) to prove Mr. Cook guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Then they go on further, and produce other Witneſſes: Firſt, they produce one Edwards, a Perſon that is committed for High-Treaſon himſelf, and under Suſpicion of his being to be one of thoſe that was to have a Hand in the Aſſaſſination; but his Evidence goes no further, than that Mr. Goodman told him he was to be a Witneſs againſt againſt Mr. Cook, and either he the Witneſs, or Mr. Cook muſt ſuffer; and, That it was a fooliſh thing to be hang'd. My Lord, there is nothing at all in this Matter that takes away Mr. Goodman's Evidence: It is very plain Mr. Goodman had forfeited his Life, and muſt do ſomething to ſave it, and I think he could not do a better Service to entitle himſelf to the King's Mercy, than to diſcover thoſe that were equally guilty with himſelf. 'Twas his Duty to have done it, if he had not been in Danger; and if he hath done no more then what was his Duty, I hope that is no Objection againſt his Teſtimony.

They have produced likewiſe a Drawer of the King's-Head Tavern, one Crawford, and he ſays, he attended in this Room while this Company was there. But then he goes a little further than the Counſel, or the Priſoner would have had him; for they called him to prove that Mr. Goodman was not there when my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook were there. But when the Drawer comes, he knows nothing of Mr. Goodman's being there at all: He ſays, Mr. Cook was there, but not Mr. Goodman; and yet he does acknowledge, that Mr. Goodman might be there, and he not ſee him come up. He acknowledges he attended upon other Company as well as this; ſo that it is plain in the Nature of the Thing, and his own Confeſſion, that Goodman might be there. This cannot take off the poſitive Evidence of Mr. Goodman, and Mr. Porter, who both ſwear, That Goodman was there.

But then they produce another Drawer, and that is one Huntly; and he gives the ſame Account, only indeed he ſays; He was there all the while they were at Dinner: But that is nothing, becauſe it is acknowledg'd both by Mr. Porter, and Mr. Goodman, That he was not there at Dinner-Time, but he might be there after Dinner, and yet Huntly could not ſee him at Dinner: He tells you likewiſe, he paſs'd up, and down in the Room afterwards, and did not ſee Mr. Goodman there; but yet he might be there, and he not ſee him.

Then they produce the Maſter of the Houſe, and he gives much the ſame Evidence in Effect which his Servants do, That he did not ſee Mr. Goodman there all the while; but he ſays ſomething that is a little incredible; He can be poſitive that Mr. Goodman was not there while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, but he cannot be poſitive he was not there afterwards. He tells you, he met my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery upon the middle of the Stairs coming down, and he is ſure Mr. Goodman was not in the Room at that Time. Now, is that poſſible that he can be ſure of that, when he owns, (and cannot but own) That Mr. Goodman might go into the Room, and he not ſee him: So that he has made a ſtrain in his Evidence that it is very little to be credited, which was not deſigned ſo much for the Advantage of Mr. Cook as for the Advantage of ſomebody elſe: And, in itſelf, it is almoſt an impoſſible Thing that it ſhould be true, by what he offers as the Reaſon of his Evidence.

But then, Gentlemen, you are to conſider, that all theſe three Witneſſes, if they ſwear true, do falſify not only Mr. Goodman, who ſwears, That he was there; but they likewiſe falſify the Evidence of Mr. Porter, and for that Reaſon I ask'd Mr. Porter the Queſtion, Whether he did not give the ſame Evidence againſt Sir John Friend? And if what he ſwears now be not true, neither was it true when Sir John Friend was try'd, for he was the only Witneſs at that Time againſt Sir John Friend, for this Meting; and therefore theſe Mens Teſtimony tends to overthrow both Witneſſes as well as one: And I muſt tell you, that if Mr. Goodman be not a legal Witneſs, becauſe he has ſworn a Thing that is not true, then Mr. Porter is not a good Witneſs, who has ſworn the ſame Thing, viz. That Mr. Goodman was there; and then you ought to acquit the Priſoner, becauſe there is no Witneſs againſt him at Law; for there is the ſame Evidence againſt Mr. Porter, that there is againſt Mr. Goodman as to this Matter.

Then, Gentlemen, as for the Character of Mr. Cook, they ſay he is a good Engliſh Proteſtant, I hope he is ſo; but it is plain, that Religion does not vary the Caſe: 'Tis within the reach of every Man's Memory that is here, that the ſame Things have fallen upon other Gentlemen that have had the ſame Character, particularly Sir John Friend, and Sir William Perkins, who both ſaid the ſame Things, in the ſame Place, That they were True Proteſtants of the Church of England. But that is no Manner of Evidence that will be Weight againſt poſitive Oaths.

Now, Gentlemen, it is fit likewiſe you ſhould reflect upon another Thing: What is it that ſhould engage Mr. Porter, and Mr. Goodman, or invite either of thoſe two Gentlemen to give a falſe Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar? It does not appear that there was any Injury done by him to them, to provoke them to it; ſo that it could be for nothing but for the ſake of Truth.

It has been further ſaid on the behalf of Mr. Cook, That he abhorred the French, and any Invaſion upon his Country, and the like: It is a Matter that is eaſily ſaid; and it has been ſaid by others that have been in the ſame Place where he now ſtands; That they hated all Plots, and they might puniſh them if ever they caught them. But theſe are only Sayings, and nothing elſe. If there can be any Conſtructions made of the Evidence given by theſe two Witneſſes, that does not directly prove the Indictment, then the Priſoner ought to be acquitted: But if there can be no other Conſtruction made, but only, That there was a plain Deſign to ſend Charnock into France, to King James, to perſuade him to prevail with the French King, to come and invade us with a Foreign Force: And if our Witneſſes are legal Witneſſes, (as, I doubt not, my Lords the Judges will tell you they are; if there be no Exception to the Credit of Goodman, but only that he was in ſuch a Deſign of Poiſoning the two Dukes, which is really no Objection of Diſcredit to his Teſtimony;) then, with Submiſſion, I think there is no Room left for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to doubt, but that the Priſoner is as guilty of this Crime laid to his Charge, as any others that have been try'd and condemn'd for the ſame: And ſo, Gentlemen, I leave it to you.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Conyers, and Mr. Cowper, will you ſay any Thing to this Matter?

Mr. Conyers, and Mr. Cowper. No, my Lord, we ſubmit it entirely to your Lordſhip's Direction; we have done on all Sides, we think.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Treby. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Cook, ſtands indicted here for High-Treaſon; there are laid in the Indictment two Sorts of Treaſon; the one is, Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, the other is adhering to the King's Enemies. The Evidence to prove theſe Treaſons ſeems to be joint; for, as to that of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death, as well as to the other, the Overt Acts are meeting and conſulting about the Treaſon, and then agreeing and reſolving to invite and procure an Invaſion from France, and to meet that Invaſion with an Inſurrection here. And the Evidence is apply'd entirely to prove theſe Acts.

Gentlemen, that theſe are proper Overt Acts of Compaſſing the King's Death, I need not inform you, the Law is very well known; and the Priſoner's own Council do acknowledge, that theſe are ſufficient Overt Acts of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death: So that all which they defend him by is, the Improbability of the Teſtimony given againſt him.

Now, Gentlemen, you are to conſider and weigh well the Evidence that has been given. By Law, it is true, as they obſerve, there muſt be two Witneſſes. Here is no Defect of Number; that's acknowledg'd too, here are two Witneſſes; but the Queſtion is, whether here be two Witneſſes that deſerve Credit, and upon whoſe Teſtimony you can find that the Priſoner is guilty. The Witneſſes, Gentlemen, are Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman.

Firſt, For the Matter of their Teſtimony, it is poſitive from them both; that you'll do well to obſerve. Mr. Porter tells you, That in May laſt, (which is now juſt a Twelvemonth) there was a Meeting of eight Perſons, that is, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Cook the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Witneſs himſelf Mr. Porter; and this was at the King's-Head Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, and there theſe Eight dined, and this was in order to conſult about an Invaſion, together with an Inſurrection intended to be made for the Reſtoring of the late King. After Dinner comes in Mr. Goodman, he ſays, and then they purſued this Conſultation, and came to a Reſolution, to ſend Mr. Charnock into France, and the Meſſage was agreed upon which he ſhould carry; and he was to go to the late King, and ſollicite him to obtain 10,000 Soldiers from the French King, whereof 8000 ſhould be Foot, 1000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons. Theſe were to make up tho 10,000 Men to invade this Kingdom. And they reſolved alſo, when this Force ſhould land, they ſhould meet and aſſiſt this Invaſion with a joint Force, that ſhould conſiſt of 2000 Horſe. And to acquaint and aſſure him of this, was the Meſſage. But, he ſays, That Mr. Charnock was very cautious in it, and would not preſently go upon this Errand, but he would have further Aſſurance that they were in earneſt, and would make good what they did ſend him to propoſe, therefore he would have a ſecond Meeting; and a ſecond Meeting was had, and that was at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern, and there they did renew the ſame Reſolution, and there were preſent my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Friend, Mr. Charnock, the Priſoner at the Bar, and himſelf; he does not know or remember whether my Lord Montgomery, or Mr. Goodman was there. He ſays, Mr. Charnock did accordingly go into France, and he did return and bring back King James's Thanks to them, but their Deſire could not be comply'd with; and he had his Share of the Compliments.

Now comes Mr. Goodman, and he ſays, That about the ſame Time, viz. Mid. May, Mr. Porter acquainted him, there would be a Meeting of ſome of King James's Friends, at this Tavern in Leaden-hall-ſtreet. He ſays, That he did tell Mr. Porter, he doubted he ſhould not be there at Dinner, but he would come as ſoon as he could after Dinner; and according to Appointment, he did come after Dinner, and there was this Conſultation and Reſolution that Mr. Porter ſpeaks of, and ſays, That Mr. Charnock afterwards told him, he had been in France with the late King, and brought back the ſame Anſwer that Mr. Porter ſpeaks of; and he had the Honour of Thanks from the late King too.

Gentlemen, I muſt obſerve one Thing to you, which does go very much towards the Confirming what theſe Witneſſes ſay, and that is the Agreement in their Teſtimonies, tho' they were examin'd apart at the Deſire of the Priſoner: You will find they agree in theſe ſeveral Circumſtances, in the Time, that it was this Time twelvemonths; in the Place, that it was at this Tavern; in the Number of Perſons that were there, which was Eight before Mr. Goodman came in; in the Number of Horſe, Foot, and Dragoons that were to be brought from France, and in thoſe Horſe that were to meet them here; and beſides, in thoſe Words of Diſcourſe upon the Conſultation and the Reſolution. And there is one Circumſtance more in which they do agree, and which is very particular; That when they came to deliver their Conſent to this Meſſage that Mr. Charnock was to carry, the reſt ſat, and Mr. Cook the Priſoner did kneel upon the Chair, and lean'd upon the Table. And this both of them do agree in. And after all the many Queſtions ask'd in their ſeparate Examination, I do not find they diſagree in any Part of their Evidence. So that, Gentlemen, there can remain no Queſtion now, but whether theſe two Witneſſes are Men of Credit; or, whether there has been oppoſed to them any ſuch Evidence as will make you believe, that (if not both) at leaſt one of them has forſworn himſelf. They do produce nothing againſt Mr. Porter, whatſoever may have been produc'd at former Trials againſt his Credit: Perhaps what has been before, has ſatisfied the Objectors, and there is nothing appears againſt his Credit; but he is not only a competent but a very clear, good, credible, and undoubted Wieneſs.

But againſt Mr. Goodman they offer ſeveral Things which they ſay amount to a violent Preſumption, that he is not to be look'd upon as a credible Witneſs: And firſt, they produce a Record of a Conviction upon an Information againſt him, for attempting to poiſon two Noble Dukes: This he was convicted of, and fin'd 1000 l. and ordered to find Sureties for his good Behaviour during his Life. But, to this it is anſwered, that it appears in the ſame Record, that Satisfaction was acknowledged of the 1000 l. and all the reſt of the Judgment the very next Term, and he was forthwith diſcharged, and that without paying the Money, which ('twas obſerv'd) the Priſoner's Counſel ſaid

Mr.

Mr. Goodman was not able to pay at that Time, no more than he could 20,000 l. and thereupon the King's Counsel say, that the Government was convinc'd that he was wrong'd by a causeless Prosecution, and the Evidence against him was found not to be credible. And besides, Mr. Goodman stands pardoned by several Acts of Pardons, as well as other Subjects.

Then they produce one Edwards, who is a Prisoner here, and committed for Suspicion of High-Treason, and for Treasonable Practices: He is, no doubt of it, a Witness for all that: For that is but an Accusation upon him, and does not take away his Credit. He tells you of a Discourse that he had with Mr. Goodman, and that Goodman ask'd him when the Prisoner was to be try'd; and he told him he wou'd be try'd such a Day; and when it was ask'd what it was for, it was answer'd, not for the Assassination, but for sending Mr. Charnock into France. He ask'd then who were the Witnesses against him? Mr. Goodman said, Mr. Porter and himself. And further said, that he understood that Mr. Cook had sworn against him (though he would give an Account of no Body else) and had no Pardon, and either he must hang, or himself. And then he talk'd lightly of the Business of Hanging, and said it was a foolish Thing to be hang'd, for all that People would say, was, that such an one hang'd handsomly or dy'd bravely. This indeed is a Sort of Discourse as if Mr. Goodman did apprehend himself in Danger from Mr. Cook's Evidence; and yet I cannot see that it does at all falsify the Evidence of Mr. Goodman: He may be a true Witness, and yet he might say he was to give Evidence against Mr. Cook, and it was in Mr. Cook's Power to give Evidence against him, and that truly; and if both were in the Guilt, they were in Danger of one another. But for a further Answer, the King's Counsel have produc'd Mr. De la Rue, who says, that he knew Mr. Edwards, and that he was a Scotchman, and reputed Chaplain to the Viscount of Dundee, that he went formerly by the Name of Douglas, and by that Name he was set down and described in the List that Mr. Charnock sent to Captain Porter; and to that Name he answer'd in the Press-Yard lately. Now it is certain, that Mr. Charnock's putting of his Name in that List, is no Evidence of his being guilty in Mr. Charnock's Treason. But his going by two Names doth justly lay him under some Suspicion. But the Evidence that the Prisoner seems to rely upon most, is what Evidence has been produc'd against Mr. Goodman in that Point of Fact, by the Master and the two Drawers; the first of the Drawers Name was Crawford, and he does tell you, that about twelve Months ago there was this Company at Dinner there: My Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Friend, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Captain Porter, Mr. Charnock, and the Prisoner, though he did not then know his Name, or the Name of one or two more of them I observe by the Way, that his Testimony so far does verify theirs, that there were eight of them there, but he says he did not see Mr. Goodman there, nor any but those that dined there. And my Lord of Aylesbury went away, as he thinks, about Four o'clock. He cannot say that the Prisoner was there, or was gone at that Time before Mr. Goodman came in; for he did not see Mr. Goodman there at all, he was not in the Room all the Time, but he was to and fro attending till my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away in a Coach that was called, and when they were gone, the rest of the Company staid there a good while; being urged to tell how long, at last he said it was dark, and that agrees with Mr. Porter, who says, it was about nine o'clock when they went away. He says he was there once or twice after my Lord of Aylesbury went away, but he never saw Mr. Goodman that he remembers at all, till last Saturday, in all his Life. As to this, the King's Counsel say, that it is only a negative Evidence, and in which a Man cannot be absolutely positive, but can only speak according to his Observation and Memory, which might not be perfect, and Mr. Goodman might be there in the mean time of his going in and out: That is possible; and so it must be left to you to consider of it.

Then there is Huntley the other Drawer, and he says my Lord of Aylesbury went away about that Time, and that he did not see Mr. Goodman there at all, nor ever in his Life till now; neither does he remember that any Body came to them after Dinner, and if any fresh Man had then come in, he thinks he should (going often in to them) have known him; and says, that he attended this Company only: And he had seen Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins there before.

Then Mr. Cock, the Master of the House, was produced, and he names all the eight Persons that did dine there, and so far he confirms the King's Evidence: He thinks that my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away privately (as it seems they had come) in a Hackney-Coach, and that it was about Four o'clock, and he says, he did not see Mr. Goodman there, and he does not know that he ever saw him till now: But when he was cross-examined by the King's Counsel, he does acknowledge that he might possibly come in after Dinner, and before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, and he not see him, because he was not there all the Time; he says, Sir John Friend used to dine at his House, and came to his House once a Week; and he had seen some of the rest, but they did not frequent his House as Sir John Friend did: He says, the Company din'd about Two o'clock, and the last of them staid till about Eight or Nine, and that the Door was shut as is usual when Company is in a Room, but no Body was forbid to come there.

But to establish the Credit of the Evidence on the King's Part, they did produce Mr. Goodman and Mr. Porter again: Mr. Goodman does acknowledge so far to be true, that my Lord of Ayelesbury went away first; but says, that himself was not wholly a Stranger to this House, for he had dined there four or five Times with Sir John Friend, and particularly one Time, he being sick, and asking for some Brandy, the Master of the House said he would help him to some of the best in England, and Mr. Goodman would have bought some of him. But the Master seems not to own that, and says, he does not remember any Thing of it.

But then comes Mr. Porter again, and he says positively, that Mr. Goodman was there, and that he did speak with the Company, and complimented my Lord of Aylesbury when he went away, and went Part of the Way towards the Stairs with him; and he does well remember it by this Token, that when Mr. Porter was told Mr. Goodman was below, he mentioned him in the Company as a trusty Man, that was fit for the Converſation, and then Mr. Porter went and fetch'd him up, and Mr Goodman was there near two Hours, and they diſcourſed all this Matter in that Time in the Preſence of the Priſoner and the reſt; and he ſays it was about ſix o'clock before my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery went away, and then there was Opportunity enough for this Diſcourſe, and Conſult that they ſpeak of.

The Priſoner has offered another Sort of Evidence: Firſt the Confidence of his own Innocence, that he was abroad three Weeks after this Conſpiracy was diſcovered; and they have produced Mr. Treganna, Mr. Peachy, and Mr. Nichols, who prove that he never abſconded, but was abroad, and appeared openly (for three Weeks after) till ſuch Time as he was taken. This the King's Counſel ſay is no Proof that he is not Guilty, and their Evidence untrue. They ſay he might have a Confidence, and the rather becauſe he is not charged with the Aſſaſſination; for at that Time theſe Witneſſes ſpeak of, nothing was diſcovered, and publick but the Aſſaſſination; for it was before Sir John Friend's Trial; and then was the great Diſcovery of the Secret of the Invaſion.

Then he ſhews further as to his Converſation, that he is a Man of a very ſober Life, never was known to ſwear, that he drinks but little, and is a Godly Man, and often ſays his Prayers. As to that, the King's Counſel on the other Side tell you, that has been pretended to by other People too; and the Queſtion is not about Religion, but this Fact that you are now to try. Whether he be ſo Religious, or no as he pretends, or whether he be ſincere in his Devotion, that is not ſo much the Matter now, but the Queſtion is, whether he has offended in this Kind as he ſtands accuſed? They produce a Gentleman, one Mr. Hammond, and he ſays that he is a very Conſcientious Man, and particularly is a great Lover of his Country; and he has often heard him declare a Deteſtation of an Invaſion by a French Force, and wiſh Succeſs to the Fleet; but that which he remembers chiefly, was about the Time of the Diſcovery of this Plot. The King's Counſel anſwer to this, that a Man may uſe ſuch kind of Expreſſions, perhaps to cover his Guilt; and in the Reply to Sir Bartholomew Shower's Obſervations, it was taken notice of by Mr. Sollicitor, (what we all cannot but remember) that the like Evidence was given as to Sir John Friend, that he did deteſt an Invaſion, and was preſent at the Common-Prayer when King William was pray'd for, and declar'd againſt Plots; and that if they catch'd him in the Corn they might put him in the Pound. Theſe Things a Man might ſay, and it is the lighteſt Evidence that can be given, being Diſcourſes out of Mens own Mouths, who will never proclaim their own Guilt; and therefore it is the weakeſt Defence that can be offered. But, Gentlemen, you are to conſider the other Evidence that has been produced by the Priſoner, given by ſeveral Witneſſes, and who are upon their Oaths now as well as the King's Witneſſes. And his Counſel ſay their Witneſſes, but particularly the three upon whom they chiefly rely, have no Objection made out againſt them; and no Man's Teſtimony ought to be preſumed to be falſe. And it muſt be taken notice of, that they can ſpeak only according to their Belief, grounded on their Obſervation, and Memory, that they did not, ſo far as they obſerved, or remember, ſee Mr. Goodman there, as 'twas moſt probable they ſhould if he had been. But 'tis poſſible they might overlook, or forget; the rather for that they were not of the Company, but in and out, up and down; and Mr. Goodman was not there at Dinner, when their Attendance was fix'd and conſtant.

It ought to be conſidered alſo, that here are ſeveral Circumſtances, ſome of which ſeem very pregnant. It is agreed on all Hands, that the Priſoner dined there with thoſe other ſeven Perſons, concerning Four of whom we muſt conclude nothing; but concerning Three of them we in this Court may take notice, they are Attainted of High-Treaſon, and ſo it is evident that the Priſoner was for a long Time a Companion of three Traitors, and had a Converſation with them. I do not find that he had any Occaſion to be there; nor any of the reſt of the Company. Concerning my Lord of Aylesbury, indeed it is ſaid he propoſed to treat about a Hogſhead of White Wine. But that ſeems to be caſual, and not the End of his Coming, and Dining with this Company there. But, be that how it will, that relates to his Lordſhip alone. But, for the others, I do not find they do pretend any Occaſion of Meeting there; and therefore it leaves it the more ſuſpicious: And 'tis the more ſo, becauſe it was managed ſo privately, and cautiouſly. They were not attended according to their Qualities. The Lords went away together in a Hackney-Coach that was called, as they had come thither in another. The reſt thought fit to ſtay there till it was dark; and as ſoon as it was ſo, went away. There was ſome extraordinary Cauſe for all this. It did import the Priſoner to ſhew, that it was for ſome good Cauſe, and Purpoſe.

And further, it is obſervable that this Houſe was a Place which, as the Maſter ſays, none of this Company did uſe to reſort to, except Sir John Friend; which makes it probable (this being a Houſe that Sir John Friend frequented, and none of the others) that He beſpoke this Place, and brought the reſt thither: And if it were ſo, that makes it more probable that there was ſuch a Treaſon there to be hatch'd, as is evidenced by the King's Witneſſes; for you may remember, and it appears by the Record in this Court, that Sir John Friend was indicted and attainted (not for the Aſſaſſination, but) for the Treaſon for which the Priſoner is now a Trying, an Invaſion that was to be ſupported with an Inſurrection. Now if Sir John Friend was chiefly acquainted with this Houſe, and brought this Company together, it is very probable it was about this Buſineſs which Sir John Friend was ſo concerned in. And that he is Attainted for it, appears upon the Record before us; which ſhould be read, but that the Priſoner's Counſel admit it, and are ſo far ſatisfied in it, that they won't Arraign the Verdict; nay, they did acknowledge that there was a Plot; and there was no Doubt of it, there was ſuch a Plot.

Now then, Gentlemen, here it is certainly proved by theſe two Witneſſes, (and not gain-ſaid by the Priſoner's own Witneſſes) that there was ſuch a Meeting, and that the Priſoner was there; and they both have poſitively ſworn that this Treaſon was committed there. You have heard what has been objected to their Credit; they have delivered their Teſtimony upon their Oaths, and ſo, Gentlemen, you are upon your Oaths: If you are ſatisfied, and can take it upon your Conſciences ſciences, that theſe two Witneſſes are, or any one of them is, (if ſuch Diſtinction can poſſibly be made in this Caſe) then you are to acquit the Priſoner; but if you are ſatisfied, and think they have ſworn true, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Nay, if one be forſworn, both are; for the Evidence is intirely in all Parts the ſame; and if Mr Goodman be perjured, Mr. Porter is ſo too.

Sir B. Shower. Forſworn and Perjured are hard Words; we only ſay miſtaken.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Well, that Objection goes to one as well as t'other.

L. C. J. Treby. It muſt be ſo, ſince they ſpeak of the ſame joint Matter, viz. their being together in Company. If Mr. Porter ſays true, when he ſwears that Mr. Goodman was there with him and the reſt, Mr. Goodman muſt ſay true when he ſwears that he was there with Mr. Porter and the reſt. There was one Thing that I forgot: Sir B. Shower obſerved, that it might be an Invention of Captain Porter, becauſe he fixeth it in Point of Time to the Month of May, that he does not ſay it was in April; for that then it would be within the Pardon, which extends to April 29, laſt Year; nor would he lay it in June, for then he was in Newgate, and others of them were diſperſed by reaſon of a Riot committed in Drury-Lane; and this Sir Bartholomew Shower alledges, was a Piece of Skill and Contrivance: But, really, this is a Piece of Ingenuity in himſelf: For, beſides that the King's Witneſſes affirm poſitively that it was in May, and remember it by a certain Token, viz. That it was within a very few Days after the King went beyond Sea, one, or two of the Priſoner's Witneſſes (Crawford I am ſure) did ſay that this Meeting was this Time Twelvemonth, and you know we are now near mid-May.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If you believe our Drawers for part, you muſt believe them for all.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, not ſo: My Lord ſpeaks only where they concur with our Evidence. It were ſtrange to expect we ſhould disbelieve, or doubt what the Witneſſes on both Sides affirm to be true: But, I do not think it would be to the Advantage of the Priſoner, if what his Counſel propoſeth were agreed to, viz. That the Drawers (and their Maſter too) ſhould be believed for all they ſay, provided equally the King's Witneſſes ſhould, in like manner, be believed for what they ſay. For, the main thing controverted, is, Whether Mr. Goodman were at this Meeting? Theſe Witneſſes for the Priſoner ſay, they did not ſee him there; at leaſt they do not remember it. Mr. Porter, and Mr. Goodman himſelf ſays, he was there. Now, theſe Things agreed, and admitted, would make a very conſiſtent clear Evidence, that Mr. Goodman was there, tho' the Maſter and Drawers did not obſerve, or do not remember his being there.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew to Conſider of their Verdict, and about Three Quarters of an Hour after returned into Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names. Henry Sherbrook.

Mr. Sherbrook. Here. And ſo of the Reſt, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook to the Bar, (which was done) Peter Cook hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, Is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods, or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it: You ſay that Peter Cook is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, but that he had no Goods, or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, the Court diſmiſſes you, and thanks you for your Service.

Then the Court adjourned 'till Five o'clock in the Evening.

Post Meridiem.

About Six o'clock, the Court being, by Proclamation, reſum'd, the Priſoner, convicted, was brought to the Bar, in order to Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Cook, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) thou ſtand'ſt convicted of High-Treaſon, for compaſſing and imagining the Death of his Majeſty King William the Third, and for adhering to the King's Enemies: What can'ſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die according to the Law?

Cook. My Lord Mayor, my Eyes are very bad, therefore I deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to take this Paper, and that it may be read.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any Thing to ſay in Arreſt of Judgment?

Cook. I deſire my Paper may be read.

[It was handed up to the Court, and then delivered down to Mr. Attorney General, and the King's Counſel, but not openly read.]

Mr. Recorder. [Sir Salathiel Lovell.] Mr. Cook, the Court have read your Paper you ſent up, and have communicated it to the King's Counſel; if you have any Thing to move in an Arreſt of Judgment, this is your Time, and we will hear you; but as for any Repreſentation of your Caſe to any others, that muſt be conſidered of afterwards, you are now called to your Judgment.

Cook. I did not know that I might offer any thing afterwards, but if your Lordſhips think fit to communicate that to my Lord Juſtices, I ſubmit it to you.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Cook, there is nothing appears upon this Paper that is Matter of Law, and ſo not ſerviceable to you now, and therefore what you deſire in it, the Court will conſider of afterwards.

Cook. I do not underſtand the Law, my Lord, but I have heard the Court ought to be of Counſel for the Priſoner, and I deſire I may not ſuffer by my Ignorance.

Mr. Recorder. I declare it, for my part, I know nothing that you can have any Advantage of, in Arreſt of Judgment; if I did, you ſhould not loſe the Benefit of it, and you have had your Counsel assigned, who have pleaded for you without restraint; and if there had been any Matter of Law that would have availed you in the Arrest of Judgment, no doubt, they would have laid hold of that Advantage for you.

Cook. I can't tell, my Lord, what is Matter of Law.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship observes, they took all the Objections that they could to the Indictment, but there was none that they could fix.

Cl. of Arr. Then Crier make Proclamation, (which was done on both Sides of the Court.)

Crier. O yes. All Manner of Persons are commanded to keep Silence while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cook. My Lord, may I have my Paper again?

Mr. Recorder. If you think it may be any Service to you to leave it with the Court, you may do so; or if you desire it, you shall have it again.

Ceok. I desire your Lordship to keep it.

Mr. Recorder. I will receive it, and it shall not be buried, I assure you.

Cook. I don't hear what the Court says.

Mr. Recorder. You say you did not hear what was said to you: If you desire to have your Paper again, you shall have it; but if you desire to have it communicated Above, the Court will consider it, and take care of that too.

Cook. I desire your Lordship would do it.

Then the Recorder proceeded to give Judgment.

Mr. Cook. I think it useful to the Publick, and also at this Time to you, to observe, That the Reign of the late King James, was, throughout, one intire Design and Project form'd, in conjunction with the French King, totally to subvert our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, which grew so apparent to the Subjects of these Nations, in so many Instances of fatal Consequence, manag'd in such a Method, and advanc'd so far, that the People of these Kingdoms, of all Qualities, Ranks, and Degrees, did find it absolutely necessary for the Preservation of themselves and the neighbouring Nations now in Alliance with us, to pray in Aid of the then Prince of Orange, as a Person not only nearly allied to this Crown, but also intirely in the Interest of these Kingdoms, and those neighbouring Princes, and Countries that lay exposed to the Violence and ambitious Insults of France. And the Love which that noble Prince did bear, not only to us, but to our Neighbours also, disposed him to embrace that Invitation, upon whose Arrival here, that Predecessor, from Motives that were invisible, declin'd the Kingdom and the Government, and left the People to themselves; whereupon his present Majesty was necessarily and rightfully placed upon that Throne he so well deserved: And this is now that King, for whose Preservation all good People have associated, and spare neither Lives nor Treasure to support and to continue in the Government; and this is that King whom you have traiterously conspired, not only to dethrone, but also to destroy; and this is that People that you would have to swim in Blood, and lose their Religion, Liberty, and Property. These Matters need a History to relate at large, I only touch them shortly, to move good Men to rejoice in their Deliverance, and to move you seriously to reflect upon the Heinousness of your Crime.

Mr. Cook, your are an English Man and must needs know that in this Place we frequently condemn to Death, Clippers, Coiners, Thieves, and Robbers, and other such like Criminals, and that justly and necessarily too, for the Preservation of the Innocent, and for the common Good. Of what Condemnation must you, and such as you, be worthy then, who have so horridly endeavour'd and design'd the fatal Ruin and Destruction of your own native Country, and to render your Fellow-Subjects a miserable Prey, and at the best to become Slaves and Vassals to a foreign Prince?

Let me also mind you, that nothing is more sure, than that after this, you must receive a Judgment in another World; and if that pass against you too, that Sentence will be most Terrible, and your Sufferings without End: And therefore I do advise you to employ the few Days you have yet to live, in Preparation for your future Happiness, which cannot be duly done without a full Confession of this, as well as other Crimes you have been guilty of: I therefore charge it to you, as your Duty, and leave it with you at your utmost Peril, that you honestly and faithfully discover all you know of this inhuman and traiterous Conspiracy, and all the Persons that you do know to be guilty of it: This will be the greatest Service you can do in this World, and will be the best preparatory Step that you can take towards a better.

And, Sir,

There now remains no more for me to say, but to pronounce that Sentence on you which the Law directs: And that is this,

That you, Peter Cook, be taken hence to the Place from whence you came, and thence be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and cut down before you be dead; that your Bowels be taken out, and your Privy-Members cut from your Body, and both burnt in your Sight; that your Head be cut off, and your Body divided into four Quarters, which Head and Quarters are to be at the King's Disposal; and God Almighty have Mercy upon your Soul.

Cook. I beg, if your Lordship please, that I may have my Relations and Friends come to see me, and some Divines, the better to prepare me for another World.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Cook, if you'll give the Names of those that you would have come to you, to the Officer, Care shall be taken in it; and you will not be denied any reasonable Helps that may be had for your Preparation for Eternity.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not fit he should be deny'd any reasonable Help; but in the mean time there is Reason for the Government to be cautious upon the Account of what has notoriously past in the Case of some others.

Mr. Recorder. If he give in the Names, it will be consider'd of, and Care taken that nothing be done, but what is reasonble and safe.

Then the Prisoner was taken from the Bar, and the Court proceeded to what was remaining of the Business of the Sessions.

He was afterwards pardon'd, upon Condition of transporting himself, and never returning any more to England.

CLX. The TRIAL of ALEXANDER KNIGHTLEY, at the King's-Bench, for High-Treason, May 20. 1696. Paschæ 8 Will. III.

Thursday, April 30, 1696.

THIS Day the Keeper of Newgate brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, Alexander Knightley, by Virtue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus, Issuing out of that Court for that Purpose, to be Arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treason, found against him at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the County of Middlesex; which Indictment by Writ of Certiorari was removed into the King's-Bench. The Return of the Habeas Corpus was delivered, and then the Prisoner was Arraigned thus.

Cl. of Arr. Alexander Knightley hold up thy Hand (which he did.) Thou standest Indicted by the Name of Alexander Knightley, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden in the County of Middlesex, Gent. For that you not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traitor against the most Serene, most Illustrious, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Your supreme, true, rightful, lawful, and undoubted Sovereign Lord, the cordial Love and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King should bear, and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguish, intending and contriving, and with all your Force purposing and designing the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Lord the King that now is, of right duly, happily, and very well established, altogether to subvert, change, and alter, as also the same our Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction to put and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and most miserable Slavery to Lewis the French King to subdue and inthral, the tenth Day of February, in the seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsly, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously you did compass, imagine, and contrive, purpose, design, and intend, our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to slay, kill, and murder, and a miserable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cause; and your said most wicked, most impious, and devilish Treasons, and traiterous Compassings, Contrivances and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the said Alexander Knightley afterwards, to wit, the same tenth Day of February, in the Year abovesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsly, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, traiterously, and with Force and Arms, with very many other Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree, him our said Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and deceit, to assassinate, kill, and murder, and that execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination and killing, the sooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, traiterously you did treat, propose, and consult with those Traitors, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what Manner, our said Sovereign Lord the King, so by lying in wait, might be slain and killed, and that you did consent, agree, and assent with the same Traitors, that forty Men on Horseback, or thereabouts, of whom you the said Alexander Knightley were to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Pistols, charg'd with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Arms, armed, should lie in wait and be in ambush, the same our Lord the King in his Coach being when he should go abroad to attack, and that a certain and competent Number of those Men so arm'd, upon the Guards of our said Lord the King, him then attending, and being with him should set upon, and should fight with them and subdue them, whilst others of the same Men so armed, him our said Lord the King should assassinate, kill, slay, and murder; and you the said Alexander Knightley, your Treasons and all your traiterous Intentions, Designs, and Contrivances aforesaid, to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to effect, afterwards, to wit, the aforesaid tenth Day of February, in the seventh Year abovesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, diverse Hortes, and very many Arms, Guns, Muskets, Rapiers and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlike Things, and military Instrume t, falsly, falſly, maliciouſly, ſecretly, and traiterouſly you did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and to be bought, obtain'd, gathered together, and procured, did cauſe with that Intent to uſe, employ, and beſtow them in and about the deteſtable, horrid, and execrable Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder, of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, as aforeſaid; and the ſame Premiſſes, the more ſafely, and ſurely to execute, do, and perform, you the ſaid Alexander Knightley, with one Edward King late for High-Treaſon, in contriving and conſpiring the Death of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Conſent and Aſſent of divers of the Traitors and Conſpirators aforeſaid in the ſaid tenth Day of February in the ſeventh Year aboveſaid, traiterouſly did go and come to the Place propos'd, where ſuch intended Aſſaſſination, Killing, and Murder, of our ſaid Lord the King, by lying in wait ſhould be done, performed, and committed, to view, ſearch, and obſerve, the Conveniency and Fitneſs of the ſame Place for ſuch lying in wait, Aſſaſſination, and Killing, there to be made, performed, and committed, and that Place ſo being ſeen and obſerved, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Day and Year, your Obſervations thereof to ſome of the ſaid Traitors and Conſpirators, you did relate and impart, to wit, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided. How ſay'ſt thou, Alexander Knightley, art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Knightley. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How will you be Try'd?

Knightley. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Knightley. With Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, I did not expect, in this weak Condition that I am in, to be brought at this Time, to the Bar; That having taken me off extremely from the Application that I ſhould have otherwiſe made of my ſelf to my Defence; but ſeeing there is no Mercy to be had here, I will endeavour to have Patience, and undergo my Fate as well as I can.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, you have no Reaſon to find fault; for when I was acquainted you were ill, and deſired a Phyſician, I ordered one to be ſent to you; and Yeſterday in the Afternoon you ſent Word you were ſo ſick, that you could not be brought hither to Day; but your Doctor was with me laſt Night, and upon Diſcourſe with him, I did apprehend you were not ſo ill, but that, eſpecially conſidering the Weather, you might very ſafely be brought to the Bar to Day.

Knightley. The Gentleman that brought me the Copy of the Indictment found me very ill, and I have been ill ever ſince this Day ſeven-night.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now let us ſee what Time we ſhall appoint for the Trial.

Mr. Att. Gen. [Sir Thomas Trevor.] When your Lordſhip pleaſes to appoint.

L. C. J. Holt. I think you cannot Try it till Wedneſday Fortnight.

Mr. Clark. That Day is free, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. It being upon a Certiorari, the Venire facias muſt be returnable upon a common Day; and there muſt be fifteen Days between the Teſte and the Return.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it not be Tueſday then, that the Jury appear?

L. C. J. Holt. You cannot have it before Wedneſday, for that is the Return-day.

Mr. Clark. Tueſday Fortnight is appointed for the Trial between Pride and the Earl of Bath.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then it muſt be upon Wedneſday, for there muſt be fifteen Days between the Teſte and the Return.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, take back your Priſoner; and bring him here again on Wedneſday Fortnight, you ſhall have a Rule for it.

Then the Priſoner was carried back.

Die Mercurii Viceſimo Maii, 1696. In Banco Regis. Dominus Rex verſus Knightley.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of the Priſoner, he was brought to Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Jury were call'd over as ſoon as the Court appeared in the Hall, and the Defaulters recorded; and about Eleven of the Clock the Priſoner was brought to the Bar.

Clerk of the Crown. Alexander Knightley, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thoſe good Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death: If therefore thou would'ſt challenge them, or any of them, thy Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, before they be Sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, I perceive you have a Deſire to ſpeak ſomething; let us hear what you have to ſay.

Knightley. I humbly beg your Lordſhip's Leave, that I may ſpeak before the Jury be called. What I have to ſay, I beg I may have your Leave to read, becauſe I have a bad Memory.

(Reads.) MY Lord, I hope to ſave the Jury and the Witneſſes againſt me a great deal of Trouble, and deſign to take up very little of your Lordſhip's Time: But in the firſt Place I think my ſelf obliged to thank your Lordſhip for your great Indulgence, in granting me ſo much Time between my Arraignment and Trial; the greateſt Part of which I have employed to appear before the great Tribunal of Heaven.

I ſpeak in the Face of the World here, That I am convinced I cannot hope to be happy hereafter, without a juſt Abhorrence of, and a ſincere Repentance for that Crime for which I here ſtand Indicted.

And ſince Confeſſion is an eſſential Part of Repentance, I do acknowledge I was to have been concern'd in ſome Part of the barbarous Aſſaſſination, and was unhappily ſurprized into a Conſent to act in it, though in my Heart I did abominate the Fact as much as any Man living; but under ſome honourable and fair Pretences I was drawn in at firſt, and then of a ſudden became ſo far engaged, that by a miſtaken Notion of Honour, I thought I could not retreat without the Infamy of Cowardiſe.

My Lord, I humbly crave your Lordſhip's Permiſſion, to acquaint you, how that ſome Time

ſince

ſince I was brought before ſome of the Lords of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, where I do aſſure your Lordſhip I did freely own and fully diſcover my being concerned in that horrid Deſign; and I here openly confeſs the ſame with that Sorrow and Repentance as becomes a Man of Honour and Conſcience.

My Lord, there is one Circumſtance particular in my Caſe, I moſt humbly beg leave to inſiſt upon, and urge to your Lordſhip in my behalf, which is, that it was upon my Confeſſion (as I conceive) that Mr. Harris, now a principal Evidence againſt me, was firſt diſcovered; ſo that my own Confeſſion has been a great Means to take away my Life.

I expect after a few Words now in this ſolemn Court to receive from your Lordſhip the Sentence due upon the Conviction, from my own Mouth, of a Crime for which I cannot in modeſty hope, ſo much above my Deſerts, the King's moſt Gracious Pardon; yet the Greatneſs of my Offence does not rob me of all Thoughts of Mercy, whilſt I throw my ſelf abſolutely and entirely at his Majeſty's Feet for it; and I humbly beg of your Lordſhip as a Privy-Councellor, that you would repreſent my unfortunate Caſe to their Excellences the Lords Juſtices of England, as an Object of his Majeſty's Favour.

And now, my Lord, I ſhall not detain your Lordſhip and the Court any longer, but my next Words convict and lay me under the juſt Sentence of Death: So to my Indictment I beg Leave to plead guilty, and throw my ſelf entirely upon the King's Mercy, and do deſire my former Plea to my Indictment may be withdrawn.

Cl. of the Crown. Thou haſt been Indicted and Arraigned of High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King; how ſay'ſt thou Alexander Knightley, art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtand'ſt indicted, or not guilty?

Knightley. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of the Crown. Art thou content to withdraw thy Plea, Not guilty.

Knightley. Yes, Sir.

Cl. of the Crown. Do you plead to the Indictment guilty or not guilty?

Knightley. I am guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then my Lord we deſire, ſince he relinquiſhes his Plea of Not guilty, that you will record his Confeſſion; and ſince he has confeſt the Indictment, we have nothing more to do but wait the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. We ſhall not give Judgment now.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Priſoner have any thing to ſay for himſelf your Lordſhips I ſuppoſe will hear him to it.

L. C. J. Holt. But I ſay we cannot by the Courſe of the Court give Judgment now, for after a Perſon is convicted here, whether by Confeſſion or Verdict, he ought to have four Days from the Time of ſuch Confeſſion or Verdict, to move in Arreſt of Judgment, if there be ſo many Days of the Term remaining, if not, then the longeſt Time that can be had in the Term is allow'd: In (Trial 74.) Stayley's Caſe it was otherwiſe practiſed, Judgment was given the ſame Day, that was in the Time of the Popiſh Plot, and is a Caſe not to be imitated, becauſe not juſtified by any Precedent before that Time or ſince, but it has been always obſerv'd to have four Juridical Days for moving in Arreſt of Judgment, if ſo many remain of the Term.

Die Lunæ Viceſimo Quinto Die Maii An. Dom. 1696.

Being the laſt Day of the Term, the Priſoner was brought from Newgate to the King's-Bench-Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I deſire the Judgment of the Court to be pronounced upon Mr. Knightley upon his Conviction.

Cl. of the Crown. Alexander Knightley hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Thou haſt been Indicted and Arraigned for High-Treaſon in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies; what can'ſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt thee to die according to the Law?

Knightley. I have nothing more to ſay, my Lord, than what I have ſaid.

Cl. of the Crown. Crier, make Proclamation for Silence. Which was done on both Sides the Court.

Cryer. Oyez: Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtraitly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence while Judgment is in giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, You are by your own Confeſſion convicted of High-Treaſon in deſigning the Murder of the King and the Subverſion of the whole State of England, in promoting an Invaſion from the French, its moſt antient and inveterate Enemies.

It hath appeared before your Arraignment, not only by the Evidence that hath been given at former Trials; but even by the Signs of the Times and the Manner of ſome Mens Actings, that there hath been for ſome Years laſt paſt a Train of Plots and Conſpiracies againſt this Government, and when the various Means which the Conſpirators did project among themſelves for its Ruin proved ineffectual, it was at laſt reſolved among ſome of the Conſpirators to aſſaſſinate the King, as the moſt certain Way of accompliſhing their End.

In which Deſign you were deeply engaged and was an active Inſtrument in the carrying it on, being ſent to view the Ground on both Sides the Water, and with others that were ſent with you reported your Opinion, which was the moſt convenient Place to attack the King and his Guards.

And though you did, the laſt Time you were at the Bar, urge by way of Extenuation of your Crime, that you being engaged in the Intereſt of the late King, and thereby ſupported, you was ſurprized into this barbarous Deſign, which being propoſed to you, you thought your ſelf obliged in Honour to engage in it; which is ſo far from an Extenuation, that it is an high Aggravation: For Men of honourable Principles, tho' moſt zealouſly diſpoſed to the Advancement of any particular Intereſt, yet always deteſt the Uſe of baſe and vile Means. Therefore when the Aſſaſſination of the King was propoſed, you had an Opportunity to have retreated with Honour; and might have refuſed to be further concerned; cerned; but you rather purſued this wicked Enterprize with great Zeal.

And tho' you are by your Profeſſion a Roman Catholick, and may for that Reaſon think that your Crime is mitigated, becauſe you acted in the Behalf of a Prince of your own Religion, which you hoped thereby to introduce: Notwithſtanding all which, your Offence is highly aggravated in reſpect of the Ingratitude and Folly with which it is attended. For there is no Engliſh Papiſt that is Maſter of any Property, but he is intereſted in the Preſervation of this Government, to which the whole Party of them hath been, and ſtill are continually obliged for its Moderation and Juſtice; for inſtead of being expoſed to the Severity of thoſe Laws to which they are obnoxious, they have had the ſame Indulgence in the Enjoyment of their Religion, and the ſame Protection, and as much Benefit in the Diſtribution of the Common Juſtice of the Realm, as any other of the King's Subjects; therefore none of them could ever expect to mend their Condition under a French Domination. But the contrary is foreſeen by all conſidering Men; for the Engliſh Papiſt, as well as Proteſtant, would have been reduced to a moſt diſmal State if you had obtained your End.

Fer it is againſt all the Rules of Reaſon, and the Experience of all Ages, to imagine, that the French King would ſpare Engliſh Papiſts more than Proteſtants; for it is not Zeal to Religion, or Affection to the Intereſt of the late King, that hath excited him to invade England, but it's his Pride and Ambition to conquer the three Kingdoms, and to reduce this to be a Province to France: Indeed the Pretence of reſtoring the late King, and introducing the Popiſh Religion may ſerve to delude ſome warm and unwary Zealots to engage in his Aſſiſtance, who do not conſider, that if they ſhould be ſucceſsful they would be as certainly deſtroyed as others, but with more Diſadvantage to themſelves For after they ſhall have ſurvived the Liberty of their Country, have embrued their own Hands in their Countrymen's Blood, they will be at the Mercy of their Conqueror, who can never think it his Intereſt to truſt them, but will deſpiſe them for being ſuch villainous Traitors to their own Country. Nay, rather, theſe Engliſhmen, who by their Courage and Reſolution ſhall endeavour to defend their Country, though they ſhould be unfortunately vanquiſhed, will meet with a much better Reception, for they will have given Aſſurances that they may be confided in, when the others have by ſuch a wicked Treaſon given a Demonſtration to the contrary.

There being then nothing to be ſaid that can palliate ſuch a Crime as that of which you are convicted; but you having taken a different Courſe the laſt time you were at the Bar from what you took at firſt, you have relinquiſhed your Plea of Not guilty, and have confeſſed the Indictment; I wiſh out of Charity to your Perſon it was as ſincere as (I think it) it was prudent in you; for after ſeveral Convictions of others that were your Accomplices, you could not be a Stranger to the Evidence upon which they were grounded, you muſt therefore in all Probability have expected to have undergone the ſame Fate. If your Confeſſion be a real Effect of your Repentance, you will reap the Advantage of it in the next World, but what Conſequence it will have in this I cannot ſay, For the Heart of the King is in the Hand of the Almighty, which as the Rivers of Water, he turneth whitherſoever he will. Live therefore for the Time to come in expectation of a ſpeedy Death, and prepare your ſelf to appear before another Judgment-Seat; to the making of which important Preparation I ſhall diſmiſs you, firſt diſcharging the Court of the Duty now incumbent upon it, in giving that Judgment which the Law hath appointed. And the Court doth award,

That you be conveyed from hence to Newgate, the Priſon from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn upon a Hurdle to Tyburn; where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and while you are alive to be cut down, your Privy-Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels to be cut out of your Body and burnt in your View; your Head is to be cut off, and your Body is to be divided into four Parts, and your Head and your Quarters are to be diſpoſed where his Majeſty ſhall appoint. And I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul.

Knightley. My Lord, I am truly ſorry for what I have done, and I humbly thank your Lordſhip, and the reſt of the Judges for your Favour to me.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate, and afterwards was graciouſly pardon'd.
